Theological Seminary.
PRINCETON, N. J.
Part of the ADDISON ALEXANDER LIBRARY, which was presented by MESSRS. R. L. AND A. STUART.

Case, Division
Shelf Sectio
Boo

BS2341
.B655
1845
v.2

Sept 30

Jos. Addison Alexander

Princeton.

Ἡ

ΚΑΙΝΗ ΔΙΑΘΗΚΗ.

THE

GREEK TESTAMENT,

WITH

ENGLISH NOTES,

CRITICAL, PHILOLOGICAL, AND EXPLANATORY,

PARTLY

SELECTED AND ARRANGED FROM THE BEST COMMENTATORS, ANCIENT AND MODERN,

BUT CHIEFLY ORIGINAL.

THE WHOLE BEING ESPECIALLY ADAPTED TO THE USE OF

ACADEMICAL STUDENTS, CANDIDATES FOR THE SACRED OFFICE, AND MINISTERS;

THOUGH ALSO INTENDED FOR THE USE OF THEOLOGICAL

READERS IN GENERAL.

BY THE

REV. S. T. BLOOMFIELD, D.D. F.S.A.

OF SIDNEY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE,

AND VICAR OF BISBROOKE, RUTLAND.

Ἐγκύπτετε εἰς τὰς γραφὰς, τὰς ἀληθεῖς ῥήσεις Πνεύματος τοῦ ἁγίου.

CLEMENT. Epist. ad Corinth. § 45.

SIXTH EDITION.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. II.

LONDON:

LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, & LONGMANS,

PATERNOSTER ROW.

MDCCCXLV.

LONDON:
GILBERT AND RIVINGTON, PRINTERS, ST. JOHN'S SQUARE.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΡΩΜΑΙΟΥΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

---

1 I. [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, δοῦλος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, κλητὸς ἀπόστο-2 λος, ἀφωρισμένος εἰς εὐαγγέλιον Θεοῦ, ([b] ὃ προεπηγγείλατο a Acts 9. 22. & 13. 2, 9. Gal. 1. 15.

b Acts 3. 18. Tit. 1. 2. Gen. 3. 15. & 22. 18. & 26. 4. & 49. 10. Deut. 18. 15. 2 Sam. 7. 12. Psal. 132. 11. Isa. 4. 2. & 7. 14. & 9. 6. Jer. 23. 5. & 33. 14. Ezek. 34. 23. & 37. 24. Dan. 9. 24. Mich. 7. 20.

On the Apostolical Epistles in general, and those of St. Paul in particular, and the various points connected therewith (a subject too extensive to be fully treated here), the reader is referred to the Preface of Dr. Whitby, the General Introduction to the Epistles by Dr. Macknight, and Mr. Townsend, vol. ii. p. 207—220, and Mr. Horne, vol. iv. A few general remarks must here suffice. First, it may be observed, that though the essential doctrines and precepts of Christianity are to be found in the Gospels,—yet a fuller and clearer statement of them was necessary, considering the altered state of things to that which existed during our Saviour's lifetime,—and especially after the uprise of serious corruptions and dangerous errors, originating partly in misconception, but which required to be checked by a more explicit, and yet equally authoritative revelation. Now this was done by St. Paul and the other writers of the Apostolical Epistles. Consequently, though they were written for the immediate purpose of refuting heresies, which had arisen from a blending of Christianity with Judaism or Gentilism, of repressing corruptions, reforming abuses, and composing schisms and differences; yet, in point of fact, they became, and were avowedly, commentaries on the doctrines of Christ, as delivered in the Gospels; and though originally intended for particular Christian societies, yet were adapted to the instruction of Christians in all ages. Thus, for example, even the decisions of cases of conscience concerning meats and drinks, and the other observances of the ceremonial law, and various points at issue with the Judaizing Christians,—even these are our surest guides in all points relating to Church liberty, and the use of things indifferent, especially as to the abstaining from things innocent in themselves, but likely to give offence to our more scrupulous brethren, or lead them into sin. See Bp. Sanderson's first and fourth Sermons ad Clerum.

On the cause of the above less clear promulgation of the doctrines of Christianity in the Gospels, see Mr. Townsend; and on the nature and extent of those clearer revelations contained in the Epistles, see Mr. Horne's Introd. ubi supra. Suffice it to say, that in the Gospels the moral duties are more exactly specified, and more expressly taught. The general plan of the Epistles is,—first, to consider and decide various controversies, or refute errors which had occasioned the writing of the Epistles; and, 2dly, to enjoin the observance of those moral duties, which are binding on Christians in every age; with especial reference, however, to those virtues which the disputes or errors above mentioned might lead them to neglect. To advert to the subject-matter itself,—clear as the Epistles are in all material points, yet, from various causes, they are far more difficult to be understood than the Gospels; for which very satisfactory reasons may be assigned. See Dr. Graves's remarks on the obscurity of St. Paul's Epistles, and Abp. Whately's Essays on the difficulties in St. Paul's writings. The principal reason is that which applies to all epistolary writings,—namely, the being addressed to those who are supposed to be, more or less, acquainted with the matters on which they treat; and, therefore, the being not intended to be plain to others: in which respect they differ materially from a history or narration. 'Qui enim (says Wetst.) historiam scribit, iis scribit, quibus ignota est, adeoque omnia clarè et simpliciter narrare debet: epistola verò est quasi colloquium cum amico absenti, qui etiam partes suas agit, et ad cujus quæsita vel cogitata, nobis præcognita, respondemus.' Thus in an Epistle some things are omitted, or cursorily touched on, as being well known to the person or persons addressed; though to others, unacquainted with the circumstances, they cannot but be obscure. And if, as can be proved, such was the case with those who lived in the age of the Apostles, how must it be with us who live at the distance of nearly 2000 years, and to whom the language is a foreign one, and who can obtain no knowledge of the circumstances, except what can be gathered from the Epistles themselves? Moreover, the Epistles of the New Test. are occasionally answers to other Epistles, in which had διὰ τῶν προφητῶν αὐτοῦ ἐν γραφαῖς ἁγίαις,) [c] περὶ τοῦ 3 Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ, (τοῦ γενομένου ἐκ σπέρματος Δαυὶδ κατὰ

c Infra 9. 1—22. John 1. 14. Ps. 132. 11. Matt. 1. 1, &c. Luke 1. 32. & 3. 23, 31. Acts 2. 30. & 13. 23. 2 Tim. 2. 8.

been proposed questions, and without which the answers must be in a considerable degree obscure. But besides these general causes of obscurity, which are common to all the Epistolary writers of the New Test., there are some which are peculiar to St. Paul, as resulting from the character of his style and cast of mind. With an ardent temperament, and uncommon acuteness and readiness of thought, he was, from his 'care of all the Churches,' compelled to write with great rapidity, and, it is supposed, without bestowing much time in methodizing or digesting what he had written. Not to say that method and arrangement are scarcely ever found in Jewish writers; and the mind of the Apostle seems to have been, from its very constitution, peculiarly averse to the trammels of regular composition. Hence the long and involved sentences, the abrupt transitions, the harsh constructions, the perpetual parentheses (sometimes within parentheses), the frequent digressions and sudden returns to the original subject, the frequent changes of person, the speaking in the person of another, or as another would speak, by the μετασχηματισμὸς, or the κοίνωσις; and, lastly, the propounding objections and subjoining answers to them without any formal intimation thereof; though, indeed, these have been by some exaggerated, and by others too much ascribed to the haste with which it is supposed the Epistles were written. And, indeed, a great part of what are called the peculiarities of St. Paul's style are only such as are common,—though in a less degree,—to the other writers of the New Test., and in some measure to all the writers of antiquity, at least before the Christian æra. Thus, of ancient writers, THUCYDIDES possesses most of the characteristics of St. Paul's writings, and that in nearly as great a degree: and yet who ever ascribed the harshness and irregularities of that writer to haste, when it is known that he bestowed on the formation of a not very long history almost the whole of a lifetime of no ordinary duration? We are warranted, therefore, in ascribing the irregularities of the one to the very same cause as those of the other,—namely, to a sort of peculiar mental conformation; the minds of the two writers being, it should seem, cast in the same mould, though, in temper and character, they materially differed. In each the ideas poured in upon him faster than the expressions wherewith to clothe them; especially in the case of the Apostle, who was writing in a foreign language. Hence the brevity observable in both writers; by which, in some cases, one expression stands for a whole clause or even sentence, and sometimes the meaning is rather intimated than expressed. Hence that frequent employment of the asyndeton, and the very sparing use of particles,—than which nothing tends more to obscurity; as, on the other hand, the liberal use of them throws much light on the meaning of a writer, and the purpose at which he aims. In the style of both (especially of the Apostle) we recognise all those characteristics, naturally resulting from an ardent temperament, which constitute what Longinus terms δεινότης, as consisting in the use of the apostrophe, interrogation, and answer by the questioner himself. Both (especially St. Paul) abound in metaphor and imagery, and no other writers present so many examples of that συνάθροισις, or assemblage of figures, which Longinus esteems the great component of the sublime. It is true that, in both these great writers, the matters treated of are, in their different ways, so profound,—that, especially to minds of an ordinary calibre, they must necessarily partake largely of obscurity. Indeed, that powerful reasoner and great metaphysician, the late Mr. Coleridge, pronounces the Epistle of St. Paul to the Romans the most profound work in existence, and perhaps that ever existed. The obscurity, however, in both, as it could not be designed, so may it be greatly lessened by the care and attention of the reader. And since, as Mr. Coleridge observes, 'much of the difficulty in the Apostle's writings arises from the form in which the matter is presented, and which would doubtless have been quite different in a state of things so different as that at the present day,—so it may best be removed by representing to ourselves the ratiocinations in the manner they would now have assumed,—when the thoughts would have been more carefully evolved, and the parentheses thrown into notes; by which, and by other methods, the reasonings would have stood out more distinctly.' Again, as to the excessive length of sentences, found in both these writers, it may be doubted whether that does not, to minds somewhat above the ordinary level, tend rather to abridge the labour of thought; for when many reasonings are thus linked together in a small compass, the respective bearings of each on the rest are the more clearly perceptible. Not to mention that this sort of pregnant brevity may be considered characteristic of deep-thinking minds (such as were, especially, those of Thucydides, Aristotle, and Tacitus, in whom this peculiarity is most observable); insomuch that true is the remark of Rochefoucault, Max. 142, 'C'est le caractère des grands esprits de faire entendre en peu de paroles beaucoup de choses.'

Lastly, we may observe, as a striking coincidence between these two great writers, their occasionally diverging from the main subject, and then returning to it, and resuming the narrative or the reasoning, as if no interruption had occurred. In which view it has been with equal truth and beauty remarked by Mr. Robert Boyle, Works, vol. ii. 271, 'As rivers are said to run to the sea, though oftentimes the interposition of land, or rising grounds, or other obstacles, force them to such winding meanders, that they seem to retreat from the ocean they tend to; to which, nevertheless, with an increased stream, they afterwards bend again their intermitted course, having watered and fertilized, by their passage, the grounds through which they seem to wander; so the Apostle St. Paul, though he direct his course to his main scope, may, not only without declining it, but, in order to it, seem for a while, to abandon it—by fetching a compass, to answer some obvious, or anticipate some tacit objection—and afterwards, more prosperously, resume his former considerations, now strengthened by the defeat of the interposing scruples; having, by-the-bye, happily illustrated those subjects which his incidental excursions led him to handle.'

4 σαρκα, [d] τοῦ ὁρισθέντος Υἱοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν δυνάμει, κατὰ πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης, ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν,) Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ

d John 10. 30, &c. Acts 13. 32, 33. Heb. 1. 5. & 5. 5, 6.

To advert to the style and phraseology of St. Paul's writings, with reference not only to the following Epistle, but to his Epistles generally,—if we consider merely the words and phrases, the structure of periods, and such matters, we meet with not the smooth polished sentences and nice proprieties of pure Greek composition,—but that sort of style, which we might naturally expect from one, like the Apostle, born and educated in a city where the Greek spoken was confessedly provincial, and far from pure, and who had been accustomed to the close study of the Hebrew of the Old Test., and the conversational use of the Syro-Chaldee. However, considering the persons addressed, the idiom and style were the best that could have been adopted: insomuch that had the Apostle possessed the purest Attic style, he would doubtless have preferred that, which might render his writings more acceptable and intelligible to the Jews and Jewish converts, whom he chiefly addressed. And further, if from manner we proceed to matter—from the shell to the kernel—and consider the general contour, the sublimity of the thoughts, the boldness and richness of the conceptions, the propriety and richness of the imagery, we shall not fail to perceive all the marks of a true eloquence—not that which (to use the words of the illustrious Hemsterhusius in his Oratio de Paulo Apostolo) consists 'in flosculis verborum, et orationis calamistratæ pigmentis ——, sed in indolis excelsæ notis, in pondere rerum. Nihil ejus cogitatis et argumentorum nervis sublimius esse et incitatius fatendum est.' Finally, as regards the power of reasoning so eminently united in this great Apostle with the power of eloquence, it has been well said by one above all others qualified to judge on that matter, the profound logician Locke, that 'if any shall say that St. Paul is not a conclusive reasoner, it is a proof that they themselves understand nothing of reasoning.' Indeed, others, including the most competent judges of ratiocination, have recognised the same cogent consecutiveness in the Apostle's reasonings: of which many apt illustrations may be found in a Commentatio of E. F. Hoepfner de consecutione sententiarum in Pauli ad Romanos Epistolâ, Lips. 1829. 8vo. This, indeed, as it is especially applicable to the present Epistle and to the Corinthians, Galatians, and Ephesians, so it is a chief cause of the difficulty therein more or less to be found.

But to proceed to a brief consideration of the Epistle before us,—of its authenticity there has never been any doubt entertained; this being attested by the strongest evidence, both external and internal. As to the genuineness of certain portions, impugned by some German Theologians of the Rationalist School, see the Note at xv. 1. That the Epistle was written from Corinth, is evident from the contents of the composition itself (ch. xv.) as compared with 1 Cor. i. 14. 2 Tim. iv. 20. The time when it was indited is, with great reason, supposed to have been towards the close of the Apostle's residence at Corinth, and when he was making preparations for a journey from thence to Jerusalem, ch. xv. 24—27. Acts xx. 2, 3. This fixes the date to the end of A.D. 57, or the beginning of A.D. 58. As to the question, by whom the Gospel was first preached in Rome? we are destitute of any certain information from Scripture; but it is with great probability supposed that it was first preached by some of the 'strangers of Rome,' who, as we learn from Acts i. 10, were at the feast of Pentecost, and were converted by the illustrious miracle of the gift of tongues. Be that as it may, at the time when this Epistle was written, the Christians at Rome were numerous, and composed, as in other places, partly of converted Jews, or Jewish proselytes, and partly of converted Gentiles; which will serve to account for various peculiarities in its character and form. The object of the Epistle is evident; and though we are but imperfectly acquainted with the circumstances of the Roman converts at that time, yet it is plain that the Apostle's aim was to guard them against the attacks made on their faith by the unbelieving Jews on the one hand, and the Judaizing Christians on the other; in short, to confute the unbelieving and instruct the believing Jew, to confirm the believing, and convert the unbelieving Gentile—in short, to remove the prejudices of both Jews and Gentiles. For this purpose the Apostle enters first into a full explanation and defence of the Gospel doctrine of justification; on the different views of which, as entertained by the Jews, and as here stated by the Apostle, see Horne's Introd., vol. iv. 356. For a general view of the contents of this Epistle, see the Synopsis of Mr. Young and the Analysis of Prof. Stuart in his recent Translation and Commentary on the Epistle, a work, with which none who wish to understand its contents would dispense.

To advert to the contents, the first five Chapters exhibit Christ as the author of our Justification; the next three, as our Sanctification, and the author of our everlasting Consolation. And here terminates the doctrinal part of the Epistle. At ch. ix. the Apostle encounters the objections which might be made to the foregoing representations of doctrine. At ch. x. xi. he confirms his position, that the unbelieving Jews must perish; deducing, however, the cheering assurance, that it will be the occasion of salvation to the Gentiles. The rest of the Epistle is hortatory, and meant to warn the Roman converts, both Jewish and Gentile, against falling into various errors, and indulging in sundry evil dispositions, to which they were, in their peculiar circumstances, respectively exposed.

I. vv. 1—16 form the introduction to the Epistle, containing, 1. a salutation, or inscription, by way of exordium, 1—7; 2dly, a brief expression of some personal wishes and concerns, in order to pave the way for the subsequent address at v. 18, which forms the grand theme of the Epistle, and is especially the subject of all that follows, up to the end of chap. v. St. Paul commences with exhibiting the nature of his office of Apostle, as set apart to it by Christ himself, and constituted especially to be an Apostle to the Gentiles, to promote the knowledge of the Saviour among them as well as the Jews; and, accordingly, he wishes them every needful blessing, temporal and spiritual. He thanks God that their faith in Christ is such, as e Rom. 12. 3. & 15. 15, 16. 1 Cor. 15. 10. Eph. 3. 8. Κυρίου ἡμῶν, (e δι' οὗ ἐλάβομεν χάριν καὶ ἀποστολὴν, εἰς 5 ὑπακοὴν πίστεως ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόματος to be a matter of universal notoriety, and tells them how ardently he has desired to visit them; mentioning what had prevented him from carrying his wish into execution. He expresses his desire to preach among them as well as other Gentiles, and his reasons for that desire—namely, because he conceives himself under obligation to preach the Gospel to all the Gentiles, and because he knows that that Gospel is able, by God's mighty help, to save all who embrace it, both Jews and Gentiles. See more in the Notes of Young and Stuart.

1. δοῦλος 'Ι. Χ.] The word δοῦλος (contracted from δέολος) was properly an adjective signifying bound, but as used substantively, it denoted a bond-servant, usually for life. Now, from the devotedness of such service, it was applied to the service of God; and the term δοῦλος Θεοῦ was applied first to Moses and Joshua, afterwards to the Prophets, and lastly to the Apostles, and the Ministers of the Gospel in general, as 2 Tim. ii. 24: in both of which last uses it denotes one devoted to the spiritual service of Christ in his Gospel. The term κλητὸς here denotes expressly constituted (as opposed to being self-appointed),—namely, by Christ himself. See Acts ix. 15.

In the words ἀφωρισμένος εἰς εὐαγγέλιον Θεοῦ there is, as Hyperius remarks, an amplification of the preceding assertion at δοῦλος and κλητὸς, denoting that he was not simply called to the Apostolical office, 'sed singulari Dei judicio electum, imo selectum.' They allude to his being set apart for the work of the Gospel, not only by the Holy Spirit (Acts xiii. 2), but also by Christ himself, Gal. i. 15. So Acts xxvi. 17, ἐξαιρούμενός σε ἐκ τοῦ λαοῦ καὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν, &c. Εἰς εὐαγγέλιον Θεοῦ, 'for the preaching of the Gospel of God.' All the Nominatives in this verse depend upon γράφει, which verb is expressed in the most ancient Epistles on record, both in Scripture and in the earliest historians.

2. The Apostle takes occasion, from the mention of the word Gospel, to interpose a kind of definition or description thereof,—and that for the purpose, 1. of more fully declaring the dignity of his Apostolical office, 2. of illustrating his own profession and doctrine, which he shows to be divine and celestial.

— ὃ προεπηγγείλατο, &c.] 'which he aforetime had promised,' &c. This was meant as a pre-occupation of the objection of the Jews and Heathens, that Christianity was a novelty, and was intended to refute the calumny, that he undervalued Moses and the Prophets. See Calvin and Hyperius. It was the constant declaration of the Apostles, that they proclaimed nothing but what Moses and the Prophets declared should take place; and that the Old Test. is full of prophecies respecting the Messiah, is plain.

3. περὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ] 'respecting, or with reference to, his Son,' viz. as the subject of those prophecies. Γενομένου, 'descended,' as Gal. iv. 4, and John i. 14. Κατὰ σάρκα. Notwithstanding what some recent Commentators urge, this must certainly have the sense assigned by the most ancient Fathers and Interpreters, and a majority of modern Commentators, 'according to his human nature,' incarnate state, as Acts ii. 30, infra ix. 5, ἐξ ὧν ὁ Χριστὸς τὸ κατὰ σάρκα (where see Note), and 2 Cor. v. 16. There is evidently an allusion to his other and heavenly nature and origin. Thus the sense is, 'Christ, even as to his incarnate nature and condition on earth, was of kingly descent.' In the next verse, the Apostle adverts to the exalted and glorified state of Christ.

4. The sense, in this passage, is not very clearly expressed; and, accordingly, some difference of opinion exists as to what it really is. The difficulty rests in the expressions ὁρισθέντος ἐν δυνάμει and κατὰ πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης. As to the former, the ancient Interpreters almost universally, and a great majority of modern ones, take ὁρισθέντος to mean 'declared, pointed out to be:' a sense supported by the primary signification of the word; for as ὅρος denotes a limit, so ὁρίζω signifies 'to mark out, point out,' and figuratively, 'to declare.' Of ἐν δυνάμει the exact force depends mainly on the construction. If taken with ὁρισθέντος, it will be a phrase for the adverb δυνατῶς, with reference to the force of the evidence of Christ's resurrection. Yet this is so harsh, that we may better take it (with the most eminent Expositors) as a phrase for a participle passive, 'endued with power,' or, 'in possession of power,' with reference either to the power of God, or rather to that power inherent in Christ himself, whereby he rose from the dead (as we learn from John ii. 19 and x. 18), and which evinced his Divine nature. For, as Calvin remarks, 'since a power shone forth in him, which was the property of God, it most undoubtedly showed him to be the very God.' This view, it may be added, is confirmed by the scope of the passage, which is, as Hyperius remarks, 'to demonstrate that Christ was endued with a Divine nature by certain reasons deduced from its marks and effects.'

Of the various senses that have been assigned to the disputed expression κατὰ πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης, two only seem worthy of notice. 1. That of the ancients in general, and many eminent modern Expositors, who take it to mean the Holy Spirit. But that view, besides being opposed to the doctrine of the Greek Article, is surely at variance with the above cited passages of Scripture, which represent God the Father as raising up Christ. It is also forbidden by the antithesis, which evidently subsists between κατὰ σάρκα and κατὰ πνεῦμα. The true sense seems to be that assigned by the Latin Fathers in general, and, of the modern Expositors, by Cameron, Paræus, Beza, Pisc., Heumann, Wolf, Schleusner, Stuart, and others; namely, 'the holy and blessed Spiritual and Divine nature of Christ.' So in 1 Pet. iii. 18, Christ is said to be θανατωθεὶς μὲν σαρκὶ, ζωοποιηθεὶς δὲ τῷ πνεύματι. See also 1 Tim. iii. 16, and Heb. xvii. 14.

5. χάριν καὶ ἀποστολήν.] Most Commentators regard this as an Hendiadys for χάριν ἀποστολῆς, meaning, the office of Apostle, and the grace appertaining to it. While others, as Augustin, Tholuck, and Stuart, keep the terms separate; and Stuart renders, 'grace, and the office of the Apostle.' But the former sense is preferable, as being more in the manner of St. Paul, and expressing that humility which so eminently characterised him. Compare 1 Cor. xv. 9, 10.

6 αὐτοῦ· [f] ἐν οἷς ἐστε καὶ ὑμεῖς, κλητοὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ,) f Infra 9. 24. 1 Cor. 1. 2.
7 [g] πᾶσι τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Ῥώμῃ ἀγαπητοῖς Θεοῦ, κλητοῖς ἁγίοις· g Acts 9. 13. 1 Cor. 1. 2.
χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.
8 [h] Πρῶτον μὲν εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χρι- h Eph. 5. 20. Heb. 13. 15.
στοῦ ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, ὅτι ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν καταγγέλλε- 1 Pet. 2. 5. 1 Thess. 1. 8.
9 ται ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ κόσμῳ· [i] μάρτυς γάρ μου ἐστὶν ὁ Θεὸς, ᾧ i Rom. 9. 1. 2 Cor. 1. 23. & 11. 31.
λατρεύω ἐν τῷ πνεύματί μου ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦ Υἱοῦ Gal. 1. 20. Phil. 1. 8.
αὐτοῦ, ὡς ἀδιαλείπτως μνείαν ὑμῶν ποιοῦμαι, [k] πάντοτε ἐπὶ 2 Tim. 1. 3. k Infra 15. 23, 32.
10 τῶν προσευχῶν μου δεόμενος, εἴπως ἤδη ποτὲ εὐοδωθήσομαι, 1 Thess. 3. 10.
11 ἐν τῷ θελήματι τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς· [l] ἐπιποθῶ γὰρ l Infra 15. 29.
ἰδεῖν ὑμᾶς, ἵνα τὶ μεταδῶ χάρισμα ὑμῖν πνευματικὸν, εἰς

— εἰς ὑπακοὴν πίστεως.] Of these words the sense has been disputed, and is indeed uncertain. Many recent Expositors explain, 'that men might be brought to embrace the Christian faith.' So Acts vi. 8, we have ὑπήκουον τῇ πίστει. Others, again, and especially the earlier Commentators, take the sense to be, 'in order to produce obedience on a principle of faith.' An interpretation preferred by Professor Stuart, as yielding a more energetic sense. Yet it may be doubted whether this energy is not produced by forcing out a sense not inherent in the words; though it is very true that by faith alone is the Gospel obeyed. From the words following, however, it should seem that the purpose is here not individual, but general. And though πίστεως cannot mean the Christian faith, since thus the Article would be required (as in Acts vi. 7), yet the sense seems simply to be that assigned by Grotius and Beza, 'ut Deo obediatur per fidem Evangelio habitam:' it being, as Hyperius observes, the business of an Apostle 'ut homines ad fidem in Christo adducantur, atque ita salutem fide accipiant;' which may be pronounced the fullest and best exposition of the sense.

7. πᾶσι—Θεοῦ] 'to all in Rome, who are beloved of God.' A designation of sincere Christians; which is explained by the words following, κλητοῖς ἁγίοις, where κλ. adds something more to the usual designation, and shows that they are what they are by the effectual calling and grace of God.

— εἰρήνη.] Considering that this is connected with χάρις—ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, it should not be taken, with some, of temporal prosperity; or, at least, it must primarily denote peace with God (see Rom. v. 1. Phil. iv. 7), and then peace one with another.

8. Here commences the exordium, which is one admirably adapted to the purpose in view,—the making the persons addressed well affected to him, attentive, and docile.

— εὐχαριστῶ.] This is for the more Classical χάριν εἰδέναι. Τῷ Θεῷ μου may be best interpreted, 'the God whom I serve;' importing that thanks, like petitions, are to be offered to God through and in the name of Christ. Compare Heb. xiii. 15.

9. μάρτυς γάρ μ. ἐ. ὁ Θεός.] A form used with earnest asseveration, corresponding to the Heb. עד יהוה. The γὰρ is explicative and confirmatory. The sense of λατρεύω is, 'whom I devotedly worship and serve.' And ἐν τῷ πνεύμ. μου may either mean, as most explain, 'with my whole mind and soul;' or, as Chrysostom and Theophylact, 'with my spirit,' i. e. spiritually; as opposed to the deadness of external worship. So Phil. iii. 3, οἱ πνεύματι τῷ Θεῷ λατρεύοντες, and compare John iv. 23. This sense, however, would require ἐν πνεύματι, not ἐν τῷ πνεύματί μου: and, in effect, the former interpretation will include the latter.

— πάντοτε ἐπὶ τῶν προσευχῶν μου δ.] These words are confirmatory of the preceding, ὡς ἀδιαλείπτως μνείαν ὑμῶν ποιοῦμαι, and also declare the manner,—namely, in supplicatory prayer to God,

10. εἴπως ἤδη—ὑμᾶς.] Render, 'If by any means I might yet ever be so favoured, as to be permitted to visit you.' For so I would understand the εἴπως; though it is usually taken for ὅτι. In this manner, too, the words are explained by Œcumenius, Kypke, and Koppe, who take ἤδη ποτὲ as put for ὀψέ ποτε, ever at length; observing that 'it is a form denoting earnest desire of averting evil or obtaining good.' I would rather say, that ἤδη, when followed by the Future tense, denotes what is soon to take place. So Josephus, Ant. iii. 14. 1, τὴν μὲν ἤδη ἔχετε, τὴν δὲ ἤδη λήψεσθε, and see Thucyd. viii. 69. Εὐοδοῦσθαι properly signifies, 'to be led or put on the right road;' but often, as here, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, 'to be prospered, or to be fortunate in any respect.' Thus the full sense of the words will be, 'that, at some time or other, if possible, before long, I may (God willing) be prospered or permitted, i. e. be so happy as to pay you a visit.'

11. ἵνα τὶ μεταδῶ χάρισμα.] Here we have an example of the complete construction of the verb as found in the New Test., namely, an Accusative of the thing, and a Dative of the person. In the Classical writers it generally has a Genitive of the thing. Yet three examples of the Accusative (from Herodotus, Aristophanes, and Xenophon) are adduced by Matthiæ, Gr. Gr. p. 506. And, indeed, when the Genitive is used, there is, I think, an Accusative to be understood, namely, μέρος.

By χάρισμα πνευματικὸν some of the earlier modern Commentators understand the extraordinary and miraculous gifts of the Spirit, communi-m Infra 15. 32.

n Infra 15. 23. 1 Thess. 2. 18.
o 1 Cor. 9. 16. Acts 28. 2.
p Ps. 40. 10. 2 Tim. 1. 8. 1 Cor. 1. 18. & 15. 2.

τὸ στηριχθῆναι ὑμᾶς· [m] τοῦτο δέ ἐστι, συμπαρακληθῆναι ἐν 12 ὑμῖν διὰ τῆς ἐν ἀλλήλοις πίστεως, ὑμῶν τε καὶ ἐμοῦ. [n] Οὐ 13
θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοὶ, ὅτι πολλάκις προεθέμην ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, (καὶ ἐκωλύθην ἄχρι τοῦ δεῦρο,) ἵνα τινὰ καρπὸν σχῶ καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν, καθὼς καὶ ἐν τοῖς λοιποῖς ἔθνεσιν.
[o] Ἕλλησί τε καὶ Βαρβάροις, σοφοῖς τε καὶ ἀνοήτοις ὀφει- 14 λέτης εἰμί· οὕτω, τὸ κατ᾽ ἐμὲ, πρόθυμον καὶ ὑμῖν τοῖς ἐν 15 Ῥώμῃ εὐαγγελίσασθαι. [p] Οὐ γὰρ ἐπαισχύνομαι τὸ εὐαγ- 16
γέλιον [τοῦ Χριστοῦ]· δύναμις γὰρ Θεοῦ ἐστιν εἰς σωτη-cated by the laying on of hands. Yet this view is surely forbidden by what follows; since the spiritual χάρισμα, it is said, will be a source of mutual consolation. Hence, by others the expression is better understood to denote the graces of the Holy Spirit, imparted by the faithful preaching of the Gospel. Yet since this (as applied to the chiefest Apostle) might seem too much to lower the sense, we may best suppose, with Calvin, the impartment in question to be one both of doctrine, and of the prophetic or spiritual gift so called; on which see 1 Cor. xii. 10. xiii. 2. 8. xiv. 22, and Notes.

12. The scope of this verse is, I apprehend, to explain what has been said, and to soften what might seem to savour of harshness and arrogance. Accordingly it is introduced with a formula (τοῦτο δέ ἐστι) serving to correction and explanation, that it may not be supposed he undervalued their spiritual condition. He therefore intimates that he does not mean to insinuate that the advantage will be all on their side; but that he himself hopes to derive spiritual benefit; insomuch that, while he is communicating and they receiving these blessings, the correspondent graces of the Spirit will be working on each side, and mutual edification and confirmation be attained; for such seems to be the meaning of the disputed expression συμπαρακληθῆναι.

13. οὐ θέλω—ἀγνοεῖν.] The Apostle says this as a reason why he had shown his anxiety for them, by wishing to come to them. Ἄχρι τοῦ δεῦρο. Sub. χρόνου. The phrase occurs in Thucydides, iii. 69, and in other writers. Τινὰ καρπὸν for καρπόν τινα is found in very many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, and is adopted by almost every Editor from Wetstein to Vater. By καρπὸν is meant benefit, i. e. in the increase of the Gospel, and the edification of its professors. Thus in Col. i. 6, the Gospel is said καρποφορεῖσθαι. Τοῖς λοιποῖς. Not others, but the rest, viz. of those among whom the Apostle had preached.

14. ὀφειλέτης εἰμί] scil. εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, which must be supplied from what follows. Ὀφ. εἰμὶ signifies, 'I am bound by my office [as Apostle of the Gentiles].' For ὀφειλέτης here, as at viii. 12, and Gal. v. 3, is used of one morally bound to the performance of any duty by the powers for its performance being entrusted by Providence. Comp. Soph. Aj. 590. On the distinction between the two terms Ἕλλησι and Βαρβάροις see Recens. Synop.; and on the origin of the latter appellation see the Note at Acts xxviii. 2. 4. As to the question, here so warmly agitated by Commentators, whether by Βαρβάροις St. Paul meant the Romans to be included, it is a most frivolous one. The Apostle doubtless meant simply by Ἑλλ. καὶ Βαρβ. to denote all nations, both civilized and uncivilized. So Josephus, Ant. xvi. 6. 7, τὸ δίκαιον δὲ πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις—λυσιτελέστατον ὂν Ἕλλησί τε καὶ Βαρβάροις, and Ant. xviii. 1. 5. Thus the words following, σοφοῖς τε καὶ ἀνοήτοις (meaning, in the words of Pope, 'the savage and the sage') are added by way of explanation.

15. τὸ κατ᾽ ἐμὲ, πρόθ., &c.] There is here some difficulty, occasioned by the very elliptical character of the phraseology, where the τὸ has to be taken twice; 1st, with κατ᾽ ἐμέ; 2dly, with πρόθυμον, to form a substantive equivalent to προθυμία; as often in the Classical writers; unless πρόθυμον be supposed to stand for τὸ πρόθυμον. From ἐμὲ is also to be supplied (by a frequent ellipsis) ἐστί μοι, for ἔχω followed by an Infinitive. So in Eurip. Iph. 989, τὸ μὲν πρόθυμον, πρίν σε δεῦρ᾽ ἐλθεῖν, ἔχω, Ἄργει γενέσθαι. The use, too, of οὕτω here is very elliptical. In a similar manner the word occurs (standing, as here, first in the sentence) at Rev. iii. 16, οὕτως, ὅτι χλιαρὸς εἶ—μέλλω σε ἐμέσαι ἐκ τοῦ στόματός μου. Render, 'the matter being thus [that I am under obligation to preach the Gospel], as far as concerns myself (meaning to refer the accomplishment of his wish to Almighty Providence), it is my earnest desire to preach to you Romans also.'

16. οὐ γὰρ ἐπαισχύνομαι τὸ εὐαγγ.] This is not (what many have supposed) a mere meiosis for 'I glory in the Gospel;' but, as Calvin observes, 'it is an anticipation of what might be said in objection to it;' suggested, we may suppose, by the association of ideas in writing the words τοῖς ἐν Ῥώμῃ; q. d. 'I should not be ashamed of the Gospel of Christ even at Rome;' where riches, pomp, and glory are alone held in admiration, where the height of genius and learning are united with the grossest profligacy of manners; and where, consequently, the humbling doctrines of a religion, which demands severe self-denial, would be likely to attract derision, and might make the preacher and professor of it as it were ashamed. Of course, by telling them he shall not be ashamed, the Apostle delicately hints to them that they ought not to be so. 'Thus,' as Calvin observes, 'preparing them to bear the shame of the cross, against all the scorn and derision to be encountered from the wicked, and that by a consideration of the excellence which the Gospel of Christ possesses to them which believe.' For, 1. if the power of God is to be magnified, surely that is eminently displayed in the Gospel; 2. if his goodness is to be adored, the Gospel is the instrument of that goodness.

ρίαν παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι, Ἰουδαίῳ τε, πρῶτον, καὶ Ἕλληνι.
17 [q] Δικαιοσύνη γὰρ Θεοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ ἀποκαλύπτεται ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν, καθὼς γέγραπται· Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.

q Hab. 2. 4. John 3. 36. infra 3. 21. Gal. 3. 11. Phil. 3. 9. Heb. 10. 38.

This introduces the subject on which the Apostle meant to treat, salvation to be obtained alone by faith in Jesus Christ.

Τοῦ Χριστοῦ, not found in eight ancient MSS., and several Versions and Fathers, is rejected by Mill and Bengel, and has been cancelled by Griesbach and Knapp; but without sufficient reason.

— δύναμις γὰρ—πιστεύοντι.] Meaning (by the use of abstract for concrete) 'For it is the powerful means appointed by God for the salvation of all who believe and embrace it.' Thus the sentence comprehends two assertions; 1. of the complete efficacy of the Gospel to salvation; 2. of the extent of this efficacy, that it shall reach unto all who believe and obey it, without distinction of Jew or Gentile; i. e., as far as concerns the gracious design of God, it shall be universal.

— πρῶτον has reference merely to the order in which the Gospel was then directed by Christ to be preached, namely, to the Jews first, and then to the Gentiles; see Acts xiii. 26. That there is here intended no preference of the former over the latter, is clear from the whole Epistle; see infra ii. 9, 10. iii. 29.

17. δικαιοσύνη γὰρ Θεοῦ—πίστιν.] On the exact sense of this verse considerable difference of opinion exists. The difficulty complained of has been occasioned by the brevity of the expression, and the extreme flexibility of the language; which seems susceptible of several senses, though only one can be the true one. Of this, however, we are sure, that (it being, as Calvin says, an explication and confirmation of the foregoing sentiment, that 'the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation') δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ must here mean (as in the rest of the Epistle, and others of St. Paul) Gospel justification, or the mode of obtaining pardon bestowed by God on man. And to suppose, with some eminent Expositors, any special or unusual sense of δικαιοσύνη, is absurd; for we cannot imagine that here at least, in a passage which contains as it were the theme of the whole Epistle, the word would be used in any other sense, than it is employed throughout the Epistle. In further proceeding to determine the sense, the only real difficulty falls on the words ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν· where we have to decide whether the phrases are to be conjoined in construction, or kept separate, ἐκ πίστεως being construed with δικαιοσύνη. The former mode is adopted by some ancient and several eminent modern Commentators; who suppose the sense to be, that 'this δικαιοσύνη having its beginning in faith is perfected in faith.' But though the sentiment thus arising be true, it is a truth not to the purpose here; because, as Stuart shows, '1st, it does not answer the exigency of the passage, which rather requires the grand theme of gratuitous justification, not the progressive nature of faith connected with it; 2nd, it is contrary to the analogy of homogeneous passages in St. Paul.' There can be no doubt that the phrases ἐκ πίστεως and εἰς πίστιν are to be kept distinct; and that ἐκ πίστεως is put for διὰ πίστεως, as at iii. 22, where the same sentence recurs. But with what ἐκ πίστεως is to be construed is not equally clear. Stuart maintains that it must be taken with δικαιοσύνη, and ingeniously accounts for the separation. Yet he so far distrusts his own arguments, that he concludes with thinking the easiest solution of the difficulty is, to suppose δικ. to be repeated here, immediately before ἐκ πίστεως. Thus ἐκ πίστεως will be said κατ' ἐπανόρθωσιν, and be exegetical of what precedes. This, however, would seem a too arbitrary cutting up of the construction. The foregoing method is more natural; and if it be thought to involve a too harsh transposition, we may suppose an ellipsis of εἶναι after ἀποκ. Thus the sense will be, 'For the justification which is of God is therein revealed to be by faith.' To advert to a further difficulty connected with the expression εἰς πίστιν. Many Commentators suppose it to mean, 'in order to produce faith.' But the interpretation appears too arbitrary to be admitted. Others take it for εἰς τοὺς πιστεύοντας; which is thought to be proved by the parallel passage of iii. 22, δικαιοσύνη εἰς πάντας καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας τοὺς πιστεύοντας. Yet thus the Article would be indispensable. Accordingly, in the similar uses of ἀκροβυστία and περιτομή, to which those Expositors appeal, the Article is always found. Not to mention that the sentiment may be very similar, and yet not quite identical, there can, I think, be no doubt that the true sense of εἰς πίστιν is (as Professor Stuart explains) 'for belief,' equivalent to εἰς τὸ πιστευθῆναι. And the true reason why the Apostle added this expression εἰς πίστιν was, as Stuart suggests, because he had just before said, εἰς σωτηρίαν παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι. This sentiment the Apostle confirms from a passage of Hab. ii. 4, which, however, we need not suppose intended by the Prophet to describe justification by faith, but adduced (as Stuart thinks) because it involves the same principle as that which the Apostle is inculcating; the sense there being, that 'the pious man shall be saved by his faith [in God alone]'; and, by implication, not relying on his own merits or deserts, but confiding in the divine declarations. With respect to the subject itself, justification from God (the grand theme of the Epistle), it is well observed by Stuart, that 'faith here designates the modus in quo or the instrument by which, not the causa causans seu efficiens, i. e. not either the meritorious or efficient cause or ground of forgiveness.' 'Every where (continues he) the Apostle represents Christ as this cause. But faith (so to speak) is a conditio sine qua non; it is a taking hold of the blessings proffered by the Gospel, although it is by no means the cause or ground of their being offered.' Thus the complete efficacy of the Gospel to salvation is strongly asserted; which position necessarily implies the inefficacy of the Law. In the doctrine of justification or salvation by faith alone, is implied the ground of its efficacy, namely, its perfect practicability; just as, on the other hand, the impossibility under the Law, of

r Eph. 5. 6. [r] ᾿ΑΠΟΚΑΛΥΠΤΕΤΑΙ γὰρ ὀργὴ Θεοῦ ἀπ᾽ οὐρανοῦ ἐπὶ 18
πᾶσαν ἀσέβειαν καὶ ἀδικίαν ἀνθρώπων τῶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν s Acts 17. 24, &c. ἐν ἀδικίᾳ κατεχόντων. [s] Διότι τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ 19
t Ps. 19. 2 &c. Acts 14. 17. φανερόν ἐστιν ἐν αὐτοῖς· ὁ γὰρ Θεὸς αὐτοῖς ἐφανέρωσε· ([t] τὰ 20 fulfilling the condition of justification, unsinning obedience (Rom. x. 5. Gal. iii. 10), shows its inefficacy to salvation. Accordingly, the Apostle's reasoning concerning justification comprehends, 1. the efficacy of the Gospel to salvation; 2dly, the inefficacy of the Law; and his proof commences with the latter.

18. ἀποκαλύπτεται γὰρ ὀργή, &c.] On the connexion of this passage with the preceding some difference of opinion exists. Stuart maintains that the γὰρ here has reference to ver. 16. Yet the reasons he assigns seem rather specious than solid. If there be any connexion, it is with ver. 17, as Mr. Young supposes, who regards ver. 18 as 'a prefatory observation (introductory to the proof which follows of the inefficacy of the Law to salvation, in the case of the Gentiles) intended to show the reasonableness of the extension of the Gospel grace to them,—namely, because they must, in common with the Jews, stand before the judgment-seat of Christ.' Be that as it may, with this verse commences what Schoettgen calls the tractatio cum Gentilibus, in which, as Calvin observes, 'from a comparison of contrary arguments is evinced the position, that justification can alone be conferred, or accrue, by the Gospel.' It is probable, however, that this was meant to serve as a connecting link between the general position, on the efficacy and universality of the Gospel, and the proof at large of the necessity of this justification by faith only—from the inefficacy of the Law, whether of Moses or of nature, to save men; commencing with the latter. This connecting portion seems also meant to strike his readers with alarm and awe; by showing that in this revelation of salvation is included, by implication, one of damnation to those who would not believe and obey the Gospel, and to point out what would have been the fate of all, had not the Gospel been promulgated; and also to suggest, that as all men are destined to appear before the judgment-seat of God (on which account it was reasonable that this salvation should be offered unto all, both Jews and Gentiles), so must those who have had the method of salvation offered, and have refused it, be in a much worse condition than those to whom it never was revealed. To evince the necessity for the revelation of the Gospel, the Apostle proves the inefficacy of the Law,—whether of nature, or that of Moses,—by pointing out the moral depravity into which both Gentiles and Jews were alike sunk. The expression ἀποκαλύπτεται is to be understood not only of direct revelation, by the Holy Scriptures proclaiming the Law of Moses and of the Gospel, but that indirect revelation of the Law of nature, or the Moral Law, in the works of creation and providence, and in the conscience or moral sense, called at ii. 15, ἔργον νόμου γραπτὸν ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῶν, συμμαρτυρούσης αὐτῶν τῆς συνειδήσεως. The exact force of ἀπ᾽ οὐρανοῦ has been much disputed; but without reason; since whatever the Almighty, who is in Heaven, doth on earth, he may popularly be said to do from Heaven; and that whether for mercy or for judgment: accordingly judgments against sin, which come from God, who is in heaven, may be said to come and to be revealed from heaven. Such is the view in which the expression is considered by Origen, Cyril, Beza, Calvin, Bengel, and Kypke. If this be thought (as it may) too refined and artificial, we may, with Hyperius, suppose that by the expression ἀπ᾽ οὐρανοῦ it is intimated that the wrath in question is heavy, conspicuous to all, and utterly inevitable.

By ἀσέβειαν is meant impiety towards God; by ἀδικία, injury and crime against men. 'The former,' as Hyperius observes, 'referring to sins against the first table; the latter, to those against the second; as a proof of which the Apostle proceeds to enumerate in this very order the sins of the heathen world.' The πᾶσαν is here emphatic, meaning all, whether of Jews or Gentiles; thus pointing at the subject of the following tractatio, and naturally leading to it.

— ἀνθρώπων τῶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐν ἀδ. κατεχ.] On the sense of these words two different views have been formed. Some, taking κατεχ. for ἐχόντων, suppose the meaning to be, 'having some knowledge of the truth, but not living agreeably thereto.' Yet this, though an apt sense, is one not to be elicited from the words without considerable violence. It is therefore better, with the ancient and many eminent modern Expositors, to take κατεχ. to mean, as in Luke iv. 42, 'hindering the efficacy, or obstructing the power of religious truth, both in themselves and others, by a wrong use of the mental powers granted them;' see Carpzov, Cudworth's Intell. System, p. 471, and especially Hyperius. Thus ἐν ἀδικίᾳ stands for ἀδίκως, by a Hebraism common in the New Test. How and in what ways the truth, meaning that of natural religion, had been kept down and smothered by such as had attained to it, is ably pointed out by Hyperius.

19. διότι τὸ γνωστὸν—αὐτοῖς.] The proof of the inefficacy of the Law to Justification being founded upon the general state of sinfulness among both Jews and Gentiles; and sin and guilt presupposing the existence and knowledge of a Law (iv. 15. iii. 20), it was necessary that the Apostle should be able to affirm generally, of both Jews and Gentiles, that a sufficient discovery had been made to them of the nature and demerit of sin, by the Law, either of Moses, or of nature. Accordingly, with respect to the Gentiles, he shows that they had a sufficient evidence of God, and his adorable perfections, afforded to them in the works of Creation. (Young.) Διότι, siquidem, 'inasmuch as.' Τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'what is to be, or may be, known respecting God.' On this force of verbals in τος, like that of the Latin adjectives in bilis and ilis, see Buttmann, Gr. Gr., or Stuart, who compares Plato, de Repub. l. v. τὸ γνωστὸν καὶ τὸ δοξαστόν.

— φανερόν ἐστι] 'is manifest among them;' namely, by the unassisted exercise of the under-γὰρ ἀόρατα αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ κτίσεως κόσμου τοῖς ποιήμασι νοούμενα καθορᾶται, ἥ τε ἀΐδιος αὐτοῦ δύναμις καὶ θειότης·) εἰς 21 τὸ εἶναι αὐτοὺς ἀναπολογήτους. [t] Διότι γνόντες τὸν Θεὸν, t Eph. 4. 17.

οὐχ ὡς Θεὸν ἐδόξασαν, ἢ εὐχαρίστησαν· ἀλλ' ἐματαιώθησαν u Deut. 4. 15, &c.
ἐν τοῖς διαλογισμοῖς αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐσκοτίσθη ἡ ἀσύνετος αὐτῶν Ps. 106. 20.
22, 23 καρδία. Φάσκοντες εἶναι σοφοὶ, ἐμωράνθησαν· [u] καὶ ἤλ- Wisd. 12. 23, &c.
λαξαν τὴν δόξαν τοῦ ἀφθάρτου Θεοῦ ἐν ὁμοιώματι εἰκόνος Isa. 40. 17, 18. Acts 17. 29.

standing, whether they have a written law or not. Ἐφανέρωσε, 'hath manifested it to them,' viz. by his works of creation and providence.

20. τὰ γὰρ ἀόρατα αὐτοῦ.] Meaning, 'his nature and attributes of Godhead, not discernible to mortal eyes.' It is a fine remark of Aristotle, de Mundo, c. vi. (cited by Wetstein), πάσῃ θνητῇ φύσει γενόμενος ἀθεώρητος, ἀπ' αὐτῶν τῶν ἔργων θεωρεῖται ὁ Θεός. Ἀπὸ κτίσεως κόσμου is for ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κόσμου, Matt. xxiv. 21, or ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, Matt. xiii. 35, 'since the creation of the world.' Τοῖς ποιήμασι νοούμενα. The sense is, 'being comprehended by the things which he hath created and ordered;' for we may, with Kypke, extend ποιήμ. to the operations of God's providence as well as of His creation. So Acts xiv. 17, οὐκ ἀμάρτυρον ἑαυτὸν ἀφῆκεν.

— ἥ τε ἀΐδιος—θειότης.] This is exegetical of τὰ ἀόρατα; and the meaning seems to be, 'his omnipotence, and the other attributes of his Godhead.' See Cudworth, Intell. Syst. p. 471, and Stuart.

— εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐ. ἀναπολογήτους] 'in order that they should be without excuse.' Here, as Hyperius says, we have an 'amplificatio acceptæ de Deo rebusque divinis cognitionis,' taking away the plea of ignorance. How they were inexcusable, and how all natural religion, without revelation, can only render a sinner such, is shown in an admirable Sermon of Dr. South on this text.

21. The διότι here is, as Stuart remarks, coordinate with that at v. 19; and as at vv. 19, 20 we have the first proof of the heathens hindering the truth concerning God by vice, so ver. 21 presents the second proof thereof,—namely, that, with all their opportunities for obtaining a competent knowledge of the true God, they made no use of it, but were devoted to the basest idolatry: on this the Apostle treats at ver. 25. Γνόντες must be taken with limitation, viz. 'knowing him (i. e. having the means of knowing him, John viii. 28) sufficiently to see his claim to be worshipped as God.'

— οὐχ ὡς Θεὸν ἐδόξασαν.] The glorifying of God as God must consist in the thorough recognition of all his glorious attributes,—his eternity, power, wisdom, goodness, truth, justice, and mercy; and also in such a due consideration of all those attributes, in their various relations to us his creatures, as may induce us to render the homage of prayer and praise, faith and obedience. The words ἢ εὐχαρίστησαν are intended to point out the infinite obligations we are laid under by the infinite benefits we receive from the exercise of those attributes; consequently intimating to us the duty of rendering humble and hearty thanks; see more in Calvin and Hyperius. That the heathens ascribed most of the blessings which they enjoyed, to fortune, or their own prudence, is shown at large by Grotius.

— ἐματαιώθησαν ἐν τοῖς διαλογισμοῖς, &c.] In ἐματαιώθησαν we have a very strong term, but one well suited to the purpose of the Apostle in this and the next two verses, which is, as Crellius remarks, by a yet further amplification on their folly and impiety, to show their utter inexcusableness. Ἐματ. means, 'they were befooled,' or 'infatuated;' the nature of sin, as Scott observes, 'being not only to defile, but to infatuate.' So Jerem. x. 14, (which passage the Apostle seems here to have had in mind) ἐμωράνθη πᾶς ἄνθρωπος ἀπὸ γνώσεως, a good rendering of the Hebr. נבער כל אדם מדעת, the sense there being, as De Dieu has shown, that 'every man has become foolish, from the notion he has of his great knowledge and wisdom;' i. e. is made a fool by his [fancied] wisdom. So, in the next verse, we have similarly, φάσκοντες εἶναι σοφοὶ, ἐμωράνθησαν, which words were meant to explain the foregoing. And as the passage of Jeremiah is especially on idolatry, so here there seems an allusion to what was, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, termed ματαιότης, namely, 'idol-worship;' see Acts xiv. 15. Similarly it is said at Eph. iv. 17, τὰ ἔθνη περιπατεῖ ἐν ματαιότητι τοῦ νοὸς αὐτῶν.

The latter clause is intended to represent the effect of what is denoted by the former; the meaning being, that as 'they entertained vain and degrading views of the nature and attributes of God and his worship; so, in consequence of this, and as its punishment, (see ver. 28,) their understanding, thus abused, became darkened.' Theophylact well explains, τοῖς λογισμοῖς τὸ πᾶν ἐπέτρεψαν, καὶ—μάταιοι ἠλέγχθησαν, οὐ δυνηθέντων τῶν λογισμῶν πρὸς τὸ πέρας ἐξικέσθαι, meaning, in the words of our great epic Poet,

'Found no end, in wandering mazes lost.'

22. What is said in this verse is meant to illustrate the foregoing sentiment, and show the extent of that fatuity (in the most debasing and disgusting idolatry), and the cause of it, in the vanity of their minds. So Theophylact, ἐκ τοῦ οἴεσθαι σοφοὶ, διὸ καὶ ἐμωράνθησαν.

— φάσκοντες εἶναι σοφοὶ, ἐμωράνθησαν] 'while arrogating to themselves the reputation of being wise.' The pretensions which the heathens made to wisdom will appear from the names σοφοὶ, σοφισταὶ, &c., ascribed to those who were supposed to possess it; see Wetstein and Kypke; though they were not aware that its professors were too often only wise in vain speculation, seeking virtue without finding it. Thus Hegesander ap. Athen. p. 162, speaks of the δοξοματαιοσοφοὶ and the ζηταρετησιάδαι.

23. καὶ ἤλλαξαν, &c.] Meaning, 'they dishonoured the glorious nature of the incorruptible God, by representing him under the likeness of φθαρτοῦ ἀνθρώπου, καὶ πετεινῶν καὶ τετραπόδων καὶ ἑρπεx Ps. 81. 12. Acts 14. 16. τῶν. [x] Διὸ καὶ παρέδωκεν αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεὸς, ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις 24 τῶν καρδιῶν αὐτῶν, εἰς ἀκαθαρσίαν, τοῦ ἀτιμάζεσθαι τὰ σώματα αὐτῶν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς· οἵτινες μετήλλαξαν τὴν ἀλή- 25 θειαν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν τῷ ψεύδει, καὶ ἐσεβάσθησαν καὶ ἐλά-τρευσαν τῇ κτίσει παρὰ τὸν κτίσαντα, ὅς ἐστιν εὐλογητὸς y Lev. 18. 22, 23. Eph. 5. 11, 12. εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας! ἀμήν. [y] Διὰ τοῦτο παρέδωκεν αὐτοὺς ὁ 26

Θεὸς εἰς πάθη ἀτιμίας. Αἵ τε γὰρ θήλειαι αὐτῶν μετήλλαξαν corruptible man, and birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things;' meaning, reptiles of every kind, not only serpents, but crocodiles and fishes, as in Egypt. A fine periphrasis of idolatry; on the full import of which see Hyperius and Calvin. Here each successive term is stronger than the preceding by a kind of climax up to ἑρπετῶν. The substance of this periphrasis is finely expressed by Milton, Paradise Lost, Book i. 369:—

'By falsities and lies the greatest part Of mankind they corrupted, to forsake
God their Creator, and th' invisible Glory of him that made them to transform Oft to the image of a brute, adorn'd
With gay religions, full of pomp and gold,
And Devils to adore for Deities.'

Idolatry of every kind arose from the proneness of men to ascribe the benefits they enjoyed rather to the agency of such secondary causes as fell within the range of their senses, than to that of a Supreme Providence (see Philo-Judæus, vol. ii. p. 561). Thus great or good kings, and eminent warriors or legislators, were deified; and at length even animals, whether from their great usefulness, or as being typical of the operations of nature; the origin and progress of which is traced with a masterly hand by Grotius and Perizon., in a work professedly on this subject, and especially by Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. vol. iii. p. 272, sqq.

24. παρέδωκεν—εἰς ἀκ.] The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that this must signify 'permitted them to fall into' (see a similar passage in Acts vii. 42); meaning, that 'God gave them up to the gratifying of their lusts (they being so eager in the pursuit, as to listen to none of the warnings of reason and conscience), and to the dreadful consequences (pointed out in what follows) of such a course. 'Εν ταῖς ἐπιθ., for κατὰ (propter) τὰς ἐπιθυμίας. 'The expression παρέδωκεν (as Professor Stuart truly observes) neither denotes an active plunging them into sin, nor an inactive letting alone, but a leaving them to pursue their desires, without checking them by such restraints as He usually employs on those who are not yet hardened offenders.' 'The imputation (he continues) is, that in apostatizing from the true God, and running into idolatry, they had become the devoted slaves of lust; which seems, also, by implication, to be considered as the [chief] reason of their apostasy.' And no wonder; since among all the various forms of heathenism, impurity has been either a direct or indirect service in their religious rites; polytheism and idolatry having ever been a religion of obscenity as well as cruelty. 'Ακαθαρσία is a general term (explained by the words following, τοῦ ἀτιμάζεσθαι τὰ σώματα αὐτῶν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς) to denote all those pollutions of the body which are adverted to at ver. 20, sq.

25. This verse connects with ver. 23 (ver. 24 being, in some measure, parenthetical), and contains a repetition of the idea there found, but, as Hyperius remarks, further illustrated, being set in a stronger light by the antithesis between truth and a lie, the creature and the Creator.

— τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Render, 'the true God;' abstract for concrete. 'Εν τῷ ψεύδει is for εἰς τὸ ψεῦδος, 'into a lie,' i. e. a pretended God, an idol; for ψεῦδος, like the Hebr. שקר, denoted not only a lie, but any action which involved a lie. So Philo, p. 678, where Moses, on seeing the golden calf, is astonished to behold ὅσον ψεῦδος ἀνθ' ὅσης ἀληθείας ὑπηλλάξαντο. Hence the term was very applicable to those lying vanities, idols; see Isaiah xliv. 20. Jerem. xxiii. 14. In ἐσεβάσθησαν and ἐλάτρευσαν is designated every sort of religious worship and homage, external and internal. Παρὰ τὸν κτίσαντα, 'more than the Creator;' or rather, 'to the neglect of' (literally, to the passing by) the Creator; preterito Creatore, as Hilary renders. Τὸν κτίσαντα is for τὸν κτίστην; the antithesis here requiring the participle rather than the noun verbal.

To this, Commentators observe, the Apostle subjoins a doxology; as was usual with the Jews, on occasions where the honour of God was concerned; see Gen. ix. 26. xiv. 20. Gal. i. 5. Rom. ix. 5, et al. Yet surely doxology involves the idea of something too formal for the present occasion. At least where the honour of God is impeached, the words may rather be considered as a natural outbreak of indignation, intended, as Gomar says, 'ad amplificationem sceleris,' to set forth the heinousness of the offence, by contrast with the contrary duty. So Calvin explains, 'quem solum honorari adorarique oportuit, et cui fas non fuit quidquam vel minimum auferri.' See also Hyperius.

26. As at ver. 25 we have a repetition and amplification of the sentiment at ver. 23, so in this and the next verse we have a repetition and amplification of the sentiment at ver. 24; in which, too, what was there said generally, is now drawn forth into particulars.

— πάθη ἀτιμίας] for πάθη ἄτιμα, namely, those whereby, as it is said ver. 24, ἠτιμάζοντο τὰ σώματα αὐτῶν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς.

In addition to the evidence here adduced by Commentators as to the dreadful corruption of morals in the ancient world, it may be noticed that the disclosures lately made by the disinterment of Herculaneum and Pompeii, are such as fully to confirm and illustrate all that the Apostle

27 τὴν φυσικὴν χρῆσιν εἰς τὴν παρὰ φύσιν. Ὁμοίως τε καὶ οἱ ἄῤῥενες, ἀφέντες τὴν φυσικὴν χρῆσιν τῆς θηλείας, ἐξεκαύθησαν ἐν τῇ ὀρέξει αὐτῶν εἰς ἀλλήλους· ἄρσενες ἐν ἄρσεσι τὴν ἀσχημοσύνην κατεργαζόμενοι, καὶ τὴν ἀντιμισθίαν ἣν 28 ἔδει τῆς πλάνης αὐτῶν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἀπολαμβάνοντες. Καὶ καθὼς οὐκ ἐδοκίμασαν τὸν Θεὸν ἔχειν ἐν ἐπιγνώσει, παρέδωκεν αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεὸς εἰς ἀδόκιμον νοῦν, ποιεῖν τὰ μὴ καθ-29 ήκοντα· πεπληρωμένους πάσῃ ἀδικίᾳ, πορνείᾳ, πονηρίᾳ, πλεsays, or hints, on the tremendous abominations of even the most civilized nations of the ancient world. Indeed, the most civilized were those the deepest plunged into the mire of pollution; the barbarians being comparatively virtuous, as will appear from the Germania of Tacitus.

27. ἀντιμισθίαν] 'punishment.' So Herodot. iii. 15, ἔλαβε τὸν μισθόν. The word is rare, but found in Clem. Alex. and Justin Martyr. And we may compare ἀντίφερνον in Æschyl. Ag. 39. By this ἀντιμισθίαν, considered as the penalty due to their πλάνη (or abandonment of the worship and service of the true God, and that knowledge of his attributes and their own duties, implanted by God in their minds and consciences), there is a reference to all the dreadful consequences, both physical and moral, which followed the practice of idolatry, and the abominations above adverted to, consequent on it.

28. καὶ καθὼς οὐκ ἐδοκίμασαν—ἐπιγνώσει.] In the words ἐδοκίμασαν and ἀδόκιμον we have, as Calvin and Hyperius remark, an allusio or paronomasia, 'quæ æquam peccati et pœnæ relationem eleganter indicat, et apte exprimit Divini judicii æquitatem;' the sense being, 'As they did not choose to receive, or remain in, the knowledge of the true God,—God, in return, gave them up to a perverse mind, which could no longer approve of any thing rightly.' Of this signification of δοκιμάζειν, by which it means 'to regard as approved, to approve, care for, choose,' several examples are adduced by Krebs and Wetstein; ex. gr. Joseph. Ant. ii. 7. 4, τὰ ὀνόματα τούτων δηλῶσαι οὐκ ἐδοκίμασαν.

The Apostle's aim is, to show their errors and sins to be voluntary, and consequently inexcusable. Wherefore (he says) God gave them up εἰς ἀδόκιμον νοῦν. Now ἀδόκιμος properly signifies reprobus, rejectaneus, as used of bad money, which, as it will not pass, is good for nothing. Thus (by the same metaphor as in our word naughty) it comes to mean what is, in every sense, bad; which is the force here assigned to the word by the recent Commentators universally. Yet this not a little lowers the sentiment; and, as a most important doctrine is involved (namely, the existence of a state the very opposite to a state of grace), it ought by no means to be admitted. I therefore prefer to follow the ancient and early modern Expositors in general, and, of later times, Hammond, Wolf, Locke, Wetstein, Doddridge, and A. Clarke, in taking ἀδόκιμον in an active sense, to denote literally, 'mentem non exploratricem,' or, as Wetstein explains, 'unfit to discharge the offices of the mind.' Thus God permitted them to be punished by that wherein they had sinned. And as they had abused their mind, so God permitted it to become insulsa,—the state of those who are befooled or infatuated. So supra v. 21, ἐματαιώθησαν. As to the objection of Stuart, that 'the usus loquendi will not permit this sense,' it is of no force. For certain it is, the usus loquendi permits other adjectives in —ιμος to be taken in an active, as well as passive sense. And why not this? That no example of the sense has elsewhere been found, is no proof that it did not exist. It is difficult to set bounds to the usus loquendi, and somewhat too magisterial to pronounce that a usage did not exist, because we can remember no example of it, or that none such is found in those works of the Classical writers preserved to us. Not to mention that the usus loquendi was always allowed to be somewhat stretched in expressions which dealt in paronomasia, or oxymoron. Thus, for instance, at Rom. ii. 12, 13, ἄνομος is used for ἄνευ νόμου, though contrary to the usus loquendi, on account of the license allowed by the expression being in antithesis with ἐν νόμῳ.

In τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα there seems to be a litotes, to signify turpia; or, rather, it may be understood to mean, unsuitable to them as reasonable beings, being contrary to nature, reason, &c.

29. πεπληρωμένους πάσῃ ἀδικίᾳ, &c.] Here follows an enumeration of the vices which were the natural fruits of the νοῦς ἀδόκιμος. In this list many Commentators trace, or rather endeavour to introduce, either by change of position, or by forced interpretations and long parentheses, that regular order, in which they would have the whole expressed. But it should seem that the Apostle was here content to enumerate the vices of the Gentiles in a popular manner; thus exemplifying and justifying the charges just made. The difficulty which we occasionally find in ascertaining the exact sense meant to be expressed by the Apostle, arises from some of the terms employed being of considerable latitude, and from there being occasionally nothing sufficiently marked in the context to enable us to absolutely determine the sense. Ἀδικίᾳ, with which the list commences, seems meant to denote vice and iniquity in general; which is followed up by other terms more special. Πορνείᾳ Grotius and Koppe think probably not genuine, and arising from a var. lect. of the following word. But there is the authority of only nine MSS. and some inferior Versions and Fathers for its omission. And the evidence of Versions and Fathers is, in such a case as the present, of little weight. The similarity, too, of the two words πορνείᾳ and πονηρίᾳ would easily cause one of the two to be omitted; and the word which presented the least difficulty would be most likely to be retained. In short, the two words are similarly associated in Æschines, cont. Ctes. p. 84, where he speaks ονεξίᾳ, κακίᾳ· μεστοὺς φθόνου, φόνου, ἔριδος, δόλου, κακο-ηθείας· ψιθυριστὰς, καταλάλους, θεοστυγεῖς, ὑβριστὰς, ὑπερ- 30 ηφάνους, ἀλαζόνας, ἐφευρετὰς κακῶν, γονεῦσιν ἀπειθεῖς, ἀσυνέτους, ἀσυνθέτους, ἀστόργους, [ἀσπόνδους,] ἀνελεή- 31

of τὴν τοῦ Κτησίφωντος πονηρίαν καὶ πορνείαν, where render, 'roguery and whoremongery;' perhaps the very sense in the present passage. We have here, indeed, a paronomasia, as a little after at φθόνου, φόνου—ἀσυνέτους, ἀσυνθέτους. And so at Heb. xi. 37 we have ἐπρίσθησαν, ἐπειράσθησαν. See also Is. xxiv. 18. By a similar paronomasia it is said, Apul. Met. l. ix., 'mulier scæva, sæva; viriosa (read vinosa), ebriosa; pervicax, pertinax.' Finally, as to the change of order in some MSS., they probably proceeded from the endeavours of the Critics to introduce that regularity of plan which the Commentators are so fond of. With respect to πορνείᾳ, it may be understood of illicit sexual intercourse in general, and include adultery. Since πονηρίᾳ is used in Matt. xxii. 18 to denote malice or craft, and in Luke xi. 39 is united with ἁρπαγὴ, in Mark vii. 22 with δόλος, and in 1 Cor. v. 8 with κακία (which here follows), so it must, in the present passage, denote more than iniquity in general, and probably means malignity. Πλεονεξίᾳ seems to mean rapacity, extortion. So Thucyd. i. 40, οἵδε βίαιοι καὶ πλεονέκται εἰσί. The word is also united with βίαιος by Pollux, viii. 7, and Xen. Mem. i. 2. 12, πλεονέκ. καὶ βιαιότατος ἐγένετο. Κακίᾳ may be supposed to denote intentional and habitual mischievousness; as in Eurip. Hippol. 1334, τὴν δὲ σὴν ἁμαρτίαν Τὸ μὴ εἰδέναι—ἐκλύει κάκης. So Thucyd. i. 32, ξυγγνώμη, εἰ μὴ μετὰ κακίας, δόξης δὲ μᾶλλον ἁμαρτίᾳ τολμῶμεν. Or we may, with Bp. Taylor (Works, vol. viii. 389), explain it, 'a studying to deceive and circumvent our neighbour.'

29. φθόνου, φόνου, ἔριδος.] These three terms seem meant to form a group; and the sense may be 'full of envy and strife, even to murder.' By κακοηθεία, as Kypke observes, is here meant, not vicious action in general, but that vice of the mind which, according to Aristotle's definition, consists in viewing every action in the worst light, as opposed to εὐηθεία, unsuspecting candour.

30. ψιθυριστὰς, καταλ.] These are meant to be coupled; the former, as Theophylact observes, denoting secret, and the latter, open calumniators. See Bp. Taylor, Works, vol. viii. 392.

— θεοστυγεῖς.] The word, according to its different accentuation, may signify either haters of God, or hated by God. The latter sense is the one usually found in the Classical writers, and it is here adopted by some eminent modern Commentators. But the former, which is assigned by the ancients and most moderns, seems preferable.

— ὑβριστὰς, ὑπερηφ., ἀλαζ.] These terms seem to form another group. They so far differ, that the first denotes insolence, as shown in gross abuse; the 2d and 3d, as evinced in contemptuous behaviour and contumelious words.

— ἐφευρετὰς κακῶν.] This, we may explain, with Chrysostom, Theophylact, Theodoret, and Œcumen., to denote persons who not only perpetrate all the known vices, but seek out and invent more. So in 2 Macc. vii. 31 Antiochus is called πάσης κακίας εὑρετής; and in Philo, p. 520, we have στασιάρχαι, φιλοπράγμονες, κακῶν εὑρεταί. And so Tacitus calls Sejanus 'facinorum omnium repertor.' Thus the expression is well explained by Bp. Taylor, 'contrivers of all such arts as minister to vice.' Indeed there were in that age (as appears from Tacitus, Suetonius, and Plutarch,) ἐφευρεταὶ ἡδονῶν, persons who lived by inventing new pleasures.

31. ἀσυνέτους.] Some ancient and several eminent modern Commentators take this for ἀσυνειδήτους, without conscience, or sense of religion. An interpretation, however, so destitute of authority, that it is better, with Theophylact and Wetstein, to take it (by an idiom found in our own language) for 'obstinate;' a sense of the word sufficiently established by a passage of an inscription in Chishull's Antiq. Asiat., pt. ii. p. 12, cited by Bowyer: Ἀξυνέτων δὲ βουλαῖς ἀνθρώπων τοῦδ' ἔτυχον θανάτου, where see Chishull.

In the terms which follow, ἀσυνθέτους—ἀνελεήμονας, there is some variety of reading, and much of interpretation. Many ancient MSS. and some Versions and Fathers have not ἀσπόνδους; which Griesbach and Koppe think is very probably an interpolation. If that were the case, I should suspect that ἀστόργους and ἀσυνθ. ought to be interchanged in position, which would keep the subject of disobedience to parents distinct from that of breach of contracts. And the omission in question may readily be ascribed partly to the scribes (ob homœoteleuton), and partly to the Critics, who thought the ἀσπόνδους useless after ἀσυνθέτους. But the words are not quite synonymous. Ἀσπ. may have reference to public, ἀσυνθ. to private life: or rather, ἀσυνθ. may mean breakers of covenants, and ἀσπ. those who enter into no treaties; i. e. implacable, irreconcileable; and thus it will consort well with ἀνελεήμονας. However, I cannot but suspect that ἀσυνθέτους and ἀστόργους ought to change places; and although there be no direct authority in MSS. for this, yet there is indirect; since there is little doubt that in the archetypes of those very ancient MSS. which have not ἀσπόνδους, the word was written after ἀσυνθέτους. This also is countenanced by the very ancient MS. 17, and Theophylact. Besides, as ἀστόργους is so closely connected with γονεῦσιν ἀπειθεῖς, ἀσυνέτους, it seems impossible to suppose that the Apostle would have taken the word out of its proper connexion, and inserted it between two other words, which are likewise closely connected, and by which there would thus arise an unnatural disruption.

Ἀνελεήμονας, pitiless, seems a step in the climax beyond ἀσπόνδους in the sense above inculcated. This the historians attest to have been the prevailing characteristic of the period in question all over the Roman empire. By ἀστόργους is denoted a want of the natural affection between children and parents respectively: of this the historians supply us with abundant evidence. And no wonder; for, as Bp. Sanderson observes, 32 μονας! [z] οἵτινες τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπιγνόντες, (ὅτι οἱ z Hos. 7. 3. Ps. 50. 18.

τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσσοντες ἄξιοι θανάτου εἰσίν,) οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι.
1 II. [a] ΔΙΟ ἀναπολόγητος εἶ, ὦ ἄνθρωπε πᾶς ὁ κρίνων! a 2 Sam. 12. 5. Matt. 7. 1.

in his Sermon on Ps. xxvii. 10, 'although God has imprinted these natural affections in the hearts of men, in as deep and indelible characters as any other branch of the law of nature, yet, so desperately wicked is the heart of man, that if left to the wildness of its own corruption, it soon shakes off that also, and quite razes out all impressions of the law of nature; at least so blurs and confounds the characters, that the conscience can spell little or nothing of duty out of them.'

With this description of the state of the Gentiles in the age of St. Paul may be compared the fine moral picture in Thucydides iii. 82—84, of the state of society in Greece at the time of the Peloponnesian war; also one scarcely inferior in Philo-Judæus, p. 123, of the state of manners in the world during his age, both among Jews and Gentiles; where, among other particulars, he notices ἀσκήσεις ἀκρασίας, ἀφροσύνης μελέται· ἐπιτηδεύσεις αἰσχρῶν, φθορὰ παντελὴς τοῦ καλοῦ. See also Max. Tyr. Diss. xxxvi. 2, and Diss. iii. 3. Pausan. viii. 2. 2. Similarly we read in Wisd. xiv. 23—26, (of the Gentiles,) 'Whilst they slew their children in sacrifice, or used secret ceremonies, or made revellings of strange rites, they kept neither lives nor marriages any longer undefiled, but either one slew another traitorously, or grieved him by adultery; so that there reigned in all men without exception blood, manslaughter, theft, and dissimulation, corruption, unfaithfulness, tumults, perjury, disquieting of good men, forgetfulness of good turns, defiling of souls, changing of kind, disorder in marriages, adultery, and shameless uncleanness.'

32. τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπιγν.] 'fully knowing the righteous ordinance of God;' i. e. having it written by God on their consciences. What that is, is explained in the subsequent parenthetical sentence. By ἐπιγνόντες, the Apostle means 'such a sufficient knowledge of the great outlines of duty, as should render them inexcusable for neglecting it.' This, indeed, the Philosophers, at least in their exoteric doctrines, always professed.

— ἄξιοι θανάτου.] Meaning (as the word is often used in St. Paul) death, both physical and moral, i. e. the perdition of the soul in the next world.

— οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, &c.] Here we have an amplification à minori ad majus; meaning, as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, that they not only, hurried away by passion, commit such sins, but that they are so devoid of all sense of moral virtue, that they even approve of the sins when committed by others, and like the persons the better for practising the same. So the great Greek Historian (in the passage above adverted to): ὥστε εὐσεβείᾳ μὲν οὐδέτεροι ἐνόμιζον, εὐπρεπείᾳ δὲ λόγου οἷς ξυμβαίη ἐπιφθόνως τὶ διαπράξασθαι, ἄμεινον ἤκουον. Certainly, as observes Dr. South (Sermon on this text), 'it argues a higher degree of depravity to deliberately justify and applaud wickedness committed, than to commit it amidst the influence of violent passion. Therefore the guilt arising from a man's delighting in other men's sins, or (what is all one) in other men for their sins, is greater than he can possibly contract by a commission of the same sins in his own person.' See more on this subject in the Greek Commentators, and also Grotius, Calvin, and Bp. Taylor (Works, vol. viii. p. 395).

II. The Apostle, having now convinced the Gentiles of sin, proceeds to show that the Jews are under the same condemnation, and stand as much in need of the mercy proffered in the Gospel as do the Gentiles. He proves that they, having despised the goodness, and broken the law of God, were as obnoxious to his wrath as the Gentiles, and therefore could not pretend to arrogate the Divine mercy to themselves; for, in thus condemning the Gentiles, they, in fact, condemned themselves. Since, however, this was a subject unpalatable to Jews, the Apostle argues in a covert way, apostrophizing some one (a Jew, as it should seem) whom he supposes to be present, and, on hearing him enumerate the multiplied abominations of the Gentiles, to break out into bitter condemnation of them. Moreover, he does not at first apply what he says to the Jews; and throughout he proceeds discreetly, insinuating himself gradually into the Jew's conscience. To do this, there was no need (as in the case of the Gentile) to prove to the Jew that he was under a law, that being his great boast; but there was great need to eradicate those prejudices, which led him to make so wide a distinction between Jews and Gentiles, as to suppose that a Jew might safely continue in sins which would be fatal to a Gentile. Thus we have in vv. 1—8 the general considerations already named. In vv. 9—16 the Apostle shows that the Jews must be accountable to God, as really and truly, for the manner in which they treat the precepts contained in the Scriptures, as the heathen are for the manner in which they demean themselves with respect to the law of nature; and that each must be judged, at last, according to the means of grace and improvement which he has enjoyed. In vv. 17—29 there is a more direct reference to the Jews, in which it is shown that those who sin against higher degrees of knowledge imparted by revelation, must be more guilty than those who have offended merely against the laws of nature; i. e. he plainly teaches the doctrine that guilt is proportioned to the light and love that have been manifested, and yet been abused.

1. διὸ ἀναπολόγητος, &c.] The connexion here is not very clear, and has been variously traced, but most successfully by Crellius, Taylor, and Stuart, who show that the διὸ serves to draw a conclusion. The sense may be expressed as follows: 'Since it will be conceded that those who know the ordinances of God against such vices as have been named, and still practise them, and applaud others for doing so, are worthy of punishment; it follows (διό, therefore,) that all who are so enlightened as to disapprove of such crimes, and who still commit them, are even yet more worthy of punishment.

ἐν ᾧ γὰρ κρίνεις τὸν ἕτερον, σεαυτὸν κατακρίνεις· τὰ γὰρ αὐτὰ πράσσεις ὁ κρίνων. Οἴδαμεν δὲ ὅτι τὸ κρίμα τοῦ 2
Θεοῦ ἐστι κατὰ ἀλήθειαν ἐπὶ τοὺς τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσσοντας.
Λογίζῃ δὲ τοῦτο, ὦ ἄνθρωπε, ὁ κρίνων τοὺς τὰ τοιαῦτα 3 πράσσοντας, καὶ ποιῶν αὐτά, ὅτι σὺ ἐκφεύξῃ τὸ κρίμα τοῦ
b Infra 9. 23. Isa. 30. 18. Θεοῦ; [b] ἢ τοῦ πλούτου τῆς χρηστότητος αὐτοῦ καὶ τῆς 4 2 Pet. 3. 9, 15. ἀνοχῆς καὶ τῆς μακροθυμίας καταφρονεῖς, ἀγνοῶν ὅτι τὸ c Deut. 32. 34. χρηστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς μετάνοιάν σε ἄγει; [c] κατὰ δὲ τὴν 5
James 5. 3. σκληρότητά σου καὶ ἀμετανόητον καρδίαν, θησαυρίζεις σεαυτῷ

In ὁ κρίνων we have the use of the Participle present with an Article for the verb and pronoun relative (on which see Winer's Gr. Gr. § 39): a mode of expression, in its indefinite force, best suited to the covert mode adopted by the Apostle, who chose to make the proposition general, though intended to be of particular application. Κρίνεις, 'sittest in judgment, pronouncing sentence.' Τὸν ἕτερον, 'the other party;' meaning the Gentiles. Σεαυτὸν κατακρίνεις. Such, indeed, Grotius observes, is a common law of all men. And this principle he illustrates from various Civilians, Historians, and Orators. Similar is the sentiment of Plato, p. 453, ἐν οἷς ἕτερον αἰτιᾶται, διαβάλλων ἑαυτὸν λέληθεν. By πράσσεις we are to understand, 'habitually committed;' the present tense often denoting what is habitual.

That the Jews did thus harshly judge the heathens. is well known. So Tacitus, Hist. v. 5, (cited by Wetstein,) 'Ex quo profluebat, ut gentes omnes Deo exosas, et ab eo tandem perdendas crederent; quod nec philosophi, nec gentes aliæ, nec eorum magistratus fecerunt.' And that the Jews were themselves defiled with the same vices as the heathens, on whom they sat in judgment, is proved by the testimony both of Josephus and Philo.

2. οἴδαμεν δὲ ὅτι—πράσσοντας.] The δὲ need not (as it is by some) be rendered for, or besides, but may be understood in the ordinary adversative sense, and be supposed to have reference to a clause omitted, of the following purport: '[He may, indeed, flatter himself with being acquitted, by being tried under a different rule of judgment,] but we know and are sure.' By we is meant we all, whether Jews or Gentiles. Κατὰ ἀλήθειαν is a phrase for the adjective; meaning, 'agreeably to justice,' just and right. See Note on John iii. 21.

3. λογίζῃ δὲ—τοῦ Θεοῦ;] An animated and not unusual mode of speaking (also found in a passage of Galen, cited by Wetstein, οὐ βούλει μαθεῖν, ἄνθρωπε, τὴν τῶν Ἕλληνων διάλεκτον) by which an argument is pressed home, and which involves grave and severe expostulation. So in Joseph. Ant. xviii. 6. 10, ἤπου λήσειν με ὑπονοεῖς θανάτου τοῦ αὐτοκράτορος καταψευσάμενος, ἀλλ' οὐ κεφαλῇ τῇ σῇ τοῦτον ἀναμαξάμενος τὸν λόγον; and a passage of Diphilus, cited by Grotius: Οἴει σὺ τοὺς θανόντας, ὦ Μικήρατε, Τρυφῆς ἁπάσης μεταλαβόντας ἐν βίῳ Πεφευγέναι τὸ Θεῖον; This δεινότης is continued throughout the following verse.

4. ἢ τοῦ πλούτου—καταφρονεῖς.] Ἢ, for num or an, as in 1 Cor. xi. 14. xiv. 36. In τοῦ πλούτου τῆς χρηστότητος many recognise a Hebraism, for 'rich mercy.' Yet Grotius cites from Philo, ὑπερβολὴ τοῦ πλούτου τῆς ἀγαθότητος Θεοῦ, and Palairet from Aristæn., p. 10, ὡραϊζομένην ὑπὸ πλούτου τῆς εὐπρεπείας, and Simplic. on Epict. ὑπερβολὴ τοῦ πλούτου τῆς ἀγαθότητος τοῦ Θεοῦ. Of the terms χρηστ., ἀνοχῆς, and μακροθυμίας, the two last are nearly synonymous. The first denotes a disposition to do good, and to benefit others. Καταφρονεῖν here signifies 'to care not for, to slight,' &c. This καταφρόνησις, imputed to the Jews, seems to be a slighting of the mercy of God held out, under the notion that it was not needed, inasmuch as no sin committed by any of the posterity of Abraham could finally deprive him of the divine favour.

— ἀγνοῶν] i. e. 'not knowing, from want of reflection.' Τὸ χρηστὸν, for χρηστότης: a very rare phrase. The nearest approach to it I have met with is in a passage of Eurip. Phœn. 1754, τὸ χρήσιμον φρενῶν.

— εἰς μετάνοιάν σε ἄγει.] By μετάνοια is to be understood 'such a change of mind as shall operate on the life and conversation.' Ἄγει many explain, 'is intended to lead thee;' on the principle that verbs denoting action or effect are sometimes used of endeavour only. But it is better (with Chrysostom, Carpzov, and Schleusner) to take it as put for ἐπάγει or ἑλκύει, impels; namely, by the use of all moral means and fit motives. Render, 'is exerting a force calculated to bring thee to repentance.' So John x. 16, ἄλλα πρόβατα ἔχω, ἅ με δεῖ ἀγαγεῖν, and vi. 44, οὐδεὶς δύναται ἐλθεῖν πρός με, ἐὰν μὴ ὁ Πατὴρ ὁ πέμψας με ἑλκύσῃ αὐτόν. The very expression here used occurs in Polyb. v. 15 (cited by Wetstein), πεπεισμένος—ταχέως εἰς μετάνοιαν ἄξειν τὸν βασιλέα. Appian, l. i. 2, p. 766, Θεοῦ σφᾶς ἐπὶ μετάνοιαν ἄγοντος τὸ ἁμάρτημα ἥδοῦντο. Josephus, Ant. (cited by Kypke), ἐπειρᾶτο τοὺς νέους ἐπανορθεῖν, καὶ εἰς μετάνοιαν ἄγειν, ὧν ἔπραττον.

5. κατὰ δὲ τὴν σκληρ.] Κατὰ has here the sense because of; as in Eph. iv. 19, κατὰ σκληρότητα for σκληρότητι: a signification often found in Herodotus and Thucydides; chiefly, however, in the phrase κατ' ἔχθος. Ἀμετανόητον, 'impenitent.' Grotius compares a similar active sense in ἀμετακίνητος, ἀλάλητος, and ἀμετάθετος.

— θησαυρίζεις.] The word is properly used of what is good; but sometimes, as here, and James v. 3, and often in the Old Test., and sometimes in the Classical writers, of what is bad.

ὀργὴν ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὀργῆς καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως δικαιοκρισίας τοῦ 6, 7 Θεοῦ, [d] ὃς ἀποδώσει ἑκάστῳ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ· τοῖς μὲν καθ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ, δόξαν καὶ τιμὴν καὶ ἀφθαρσίαν 8 ζητοῦσι, ζωὴν αἰώνιον· [e] τοῖς δὲ ἐξ ἐριθείας, καὶ ἀπειθοῦσι μὲν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, πειθομένοις δὲ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ, θυμὸς καὶ ὀργή· 9 θλίψις καὶ στενοχωρία ἐπὶ πᾶσαν ψυχὴν ἀνθρώπου τοῦ κατεργαζομένου τὸ κακὸν, Ἰουδαίου τε, πρῶτον, καὶ Ἕλληνος· 10 δόξα δὲ καὶ τιμὴ καὶ εἰρήνη παντὶ τῷ ἐργαζομένῳ τὸ ἀγαθὸν, d Job 34. 11. Ps. 62. 12. Jer. 17. 10. & 32. 19. Matt. 16. 27. Rom. 14. 12. 1 Cor. 3. 8. 2 Cor. 5. 10 Rev. 22. 12. e Job 24. 13. 2 Thess. 1. 8.

— ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὀργῆς] for εἰς ἡμέραν, 'unto the time of severe punishment.' Ἀποκαλ. δικαιοκρ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is for ἐν ᾗ ἀποκαλυφθήσεται ἡ δικ., a periphrasis to denote the day of judgment. Δικαιοκρισία is a rare word, found in no writer earlier than St. Paul, except an anonymous Greek Translator at Hosea vi. 6. Δικαιοκρίτης occurs in 2 Macc. xii. 18.

6—11. After having overturned these Jewish prejudices, the Apostle proceeds to assert that there is no such προσωποληψία, or acceptance of persons, by God at the day of judgment, merely because they are of this or that nation; have or have not a revealed law; are circumcised or uncircumcised; but that all will be judged with strict impartiality, according to the degree of light and knowledge afforded to each in particular. (Young.)

This portion is intended partly to describe the nature of the judgment just mentioned, and evince its justice; but is, I conceive, chiefly introduced in order to enable the Apostle to engraft on the description of God's impartial justice to individuals his impartial justice to nations, which is skilfully brought in at vv. 9, 10.

7. καθ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ.] Here καθ' ὑπομονὴν is to be construed with ζητοῦσι. And καθ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγ. stands for ἐφ' ὑπομονῇ ('by patient perseverance in') ἔργων ἀγαθῶν; the singular, as denoting the genus, being (as often) put for the plural; see ver. 15. infra, xv. 58. 1 Thess. i. 3. 2 Thess. ii. 17. The terms δόξαν and τιμὴν are by most Commentators regarded as synonymous, but conjoined to strengthen the sense; of which several examples are adduced by Wetstein from Thucydides and other writers. There, however, the two terms are not quite synonymous; the former denoting the honour and dignity assigned to any one; the latter, the glory thence resulting. Καὶ ἀφθαρσίαν is added by way of raising the idea yet higher; q. d. 'even immortality of honour and glory.' It is, however, to be borne in mind, that such modes of expression as these are not to be pressed upon, as if the persons in question are to be supposed to seek for aught more exalted than to see God, and to be with God and Christ; but they are to be regarded (as Calvin and Hyperius suggest) in the light of periphrases descriptive of beatitude, accommodated to human views, feelings, and language, yet capable of salutary application to things spiritual and eternal: in like manner as in 1 Cor. ix. 25, to φθαρτὸν στέφανον is opposed ἄφθαρτον: and in the same light may we view the expression at 1 Pet. v. 4, κομιεῖσθε τὸν ἀμαράντινον τῆς δόξης στέφανον. Thus the idea is raised as far above whatever this world can supply, as immortality exceeds the longest life; and thus fulfilling the most ardent wishes of man: for, according to the sentiment of an ancient writer, cited by Grotius, ὧν τοῖς θεοῖς ἄνθρωπος εὔχεται τυχεῖν, τῆς ἀθανασίας κρεῖττον οὐδὲν εὔχεται.

8. τοῖς ἐξ ἐριθείας.] Supply οὖσι, for τοῖς ἐρίζουσι, i. e. ἐριστικοῖς; as in the expression οἱ ἐκ πίστεως and οἱ ἐκ νόμου. By ἀλήθεια is here meant true doctrine, embracing the truths both of natural and revealed religion; for what is said in this verse is meant for Jews as well as Gentiles. It has, indeed, been disputed whether the expressions ἀπειθοῦσι μὲν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, and πειθομένοις δὲ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ are to be understood of opinions, or of dispositions and actions. The latter view is supported by John iii. 21, and viii. 44. And thus ἀπειθεῖν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ will signify to be indisposed to do what is 'lawful and right;' see Calvin. The passage may, however, with Beza, be understood both of contentiousness in opinion, and (what is often united therewith) disobedience in practice.

At θυμὸς καὶ ὀργὴ must be supplied from the context ἔσται (for ἀποδοθήσεται); though grammatically there is an anacoluthon. There is great force in the expressions θυμὸς—στενοχωρία, probably formed on Ps. lxxviii. 49, Sept. ἐξαπέστειλεν εἰς αὐτοὺς ὀργὴν θυμοῦ αὐτοῦ, θυμὸν καὶ ὀργὴν καὶ θλίψιν. And we may observe, with Calvin, that 'of these four particulars the two latter are, as it were, the effects of the two former; and in each pair the sense in the first term is merely intended to be heightened by the second; the import of the former being extreme anger; of the latter, intense anguish.' The very expression occurs in Artemid. Oneir. ii. 51, and iii. 57. And it may be noticed, that the present passage has been imitated by the Pseudo-Sibylla (Orac. Sibyll. p. 29. Gall.) as follows:

Τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἀγαθὸν προφέρων πολὺ μείζονα μισθὸν,
Τοῖς δὲ κακοῖς ἀδίκοις τε, χόλον καὶ θυμὸν ἐγείρων.

9. πᾶσαν ψυχὴν ἀ.] A Hebraism taken from כל נפש האדם, as in xiii. 1. Acts ii. 43. Τὸ κακὸν, for κακίαν. The κατὰ in κατεργ. is intensive. The use of the Present, and the nature of the term κατεργ. alike denote habitual action. On Ἰουδαίου—Ἕλληνος see Note supra i. 16.

10. εἰρήνη.] In this kind of repetition of what was said at ver. 7, εἰρήνη is substituted for ζωὴ αἰώνιος, as being better adapted to the antithetical expressions θλίψις καὶ στενοχωρία; while it yields the same sense; as denoting that peace and reconciliation with God, by which all other blessings are crowned, and which implies f Deut. 10. 17. Gal. 2. 6. Eph. 6. 9. Col. 3. 25. 1 Pet. 1. 17. g Luke 12. 47. h Matt. 7. 21. James 1. 22, 25. 1 John 3. 7.

Ἰουδαίῳ τε, πρῶτον, καὶ Ἕλληνι. [f] Οὐ γάρ ἐστι προσωπο- 11
ληψία παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ. [g] ὅσοι γὰρ ἀνόμως ἥμαρτον, ἀνόμως 12 καὶ ἀπολοῦνται· καὶ ὅσοι ἐν νόμῳ ἥμαρτον, διὰ νόμου κριθήσονται, ([h] οὐ γὰρ οἱ ἀκροαταὶ τοῦ νόμου δίκαιοι παρὰ τῷ 13 Θεῷ· ἀλλ' οἱ ποιηταὶ τοῦ νόμου δικαιωθήσονται. (Ὅταν γὰρ 14 ἔθνη τὰ μὴ νόμον ἔχοντα φύσει τὰ τοῦ νόμου ποιῇ, οὗτοι, an eternity of bliss; nay, sometimes is applied to that state of felicity where 'the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest.'

11. In the weighty words contained in this verse the Apostle means not only to give a reason for what he has just said, but also to anticipate a latent objection on the part of the Jews, as if by so speaking he had given them no such advantage over the Gentiles, as they thought themselves entitled to. To this the reply is, that 'it is right so to do, since there is no respect of persons with God.' So in Deut. x. 17, the Deity is described as a God who 'regardeth not persons;' a Hebrew form of expression, meaning, that He does not accept any through favour, nor show undue partiality, but judges both nations and individuals according to the opportunities they have enjoyed. The word προσωποληψία is one occurring only in the New Test.

12. This verse is confirmative, and explanatory of the preceding.

— ἀνόμως] for ἄνευ νόμου; of which sense one example is adduced by Alberti from Isocrates, τοὺς Ἕλληνας ἀνόμως ζῶντας καὶ σποράδην οἰκοῦντας. Such, indeed, was formerly the sense of our word lawless.

It has been disputed whether by law here and just after be meant the law of Moses, or law in general, namely, the will of God, or what he would have done, as expressed by revelation; of course including the so-called Law of nature, since the human race was never so circumstanced as to be without that. The latter view has been adopted by the most eminent modern Expositors; and with reason; as will appear from the purpose of this and the succeeding verses. A view, indeed, confirmed by the absence of the article here, as the presence of it in the next verse points at the law of Moses. On the use of the term νόμος and the course of argument, Bp. Middleton has the following luminous observations. 'In order to show that by the Gospel alone men can be justified, and that the Mosaic revelation is in this respect of no more avail than is the light of nature (a proposition, the proof of which is the main object of the whole Epistle), the Apostle has occasion to refer to the different rules of life with which the Gentiles and Jews had respectively been furnished; to the latter more than one revelation had been granted; for from the earliest ages to the time of Malachi, the Almighty favoured them (the Patriarchs and Prophets) with repeated indications of his will. Hence νομος is used by St. Paul of every rule of life, of every revelation, especially of the Mosaic law, and even of the moral and ceremonial observances, one or both of which it is the object of every νόμος to inculcate. With respect to the present passage, I am of opinion that by τοῦ νόμου the law κατ' ἐξοχὴν, that of Moses is meant, and that the Apostle meant to reprove the presumption of the Jews, who thought themselves sure of eternal life, because God had favoured them with a revelation of his will: in which case the reasoning will be, As many as have sinned without a revelation shall be punished without incurring the additional penalties which such a revelation would have enacted; and as many as have sinned under a revelation shall suffer the severer punishment, which that revelation, whatever it be, has denounced against their crimes. If it be thought strange, saith St. Paul, that such indulgence should be shown to the former class of persons, I will add, that not the hearers even of the law itself, but, &c. Then the Apostle subjoins, For when Gentiles, who have not any revelation, practise, by natural impulse, morality as pure as that which even the Mosaic law enjoins, though they have not actually a revelation, they become a revelation to themselves, and may therefore hope for all the rewards of virtue, which an actual revelation would have taught them to expect.'

13. This verse is illustrative of the preceding, and respects the whole subject of law and its observance; while the two next verses refer only to the case of the Gentiles. The construction here will be sufficiently plain by attending to the parenthesis. By ἀκροαταὶ we are to understand hearers only, as in Isocr. Nic. (cited by Wetstein), ἀλλὰ τῶν μὲν ἀκροατὴς γίνου, τῶν δὲ μαθητής. An emphasis is also to be laid upon ποιηταί, q. d. 'the doers, and those only.' The expression οἱ ποιηταὶ τοῦ νόμου occurs also at 2 Macc. ii. 67. The sentiment (as Stuart observes) is this, that 'not those who merely enjoy the external privilege of a revelation have any just claim to Divine approbation; it is only those who obey the precepts of such a revelation that have any ground to expect this.' Several similar sentiments are adduced by Wetstein from ancient writers.

Certainly there is here no occasion to stumble at what is said in this and the next verse, as if justification had ever been actually attained by any endeavours whatever to observe the law, whether of nature or of revelation; for, as Stuart justly observes, 'St. Paul is only laying down a principle;' and merely means to say, that 'the Gentiles may have the same kind of claims to be justified before God as the Jews (which, of course, has an important bearing on ver. 11); but as the sequel shows most fully, neither Jew nor Gentile has any claim at all, since both have violated the law under which they have lived.'

14. In this verse an objection is anticipated and overruled. It might be replied, that the Gentiles have no revelation, and therefore this cannot apply to them. To this the answer is, that the Gentiles have a law as really and truly as the Jews, written, though not on parchment, yet on the tablets of their hearts. (Stuart.)

— φύσει.] Meaning, by the instinctive sense of right and wrong, supplied by the light of rea-

15 νόμον μὴ ἔχοντες, ἑαυτοῖς εἰσι νόμος· οἵτινες ἐνδείκνυνται τὸ ἔργον τοῦ νόμου γραπτὸν ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῶν, συμ-μαρτυρούσης αὐτῶν τῆς συνειδήσεως, καὶ μεταξὺ ἀλλήλων 16 τῶν λογισμῶν κατηγορούντων ἢ καὶ ἀπολογουμένων,) [i] ἐν i Matt. 25. 31.
ἡμέρᾳ ὅτε κρινεῖ ὁ Θεὸς τὰ κρυπτὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, κατὰ τὸ Acts 17. 31. 1 Cor. 4. 5.
εὐαγγέλιόν μου, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.
17 ‡ [j] Ἴδε, σὺ Ἰουδαῖος ἐπονομάζῃ, καὶ ἐπαναπαύῃ τῷ νόμῳ, j Infra 9. 4. John 8. 33, 41.

son and conscience, as opposed to the dictates of law. So Aristotle, Eth. v. 10, opposes the φυσικὸν to the νομικόν. By τὰ τοῦ νόμου we are to understand 'the moral dictates enjoined by the Law.' Ἑαυτοῖς εἰσι νόμος: meaning, 'they, by the dictates of reason and conscience, have a law supplied to themselves.' So Aristotle, Eth. iv. 11 (cited by Wetstein), says the truly enlightened person will so conduct himself as being a law to himself, οὕτως ἕξει οἷον νόμος ὢν ἑαυτῷ.

15. οἵτινες ἐνδείκνυνται — ἀπολογουμένων.] These words are meant to establish and illustrate the foregoing assertion. Οἵτινες may be rendered, quippe qui, inasmuch as they. Τὸ ἔργον τοῦ νόμου is by many modern Expositors thought to be put for τὸν νόμον. But Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators, together with Erasmus, Menoch., Taylor, and Mackn., seem right in retaining the full force of ἔργον: and they suppose the sense to be, 'the effect, or proof of the existence, of that law,' namely, in discovering the obligation to the moral duties, which revelation, by its precepts, lays open and enjoins. Wahl and Professor Stuart, however, take it to mean the work or duty of the law, meaning, 'what the law demands;' comparing 1 Thess. i. 3, τὸ ἔργον τῆς πίστεως. 2 Thess. i. 11, ἔργον πίστεως. John vi. 28, and 2 Tim. iv. 5. Upon the whole, this latter view seems preferable, and is supported by a passage of Aristotle, Rhet. i. 15. 6, νόμος ὁ γεγραμμένος οὐ ποιεῖ τὸ ἔργον τοῦ νόμου. Thus also Diogenes Laert., in his preface, says the barbarians have the ἔργον τῆς φιλοσοφίας, though destitute of the express form of it. And further, the Scholiast on Eurip. Alc. 606, says, πᾶν τὸ τῆς σοφίας ἔργον ἐν τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἐστιν. And so Chrysostom must have taken the expression, when he says 'there are three kinds of law, the written, the natural, and that ἐν ἔργοις.'

By γραπτὸν is meant, 'deeply imprinted,' like the characters traced with the iron style on the waxed tablets of the ancients. The metaphor is found both in the Old Test. and the ancient writers in general. So Æschyl. Prom. 814, ἣν ἐγγράφου σὺ μνήμοσιν δέλτοις φρενῶν, and Julian, Orat. vii. p. 209, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἐκ τῶν θεῶν ἡμῖν ὥσπερ ἐγγραφέντας (scil. νόμους) ταῖς ψυχαῖς.

— συμμαρτυρούσης αὐτῶν τῆς συνειδ., &c.] This is explanatory of what precedes, presenting two confirmations of what was before said, that the demands of the moral law are inscribed on the heart of man in a state of nature: the meaning (as Professor Stuart shows) being, that 'the voice of conscience, which proceeds from a moral feeling of dislike or approbation, and the judgment of the mind, when it examines the nature of actions, unite in testifying that what the moral law of God requires, is impressed, in some good measure, even on the hearts of the heathens.'

— μεταξὺ ἀλλήλων, &c.] Meaning, 'at mutual intervals,' as occasion may serve; namely, on the subject of moral good and evil. The sense, then, is, 'their reflections alternately, as occasion may serve, either condemning them [when they act contrary to the dictates of right reason], or acquitting and justifying them [when they act conformably to those dictates].'

On the force of conscience, as bearing this testimony both of good and evil, several passages have been adduced from the Classical and Rabbinical writers.

16. ἐν ἡμέρᾳ, &c.] It has been not a little disputed with what these words are to be connected. The ancient and early modern Expositors (followed by Tholuck) join them with what immediately precedes, namely, the participles κατηγορούντων and ἀπολογουμένων. But (as Stuart has shown) that yields a sense little apposite. I rather acquiesce in the opinion of most eminent Expositors, from Grotius downwards, that ἐν ἡμέρᾳ is to be joined with κριθήσονται at v. 12, and that vv. 13—15 are a parenthetical explanation, or confirmation of v. 12.

The words ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὅτε κρινεῖ—ἀνθρώπων form a fine periphrasis of the great day of final account, and one most apposite to the present purpose; with which compare a similar one at 1 Cor. iv. 5, where it is said that 'the Lord will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts.' By τὰ κρυπτὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων most modern Commentators understand 'the secrets of men's hearts,' as 1 Cor. xiv. 25, τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν, meaning their 'secret counsels.' Others (as the ancient and some modern Expositors) take it to denote 'the secret sins of men;' (see Ps. xix. 12. xc. 8.) others, again, 'the secret actions.' It should rather seem, however, that thoughts and counsels are chiefly meant, yet so as to include their effects in deeds and actions. In this view we may compare what Grotius relates of Thales, who being interrogated whether any action (meaning secret action) could escape the notice of God, answered, 'No, nor even any thought.' To this purpose also is the impressive saying of Juvenal, Sat. xiii. 210 (cited by Grotius), 'Nam scelus intra se tacitum qui cogitat ullum, Facti crimen habet.'

— τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου.] Meaning, 'the Gospel as preached by me.'

17. The Apostle now proceeds to convince the Jews of sin, and show them that they are obnoxious to Divine punishment; overruling the plea, that k Phil. 1. 10. καὶ καυχᾶσαι ἐν Θεῷ, [k] καὶ γινώσκεις τὸ θέλημα, καὶ δοκι- 18

l Matt. 23. 16. μάζεις τὰ διαφέροντα, κατηχούμενος ἐκ τοῦ νόμου· [l] πέποι- 19 θάς τε σεαυτὸν ὁδηγὸν εἶναι τυφλῶν, φῶς τῶν ἐν σκότει, παιδευτὴν ἀφρόνων, διδάσκαλον νηπίων, ἔχοντα τὴν μόρ- 20 m Psal. 50. 16, &c. φωσιν τῆς γνώσεως καὶ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐν τῷ νόμῳ. [m] Ὁ οὖν 21
Matt. 23. toto. διδάσκων ἕτερον, σεαυτὸν οὐ διδάσκεις; ὁ κηρύσσων μὴ they are circumcised, and may therefore claim a covenanted right to salvation. Previously, however, in order to deprive them of all excuse, he adverts to the things of which they made their chief boast. He admits, for the sake of argument, their claim to pre-eminence; but shows that these, if abused, would only increase their guilt, and lead to heavier condemnation.

— ἴδε, σὺ, &c.] Some MSS., Versions, Fathers, and the Ed. Princ. have εἰ δὲ, which has been edited by Bengel, Griesbach, Knapp, Koppe, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; but without sufficient warrant. The external evidence for it is but slender, and the internal by no means strong. For as to εἰ δὲ being, as Koppe says, the more difficult reading, that canon does not apply to cases where the words are so similar, that one might easily be mistaken for the other. Again, the testimony of Versions, in a case like this, is far from strong, and the authority of Fathers is precarious; for in most of them the MSS. have ἴδε: from which it appears that the text was altered from the Ed. Princ. Theophylact certainly read ἴδε, as appears from his commentary; and so did Chrysostom. Finally, ἴδε is at once agreeable to the Hellenistic style, and the manner of the Apostle, and is more suitable to the context, as being more pointed and forcible; its purpose being (as Crellius suggests) 'to rouse the torpid Jews from their overweening self-complacency, as they quietly slumbered in sin, and to draw them to a consideration of their offences, and the awful consequences which must result from them;' q. d. 'Mark, now, and attend; thou bearest the honourable name of Jew, and art a professor of the only true religion. Now consider how far thy conduct corresponds to thy profession.'

— ἐπαναπαύῃ τῷ νόμῳ] 'thou restest on and confidest in the law [as fully able to save thee, without any exertion on thy part].' So Mic. iii. 11 (which passage was probably in the mind of the Apostle) ἐπὶ τὸν Κύριον ἐπανεπαύοντο. This use of the word is, however, not wholly unknown in the Classical writers. Thus Arrian, Epict. i. 9 (cited by Wetstein), mentions a φιλόσοφον ἄλλοις θαῤῥοῦντα καὶ ἐπαναπαυόμενον.

— καυχᾶσαι ἐν Θεῷ.] Meaning, 'thou boastest of thy knowledge of God, and that thou standest in a covenant relation to him, as thy God.' See Deut. iv. 7. Ps. cxlvii. 19.

18. The intent of vv. 18 & 19 seems to be, to exemplify the knowledge of God, whereof the Jews boasted. Consequently the Apostle has here adopted the kind of language which the Jews were accustomed to use of themselves, when claiming superiority over the Gentiles.

— γινώσκεις τὸ θέλ.] scil. αὐτοῦ, i.e. τοῦ Θεοῦ, which is in the subject-matter. Δοκιμάζεις τὰ διαφέροντα, for ἐπίστασαι δοκιμάζειν. With respect to the meaning of the expression, the best modern Commentators (in common with the Greek Expositors) are justly of opinion, that it must be (as the context suggests), 'canst distinguish between things that differ,' namely, according to the estimation to be formed of them, as things to be done, or as things to be avoided: respecting which, both the Jewish Rabbis and the Heathen Philosophers boasted of being great casuists. Of this sense of διαφέρειν one example has been adduced by Elsner from Andocid. adv. Alcib., p. 121. Δεινὸν μὲν οὖν ἐστι καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν ἀγνοούντων τὰ δίκαια πάσχειν κακῶς· πολὺ δὲ χαλεπώτερον, ὅταν τις ἐπιστάμενος τὰ διαφέροντα, παραβαίνειν τολμᾷ.

19, 20. The several phrases in these two verses seem meant to form two pairs, of which the first has reference to the faculty of knowledge; the second, to that of communicating it by instruction. In the first two of these expressions there seems an allusion to those high-sounding titles which were claimed by the Jewish Rabbis, as פקחים, 'the seers,' 'those who have their eyes open,' or are lights of the world. The two latter ones are equivalent, denoting an instructor of the ignorant. Comp. 1 Pet. ii. 15.

Of ἔχοντα τὴν μόρφωσιν, &c. the sense is, 'having, in the Law, the [very] form and figure of true knowledge.' Μόρφωσις properly signifies a sketch of the outlines of any figure with chalk, &c., on a plane surface, as τύπος is the delineation of any thing by stamp. Now as both are supposed to represent the true form of any thing, so they are both metaphorically applied (τύπος in Rom. vi. 17, and μόρφωσις in the present passage) to denote an accurate knowledge of any thing. In τῆς γνώσεως καὶ τῆς ἀληθείας there is a Hendiadys, equivalent to 'true knowledge.'

21. ὁ οὖν διδάσκων—διδάσκεις;] This appears from the illustrations adduced from ancient writers, Classical and Rabbinical, to have been a common argumentum ad hominem. With respect to the heads of accusation which follow, there has been much learning and industry needlessly expended. There can be little doubt that these, and many other crimes, were committed by the different orders of people, either in the full, or in a qualified sense. From the state of society in Judæa, as described by Josephus, theft and rapine must, and we find did, extensively prevail among the lower orders. See Joseph. Bell. v. 26. And there is no reason to doubt the existence of rapacity in the Priests, and the higher ranks in general. Adultery, too, seems to have defiled all classes, as indeed it had always done. See Jerem. v. 8. As to sacrilege, we have no historical evidence on which to sustain the charge, in the literal sense, of robbing temples; and therefore the expression here used is perhaps meant of other crimes, which partook of the nature of sacrilege; such as that of defrauding the Temple

22 κλέπτειν, κλέπτεις; ὁ λέγων μὴ μοιχεύειν, μοιχεύεις; ὁ 23 βδελυσσόμενος τὰ εἴδωλα, ἱεροσυλεῖς; [n] ὃς ἐν νόμῳ καυ- n Rom. 9. 4.
χᾶσαι, διὰ τῆς παραβάσεως τοῦ νόμου τὸν Θεὸν ἀτιμάζεις;
24 [o] Τὸ γὰρ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ δι' ὑμᾶς βλασφημεῖται ἐν τοῖς o 2 Sam. 12. 14.
25 ἔθνεσι, καθὼς γέγραπται. Περιτομὴ μὲν γὰρ ὠφελεῖ, ἐὰν Isa. 52. 5.
νόμον πράσσῃς· ἐὰν δὲ παραβάτης νόμου ᾖς, ἡ περιτομή Ezek. 36. 20, 23.
26 σου ἀκροβυστία γέγονεν. Ἐὰν οὖν ἡ ἀκροβυστία τὰ δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου φυλάσσῃ, οὐχὶ ἡ ἀκροβυστία αὐτοῦ εἰς 27 περιτομὴν λογισθήσεται; καὶ κρινεῖ ἡ ἐκ φύσεως ἀκροβυστία, τὸν νόμον τελοῦσα, σὲ τὸν διὰ γράμματος καὶ and priesthood of the tithes appropriated to their support; and, in the lowest ranks (especially of Jews resident in foreign countries), the eating of meats offered to idols. Or it may denote, in a general way, profanation of the Divine majesty, by robbing God of the honour, worship, and obedience due unto him: a view supported by the words following, which form, I apprehend, not so much another head of accusation, as they are rather intended to be an inference from the preceding, or an exegesis thereupon; and which, though expressed interrogatively, are to be taken declaratively; q. d. 'So, then, thou who boastest thyself of the law, dishonourest God and his religion by the neglect of it.' For, as God was the author of the Law, so the transgression of it was a dishonouring of him, by contemning his authority. Διὰ τῆς παραβ. τοῦ νόμου, in v. 23, should be rendered, 'by the (i. e. thy) transgression of the Law.'

24. τὸ γὰρ ὄνομα.] Here the Apostle brings directly home the charge, at which he had before only hinted. The words are not, properly speaking, a quotation of any one passage, but, while formed chiefly from Is. lii. 5, they have a reference also to Ezek. xxxvi. 23, and probably 2 Sam. xii. 14. Neh. v. 9. A similar sentiment occurs in Joseph. Bell. ii. 8. 9, σέβας—ὄνομα τοῦ νομοθέτου· καὶ ἂν βλασφ. τις εἰς τοῦτον (read τοῦτο), &c. The full sense intended is as follows: 'The foregoing charges are not without foundation; for to you may be applied the reproach occasionally cast on your forefathers by the Prophets. The name of God is by your means (i. e. on account of you) evil spoken of among the heathens.' For the heathens reasoned, 'What sort of a religion must that be which produces such a life?'

25. The words of this verse are meant to anticipate and reply to an objection, which the Jews might make to the whole of what the Apostle had said; namely, 'Ay, but circumcision is surely, you will grant, a great thing, as being a seal of the covenant. Ans. True; circumcision is effectual, if,' &c.; i. e. 'did you live answerably to the obligations implied in this covenant-sign, it were well; otherwise the privilege to which you are entitled as a Jew, will avail you nothing for salvation.' How deeply rooted was their notion of the complete efficacy of circumcision to salvation, has been shown by Grotius, Schoettgen, and Macknight. The Apostle takes for granted the superiority of the Jews over the Gentiles, and the efficacy of the Law to salvation, if its moral precepts (called τὰ δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου in the next verse) be but observed; otherwise, he intimates, the advantage would be lost. By νόμος here Bp. Middleton thinks is meant, not the Law itself, but moral obedience, or virtue, such as it was the object of the Law to inculcate. And he directs νόμου to be so taken at v. 27. Yet there, as νόμου corresponds, by apodosis, to τὸν νόμον, it is clear that νόμου is equivalent to τοῦ νόμου. And this must decide the sense of νόμου in the kindred passage of the present verse. By νόμον we are to understand the whole Law, both moral and ceremonial, but chiefly the former; q. d. 'If ye indeed perform the whole Law [and not the ceremonial only, to the omission of the moral], then,' &c.

In περιτομὴ here we have the sign for the thing signified,—i. e. the being a member of the Jewish Church, and entitled to all the privileges thence resulting. And so, in the next clause, ἀκροβυστία stands for the state of the ἀκρόβυστοι, or those not in possession of those privileges.

26. The Apostle, after having proved that the sins of the Jews must render them obnoxious to the Divine wrath, as well as those of the Gentiles, proceeds to demonstrate what he had said, vv. 7, 10, that the righteousness of the circumcised Gentile must also render him acceptable to God, and rewardable by him, as well as the righteousness of the Jew. (Whitby.)

— ἐὰν οὖν ἡ ἀκροβυστία, &c.] Here ἡ ἀκροβυστία is put for οἱ ἀκρόβυστοι; abstract for concrete. By τὰ δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου are meant the moral precepts of the Mosaic Law, which the Jews so grievously neglected.

27. The Apostle now openly affirms,—what he had at first only intimated,—that their neglect of the means of grace would bring condemnation and punishment upon them.

At καὶ κρινεῖ, &c. repeat οὐχί. Κρινεῖ is for κατακρινεῖ, as Matt. xii. 41, 42, and Luke xi. 31, 32. Ἡ ἐκ φύσεως ἀκροβυστία is for οἱ φυσικῶς ἀκρόβυστοι, 'heathens in their natural state.' Τελοῦσα is for ἐπιτελοῦσα, 'after having performed its injunctions.'

— τὸν διὰ γράμματος—παραβάτην νόμου.] The διὰ is best rendered under, i. e. with, although with, the advantage of. See Rom. iv. 11. viii. 25. xiv. 20. By γράμμ. some understand the letter, as opposed to the spirit; others, the divine revelation given to the Jews, by a tacit opposition to the unwritten law of nature; q. d. 'If a Gentile should perform what the Law requires, would not this show, that you are worthy of condemnation who transgress the law, although you enjoy the p John 8. 39. infra 9. 7. q Deut. 10. 16. & 30. 6. Jer. 4. 4. Col. 2. 11. Phil. 3. 2, 3. 1 Pet. 3. 4. 1 Cor. 4. 5. 1 Thess. 2. 4. a Deut. 4. 7, 8. Ps. 147. 19, 20. supra 2. 18. infra 9. 4. b Num. 23. 19. infra 9. 6. 2 Tim. 2. 13. Heb. 4. 2. c Psal. 51. 4. & 62. 9. John 3. 33.

περιτομῆς παραβάτην νόμου; [p] Οὐ γὰρ ὁ ἐν τῷ φανερῷ, 28
Ἰουδαῖός ἐστιν· οὐδὲ ἡ ἐν τῷ φανερῷ, ἐν σαρκὶ, περιτομή·
[q] ἀλλ' ὁ ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ, Ἰουδαῖος, καὶ περιτομὴ καρδίας, ἐν 29 πνεύματι, οὐ γράμματι· οὗ ὁ ἔπαινος οὐκ ἐξ ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλ' ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

III. Τί οὖν τὸ περισσὸν τοῦ Ἰουδαίου, ἢ τίς ἡ 1 ὠφέλεια τῆς περιτομῆς; [a] Πολὺ κατὰ πάντα τρόπον. πρῶ- 2 τον μὲν γὰρ, ὅτι ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ. [b] Τί 3 γὰρ, εἰ ἠπίστησάν τινες; μὴ ἡ ἀπιστία αὐτῶν τὴν πίστιν τοῦ Θεοῦ καταργήσει; [c] μὴ γένοιτο! γινέσθω δὲ ὁ Θεὸς 4 light of revelation, and the privileges which a state of circumcision confers?' This latter sense (supported by Grot., Crellius, Estius, and Wolf,) is preferable, from its being (as Crellius has shown in a very masterly exegesis) far more agreeable to the context than the preceding one; which cannot be extracted from the words without some violence.

28. οὐ γὰρ ὁ ἐν τῷ φαν., &c.] These words suppose the answer of the foregoing to be made in the affirmative; and the γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted: q. d. 'Yes, truly; for he,' &c. Ἐν τῷ φανερῷ is for φανερῶς, externally; and supply, from what follows, Ἰουδαῖος; meaning ὁ ὄντως Ἰουδαῖος. The full sense is: 'He is not so much the real Jew, who is only such openly, publicly, and externally (i. e. by birth, habits, language, &c.); neither is that circumcision, which is manifest and external, the true one.'

29. Here περιτομὴ must be taken twice, as was Ἰουδαῖος before: and by περιτομὴ is to be understood ἡ ὄντως περιτομὴ, meaning (as it is then explained) the spiritual circumcision,—namely, that of the heart, by cutting off evil affections. See Deut. x. 16. So a Rabbinical writer, cited by Wetstein, says: 'If a man believe as he ought, circumcision will not make him a Jew; but if he believe as he ought, he is a Jew, though he be not circumcised.'

— ἐν πνεύματι, οὐ γράμματι.] Many refer this to the Holy Spirit, and the precepts of the Law. But the context rather requires the sense assigned by others, 'in spirit,' or Calvin, 'in spiritu posita.' By γράμμ. is meant the external observance without piety; by πνεύμ., the end of the ceremony, which is spiritual. So in 2 Cor. iii. 6 the Gospel is designated as a ministration οὐ γράμματος, ἀλλὰ πνεύματος.

— οὗ ὁ ἔπαινος, &c.] The general meaning is: 'Such an one aims not at (and may not gain) the praise of men; but he will receive both praise and acceptance from God, who seeth not as man seeth, and who trieth the heart.'

III. In the present Chapter the Apostle is chiefly occupied in refuting such objections to the preceding statements as might be supposed to occur to Jews; this being, indeed, as Schoet. shows, a digressive discourse on the nature and extent of the advantages of the Jews over the Gentiles, drawn up in the Jewish [or rather popular] style; which is to bring forward certain objections, and then briefly answer them. Having done this, he draws the conclusion, that the Law is insufficient to justify a man before God; and that, for that justification, he will need the righteousness of God, through faith; which will, however, by no means tend to dispense with, but rather confirm the obligations of, the moral law. At vv. 1—20 there are four objections made, or difficulties started, which are removed by the Apostle. The first, at v. 1, is this: 'If the circumcised and the uncircumcised be treated alike at the last judgment, and the Jews are equally guilty with the Gentiles, and if the external observance of the Mosaic Law will not avail to justification, of what advantage, then, (οὖν) can Judaism be?' To this the answer, at v. 2, is, that the benefit, of greater spiritual knowledge, was thereby conferred on the Jews, by their being entrusted with the oracles of God.

1. τὸ περισσὸν] for ἡ περισσεία.

2. κατὰ πάντα τρόπον] 'in every way' or respect.

— ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια τ. Θ.] 'they (meaning 'the Jews,' to be supplied from 'the Jew' preceding) were entrusted with the oracles of God.' On this syntax (which involves the principle, common both to the Scriptural and Classical writers,—that where a verb in the Active governs an Accusative of thing and a Dative of person, the Accusative is retained after the verb when in the Passive), see Winer's Gr. Gr. § 40. 1. Λόγιον signified properly an effatum, or something spoken, and, by use, came to denote an oracular response, mostly favourable. The diminutive form is, it should seem, used, because such responses (as we find by several specimens in the ancient Historians and Pausanias) were almost always very brief. In the New Test. the word is applied to the revelation of the will of God made known in the Scriptures (as here and Acts vii. 28); and sometimes it denotes that will, as made known, through Christ, in the doctrines of the Gospel. See Heb. v. 12. 1 Pet. iv. 11.

3. Here we have the second objection, namely, how the Apostle's views can be reconciled with God's faithfulness to his promises, made to the Jews? q. d. 'Supposing that many Jews have been unbelieving and disobedient, shall this make the pledged promise of God [to bless the seed of Abraham] of none effect?' Τί γάρ; 'What, then?' So Demosthenes, cited by Wetstein: τί γὰρ, εἰ ἀδικεῖ Φίλιππος;

— μὴ ἡ ἀπιστία—καταργήσει;] The interrogation (which is more pointed by the use of the μὴ, an? num?) involves a strong negation, which is expressed in μὴ γένοιτο following.

4. γινέσθω—ψεύστης.] The difficulty, which many have here found, may be obviated, by bearἀληθὴς, πᾶς δὲ ἄνθρωπος ψεύστης· καθὼς γέγραπται· Ὅπως ἂν δικαιωθῇς ἐν τοῖς λόγοις σου, καὶ νικήσῃς ἐν 5 τῷ κρίνεσθαί σε. Εἰ δὲ ἡ ἀδικία ἡμῶν Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην συνίστησι, τί ἐροῦμεν; μὴ ἄδικος ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἐπι-6 φέρων τὴν ὀργήν; (κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγω.) [d] Μὴ γένοιτο! d Gen. 18. 25.

7 ἐπεὶ πῶς κρινεῖ ὁ Θεὸς τὸν κόσμον; εἰ γὰρ ἡ ἀλήθεια τοῦ Job 8. 3. & 34. 17.
Θεοῦ ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ ψεύσματι ἐπερίσσευσεν εἰς τὴν δόξαν
8 αὐτοῦ, τί ἔτι κἀγὼ ὡς ἁμαρτωλὸς κρίνομαι; καὶ μή· (καθὼς

ing in mind that the strong negation in μὴ γένοιτο! contains, by implication, an assertion of the contrary; q. d. 'God is not proved unfaithful.' This, indeed, seems to be hinted at in the next words, γινέσθω, &c., of which the full sense seems to be, 'Let but God be found true and faithful [to his promise, as he assuredly will], though every man were proved to be a violator of the covenant.' Or the meaning may be, as Calvin explains (who has ably traced the scope of the passage), 'adeo non everti Dei fidem perfidiâ hominum, ut illustrior appareat.' The first member of the sentence contains, as Calvin observes, the primary axiom of Christian philosophy. Why the second was added (taken from Ps. cxvi. 11), is well accounted for by Hyperius.

This assertion by implication is more plainly developed in the words following, ὅπως ἂν δικαιωθῇς, of which the sense seems to be, 'So that the result may be (to use the words of Scripture), that thou shouldest be justified, or brought in clear, when thou art called to account for thy dealings.' Here there is a forensic allusion: though the Deity is not considered as the judge, but as a party impleaded; and any defendant, who is brought in clear of blame, may be said νικᾶν, because he carries his cause. Thus the sentiment, obtained by this accommodation of the words of David, may be expressed (in the words of Prof. Stuart) as follows: 'Whenever God speaks by way of reproving or condemning men, let him be accounted altogether just, and let him be fully vindicated.'

5. Here the Apostle supposes another objection on the part of the Jew; q. d. 'If our unrighteousness display the righteousness of God (the mode appointed by God of becoming righteous by faith, i. 17), would he not be unjust, if he punished us for this unrighteousness?'

— συνίστησι.] This is not well rendered commends. It is plain, from the context and the course of reasoning, that it must signify establishes, or proves, as the word is used in various passages cited by the Commentators. The proper signification of the word is 'to place together;' and as juxta-position is necessary to proof, hence arises naturally the sense in question.

At μὴ ἄδικος ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἐπιφέρων τὴν ὀργήν; there is great delicacy in the wording; the Jew not meaning positively to deny the justice of God in punishing, but only to hint that it may be questioned. The full sense is, 'Is, or is not, God unjust?' A milder way of saying, 'Is not God unjust?' The phrase ἐπιφ. τὴν ὀργὴν may be rendered, 'who visits with his anger;' i. e., by implication, punishes. The phrase has been found no where else, except in Polyb. xxii. 14. 8, and is synonymous with ἐπιφέρειν τὴν ποίνην, pœnam immittere, found in Josephus, Ant. iii. 13.

The Apostle, though he here speaks in the person of the Jew, yet, to prevent any mistake of the words μὴ ἄδικος, &c., apprises his readers that he speaks in that quality. For the phrase κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγω is best explained to mean, 'I speak as men (meaning the objectors in question) are accustomed to speak in self-justification, and when thus circumstanced.'

6—8. In these verses the objection is removed, and that on grounds conceded by the Jew.

— ἐπεὶ—κόσμον;] 'Since [if this be the case], how shall God judge the world?' viz. in righteousness, which is involved in the very idea of God's judging: a sense of ἐπεὶ found before questions implying a negation (as here and in 1 Cor. xiv. 16. xv. 29. Heb. x. 2), and before similarly hypothetical clauses. By the expression κόσμον are denoted Gentiles as well as Jews; and as no Jew denied that the Gentiles were to be judged, this is slaying the opponent with his own weapon. The force of the answer in v. 6 is well expressed by Stuart thus; 'Not at all;' for, on the same ground, you might object to the truth, that God will judge the world, and consequently punish the wicked; for his justice will be so displayed, as to redound to his glory.'

7. In this verse the sentiment of v. 5 is resumed and completed, and the words are from the objector. See Calvin and Locke.

The sense of the passage may be expressed as follows: 'If the fact of the Jews having broken the covenant [by not believing in Christ] has been the cause that the promise of God has been extended (ἐπερίσσευσεν) to a still greater number of people, why are the Jews punished as sinners for unbelief? It would be enough for them to lose the privileges of the covenant; or rather, they should continue to live wickedly, because good redounds from it to the world at large.'

Ψεύσματι may be rendered 'false dealing, unfaithfulness,' by an idiom frequent in the Old Test. The term, as Mr. Locke justly observes, was here used in preference to ἀδικίᾳ or παρανομήματι, for the sake of antithesis to 'the truth or veracity of God.'

8. καὶ μή· καθὼς—τὰ ἀγαθά;] Of the many methods which have been proposed of adjusting the construction and determining the sense here, the only satisfactory one (as I have proved at large in Recens. Synop.) is that of Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators, as also Zeger, Pisc., Crellius, and Stuart. The Apostle is here speaking in his own person, not in that of the objector, and the words are an answer to the preceding objection; not, indeed, a regular one, but meant to show its futility, by pushing the argu-βλασφημούμεθα, καὶ καθώς φασί τινες ἡμᾶς λέγειν,) ὅτι ποιήσωμεν τὰ κακὰ, ἵνα ἔλθῃ τὰ ἀγαθά; ὧν τὸ κρίμα ἔνδικόν ἐστι.

e Gal. 3. 22. [e] Τί οὖν; προεχόμεθα; Οὐ πάντως· προῃτιασάμεθα γὰρ 9
f Psal. 14. 3. & 53. 3. Ἰουδαίους τε καὶ Ἕλληνας πάντας ὑφ' ἁμαρτίαν εἶναι· [f] καθ- 10 ὼς γέγραπται· ὅτι οὐκ ἔστι δίκαιος οὐδὲ εἷς· οὐκ ἔστιν 11
ὁ συνιῶν, οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ ἐκζητῶν τὸν Θεόν. Πάντες ἐξ- 12

ment as far as it will go. With the μὴ we must repeat τί from the preceding. Thus the sense may be, 'And why [at this rate] may not we (as we are slanderously reported to do, and some say that we maintain) do evil that good may come?' Yet I prefer (with Grotius, Hammond, Wolf, Limborch, and Stuart,) at καὶ τί μὴ to supply, from the λέγειν of the parenthesis, λέξωμεν, and at βλασφημούμεθα, ὡς λέγοντες. The words following, καὶ καθώς φασί τινες ἡμᾶς λέγειν are exegetical of the preceding, 'Why may we not maintain (as we are slanderously reported to do), let us do evil?' &c. This supplying of a word from a parenthetical clause is, indeed, an irregularity in composition, but occurs in the best writers, especially Thucyd. By the we is meant we Christians; and consequently the τινες may mean non-Christian calumniators, whether Gentiles or Jews, and the whole passage may be freely translated: 'Why, then, may we not say (as some do actually, though slanderously [whose condemnation is just], accuse us of saying), Let us,' &c.? By ὧν τὸ κρίμα ἔνδικόν ἐστι is simply meant, 'whose offence is such as to justly merit punishment [from God];' i. e. they will be called to a strict account for this, and justly punished.

Here, as Erasmus and Grotius truly remark, the Apostle does not think it worth his while to enter into a refutation of the above calumny; as a wise disputant does not choose to answer all objections, but despises some, when manifestly calumnious, and only adverts to the accountableness of those who forge or circulate them.

9—20. The Jew, resuming his interrogation, asks, 'What, then, have we Jews any pre-eminence over the Gentiles?' To which the Apostle, in effect, replies, 'You have none, in respect to the matter that I am discussing. All are sinners. Your own Scriptures do abundantly bear testimony that your nation are transgressors, as well as the heathen. Prophets of different ages have borne testimony to this point; and testimony which conveys charges of the most aggravated nature,' vv. 10—18. Now as what is thus said in the Scriptures was plainly said concerning the Jews, it follows, that your own sacred books bear testimony to the same doctrine which I affirm to be true. Consequently, the whole world, Jews and Gentiles, are guilty before God, ver. 19. It follows from this, that salvation in any other way than by gratuitous pardon through Christ is altogether impossible,' ver. 20. (Stuart.) The words τί οὖν; προεχόμεθα; evidently contain another objection, which is immediately answered in the words following. It has, however, always been a disputed point among Interpreters whether we should point τί οὖν; προεχόμεθα; or τί οὖν προεχόμεθα; In the former case, the sense will be, 'What, then? have we any superiority [or not]?' In the latter, 'What, then, is our superiority?' A sense sufficiently good, but liable to this strong objection,—that the answer, οὐ πάντως, will not then be suitable; since that can only mean, No, certainly; i. e. certainly not; as in Theophrastus de Caus. Plant. vi. 25, ποιεῖ γὰρ οὐ πάντως, and Aristotle, Metaphys. vi., οὐ γὰρ πάντως, &c. According to the other punctuation the answer will be very suitable.

9. The Apostle now returns to the subject he had before been treating of, which had been interrupted by the above digression. (Calvin.)

— προῃτιασάμεθα.] This has been by some interpreted, 'we have before convicted;' by others, 'we have before (or already) shown or proved.' The expression may perhaps admit of either sense; for αἰτιάομαι signifies properly 'to prefer or assign an αἰτία:' and as by αἰτία may be meant either cause, or blame; so αἰτιάομαι may signify either to show cause, or to impute blame, make a charge against, i. e. accuse any one. Either of these senses is borne out by the usus loquendi; but that of 'convicted' would make the next words almost unnecessary. And the sense usually assigned, 'proved,' is wholly unauthorized. Perhaps it is best to suppose, with Crellius, a sensus prægnans, in which the idea of proving is engrafted on that of criminating; q. d. 'we have already, on well grounded charges, proved.'

— ὑφ' ἁμαρτίαν εἶναι] 'are brought under and liable to be [truly] charged with sin' (as ὑπόδικος at ver. 19); implying liability to Divine punishment. This weighty truth is then confirmed by several testimonies from various parts of the Old Test., though all of them are found together in some good MSS. at Ps. xiv. The object of these is, as Stuart remarks, to show that the charges of guilt made in times so far back, were not less severe than those now advanced by the Apostle; the Scriptures abounding in such.

10. καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] Meaning, 'So that we may here apply the words of Scripture,' &c. The quotations which follow are made with some laxity, and occasionally ad sensum rather than ad literam. Indeed, it should seem that the Apostle meant at first to express only the substance of the words of Ps. xiv. (Sept.), and then proceeded to advert to what follows, as also to five other passages; namely, from Ps. v. 9. x. 7. xiv. 1—3. xxxvi. 1. liii. 3. cxl. 3. Prov. i. 16. Isaiah lix. 7. The alteration at ver. 14 of αὐτοῦ into αὐτῶν is merely adopted for accommodation sake.

11. ὁ συνιῶν.] Meaning, according to the Hebrew idiom, 'to be righteous and godly, to be so wise as to fear God.' Here the expressions ὁ συνιῶν and ὁ ἐκζητῶν τὸν Θεὸν are not synonymous; but the latter is a stronger term than the former, and meant to heighten the idea contained therein.

ἔκλιναν, ἅμα ἠχρειώθησαν. οὐκ ἔστι ποιῶν χρηστό-13 τητα, οὐκ ἔστιν ἕως ἑνός. [g] Τάφος ἀνεῳγμένος ὁ g Psal. 5. 9. & 140. 3. λάρυγξ αὐτῶν· ταῖς γλώσσαις αὐτῶν ἐδολιοῦσαν· 14 ἰὸς ἀσπίδων ὑπὸ τὰ χείλη αὐτῶν· [h] ὧν τὸ στόμα h Psal. 10. 7.
15 ἀρᾶς καὶ πικρίας γέμει· [i] ὀξεῖς οἱ πόδες αὐτῶν i Prov. 1. 16. Isa. 59. 7.
16 ἐκχέαι αἷμα. Σύντριμμα καὶ ταλαιπωρία ἐν ταῖς
17 ὁδοῖς αὐτῶν· καὶ ὁδὸν εἰρήνης οὐκ ἔγνωσαν. [k] οὐκ k Psal. 36. 1.
18 ἔστι φόβος Θεοῦ ἀπέναντι τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτῶν.
19 [l] Οἴδαμεν δὲ, ὅτι ὅσα ὁ νόμος λέγει, τοῖς ἐν τῷ νόμῳ λαλεῖ· l Ezek. 16. 63.

12. ἠχρειώθησαν.] This might mean, 'they have become useless.' But from the context it appears that there is here a meiosis, such as exists in all languages, by which the mild term useless is employed to denote what is positively bad and injurious. Thus the sense must be, 'are become corrupt,' or depraved. So the Hebrew has נאלחו from אלח, to turn; i. e. turn sour or corrupt. Ποιεῖν χρηστότητα is a Hellenistic phrase for ποιεῖν ἀγαθόν.

13. τάφος ἀνεῳγμένος.] On the nature of the metaphor some difference of opinion exists. Most Commentators refer it to offensive and poisonous discourse, sent forth from the throat of the wicked, as noisome stenches from an opened sepulchre. More natural, however, is the view of others (as Grotius, Crellius, Calvin, Paræus, Taylor, Koppe, and many recent Commentators), who regard this as a description of the deadly calumny, by which the wicked destroy (figuratively, swallow up) their fellow-creatures. Thus ἀνεῳγμένος is taken in the sense gaping, to denote their readiness to destroy them (so Prov. i. 12, 'let us swallow them up alive as the grave'), as a grave seems ready for, and as it were expects, the dead, and 'cannot be satisfied;' see Hab. ii. 5. Τάφος, too, may have an allusion to the stomach of the devourer being sometimes figuratively considered as the grave of the devoured. So in a multitude of instances adduced by Wetstein.

— ἐδολιοῦσαν] for ἐδολίουν: a Macedonian and Hellenistic form; though said to be derived from the Bœotian dialect.

As the last clause was descriptive of that calumny, of the worst kind, by false accusation, whereby its victims are brought to utter destruction; so this and the next are, I apprehend, meant to designate that lower species of the same vice, which deals not in open false accusation, but in secret back-biting, and often disguises its purpose under glosing and deceitful speeches, to lure its intended victims. The second clause intimates the extreme noxiousness of the slander, by comparing it to the mortal poison of asps; designating that virulent slander, which cankers the brightest reputation, and those bitter biting speeches which sting even to death; see James iii. 8. The next clause ὧν τὸ στόμα ἀρᾶς καὶ πικρίας γέμει, designates the opposite to this secret insidious slander; namely, open and bitter expressions of hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness. Thus, as Calvin observes, the whole may be summed up as follows: 'If they speak smoothly and covertly, they deceive, and, under bland speeches, convey poison; but if they draw forth what is really in their minds, hence proceed bitterness and cursing.'

At ver. 15 the sins of the heart and tongue are represented as carried into action, and that eagerly and promptly; q. d. 'quick are they to carry into effect the mischiefs they meditate.' So Thucyd. i. 70, ἐπινοῆσαι ὀξεῖς καὶ ἐπιτελέσαι ἔργῳ ὃ ἂν γνῶσιν. Here ὀξεῖς answers to ταχινοὶ in the passage of Isaiah. And in πόδες we have a highly graphic expression, as infra x. 15, and Acts v. 9. Similarly Appian, p. 873, calls the murderers of Cæsar ἄνδρες ταχυεργεῖς καὶ φόνου πλήρεις.

16, 17. Here we have, in words derived from Is. lix. 7, 8, 'a fine representation,' as Calvin says, 'of savage ferocity, which, wherever it makes its attacks, spreads devastation and ruin.' The next words, ὁδὸν εἰρήνης οὐκ ἔγνωσαν, contain a further trait of evil; not, however, I apprehend (what they are usually supposed to import), that 'all their doings are opposite to peace; that they will neither be at peace themselves, nor suffer others to be so' (see Thucyd. i. 70. 8); but that 'peace never enters into their thoughts or cares; all their counsels being only evil continually, never to do good to any one.'

At ver. 17 we have the last touch of the picture; not, indeed, to show (as has been commonly supposed) that they are destitute of piety, and do what they list without any fear of God (see Luke xviii. 2): the words are rather meant (as Calvin and Wolf suggest) to indicate the fountain whence such bitter waters flow, namely, the want of that fear of God by which men depart from evil (see Prov. xvi. 6). For, as Calvin says, 'seeing that the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom, when we have departed from that, nothing right or sound remains behind.'

I would here compare a passage of Hesiod, Ἔργ. 185, where, after inveighing at considerable length on the vices of the men of his age, he thus concludes: Σχέτλιοι! οὐδὲ θεῶν ὄπιν εἰδότες.

19. ὅσα ὁ νόμος λέγει] 'whatsoever the law saith [on that head].' In οἴδαμεν we have a popular expression, equivalent to 'it is well known, it must be admitted.' Τοῖς ἐν τῷ νόμῳ is for τοῖς ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον. Moreover, in τοῖς, &c., is implied καὶ περὶ τῶν, &c.; q. d. 'It is addressed to Jews, and consequently meant of Jews.'

This seems intended to anticipate the objection, which might be made by his Jewish opponents,—'these heavy charges were not directed against us.' To which the reply is, that they have reference to them; for what the Scriptures there say, is said with a reference to persons under the law, i. e. Jews, the elect people of God; see Calvin. The argument, then, is, that 'as the Jews believed that the Heathens deserved the condemnation ἵνα πᾶν στόμα φραγῇ, καὶ ὑπόδικος γένηται πᾶς ὁ κόσμος τῷ Θεῷ. [m] Διότι ἐξ ἔργων νόμου οὐ δικαιωθήσεται πᾶσα 20 σὰρξ ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ· διὰ γὰρ νόμου ἐπίγνωσις ἁμαρτίας.

[n] Νυνὶ δὲ χωρὶς νόμου δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ πεφανέρωται, 21 μαρτυρουμένη ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου καὶ τῶν προφητῶν· [o] δικαιο- 22
σύνη δὲ Θεοῦ διὰ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, εἰς πάντας καὶ m Infra 7. 7. Gal. 2. 16. & 3. 11. Ps. 143. 2. Acts 13. 39.

n John 5. 46. Acts 15. 11. & 26. 22. supra 1. 17.
o Infra 10. 12. Gal. 3. 28. Col. 3. 11.

of God, and as their Scriptures represented the Jews as being all deeply guilty in the sight of God, so it may reasonably be concluded (as is done in the next verse) that the whole world is to be regarded as liable to condemnation.'

19. ἵνα πᾶν στόμα φραγῇ.] Ἵνα is here for ὥστε, and to be rendered so that, as denoting conclusion; for, as Hyperius remarks, the words ἵνα πᾶν, &c., form a conclusion to the whole of the first part of the confirmation. Moreover, ἵνα, denoting the result of action, implies that something really has taken or will take place, and consequently would properly require the Indicative: yet in the New Test. it always carries the Subjunctive; though it should be rendered as if in the Indicative. Φράττειν and its compounds are often used by the later writers in the sense 'to put to silence,' by leaving any one without an apology; see Job v. 16, and Ps. cvii. 42. There is, as Calvin points out, a forensic allusion; since, in courts of justice, a conscience-stricken silence is condemnatory. Render: 'So that every mouth is stopped;' meaning, every man, both Gentile and Jew, is convicted of sin, is prevented from pleading personal holiness for an admission into the Gospel covenant.

20. διότι.] Render, not, 'propterea quod,' 'wherefore,' but, with the Syr. and Vulg., quia. Νόμου is by many taken for τοῦ νόμου, 'the Mosaic, or Ceremonial Law.' But besides the grammatical objections which lie against this view, it may truly be said, with Bp. Middleton, that 'any such explanation falls short of the Apostle's argument. It is his purpose to show, that no man whatever can be justified by the works either of the Jewish law, or of any other. Πᾶσα σὰρξ, like ὁ κόσμος in the preceding verse, cannot but be understood universally; and what follows, διὰ γὰρ νόμου ἐπίγνωσις ἁμαρτίας, is plainly an universal proposition.' Accordingly, νόμου must here mean the moral law, whether written or unwritten, i. e. law in general, any law, whether applicable to Gentile or Jew, any rule which prescribes a duty, by obedience to which men might claim a promise of reward. Such, too, is the view of the sense adopted by Beza, Calvin, Hyperius, Grotius, Whitby, Bengel, and Taylor. With respect to δικαιωθήσεται, it has been proved by Vitringa, Bp. Bull, and Dr. Doddridge, that the term is here used, not in the mere sense of forgiving, but in a forensic one, as used with reference to a judicial process, and carrying the idea of 'being pronounced and treated as righteous in the day of judgment.'

In διὰ γὰρ νόμου ἐπίγνωσις ἁμ. (at which supply μόνον), we have an argumentum à contrario; q. d. 'since by law, so far from being justified, you will only know that you are a sinner.' Ἐπίγνωσις denotes the act of coming to the full knowledge of any thing.

21. Having shown the utter insufficiency of human merit to attain salvation, the Apostle proceeds, vv. 21—30, to point out the method whereby alone men, whether Jews or Gentiles, can be justified; namely, the righteousness of God, or the justification by faith revealed in the Gospel, and through the propitiatory sacrifice of Christ, by which all boasting is excluded, since this justification, from its very nature, must be gratuitous. Thus all, both Jews and Gentiles, are placed on the same footing; and this doctrine is no other than that of the Old Test. also. Here, then, the Apostle reverts to the subject he had touched on at i. 17,—namely, that by the Gospel alone is shown the way to salvation; which great truth he now proceeds more fully to assert.

— νυνὶ δὲ χωρὶς νόμου, &c.] Meaning, 'But now (i. e. under the present dispensation) the Gospel (as opposed to the Law), a method of justification appointed by God, without reference to (lit., apart from) obedience to law of any kind, is revealed and promulgated; a method [by no means a novelty, but] whose existence is attested by the Law and the Prophets.' In πεφανέρωται there may also be, as Beza and Gomar are of opinion, an allusion to the doctrine of justification by faith being obscurely intimated in the Old Test.

22. δικαιοσύνη δὲ Θεοῦ] q. d. 'even that method which admits all into covenant through faith in Jesus Christ.' The δὲ is supposed to be explicatory, or exemplificatory. But it may rather be said to be resumptive, for explanation sake. Διὰ denotes the efficient or instrumental cause; as at ver. 24. 30. Gal. ii. 16, where the death of Christ is said to be the efficient, and faith in Christ the cause of our salvation.

Some difficulty exists in determining the sense of εἰς πάντας καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας, in which I can neither agree with those who recognise an unnecessary repetition, nor with those who consider the words merely as expressing the same sense, for emphasis sake, in two ways. There would seem to be (what many eminent Interpreters suppose) a different sense intended; though in what that difference consists, it is not easy to determine. It may be, as some explain, that this righteousness is proclaimed unto all, and extends to all. But if that difference should seem too minute to be thought worthy of being dwelt upon, we may suppose, with Stuart, that the ἐπὶ denotes, as often, intent; intimating that, though intended for all believers, it will not be bestowed on all. With the force and elegance of the expression, εἰς πάντας καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας, I would compare a similar one in Thucyd. vi. 11, περὶ πλείστου καὶ διὰ πλείστου δόξαν ἀρετῆς μελετῶσιν, and v. 111, fin. ἣν (scil. πατρίδα) μιᾶς πέρι καὶ ἐς μίαν βουλὴν, &c. Similarly, at ver. 30, we have περιτομὴν ἐκ πίστεως, καὶ ἀκροβυστίαν διὰ τῆς πίστεως. To place here, as some have done, a comma after the first πάντας, and take the καὶ in the sense even, cannot by any means be tolerated; since it violates the ἐπὶ πάντας τοὺς πιστεύοντας· οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολή· p Infra 11. 32.

23 [p] πάντες γὰρ ἥμαρτον, καὶ ὑστεροῦνται τῆς δόξης τοῦ Gal. 3. 22. q Matt. 20. 28.
24 Θεοῦ· [q] δικαιούμενοι δωρεὰν, τῇ αὐτοῦ χάριτι, διὰ τῆς ἀπο- Eph. 1. 7. & 2. 8.
25 λυτρώσεως τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· [r] ὃν προέθετο ὁ Θεὸς Tit. 3. 5, 7. 1 Pet. 1. 18.
ἱλαστήριον, διὰ τῆς πίστεως, ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι, εἰς ἔνδει- r Acts 13. 38, 39. Col. 1. 20.
ξιν τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ, διὰ τὴν πάρεσιν τῶν προγεγο- 1 John 2. 2. & 4. 10.

plain construction, by which the first πάντας as much belongs to πιστεύοντας as does the second. And the sense thus assigned, that 'this justification, though announced to all, will be bestowed on believers only,' is quite factitious, and nothing better than a vain gloss; insomuch that Calvin himself did not adopt it, however favourable to his system: and Hyperius strongly reprobates it, as unjustifiably detracting from the universality of the offer of justification by faith. Again, it would render almost nugatory the next words, οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολή, which, as they must refer to πάντας τοὺς πιστεύοντας, are plainly meant in the most general sense, of all persons of whatever class, whether Jews or Gentiles. So, in a similar passage infra x. 12, it is said, οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολὴ Ἰουδαίου τε καὶ Ἕλληνος· ὁ γὰρ αὐτὸς Κύριος πάντων, πλουτῶν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους αὐτόν. All stood alike in need of this gratuitous justification, since, as the Apostle has shown, perfect obedience to any law of works is impossible.

23. Here we have set forth the reason (and that, as Hyperius remarks, à contrario et per antithesin) why this was impossible; 'inasmuch as all have fallen short of the glory of God;' and, consequently, as salvation by works was impossible, it was necessary that this justification by faith should be manifested to all.

Ὑστερεῖσθαι properly signifies 'to be left behind in a race;' but is here used in a figurative sense. What that ὑστέρησις is, will depend on the meaning ascribed to τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, which some interpret, 'the image of God, in which man was created;' while others, more rightly, I think, understand, 'the glory and happiness of heaven,' as supra ii. 10. v. 2. viii. 18. Yet it should rather seem to mean (as Grotius, Crellius, Calvin, Hyperius, and Rosenmuller explain) 'what will produce that,' namely, the favour and approbation of God, which is beyond all human praise, and 'better than life' itself. So at John xii. 43 we have ἡ δόξα τοῦ Θεοῦ opposed to ἡ δόξα τῶν ἀνθρώπων: and the Genitive is, in both passages, used as if ἐκ or παρὰ had preceded; as in John v. 41, δόξαν παρὰ ἀνθρώπων οὐ λαμβάνω, and at 1 Thess. ii. 6, οὔτε ζητοῦντες ἐξ ἀνθρώπων δόξαν, οὔτε, &c. Thus the expression ὑστεροῦνται will be very suitable; since, as ὑστερεῖν often signifies 'to come too late for any thing,' so it may mean 'to fail attaining.' We may render, freely, destituuntur, 'are devoid of;' the expression (as Doddridge remarks) denoting a deficiency of what might have been obtained, rather than the loss of what is actually possessed.

24. δικαιούμενοι.] We have here, as often, a use of the Participle for the verb finite. Render, 'all being justified;' i. e. since all must be justified. This is necessary to be attended to; since the words (as Hyperius remarks) form a 'propositionis generalis summa,' and, indeed, form the counterpart of the one just preceding; viz., that all who obtain this justification must obtain it δωρεὰν, of mere bounty, without reference to any return. In the words following, τῇ αὐτοῦ χάριτι, we have not, what some suppose, a tautology, but an emphatical repetition; or rather (as Hyperius suggests) 'the Apostle meant by this to point at the principal efficient cause on the part of God in our justification; namely, His mere grace and favour.'

— διὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως.] Denoting (as Calvin says) the materia, or instrumental cause of our justification; namely, that 'by his obedience unto death Christ satisfied the justice of the Father, suffering in our stead, to free us from the tyranny of death, by which we had been held in bondage.' Ἀπολύτρωσις signifies properly, 'the act of delivering any one' from death or slavery by paying the λύτρον or price paid for ransom. It here denotes (with allusion, however, to the idea of ransom) the method of redemption provided by Jesus Christ.

25. προέθετο.] Of the several senses assigned to this expression, that of 'set forth' (meaning, publicly appointed) deserves the preference. There may, however, be a sacrificial allusion; as in Eurip. Iph. Aul. 1592. Ἱλαστήριον, from the adjective ἱλαστήριος, often in the Sept., by an ellipsis of ἐπίθεμα (expressed in Ex. xxv. 17) denotes 'the covering of the Ark.' Thus many eminent Commentators take ἱλ. here as a highly figurative expression, meaning, that 'as the pardon of God was formerly dispensed from the mercy-seat, being procured by the victim offered before it, so it was now dispensed from Christ, the true mercy-seat, being procured by his sacrifice of himself, through faith in his blood.' This view, however, is open to objection on several grounds, and especially from the incongruity of metaphor which it involves. It should rather seem, as Grotius, Le Clerc, Bp. Bull, Kypke, Turretin, Elsner, Tholuck, and Stuart, are of opinion, that ἱλαστήριον is (as in Dio Chrys. Orat. vol. ii. 184) an adjective used substantively (like χαριστήριον, σωτήριον, &c.) to denote an expiatory victim, or a propitiatory sacrifice. Ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι ought not (as it has generally been) to be connected with διὰ τῆς πίστεως, but, as some of the best Expositors are agreed, with ἱλαστήριον. Thus διὰ τῆς πίστεως will be kept apart, as it ought to be; since it here denotes, as Hyperius remarks, the efficient instrumental cause, on our part, of our justification; while ἐν τῷ αἵματι denotes the formal instrumental cause thereof.

— εἰς ἔνδειξιν τῆς δικ. αὐτοῦ.] These words show the purpose of the setting forth above mentioned; namely, 'for a proof or display of the mode of justification which he proffers.' The next words, διὰ τὴν πάρεσιν, denote the instrument, or immediate cause; and may be rendered, 'by means of (or, through) the passing over the sins.' By προγεγονότων ἁμαρτ. are meant sins committed before the revelation of the Gospel. Ἐν νότων ἁμαρτημάτων ἐν τῇ ἀνοχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ· πρὸς ἔνδειξιν 26

τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ, εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν δίκαιον, καὶ δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἐκ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ. Ποῦ οὖν ἡ 27 καύχησις; Ἐξεκλείσθη. Διὰ ποίου νόμου; τῶν ἔργων; Οὐχί· s Acts 13. 39. Gal. 2. 16. ἀλλὰ διὰ νόμου πίστεως. [s] Λογιζόμεθα ‡ οὖν, πίστει δικαι- 28 οῦσθαι ἄνθρωπον χωρὶς ἔργων νόμου. Ἢ Ἰουδαίων ὁ Θεὸς 29
t Infra 4. 2. Gal. 3. 8. μόνον; οὐχὶ δὲ καὶ ἐθνῶν; ναὶ καὶ ἐθνῶν. [t] ἐπείπερ εἷς ὁ 30 Θεὸς, ὃς δικαιώσει περιτομὴν ἐκ πίστεως, καὶ ἀκροβυστίαν τῇ ἀνοχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'through the forbearance of God.'

At ver. 26 we have a resumption and emphatical repetition of what had been before said (as supra 21, δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ—δικαιοσύνη δὲ Θεοῦ), the sense being, 'for a proof or demonstration (I say) of his method of justification.' The words ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ are intended to correspond to προγεγονότων, and consequently must denote the time of the Gospel dispensation.

26. εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν δίκαιον.] On the exact sense of δίκαιον no little difference of opinion exists. Some interpret it merciful; others, 'faithful to his promise.' But, however these two significations, especially the latter, may be permitted by the usus loquendi, yet neither is here allowed by the context and the course of reasoning. It is, therefore, better to retain the sense commonly assigned, just; meaning, 'that he might be (i. e. appear to be) just in requiring this satisfaction for our sins, and yet be the Justifier,' &c.; perhaps said in contrast with the idea of God under the Law, where (as Bengel remarks) he is represented as just and justly condemning; while under the Gospel he is just and the Justifier or Absolver, &c. 'In the clause εἰς τὸ εἶναι —Ἰησοῦ, the Apostle (says Stuart) looks back to the whole sentiment proposed in vv. 21—24; which is, that all men are sinners, and that a regard merely to the Law, i. e. a sense of justice merely on the part of God, or he being δίκαιος merely, does not in itself permit justification by overlooking or setting aside the penalty of the Law; but the death of Christ is an expedient of infinite wisdom, by which the full claims of the Law may be admitted, and yet the penalty avoided, because a moral compensation or equivalent has been provided, by the sufferings of him who died in the sinner's stead.' Thus the satisfaction of the Redeemer has made the exercise of God's mercy consistent with his justice. And so, with reference to the four Divine attributes parted at the fall of Adam, having met at the birth of Christ, it is said, Ps. lxxxv. 10, 'Mercy and Truth are met together; Righteousness and Peace have kissed each other.'

27. The Apostle now infers from what has been said, that all reason for boasting of their proper merits was excluded, both to Jews and Gentiles.

— νόμου.] The word here simply signifies, norma, a rule of action or judgment.

— διὰ νόμου πίστεως.] Meaning, 'by the law which requires faith as the condition of justification, and refers every thing to faith alone, and the grace of God.'

28. We have here a repetition of the main proposition, here again inculcated, both as a conclusion from the above premises, and to serve as a text whereon to adduce further arguments on the same subject.

— λογιζόμεθα οὖν, πίστει, &c.] 'We come, then, to this conclusion; that man (meaning men at large, both Jews and Gentiles) is justified by faith, apart from, and without reference to, the works of any law,' and wholly in a gratuitous manner by faith in Christ. The being justified by faith is here plainly opposed to justification by works, i. e. on the score of merit, or perfect obedience.

29. ἢ Ἰουδαίων—ἐθνῶν;] What is here said seems intended to refute an objection of the Jewish adversary, who might lay hold on the term ἄνθρωπον in the generic sense, and ask, 'What, then, is God the God of the Gentiles as well as of the Jews?' For that is, I conceive, the sense contained in the timidly expressed question ἢ Ἰουδαίων—μόνον; see supra vv. 5. 9, and Notes. To this the Apostle replies first by an interrogation, and then by a plain assertion, which is, in the next verse, supported by the reason; namely, that one and the same God hath himself established this method of justification both for Jews and Gentiles, and therefore must be the God of the latter as well as of the former.

30. On the difference, if any, between ἐκ πίστεως and διὰ τῆς πίστεως, and why the Apostle should have used both expressions, and not been content with either one or the other, much has been said, but nothing determined. The Apostle, I apprehend, did not mean the very same sense in both, nor use the difference solely for the sake of verbal antithesis; but meant thereby to express a real, though minute, difference. His meaning is, that the Jews would be justified out of faith [in the Gospel], namely, by Christian faith being added to their Jewish faith; but the Gentiles solely through the faith [of the Gospel], without any part of the religion they had professed being left as a substratum. Or, as Calvin expresses it, 'the Jews are justified out of faith, because they are born heirs of grace, the right of adoption being transmitted to them from the fathers; the Gentiles, through faith, because the covenant is a thing adventitious to them.'

31. In this verse we have (as Hyperius observes) an anticipation of an objection on the part of the Jews; and the Apostle here contrasts the law of faith to that of works. For νόμον must, as Taylor and Bp. Middleton have shown, mean, not 'the law' (there being no Article), but 'a law' (i. e. whether of Revelation or of nature), meaning, as appears from the context, moral obedience, as opposed to faith and grace. Here the Apostle is evidently guarding against that perversion of his doctrine, which St. James found

31 διὰ τῆς πίστεως. Νόμον οὖν καταργοῦμεν διὰ τῆς πίστεως;
μὴ γένοιτο! ἀλλὰ νόμον ἱστῶμεν.
1 IV. [a] ΤΙ οὖν ἐροῦμεν Ἀβραὰμ τὸν πατέρα ἡμῶν εὑρη- [a] Isa 51. 2.
2 κέναι κατὰ σάρκα; εἰ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ ἐξ ἔργων ἐδικαιώθη, ἔχει
3 καύχημα· ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν. [b] Τί γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ λέγει; [b] Gen. 15. 6. Gal. 3. 6.
Ἐπίστευσε δὲ Ἀβραὰμ τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ἐλογίσθη James 2. 23.

it so necessary to encounter more directly and largely.

— διὰ τῆς πίστεως.] Meaning, 'by introducing the law of faith as the condition of obtaining acceptance with God.' (Abp. Newcome.)

IV. Here commences Part II. of the Epistle (extending from hence to the end of ch. viii.), in which it is proved, that the Gospel doctrine of justification by faith, or gratuitous justification, does not make void any Law, whether natural or revealed, but is quite consistent with both. The Apostle had before evinced, 1. that justification and salvation are by faith only, gratuitous, and not by works of law; 2. that to this the Gentile has an equal claim with the Jew. But there existed two prejudices in the mind of the Jew; one founded on their notions of the merit of circumcision, as entitling them to the favour of God (which would lead them to hold that justification is by works of the Law); the other founded on their birthright, as the children of Abraham, and heirs of the promise made to him. And this would lead them to deny that the Gentile has an equal claim to justification with the Jew. These two prejudices the Apostle now proceeds to encounter; the former, by adverting to Abraham, the father of circumcision; the latter, by examining the grounds of the covenant made with Abraham and his seed. He thus confirms both the above conclusions; proving, 1. that Abraham himself was justified by faith, and not by circumcision, since it was before he was circumcised that he obtained that justification (iv. 1—12); that therefore justification is by faith, i. e. is gratuitous, and not by works of law; and belongs to the uncircumcised Gentiles, no less than to the Jews: 2. That the believing Gentiles are part of the true seed of Abraham, intended in the promise (iv. 13—18); and that therefore the Gentiles, by faith in Jesus Christ, have equal claim with the Jews to justification, and all other benefits of the covenant. See Young and Stuart.

— τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν, &c.] The οὖν is conclusive; the general sense being, 'What, then, shall we say that Abraham our father obtained [for justification] as to [any advantage from] the works of the flesh, or fleshly and external ordinances?' Κατὰ σάρκα may be construed either with τὸν πατέρα ἡμῶν, or with εὑρηκέναι. The former of these modes is preferred by several ancient and many modern Interpreters. And the sense thus produced is sufficiently apt (namely, 'naturally, and of himself'); but a harsh transposition must then be supposed, and the sense at εὑρ. will be left deficient; nay, perhaps be hardly such as can be borne out by truth. It is therefore better, with other ancient and most modern Commentators, to take it with εὑρηκέναι, whereby the reasoning will be complete. Κατὰ σάρκα does not, as is commonly supposed, refer exclusively to circumcision; but extends also to the other external rites of the Law, as opposed to κατὰ χάριν at vv. 4. 15, and denotes (as is said at Heb. vii. 16. ix. 10) such as are performed κατὰ νόμον ἐντολῆς σαρκικῆς. Thus σάρξ sometimes (as at Gal. iv. 23. Rom. ix. 8) denotes what is external or physical, in opposition to what is internal and spiritual; see also 1 Cor. x. 18. Phil. iii. 3. Gal. vi. 12. The interrogation implies, as often, a strong negation, which is supposed in the following εἰ γὰρ, where we have a reason for the negation.

2. εἰ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ—Θεόν.] Here the Apostle argues, that if Abraham had been justified by works, he would have had reason to plead their merit with God. But he did not do so; and God acquitted him (ver. 3) on account of his faith. Hence his justification must have been of mere favour, not of debt (vv. 4. 8). It has been well remarked, that the general declaration in this verse, in fact, includes two, forming the major and the minor of an hypothetical syllogism, from which the conclusion (here suppressed) is easily to be collected. Thus the sense may be expressed as follows: 'I grant that Abraham had advantages from his external privileges; he was, however, not justified by any works or merit of his own; certainly not in the sight of God [however he might of men]; for the Scripture saith,' &c. This the Apostle proceeds to prove from what we read of Abraham in the Old Test.

3. τί γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ λέγει;] 'Probatio est minoris, seu assumptionis, ubi negavit Apostolus Abrahæ esse argumentum gloriandi.' (Calvin.)

— ἐπίστευσε δὲ Ἀβρ. τῷ Θεῷ] i. e. 'implicitly believed in God's assurances;' and especially as to what seemed, at the time of the promise, highly improbable—his having a numerous offspring.

— ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικ.] On the interpretation of these words some difference of opinion exists. By the ancient and early modern Commentators they are understood to express the doctrine of imputed righteousness; while others (consisting of the recent Commentators in general) take them (as did Grotius) to mean no more than this: 'Abraham believed in God, and his faith was accounted in him as righteousness, and, accordingly, he obtained the favour of God.' Such, too, it may be added, was evidently the view taken of the words by Philo, p. 493, who, in the course of a copious explanation of the nature of this faith, says it was εἰς ἔπαινον τοῦ πεπιστευκότος. And so also Chrys. vol. i. 489. Savill. Indeed, St. James, ii. 23, applies the passage in this sense, which the words will doubtless admit; but they are surely susceptible of a far higher import, and from the context it is evident that far more is meant by these words than the recent Commentators are willing to allow. The truth here, as often elsewhere, probably lies mid-way; and the following seems to be the sense intended, 'Abraham placed entire confidence in God and his promises, c Infra 11.6. αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην. [c] Τῷ δὲ ἐργαζομένῳ ὁ μισθὸς οὐ 4 λογίζεται κατὰ χάριν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ [τὸ] ὀφείλημα· τῷ δὲ μὴ 5 ἐργαζομένῳ, πιστεύοντι δὲ ἐπὶ τὸν δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἀσεβῆ, d Psal. 32. 1, 2. λογίζεται ἡ πίστις αὐτοῦ εἰς δικαιοσύνην. [d] Καθάπερ καὶ 6 Δαυὶδ λέγει τὸν μακαρισμὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ᾧ ὁ Θεὸς λογίζεται δικαιοσύνην χωρὶς ἔργων· Μακάριοι ὧν ἀφέθησαν 7 αἱ ἀνομίαι, καὶ ὧν ἐπεκαλύφθησαν αἱ ἁμαρτίαι.

μακάριος ἀνὴρ ᾧ οὐ μὴ λογίσηται Κύριος ἁμαρτίαν. 8
Ὁ μακαρισμὸς οὖν οὗτος ἐπὶ τὴν περιτομὴν, ἢ καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν 9

with respect to offspring, &c. performing all such things as, by the light of nature, reason, and conscience, he supposed would be acceptable to God, though unenlightened by that future revelation of his will which he anxiously anticipated. Therefore God reckoned his pious reliance and devotedness to him for, and took them instead of, all those more perfect observances of faith and practice which a future revelation of his will should promulgate and enjoin;' lit., 'his faith was put to the account of his righteousness:' or, 'in consequence of his faith, Abraham was treated or accepted as righteous;' i. e. he was gratuitously justified. See vv. 4, 5. Of this sense of λογίζεσθαι (by which it is synonymous with ἐλλογεῖν) examples are adduced by Stuart from Levit. xvii. 4. Hos. viii. 12. 1 Sam. i. 13. Lam. iv. 2, and infra vv. 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 22, 23, 24. Of course this falls short of establishing the Calvinistic doctrine of imputed righteousness; and it is well observed by Macknight, that neither here, nor in Gal. iii. 6, nor any where else, do we find such a doctrine; but merely, that God will treat them as such, on account of what Christ hath done to procure them that favour. On the nature of faith and works, as here contradistinguished by St. Paul, see Bp. Bull's Harm. Apost. and Prof. Stuart on the present passage.

4. τῷ δὲ ἐργαζομένῳ, &c.] We have here an illustration taken from common life; the sense being, 'Now to the labourer his wages are not reckoned as a favour, but regarded as the payment of a debt.' Of course it is implied that the work is done; for that is indispensable to the application, which is here, as often, mixed up with the illustration. Wetstein compares Thucyd. ii. 40, οὐκ ἐς χάριν, ἀλλ' ἐς ὀφείλημα τὴν ἀρετὴν ἀποδώσων. I add Herodian, ii. 11. 14, χάριν οὐκ ᾔδεσαν· ὄφλημα γὰρ αὐτὸν ἀποτίνειν, ἀλλ' οὐ δωρεὰν διανέμειν, ἐλογίζοντο. By τῷ ἐργ. must here be meant, 'to him who performs all the ἔργα νόμου, who yields entire obedience to the precepts of the law.'

5. τῷ δὲ μὴ ἐργ.] This is to be explained from τῷ ἐργ., and must therefore mean, 'he who does not perform his duty thoroughly, and therefore has nothing whereof to boast, cannot pretend to have wrought all righteousness, and therefore cannot rest on it.' See Bp. Bull's Harm. Apost. p. 29. The words πιστεύοντι δὲ—ἀσεβῆ, then, must be explained with reference to μὴ ἐργαζομένῳ. And hence Commentators have done wrong in limiting the sense to believing, since it seems to include abandonment of all claim to salvation on the score of works, and such hearty and entire acceptance of the plan of salvation through grace, as shall secure, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, such a fulfilment of the conditions on which justification and acceptance are suspended, as may through mercy be accepted. Now if this be the sense of πιστ., it will follow that τὸν δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἀσεβῆ must signify who justifieth the sinner; for it clearly appears from the context, that τὸν ἀσεβῆ is only a variation in phrase for τὸν ἐργαζόμενον, and is to be explained in conformity to that term.

To such a person, it is added, λογίζεται ἡ πίστις αὐτοῦ εἰς δικαιοσύνην, by which is meant, that 'his faithful though imperfect service (in many things μὴ ἐργαζομένη, and therefore ἀσεβὴς) is accounted and reckoned for righteousness; or, in other words, he is treated as the ἐργαζόμενος, and hath, κατὰ χάριν, the μισθὸν assigned to him, as if it were an ὀφείλημα.'

6. Having adduced the example of Abraham, as being gratuitously justified through faith, the Apostle now goes on to add the example of David, in order to show (what he had before asserted at iii. 31) that he does not disannul the Old Testament Scriptures by avowing the doctrine of gratuitous justification. (Stuart.)

— καθάπερ καὶ Δαυὶδ, &c.] q. d. 'This mode of justifying men is agreeable to what David says, when he speaks of the blessedness,' &c. Χωρὶς ἔργων, 'apart from works,' 'without any consideration of the merit of the works, and consequently by grace only. It is plain that, to impute, or reckon, righteousness without works, is the same as to impute faith for righteousness. On this and the next two verses, see Bp. Bull's Examen, p. 23.

7. ἐπεκαλ.] Literally, 'are covered up,' 'put out of sight,' i. e. (as the parallelism requires) forgiven.

8. οὐ μὴ λογίσηται ἁμ.] This is plainly equivalent to the foregoing phrase, and (as Stuart observes) plainly shows what Paul means by faith being imputed for righteousness. As to the ratio metaphoræ, Camer. and Grotius remark that it is drawn from the accounts of men who have dealings in trade; where, if any expense be justly charged, it must be paid; but it may be crossed out, or withdrawn, and then it is not liable to be paid.

9. The Apostle has now prepared the way to refute the special allegation designed to be made by the question at ver. 1. He has already shown that justification on the ground of merit is out of the question; for even Abraham and David were justified gratuitously, and not ἐξ ἔργων. (Stuart.) He now proceeds to prove (up to v. 25) that the blessedness of justification without reference to works is not confined to the Circumcision (i. e. the Jews), but extends to the Gentiles also;

ἀκροβυστίαν; λέγομεν γὰρ ὅτι ἐλογίσθη τῷ Ἀβραὰμ ἡ 10 πίστις εἰς δικαιοσύνην. Πῶς οὖν ἐλογίσθη; ἐν περιτομῇ ὄντι, ἢ ἐν ἀκροβυστίᾳ; Οὐκ ἐν περιτομῇ, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀκρο-11 βυστίᾳ. [e] Καὶ σημεῖον ἔλαβε περιτομῆς, σφραγῖδα τῆς e Gen. 17. 11.
δικαιοσύνης τῆς πίστεως τῆς ἐν τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ· εἰς τὸ εἶναι Gal. 3. 7.
αὐτὸν πατέρα πάντων τῶν πιστευόντων δι' ἀκροβυστίας· (εἰς 12 τὸ λογισθῆναι καὶ αὐτοῖς τὴν δικαιοσύνην·) καὶ πατέρα περι-τομῆς, τοῖς οὐκ ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς στοιχοῦσι τοῖς ἴχνεσι τῆς ἐν τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ πίστεως τοῦ πατρὸς f Gen. 15. 6.
13 ἡμῶν Ἀβραάμ. [f] Οὐ γὰρ διὰ νόμου ἡ ἐπαγγελία τῷ & 17. 2, &c. Gal. 3. 18.

which position is established, 1. from Abraham having been justified before he was circumcised (v. 9—12); from which it is argued that the Gentiles, therefore, who have the same faith as Abraham, will have it in the same way counted to them for righteousness. 2. This extent of blessing is proved from God's promise to Abraham.

— λέγομεν γὰρ, &c.] There is here a short clause omitted, to which the γὰρ belongs; q. d. [We may see this, too, by the case of Abraham,] for we have said, &c. With respect to the facts themselves, Abraham was not circumcised till he was 99 years old, v. 25. But before Ishmael was born, Abraham had his faith counted to him for righteousness, Gen. xv. 6, compared with Gen. xvi. 16. Whence it is evident that Abraham was justified in uncircumcision more than 13 years before he and his family were made the visible church and people of God by circumcision.

11. καὶ σημεῖον ἔλαβε περιτομῆς.] The Apostle's meaning is, that though Abraham's receiving circumcision after he was justified was a proof that circumcision did not cause that justification, nevertheless circumcision was not without its use, being a σημεῖον, nay, a σφραγίς. Most recent Commentators, indeed, regard the σφραγῖδα as exegetical of σημεῖον, and suppose both words to be intended to express the same thing; though here conjoined, in order to strengthen the sense. But it is better to keep the terms distinct, especially as the latter is far stronger than the former. See Hyperius. Indeed, σημεῖον περιτομῆς is (the Genitive being one of species or kind) for περιτομὴν ὡς τὸ σημεῖον, scil. διαθήκης. For the Apostle had doubtless in mind the passage of Gen. xvii. 11, περιτμηθήσεσθε τὴν σάρκα, καὶ ἔσται εἰς σημεῖον διαθήκης ἀνὰ μέσον ἐμοῦ καὶ ὑμῶν, and v. 13, καὶ ἔσται ἡ διαθήκη μου ἐπὶ τῆς σαρκὸς ὑμῶν, i. e. 'shall be [marked] in your flesh;' probably with allusion to the mark (or scar, the original sense, indeed, of the word σημεῖον, on which see my Note on Thucyd. ii. 49. 7) left by circumcision, and which may have had reference to the spiritual intent of circumcision, as a symbol of the true circumcision, of the heart. See Rom. ii. 29, and Col. ii. 11. So in Just. Mart. Dial. cum Tryphone (cited by Grotius) it is said, εἰς σημεῖον ἡ περιτομὴ αὕτη δέδοται, ἀλλ' οὐχ ὡς ἔργον δικαιοσύνης. By σφραγῖδα far more is denoted; the word having reference, not to external signs, but to internal and spiritual effects; not merely a testimony of approbation of the past, but a sacred pledge and assurance of future blessings, even the earnest of a joyful resurrection. See Eph. i. 13. iv. 30. Finally, τῆς δικαιοσύνης τῆς πίστεως is for τῆς δικ. τῆς ἐκ πίστεως γενομένης.

— δι' ἀκροβυστίας] for ἐν ἀκροβυστίᾳ, 'in an uncircumcised state.' Comp. Gen. xvii. 5. At τοῖς οὐκ ἐκ περιτομῆς, in v. 12, supply οὖσι; meaning 'the uncircumcised.' The construction is as though the words had stood thus: καὶ πατέρα περιτομῆς, εἰς τὸ λογισθῆναι αὐτοῖς τὴν δικαιοσύνην, τοῖς οὐκ ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνον, &c. The general sense intended is, that 'Abraham is the exemplar of all uncircumcised believers, as well as of those Jews, who not only carry the same external mark, (namely, of circumcision,) but exercise the same faith, as did their father, and the Originator of their Covenant.'

13. The Apostle now adduces another argument in refutation of the Jewish prejudice,—that the Gentiles, as not being Abraham's seed, could not be entitled to the promises. With respect to the promise of a heavenly inheritance, it did not rest upon legal observances, so as to include only the natural seed of Abraham, but upon the righteousness of faith (v. 13). If, indeed, it had rested upon the Law, God's faithfulness would have been void, and the promise of no effect, inasmuch as the condition could not have been performed (vv. 14, 15). It was therefore made to depend on the condition of faith, in order that it might be of free grace; and include all the spiritual seed of the great patriarch, who, in the sight of God, and in accordance with the Scriptures (Gen. xvii. 5), is the father of all the faithful (vv. 16, 17). (Young.)

— διὰ νόμου] 'through law;' meaning, by obedience to a law of works, like the Jewish Law. With respect to the nature of the promise, τὸ κληρονόμον αὐτὸν εἶναι τοῦ κόσμου, some (consisting, for the most part, of the ancient and earlier modern Commentators) take the words in a spiritual sense; referring them to the universal extension of Gospel privileges, as comprehended in the promise, 'in thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed;' all believers being regarded as Abraham's children. See Gal. iii. 8. Others, as Glass, Crellius, Paræus, Gomar, Piscator, Bp. Bull, Macknight, Ammonius, Hardy, Hammond, Parkhurst, Schleusner, and others, understand by τοῦ κόσμου, not the earth, but the land, viz. of Canaan; that being a type of a better country, even a heavenly (Gen. xvii. 7, 8. Heb. xi. 14, 16), promised to the sons of Abraham in every age; meaning those who, like him, practically believe the word of God. Hence τοῦ κόσμου,

Ἀβραὰμ ἢ τῷ σπέρματι αὐτοῦ, τὸ κληρονόμον αὐτὸν εἶναι [τοῦ] κόσμου, ἀλλὰ διὰ δικαιοσύνης πίστεως. Εἰ γὰρ οἱ ἐκ 14 νόμου, κληρονόμοι, κεκένωται ἡ πίστις, καὶ κατήργηται ἡ ἐπαγγελία. [g] ὁ γὰρ νόμος ὀργὴν κατεργάζεται· οὗ γὰρ 15 οὐκ ἔστι νόμος, οὐδὲ παράβασις. [h] Διὰ τοῦτο ἐκ πίστεως, 16
ἵνα κατὰ χάριν, εἰς τὸ εἶναι βεβαίαν τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν παντὶ τῷ σπέρματι, οὐ τῷ ἐκ τοῦ νόμου μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ ἐκ πίστεως Ἀβραὰμ, ὅς ἐστι πατὴρ πάντων ἡμῶν, ([i] καθὼς 17 γέγραπται· Ὅτι πατέρα πολλῶν ἐθνῶν τέθεικά σε·) κατέναντι οὗ ἐπίστευσε Θεοῦ, τοῦ ζωοποιοῦντος τοὺς νεκροὺς, g Supra 3. 20. infra 5. 13, 20. & 7. 8, 10. John 15. 22. 1 Cor. 15. 56. 2 Cor. 3. 7, 9.

h Gal. 3. 16, 18, 30.
i Gen. 17. 5. Heb. 11. 12.

they think, refers primarily to the Land of Promise, and secondarily to the blessings vouchsafed to all believers. Of these two interpretations, I am inclined to prefer the latter, understanding the promise to Abraham and his seed as two-fold: 1. as taken literally, of the possession of the land of Canaan; 2. as spiritually, of the spiritual seed of Abraham (referred to supra v. 11), and importing that they shall be co-extensive with the world; by which would be fulfilled the promise, that in him should all the families (i. e. nations) of the earth be blessed.

14. Here we have, as Calvin says, an argumentum ab impossibili vel absurdo; q. d. (in the words of Abp. Newcome,) 'For if the observance of a positive law was the ground of the divine favour, faith is of no avail (which is contrary to v. 3), and the promise is annulled, because the conditions of it are too hard.'

— οἱ ἐκ νόμου] scil. οἱ δίκαιοι; meaning 'those who are righteous by performing injunctions of law, and who rest on it for justification.' So the phrases οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς, οἱ ἐκ πίστεως, οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας, &c.

— κεκένωται, καὶ κατήργηται.] These two terms differ as κενὸς and ἀργός; the former signifying vain and unnecessary; the latter, ineffectual and useless.

15. ὁ γὰρ νόμος ὀργὴν κατεργ.] 'for the law (i. e. such a law) only worketh out, or produces, penal wrath;' q. d. 'the tendency of law is to make persons amenable to punishment for the violation of it;' inasmuch as laws give occasion to offences (which are but the breach of laws), and offences lead to punishment. Of this sense of ὀργὴ (to denote the punitive wrath of the law) examples occur in Rom. v. 9. Ecclus. vii. 16, and Demosth. 528. 4. Reiske, τῷ δράσαντι δ' οὐκ ἴσην τὴν ὀργὴν—ἔταξεν ὁ νόμος.

— οὗ γὰρ οὐκ—παράβασις.] The γὰρ seems to refer to a clause omitted; q. d. '[And this is the case with any law,] for,' &c. We should, indeed, have expected οὗ γάρ ἐστι νόμος, &c.; and accordingly Beza would cancel the οὐκ. But this is unnecessary; for (as it has been seen by Paræus and Crell.) 'since the Apostle is arguing from the necessary connexion of causes and effects, the proposition is convertible, and contains, by inference, the affirmative one, that where there is law there is transgression.'

16. The argument may be thus summed up, with Calvin: 'Si per opera nobis eveniat hæreditas salutis, collabetur ejus fides, abrogabitur ejus promissio; sed utramque oportet esse certam. Ergo per fidem nobis obtingit, ut in sola Dei bonitate fundata ejus stabilitas certum effectum habeat.' Or, as Estius, Paræus, and Menochius state it, 'either the inheritance is of the law or of faith. Now if it be not of the law (as was proved at v. 14, 15), it must therefore be of faith.'

— ἐκ πίστεως.] Repeat, from v. 13, ἐπαγγελία [γέγονε], 'the promise of inheritance.' See i. 4. Also at ἵνα supply ᾖ, scil. δικαιοσύνη. Κατὰ χάριν, 'on account of gratuitous favour.' Παντὶ τῷ σπέρμ., i. e. to both the kinds of Abraham's seed above-mentioned, not only to the Jews, but to those who were ἐκ πίστεως Ἀβραὰμ, followed the faith of Abraham, in consideration of which, they, though uncircumcised, are called Abraham's seed. Πατὴρ πάντων ἡμῶν, viz. by the descent of faith, and spiritually.

17. καθὼς γέγραπται] 'agreeably to what is written in Scripture.' Gen. xvii. 5. Sept. Of τέθεικά σε, the sense seems to be, 'I have [now] constituted thee, or, I do hereby constitute thee,' &c.; 'a promise of which (observes Hardy) the true and real fulfilment must be spiritual, and therefore belongs to the spiritual seed, of which Abraham is father in respect of faith.' 'In fact, there is (as Stuart remarks) a double paternity assigned to Abraham. Many nations are to descend from him literally: his seed are literally to possess the land of Canaan. But he is also to become the spiritual father of many nations; and in him are all the families of the earth to be blessed.'

— κατέναντι οὗ ἐπίστ. Θεοῦ.] The construction is, κατέν. Θεοῦ, οὗ (for ᾧ) ἐπίστευσε. Render: 'who (i. e. Abraham) is the father of us all in the sight of that God on whom he believed.' It is plainly a case of grammatical attraction, and the only strangeness is in the order of the words; which, however, has a parallel at Mark vi. 16. Acts xxi. 16.

— τοῦ ζωοποιοῦντος—ὡς ὄντα.] The sense here has been disputed; some taking ζωοπ. in a physical, others in a metaphorical acceptation. The latter view involves considerable harshness, and is little accordant with the words following. Far more natural, simple, and satisfactory is the former, adopted by Theodoret, Toletus, Paræus, Estius, Elsner, Carpzov, Loesner, Doddridge, Schleusner, Rosenmuller, Jaspis, and Koppe. It should seem, indeed, that the words, while alluding to the circumstances of Abraham and Sarah, v. 19, and of Abraham being the father of many nations yet unborn, were, however, principally 18 καὶ καλοῦντος τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα. [j] Ὃς παρ' ἐλπίδα j Gen. 15. 4, 5.

ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ἐπίστευσεν, εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸν πατέρα πολλῶν ἐθνῶν, κατὰ τὸ εἰρημένον· Οὕτως ἔσται τὸ σπέρμα 19 σου· [k] καὶ μὴ ἀσθενήσας τῇ πίστει, οὐ κατενόησε τὸ ἑαυτοῦ k Gen. 17. 17. & 18. 11. Heb. 11. 11, 12.
σῶμα ἤδη νενεκρωμένον, ἑκατονταέτης που ὑπάρχων, καὶ 20 τὴν νέκρωσιν τῆς μήτρας Σάῤῥας· [l] εἰς δὲ τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν l Heb. 11. 18.
τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐ διεκρίθη τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ, ἀλλ' ἐνεδυναμώθη τῇ 21 πίστει, δοὺς δόξαν τῷ Θεῷ, [m] καὶ πληροφορηθεὶς ὅτι ὃ m Ps. 115. 3. Isa. 57. 19. Luke 1. 37.
22 ἐπήγγελται, δυνατός ἐστι καὶ ποιῆσαι. διὸ καὶ ἐλογίσθη
23 αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην. [n] Οὐκ ἐγράφη δὲ δι' αὐτὸν μόνον, n Infra 15. 4. 1 Cor. 10. 6, 11.
24 ὅτι ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ· [o] ἀλλὰ καὶ δι' ἡμᾶς, οἷς μέλλει λογί- o Acts 2. 24.
ζεσθαι, τοῖς πιστεύουσιν ἐπὶ τὸν ἐγείραντα Ἰησοῦν τὸν Κύριον 25 ἡμῶν ἐκ νεκρῶν· [p] ὃς παρεδόθη διὰ τὰ παραπτώματα ἡμῶν, p 1 John 1. 7. & 2. 2. Rom. 8. 32. 1 Cor. 15. 17.
καὶ ἠγέρθη διὰ τὴν δικαίωσιν ἡμῶν.

1 V. [a] ΔΙΚΑΙΩΘΕΝΤΕΣ οὖν ἐκ πίστεως, εἰρήνην ἔχομεν a Eph. 2. 13.

intended to express the omnipotence of God by examples especially illustrative of omnipotence,—raising the dead, and exercising creative power. A spiritual sense may, however, be engrafted on the literal one. See Eph. ii. 1, and Scott on the present passage. In confirmation of the above, Loesner and Carpzov (besides several passages of the Rabbinical writers) compare 2 Macc. vii. 28, where God is said to have created the universe ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων. By καλεῖν, &c. (as Stuart observes) is meant calling into existence things that have at present no existence, and employing them for his purposes, as he directs and disposes of things that already exist. So Isaiah xli. 4 (Sept.), τίς ἐνήργησε, καὶ ἐποίησε ταῦτα; ἐκάλεσεν αὐτὴν ὁ καλῶν αὐτὴν ἀπὸ γενεῶν ἀρχῆς, and xlviii. 13, καὶ ἡ χείρ μου ἐθεμελίωσε τὴν γῆν, καὶ ἡ δεξιά μου ἐστερέωσε τὸν οὐρανόν· καλέσω αὐτούς, καὶ στήσονται ἅμα. Also Philo, p. 728, τὰ μὴ ὄντα ἐκάλεσεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι, and Clem. Rom. Epist. 11. v. 1, ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς, οὐκ ὄντας, καὶ ἠθέλησεν ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος εἶναι ἡμᾶς.

18. The Apostle having shown that the doctrine of gratuitous faith does not impugn the Scriptures, by appealing to the example of Abraham, and the declarations of David; and having insisted on the justification of Abraham previous to the covenant of circumcision, and independently of it, concludes the chapter by an animated description and commendation of Abraham's faith, and showing the happy consequences of imitating it to all who profess to be disciples of Christ. (Stuart.) First (at vv. 18—22) the nature and energy of Abraham's faith are stated.

— παρ' ἐλπίδα ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, &c.] An elegant Oxymoron, with which Grotius compares the spes insperata of the Latin writers. Render, 'who, contrary to all grounds of hope, believed with a confident hope.' In this and the similar expression at Acts ii. 26, κατασκηνώσει ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, there is some Genitive understood at ἐλπίδι, which is supposed to be supplied from the context and the subject. Here it is ἐπαγγελίας, 'the assurance,' namely, that he should be the father of many nations, Gen. xv. 5. The words εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι are to be closely united with the preceding, and are for ὥστε γεν., 'that he should become.'

— οὕτως—σου.] Namely, 'as numerous as the stars of heaven,' which is to be supplied from the context of the passage in Genesis.

19. καὶ μὴ ἀσθενήσας.] An elegant litotes for 'being strong in faith.' So οὐ διεκρίθη at ver. 20. Οὐ κατεν., 'did not mind or regard,' namely, in the way of distrust.

— νενεκρωμένον.] That Abraham forty years after had six children by Keturah, does not invalidate this assertion; for (as Whitby and Mackn. observe) since Abraham's body had been miraculously renewed, as also was that of Sarah (Heb. xi. 11), it might preserve its vigour long after.

20. οὐ διεκρίθη] for οὐκ ἐδίστασε or ἐνεδοίασε. Εἰς is frequently, as here, used in the sense at. Before τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ supply ἐπὶ, by, through. See infra xiv. 1. Matt. xxi. 21. Acts x. 20.

— δοὺς δόξαν τῷ Θεῷ] i. e. 'ascribing to God the glory due unto him,' by acknowledging his attributes of omnipotence and truth, whereby, as is added, he was fully persuaded, &c. On the expression πληροφ., see Note at Luke i. 1.

22. ἐλογίσθη] scil. ἡ πίστις αὐτοῦ.

23. οὐκ ἐγράφη, &c.] This (as Theophylact remarks) is an answer to a tacit objection; q. d. 'What is that to us?—Answ. Much; it was written on our account, so that we may obtain the like justification, if we have a like faith.' In the same light the words are viewed by Calvin, who has here some excellent remarks on the mode of attaining edification by examples in Scripture.

24. τοῖς πιστ.—νεκρῶν] i. e. (as Stuart explains) 'those who believe in what God has done and said with respect to the Messiah will be justified through their faith, in like manner as Abraham was by his.'

25. διὰ τὰ παραπτώματα ἡμῶν] 'for,' i. e. in expiation of, 'our sins;' since our sins had made such an atonement necessary. See Note on 1 Cor. xv. 3, and Bp. Bull's Harm. p. 5.

— διὰ τὴν δικ. ἡμῶν] 'on account of our justification' (i. e. in order that the work of justification might be completed; for if Christ be not risen, then our faith is vain), or 'to assure us that we shall be justified through faith.'

V. Having established these two points; 1. the b John 10. 9. & 14. 6. 1 Cor. 15. 1. Eph. 2. 18. & 3. 12. Heb. 3. 6. & 10. 19. c 2 Cor. 12. 10. James 1. 2. d James 1. 3.

πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· [b] δι᾽ 2 οὗ καὶ τὴν προσαγωγὴν ἐσχήκαμεν τῇ πίστει εἰς τὴν χάριν + ταύτην ἐν ᾗ ἑστήκαμεν· καὶ καυχώμεθα ἐπ᾽ ἐλπίδι τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ. [c] Οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλὰ καὶ καυχώμεθα ἐν ταῖς 3 θλίψεσιν· [d] εἰδότες ὅτι ἡ θλίψις ὑπομονὴν κατεργάζεται, ἡ 4 δὲ ὑπομονὴ δοκιμήν, ἡ δὲ δοκιμὴ ἐλπίδα. ἡ δὲ ἐλπὶς οὐ 5

efficacy of the Gospel to justification, for which end the Law had failed; and the extension of this grace to all, both Jews and Gentiles, through faith; the Apostle proceeds (as Calvin says) to illustrate what he had said on justification through faith, by adverting to its effects and fruits in the principal Gospel-graces, each in their order, as thus stated by Mr. Young: 1. Justification, or pardon of sins past. 2. Peace with God (vi. 1.), which ensues immediately upon Justification, and is the same with Reconciliation (v. 10.) and a State of favour (v. 2.). 3. The Hope of glory (v. 2.) or of the glorious inheritance of the sons of God in heaven; see 1 Pet. i. 3, 4. 4. The Gift of the Holy Spirit (v. 5.), which is the seal of our adoption (viii. 15.) and the earnest of our heavenly inheritance, Eph. i. 14. These are privileges freely conferred upon us by God, upon our admission by Baptism into the Christian Covenant. 5. Sanctification of heart and life, through the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit (vi. 2. 4. 6. 11. 14. 22. viii. 3, 4. 12, 13.). This is the condition to be fulfilled on our part; upon which there follows: 6. A grounded Hope of a glorious resurrection (v. 11. vi. 5. 8. 22. viii. 14. 16, 17, 18. 23, 24, 25.). 7. Salvation finally perfected in the everlasting possession of the heavenly kingdom (v. 9, 10, 11. vi. 22, 23. viii. 13. 17, 18, 19. 23.).

To advert to the contents of the present chapter, it is shown that being thus justified, 1. We have peace with God (with whom we were before in a state of enmity, being alienated from him), and we enjoy, through Christ, free access to a state of favour with God, and thus are led to rejoice in the hope of future glory, vv. 1, 2. 2. We are supported and comforted in all our afflictions during the present life; nay, we may even rejoice in them as the instruments of spiritual good to us, vv. 3. 5. 3. All this good is rendered certain, and the hope of it ensured, by the fact, that Christ, having died for us while in a state of enmity and alienation, and having thus reconciled us to God, will not fail to perfect the work which he has thus begun, vv. 6. 10. 4. We may now rejoice in God (who is as truly our covenant God, as he had been that of the Jews), on account of the reconciliation which Christ has effected, ver. 11. 5. This state of reconciliation with, or filial relation to God is now extended to all men (i. e. proffered to all, laid open for all, rendered accessible to all), in like manner as the evils occasioned by the sin of our first parent have extended to all, vv. 12. 14; yea, such is the greatness of Christ's redemption, that the blessings procured by his death far exceed the evils occasioned by the sin of Adam, vv. 15. 19; they even exceed all the evils consequent upon the sins of men, who live under the light of revelation, vv. 20, 21.

1. εἰρήνην ἔχομεν] 'we have reconciliation and friendship with God (as opposed to a state of alienation and enmity, ver. 10) through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus.' Koppe compares Jerem. xvi. 5.

2. προσαγωγὴν.] The word properly denoted approach, but was often used of the permission of approach to great persons; and thus, by an easy transition, might denote introduction to a state of favour and acceptance, χάριν.

— καυχώμεθα.] Meaning, 'we exalt or rejoice.'

— δόξης.] The felicity of the saints in heaven is so called, here and elsewhere (as 1 Cor. ii. 7. 2 Thess. ii. 14. 2 Tim. ii. 10. Heb. ii. 10. 2 Pet. 1. 3), in order to console them while suffering here on earth. So in 2 Cor. iv. 17, afflictions are said to work out for them αἰώνιον βάρος δόξης.

3. καυχώμεθα ἐν τ. θλ.] Almost all the recent English Expositors have thought that καυχ. should be rendered not, 'we glory,' but 'we rejoice.' This, however, very inadequately represents the sense; there being here a sort of climax, i. e. 'not only rejoice under, but glory in.' This will sufficiently appear by considering the scope of the Apostle, which is ably pointed out by Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. vol. v. p. 139, as follows: 'St. Paul (he observes) opposing the advantages which the Gentile converts had by Faith, to those which the Jews gloried to have by the Law, adds, in order to show those advantages in the highest superiority, that the Christian Gentiles could glory even in that which was an opprobrium among the Jews, namely, tribulation. But the followers of Christ, who were taught that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God, had the same reason to glory in the roughness of the road, as the ancient AGONISTÆ had in the toils which procured them the victory.' So Theodoret (after Chrysostom) explains it, σεμνυνόμεθα, καὶ μέγα φρονοῦμεν, ὡς κοινωνοῦντες τῷ Δεσπότῃ τῶν παθημάτων. Comp. 1 Pet. iv. 13.

3, 4. εἰδότες ὅτι—ἐλπίδα.] A beautiful climax, as at ix. 29, 30. x. 13, seqq.; with which Schoettgen compares the following similar one in a Rabbinical writer: 'Industry leads us to innocence; innocence to purity; purity to holiness; holiness to humility; humility to fear of sin; fear of sin to piety; piety to the Holy Spirit; the Holy Spirit to the resurrection of the dead; the resurrection of the dead to Elias the Prophet.'

— κατεργάζεται] 'is productive of;' at least in the obedient children of God.

4. δοκιμήν.] I would not render this probationem, with some, nor experientiam, with others. The sense intended seems to be (with an allusion to the δοκιμὴ, by which the goodness of certain articles was put to the proof) the same as that in which we sometimes use the word proof, to denote something approved, and shown to be excellent, by proof and test; as, for instance, arms καταισχύνει· ὅτι ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκκέχυται ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν διὰ Πνεύματος ἁγίου τοῦ δοθέντος ἡμῖν.

6 [e] Ἔτι γὰρ Χριστὸς, ὄντων ἡμῶν ἀσθενῶν, κατὰ καιρὸν ὑπὲρ e Eph. 2. 1. Col. 2. 13.
7 ἀσεβῶν ἀπέθανε. Μόλις γὰρ ὑπὲρ δικαίου τὶς ἀποθανεῖται· 1 Pet. 3. 18.
(ὑπὲρ γὰρ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ τάχα τὶς καὶ τολμᾷ ἀποθανεῖν·)
8 [f] συνίστησι δὲ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ἀγάπην εἰς ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς, ὅτι, f John 15. 13.
ἔτι ἁμαρτωλῶν ὄντων ἡμῶν, Χριστὸς ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἀπέθανε. Heb. 9. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 18 9 [g] Πολλῷ οὖν μᾶλλον, δικαιωθέντες νῦν ἐν τῷ αἵματι αὐτοῦ, g 1 Thess. 1. 10.
10 σωθησόμεθα δι᾽ αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τῆς ὀργῆς. [h] Εἰ γὰρ, ἐχθροὶ h 2 Cor. 5. 18.
ὄντες, κατηλλάγημεν τῷ Θεῷ διὰ τοῦ θανάτου τοῦ Υἱοῦ Col. 1. 21, 22.
αὐτοῦ, πολλῷ μᾶλλον, καταλλαγέντες, σωθησόμεθα ἐν τῇ ζωῇ 2 Cor. 4. 10, 11.

of proof. Thus it denotes the effect of what will stand the test, that just estimate of ourselves and our spiritual state, which results from the self-examination that we are induced to institute by affliction.

5. ἡ δὲ ἐλπὶς οὐ καταισχ.] Meaning, 'and the hope [in question] puts one not to the shame of disappointment.' The metaphor has allusion to the shame felt by having relied on delusive promises. So καταισχύνω is used infra ix. 33. x. 11. 1 Pet. ii. 6; and sometimes in the later Classical writers.

6—10. In these verses we have a confirmation and illustration of what was just before said, of the power of Christian hope, as founded on the abundant love of God; and, by way of obviating any objection thereto, founded on desponding doubts and fears, the greatness of the Divine love is now set forth by an argumentum à majori ad minus (or à fortiori) deduced from the unspeakable love of God already manifested in giving his Son for their redemption, when they were yet in the state of heathens and enemies; q. d. 'Give not way to desponding fears; for if Christ hath already done the greater work for you by reconciling you to God, when ye were his enemies by evil works, will he not much more do that for you, when his friends,—nay, children,—which is far less difficult, by keeping you from evil, preserving you in his word and truth, saving you by his omnipotent grace,—so that his finished ransom and perpetual intercession may terminate in your finished salvation, by being, through his atonement and intercession, presented faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy?'

6. ἀσθενῶν.] The term properly denotes weak, generally through sickness, and with an adjunct notion of misery. Now, considering the effect of sin in depraving and weakening both the mental and moral energies (see Isaiah i. 5), it well expresses the helplessness of sin. Ἀσεβῶν, just after, seems used κατ᾽ ἐπανόρθωσιν, q. d. 'when we were yet in a state of extreme spiritual weakness, nay, sinfulness, Christ,' &c.

7. μόλις γὰρ, &c.] The magnitude of the benefit is now set forth by a popular mode of illustration, showing the difference between the voluntary sacrifice of Christ for sinners, and the possible case of any man dying for an eminently good and beneficent man, but scarcely so of one dying for a merely just man. Of the two γὰρs the first is meant to introduce the illustration, and may be rendered now; the second is meant to introduce a limitation; q. d. [I do not say none,] for, &c. It is strange that there should have been any difference of opinion on the scope of δικαίου and τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ, which some take of things, not persons. But thus the Article would be required at δικαίου, and the force of the illustration much weakened. Both are undoubtedly meant of persons; and so far from there being, as some have thought, a tautology, the difference is marked; δίκαιος signifying one who is strictly just; ἀγαθὸς, one who is benevolent, χρηστός. There is, indeed, a climax, or ascending gradation. The Apostle's object (says Bp. Jebb) is to illustrate the exceeding love of Christ, by a contrasted analogy, derived from human feelings. Look around you in the world; where will you find a person ready to die for a just man? Is it more than a remote probability, a mere perhaps, that you will find a person with magnanimity to die even for that rare character, THE GOOD MAN? But not such was the love of Christ; he died for those who not only were not good, who were not even just; for the weak, and the ungodly; for sinners, and for enemies.

8. συνίστησι] 'sets forth, or displays;' see supra iii. 5, and Note. The ὅτι should be rendered, namely that; as in x. 9. 2 Cor. v. 14. Phil. i. 27. ii. 22. Col. i. 19. 1 Thess. i. 5. ii. 14.

10. Here we have a repetition of the same general sentiment; yet so as to be explanatory thereof, by an amplification taken from life and death. The antithesis is very strong; and we may, with Stuart, express the sense as follows: 'If we were reconciled to God, when enemies, by a dying Saviour, à fortiori shall we now attain salvation, when thus reconciled, through a living one;' i. e. 'if Christ, in his humble and suffering state, reconciled us to God, much more in his exalted and glorified state will he complete the work thus begun, by acting as our Intercessor.'

— κατηλλάγημεν] 'were brought back to the favour of.' Koppe regards κατηλλ. as put for δικαιωθέντες; which may, in a popular acceptation, be true; but there is this difference between the two terms, that the one represents God as a monarch, the other, as a judge. Here καταλλάττεσθαι can only imply, on the part of God, the granting of pardon, and affording the means of obtaining and preserving his future favour; and, on the part of man, a humble and thankful acceptance of the offered boon.

— ἐν τῇ ζωῇ αὐτοῦ.] This is, as Koppe remarks, expressed antithetically, for ζῶντος αὐτοῦ. Οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλὰ καὶ καυχώμενοι ἐν τῷ Θεῷ διὰ 11 τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, δι' οὗ νῦν τὴν καταλλαγὴν ἐλάβομεν.

i Gen. 2 17. & 3. 6. infra 6. 23. 1 Cor. 15. 21. ⌐ [i] Διὰ τοῦτο, ὥσπερ δι' ἑνὸς ἀνθρώπου ἡ ἁμαρτία εἰς τὸν 12
κόσμον εἰσῆλθε, καὶ διὰ τῆς ἁμαρτίας ὁ θάνατος, καὶ οὕτως εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους ὁ θάνατος διῆλθεν, ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες k Supra 4. 15. ἥμαρτον— [k] ἄχρι γὰρ νόμου ἁμαρτία ἦν ἐν κόσμῳ· ἁμαρτία 13
l 1 Cor. 15. 21, 22, 45. δὲ οὐκ ἐλλογεῖται μὴ ὄντος νόμου. [l] Ἀλλ' ἐβασίλευσεν 14

αὐτοῦ, his living for the purposes just adverted to, viz., to complete the work of our redemption, by acting as our Intercessor. See Heb. vii. 25.

11. οὐ μόνον δὲ] scil. τοῦτο. Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators rightly supply ἐσώθημεν from σωθησόμεθα at ver. 9, ver. 10 being parenthetical. Καυχώμενοι is in construction dependent upon σωθησόμεθα; but, in fact, it may be regarded as employed instead of a verb finite. The general scope of the argument being this: 'And not only have we this hope of future salvation, but at present we rejoice in God,' as our covenant God, our supreme and eternal joy; for, as Calvin remarks, 'nunc ad summum gradum gloriandi conscendit.'

— τὴν καταλλαγήν.] The accuracy of our common version has been impeached by Doddridge, Macknight, Newcome, and Hey; but defended by Abp. Magee, on the ground that the word corresponds to what Whitby and Taylor call the first justification, which is distinct from the final salvation. A more satisfactory defence is advanced by Bp. Burgess, who remarks that 'the alteration of the word reconciliation makes no difference in the signification of the passage; since the reconciliation obtained by Christ's death, is the consequence of the atonement and expiation made by him, as is obvious from various passages of Scripture;' see Heb. ii. 17. 2 Cor. v. 18, 19. Heb. ix. 26.

12—19. 'The main purpose of this portion is,' as Stuart observes, 'to heighten our views respecting the blessings, which Christ hath procured for us, by comparing them with the evils which ensued upon the fall of our first parents; and by showing that the blessings in question not only extend to the removal of those evils, but far beyond; so that the grace of the Gospel has not only abounded, but superabounded.'

12. διὰ τοῦτο.] This may be best rendered, 'quæ cum sint,' 'such being the case,' 'there being this reconciliation;' as infra xiii. 6. Matt. xiii. 13. xiv. 2. xxi. 43.

In the words following, the best Commentators are agreed, that 'the latter part of the comparison is left to be supplied from the subsequent verses; the sense being suspended, on account of intervening explanations and illustrations, till we come to verses 18, 19, and 21.' Render, 'As by one man sin entered into the world, and death on all as its consequence, so by one δικαίωμα (righteousness) all are restored to a state of life.' See a similar parenthesis in vii. 2, 3.

— εἰσῆλθε] 'was introduced.' A frequent idiom. So Thucyd. ii. 54, ἡ νόσος—ἐς Πελοπόννησον οὐκ εἰσῆλθε. Διῆλθε, by the same idiom, signifies 'was transmitted,' namely, from generation to generation.

— ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον.] Some recent Commentators, objecting to the sense commonly assigned to ἐφ' ᾧ (inasmuch as), on the ground that infants have not sinned, and yet are liable to death, have proposed various other senses,—all, however, as unnecessary as they are unauthorized. Besides, the difficulty is not such as requires to be removed in so violent a manner. We have only to understand by ἥμαρτον (sinned) that they 'are treated as sinners,' are considered guilty in the sight of God; namely, on account of Adam's fall. Thus the expression will be equivalent to ἁμαρτωλοὶ κατεστάθησαν at ver. 19. And ἐφ' ᾧ may be rendered because.

13. This and the next verse are meant to establish the proposition contained in the preceding one; and that by anticipating an objection; namely, that 'since, when there was no law, there was no transgression, death ought not to have been inflicted.' The difficulty in this passage is chiefly occasioned by extreme brevity, and a blending of the objections with the answers. The sense of the whole mainly depends upon the interpretation of ἄχρι νόμου, which Origen, and also some modern Commentators, render, 'during the law.' A signification inadmissible, and, indeed, inapplicable: see the learned discussion of Tittman de Synon. p. 33, seqq. on the force of ἄχρι and μέχρι, which is intimately connected with the sense of this whole passage. His researches go far to establish the ancient and common interpretation, by which ἄχρι νόμου is explained to mean, 'from the Fall,' 'until the law was promulgated;' i. e. before the promulgation of the law; and μέχρι Μωϋσ. 'until Moses gave the law.' The argument in vv. 13, 14, may be expressed, with Mr. Holden, as follows: 'Adam was subjected to death because he violated the law respecting the forbidden fruit; but from his time till that of Moses, men were subjected to death who had not violated any similar positive or express law; therefore they must have been subjected to death, and treated as sinners, not for their own actual sin, but in consequence of Adam's sin.' — ἐλλογεῖται.] Literally, 'is entered to our account,' 'laid to our charge.'

14. ἐβασίλευσε] 'had exerted his uncontroulable force.' This is said by prosopopœia; of which examples are adduced by Wetstein from the Rabbinical and the Classical writers. Τοὺς μὴ ἁμαρτ., 'who had not sinned.' Meaning, as Bp. Warburton remarks (Works, vol. vi. p. 259), 'those who died before they came to the knowledge of good and evil, namely, infants and idiots.' The words ἐπὶ τῷ ὁμ. τῆς παραβ. Ἀ. are to be connected with ἐβασίλευσεν. Render, 'sinned by a transgression like that of Adam.'

ὁ θάνατος ἀπὸ Ἀδὰμ μέχρι Μωϋσέως, καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς μὴ ἁμαρτήσαντας ἐπὶ τῷ ὁμοιώματι τῆς παραβάσεως Ἀδάμ, 15 ὅς ἐστι τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος. ×[m] Ἀλλ᾽ οὐχ ὡς τὸ παρά- m Is. 53. 11. Matt. 20. 28. & 26. 28.
πτωμα, οὕτω καὶ τὸ χάρισμα. εἰ γὰρ τῷ τοῦ ἑνὸς παρα-πτώματι οἱ πολλοὶ ἀπέθανον, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι τῇ τοῦ ἑνὸς ἀνθρώπου, Ἰησοῦ 16 Χριστοῦ, εἰς τοὺς πολλοὺς ἐπερίσσευσε. Καὶ οὐχ ὡς δι᾽ ἑνὸς ἁμαρτήσαντος, τὸ δώρημα· τὸ μὲν γὰρ κρίμα ἐξ ἑνὸς εἰς κατάκριμα, τὸ δὲ χάρισμα ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτωμάτων εἰς 17 δικαίωμα. Εἰ γὰρ τῷ τοῦ ἑνὸς παραπτώματι ὁ θάνατος

— ὅς ἐστι τύπος τοῦ μέλλ.] scil. Ἀδάμ, namely, Christ. It has been shown, that in the Rabbinical writers, and even in Josephus, mention is often made of the first Adam, which, of course, implies a second Adam. By τύπος is here imported a general resemblance in certain relations and circumstances. Of the various points of similarity between the first and the second Adam, the principal one is that here adverted to by the Apostle; that, 'by the first Adam sin came into the world; by the second came righteousness.' And as all mankind were represented in Adam, as being the cause of their punishment; so were they all represented in Christ, as being the cause of their restoration.

15. ἀλλ᾽ οὐχ ὡς τὸ παράπ., &c.] Here regularity would have required the corresponding part of the comparison between Christ and Adam to have been resumed; but the Apostle, struck with a difference in some respects, again stops to remark this difference. And first he observes, that if God's justice, in the infliction of punishment, was general in its effects, much more has his goodness been general in freely bestowing mercies through the Gospel. (Newcome.)

In this verse, then, we have introduced the first advantageous difference.

— οἱ πολλοί.] Not, 'many,' but 'the many;' meaning (by an idiom on which I have fully treated in Recens. Syn.) all mankind; and so equivalent to πάντες at ver. 12.

— ἀπέθανον] 'became mortal.' Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι. Render, 'the grace of God and the gift [of righteousness] by grace.' Ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάρ. is a Hebraism for 'a gratuitous gift.' By this the Apostle hints that this grace is purely a gift, and unmerited. Ἐπερίσσευσε; i. e. 'the benefit of the free gift hath abounded to a far greater extent than did the injury of,' &c.

16. Here we have adduced the second advantageous difference.

— καὶ οὐχ ὡς δι᾽ ἑνὸς, &c.] The sentence has something elliptical, and anomalous in construction. Some verb must be supplied; whether ἐστι, or ἔχει, matters not; and also some noun; though not, what some supply, ὁ θάνατος ἐλθών, which is inadmissible by any rule of ellipsis: rather, τὸ κρίμα, as suggested by the words following, τὸ μὲν γὰρ κρίμα, &c. So in the subsequent clause, παραπτώματος is to be supplied at ἑνὸς, from παραπτωμάτων which follows. Moreover, in the διά is also implied ἐλθόν, or such like. Render, 'And not as was the transgression, which came through one (i. e. Adam) who sinned, so is the free gift.' The sentence, more plainly worded, would have stood thus: καὶ οὐχ ὡς δι᾽ ἑνὸς, ἁμαρτήσαντος, τὸ κρίμα, οὕτω δι᾽ ἑνὸς, δικαιοῦντος, τὸ δώρημα.

— τὸ μὲν γὰρ κρίμα, &c.] We have here the same kind of ellipsis as in the preceding words. The sentence fully expressed would have stood thus: τὸ μὲν γὰρ κρίμα, ἐξ ἑνὸς παραπτώματος εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον, εἰς κατάκριμα· τὸ δὲ χάρισμα, ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτωμάτων ἀναφέρει, εἰς δικαίωμα.

The ἐκ in ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτ. is adapted to the ἐξ of the antithetical clause, and therefore must not be too rigorously interpreted. We may render, 'on behalf of,' or, 'on the part of.' At εἰς sub. ἐγένετο, 'issued in,' produced. The terms δώρημα (free pardon) and χάρισμα (gift of salvation) are equivalent, and denote the δικαίωμα. The πολλῶν has great force; for, as Theophylact observes, 'the pardon granted by God did not take away that one sin of Adam only, but all the sins which were committed in the world after it.' See Note on Matt. xx. 28.

17. Now is introduced the third point of advantageous difference; namely, that if the guilt of Adam brought death upon his posterity, much more shall the obedience of Christ produce in its effects both justification and eternal life and glory.

— εἰ γὰρ τῷ τοῦ ἑνὸς, &c.] The γὰρ is continuative; and the εἰ signifies, 'if [as is the case].' Τοῦ ἑνός; meaning, Adam; see Note on v. 15. The words διὰ τοῦ ἑνὸς, 'through that one,' are exegetical of the τῷ—παραπτώματι. Περισσείαν τῆς χάρ. is for χάριν περισσοτέραν, 'superabounding grace;' as 2 Cor. viii. 2, denoting what is transcendent. Τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς δικ. is for τῆς δικαιοσύνης δεδωρημένης, the justification granted by grace. By ἐν ζωῇ βασιλ. is meant (as Macknight observes) 'that they shall have infinitely greater happiness in their new life, than they had miseries and sorrows in the state into which they were brought through Adam's disobedience, expressed by the reigning of death in this verse, and in ver. 14.' The term expresses height of felicity, with an adjunct notion of exalted honour; so 2 Tim. ii. 12, εἰ ὑπομένομεν, καὶ συμβασιλεύσομεν. Wetstein aptly adduces Manil. v. 361:

'Regales ut opes et magna æraria servent,
Regnantes sub rege suo, rerumque ministri.'

ἐβασίλευσε διὰ τοῦ ἑνός, πολλῷ μᾶλλον οἱ τὴν περισσείαν τῆς χάριτος καὶ τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς δικαιοσύνης λαμβάνοντες, ἐν ζωῇ βασιλεύσουσι διὰ τοῦ ἑνὸς, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.—Ἄρα 18
οὖν ὡς δι' ἑνὸς παραπτώματος εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους, εἰς κατάκριμα· οὕτω καὶ δι' ἑνὸς δικαιώματος εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώ-πους, εἰς δικαίωσιν ζωῆς. Ὥσπερ γὰρ διὰ τῆς παρακοῆς 19 τοῦ ἑνὸς ἀνθρώπου ἁμαρτωλοὶ κατεστάθησαν οἱ πολλοὶ, οὕτω καὶ διὰ τῆς ὑπακοῆς τοῦ ἑνὸς δίκαιοι κατασταθήσονται οἱ n Supra 4. 15. infra 7. 8. Gal. 3. 19, 23.
πολλοί. [n] Νόμος δὲ παρεισῆλθεν, ἵνα πλεονάσῃ τὸ παρά- 20
πτωμα. Οὗ δὲ ἐπλεόνασεν ἡ ἁμαρτία, ὑπερεπερίσσευσεν ἡ χάρις· ἵνα ὥσπερ ἐβασίλευσεν ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ, 21 οὕτω καὶ ἡ χάρις βασιλεύσῃ διὰ δικαιοσύνης εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.
a Supra 3. 8. & 5. 20. infra ver. 15.
VI. [a] ΤΙ οὖν ἐροῦμεν; ἐπιμενοῦμεν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, ἵνα ἡ 1

18, 19. The Apostle now turns back to complete the comparison commenced at ver. 12, and sums up the argument, as often, by ἄρα οὖν, which may be rendered, 'So, then.' There is here something very elliptical in the construction; and the sense can only be gathered from the context. In the first clause, after δι' ἑνὸς παραπτώματος, we must understand τὸ κρίμα; and in the second, after δικαιώματος, τὸ χάρισμα. There is also a verb left to be supplied as at ver. 16, namely ἦλθεν. Δικαίωσις ζωῆς seems to mean such justification as should restore them to the salvation they had forfeited; literally, pardon for life, and salvation.

19. This verse is explanatory of the preceding, and οἱ πολλοὶ should be rendered 'the many,' which, as appears from the foregoing, is equivalent to πάντες: the main drift of the Apostle throughout this passage being to set forth the universality of the Redemption, as being co-extensive with the evil introduced at the fall, which it was designed to remedy. So Dr. Bentley, in his masterly Sermon on Popery, after quoting what is said at ver. 12, and the redditio at ver. 15, remarks: 'Who would not wish that our Translators had kept the Articles in the version which they saw in the original? thus, 'If through the offence of the one (that is, Adam) the many have died, much more the grace of God, by the one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto the many.' By this accurate version, some hurtful mistakes about partial redemption, and absolute reprobation, had been happily prevented. Our English readers had then seen, what several of the Fathers saw and testified, that οἱ πολλοί, the many, in an antithesis to the one, are equivalent to πάντες, all, in ver. 12, and comprehended the whole multitude, the entire species of mankind, exclusive only of the one. So again, vv. 18, 19, our Translators have repeated the like mistake; where, when the Apostle has said, that 'as the offence of one was upon all men (εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους) to condemnation, so the righteousness of one was upon all men to justification;' 'for,' adds he, 'as by the one man's disobedience (τοῦ ἑνὸς) the many (οἱ πολλοὶ) were made sinners, so by the obedience of the one (τοῦ ἑνὸς) the many (οἱ πολλοὶ) shall be made righteous.' By this version the reader is admonished and guided to remark, that the many in ver. 19 are the same as πάντες, all, in ver. 18.'

It is not, however, to be understood as meant, that all mankind are actually 'made righteous;' but only that the benefit of this δώρημα, or χάρισμα, or δικαίωσις ζωῆς, is held out to all; and if they do not reap the benefit of it, it is through their own fault; and that all who are justified must become so alone through Christ.

20. νόμος δὲ παρεισῆλθεν.] It has been disputed whether by νόμος is here to be understood the Law of Moses, or the Law of nature; or, again, a Rule of life, as Bp. Middleton would explain. It may be best to unite these senses; supposing the expression, under the idea of Law, or a rule of life, to include both the Law of nature, and that of Moses. Παρεισῆλθεν I would not render, with Macknight and Middleton, 'secretly, or silently, entered.' The sense of the παρὰ is rather by the bye, or indirectly. The Apostle's meaning being, as Professor Scholefield observes, that 'when sin had entered, the direct and obvious method would have been to introduce the Gospel as its great counteraction and remedy; instead of which the Law came first to answer a collateral end, viz. to aggravate the evil, and make it more manifest and desperate, that men might be most effectually prepared to welcome the blessing. Thus it was an indirect step towards the accomplishment of God's ultimate purpose.' This view is, I find, supported by the authority of Chrysostom and Theophylact.

— ἵνα πλεονάσῃ.] Meaning, 'in order that it might be abundantly exhibited,' or made to appear what it is; or, in the words at vii. 13, 'might become exceeding sinful.'

— οὗ.] This may be understood both of time and place.

21. διὰ δικαιοσύνης.] Meaning, 'by justification, through the remission of sins.'

VI. On the scope of this and the two next Chapters a difference of opinion exists. Some suppose it to have been the intent of the Apostle to vindicate the Gospel doctrine of justification from certain misconstructions, as if it gave a license to sin, and to prove that it does not make

2 χάρις πλεονάσῃ; [b] μὴ γένοιτο! Οἵτινες ἀπεθάνομεν τῇ b Infra ver. 11.
3 ἁμαρτίᾳ, πῶς ἔτι ζήσομεν ἐν αὐτῇ; [c] Ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε ὅτι ὅσοι Gal 6. 14. c Gal. 3. 27.
ἐβαπτίσθημεν εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν, εἰς τὸν θάνατον αὐτοῦ 4 ἐβαπτίσθημεν; [d] Συνετάφημεν οὖν αὐτῷ διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσ- d 1 Cor. 6. 14.
ματος εἰς τὸν θάνατον· ἵνα ὥσπερ ἠγέρθη Χριστὸς ἐκ νεκρῶν Eph. 4. 22, 23, 24. Col. 2. 12.
διὰ τῆς δόξης τοῦ Πατρὸς, οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐν καινότητι & 3. 10. 1 Pet. 4. 1, 2.
5 ζωῆς περιπατήσωμεν. [e] Εἰ γὰρ σύμφυτοι γεγόναμεν τῷ e Infra 8. 11. Phil. 3. 10, 11.

void the Law. So far from this, the doctrine in question is perfectly consistent with the law written on the hearts of men; and instead of dissolving our obligations to holiness, it confirms them. Others think that, as in the foregoing Chapters, the Apostle had considered the graces and privileges conferred on the Christian convert, upon his admission to the Covenant, he now proceeds to treat on the Christian life subsequent to baptism; i. e. sanctification, or Christian holiness as subsequent to justification; pointing out what obligations are laid upon us, what conditions are required for maintaining our state of grace, and securing our inheritance, and what helps of divine grace are afforded for enabling us to fulfil those conditions. First, it is supposed the Apostle, in chap. vi., states the obligations to holiness under which we are laid by our baptismal vow and other Christian engagements, and also adverts to the different results of a life spent in the service of sin, or the service of God: this he does in chap. vi. 2. He in chapters vii. and viii. inquires what helps were afforded toward sanctification, in the Jewish and Christian dispensations.

Of these two views, the latter appears to be the better founded. Probably, however, the Apostle might have both the above objects in view, the former as subservient to the latter; and, purposing to establish the obligation to Christian holiness, he chose to do it by counteracting two grand abuses which had been made of his doctrines of free grace and of the Christian's freedom from the Law.

1. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν;] A formula by which something that another might reason or think is adverted to for the purpose of disavowing it. So Arrian, Epict. p. 17 (cited by Wolf), Τί οὖν ἐγὼ λέγω; ὅτι ἄπρακτόν ἐστι τὸ ζῶον; μὴ γένοιτο!

2. οἵτινες ἀπεθάνομεν τῇ ἁμ., πῶς, &c.] 'How shall we who have died to sin (i. e. who have solemnly renounced it at our baptism) live any longer therein.' The πῶς represents the inconsistency of such conduct. See Gal. ii. 18. It is well observed by Koppe, that the ratio metaphoræ is formed on a peculiar mode of speaking, by which the rite of immersion in the baptismal water, and egress from it, were used as a symbol of breaking off all connexion with the present sinful life, and giving oneself to a new and pure one. 'As therefore (continues he) it was usual for those baptized to be, on that account, called both dead and buried, and raised again to a new life, hence the Apostle, according to his custom, applies this manner of speaking to the purpose of describing the cultivation of Christian virtue (to which every Christian had bound himself) under the similitude of death and resurrection.' Elsner and Wetstein adduce many passages of the Classical writers, which show that to be dead to any thing or person denoted to have broken off all connexion therewith.

Ζήσομεν ἐν αὐτῇ implies the habitual commission of it. So Wetstein cites examples from the Classical writers of ζῆν ἐν οἴνῳ or ἐν πότοις.

3. ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε ὅτι ὅσοι ἐβαπτ., &c.] Under the same metaphor the Apostle proceeds to show, from the nature of the baptismal covenant, that Christians have engaged to be conformed to the death and resurrection of Christ, by dying unto sin, and rising again unto righteousness.

Ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε occurs also at vii. 1, and is equivalent to 'have you forgotten, or are you not aware of this truth?' Βαπτίζεσθαι εἴς τινα is equivalent to βαπτ. εἰς ὄνομά τινος, and denotes to profess oneself any one's disciple by baptism; which was understood to engage the disciple to the profession of the doctrine promulgated by his teacher. Εἰς τὸν θάνατον αὐτοῦ ἐβαπτ. may be rendered, 'have been baptized unto his death.' And the sense, as the best Commentators are agreed, is: 'we have bound ourselves by baptism to die unto (i. e. lay aside) all sin, as Christ laid down his life.' Εἰς here signifies 'in conformity to,' viz. to him in his death, that as he had died for their sins, so should they die unto, and have done with, all sin. So, among the heathens, the initiation into the Greater Mysteries was figuratively termed a dying unto a vicious life, by renouncing it.

4. συνετάφημεν, &c.] Meaning, 'we have been [thus] buried [in the waters of baptism] unto,' &c. In συνετάφ. there is an allusion to baptism by immersion, on which see Bingham's Antiquities.

— εἰς τὸν θάνατον.] Meaning, 'after the similitude of, or in conformity to, his death.' Supply αὐτοῦ from the αὐτῷ just before. Διὰ τῆς δόξης τ. Π., 'through the glory, i. e. power, of the Father.' Ἐ*ν καινότ. ζωῆς* is for ἐν καινῇ ζωῇ, 'in a new life.' With respect to the construction in this whole sentence, it is observed by Jaspis, that the Apostle has put only two members of the comparison, when there should properly have been four, omitting one in the protasis, and another in the apodosis. The passage, in a complete state, he says, would be this: ἵνα ὥσπερ ἠγέρθη Χριστὸς ἐκ νεκρῶν, καὶ περιεπάτησε ἐν καινότητι ζωῆς, οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς συνεγερθέντες αὐτῷ ἐκ νεκρῶν, ἐν καινότητι ζωῆς περιπατήσωμεν.

5—11. The main idea being thus introduced, the Apostle now proceeds to expand the thought, and present it in a variety of costume, suitable to the nature of the case, and to impress the whole on the mind of the reader. (Stuart.)

5. εἰ γὰρ σύμφυτοι—ἐσόμεθα] i. e. 'if we have been closely united with, or assimilated to, him in his death, we shall also be assimilated to him in the likeness of his resurrection.' In σύμ- ὁμοιώματι τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως f Gal. 2. 20. Eph. 4. 22. ἐσόμεθα· [f] τοῦτο γινώσκοντες, ὅτι ὁ παλαιὸς ἡμῶν ἄνθρω- 6 πος συνεσταυρώθη, ἵνα καταργηθῇ τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας, g 1 Pet. 4. 1. τοῦ μηκέτι δουλεύειν ἡμᾶς τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ. [g] ὁ γὰρ ἀποθανὼν 7

h 2 Tim. 2. 11. δεδικαίωται ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας. [h] Εἰ δὲ ἀπεθάνομεν σὺν 8
i Rev. 1. 18. Χριστῷ, πιστεύομεν ὅτι καὶ συζήσομεν αὐτῷ· [i] εἰδότες ὅτι 9 k Luke 20. 38. Χριστὸς, ἐγερθεὶς ἐκ νεκρῶν, οὐκ ἔτι ἀποθνήσκει· θάνατος Heb. 9. 27, 28. αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἔτι κυριεύει. [k] ὃ γὰρ ἀπέθανε, τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἀπέ- 10 l Gal. 2. 19. 1 Pet. 2. 24. θανεν ἐφάπαξ· ὃ δὲ ζῇ, ζῇ τῷ Θεῷ. [l] Οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς 11

φυτοι there is a metaphor taken from grafting; the literal sense of the expression being, 'grown together into one,' as man and horse in the Centaurs. The term, Commentators remark, is one often used of the closest union and most intimate friendship. Τῷ ὁμοιώματι is for καθ' ὁμοίωμα. Also ἀλλὰ καὶ would properly denote imò etiam; but, in this elliptical use, it may be rendered 'utique, sane etiam.' Here we must repeat σύμφυτοι.

6. The Apostle now enforces this obligation to Christian holiness, from the engagement which every Christian comes under by baptism, of being conformed to the fellowship of Christ's sufferings, by crucifying the flesh, with the affections and lusts.

— τοῦτο γινώσκοντες.] Many take this as a participle for a verb. But it is better to regard γινώσκ. as a Nominativus pendens, ὑμεῖς being understood. Thus it is equivalent to a verb with ἐπειδή. This use of γινώσκειν occurs also in James i. 3. 2 Pet. i. 20. Soph. Antig. 188, τοῦτο γινώσκων ὅτι, &c. Antiphanes, in Alcestide: τοῦτο γινώσκων ὅτι.

— ὁ παλαιὸς ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος.] Meaning the corrupt nature which men derive from Adam, and which belongs to them in their unrenewed state: what is properly applicable only to human nature being (by personification) applied to the concrete man. Thus Adam is called by the Rabbis the man of sin. To this is opposed the new man, the holy disposition and character infused by the Holy Spirit, and required by the Gospel. See Eph. iv. 24, and Col. iii. 10.

— συνεσταυρώθη.] As the death of Christ is considered emblematic of baptism, so the manner of his death is made to suggest the duty of crucifying our corrupt nature.

— ἵνα καταργηθῇ τὸ σῶμα τ. ἁ.] Τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμ. is not to be regarded, with many eminent Commentators, as simply put for ἁμαρτία, but sin is considered (suitably to the foregoing metaphor), as a body, possessing power within the man, as an imperium in imperio; a body consisting of many members, in particular vices. Comp. vii. 24. Καταργηθῇ, 'might be deprived of its vigour and efficiency, and no longer cause sin.' Τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας is plainly the same with ὁ παλαιὸς ἄνθρωπος. The next words are explanatory of the foregoing, and show the effect and purpose.

7. ὁ γὰρ ἀποθανὼν—ἁμαρτίας.] This assertion enforces the declaration in the foregoing verse (that when the old man is crucified, Christians cannot be devoted to the service of sin) by a simile drawn from physical death; though the expression itself, ἀποθανὼν, is to be taken figuratively, of 'one whose corrupt nature has been crucified with Christ;' q. d. 'He who is [thus] dead [to sin], is freed from its power;' δεδικαίωται being for ἠλευθέρωται, and signifying, 'is freed from its influence or slavery;' as infra viii. 2. 1 Pet. iv. 1, πέπαυται ἁμαρτίας. This particular expression is employed with allusion to the subject of the whole context,—the Gospel doctrine of justification by faith.

8. εἰ δὲ ἀπεθάνομεν, &c.] Here the Apostle takes up the word ἀποθανὼν at v. 7, and resumes the sentiment of vv. 4, 5, for the sake of adding a new sentiment, by way of establishing his position; namely, that as Christ died but once, and therefore lives for ever a new life, so the believer dies once for all unto sin, when he truly dies to it, so that he must for ever hereafter live a new life, and no longer practise sin. (Stuart.) The full sense is as follows: 'Now if we have thus died with Christ [by having our corrupt nature crucified with him], we trust that we shall also live with him [in immortal happiness].' See 2 Tim. ii. 11.

9. εἰδότες ὅτι, &c.] This is, Stuart observes, as much as to say, 'What I have now asserted must be true, inasmuch as you know that to be true from which my position is a necessary deduction.' See Hyperius. These words, then, point out the foundation of the trust and confidence before mentioned; namely, that Christ, who hath risen, will never again die.

— θάνατος αὐτοῦ, &c.] These words are explanatory of the preceding; q. d. 'he not only will die no more, but can die no more; since death hath no longer any power over him.'

10. ὃ γὰρ ἀπέθανε, &c.] Ὃ, for καθ' ὅ, 'in respect to which;' as in Gal. ii. 20. See Note on John xvii. 1—5.

— τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἀπέθανεν ἐφάπαξ.] Meaning, 'he died on account of, for the expiation of, sin (see 1 Thess. v. 10), once for all,' i. e. so as to complete and perfect our redemption. See Heb. vii. 27. ix. 26—28. Such is the view of the sense adopted by Calvin, who ably traces the connexion thus. 'Having before declared that by the example of Christ we are for ever freed from the yoke of death, the Apostle now accommodates what he had said to the sentiment intended to be inculcated,—that we are no longer subject to the dominion of sin; and this he shows from the final cause of Christ's death, namely, because he died in order to put down sin.'

By ζῇ τῷ Θεῷ is probably meant, 'liveth unto the glory and honour of God,' which, in the case of Christ, was promoted by his resurrection; or,

λογίζεσθε ἑαυτοὺς νεκροὺς μὲν εἶναι τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, ζῶντας δὲ 12 τῷ Θεῷ, ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ [τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν]. Μὴ οὖν βασιλευέτω ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐν τῷ θνητῷ ὑμῶν σώματι, εἰς τὸ 13 ὑπακούειν [αὐτῇ ἐν] ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ· [m] μηδὲ παρ- m Infra 12. 1. 1 Pet. 4. 2.
ιστάνετε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν ὅπλα ἀδικίας τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ· ἀλλὰ παραστήσατε ἑαυτοὺς τῷ Θεῷ, ὡς ἐκ νεκρῶν ζῶντας, καὶ 14 τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν ὅπλα δικαιοσύνης τῷ Θεῷ. ἁμαρτία γὰρ as some explain, 'liveth to or with God,' which amounts to the same thing.

11. 'Additur jam analogiæ definitio.' (Calvin.) We have now the comparison of the members with the head. (Stuart.)

— οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς λογίζεσθε, &c.] Meaning, 'So also consider yourselves as persons who have renounced sin, whose corrupt nature has been crucified, but who are alive unto God, by living to his honour, service, and obedience.' Ἐν Χριστῷ is added, to show that it is to Christ's mediation that we are to ascribe both our dying unto sin and our living unto God.

The words τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν, not found in many ancient MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have been cancelled by Griesbach, Knapp, and Scholz, perhaps rightly.

12, 13. We have here the conclusion; q. d. 'From these considerations, then, let not sin reign,' &c. By ἁμαρτία we are to understand, not peccatum, but vitiositas, that propensity to evil which exists in every man—the φρόνημα σαρκὸς spoken of in the ninth Article of our Church. Here, by a bold figure, sin is personified as a tyrant, striving to hold mastery over men.

— ἐν τῷ θνητῷ ὑμῶν σ.] Here θνητῷ is not (what some have maintained) a mere epithet of ornament, but, from the body being the seat of sensuality, is used to intimate, 1. that the pleasures of the body are, from its liability to disease and death, very fleeting and temporary, and that therefore it is the more unreasonable to gratify corporeal appetites at the sacrifice of the soul; 2. that the labour of resisting temptations to evil is but of short continuance, and therefore the less formidable; 3. that they should be mindful of the near approach of that period, when the dominion of sin would work death spiritual and eternal.

The words αὐτῇ ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ have been cancelled by Griesbach, Knapp, and Scholz, on the authority of some MSS., Versions, and Fathers; but, I conceive, without sufficient reason. For though some MSS. have not the αὐτῇ ἐν, and others retain the αὐτῇ, but cancel the ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ, yet scarcely any are without both. And if even the majority of both classes of MSS. were without all the words, it would be uncritical to cancel them; since, when removed, they leave the passage miserably curtailed in sense. Moreover, thus the words εἰς τὸ ὑπακούειν would be worse than useless. With far more prudence Vater has restored the whole passage in the text, and Tittman, ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ. While, however, the authority for retaining all the words is so great, that none ought to be actually removed from the text, yet, I think, the state of the evidence (as reported by Wetstein, Griesbach, and Scholz,) is such as to justify us in suspecting that the passage is not as it was left by the Apostle. Gratz and Rinck are of opinion that the present reading was formed of two others; namely, ὑπακούειν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ and ὑπακούειν αὐτῇ, the ἐν being added afterwards. But, though agreeing in their premises, they so far differ in their conclusions, that Rinck thinks the true reading is ὑπακούειν αὐτῇ; Gratz, ὑπακούειν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ. Rinck will not believe that ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ could have been expelled by the αὐτῇ, but rather αὐτῇ by those words. It is not, however, very likely that any Scholiasts would think it necessary to gloss the αὐτῇ. If they had, they would surely have glossed by ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτῆς, not αὐτοῦ; as, in fact, did Origen, Ruffin, and Theodoret. And so one of Matthæi's MSS. I cannot, therefore, bring myself to believe that we have in the common text two readings, one a gloss upon the other. We have rather, I suspect, the original reading (which, I believe, was ὑπακούειν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ); and, mixed up with it, the attempts of some sciolists (not scholiasts) to improve it, who thought the words ought to have been accommodated to the principal term ἁμαρτία, not to the subordinate one σώματι. I suspect that αὐτῇ was first inserted, and then ἐν, to help out the construction. For the omission of αὐτῇ ἐν there is the authority of several of the most ancient and valuable MSS., many of the best Versions, and very many Fathers. It is not probable that the words αὐτῇ ἐν were removed (as Matthæi fancies) 'to clear the sentence;' for even with them it is not overloaded. The only objection to it is its extreme harshness; though that, of itself, is no reason why it should be altered, but the contrary. And though we no where else read of the lusts of sin (but only of the lusts of the flesh or the body), yet it may here be tolerated, because sin is personified as a tyrant,—just as supra v. 6, 7, he is considered as a master over a slave.

13. μηδὲ παριστάνετε, &c.] We have here a continuation of the above imagery, in which sin is considered as a slave-master, as introductory of a kindred admonition. For here I can by no means, with some, recognise a military allusion. The term ὅπλα is best taken in its primary sense, to denote tools or instruments, as in Herodot. vii. 25. ix. 121. Herodian, vii. 11, and elsewhere. The meaning will thus be, 'neither yield up your members to sin, for him to use as organs or instruments of wickedness.' On the other hand, by ὅπλα δικαιοσύνης are denoted the various instruments of working the work of God in all holiness, righteousness, and truth; and all this τῷ Θεῷ, 'to the glory of God,' 1 Cor. x. 31.

— ὡς ἐκ νεκρῶν ζῶντας.] Meaning, 'as those who, after having been spiritually dead, are now alive from the dead, by a new birth and righteousness.'

14. ἁμαρτία γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ, as Chrys.

ὑμῶν οὐ κυριεύσει· οὐ γάρ ἐστε ὑπὸ νόμον, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ χάριν.
n Gal. 2. 18, 19. [n] Τί οὖν; ἁμαρτήσομεν, ὅτι οὐκ ἐσμὲν ὑπὸ νόμον, ἀλλ' 15
o John 8. 34. 2 Pet. 2. 19. ὑπὸ χάριν; Μὴ γένοιτο! [o] Οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι ᾧ παριστάνετε 16 ἑαυτοὺς δούλους εἰς ὑπακοὴν, δοῦλοί ἐστε ᾧ ὑπακούετε, ἤτοι ἁμαρτίας εἰς θάνατον, ἢ ὑπακοῆς εἰς δικαιοσύνην; Χάρις δὲ 17
τῷ Θεῷ, ὅτι ἦτε δοῦλοι τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ὑπηκούσατε δὲ ἐκ p John 8. 32. 1 Pet. 2. 16. 1 Cor. 7. 22. καρδίας εἰς ὃν παρεδόθητε τύπον διδαχῆς· [p] ἐλευθερωθέντες 18
δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ἐδουλώθητε τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ. Ἀνθρώ- 19 and Theophylact remark, has reference to a clause omitted, and involving answer to a supposed demur; q. d. ('How can this be effected?) Fear not; for sin shall not [as you apprehend] have dominion over you.' Certainly the character of the sentiment is not, as some have supposed, predictive; but rather consolatory. They are encouraged to exert themselves in resisting sin, by the assurance of success. See Hyperius, Crellius, Estius, Grotius, and Scott.

14. οὐ γάρ ἐστε, &c.] These words assign a reason why sin shall not be their ruin; namely, that they are not under law, but under grace. For I agree with those who (as Carpzov, Doddridge, Macknight, and Middleton) by νόμος here understand law in general. 'The Apostle (as Bp. Middleton observes) here meaning to contrast the nature of all law (i. e. of every rule of life, which offers neither mediation nor atonement, and consequently makes no provision for the inevitable weakness of man) with grace, i. e. with a gracious dispensation, which requires not an unsinning obedience, but only the best exertions of frail creatures, giving assurance of pardon through faith, where our obedience has been imperfect.'

15—23. The Apostle now proceeds to argue, that the dispensation of grace vouchsafed to us, so far from encouraging sin, demands a service to righteousness, utterly inconsistent with any sinful habit.

16. οὐκ οἴδατε, &c.] After earnest dissuasion, the Apostle resorts to serious admonition, by placing before them the alternative, that they must serve some master,—either sin, who will lead them to death; or righteous obedience, which will conduct them to justification. They who obey sin are the vassals of sin, and must receive the wages of sin,—DEATH. The ᾧ is by some rendered 'whatsoever;' but as ἁμαρτία was just before personified, so it should seem that the ᾧ here is put in the masculine, for accommodation to it; though by sin may, in an under sense, be meant a habit of sin, as by ὑπακοὴ, a habit of obedience. The εἰς in εἰς θάνατον and εἰς δικ. denotes event, result, or consequence, as Rom. v. 16, where εἰς κατάκριμα and εἰς δικαίωσιν are similarly opposed. Θάνατος here denotes spiritual and eternal death, the death of the soul, the awful ὄλεθρον αἰώνιον ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Κυρίου, 2 Thess. i. 9. Δικ. should not be rendered righteousness; since, as appears from the kindred passage at v. 16 (see also iv. 25), it is put for δικαίωσιν, which properly denotes acquittal, but, in St. Paul, forgiveness of sins, and consequent acceptance, and admission to salvation.

17. 'The Apostle now transfers what had been expressed generally, to the case of the Romans.' (Koppe.) Thus vv. 17, 18, as also vv. 19, 20, are not meant to follow up the argument, but only to impress his readers (of the Gentiles), by showing them that they are themselves examples of what he is declaring. See Stuart.

— χάρις τῷ Θεῷ.] Sub. ἔστω. The phrase is scarcely ever found in the Classical writers. It has here great force, and expresses far more than congratulating. In ὅτι ἦτε, &c. there is a difficulty (arising from the words seeming to express a sense the reverse of what the Apostle must have meant), which is not removed by supplying, as Beza and many others have done, μέν. It is better to suppose (with Grotius and Koppe), that as the participle is often put for the verb, so here, by a Hebraism [or rather popular idiom], the verb is put for the participle, which would be equivalent to a verb with καίπερ, although. The ἦτε is emphatical. Render, 'God be thanked that, though ye were [once] the servants of sin, ye have [now] on the contrary (δὲ) obeyed,' &c. A Classical author would have written, ὅτι, πρὶν μὲν ὄντες, &c.—νῦν δὲ, &c. In εἰς ὃν παρεδ. τύπον διδαχῆς there is a well-known hypallage, by the figure attraction (see Glass, Phil. Sacr. 168), as in the Virgilian 'urbem quam statuo, vestra est.' Thus it is for τῷ τύπῳ διδαχῆς εἰς ὃν τύπον παρεδόθητε. The sense is literally (as Abp. Newcome explains) 'that fashion, stamp, or mould of doctrine, unto which ye were delivered over by Jesus Christ to be impressed by it.' So Jamblichus, Vit. Pyth., p. 89, has the very expression τὸν τύπον τῆς διδασκαλίας. There seems to be a metaphor taken from founding.

18. ἐλευθερωθέντες δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμ.] i. e. 'being liberated from the bondage of;' sin being still considered as a slave-master. There is here an allusion, not (as many have supposed) to the manumission, but to the transfer of slaves (whether by purchase or otherwise) from the service of one master to that of another. The words ἐλευθ. δὲ ἀπὸ, &c. are, it should seem, meant to be suspended in construction on the preceding sentence. In fact, ἐλευθ. δὲ is put for καὶ ὅτι ἐλευθ., 'and that being freed.' We have here, indeed, a continuation of the same sentiment, for the sake of clearer illustration.

— ἐδουλώθητε τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ] for δοῦλοι ἦτε. By this the Apostle means to hint at their sacred engagement to serve God. The sense, however, of the expression is modified by the context. Obedience to God is properly not a slavery, but a service; or, at least, an ἐθελοδουλεία.

πινον λέγω διὰ τὴν ἀσθένειαν τῆς σαρκὸς ὑμῶν. Ὥσπερ γὰρ παρεστήσατε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν δοῦλα τῇ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ καὶ τῇ ἀνομίᾳ εἰς τὴν ἀνομίαν, οὕτω νῦν παραστήσατε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν 20 δοῦλα τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ εἰς ἁγιασμόν. [q] Ὅτε γὰρ δοῦλοι ἦτε q John 8. 34.
21 τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ἐλεύθεροι ἦτε τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ. Τίνα οὖν καρπὸν εἴχετε τότε, ἐφ᾽ οἷς νῦν ἐπαισχύνεσθε; τὸ γὰρ τέλος 22 ἐκείνων θάνατος. Νυνὶ δὲ, ἐλευθερωθέντες ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, δουλωθέντες δὲ τῷ Θεῷ, ἔχετε τὸν καρπὸν ὑμῶν εἰς 23 ἁγιασμόν· τὸ δὲ τέλος, ζωὴν αἰώνιον. [r] Τὰ γὰρ ὀψώνια r Supra 5. 12. Gen. 2. 17. 1 Cor. 15. 21.
τῆς ἁμαρτίας θάνατος· τὸ δὲ χάρισμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ζωὴ αἰώνιος James 1. 15. 1 Pet. 1. 3.

19. ἀνθρώπινον λέγω, &c.] By this some ancient and several modern Commentators understand the Apostle to mean, 'I use such language as men are accustomed to employ on the affairs of common life'—the figurative language common among men. A sense very agreeable to Classical usage, but here jejune, and not very suitable to the context. I prefer, with many eminent Commentators, both ancient and modern, to suppose that this form of expression was employed by way of softening the harshness of the term ἐδουλώθητε. Thus we may, as Koppe observes, suppose the Apostle to mean, that 'in so speaking of Christianity as a bondage, he spoke with reference to human weakness and frailty, which is apt not to regard the yoke as easy, or the burden as light (so Plutarch, de Educ. § 17, says, ταῦτα μὲν οὖν καλὰ καὶ συμφέροντα· ἃ δὲ μέλλω λέγειν, ἀνθρώπινα, meaning, such as human weakness may hope to attain to); q. d. (in the words of Calvin) 'I could, by a comparison of righteousness and sin, show how much more readily you ought to yield obedience to the one, than you have done to the other; but, considerate to the weakness of your flesh, I shall not enter into the comparison. Yet, while thus indulgent to you, this, however, I may reasonably require,—that at least you should not more coldly and remissly follow after righteousness, than before you gave yourselves over unto sin.' See also Hyperius.

— ὥσπερ γὰρ, &c.] Παρεστήσατε should be rendered, not 'have yielded,' but 'once yielded,' as is apparent from the words following, οὕτω νῦν παραστήσατε. Δοῦλα is here an adjective, signifying, 'serving in bondage,' as in Eurip. Hec. 137, δούλων σφαγίων οὕνεκ', and Wisd. xv. 7, τὰ τῶν καθαρῶν ἔργων δοῦλα σκεύη. Such, indeed, was the primitive use of the term; δοῦλος being, in its original use, as much an adjective as ἐλεύθερος. Ἀκαθαρσίᾳ and ἀνομίᾳ are by many recent Commentators accounted synonymous; but as ἀκαθαρσίᾳ, in the signification 'lasciviousness,' has at i. 24 been applied to these very persons, so that seems to be the sense here. Thus the word is synonymous with ἀσέλγεια and πορνεία. See Tittman, de Synon., p. 155. Compare 2 Cor. vii. 1.

From lasciviousness the Apostle now passes on to ἀνομία in general, meaning every kind of vicious and sinful conduct, as opposed to ἁγιασμός. In εἰς τὴν ἀνομίαν and εἰς τὸν ἁγιασμὸν most Commentators take the εἰς to denote accumulation, i. e. 'vice upon vice,' from one degree of it to another. Of such a use, however, no sufficient proof has been adduced. It should rather seem that εἰς here, like the Hebr. ל, denotes purpose or effect; as in Mark i. 4, and often elsewhere. Thus the sense of εἰς ἀνομ. will be, 'for the service of sin of every kind;' and that of εἰς ἁγιασμ., 'for the promotion of holiness.'

20. The connexion and scope of this verse may be laid down, with Prof. Stuart, as follows: 'As you once served sin, so now you must serve holiness. Your present relation admits of no other conclusion; for when you served sin, you deemed yourselves free from all obligation to righteousness: [so now, serving holiness, count yourselves free from all obligation to sin].'

— ἐλεύθεροι ἦτε τῇ δικ.] The Commentators have been not a little perplexed with this rare use of ἐλεύθερος, and the unprecedented syntax of Dative for Genitive. But, in fact, as Macknight saw, δικ. is not governed of ἐλεύθ., but of ἐπὶ understood; and Macknight and Wahl rightly render, 'free with respect to righteousness,' i. e. as to any dependence upon it, or obedience to it. There is, however, a yet greater irregularity in the sentence,—namely, that we have here (as occasionally elsewhere in St. Paul) an antithetical clause left to be supplied. This was seen by Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators, and afterwards by Crellius and Grotius.

21. τίνα οὖν καρπὸν, &c.] Render: 'What fruit (i. e. advantage), then, had ye at that time in respect of those things?' q. d. (as Abp. Newcome expresses it,) 'And now I may well ask you, what real solid benefit ye ever had in sin, to counteract its present consequences, one of which is shame, and its future consequence, which is everlasting death?' A most forcible appeal to their consciences, and in which the words 'ye are now ashamed' would supply matter for serious reflection. See Calvin, and especially Bp. Taylor's 19th Sermon on this text, entitled, 'The Apples of Sodom, or the fruits of sin.' Τέλος is here, as Wetstein observes, for πλήρης μισθός; of which use Loesner and Carpzov adduce several examples.

22. νυνὶ δέ.] See Note supra iii. 21. Δουλωθέντες, &c. 'engaged to the service of God.' So Apuleius, cited by Wetstein: 'Da nomen huic sanctæ militiæ;—teque jam nunc obsequio religionis nostræ dedica, et ministerii jugum subi voluntarium. Nam cum cœperis Deæ servire, senties fructum tuæ libertatis.' Εἰς ἁγιασμὸν, 'in respect to holiness, or sanctification.'

23. τὰ γὰρ ὀψώνια—αἰώνιος.] This is a resumption of what was said at ver. 21, τὸ γὰρ τέλος—θάνατος, in order to introduce another ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν. VII. Ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε, 1 ἀδελφοὶ, (γινώσκουσι γὰρ νόμον λαλῶ) ὅτι ὁ νόμος κυριεύει a 1 Cor. 7. 2, 10, 39. τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ἐφ᾽ ὅσον χρόνον ζῇ; [a] Ἡ γὰρ ὕπανδρος 2 γυνὴ τῷ ζῶντι ἀνδρὶ δέδεται νόμῳ· ἐὰν δὲ ἀποθάνῃ ὁ ἀνὴρ, b Matt. 5. 32. κατήργηται ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου τοῦ ἀνδρός. [b] Ἄρα οὖν ζῶντος 3 τοῦ ἀνδρὸς μοιχαλὶς χρηματίσει, ἐὰν γένηται ἀνδρὶ ἑτέρῳ·

circumstance, and to contrast death as the wages of sin, and the desert of a vicious course, with eternal life as the free gift of God, awarded to faith and holiness, through Jesus Christ, and not as the reward of merit. We have here a military allusion; ὀψώνια being the regular soldier's pay, and χάρισμα the occasional donative given by the emperors.

VII. The Apostle here resumes, and continues the argument advanced at iii. 31, that the Gospel method of justification does not make void the moral law; and in doing this he engrafts what he has to urge on what was said at vi. 14, 'for ye are not under the law, but under grace;' which implied the greater efficaciousness of the Gospel, for the sanctification he had just mentioned, than the Law of Moses, or any law. This he evinces in the present and subsequent chapter, showing the inefficacy of any law to sanctification, and how the grace of the Holy Spirit, under the Gospel, supplies that defect. So far from making void the Law, he proves that it is the only means of delivering men from the bondage of sin, to which they are subjected while under law, and further shows the nature and blessedness of that deliverance. The first six verses of the present chapter illustrate by a familiar image (not to be too much pressed upon) derived from the case of matrimony, (which is only an obligation till the death of one of the parties,) what was said at vi. 14, seqq.,—that we are not under the Law, but under grace; and at vv. 5 and 6 are shown the necessity and advantage of this deliverance. So, having before compared the condition of Christians (especially the Jewish Christians) to that of slaves, who have passed into the service of another master, the Apostle here compares the condition of those persons with that of a wife,—who, after the decease of her husband, may be married to another; evidently alluding to the abrogation of the Law of Moses, as being dead, and therefore no more to be observed than a dead husband is to be regarded by a surviving wife. The same applies, of course, to the law of nature.

Such, as respects the scope of the first six verses, is the general view adopted by Prof. Stuart (in an able examination of this whole portion), and, as regards the scope of the whole chapter, by Mr. Young. The latter writer, after truly remarking that the words of ch. vi. 14 contain an argument for the sanctification of Christians, evidently including this proposition,—that the Gospel is more efficacious, as a means of sanctification, than the Law,—adds, 'This proposition the Apostle pursues, in its two parts, in chapters vii. and viii. In ch. vii. ver. 7—24, he shows the utter inefficacy of the Law to sanctification. In ch. vii. ver. 25, and ch. viii. 1—11, he shows how the grace of God's Holy Spirit under the Gospel supplies that great defect of the Law.'

1. γινώσκουσι νόμον.] It has been disputed whether by νόμον is meant the Law of Moses, or law in general. The former view is adopted by most Commentators, ancient and modern,—while the latter is ably maintained by Estius, Crellius, Schoettgen, Koppe, Macknight, Wakefield, and Middleton, who explain, 'to persons who know the nature of law, divine and human.' 'The greater part (says Bp. Middleton) of St. Paul's readers probably had not extended their views to the imperfection, which must belong to every dispensation not providing an atonement: and he might have said merely that he knew τὸν νόμον, the Mosaic law. But he here addresses them with some degree of rhetorical complaisance, and takes it for granted that they had made a general application from their own particular experience, and the design of the Epistle (see Note on ii. 13) led him to speak, directly or indirectly, of the imperfection of all the possible schemes of salvation which offered not a redeemer.' These two interpretations admit, indeed, of being united; for we may suppose that the Apostle, while here and throughout this chapter, he especially adverts to the Law of Moses, holds the law of nature in a subordinate consideration.

— ὅτι ὁ νόμος κυριεύει τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ἐφ᾽ ὅσον, &c.] Many Expositors construe τοῦ ἀνθρ. with ὁ νόμος. But though this absolute use of κυριεύω is by no means unfrequent, yet to suppose it here, thus unnecessarily, is not judicious; and, as Doddridge observes, if it seems to remove one tautology, it introduces another, and a worse. Moreover, to render ἐφ᾽ ὅσον χρόνον ζῇ 'as long as he (i. e. the man) liveth,' would be contrary to the Apostle's design,—which is to prove that they had outlived their obligations to the Law. Hence we may prefer the view adopted by Origen, of the ancients, and the most eminent modern Commentators, who assign to ζῇ the sense 'is in force,' of which Koppe cites as an example Soph. Antig. 206, οὐ γάρ τι νῦν γε κἀχθὲς, ἀλλ᾽ ἀεί ποτε ζῇ ταῦτα (scil. τὰ προστάγματα) θεῶν. Here, of course, μόνον is to be understood; namely, 'so long as it is in force,' and no longer. By τοῦ ἀνθρώπου is meant, the person subject to its authority.

2. ὕπανδρος] 'one who is engaged (ὑπὸ) to obedience and fidelity to a husband.' At νόμῳ sub. ἐπί: thus it is equivalent to κατὰ νόμον. Τοῦ νόμου τοῦ ἀνδρὸς must mean the obligation laid upon the wife by the husband's right to her, which, of course, must cease at his death. At κατήργηται ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου there is, as at Gal. v. 4, an hypallage, for κατήργηται ὁ νόμος τοῦ ἀνδρὸς, which means 'the law or right over her by her husband is annulled.' For a law is said καταργεῖσθαι, when it ceases.

3. χρηματίσει] 'she will be accounted.' In ἐὰν γένηται ἀνδρὶ ἑτέρῳ we have a common phrase, to denote cohabitation, whether of ἐὰν δὲ ἀποθάνῃ ὁ ἀνὴρ, ἐλευθέρα ἐστὶν ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου, τοῦ 4 μὴ εἶναι αὐτὴν μοιχαλίδα, γενομένην ἀνδρὶ ἑτέρῳ. [c] Ὥς c Infra 8. 2. Gal. 2. 19, τε, ἀδελφοί μου, καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐθανατώθητε τῷ νόμῳ διὰ τοῦ 20. & 5. 18, 22.

σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ· εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς ἑτέρῳ, τῷ ἐκ 5 νεκρῶν ἐγερθέντι, ἵνα καρποφορήσωμεν τῷ Θεῷ. [d] Ὅτε γὰρ d Supra 6. 21.
ἦμεν ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ, τὰ παθήματα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν, τὰ διὰ τοῦ Gal. 5. 19.
νόμου, ἐνηργεῖτο ἐν τοῖς μέλεσιν ἡμῶν, εἰς τὸ καρποφορῆσαι 6 τῷ θανάτῳ· [e] νυνὶ δὲ κατηργήθημεν ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου, * ἀπο- e Supra 2. 29. & 6. 2. 2 Cor. 3. 6.

matrimony or of concubinage, occurring in Lev. xxii. 12. Deut. xxiv. 2. Judges xiv. 20, and sometimes in the later Classical writers. Τοῦ μὴ εἶναι is for ὥστε μὴ εἶναι.

4. Now follows the application of this principle to the case in question. Accordingly, for ὥστε I have ventured to edit ὥς τε; the sense being plainly, 'and so,' 'in like manner.' Examples of ὥς τε in this sense for καὶ ὡς, and that for οὕτως, and of the confusion of ὥστε and ὥς τε, may be seen in Steph. Thes. p. 10,993, Ed. Valp.

— καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐθανατώθητε τῷ νόμῳ, &c.] To remove the difficulty which here presents itself, the most eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, suppose an hypallage, by which ἐθανατώθητε τῷ νόμῳ ('ye are dead to the law') is taken as put for ὁ νόμος ἐθανατώθη ὑμῖν, 'the law has become dead to you,' meaning (as appears from the course of argument) 'ye are freed from the necessity of performing the works of the law in order to justification. 'By this mode of expression,' says Taylor, 'the prejudice of the Jew is favoured, who might have been disgusted, had the Apostle said that the Law, for which the Jews had so great a veneration, was dead; and yet the sense is the same; because the relation is dissolved, whichsoever of the parties be dead.'

— εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι, &c.] Meaning, 'so that now ye are another's,' are no longer subject to the abrogated law, but are become Christ's, who was raised from the dead to complete the work of redemption.

— ἵνα καρποφ. τῷ Θεῷ.] These words are to be referred to all the preceding ones, εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι—ἐγερθ., the sense being, 'in order that we should bring forth fruit (i. e. of holy obedience) unto God.' The term καρποφορ. is by Chrysostom, Hyperius, and Grotius, rightly supposed to be used (with reference to καρπὸν, supra vi. 22) agreeably to the foregoing similitude; the offspring of marriage being its fruits.

5. 'This verse is,' as Stuart remarks, 'the theme of discussion throughout the remainder of the chapter, with the exception of the next verse, the antithesis to this, which forms the theme of discussion at chap. viii. 1—11,' and that portion is, in a great measure, the antithesis of ver. 25. The course of thought is ably traced by Prof. Stuart, in the following paraphrase: 'I have said that you must be freed from the law and united to Christ, in order that you may bring forth fruit to God. This is true; for the law is so far from accomplishing the great end of subduing and sanctifying the hearts of sinners, that it occasions just the opposite effect; i. e. it is the occasion of their becoming more deeply involved in guilt, and of bringing them into more aggravated condemnation. It is the occasion of their bringing forth fruit unto death, and not unto God. But when we are freed from all reliance upon it as a means of subduing and sanctifying us, and with a becoming sense of our guilt and helplessness have betaken ourselves to Christ, and relied on him only as our sanctification and redemption, then we are enabled to serve God with a new spirit, and not in the old way, of only a literal and external obedience.' This view is, I find, confirmed by the authority of Hyperius, in an admirable exegesis of this whole portion.

— ἐν τῇ σαρκί.] This may mean (as some Latin Fathers, and most of the earlier modern Commentators understand) 'in the unregenerate state, under the dominion of fleshly lusts;' a sense permitted by the usus loquendi. But from the context (see ver. 16) it should seem better to interpret (with Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators, as also Grotius, Hyperius, Vostius, Hammond, Whitby, Locke, Carpzov, and almost all the recent Expositors) 'under the carnal ordinance of the Law;' the phrase being frequently put in opposition to ἐν πνεύματι εἶναι, 'to be under the Gospel, and partakers of its spiritual blessings;' comp. infra viii. 2. 8, 9. Both senses, however, may be united; the latter as an appendage to the former; the meaning being, as Abp. Newcome explains, 'When we were subject to the power and effects of carnal desires and actions, when we were unregenerate Jews and habitual offenders, our sinful passions, in that state, so wrought in us, that we brought forth fruit not to God, but to death; see ver. 14. ii. 21. 24. iii. 9. 19. In τὰ παθήματα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν we have a Hebrew phrase for τὰ πάθη τὰ ἁμαρτωλά; 'the sinful affections of the unregenerate state.' Πάθος is the usual term on this subject; as Rom. i. 26, πάθη ἀτιμίας. At τὰ διὰ τοῦ νόμου some participle, as γεγονότα, must be supplied. Διὰ τοῦ νόμου should be rendered, not 'under the law,' but 'by the law;' i. e. as occasioned by it; intimating that these passions were generated by the prohibitions of the law, which rather excited a desire for what was forbidden. See Note at ver. 8.

What is here said of the Law of Moses is true (and perhaps meant) of every law of works, which must be, in a great measure, carnal rather than spiritual.

— ἐνηργεῖτο] 'wrought.' The verb is here, as in 2 Cor. iv. 12, a deponent, though almost always elsewhere a passive. Ἐν τοῖς μέλ. 'in our bodily organs,' the seat of sensuality. See v. 22. 1 Cor. vi. 15. Col. iii. 5, and James iv. 1.

— εἰς τὸ καρποφορῆσαι, &c.] 'so as to bring forth fruit which tended unto death.'

6. νυνὶ δὲ, &c.] The connexion is: '[And θανόντες ἐν ᾧ κατειχόμεθα· ὥστε δουλεύειν ἡμᾶς ἐν καινότητι πνεύματος, καὶ οὐ παλαιότητι γράμματος.

f Supra 3. 20. Exod. 20. 17. Deut. 5. 21.
[f] Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; ὁ νόμος ἁμαρτία; Μὴ γένοιτο! ἀλλὰ 7 τὴν ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἔγνων, εἰ μὴ διὰ νόμου· τήν τε γὰρ ἐπι-θυμίαν οὐκ ᾔδειν, εἰ μὴ ὁ νόμος ἔλεγεν· Οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις· g Supra 4. 15. & 5. 20. Gal. 3. 19. 1 Cor 15. 56.
[g] Ἀφορμὴν δὲ λαβοῦσα ἡ ἁμαρτία, διὰ τῆς ἐντολῆς κατειρ- 8 such would have been the natural consequence of sin,] but now we are delivered,' &c.

6. ἀποθανόντες.] This, for the common reading ἀποθανόντος, found in very many MSS. (including Rinck's Venice ones), all the early Editions, and many of the best Versions and Fathers, together with the Greek Commentators, has been adopted by almost every Editor from Wetstein to Scholz: and with reason; since it is as much required by the context, as it is supported by MSS. The sense may be thus expressed: 'But now we are freed from the law by which we are held in bondage; inasmuch as we are become dead to it; so that we must worship God according to a new and spiritual mode, not in the old and literal manner,' i. e. by the law of Moses. The construction is: νυνὶ δὲ κατηργ. ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου, ἀποθανόντες [ἐκείνῳ scil. νόμῳ] ἐν ᾧ κατειχόμεθα, which is, by hypallage, equivalent to νυνὶ δὲ ἀποθ. τῷ νόμῳ, ἐν ᾧ κατειχ., ἐλεύθεροί ἐσμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. Instead of ἐν ᾧ a Classical writer would have said ᾧ. So Thucyd. iii. 12, δέει τὸ πλέον ἢ φιλίᾳ κατειχόμεθα. Perhaps, however, the present is a stronger idiom, and not quite of the same nature; there being, probably, a metaphor taken from fastening any one in a pair of stocks; see Note on Acts xvi. 24. By ἐν καινότ. πνεύματος is meant, 'in a new state,' namely, that of a spiritual religion [the Gospel]; not that of an old and literal, or ceremonial, one,—the law of works.

7. The Apostle now preoccupies two objections, which might be made by the legalist from the foregoing expressions; 1. On the tempting tendency or power of sin under the law. This he overrules at 7—12, by denying that what was said of the power of sin under the law, was to be understood as implying that the law was the cause of sin. He shows, on the contrary, that it only convicts men of sin, detects and prohibits it. 2. On the condemning power of sin, which is answered from ver. 12 to 25. See Note there. (Rosenmuller and Young.)

7. ὁ νόμος ἁμαρτία;] 'Is, then, the law the cause of sin?' q. d. 'Those motions of sins, which did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death, you said were by the law. Do you mean to imply by this that the law is the cause of sin?' The answer to which (as contained at vv. 7. 12) is: 'The law is by no means the cause of sin; on the contrary it detected and strictly prohibited sin; but it was made an occasion of sin by the evil propensities of our nature. These were excited and called forth by the prohibitions of the law, and first drew us into sin, and then, by sin, subjected us to death.' (Young.)

— τὴν ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἔγνων, &c.] meaning, as Stuart explains, 'Unless the law had put restraint upon sinning, I should never have known how great is my propensity to evil and sin. My desires were excited by the check put upon them by the restraints of the law. Thus my character was fully developed, and I came, through the law, to know my own sinfulness. In this way πᾶσα ἐπιθυμία (ver. 8) was wrought in me, so that I have a knowledge of sin, such as I should never have acquired in any other way.' This seems to be the connexion between vv. 7, 8.

The most enlightened Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, that the Apostle here, and up to the end of the chapter, is not speaking in his own person, or of his own case (for that would be contrary to the whole scope of his discourse, and to what is said at viii. 2); but is personating the character of another, whether the Jew or the Gentile, by a μετασχηματισμὸς (as the Rhetoricians call it) found also at 1 Cor. iv. 6. Gal. iii. 18. Professor Stenersen, indeed, objects to the admission of this principle here; and commends the remark of St. Ambrose, 'Sub suâ personâ generalem causam agit.'

— τήν τε γὰρ ἐπιθυμίαν οὐκ ᾔδειν] meaning, 'for instance, I (a Jew) had not known the sinful nature of lust' (forbidden desire); i. e. as Newcome explains, 'I had not known that evil desire was so displeasing to God as to be a breach of covenant with him, and subject to his curse, but for the tenth commandment.' Vitringa and Schoettgen, indeed, maintain (and in proof thereof adduce various citations from the Rabbis) that the wiser Jews admitted evil concupiscence to be a sin: and I have in Recens. Synop. proved this of Josephus. Grotius, too, and some other Commentators, affirm the same thing of the Gentiles,—adducing, in proof of this, several passages from ancient writers, to which may be added the two following ones, most decisive on this point. Eurip. Hippol. 317, where, among other confessions of guilt for evil concupiscence, is this: χεῖρες μὲν ἁγναί, φρὴν δ' ἔχει μίασμά τι: see also Orest. 1604. Yet even more of such instances would not invalidate the Apostle's assertion; since, as Crellius well observes, he is not speaking 'de sapientibus viris, quorum, ob summam paucitatem, ratio hac in parte non est habenda,' but of the bulk of mankind. Moreover, as Abp. Newcome observes, 'though the Gentiles knew that evil desire was sin, yet with them it was no violation of a positive law subjecting to death.'

— οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις.] The Apostle has here, as often, introduced an imperfect quotation (see infra xi. 26, 27. Hebr. xii. 27), sufficient, however, to suggest to the mind the whole of the commandment in question.

8. ἡ ἁμαρτία] meaning (as Theophylact explains), 'the propensity to sin inherent in our corrupt nature.' Or, ἁμαρτία may, as many suppose, be personified, as an enemy endeavouring to compass his death, by taking every opportunity to urge him to what the law forbids. Κατειρ-γάσατο ἐν ἐμοὶ πᾶσαν ἐπιθυμίαν· χωρὶς γὰρ νόμου ἁμαρτία 9 νεκρά. Ἐγὼ δὲ ἔζων χωρὶς νόμου ποτέ· ἐλθούσης δὲ τῆς

10 ἐντολῆς, ἡ ἁμαρτία ἀνέζησεν, ἐγὼ δὲ ἀπέθανον· [h] καὶ εὑρέθη h Lev. 18. 5. Ezek. 20. 11, 13.
11 μοι ἡ ἐντολὴ ἡ εἰς ζωὴν, αὕτη εἰς θάνατον. Ἡ γὰρ ἁμαρτία Neh. 9. 29.
ἀφορμὴν λαβοῦσα, διὰ τῆς ἐντολῆς ἐξηπάτησέ με, καὶ δι' 12 αὐτῆς ἀπέκτεινεν. [i] Ὥστε ὁ μὲν νόμος ἅγιος, καὶ ἡ ἐντολὴ i 1 Tim. 1. 8. Ps. 19. 8.
13 ἁγία καὶ δικαία καὶ ἀγαθή. [k] Τὸ οὖν ἀγαθὸν ἐμοὶ γέγονε k Supra 3. 20.

γάσατο ἐπιθυμίαν must be understood with reference to that perversity of human nature, by which, as the Poet says, 'Nitimur in vetitum semper, cupimusque negata,' and which verifies the saying of Solomon, 'Stolen water is sweet, and bread eaten furtively is pleasant.'

— χωρὶς νόμου] i. e. 'without the existence of the law,' which enjoins what is to be done, and forbids what is not to be done. Ἁμαρτία νεκρὰ, 'sin (i. e. lust) would be comparatively dead,' would languish, or would be inoperative, since without law there is no transgression.

9. ἐγὼ δὲ ἔζων—ποτέ.] In this and the two next verses the Apostle expresses the same sentiment, only further unfolded; and still sustains the character of a man who, till he knew the law, led a life comparatively innocent; but, incited to sin by the law, however salutary in itself, fell into sin, and thereby sunk into every kind of misery. Ἔζων seems (by an expression similar to that of Hor. Epist. i. 10. 8, 'vivo et regno') to have reference to the security, nay, comparative happiness, of men in such a state as is here described. So Tholuck explains it to mean, 'Vivus eram, quod non ita turbaretur conscientia mea, quum maximè ea parte morbum meum ignorarem.' —

— ἐλθούσης] 'when it was introduced.' Neut. for passive. Ἀνέζησεν, i. e. 'began to show itself in its true character as sin, thus bringing conviction home to my heart.'

— ἀπέθανον] i. e. 'I felt spiritually dead, as guilty of death.' See Theophylact, and the Note of Dr. Shuttleworth.

10. At ἡ εἰς and αὕτη εἰς participles must be supplied, by ellipsis. The simplest is that of the verb substantive accommodated to the sense. The first εἰς denotes scope or purpose; the second termination; and the sense is well expressed by Abp. Newcome thus: 'And [so] the same commandments which, if observed, would have given life, became the occasion of death by reason of human infirmity.'

11. Here we have a repetition, with some variation in words, of the sentiment at ver. 8. And the general meaning is that laid down by Abp. Newcome thus: 'For sin was armed by the law with power to make votaries, whom it subjected to death.'

— ἐξηπάτησε] 'lured and tempted me to sin;' ex. gr. insinuating that the prohibitions of the law are unreasonable, and that the thing is pleasant and profitable, and will perhaps go unpunished by subsequent repentance: in short, using such sophistry as that by which the Serpent deceived Eve. Δι' αὐτῆς scil. ἐντολῆς, i. e. 'by my non-observance of it.'

12. The purport of the verse is to aver, that after all he has said, the case still is, that the excellence and purity of the law stands unimpeached; the fault, it is shown, being not in the law, but in the man.

— ὁ μὲν νόμος ἅγιος, &c.] Ἅγιος is a term (like the Latin sanctus) properly applied to law; and signifying what justly claims our reverence and obedience, by enjoining personal holiness, or reminding of it by expressive rites. Of the terms following, δίκαιος and ἀγαθὸς, the former signifies what is just in itself, and opposed to all iniquity (and so intimating that the law is not the cause of the misery of those who violate it); ἀγαθὸς, what is calculated for good, i. e. what tends to promote the happiness of those who obey it.

13. τὸ οὖν, &c.] The Apostle now considers the condemning power of sin under the Law. The sentiment is substantially the same as at v. 7, but here an objection is supposed; q. d. 'What, then, has this good law been the occasion of death to me? how can a thing deserve the appellation of good, if it tends to one's ruin?' To the negation which follows, the Apostle subjoins what may establish that denial. The scope of the passage (as Theodoret says) is to show the cause of the above evils. But in laying down the construction, and determining the sense, the best Commentators have pursued two different courses: Beza, Schmid, Wolf, Elsner, Macknight, and Rosenmuller, together with most of the Editors from R. Stephens to Vater and Scholz, point ἡ ἁμαρτία· and repeat γέγονε θάνατος. Thus ἵνα φανῇ must be construed with κατεργαζομένη, which will be taken for κατεργάζεσθαι. So φαίνεται καλουμένη in Thucydides, and a similar idiom in the best ancient Classical writers. There is, however, not a little harshness in the repetition of γέγονε θάνατος: and, I apprehend, something frigid in φανῇ so interpreted: and how the sense assigned to the rest of the words can be extracted from them, I am quite at a loss to imagine. I see no reason to abandon the mode of interpretation almost invariably adopted by the ancient Translators and Commentators, and most modern ones, which is ably supported by Crellius, Schlichting, Turner, and Bp. Middleton. The Commentator last mentioned has shown how inconsistent the other is with the propriety of the Greek Article; and he thinks there is little doubt that our common version (which is supported by that of Wakefield) is right. At κατεργαζομένη sub. ἦν, or take it as participle for verb, Hebraicè. Thus we may render, 'Hath, then, this good become death to me? By no means. Nay, sin, that it might appear to be sin, was working death to me by what is good, that sin might by means of the commandment be [and appear to be] exceedingly sinful (i. e. heinous in its nature).' 'Just as a disorder (observes θάνατος; Μὴ γένοιτο! ἀλλὰ ἡ ἁμαρτία, ἵνα φανῇ ἁμαρτία, διὰ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ μοι κατεργαζομένη θάνατον, ἵνα γένηται καθ'

l 1 Tim. 1. 8. 1 Kings 21. 20, 25. ὑπερβολὴν ἁμαρτωλὸς ἡ ἁμαρτία διὰ τῆς ἐντολῆς. l Οἴδαμεν 14
Isa. 50. 1. 1 Mac. 1. 15. γὰρ ὅτι ὁ νόμος πνευματικός ἐστιν· ἐγὼ δὲ σαρκικός εἰμι, m Gal. 5. 17. πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν. m ὃ γὰρ κατεργάζομαι, οὐ 15 γινώσκω· οὐ γὰρ ὃ θέλω τοῦτο πράσσω, ἀλλ' ὃ μισῶ τοῦτο ποιῶ. Εἰ δὲ ὃ οὐ θέλω τοῦτο ποιῶ, σύμφημι τῷ νόμῳ ὅτι 16 καλός. νυνὶ δὲ οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ κατεργάζομαι αὐτὸ, ἀλλ' ἡ 17

Theophylact) which, when it has become worse, may be said to display, by means of the medical art, its extreme virulence, in not being removed even by that.' Thus the law is cleared of all blame, as to its being the cause of death; yet the Apostle proceeds, vv. 14—20, to show the utter inefficacy of the Law, whether of Moses or of nature, to sanctification.

14. The Apostle now proceeds to show why the Law cannot keep any one in his duty, and make him abstain from sin, but rather provokes his desire to sin; and he depicts graphicè the contest of sin and human corruption, while a man is struggling ineffectually, by his own strength, to obey the law of God; showing (to use the words of Stuart) that 'even against the voice of reason and conscience, as well as against the divine precepts, does carnal desire prevail; while men yield the moral self to the power of the carnal self, and plunge deep into ruin, with the voice of God's law thundering in their ears, and the voice of their consciences loudly remonstrating against their conduct.' Hence it is plain that the Apostle's object is to show, that to be under grace, and not under the Law, affords the only hope for the sinner.

— ἐγὼ δὲ σαρκικός.] The ancient and later modern Commentators are, with reason, agreed that the Apostle is speaking, not of himself, but of the unregenerate man; here, as before, using a μετασχηματισμός. 'The Law,' he means to say, 'enjoins what is holy and spiritual; but, through the evil propensities of their corrupt nature, men sin against it, and are consequently subjected to death by it.'

Here, instead of σαρκικὸς, many ancient MSS. and some Fathers have σάρκινος, which is edited by Griesbach, Koppe, and Knapp. But the new reading is plainly a correction of the early Critics; the Classical writers often using σάρκινος, but very rarely σαρκικὸς, though one example is adduced by Matthæi from Plutarch.

— πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμ.] A strong expression, suited to the foregoing image, and derived from the Old Test. (as 1 Kings xxi. 20, ἐπράθη ποιῆσαι τὸ πονηρὸν, 'sold himself to commit wickedness.' Is. l. 1, ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ὑμῶν ἐπράθητε), but unwarrantably weakened by those who merely explain it, 'devoted to sin.' This may be called a phrasis prægnans, compounded of two, i. e. 'sold to sin,' and 'doing its drudgery;' denoting 'one who is willingly and entirely devoted to the slavery of sin;' so meant to represent the unregenerate man as an unwilling instrument, and scarcely a free agent, labouring under the influence of the indwelling principle of sin.

15. This verse is intended to prove and illustrate what was said in the preceding one.

— οὐ γινώσκω.] Many take this to mean, 'I approve not:' a sense, indeed, sufficiently suitable; since, by disapproving what they act, contrary to the Law, they acknowledge that the fault is not in the Law, but in themselves. Yet of this signification of the word no sufficient authority has been adduced, and it is not quite agreeable to what follows. Hence it may be better (with all the ancient Translators and some moderns, as Wakefield and Vater,) to take it in the sense 'non intelligo,' σκοτοῦμαι, as Theophylact explains; it being the effect of sin and the natural corruption of the heart thus to darken the understanding. This, then, and the clause following present separate traits of the spiritual bondage of the unregenerate, the latter springing out of the former. With the latter sentiment Commentators compare several similar ones in ancient writers; of which the most apposite is a passage of Arrian, Epict. ii. 26: Πᾶν ἁμάρτημα μάχην περιέχει, ἐπεὶ γὰρ ὁ ἁμαρτάνων οὐ θέλει ἁμαρτάνειν, ἀλλὰ κατορθῶσαι· δῆλον ὅτι ὃ μὲν θέλει, οὐ ποιεῖ, καὶ ὃ μὴ θέλει, ποιεῖ: agreeably to the well-known 'Video meliora proboque, deteriora sequor.' And so Eurip. Med. 1077, μανθάνω οἷα τολμήσω κακὰ, θυμὸς δὲ κρείσσων τῶν ἐμῶν βουλευμάτων.

16. Here the Apostle adduces an argument springing immediately from the foregoing admission, and such as the understanding of every unprejudiced person will ratify; namely, that in so doing, even bad men acknowledge the excellence of the Law, though they do not obey it; notwithstanding, from the severe reproaches of conscience, they acknowledge their guilt, and have some faint purpose of obeying the Law.

— σύμφημι τῷ νόμῳ, &c.] Σύμφημι, as used of a person, properly signifies 'to say what another says,' to assent to his opinion; but when used of a thing, 'to bear testimony in its favour.'

17. νυνὶ δὲ οὐκ ἔτι, &c.] This is not the language of deprecation and excuse of blame, but is merely meant to show the extent of the evil. (Calvin.) 'From both the foregoing instances the Apostle draws the same conclusion,—that the man, thus acting in opposition to his conscience and best resolutions and endeavours, can hardly deserve the name of a free agent, but must labour under the influence of some fatal bias,—some inbred, indwelling principle of sin.' (Young.) The Apostle here, for the purpose of his argument, considers man as having two distinct natures, the spiritual and the carnal. The former he now speaks of as the real self, which he calls at v. 17, 19, and 25, ἐγὼ, v. 22, τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον, and v. 23, τὸν νόμον τοῦ νοὸς, and describes viii. 1 by κατὰ πνεῦμα: the latter is called ὁ νόμος τῆς ἁμαρτίας at v. 23, and τὸ σῶμα τοῦ θανάτου τούτου, v. 24, ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρωπος at 2 Cor. iv. 16, and ὁ παλαιὸς ἄνθρωπος at Rom. vi. 6.

18 οἰκοῦσα ἐν ἐμοὶ ἁμαρτία. [n] Οἶδα γὰρ ὅτι οὐκ οἰκεῖ ἐν ἐμοὶ, n Gen. 6. 5. & 8. 21.
τουτέστιν ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου, ἀγαθόν· τὸ γὰρ θέλειν παράκειταί μοι, τὸ δὲ κατεργάζεσθαι τὸ καλὸν οὐχ εὑρίσκω.
19 οὐ γὰρ ὃ θέλω ποιῶ ἀγαθόν· ἀλλ' ὃ οὐ θέλω κακὸν τοῦτο
20 πράσσω. Εἰ δὲ ὃ οὐ θέλω ἐγὼ, τοῦτο ποιῶ, οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ 21 κατεργάζομαι αὐτὸ, ἀλλ' ἡ οἰκοῦσα ἐν ἐμοὶ ἁμαρτία. Εὑρίσκω ἄρα τὸν νόμον, τῷ θέλοντι ἐμοὶ ποιεῖν τὸ καλὸν, ὅτι ἐμοὶ τὸ 22 κακὸν παράκειται. [o] Συνήδομαι γὰρ τῷ νόμῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ κατὰ o Psal. 1. 2. 2 Cor. 4. 16. Eph. 3. 16.
23 τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον· [p] βλέπω δὲ ἕτερον νόμον ἐν τοῖς p Gal. 5. 17. supra 6. 13, 19.
μέλεσί μου ἀντιστρατευόμενον τῷ νόμῳ τοῦ νοός μου, καὶ αἰχμαλωτίζοντά με τῷ νόμῳ τῆς ἁμαρτίας τῷ ὄντι ἐν τοῖς 24 μέλεσί μου. Ταλαίπωρος ἐγὼ ἄνθρωπος! τίς με ῥύσεται
25 ἐκ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ θανάτου τούτου; [q] Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ q 1 Cor. 15. 57.

Eph. iv. 22. Col. iii. 9. Raphelius illustrates this from a passage of Xen. Cyr. i. 21, where Araspus complains of two souls contending within him. (Whitby and Macknight.) Socrates, too, (as we learn from Xenophon and Philo) used to say, δύο ἔχω ψυχὰς, &c.

18. παράκειταί μοι] 'is at hand,' 'is attainable.' So 2 Cor. viii. 12, ἡ προθυμία πρόκειται. Οὐχ εὑρίσκω, literally, 'I find not the means or ability.'

19. οὐ γὰρ ὃ θέλω—πράσσω.] A repetition, only more strongly worded, of the sentiment at v. 15. See Thucyd. iii. 45.

20. This, too, is a repetition, with some alteration, for greater force, of what was said at v. 17.

21. εὑρίσκω ἄρα—παράκειται.] Here there is somewhat of difficulty in determining the construction, and, as thereon depending, the sense. Many eminent Commentators lay down the following construction: Εὑρίσκω [κατὰ] (per, by) τὸν νόμον, ὅτι ἐμοὶ τῷ θέλοντι ποιεῖν τὸ καλὸν, ἐμοὶ τὸ κακὸν παράκειται. By τὸν νόμον they understand the Law of Moses. But this involves a very harsh ellipsis; and the Mosaic law has here nothing to do with the argument: and to construe (with Knapp and Tholuck) ἐμοὶ τῷ θέλοντι ποιεῖν τὸν νόμον [scil. ποιεῖν] τὸ καλὸν, ἐμοὶ τὸ κακὸν παράκειται, is doing such great violence to the construction, that the sense thus extorted cannot be depended on. Hence it is better, with others, to suppose τὸν put for τοῦτον, and to take νόμον in the sense of norma, dictamen, 'a principle of action,' and of our constitution, called 'the law in our members' at v. 25. Thus the construction will be this: Εὑρίσκω ἄρα τὸν νόμον, ὅτι ἐμοὶ τῷ θέλοντι ποιεῖν τὸ καλὸν, τὸ κακὸν παράκειται ἐμοί; q. d. 'I experience this to be the principle of my nature,—that when I would do good, evil is at hand, and ready to beset me, bringing me into captivity to the law in my members.' The repetition of ἐμοὶ is not pleonastic, but makes τῷ θέλοντι more pointed. It is not, however, necessary to take τὸν for τοῦτον, since the Article in its anticipative force will here suffice; meaning the law or principle about to be described as impelling the man to evil, when he is endeavouring to practise good. There is yet one difficulty remaining, namely, how to account for the Article τῷ. Now, according to the sense above expressed, it would seem to be useless: but as the Article, especially when employed with a participle, is perhaps never such, we are rather warranted in supposing that the sense has been imperfectly developed, and, fully expressed, would be, 'to me who am desirous to do good.' This is a stronger sense than the other, and more direct and suitable to the Apostle's argument; by which the most that can be asked is granted in argument, in order that the refutation may be complete and decisive.

22, 23. These verses illustrate the preceding sentiment. Συνήδομαι is an expression similar to σύμφημι τῷ νόμῳ ὅτι καλὸς sc. ἐστι at ver. 16, but much stronger. Besides, as Grotius remarks, 'to approve is the office of the understanding; to delight in, that of the heart.' By τῷ νόμῳ τ. Θ. is meant, any Divine law, or rule of life, as opposed to the law or principle just mentioned. On τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρ., see Note supra ver. 17. The expression occurs in Plato and Philo (indeed it had before been used by Pythagoras), and perhaps Philo borrowed it not so much from Plato, as from the theology of his own countrymen; vestiges of which are found in Josephus and the Rabbinical writers.

23. ἕτερον νόμον] meaning, 'another principle of action, or impulse;' sometimes called the νόμος ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ, opposed to which is the νόμος τοῦ νοὸς further on, and νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος, at viii. 2. Ἐν τοῖς μέλεσι alludes to sensuality as seated in the various organs of the body. In ἀντίστρατ. and αἰχμ. we have metaphors derived from military affairs; and the two terms well designate the conflict between reason and passion. So Aristæn. Ep. ii. 1, cited by Schleusner, Lex. ἔρως ἀντιστρατεύειν τοῖς ὑπερηφανοῦσι φιλεῖ.

24. ταλαίπωρος ἐγὼ, &c.] Claudit disputationem exclamatione vehementiæ plenâ; in quam erumpit permotus consideratione tum magnitudinis talium certaminum, tum humanæ imbecillitatis. Vox est anhelantis, ac propè fatiscentis, quia non satis præsentem opem videat. Ideo et τίς με ῥύσεται posuit, quo exprimeret ad hanc liberationem opus esse non vulgari Dei potentiâ. (Hyperius and Calvin.)

— ἐκ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ θανάτου τ.] Here I would, with the Greek Commentators and many διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν!—Ἄρα οὖν αὐτὸς ἐγὼ τῷ μὲν νοῒ δουλεύω νόμῳ Θεοῦ, τῇ δὲ σαρκὶ νόμῳ ἁμαρτίας.

a Gal. 5. 16 25. VIII. [a] ΟΥΔΕΝ ἄρα νῦν κατάκριμα τοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ 1 eminent moderns, take τοῦ θανάτου for θανατικοῦ, or θανατηφόρου, 'which subjects us to this death,' this deadly evil; namely, this carnality and bondage to corruption, which leads to death temporal and spiritual. So infra viii. 21, the Apostle speaks of the being freed from the bondage of corruption, to be hereafter restored to the glorious liberty of the children of God. And so the Essenes regarded the body as the prison of the soul, from which at death it was delivered, οἷα δὴ ἐκ μακρᾶς δουλείας ἀπηλλαγμένη. See Joseph. Bell. ii. 8. 1.
Ἰησοῦ μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσιν, [ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα.]

25. εὐχαριστῶ, &c.] A brief mode of expression, which would have been more plainly expressed thus: ὁ Θεός, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, &c., ᾧ εὐχαριστῶ. There is, however, more of energy in the words as they thus stand; brevity of this kind being closely connected with pathos and deep feeling. The present clause is evidently from the Apostle in his own person. So Professor Stenersen well remarks: 'Ob pietatem, atque grati erga Christum animi sensum, non potuit Apostolus non statim adjicere, jam datam sibi hanc liberationem, seque in verbis proxime antecedentibus imaginem tantummodo ejus hominis assumsisse, qui salutem, per Christum datam, non cognoscat.' It is, indeed, a parenthetical exclamation, or pious ejaculation of deep thankfulness (similar to another elsewhere, 1 Cor. xv. 57, τῷ δὲ Θεῷ χάρις τῷ διδόντι ἡμῖν τὸ νῖκος διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ), suggested partly by sympathy for the wretched person just described, but chiefly by that deeply thankful remembrance of his own deliverance from sin and Satan; q. d. 'Yea, I do thank God that I (and every person so circumstanced) am delivered,' &c. In which there is, as Calvin and Hyperius remark, a 'brevis epilogus, vel repetitio sententiæ principalis quæ in conclusione habebatur.'

In the inference at the next clause, by the use of αὐτὸς ἐγὼ the Apostle intimates a return to the μετασχηματισμὸς, or speaking in the person of another, namely, of human nature.

In the latter clause of ver. 25, we have a resumption of what the Apostle had been saying about the frailty and corruption of human nature, and, in fact, a summary of what was said more at large supra vv. 17—25. Finally, the grand conclusion (as observes Professor Stuart) which the Apostle intends to draw from all this is,—that we must be 'under grace,' in order to subdue our sinful passions and desires; in other words, that Christ must be our Sanctification as well as our Justification.

VIII. Having shown that all men—whether under the law of Moses, or of nature—so far from being justified before God, are convicted as sinners; and having thus evinced the inefficacy of the Law to sanctification, from the want of that aid from above which can alone enable us to overcome the inherent corruption of nature; finally, having at ver. 25 pointed to the remedy provided in the Gospel of Christ, the Apostle now proceeds to develope and enforce the argument propounded at vii. 14 for Christian sanctification (founded on the superior efficaciousness of the means of grace afforded by the Gospel), and describes the nature and blessedness of this Gospel deliverance, by contrast with the misery of those who sought to justify themselves by their own righteousness, described in the latter part of the foregoing chapter. (Young.) In the preceding chapter (vv. 7. 25), the Apostle has illustrated and enforced the proposition made in vii. 5, viz., that while in a carnal state, our sinful passions are not only exercised, but they are even rendered more active, by reason of the restraints which the Divine law puts upon them; and consequently, that they bring forth fruit unto death. The present chapter exhibits the reverse of all this; namely, the nature and blessedness of the deliverance by the Gospel. It is, in fact, a commentary on vii. 6, or at least an enlargement and illustration of the sentiment there exhibited. As at ver. 6 there is the antithesis of ver. 5, so here, viii. 1. 11, is the antithesis of viii. 7. 25; see Stuart.

1. νῦν.] Stuart would join this with ἄρα, rendering, Now then, i. e. now agreeably to this. But whether it be allowable thus to join νῦν with ἄρα (as if forming together a formula of inference) I doubt. Certainly I am not aware of any instance of the kind either in the Scriptural or Classical writers. Nay, νῦν itself has never any illative force; while both in the Scriptural and Classical writers it not unfrequently signifies (by an ellipsis) 'as things now are,' which is the sense here; q. d. 'now that they are delivered by the grace of God, through Christ.' There is a reference to the salvation by grace implied in the first clause of the verse preceding. The inference in ἄρα may, with Stuart, be referred to vii. 4. 6. Τοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. The best Commentators suppose that there is an ellipsis of οὖσι; and that εἶναι ἐν Χριστῷ is a periphrasis, signifying, 'to become Christians by baptism,' being thus united with Christ. And they refer to 1 John ii. 5. iii. 6. v. 20. The phraseology, however, of one writer is no rule for that of another, and those passages are not quite to the purpose. Indeed, the ellipsis will be unnecessary, if μὴ περιπατοῦσιν be closely connected with τοῖς ἐν Χ. Ἰ., and the τοῖς be supposed to belong to περιπατοῦσιν. This, too, is required by the sense; for μὴ περιπατ. signifies, 'to those walking,' i. e. if they do but walk; whereas τοῖς περιπ., as at ver. 4, would be, 'to those who walk.' Here the hypothetical, not the declarative, sense is required.

— μὴ κατὰ σάρκα—πνεῦμα.] The whole clause is rejected by Mill, Semler, and most Critics, and is cancelled by Griesb., Koppe, Knapp, and others; but only on the authority of seven ancient MSS., three of the worst Versions, and some Fathers; and consequently without suffiἠλευθέρωσέ με ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου τῆς ἁμαρτίας καὶ τοῦ θανά- John 8. 36. Gal. 5. 1.

2 [b] ὁ γὰρ νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος τῆς ζωῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ b Supra 6. 18, 22.
3 του. [c] Τὸ γὰρ ἀδύνατον τοῦ νόμου, ἐν ᾧ ἠσθένει διὰ τῆς 1 Cor. 15. 45. c 2 Cor. 5. 21.
σαρκὸς, ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ υἱὸν πέμψας ἐν ὁμοιώματι σαρκὸς Eph. 2. 14, 15. Gal. 3. 13.
ἁμαρτίας, καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, κατέκρινε τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ἐν τῇ Heb. 7. 18, 19.
4 σαρκί· ἵνα τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ νόμου πληρωθῇ ἐν ἡμῖν τοῖς
5 μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα. [d] Οἱ γὰρ d 1 Cor. 2. 14.
κατὰ σάρκα ὄντες τὰ τῆς σαρκὸς φρονοῦσιν· οἱ δὲ κατὰ

cient reason. Indeed, the words cannot well be dispensed with, for they seem to have reference to both what was said in the last verse of the preceding chapter, and in the 2nd verse of the present. Besides, the sense seems to require some limitation. These arguments, however, almost entirely apply to the words μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπ. The rest are probably (as Bengel pointed out) an addition from ver. 4; since for the evidence in proof of the falsity of them, there is all that is alleged against the whole clause, with the addition of two of the most ancient MSS., A. and D., countenanced by Cod. G., the Syr., Vulg., and Armenian Versions, together with Chrysost. and several others of the Fathers. The reason for the addition is quite obvious; whereas for the omission none can be imagined.

2. ὁ γὰρ νόμος—θανάτου.] Probatio est superioris sententiæ. (Calvin.) The νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος and the νόμος τῆς ἁμαρτίας have reference to the two principles of action mentioned in the preceding chapter, by which the carnally-minded and the spiritually-minded are respectively led. The former is so called, as being implanted by the Spirit, the Giver of life. With respect to ζωῆς, the best Commentators take it for ζωοποιοῦντος, abstract for concrete. But it would rather seem that the force of the Genitive in ζωῆς (life and happiness), and θανάτου (death and misery), denotes tendency. The assertion contained in this verse is confirmed in vv. 3. 9, seq.

3. τὸ γὰρ ἀδύνατον, &c.] This is confirmative and explanatory of what was said at ver. 2, by a comparison of the power of Christ with the requirements of the Law: '[We are thus made free;] for what the law,' &c. The construction is irregular, but not to be adjusted by taking τὸ ἀδύν., with some, as a Nominative or Accusative absolute. The ancient and early modern Interpreters rightly regard it as an anacoluthon, and supply ἐποίησε from the subject matter. The Genitive in νόμου has the force of a Dative, 'what it was impossible for the law to do.' By the law is meant chiefly the law of Moses; but also any law of works.

— ἠσθένει.] Meaning, 'was too weak to accomplish the desired end;' an idiom found in the Classical as well as the Scriptural writers. So Thucydides, vi. 9. 3, καὶ γὰρ πρὸς τοὺς τρόπους τοὺς ὑμετέρους ἀσθενὴς ἂν μου ὁ λόγος εἴη. At ἐν ὁμοιώματι sub. γενόμενον, which is expressed at Phil. ii. 7. Σαρκὸς ἁμ. is for σαρκὸς ἁμαρτωλῆς, the full sense being, 'in a body like that of man's,' and only differing from it in being without sin. This is, with reason, accounted as an indirect proof of the two-fold nature of our Lord. Περὶ ἁμ. may be explained, with Koppe, 'for the expiation of sin,' i. e. 'as a sacrifice for sin.' There is an ellipsis of προσφορὰ, sin-offering, which is expressed at Heb. x. 18, προσφορὰ περὶ ἁμαρτίας.

— κατέκρινε τὴν ἁμ. ἐν τῇ σαρκί.] On the sense here the Commentators are not agreed. Many explain it, 'punished sin in the flesh,' meaning, the body of Christ; an interpretation somewhat confirmed by what precedes, but involving much harshness. But it is better, with the ancient and several eminent modern Commentators (as Grotius, Bishop Bull, and Schoettgen), to interpret κατέκρινε 'put it down (as a Classical writer would have said, κατεκήρυσσε), destroyed, suffered it not to reign over us.' A sense of κατακρίνω rare, but found in 2 Pet. ii. 6, πόλεις—κατέκρινε. This interpretation is, as Mr. Young shows, confirmed by the manifest relation which κατέκρινε in ver. 3 has to κατάκριμα in ver. 1. 'The condemnation (says he) is taken off from the sinner, and laid upon Sin; that Person, who was said vii. 13 to be exceeding sinful; and who, at vii. 17, is represented as the real author of the sinner's evil deeds. Now (continues he), as death is properly and intimately connected with judicial condemnation (see vv. 12. 16, 17), Sin, which, as a Person, is condemned in the flesh, is rightly interpreted to be the same with sin killed in the flesh, or the reigning power of sin in the members destroyed.' So, too, the passage was taken by Calvin and Hyp.; the former of whom remarks that the Apostle adds, 'ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ, quo certior nostra fiducia, dum videmus peccatum et regnum peccati in ipsâ naturâ nostrâ fuisse devictum et abolitum; sic enim sequitur, naturam nostram verè fieri participem ejus victoriæ.' The Apostle had probably in mind Isaiah liii. 4, seqq.

4. τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ νόμου.] Not meaning (as some have explained), 'the reward promised to the righteous;' a sense quite unauthorized, and which would compel us to take πληρωθῇ for συμβαίνῃ; but rather (as most Expositors are agreed) the moral obedience required by the law. Ἵνα πληρωθῇ, 'that it might be fulfilled,' completed. The Apostle, as Scott observes, is proving that deliverance from the law as a covenant was necessary, in order to our obeying it as a rule.

5. οἱ γὰρ κατὰ σάρκα—φρονοῦσιν.] It has been disputed whether the γὰρ be causal, or illustrative. According to the former view, as Stenersen observes, we have here explained the cause why this applies only to those who live κατὰ πνεῦμα. Both, however, may be admitted. And the sentiment would seem to be, as Hyperius says, illustrative,—by assigning a reason why the benefit of Christianity does not show its efficacy except in those who walk after the Spirit; a e Supra 6. 21. Gal. 6. 8. πνεῦμα τὰ τοῦ πνεύματος. [e] τὸ γὰρ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς 6 θάνατος· τὸ δὲ φρόνημα τοῦ πνεύματος ζωὴ καὶ εἰρήνη.

διότι τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς ἔχθρα εἰς Θεόν· τῷ γὰρ νόμῳ 7
f 1 Cor. 2. 14. τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐχ ὑποτάσσεται· οὐδὲ γὰρ δύναται. [f] Οἱ δὲ ἐν 8 g 1 Cor. 3. 16. Gal. 4. 6. Phil. 1. 19. σαρκὶ ὄντες, Θεῷ ἀρέσαι οὐ δύνανται. [g] Ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ ἐστὲ 9 ἐν σαρκὶ, ἀλλ' ἐν πνεύματι, εἴπερ Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ οἰκεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν. εἰ δέ τις πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ οὐκ ἔχει, οὗτος οὐκ ἔστιν
h 1 Cor. 15. 45. αὐτοῦ. [h] εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, τὸ μὲν σῶμα νεκρὸν δι' 10 reason derived from the contrary actions and aims of the flesh and of the Spirit.

Φρονεῖν τά τινος (supply πράγματα) is a phrase occurring in the best writers, but only in the sense, 'to take part with a person,' not, as here, to care for, set one's affections on a thing (except in one example which I have met with in Aristotle, Eth. x. 7, ἀνθρώπινα φρονεῖν): not, as here and elsewhere in the New Test., transferred from the intellect to the affections, the notions of men being swayed by the affections.

6. This verse is co-ordinate with ver. 5, and is, like it, an illustration of ver. 4. The connexion being: 'The precepts of the Law are obeyed by those who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit: but carnal men will not give heed to spiritual things, and their pursuits lead to death. While the spiritual mind, i. e. a mind conformed to the dictates of the Spirit, stands connected with life and peace; or life and peace (i. e. eternal happiness) are the consequence or fruits of it.' (Stuart.) Crellius regards this verse as containing the major proposition of the Apostle's argumentation just before; q. d. 'Those who are after the flesh, they savour the things of the flesh. But to savour the things of the flesh is death. Therefore those who are after the flesh are subject to death, and cannot attain justification.'

Here τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς is equivalent to τὸ φρονεῖν τὰ τῆς σαρκὸς just before; meaning, the being devoted to the flesh. By σάρξ is here, as often in St. Paul, meant, not the animal propensities only, but the carnal nature generally, the seat of carnal appetites and affections, whether physical or moral, the corrupt nature derived from Adam. See more in Scott, and compare a similar passage of Gal. v. 19. Θάνατος and ζωὴ are used, by metonymy, for what causes them.

7. διότι] 'quippe,' 'since,' assigning the ground or reason why what is asserted at ver. 6 is so. The reason of the enmity is next subjoined, where δύναται (scil. ὑποτάσσεσθαι) is, according to the opinion of the best Commentators, to be taken (as often) so as not to exclude man's free-will, but as merely involving a moral impossibility. This, however, would seem to be no proper place for debating the question as to the freedom of the human will; and δύναται may here be taken in its strict sense; what is here meant being, that 'the carnal nature just spoken of being repugnant to the will of God, its very nature permits not that it should be subject to the will of God.' 'For how (says Austin) can snow be warmed? since when it is melted and becomes warm, it is no longer snow.' Even so is it with the carnal mind.

8. δὲ] for οὖν, 'now then,' or, 'so then.' This being a conclusion from the argument at vv. 4. 7. q. d. 'They cannot please God (namely, while they continue such), any more than rebellious subjects can please their prince.' It is plain that by ἐν σαρκὶ εἶναι is meant, 'to be under the influence of the above carnal principle.'

9. Here the opposite character is introduced, by way of contrast. Or, as Calvin and Hyperius point out, the general sentiment is accommodated to the persons addressed, per hypothesin; what has been said being transferred to them; and the whole being made subservient to the purpose of exhortation. Accordingly εἴπερ cannot have the sense assigned to it by some, siquidem; but must rather mean si modo. Of the expressions following, πνεῦμα Θεοῦ, πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ, and Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, the sense has been much disputed. But they are best considered by Bp. Middleton as simple Hebraisms, in which the Genitive of substantive is put for the cognate adjective, and πνεῦμα signifies temper of mind, or disposition, as at vv. 15, 16, and Luke ix. 55. Thus the sense is, 'a godly spirit.' This interpretation (he adds) exactly suits the context; q. d. 'They who are carnal cannot please God; ye, however, are not carnal, but spiritual, if, indeed, a godly spirit dwell in you; but if any one have not a Christian spirit, then is he not Christ's. If, however, Christ be in you, your body, it is true, shall die in consequence of the original transgression of Adam, but your soul shall live through the righteousness of the Redeemer.'

10. εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, τὸ μὲν σῶμα, &c.] These words have been variously interpreted, and are capable of several not unsuitable senses. In order to determine which ought to be preferred, it is necessary to fix the sense of the expression νεκρὸν, which is by some explained of physical death; by others, of spiritual death. The usus loquendi permits, and the context admits, of either. If the former be adopted, the sense will be, 'The body, indeed, is subjected to death because of sin (see 1 Cor. xv. 50); yet the spiritual [nature] is alive because of righteousness or justification:' a view supported by the next verse, where it is expressed that even the body itself will be made to live at the resurrection, being raised up and become like Christ's glorious body. To take πνεῦμα, as some do, of the Holy Spirit, is forbidden by the antithesis. Thus νεκρὸν is for θνητὸν, as in Theodotion's Version of Isaiah xxxi. 14, and Arrian, Epict. l. iii. 10, τὸ σωμάτιον τὸ οὐκ ἐμὸν, τὸ φύσει νεκρόν. If, however, νεκρὸν be taken to mean 'spiritually dead,' i. e. in trespasses and sins, destitute of spiritual life, in a state of condemnation, the meaning will be, as Stuart explains: 'If the spirit of Christ dwell in you, then, although your bodies (i. e. you) are spiritually dead, i. e. are still the seat of divers carnal affections and lusts

11 ἁμαρτίαν, τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ζωὴ διὰ δικαιοσύνην. [i] Εἰ δὲ τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ ἐγείραντος Ἰησοῦν ἐκ νεκρῶν οἰκεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν, ὁ ἐγείρας τὸν Χριστὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν ζωοποιήσει καὶ τὰ θνητὰ σώματα ὑμῶν διὰ τὸ ἐνοικοῦν αὐτοῦ ‡ Πνεῦμα ἐν ὑμῖν.
12 [k] Ἄρα οὖν, ἀδελφοὶ, ὀφειλέται ἐσμὲν οὐ τῇ σαρκὶ, τοῦ 13 κατὰ σάρκα ζῇν. [l] Εἰ γὰρ κατὰ σάρκα ζῆτε, μέλλετε ἀποθνήσκειν· εἰ δὲ Πνεύματι τὰς πράξεις τοῦ σώματος θανα-14 τοῦτε, ζήσεσθε. [m] ὅσοι γὰρ Πνεύματι Θεοῦ ἄγονται, οὗτοί 15 εἰσιν υἱοὶ Θεοῦ. [n] Οὐ γὰρ ἐλάβετε πνεῦμα δουλείας πάλιν εἰς φόβον, ἀλλ' ἐλάβετε πνεῦμα υἱοθεσίας, ἐν ᾧ κράζομεν·

i Acts 2. 24. supra 6. 4, 5. 1 Cor. 6. 14. 2 Cor. 4. 14. Eph. 2. 5. Col. 2. 13.
k Supra 6. 7, 18.
l Gal. 6. 8. Col. 3. 5, 6.
m Gal. 5. 18.
n 2 Tim. 1 7. Gal. 3. 26. & 4. 5, 6.

(ver. 10), yet you shall spiritually live; for the Spirit of Him who raised up Jesus from the dead will subdue these forbidden affections and desires, and gradually make you entirely conformed to his will.' Yet this sense cannot, I apprehend, be elicited without straining the words. And accordingly the former interpretation, as being the more simple and natural, is entitled to the preference.

Ver. 11 must be explained conformably to ver. 9; and the general sense is well expressed by Stenersen as follows: 'Quid? quod ipsum quoque corpus nostrum ob vitæ spiritum, qui ei inest, olim a Deo ad vitam æternam resuscitabitur.' In τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ ἐγείραντος Ἰησοῦν ἐκ νεκρῶν, we have, as he says, a periphrasis (for greater clearness and certainty of hope) instead of τὸ Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ. The same applies to ὁ ἐγείρας, &c., just after.

— διὰ τὸ ἐνοικοῦν αὐτοῦ Πνεῦμα, &c.] On these words it is well remarked by Stenersen: 'nam quicquid divinum est, mori nequit, et quidquid igitur cum divino spiritu junctum est, ut unum cum eo efficiat, etiam morti ereptum est.'

Instead of τὸ ἐνοικοῦν αὐτοῦ Πνεῦμα, the Ed. Princ., the textus receptus, and several MSS. and Fathers, have τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος αὐτοῦ Πνεύματος, which is adopted by Vater. The other reading, however, is, with reason, preferred by Griesbach, Knapp, Matthæi, Tittman, and Scholz, as being the more difficult one, and, from the uncommonness of the syntax, more likely to be altered by the early critics.

12—17. Here we have drawn the inference from the foregoing reasoning; which introduces an earnest exhortation to live suitably to the above views of Christian obligation, and a representation of the happy consequences resulting from being spiritually united to Christ.

12. ἄρα οὖν, &c.] These particles have here a conclusive force, 'So then;' introducing an inference from the reasoning which occurs in the two foregoing chapters, and up to ver. 11 of the present; pointing out (as Young observes) the infinite obligation we Christians are under to a life of holiness and purity; since no less depends on the fulfilment, or non-fulfilment, of that condition, than eternal life, or eternal death.' Ὀφειλέτης εἶναι often signifies, 'to be bound to perform service for any one;' see Note on Rom. i. 8. Here it has the not unfrequent sense, 'to be under a strong obligation.'

13. Here (as Hyperius observes) we have an argument for persuasion drawn from the different effects of two different courses of action; conveying the idea of punishment on the one hand, or reward on the other, and consequently involving a threatening.

— Πνεύματι.] Meaning, the influence of the Holy Spirit, called in the next verse the Spirit of God, as sent by him. Τὰς πράξεις is put, by metonymy, for παθήματα, or τὰς ἐπιθυμίας, affections or lusts, which produce deeds; see Gal. v. 24. Thus, to 'mortify the deeds of the body,' is to 'crucify the old man with his lusts,' to forego those actions to which our carnal lusts incite us. Of course ἀποθνήσκειν and ζῇν are used to denote respectively the rewards and the punishments of a future state.

14. ὅσοι γὰρ, &c.] 'In this (observes Koppe) lies the force of the Apostle's proof, that they shall live.' Namely (as Stuart explains), 'that as, being led by the Spirit of God, they show that they are children of God, and consequently will have a portion of the heavenly inheritance.' The γὰρ, however, may only be illustrative, (for autem,) and the passage be meant to show the reward of this mortifying the lusts of the flesh; intimating (as Mr. Young explains) that 'they may take to themselves the confirming testimony of the Holy Spirit himself. The sense of God's Fatherly love is shed abroad in their hearts; they are delivered from slavish fear, and are enabled to address God with filial confidence, as a reconciled Father.' Ἄγεσθαι is often used of moral impulse; yet this does not imply compulsion, but rather supposes that we have the power to resist the Holy Spirit.

15. οὐ γὰρ ἐλάβετε πν. δουλ., &c.] This is confirmatory of what was said of the Spiritual adoption; and pointing out its nature, in order to evince to Jews its high superiority over that of the Mosaic Law. The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted: q. d. '[that ye are sons of God is clear from your disposition,] for ye have not received, ye do not bear,' &c. The ancient and some modern Commentators have wandered from the true sense by interpreting πνεῦμα the Holy Spirit; whereas, as the best Commentators are agreed, it signifies a spirit, or disposition. Δουλείας, for δουλικὸν, by an idiom common to all languages; the expression having reference to that servile spirit, which pervaded the whole of the Mosaic Law, which dealt in threatening and punishments, and required continual expiations of sin, partly by severe penance; consequently engendering in those subject to it the disposition of slaves, who abstain from offences not through love of their master, but 'metu crucis et pendentis habenæ.' Εἰς φόβον, 'so as to produce fear.' Πάλιν, i. e. under a new Dispensation or Reli-

Ἀββᾶ, ὁ Πατήρ! [o] Αὐτὸ τὸ Πνεῦμα συμμαρτυρεῖ τῷ 16
πνεύματι ἡμῶν, ὅτι ἐσμὲν τέκνα Θεοῦ. [p] Εἰ δὲ τέκνα, καὶ 17 κληρονόμοι· κληρονόμοι μὲν Θεοῦ, συγκληρονόμοι δὲ Χριστοῦ· εἴπερ συμπάσχομεν, ἵνα καὶ συνδοξασθῶμεν. [q] Λογί- 18
ζομαι γὰρ ὅτι οὐκ ἄξια τὰ παθήματα τοῦ νῦν καιροῦ πρὸς τὴν μέλλουσαν δόξαν ἀποκαλυφθῆναι εἰς ἡμᾶς. [r] Ἡ γὰρ ἀπο- 19 καραδοκία τῆς κτίσεως τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν τῶν υἱῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ

o 2 Cor. 1. 22. & 5. 5. Eph. 1. 13. & 4. 30. p Gal. 4. 7. 2 Tim 2. 11, 12. q 2 Cor. 4. 17. 1 Pet. 1. 6.
r Acts 3. 21. 2 Pet. 3. 13. Is. 65. 17.

gion, as in the former one. Υἱοθεσία should here be rendered, not 'adoption,' but 'sonship.' Κράζομεν, 'we cry out [unto God].' The first person is used, to accommodate what is said to every Christian of all countries and ages. On Ἀββᾶ see Note on Mark xiv. 36. The ὁ Πατὴρ is thought by some to be Nominative for Vocative, as ὁ Θεὸς in Luke xviii. 13; by others, to be a mere explanation of the Ἀββᾶ; which is little probable. It is better to suppose (with Tolet. and Doddridge) that the Apostle intended, by this union of Hebrew and Greek terms of invocation, to represent the adoption as common to both. And, indeed, from the other passage in which this form occurs, it would seem that Abba, Pater! was then the form by which the Gentiles also commenced their prayers (as the Jews simply with Abba); and perhaps formed the first words of the prayer pronounced by proselytes after having received baptism.

16. αὐτὸ τὸ Πνεῦμα.] Crellius, Grotius, and many of the recent Commentators, take this to mean 'the very spirit' (i. e. the filial feeling) we have received from God by the Gospel. But there is no reason to abandon the ancient and common interpretation, 'the Holy Spirit himself.' As to τῷ πνεύμ. ἡμῶν, it must denote, as Bp. Middleton says, the spirit or mind of man, the internal conviction of the mind and conscience. The meaning will then be: 'The Holy Spirit, by his sanctifying influences on our heart, confirms the testimony of our mind, that we are children of God.' Such too, I find, is the view of the sense adopted by Dr. Gloucester Ridley (on the Holy Spirit): whom see in Mant and D'Oyly.

17. εἰ δὲ τέκνα, καὶ κληρονόμοι.] We have here an inference drawn (by what Calvin calls an argument ab annexis vel consequentibus) from the foregoing premises, and consisting of several members rising by climax; q. d. 'But if sons of God here, then undoubtedly heirs hereafter.' 'For (as observes Taylor) the relation of children implies a portion and inheritance; and being the children of God, we may expect an inheritance suitable to the ability and goodness of such a Father, consequently one of glory and immortality.' 'Thus, then, (as observes Mr. Young,) the Apostle has attained the perfection of his argument, and shown that the Gospel of Christ is indeed, what he undertook to prove it, 'the power of God unto salvation.' For the condition of entering into eternal life, and receiving the promises, being a sanctification of soul and body, according to the heavenly doctrine of our Lord Jesus; and the means of fulfilling this condition being ministered unto us abundantly under the Gospel in the gifts of the Holy Spirit, it is manifest that all Christians, if it be not their own fault, 'may have their fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life.'

Κληρ. is used to intimate that the possession is as certain, fixed, and unalienable, as heritable property was among the Jews.

— εἴπερ συμπ., &c.] Many ancient and modern Commentators take the εἴπερ to mean siquidem; but the common interpretation si modo, 'if, indeed, we be ready to suffer with him,' i. e. as he suffered, is far more agreeable to the context and the purpose of the words. Taylor remarks on the address with which the Apostle thus introduces the mention of suffering, 'having reserved it until he had raised their thoughts to the highest object of felicity, the happiness and glory of a joint inheritance with the ever-blessed Son of God. Now this would greatly qualify the transitory afflictions of this world, and dispose them to attend to the other arguments which he had to offer.' Of these the one here principally intimated is, as Crellius observes, that 'it was but just that they who wish to be partakers with Christ in his glory, should be also partakers of his sufferings.'

18. λογίζομαι γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ has reference to the συμπάσχ. just before; q. d. '[Nor scruple at the sacrifice;] for sure I am, the reward shall infinitely exceed the toil.' See Calvin. Λογίζομαι. Not meaning, as some interpret, 'I form this conclusion.' The expression stands for οἴομαι, except that it has a stronger sense. Ἄξια, for ἀντάξια. Bulkley aptly compares a similar sentiment of Plato, de Repub., p. 336, that neither the happiness of good men, nor the sufferings of the wicked, are to be compared with that which awaits them both in another state. Ταῦτα —οὐδέν ἐστι πλήθει οὐδὲ μεγέθει πρὸς ἐκεῖνα, ἃ τελευτήσαντα ἑκάτερον περιμένει.

19—23. ἡ γὰρ ἀποκαραδ. τῆς κτίσεως—ἀπεκδέχ.] There is perhaps no passage of the Apostle on which the opinions of Commentators are more various than the present, v. 19—23. The sense mainly depends on the meaning assigned to κτίσις, which the ancient and many eminent modern Interpreters (especially Luther, Calvin, Hyperius, Grotius, Capell, Danhauer, Doddridge, Michaelis, Knappe, and Rosenmuller,) take to mean the whole visible creation; this, by a metonymic allegory or prosopopœia (common both in the Scriptural and Classical writers), being represented as doing what is applicable only to man, i. e. groaning and mourning over the prevalence of sin and misery, and looking with anxious expectation for some deliverance; namely, such a renovation as the Jews especially supposed would take place in the age of the Messiah. The above view of the passage is ably supported by Carpzov, though it has to some appeared, in its sublimity, unsuitable to the plain and didactic style of the 20 ἀπεκδέχεται. Τῇ γὰρ ματαιότητι ἡ κτίσις ὑπετάγη, (οὐχ 21 ἑκοῦσα, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸν ὑποτάξαντα,) ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, ὅτι καὶ αὐτὴ ἡ κτίσις ἐλευθερωθήσεται ἀπὸ τῆς δουλείας τῆς φθορᾶς εἰς 22 τὴν ἐλευθερίαν τῆς δόξης τῶν τέκνων τοῦ Θεοῦ. Οἴδαμεν γὰρ ὅτι πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις συστενάζει καὶ συνωδίνει ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν.

23 [s] Οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτοὶ τὴν ἀπαρχὴν τοῦ Πνεύματος s 2 Cor. 5. 2, 4. ἔχοντες, καὶ ἡμεῖς αὐτοὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς στενάζομεν, υἱοθεσίαν Eph. 1. 14.
24 ἀπεκδεχόμενοι, τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν. [t] Τῇ t 2 Cor. 5. 7.
γὰρ ἐλπίδι ἐσώθημεν. ἐλπὶς δὲ βλεπομένη οὐκ ἔστιν ἐλπίς·

Apostle. Accordingly, they propose other interpretations which may avoid this difficulty. Some (as Hammond, Le Clerc, Wetstein, Wahl, Noesselt, and Schleusner) take κτίσις not of a physical, but moral creation, understanding by it the Christian Church, converted from Judaism or Heathenism. This, however, is liable to insuperable objections, and especially the following,—that thus κτίσις would require to be accompanied by some adjunct. See Eph. iv. 24. 2 Cor. v. 17. Hence others steer a middle course between the two former. Thus κτίσις is supposed to mean all intelligent and sentient creatures,—the whole creation capable of feeling the passions above adverted to; i. e. the human race, of whom the Gentiles formed the great bulk. This interpretation is ably supported by Whitby and Ammon. Yet there is no necessity to abandon the ancient and commonly received one,—especially as it may include the last mentioned; for ἡ κτίσις and πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις may very well mean 'the world,' 'the whole human race,' as Col. i. 15. Heb. iv. 13. So Iaspis says: 'Fingit Paulus universum mundum, velut unam personam, cui sensum tribuit, ut in Psalmis perpetuò.' 'All nature (to use the words of Mr. Greswell, on Parab., vol. iii. p. 588) is represented, in its various parts, sympathizing together in the sense of moral and physical evil to which it is subject in the present state; awakened to a sense of its condition, yet doomed to groan under the bondage of its own corruption, with nothing to relieve its sufferings but the hope of a future emancipation into the enjoyment of liberty worthy of the creature of God, and of a purification to come, for the recovery of its original likeness.' Hence both the tropical and the natural sense may have place in this sense; the latter, of course, being the principal one. As to the objection founded on the too great sublimity, that can by no means be allowed; and he must have studied St. Paul to little purpose, or must be utterly destitute of all taste, who sees not that there is no kind of sublimity in writing to which the Apostle was not fully equal; nay, that he is just such a writer in whom we might expect the most daring as well as sublime imagery.

But, to advert to the interpretation of a few particular expressions in these verses,—ματαιότητι is best explained 'weakness, corruption, and misery.' Ὑποτάξαντα is by some understood of Adam, by others of Satan, by others, again, of God; which last view is preferable, especially since it includes the other two. On the construction of the next words Commentators are not agreed. Almost all think there should be a parenthesis; which some place at τῇ γὰρ ματαιότητι—ὑποτάξαντα, ἐπ' ἐλπίδι being thus connected with ἀπεκδέχεται: while others think it consists of οὐχ ἑκοῦσα—ὑποτάξαντα, merely connecting ἐπ' ἐλπίδι with ὑπετάγη. Others, again, are of opinion that there is no parenthesis, connecting ἐπ' ἐλπίδι with ὑποτάξαντα. Thus the ὅτι will signify because. The first method is, I conceive, contrary to the laws of Parenthesis, and the 3d yields a feeble and unsuitable sense. The 2d is preferable; but, in fact, the whole portion at vv. 20 and 21 is, in some measure, parenthetical; the γὰρ at v. 22 being resumptive, and v. 22 a resumption of what was said at v. 19, which is then made to lead to another sentiment suspended on the ἡμεῖς included in οἴδαμεν. Thus the sense will be: 'For the world (i. e. God's creatures) was made subject to imperfection, corruption, and consequent misery (not by any will of its own; i. e. not as a punishment for any voluntary demerits of the sufferers, but by Him who thus subjected it), yet with a hope [on their part] that this very creation [i. e. these his creatures] will be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and admitted to the glorious liberty which pertains to the children of God.' Φθορᾶς seems meant to be taken both in a moral and a physical sense, to denote both liability to sin and to disease and death. At v. 22 πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις signifies 'the whole world' (i. e. all sentient creatures), and συστενάζει and συνωδίνει constitute a metaphor taken from a woman in travail, to denote extreme agony and great anxiety for deliverance. So Eurip. Hel. 733, συνωδίνει κακοῖς.

22. ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν.] For though something had been already done for the deliverance of the heathens, yet it was comparatively little.

23. οὐ μόνον δὲ, &c.] Meaning, 'And not only have they (i. e. the world at large, almost entirely heathens) this feeling,—but even we Christians,' &c.; since, as most of the best Commentators are agreed, by αὐτοὶ ἔχοντες is meant all Christians to whom the Spirit had been given as an earnest of their complete deliverance by the Spirit at their final υἱοθεσία. For ἀπαρχὴν, as opposed to υἱοθεσίαν, must denote that portion of grace already received, which is likened to the first fruits, as compared with the harvest. Τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν is in apposition with υἱοθεσίαν; q. d. 'our adoption'—namely, the deliverance of our body from mortality and corruption, sin and suffering.

24. τῇ γὰρ ἐλπίδι ἐσώθημεν.] The connexion of this assertion with the preceding one has been not a little disputed. The simplest and most satisfactory mode of considering the words is, u 2 Cor. 4. 18. ὃ γὰρ βλέπει τις, τί καὶ ἐλπίζει; [u] εἰ δὲ, ὃ οὐ βλέπομεν, 25

Heb. 11. 1. x Zach. 12. 10. ἐλπίζομεν, δι᾽ ὑπομονῆς ἀπεκδεχόμεθα. [x] Ὡσαύτως δὲ καὶ 26
Matt. 20. 22. James 4. 3. τὸ Πνεῦμα συναντιλαμβάνεται ταῖς ἀσθενείαις ἡμῶν. τὸ γὰρ τί προσευξώμεθα καθὸ δεῖ, οὐκ οἴδαμεν· ἀλλ᾽ αὐτὸ τὸ Πνεῦμα
y 1 Chron. 28. 9. ὑπερεντυγχάνει ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν στεναγμοῖς ἀλαλήτοις· [y] ὁ δὲ 27 with Crellius, Grotius, and Newcome, to take the γὰρ as suspended on ἀπεκδεχόμενοι in the preceding verse, and at ἐλπίδι to suppose an ellipsis of μόνον; q. d. 'I say waiting for our adoption; for our final salvation is at present the object of hope only.' So constituting another argument in proof of the foregoing assertion. Render, 'We have as yet attained salvation only in hope,' i. e. have attained only to a state in which a hope of it may be entertained.

The remainder of the verse is intended to show, in a familiar way, the unreasonableness of expecting from hope that fruition, which is incompatible with the very nature of hope; as necessarily having respect to future, not present good, or actual possession.

By ἐλπὶς βλεπομένη is meant hope that is realized in fruition by the attainment of its object. There is an allusion to sight, as being the realization of faith. So 2 Cor. v. 7, διὰ πίστεως περιπατοῦμεν, οὐ διὰ εἴδους. In the words ὃ γὰρ βλέπει, &c., we have a general sentiment, of which the sense is: 'How can a man be said to hope for the vision or fruition of that which he at present beholds and enjoys?'

25. We have here, as Calvin remarks, an argument from antecedent to consequent, couched in a popular sentiment, of universal application, because patience necessarily follows hope, as being indispensable to the attainment of the object hoped for. Hence is intimated their duty to persevere in patience; q. d. 'As it is of the essence of hope to exclude fruition, and always to look forward to something future,—so ought it to be an inducement to us to wait with patience for the blessing which is yet at a distance.'

It is to be observed that by ὑπομονὴ is here denoted not only a patient waiting for the blessing hoped for, but a patient endurance of the trials and tribulations to be encountered in this state of probation; whereby the future state, of peace and blessedness, (see Heb. iv. 1—11,) will be both enhanced by contrast, and increased in intensity, 'since we know that our labour shall never be in vain in the Lord.'

26. Here the Apostle suggests another motive of consolation, in the aid afforded by the Spirit to our infirmities.

— ὡσαύτως δὲ καὶ, &c.] Meaning, 'in like manner, in the same way as hope supports, cheers, and renders us patient, so do the influences of the Spirit aid us in all our distresses.' See Stuart. Some recent Commentators, indeed, rejecting the sense usually assigned to τὸ Πνεῦμα, 'the Holy Spirit,' as sent from the Father and the Son, take it to mean 'animus et sensus Christianus,' which they say is personified: an interpretation most harsh. The objection urged to the former, that the office of intercession with God belongs to our Saviour, not to the Holy Spirit, is utterly without force; for the intercession here meant, as will be shown further on, is of another kind.

Συναντιλαμβάνεσθαι signifies properly 'to lay hold of any weight to be carried, on the opposite side, and so help a person to shoulder it,' and here denotes the present help of the Spirit; of course implying man's concurrence with this heavenly aid. By ἀσθενείαις are meant those infirmities and frailties of the flesh, which disincline us to bear the trials of virtue, and indispose us even to discern our real good, or to form such prayers as may be acceptable to God; which particular is adverted to in the next words.

— ἀλλ᾽ αὐτὸ τὸ Πνεῦμα, &c.] Bp. Burgess (in his second Letter to Mrs. Baillie, p. 30) rightly renders, 'the Spirit himself;' remarking, that the Greek word Πνεῦμα requires the neuter, αὐτό; while the Latin Spiritus and the English Spirit require the masculine ipse, himself.

Here from the ἀλλ᾽ (imo) it is plain that something more is intended to be expressed, than what is contained in the preceding sentence; and as it is there said that the Spirit helpeth our weakness in prayer and otherwise, so here there is given an illustration by example of his help in prayer only,—namely, by his not only stirring us up to pray, and strengthening us in prayer, but suggesting to us what we should pray for, and how our prayers should be expressed. For all this is comprehended in the term ὑπερεντυγχάνει, on which it is well remarked by Carpzov: 'The intercession of the Spirit differs from the intercession of Christ as well in respect of person as of office; the former being that ἄλλος Παράκλητος promised by Christ, John xiv. 16. The points of difference are these: 1. That the Holy Spirit is our Paraclete, by virtue of his abiding and dwelling in the heart (v. 37) on earth; but Christ, by virtue of his office, as Advocate in heaven. (Heb. ix. 24.) 2. That Christ intercedes with the Father formally, as God-man, Mediator, and our great High Priest, by virtue of his own merit; (Heb. vii. 25.) but the Holy Spirit, sent by the Father and the Son to the faithful, intercedes effectively in the heart, as our Helper, by strengthening us from the efficacy of Christ's merits, and claiming it for us as our own by faith; by impelling us to pray, and suggesting to us how we ought to pray (Zach. xii. 10), by exciting in our hearts aspirations, unutterable by the tongue, to our heavenly Father (v. 26); finally, by himself praying, as it were, in us—for us;' or rather, pleading in us and with us.

Here, for the sake of greater emphasis, the Holy Spirit is represented, per μετάληψιν, as doing for us what he does in us; for the words στεναγμοῖς ἀλαλήτοις ought not (as they have been by some) to be referred to the Holy Spirit, but to the persons themselves thus assisted in prayer: for the expression στεναγμοῖς would be little suitable to the former, while it is highly so to the latter. Render, 'by aspirations,' i. e. by means of, by exciting aspirations unutterable; i. e. (in the words of Stuart) such longing desires after conformity to God, and for deliverance from ἐρευνῶν τὰς καρδίας οἶδε τί τὸ φρόνημα τοῦ Πνεύματος, ὅτι 28 κατὰ Θεὸν ἐντυγχάνει ὑπὲρ ἁγίων. [z] Οἴδαμεν δὲ ὅτι τοῖς ἀγαπῶσι τὸν Θεὸν πάντα συνεργεῖ εἰς ἀγαθὸν, τοῖς κατὰ 29 πρόθεσιν κλητοῖς οὖσιν. [a] Ὅτι οὓς προέγνω, καὶ προώρισε συμμόρφους τῆς εἰκόνος τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ, εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν 30 πρωτότοκον ἐν πολλοῖς ἀδελφοῖς. [b] οὓς δὲ προώρισε, τούτους καὶ ἐκάλεσε· καὶ οὓς ἐκάλεσε, τούτους καὶ ἐδικαίωσεν· z Infra 9. 11. 2 Tim. 1. 9.

a Eph. 1. 9, 11. 2 Cor. 3. 18. 1 Cor. 5. 49. Phil. 3. 21. Col. 1. 18.
b Infra 9. 24. 1 Cor. 1. 24. 1 Pet 2. 9.

sin, that these become unutterable. See a fuller account of this in the Note of Stenersen.

27. This verse has been variously understood, but the scope seems to be that suggested by Calvin; namely, to confirm their confidence in prayer by the consideration that the prayers offered up to God by the Spirit shall be heard. The general meaning intended is: 'He, the great Searcher of hearts, knoweth what mean these aspirations of his children, thus excited by the Spirit. He knoweth and approveth what is the mind or intent of the Spirit [thus suggested to the faithful]; for it is according to the will of God that he thus acts.' Accordingly it is implied that the great Giver of all good will grant the petitions of his servants, either by delivering them from, or supporting them under, all trials and afflictions.

28. Here is suggested another source of comfort—from the consideration that 'all things, even (nay, especially) sufferings and tribulations, shall work together for the final and eternal good of true believers; it being a part of the Divine economy, in the great mystery of our redemption, to bring his sons to glory through sufferings, and thereby to conform them to the image of Christ, the First-born; first in suffering, then in glory.' See Heb. ii. 10. xii. 2. (Young.)

— τοῖς ἀγαπῶσι τὸν Θεόν.] Meaning, those who really love and obey him. Εἰς ἀγαθόν. Meaning, their good in the end, i. e. either here or hereafter. Of this truth, as appears from the citations in Wetstein, even the Heathens were not ignorant.

— τοῖς κατὰ πρόθεσιν κλητοῖς οὖσιν.] This clause is intended to expand the sense contained in the foregoing expression, τοῖς ἀγαπῶσι τὸν Θεόν. Render, 'who are called,' i. e. taken into covenant. At κατὰ πρόθεσιν supply Θεοῦ, from the preceding Θεόν. By πρόθεσις here is meant firm purpose or design, namely, as Young explains, 'of gathering together in one all things in Christ, both Jews and Gentiles; that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers together with the Jews of his promise in Christ by the Gospel. See Eph. i. 9—11. iii. 3, 5, 6. 11.'

29. προέγνω.] Many Commentators here assign the sense 'fore-approved, or loved.' So Young explains, 'those whom he regarded with especial favour, before the rest of mankind;' the same with those whom he chose in Christ before the foundation of the world (Eph. i. 4); i. e. all Christians, all, of whatever nation, who should embrace the faith of Christ. And as, under the Law, the Jews were God's chosen and peculiar people, τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ ὃν προέγνω, as St. Paul styles them, xi. 2, 'his people whom he foreknew' (comp. Amos iii. 2, and see Deut. vii. 6, 7, 8); so, under the Gospel, Christians are God's chosen and peculiar people, οὓς προέγνω. Yet, for this signification of the word, no authority has been produced, nor is there any sufficient reason to abandon the usual interpretation, 'those whom he foreknew would be such, i. e. lovers of God, faithfully obedient to him, or such as would accept, and not reject, the gracious offers of salvation.' Finally, of the two expressions προέγνω and προώρισε, the former is to be understood of prescience of character; the latter, of predetermination founded on such prescience. It is well remarked by Bp. Tomline, that 'those whom God foresaw would perform the conditions of the Christian covenant, may be said to be predestinated to life; the only sense in which predestination is reconcileable with the attributes of God and the free agency of man.' The predestination, then, here spoken of merely signifies God's purpose of making known the covenant of grace, and of bestowing eternal happiness upon those who shall make a right use of the means of grace.

— συμμόρφους τῆς εἰκόνος τ. Υ.] Equivalent to συμμορφ. τῇ εἰκόνι; as Phil. iii. 21, σύμμορφον τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ. Εἰκ. is equivalent to τύπου or ὁμοιώματος, and συμμορφ. is for ἰσομόρφους. The expression is well explained by Stuart, of resemblance in a moral respect.

— εἰς τὸ εἶναι, &c.] This must certainly mean, 'that he should be the principal, best-beloved, and chief of the redeemed, his brethren, joint inheritors of his glory.' A Rabbinical writer here cited by Koppe uses this very expression of the Messiah; as does Philo, of the Logos.

30. Here we have represented both the plan of salvation, and the several stages of it; and accordingly this has been well termed by Paræus, the golden and indissoluble chain of salvation, as exhibiting the order and connexion of the various steps by which God carries into effect His purposes for the salvation of man.

The verbs which note these several stages, from their being Aorists, should (as the best Expositors are agreed) be expressed in Latin or English by the Present tense, or an Infinitive, with soleo prefixed, to denote the constant and uniform plan of the Divine counsels. At προώρισε supply συμμόρφους γενέσθαι τῆς εἰκόνος τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ, 'those whom He fore-ordains to be conformed to the image of His Son;' meaning, not only in moral character, but in external circumstances; i. e. first in trials and tribulations; see Heb. ii. 10. xii. 2. The general import of this whole portion is well pointed out by Carpzov as follows. At vv. 28, 29 we have mention of the Divine benefits before the creation of the world, i. e. from eternity. 1. The πρόθεσις, or determinate purpose of granting felicity to those who should believe in Christ to the end of life. 2. The πρόγνωσις, the prescience of God (conjoined with his love), by which he foreknew all c Ps. 118. 6. 2 Kings 6. 16. d Isa. 53. 5. John 3. 16. supra 4. 25. & 5. 6, 9. e Isa. 50. 8, 9.

οὓς δὲ ἐδικαίωσε, τούτους καὶ ἐδόξασε. c Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν 31
πρὸς ταῦτα; εἰ ὁ Θεὸς ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, τίς καθ' ἡμῶν; d Ὅς 32
γε τοῦ ἰδίου Υἱοῦ οὐκ ἐφείσατο, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν πάντων παρέδωκεν αὐτόν· πῶς οὐχὶ καὶ σὺν αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα ἡμῖν χαρίσεται; e Τίς ἐγκαλέσει κατὰ ἐκλεκτῶν Θεοῦ; Θεὸς ὁ 33 and each who would believe in Christ. 3. The προωρισμὸς, the determination and decree of conferring eternal happiness on all and each of them. At ver. 30 are enumerated the Divine benefits granted ἐν καιρῷ, in tempore, i. e. in this life. 1. Ἡ κλῆσις, calling to faith, or an offering of grace, which here comprehends actual conversion and regeneration; since God illumines the intellect of man by the Holy Ghost, sways the will, and confers faith on those who do not perversely reject his offer. 2. Δικαίωσις, justification, by which is meant the being declared just by God, and absolved from guilt and punishment. 3. Δόξα, glorification, which takes its commencement in renovation and sanctification, and is perfected in life eternal.'

Of these two important terms ἐκάλεσε and ἐδικαίωσε the former simply signifies 'calls,' namely, by the preaching of the Gospel, to embrace the offers of salvation through Christ to those who conform to the Gospel conditions of faith and holiness. 'Εδικαίωσε many eminent Commentators explain of forgiveness of sins, and admission to a state of pardon and grace by baptism, which, if duly improved, will lead to glorification and final salvation. And they, in general, hold that there are, strictly speaking, two justifications, adoptions, and glorifications; while some of them suppose but one; the first being the commencement, the second the consummation of the thing. But for such a notion, especially as regards glorification, there is no warrant in Scripture; and of adoption, nothing is here said. It is plain that as ἐκάλεσε must mean such a calling as proceeds from the foreknowledge and the predetermination of God, in respect to the objects of it (and consequently cannot but be effectual), so ἐδικαίωσε must denote the result of it, in justification or pardon of sins both first and final (if, indeed, there be two justifications), and final glorification: see Professor Stuart in his Note.

31. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν π. τ.;] 'The Apostle now concludes with a triumphant expression of his full assurance of the happy result of their present trials (see vv. 31—39). For God having given such a stupendous proof of his purpose of love towards them, as to give his own Son to suffer in their stead, it is impossible to think that any thing shall ever wrest them out of his hands; but he will support them under all afflictions, defend them against all enemies; and, having begun a good work in them, will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.' (Young.)

— εἰ.] Many render since. But the meaning may be best expressed by, 'if [as is the case];' affirmation being here implied.

— τίς καθ' ἡμῶν;] The interrogation implies a strong negation, i. e. none. And by καθ' ἡμῶν scil. ἔσται is meant, 'shall venture to oppose,' 'shall successfully oppose.' So Josephus, Ant. xv. 5. 3, μεθ' ὧν τὸ δίκαιόν ἐστιν, μετ' ἐκείνων ὁ Θεός· Θεοῦ δὲ παρόντος, καὶ πλῆθος καὶ ἀνδρεία πάρεστιν.

32. ὅς γε—οὐκ ἐφείσατο.] The γε here is very significant, and may be rendered 'even:' of which intensive force of the enclitic γε, when connected with the relative ὅς, examples are adduced by Dr. Pye Smith, Script. Test. vol. iii. 292. And so often in ὅ γε. The τοῦ is emphatic, meaning in opposition to θετοῦ; q. d. 'his own, not a merely adopted, Son.' This serves to strengthen the inference. In οὐκ ἐφείσατο there is an elegant litotes, such as we find in the Classical writers (see Wetstein); and probably there is a reference to Gen. xxii. 12.

— ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν πάντων π. αὐ.] Of ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν the sense is, 'in our stead,' and for the expiation of our sins. Of the vicarious nature of Christ's sufferings, here implied, see Abp. Magee on the Atonement, vol. i. App. No. xlii., also No. xxx. In πῶς οὐχὶ (which implies a strong affirmation) there is great spirit; see Matt. xvi. 11. By τὰ πάντα we may understand, either with Estius, all the above-mentioned benefits, temporal and spiritual, of grace and glory; or, with Dr. Pye Smith (Script. Test. vol. iii. 292), all the possessions, advantages, privileges, and blessings of every kind which can be the means of good to the faithful Christian; all that is useful, great, and excellent in the present state and to eternity. There is here a reasoning from the greater to the less; q. d. in the words of Mr. Scott: 'All things in heaven and earth, the universal creation, yea, the everlasting enjoyment of the Creator himself as their Portion, are not so great a display of his free love to them, as the gift of his coequal Son to be the atonement on the cross for their sins; and all the rest necessarily follows upon their union with him, and interest in him.'

33. τίς ἐγκαλέσει κατὰ ἐκλ. Θεοῦ;] 'Who will act the part of Accuser,' &c.? It has been disputed who are meant by the accuser and the condemner. The ancient and earlier modern Commentators understand the Jews; the later Commentators, the Gentiles. It would seem that neither opinion ought to be held to the exclusion of the other, but that both may be admitted. The accusers might be both Jews and Gentiles, though on different grounds. The interrogation implies a strong negation, i. e. οὐδείς.

On the punctuation of this and following verse some difference of opinion exists. Many of the most eminent Editors and Commentators place notes of interrogation at δικαιῶν, ἀποθανὼν, ἐγερθεὶς, Θεοῦ, and ἡμῶν, q. d. 'Who will lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? will God who justifies them do it?' This, they think, has more of spirit, and is more in the Apostle's manner. Yet it is scarcely agreeable to the context; the intent of the Apostle, in this instance, being, not to remove fears of the mercy of God, but to place in parallel the love of God and the benefits obtained for the elect by Christ against all the hostility of man accumulated for their harm;—the inference just after being, that no created power could really injure those in respect of whom all

34 δικαιῶν· [f] τίς ὁ κατακρίνων; Χριστὸς ὁ ἀποθανών, μᾶλλον
δὲ καὶ ἐγερθείς, ὃς καί ἐστιν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὃς καὶ ἐντυγ-35 χάνει ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν. Τίς ἡμᾶς χωρίσει ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χριστοῦ; Θλίψις, ἢ στενοχωρία, ἢ διωγμός, ἢ λιμός, ἢ
36 γυμνότης, ἢ κίνδυνος, ἢ μάχαιρα; [g] καθὼς γέγραπται· Ὅτι ἕνεκα σοῦ θανατούμεθα ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν·
37 ἐλογίσθημεν ὡς πρόβατα σφαγῆς. [h] Ἀλλ' ἐν τούτοις 38 πᾶσιν ὑπερνικῶμεν διὰ τοῦ ἀγαπήσαντος ἡμᾶς. [i] Πέπεισμαι γὰρ ὅτι οὔτε θάνατος οὔτε ζωή, οὔτε ἄγγελοι οὔτε ἀρχαί, 39 οὔτε δυνάμεις, οὔτε ἐνεστῶτα οὔτε μέλλοντα, οὔτε ὕψωμα οὔτε βάθος, οὔτε τὶς κτίσις ἑτέρα, δυνήσεται ἡμᾶς χωρίσαι ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Θεοῦ, τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν.

1 IX. [a] ἈΛΗΘΕΙΑΝ λέγω ἐν Χριστῷ, οὐ ψεύδομαι, f Ps. 110. 1. Heb. 1. 3. & 7. 25. 1 Pet. 3. 22. 1 John 2. 1.

g Ps. 44. 22. 1 Cor. 4. 9. 2 Cor. 4. 11. & 11. 23.
h 1 Cor. 15. 57. 2 Cor. 2. 14. 1 John 4. 4. & 5. 4, 5. Rev. 12. 11.
i Eph. 1. 21. & 6. 12. Col. 2. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 22.
a 1 Tim. 2. 7. supra 1. 9. Phil. 1. 8.

circumstances would be directed for final good. Moreover, the common punctuation, though it may have less of rhetorical δεινότης, has more of Apostolical gravity.

34. μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἐγερθείς.] This is added for their consolation under present afflictions. And in mentioning these two joint grounds of our hope, Christ's dying and rising again, the Apostle seems to lay the greater stress upon the latter. And not without reason; for by means of his resurrection Christ is enabled to execute his priestly office; and having offered himself a sacrifice for our sins, is now entered into the highest heavens with his own blood, and 'ever liveth to make intercession for us.' (Simeon, Hor. Homil.)

— ἐντυγχάνει ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν] i. e. 'is continually acting as our Mediator and Intercessor;' see Hebr. vii. 25.

35. τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χρ.] This may mean either the love Christ bears to us, or the love we bear to him. Recent Commentators generally prefer the latter interpretation; but the former, which is supported by the ancients and most moderns, is far more agreeable to the context.

— θλίψις, ἢ στενοχ., &c.] Of these terms θλίψις and διωγμὸς seem modifications of misery arising from persecution. The latter is by far the stronger term; and perhaps the two which precede it represent, as it were, passive, indirect, and private persecution; διωγμός, active and public persecution. The three next terms seem, in some measure, exemplifications of the former; λιμὸς and γυμνότης, which denote want of the necessaries of life, referring to στενοχωρία and θλίψις; and μάχαιρα, which denotes violent death, to διωγμός.

36. καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] q. d. 'even though the words of Scripture (describing the fate of God's servants of old) should become applicable to us.' Θανατούμεθα may be rendered, 'we are being killed;' i. e. some are continually killed, and others daily expecting death. Πρόβατα σφαγῆς (answering to the Hebr. צאן מבחה) literally signifies sheep of the slaughter, slaughter-sheep, sheep put aside for death; as Ps. cii. 20, בני תמותה, sons of death, i. e. persons destined to death.

37. ὑπερνικῶμεν] 'we are triumphantly victorious;' q. d. 'we have even more strength than is necessary for us to overcome all obstacles.'

38, 39. Here we have the same sentiment, but expressed with greater distinctness and pathos; the thing being explained per μερισμὸν, i. e. by a mention of the various parts of the universe in which any power to sway the minds of men may be imagined to exist. (Koppe.) It should seem that the most powerful things and persons are mentioned first. 1. Not any thing—no fear of death, no hope of life. 2. No being, however powerful, no, not even angels, or principalities, or powers. Angels are simply mentioned, as being the most powerful of God's creatures. Οὔτε θάνατος οὔτε ζωή, meaning, 'no fear of death, nor hope of life; no human consideration whatever.' Ἀρχαὶ and δυνάμεις may denote, as some imagine, other orders of angels; see Eph. vi. 12. Col. ii. 15. But it is more probable that they mean (as Wetstein understands) human powers, ἀρχαὶ signifying the principal, and δυνάμεις the inferior ones. Οὔτε ἐνεστῶτα οὔτε μέλλοντα, i. e. neither present nor future evils. Of the words following, οὔτε ὕψωμα οὔτε βάθος, the sense probably is, 'neither the height of prosperity, nor the depth of adversity.'

Κτίσις may be taken, with Grotius and Koppe, for χρῆμα, or πρᾶγμα, res, whatever exists in rerum naturâ, comprehending not only all substances, but whatever can be imagined; and involving (as Stuart observes) a blessed, glorious hope, which only the Gospel and the atoning blood of Christ can inspire.

IX. With the eighth Chapter concludes what may be called the doctrinal part of the Epistle; the following chapters being employed, 1. in anticipating and removing such objections as might be made to the doctrines propounded; 2. in giving practical admonitions suitable thereto. Of the contents of chaps. ix. x. and xi., the following analysis is given by Schoettgen: 'To remove the scruples of the Jews (whether Christians or not), 1. we have a præoccupatio; which was necessary, that it might not be thought that, having abandoned their religion, he had spoken against them from a hostile feeling (ix. 1. 3, repeated in x. 1, 2).

(συμμαρτυρούσης μοι τῆς συνειδήσεώς μου,) ἐν Πνεύματι
b Infra 10. 1. ἁγίῳ, [b] ὅτι λύπη μοί ἐστι μεγάλη, καὶ ἀδιάλειπτος ὀδύνη 2 c Exod. 32. 32. Gal. 1. 8. τῇ καρδίᾳ μου. [c] ηὐχόμην γὰρ αὐτὸς ἐγὼ ἀνάθεμα εἶναι 3 ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου, τῶν συγγενῶν μου

2. He shows that God had alone of his good pleasure, chosen Jacob rather than Esau; and that therefore the Israelites had not by nature any superiority (ix. 4—33). 3. That the Jews must submit to the Divine dispensation; otherwise, though they are the people of God, they will not be saved (x. 3—15). 4. That they had always been disobedient (v. 16—21). 5. Therefore God justly rejected them; though he reserved to himself some (xi. 1—32). Whereupon, 6. the Apostle utters an exclamation of wonder, and praises God in his works (vv. 33—36). In chap. xi. 11—24, is introduced an admonition to the Gentile converts, not to suffer their reception into the Divine favour to puff them up, and lead them to neglect the will of God.' 'The scope of the Apostle in the present chapter is,' as Stuart observes, 'to support, illustrate, and defend against objections the positions which have been laid down in the foregoing chapters. 1. He shows that, though the predestinated, called, justified, and glorified, are both of Jews and Gentiles; yet that that involves no breach of the promises made to Abraham and his seed; for the natural seed, as such, are not the specific objects of the promise. 2. That God hath always chosen the objects of his favour where he pleased, without regard to external privileges, advantages, or relations. Accordingly, examples of God's sovereignty are adduced of various kinds, some having respect to temporal advantages or disadvantages, and some both spiritual and temporal. Thus the eighth chapter is the key to the ninth, where the Apostle shows that God, in calling, justifying, and glorifying, does only what he has a perfect right to do, which is analogous to the examples of his dealings in the Jewish Scriptures, and accords with the doctrines and predictions which they contain.'

1. ἀλήθειαν λέγω ἐν Χρ.] A form of solemn protestation, partaking of the nature of an oath (similar to that at 2 Cor. i. 23. xi. 10. Eph. iv. 17. 1 Tim. v. 21), and of which the full sense is, 'I protest by Christ that I speak truth. I take the Holy Spirit, who knoweth my heart (see Acts v. 23), to witness that I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness that,' &c.

2. λύπη—καρδίᾳ] i. e. ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου (which is mentioned just after), i. e. 'for them and their lost estate.'

3. ηὐχόμην γὰρ αὐ. ἐγὼ ἀνάθεμα, &c.] The sense in this disputed passage mainly turns on the words ηὐχόμην and ἀνάθεμα. In considering the former it is proper to advert to an idiom pointed out by Photius, and since recognised by Grotius, Wolf, and other modern Commentators (though not admitted by many of the early modern ones), by which the Imperfect is used for the Optative with ἄν; as in Acts xxv. 22, and Gal. iv. 20, ἤθελον παρεῖναι (where see Note), and Matt. iii. 14, διεκώλυεν αὐτόν. Of this, indeed, examples occur in all the Greek writers. 'The Apostle (says Photius) does not say εὔχομαι, but ηὐχόμην' (for ηὐχόμην ἄν), meaning, 'I could ardently, earnestly, wish, i. e. if it were possible and permitted me, if I had my choice.' Thus the Apostle's wish to be an anathema is suspended on something conditional. The only question is, what that condition is. Now here I can by no means assent to the view of Professor Stuart in his statement of the sense. For it may justly be objected in the words of Bp. Sanderson, in a Sermon on this text, that 'the Apostle could not wish their salvation more than his own; for such a desire was neither possible, nor would be regular. Not possible by the law of Nature, which cannot but begin at home; not regular by the course of charity, which is not orderly, if he do not so too.' Neither can I agree with those who would remove what has appeared a great harshness, by supposing the expression to be highly hyperbolical. 'It is not (says Bp. Sanderson) merely a strain of rhetoric to give his brethren, by that hyperbolical expression, the better assurance of his great love to them; neither is it a hasty, inconsiderate speech falling suddenly from him in writing, and as the abortive fruit of an over-passionate zeal; for then he would have corrected himself; as at Acts xxiii. But he speaks it advisedly and deliberately, and, indeed, with a solemn obtestation.' The learned prelate supposes the Apostle's meaning to be, that he preferred the glory of God before his own salvation and theirs, insomuch that if God's glory should so require (hoc impossibili supposito), he could be content, with all his heart, either to lose his own part in the joys of heaven, that God might be the more glorified, than that God should lose any part of His glory for his salvation. But with all due deference to this great and good man, it may be doubted whether such a sentiment be not liable to the same grand objection as that to which the preceding view is liable; namely, that of being unnatural. Indeed, the sentiment involves something so extravagant, that it is strange so sober an understanding as Bp. Sanderson's should for a moment have tolerated it.

Still more objectionable is the mode in which Calvin attempts to do away with the difficulty, namely, by considering the whole as said inconsiderately. 'Nam ferventiores isti affectus ut præcipitanter feruntur, ita nihil aliud intuentur aut considerant, quam id quo tendunt.' This he endeavours to show was the case with St. Paul: 'inde fiebat (he adds) ut in extremum hoc votum confuso animo erumperet.'

The condition here, per ellipsin suppressed, is (if I mistake not) simply, if it were permissible and lawful. Thus the words, though they must be supposed to contain a mere rhetorical figure of speech to denote ardent affection, may, however, be understood to express a sentiment of the most impassioned feeling, indicating affection of the strongest kind; which is almost necessarily connected with hyperbole. And in this respect the expression here bears a strong affinity to the impassioned and confessedly hyperbolical one at Gal. iv. 15, εἰ δυνατὸν τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ὑμῶν ἐξορύξαντες ἂν ἐδώκατέ μοι. Thus the senti-

4 κατὰ σάρκα· [d] οἵτινές εἰσιν Ἰσραηλῖται, ὧν ἡ υἱοθεσία καὶ ἡ δόξα, καὶ αἱ διαθῆκαι καὶ ἡ νομοθεσία, καὶ ἡ λατρεία καὶ

d Exod. 4. 22. Deut. 7. 6. Ps. 63. 2. & 147. 19. Jer. 31. 9. supra 2. 17. Eph. 2. 12.

ment might be developed as follows: 'I could wish, were it lawful (hoc impossibili supposito), to sacrifice my own salvation, in order to secure that of my brethren and countrymen.' The implied clause (hoc impossibili supposito) renders this view of the sense not liable to the objection fatal to the above, of being unnatural. It also avoids the extreme harshness involved in Bp. Sanderson's, by supposing so very important a sense as he introduces being left to be understood. Finally, I would observe, there is the less reason to wonder at the impassioned feeling of this passage, when we consider the exalted character of the preceding chapter, between which and the present there is a closer connexion than Commentators have been aware. There is, indeed, strong internal evidence that this passage was written at the very same time with that which precedes.

If, however, after all, the supposition of a conditional clause be thought objectionable, it may be dispensed with, simply by rendering, 'I was wishing,' which may very well mean, 'I was ready to wish.' Thus the action will be represented as begun, but not completed, being interrupted by the interposition of some hindrance; as here, the reflection that it would be unlawful so to wish. Thus it nearly resembles that force of the Imperfect Indicative, by which is designated action attempted, but not completed; as in the expression διεκώλυεν, Matt. iii. 14; see Winer's Gr. Gr. § 41. 3. And so may be explained ἐβουλόμην at Acts xxv. 32. In this view, the sentiment will have that sort of qualification, by which we sometimes soften or excuse a somewhat too strong expression (which nevertheless we are unable to suppress) with, 'I had almost said;' thus taking from ourselves the responsibility of a deliberate and settled sentiment.

To advert to the words stating the nature and object of this wish; namely, ἀνάθεμα εἶναι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ. All the ancient and early modern Commentators (and also Benson and Koppe) suppose them to denote 'the being accursed, and therefore separated from the society of Christians,' and consequently excluded from the benefits of salvation. As to ἀνάθεμα, it corresponds to the Hebr. חרם, which signifies to cut off; and figuratively, to separate from, or destroy. Thus ἀναθεματίζειν is by the Sept. used in both these senses. The former, however, was the more ancient acceptation; the other may be supposed to have arisen much later, when it became necessary to resort to ecclesiastical censures, in order to support the declining influence of the Jewish Hierarchy. Thus ἀνάθεμα and its derivatives came to be used for excommunication; and no wonder, since the persons so anathematized were supposed to be devoted to the wrath of God and his heaviest punishments. Thus the expression ἀνάθεμα εἶναι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χ. seems (by allusion to the Jewish excommunication) to mean 'being an outcast from Christ, and excluded from the benefits of his religion.'

4. The Apostle now proceeds to speak honourably of his countrymen, enumerating their privileges: he does this to show his good-will to them, and to awaken their solicitude not to lose that divine favour, by which they had been so long distinguished; hinting, too, that God wished them to be saved, by vouchsafing to them the adoption and glory, &c.

— ὧν ἡ υἱοθ.] 'By this is meant the privilege of being the children of God, and consequently a right to the inheritance of the children of God. Now this privilege the Israelites derived from their progenitor Seth, whose descendants 'called themselves by the name of the Lord,' Gen. iv. 26, i. e. the children of God; and they are expressly so termed, Gen. vi. 2. This privilege was renewed to Shem, the ancestor of the Israelites, after the flood, Gen. ix. 26. This adoption was further confirmed to Abraham, Gen. xv. 12—21, and to his natural offspring in the fourth generation, when they were to be put into possession of the earthly Canaan; on which account God calls Israel his son, and his first-born, Exod. iv. 22, 23. Deut. xiv. 1; but more especially when this earthly Canaan is considered as a pledge of the adoption to the everlasting possession of the heavenly Canaan, to which God had adopted Abraham, Gen. xviii. 18.' (Bowyer.)

— καὶ ἡ δόξα.] Some Commentators take this to mean the glory of the adoption. That, however, would require the addition of αὐτῆς, which would be but an insipid additament. Others suppose it to mean the glory accruing to them from the miracles wrought by God, and the honour of the Divine presence. This, however, is far-fetched. Something more particular seems meant; namely, either the ark of the covenant (see 1 Sam. iv. 21. Ps. lxxviii. 61), or the Shechinah, or symbol of God's glorious presence, which resided in Seth's family till the flood, and afterwards appeared occasionally to Moses, Joshua, Samuel, and others,—until finally it dwelt among the children of Israel from the erection of the Tabernacle to the destruction of the Temple, taking up its abode over the ark of the covenant, and called by the Septuagint δόξα Κυρίου.

— αἱ διαθῆκαι.] The plural must not, as some say, be regarded as put for the singular, per enallagen; nor are we to suppose the covenant split into two parts, the legal and the typical; but we must suppose that the Apostle uses the plural to favour the complacency of the Jews, by accommodating himself to their mode of speaking, who, as we find from the Rabbinical writings, used to consider every renewal of the original covenant (for there was, in fact, but one from Adam to Christ), as those with Noah, Abraham, Isaac, &c., in the light of a new covenant.

— ἡ νομοθεσία.] Meaning, 'the giving of the Law' (i. e. the Law given) from Mount Sinai. So Plutarch, vi. 892. Reisk. ὑπεριδόντες τὴν τοῦ Λ. νομοθεσίαν, and 2 Macc. vi. 23.

— ἡ λατρεία] the ἡ νομικὴ ἱερουργία, the Levitical service or worship mentioned in Exod. xii. 26, and forming a part of the νομοθεσία.

— αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι.] This refers to the various divine promises; both those delivered by Moses, and those, after his time, confirmed and repeated by the Prophets, respecting the possession of Palestine, and especially of the Messiah, who should appear and proceed from their nation.

e Matt. 1. 1. John 1. 1. Heb. 1. 8, 9.

αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι, [e] ὧν οἱ πατέρες, καὶ ἐξ ὧν ὁ Χριστὸς τὸ κατὰ 5 σάρκα, ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας!

5. ὧν οἱ πατέρες.] Meaning 'whose ancestors are the Patriarchs,' i. e. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

—ἐξ ὧν ὁ Χριστὸς—αἰῶνας.] In interpreting a passage, the sense of which has been not a little controverted, even among orthodox Expositors, it is proper to proceed with the greatest caution. One thing is plain, even from the presence of the καὶ, that ὧν must be referred, not to πατέρες, but to Ἰσραηλῖται, and that ἐστι must be supplied from the preceding εἰσι, and be taken in a popular sense for 'is, or was to be, born.' With this is closely connected τὸ κατὰ σάρκα (by ellipsis, for κατὰ τὸ κατὰ σάρκα μέρος), which words are emphatical, and allude to the other, or divine nature of Christ: a doctrine agreeable to what the Jews themselves expected from the Messiah; all of whom knew that he would be man, and the more enlightened maintained that he would also be God. See Schoettgen and Wets.

But to proceed to the next clause, ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ—αἰῶνας, these words attest so strongly the Deity of Jesus Christ, that it is no wonder every endeavour should have been used, on the part of those who deny that doctrine, to evade so irrefragable an evidence. These attempts have been made in various ways,—1. by cancelling Θεός; 2. by interpreting it in a lower sense, as put for Κύριος; 3. by altering the present reading on conjecture, substituting ὧν ὁ for ὁ ὢν; 4. by altering the punctuation, so as to make the words be predicated of the Father, thus forming a doxology; viz. either by placing a comma after σάρκα (in the sense 'May God, who is over all, be blessed for ever!'), or by placing it after πάντων, in the sense, 'God be blessed for ever!' Now as to the cancelling of Θεὸς, few even of the Socinian Critics venture upon so desperate a course. I say desperate; for, notwithstanding the ill-judged and uncalled-for admissions of Schoettgen, Clarke, and others, the truth is, that no portion of Scripture contains better evidence for its genuineness; it being found in all the MSS. hitherto collated, in all the ancient Versions (of which the Pesch. Syr. is peculiarly strong and clear to the point), and all the Fathers, with a few slight exceptions. See Middleton. In fact, the Socinians have seen the impregnable authority of the word, and have therefore generally assailed the passage in the three other ways; but with as little success. For, 1. as to taking Θεὸς for Κύριος, that has been completely demolished by the powerful arm of Bp. Middleton. See also the able criticisms of Dr. Pye Smith, Script. Test., vol. iii. p. 303, 306; 2dly, as to the alteration on conjecture of ὁ ὢν into ὧν ὁ, it is totally unsupported by MS. authority, insomuch that Mr. Belsham himself grants that it cannot be admitted. Indeed (as Bp. Middleton and others have shown), even if admitted, it 'would introduce an argument improbable, and Greek impossible;' 3dly, as to the attempt made to evade the plain sense of the words by converting them, with a change of punctuation, into a doxology, that has even less to be urged in its defence, and, in both its forms, has been completely foiled by Bp. Middleton, who has shown that doxology would here be out of place, and that, if it were admitted, the passage would require to be worded very differently. In vain, too, were it to urge 'the irregularity of the Apostle's style,' since, however irregular, he is a law unto himself. So objectionable, indeed, is this mode, that even Socinus, Crellius, and Schlitting themselves reject it. That the context requires the words to be understood of God the Son, is manifest; and that no objection exists in the expression εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας being elsewhere applied to the Father, but rather that it is a confirmation of Christ's Deity, has been proved by Dr. Pye Smith. Hence not without reason is it that Prof. Scholz, summing up the evidence on this matter, briefly, but pithily, observes: 'The propriety and usage of the language, the connexion of thought, the stream of interpretation from the earliest times, and the analogy of doctrine, all speak for the common interpretation.'

Of those, however, who thus refer the words to Christ, all are not agreed as to their exact sense. Some ancient and many modern Expositors take ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς to be equivalent to ὁ ὢν ὁ μέγιστος Θεὸς, 'who is the supreme God;' thus making God the Son the supreme over God the Father: a doctrine not only not found in Scripture, but contradictory to what is there found (see 1 Cor. viii. 6. xv. 27, sq. 1 Tim. ii. 5. Phil. ii. 9): a doctrine, too, against which both the ancient and the most eminent modern Theologians alike contend. See Bp. Bull's Defens. Fid. Nic. § 4. That, therefore, cannot be the sense of the passage; to exclude which, some eminent Critics (as Erasmus, Grotius, Schoettg., and Whitby) have been led to give countenance to the Socinian methods of reading and expounding above adverted to. Others (and among them the authors of our common Version), with far more judgment, place a comma after πάντων, taking ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων to signify 'who is Lord over all,' as in John iii. 31, ὁ ἄνωθεν ἐρχόμενος ἐπάνω πάντων ἐστί. Eph. i. 22, sq. Phil. ii. 9. Thus the sense of the passage will be: 'And of whom, as concerning the flesh (i. e. in his human nature), Christ is descended, who is [in that capacity] Lord over all [created beings], being indeed GOD blessed for ever.' For this punctuation, however, there is no confirmation in ancient authority, and still less any support from the usus loquendi. Nor is there any occasion to change the common punctuation, if we only take care to keep out the objectionable interpretation just adverted to, which may very well be done; for the epithet supreme over all, as given to God the Son, will not imply any superiority over God the Father, but only be understood of all created beings. And although some early Christian writers, as Origen, Eusebius, Basil, and Gregory Nyss., are asserted by Socinians to have definitely appropriated the designation ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς to the Father, only and exclusively, yet (as Dr. Pye Smith observes) the learned Venema has satisfactorily shown that those writers, in their endeavours to vindicate the distinct personality of the Father and the Son (against the Sabellians), were indeed accustomed to use the phrase in question as the current designation of the Father, but without any intention of denying its application to the Son; provided that he be understood

6 ἀμήν. [f] Οὐχ οἷον δὲ ὅτι ἐκπέπτωκεν ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεου. f Gen. 17. 7. Num. 23. 19.
7 οὐ γὰρ πάντες οἱ ἐξ Ἰσραὴλ, οὗτοι Ἰσραήλ. [g] Οὐδ' ὅτι εἰσὶ John 8. 39. supra 2. 28.
σπέρμα Ἀβραὰμ, πάντες τέκνα, ἀλλ' ἐν Ἰσαὰκ κληθή- Gal. 6. 16. g Gen. 21. 12. Gal. 4. 23.
8 σεταί σοι σπέρμα. [h] Τουτέστιν, οὐ τὰ τέκνα τῆς σαρκὸς, Heb. 11. 18. h Gal. 4. 28.
ταῦτα τέκνα τοῦ Θεοῦ· ἀλλὰ τὰ τέκνα τῆς ἐπαγγελίας 9 λογίζεται εἰς σπέρμα. [i] Ἐπαγγελίας γὰρ ὁ λόγος οὗτος· i Gen. 18. 10.
Κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον ἐλεύσομαι, καὶ ἔσται τῇ 10 Σάῤῥᾳ υἱός. [k] Οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλὰ καὶ Ῥεβέκκα ἐξ ἑνὸς k Gen. 25. 21. supra 4. 17.

as, in the order of the Deity, subordinate to the Father.

Thus, then, the real sense of the passage will only (as Bp. Pearson says) testify the identity of Christ's Deity with that of the Father; namely, (to use the words of Dr. Smith,) 'the attribution to the Messiah of a superior (i. e. super-human) nature, besides that in which he was descended from the Hebrew Fathers,—a nature to which the highest denomination and the universal dominion and honour of Deity properly belong,—over all, GOD blessed for ever.'

6. 'Quia voti sui fervore quasi in ecstasin raptus fuerat Paulus, jam ad suas docendi partes redire volens, speciem correctionis adhibet, ac si se ipsum ex immodico cruciatu colligeret.' (Calvin.) The correction here spoken of was (as Hyperius remarks) employed for the purpose of meeting a tacit objection, that by the Jews being ἀναθέματα, as was indirectly implied in the preceding verses, the promises of God, of preserving the Jewish people by Christ, would be made void. To which the reply is: 'Even though I were to say that the Jews were ἀναθέματα, the promises of God would not fall to the ground.' The course of reasoning being, 'I do not say this as though I would insinuate that in the rejection of the Jews the word of God (i. e. the Divine promises) had failed of its effect. So far from that, it is rather confirmed. The rejection of the Jews is agreeable to God's former dealings with them; for all the descendants of Israel are not of the true Israelites, to whom the promises were made, God having limited them first to Isaac, vv. 7—9, and then to Isaac's son, Jacob, vv. 10—13, rejecting all the other children. Therefore he now acts in the same manner, by rejecting the unbelieving Jews, and accepting those who, by believing, are the true spiritual Israelites.'

— οὐχ οἷον ὅτι ἐκπέπτωκεν, &c.] In οὐχ οἷον the οἷον is for ὡς, and the phrase, which is highly elliptical, may be rendered in full, 'It is not so that,' or 'Not so would I reason, as that;' q. d. 'But what I have said does not imply that,' &c. So μὴ ὡς ὅτι at 2 Thess. ii. 2. To this we have the antithesis at ἀλλὰ in the next verse. Ἐκπέπτωκε may be rendered, 'had failed of its effect;' lit., 'missed of its aim:' there being here a metaphor taken from archery, as in Plutarch, vi. 240, λόγος ὑπηνέμιος ἐκπίπτων. Thucyd. viii. 81, ἵνα τῶν ὑπαρχουσῶν ἐλπίδων ἐκπίπτοιεν.

7. οὐδ' ὅτι εἰσί, &c.] What now follows, up to ver. 13, illustrates the sentiment,—that the being endued with benefits from God does not depend upon birth and descent. To this purpose the Apostle adduces examples, to which the pride of the Jews (who boasted of their descent from Abraham) could oppose nothing; namely, as being drawn, 1. from the posterity of Abraham himself,—not all of whose descendants, but only the offspring of Isaac, experienced the particular favour of the Lord, to the neglect, in some degree, of the Israelites, the descendants of Keturah; 2. from Isaac, of whose children, not Esau, but Jacob, was, by the Divine dispensation, the destined progenitor and founder of that nation hereafter to be so much favoured. (Koppe.)

— ἀλλ' ἐν Ἰσαὰκ κληθήσεταί σοι σπέρμα] Here we have a breviloquentia common in the Jewish writers, to be supplied as follows: 'for thus was it said, these were the words: In Isaac shall thy seed be called: It is in and by Isaac that thy seed shall be named, and obtain celebrity.'

8. Here it is shown, that whatever difference might exist between Isaac and Ishmael, that was to be ascribed solely to the good pleasure and gracious promise of God. Τέκνα τῆς ἐπ. is for τέκνα ἐπηγγελμένα: the sense being, 'those sons to whom pertain the felicity mercifully promised to Abraham.' Λογίζεται εἰς is for νομίζεται εἶναι.

9. ἐπαγγελίας γὰρ ὁ λόγος οὗτος.] Here we have the same sentiment confirmed from Scripture. The passage alluded to is Gen. xviii. 10, which agrees in sense, though not quite in words, with the Hebrew and the Sept. Wetstein aptly compares Hom. Odyss. λ. 247, περιπλομένου δ' ἐνιαυτοῦ τέξεις ἀγλαὰ τέκνα. On the typical sense here intended, see Chrysostom.

10. The Apostle now goes on to show, that not only did God make a distinction, κατὰ πρόθεσιν αὐτοῦ, among the natural descendants of Abraham, but that even among the descendants of him who was 'the Son of promise,' he made a like distinction; and that, too, in a case where the respective merits of the parties could not be the ground of distinction. Nay, that this reception was determined on before the children were born; and consequently before they could have had any merit or demerit. But if God makes such distinction among the legitimate children of the 'Son of promise,' then the same God may choose, justify, and glorify those who are κλητοὶ in respect to the heavenly inheritance. If it is not unjust, in the one case, to distribute favours κατὰ πρόθεσιν αὐτοῦ, then it is not in the other. (Stuart.)

— οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλὰ, &c.] The construction here is irregular, falling under the head of anacoluthon, by which a sentence is commenced in one syntax, and is afterwards changed into another, the sentence being not finished as it was begun. Thus the proper construction would be: Οὐ μόνον δὲ [τοῦτο], ἀλλὰ καὶ Ῥεβέκκα, ἐξ ἑνὸς κοίτην ἔχουσα ἐῤῥήθη—ὅτι, &c. Κοίτην κοίτην ἔχουσα, Ἰσαὰκ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν· μήπω γὰρ γεννη- 11 θέντων, μηδὲ πραξάντων τὶ ἀγαθὸν ἢ κακὸν, (ἵνα ἡ κατ' ἐκλογὴν πρόθεσις τοῦ Θεοῦ μένῃ, οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων, ἀλλ' ἐκ τοῦ l Gen. 25. 23. καλοῦντος,) [l] ἐῤῥήθη αὐτῇ· Ὅτι ὁ μείζων δουλεύσει 12 m Matt. 1. 2, 3. τῷ ἐλάσσονι· [m] καθὼς γέγραπται· Τὸν Ἰακὼβ ἠγά- 13 πησα, τὸν δὲ Ἠσαῦ ἐμίσησα.

n Deut. 32. 4. 2 Chro. 19. 7. Ps. 92. 15. [n] Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; μὴ ἀδικία παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ; Μὴ γένοιτο! 14 ἔχουσα is, per metalepsin, for συλλαβοῦσα, 'having conceived.'

11. μήπω γὰρ γεννηθέντων—κακόν.] Taken from Gen. xxv. 23, the words μηδὲ πραξάντων—κακὸν being added, to show the Jews that Esau lost the honour of being the root of the people of God, on account of his profaneness in despising that honour (Heb. xii. 16.); and thus all notion of individual merit in either, as to obtaining the Divine benefits, might be removed, and all occasion for objection on the part of the Jews cut off. (Koppe and Macknight.) It is plain from Gen. xxv. 23, 'two nations are in thy womb,' that Jacob and Esau are not spoken of as individuals, but as representing the two nations springing from them; and that the election of which the Apostle speaks is not an election of Jacob to eternal life, but of his posterity to be the visible church and people of God on earth, and heirs of the promises, in their first and literal meaning. Deut. vii. 6, 7. Acts xiii. 17. That this is the election here spoken of, appears from the following circumstances. 1. It is neither said, nor is it true, of Jacob and Esau personally, that 'the elder served the younger;' this being true only of their posterity. 2. Even if Esau had served Jacob personally, and had been inferior to him in worldly greatness, it would have been no proof at all of Jacob's election to eternal life, nor of Esau's reprobation. As little was the subjection of the Edomites to the Israelites, in David's days, a proof of the election or reprobation of their progenitors. 3. The Apostle's professed purpose in this discourse being to show, that an election, bestowed on Jacob by God's free gift, might either be taken from them, or others might be admitted to share therein with them, it is evidently not an election to eternal life, which is never taken away, but to external privileges only. 4. This being an election of the whole posterity of Jacob, and a reprobation of the whole descendants of Esau, it can only mean, that the nation which was to spring from Esau should be subdued by the nation which was to spring from Jacob; and that it should not, like the nation springing from Jacob, be the church and people of God, nor be entitled to the possession of Canaan, nor give birth to the seed in whom all the families of the earth were to be blessed. 5. The circumstance of Esau being older than Jacob was very properly taken notice of, to show that Jacob's election was contrary to the right of primogeniture, because this circumstance proved it to be from pure favour. But if his election had been to eternal life, the circumstance of his age ought not to have been mentioned, because it had no relation whatever to that matter. (Whitby, Taylor, and Macknight.)

— ἵνα, &c.] q. d. '[This was said and done] in order that,' &c. Πρόθεσις is for προαίρεσις: and ἡ κατ' ἐκλογὴν πρόθεσις is well explained by Stuart to mean a purpose which proceeds from one's own free choice; moved by internal, not external, causes or motives. Thus the reasons of the Divine counsels are far from being represented as arbitrary, or ungrounded, but only as being such as are not disclosed, and pertain to God alone. Μένῃ, 'might stand firm,' יעמד, 'be a convincing argument.' Ἐκ τοῦ καλοῦντος, i. e. dependent on the will of the caller, chooser, or bestower.

12. ὁ μείζων.] Like major natu in Latin: and so in Gen. xxix. 16. The meaning is: 'The posterity of Esau the elder shall be compelled to serve that of Jacob the younger;' as is plain from the words preceding, 'two nations are in thy womb.'

13. καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] The full sense is: 'An example of the foregoing truth may be seen in the passage of Scripture where it is written, Jacob,' &c. The best Commentators, both ancient and modern, are agreed, that in Ἰακὼβ and Ἠσαῦ we are not to consider the two brothers personally, but as the founders, the one of the Israelitish, the other of the Idumæan nation, and, in fact, as the nations themselves. They are also agreed, that the terms which indicate the disposition of God towards them are to be interpreted with an attention to the laws of parallelism, and to be understood comparatively, —namely, of greater or less favour and privileges.

14. The Apostle, intending to show the liberty of the Divine choice, brings forward, more Judaico, every thing that can be said in the way of objection, with the answer subjoined. His meaning, then, may be thus expressed: Objection: In having chosen the posterity of Isaac and Jacob for his people, and not the other nations, may not God be charged with injustice, ἀδικία? Ans. By no means; we must not even entertain such a thought. He then proceeds to prove the position, that God may freely choose a certain nation for his people, and reject the rest. This he shows, 1. from the testimonies of Moses, in which God claims to himself this supreme right, vv. 15, 28. 2. from the argument that God, as Creator, hath full power over the created, vv. 19—24. 3. from the predictions uttered concerning the Jews, vv. 25—29. (Schoettg.) In not having bestowed on all the Israelites, but on some only, this blessing, of faith in Jesus Christ, the greater part being left in unbelief, the Apostle shows that God does not act unjustly; a truth which he had before set forth and established, and which he here again inculcates; 1. By laying down the general position, that whatever the Deity doth, that cannot of itself be unjust. 2. By showing that this was no other than the usual mode of God's acting, (which he exemplifies by 15 [o] τῷ γὰρ Μωϋσῇ λέγει· Ἐλεήσω ὃν ἂν ἐλεῶ, καὶ [o] Exod. 33. 19.

16 οἰκτειρήσω ὃν ἂν οἰκτείρω. Ἄρα οὖν οὐ τοῦ θέλοντος, 17 οὐδὲ τοῦ τρέχοντος, ἀλλὰ τοῦ ἐλεοῦντος Θεοῦ. [p] Λέγει [p] Exod. 9. 16 γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ τῷ Φαραώ· Ὅτι εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐξήγειρά σε, ὅπως ἐνδείξωμαι ἐν σοὶ τὴν δύναμίν μου, καὶ ὅπως διαγγελῇ τὸ ὄνομά μου ἐν πάσῃ τῇ γῇ.
18, 19 Ἄρα οὖν ὃν θέλει, ἐλεεῖ· ὃν δὲ θέλει, σκληρύνει. [q] Ἐρεῖς [q] Jer. 49. 19 the case of Pharaoh,) and that it would be both foolish and impious, on that ground, to call God to account (vv. 15—21). 3. That the unbelieving Israelites themselves could not complain of the grace of God being withdrawn from them,—since he had hitherto evinced himself so lenient and indulgent, in bearing with their unbelief and iniquity (v. 22). Finally, he shows that by their unbelief this very benignity of God,—namely, in bringing other nations in their place to the blessings of true religion,—is even more magnified, v. 23, seqq. On these verses see the Notes of Dean Tucker in D'Oyly and Mant.

— τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν;] A customary formula of St. Paul, repelling doubt, or objection, or calumnious interpretation. It is, Grotius observes, longissimè aversantis. Carpzov compares Philo, 99, C., Τί οὖν λεκτέον; μὴ ἔστιν ὑπαίτιον, τὸν Θεὸν ἑαυτῷ μαρτυρεῖν;

15. ἐλεήσω ὃν, &c.] This has nothing to do with final salvation; the general sense being only, that 'God acts, in the distribution of his favours, according to his own pleasure.' In fact, it is (as Koppe says) a phrase, used either when we do not choose, though we can, to give reasons for conferring benefits on another; or when we wish to prevent those whom we benefit from ascribing to them any peculiar merit of their own. The reasoning of the Apostle is this: 'God cannot be unjust because he distributes his favours κατὰ πρόθεσιν αὐτοῦ. He may surely do what he will with his own. Nay, your own Scriptures inculcate the same doctrine, where God is introduced as saying,' &c. Thus the meaning is, that in conferring privileges or favours, whether upon nations or individuals, God acts according to his sovereign pleasure; see Bp. Bull's Apolog. pro Harm. p. 55.

'Even in human judicature (says Dr. S. Clarke, in his Seventeen Sermons, No. 15, p. 346), should an unskilful spectator take upon him to find fault with the sentences of an able and upright judge, might not the judge well express himself in this manner? I will acquit whom I see fit to acquit; and I will condemn whom I see fit to condemn: meaning, not that he would do it arbitrarily, but that, as having the most perfect knowledge of the law and fact, his sentence ought not to be questioned by unskilful spectators.'

16. ἄρα οὖν, &c.] The ἄρα is conclusive; q. d. 'Consequently it follows from what has been said that favours are not obtained by him that willeth, or him that runneth, but through the mercy of God; i. e. (to apply a general sentiment to this particular case) God bestows his favours, not because they are first merited, or acquired by effort, either of strong desire or of strenuous action, but because He has mercy on those who are the objects of His mercy. (Stuart.)

By θέλοντος is denoted strong desire; and by τρέχ. strenuous effort. So Anthol. Gr. iv. p. 134, πίνε καὶ εὐφραίνου· τί γὰρ αὔριον, ἢ τί τὸ μέλλον; οὐδεὶς γινώσκει· μὴ τρέχε, μὴ κοπία. The same metaphor is found in 1 Cor. ix. 24. 26. Hebr. xii. 1. Phil. ii. 16. iii. 14. Gal. ii. 2. The two terms are here united, to express such a strong desire as seeks to effect its object by every means. The general design of the passage is to intimate that man's salvation is to be attributed solely to the mercy of God, not to any merit of his own.

17. Here we have another example of the position laid down at ver. 15; and as the preceding one, taken from Moses, was of favour and acceptance, so is this of rejection and punishment. God raised up and preserved Pharaoh, not in consequence of any merit in him (for he was one of the most presumptuous sinners on record), but that his own Divine power might in the end be more signally displayed in him, and that the miracles wrought for the deliverance of the Israelites might spread the name of Jehovah throughout the whole earth.

— ἐξήγειρά σε, &c.] This is by some understood of Pharaoh's being brought into existence; by others, of his being made monarch of Egypt; by others, again, of his preservation during the various plagues inflicted, especially that of the boils; which last-mentioned sense the LXX. have expressed by διετηρήθης, a free version of the Hebr. העמדתיך. It may be best to unite the two first senses, understanding, 'brought into being as king of Egypt.' So Ps. cxiii. 7, 8. Sept. ὁ ἐγείρων ἀπὸ γῆς πτωχὸν—τοῦ καθίσαι αὐτὸν μετὰ ἀρχόντων, and Josephus, Ant. viii. 11. 1, βασιλεὺς γὰρ ἐξεγείρεται ὑπ' ἐμοῦ.

18. ἄρα οὖν ὃν θέλει—σκληρύνει.] The difficulty in this passage turns on the sense of σκληρύνει, which is, even by the ancient Commentators, variously interpreted. Basil, Origen, and Theophylact think that God, in fact, hardened the heart of Pharaoh by his long suffering, and delay of punishment (whereby the κακία, or guilt, of the offender was increased), in order that, on the measure of his iniquity being filled, the Divine justice in punishing him might be made more manifest. Œcumen. and many others interpret it, 'suffers to be, or grow, hard; thereby leaving him to the exercise of his own free will.' Gregor. Nyss. ap. Œcumen. explains, 'hardens himself.' One or other of which interpretations were adopted by the earlier modern Commentators, until, in the middle of the last century, an original one was proposed by Carpzov, and received by Ernesti and most Commentators down to Wahl; namely, that the expression is to be understood with reference to the antithetical word ἐλεεῖ, and, by the lex oppositionis, is to be rendered, 'treats οὖν μοι· Τί ἔτι μέμφεται; τῷ γὰρ βουλήματι αὐτοῦ τίς

r Isa. 45. 9. & 64. 8. Jer. 18. 6. Wisd. 15. 7. ἀνθέστηκε; [r] Μενοῦνγε, ὦ ἄνθρωπε, σὺ τίς εἶ ὁ ἀνταπο- 20 κρινόμενος τῷ Θεῷ; μὴ ἐρεῖ τὸ πλάσμα τῷ πλάσαντι, Τί s 2 Tim. 2. 20. Jer. 18. 6 με ἐποίησας οὕτως; [s] Ἢ ουκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν ὁ κεραμεὺς τοῦ 21 πηλοῦ, ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ φυράματος ποιῆσαι ὃ μὲν εἰς τιμὴν t Supra 2. 4. 1 Thess. 5. 9. σκεῦος, ὃ δὲ εἰς ἀτιμίαν; [t] Εἰ δὲ θέλων ὁ Θεὸς ἐνδείξασθαι 22 τὴν ὀργὴν, καὶ γνωρίσαι τὸ δυνατὸν αὐτοῦ, ἤνεγκεν ἐν πολλῇ μακροθυμίᾳ σκεύη ὀργῆς κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν· with less kindness.' But though this is agreeable to the context, the evidence for such a signification of the word is weak, merely resting on 2 Chron. x. 4, ἐσκλήρυνε τὸν ζυγὸν, and Job xxxix. 16, ἀπεσκλήρυνε τὰ τέκνα αὐτῆς, of which passages only the latter is at all apposite. The expression (as Koppe observes) plainly has reference to the case of Pharaoh, in the narrative of whose conduct this very word often occurs (as Exod. vii. 3. ix. 12. x. 20. 27. xiv. 4. 8), and in the sense to render obstinate. Besides, the words following, τί ἔτι μέμφεται; have no sense, if they be not referred to obduracy. I would therefore prefer the interpretation of Basil and Origen (adopted by many eminent modern Commentators, from Grotius downwards), of whom the latter regards the expression as founded on the popular mode of thinking and speaking. 'Thus (continues he) good and kind masters sometimes say to servants, who have taken occasion, from that kindness, to harden themselves in disobedience, I have made you bad,—I am the cause of your offences.'

19. The Apostle here anticipates an objection on the part of the Jews, viz., How, then, can this σκληροκαρδία be justly punished by God, God himself being the hardener? How can God feel wrath against sinners, since no one can resist his will? For if he hardens men, they are surely not to blame. (Koppe and Schoettgen.)

— τί ἔτι μέμφεται;] Here, it is plain from the context, we must supply σκληροκαρδίας, ἀπειθείας, or such like; the full sense being, 'Why (or by what justice) does he yet, or now, find fault with us for unbelief and perversity?' Τῷ γὰρ βουλ., &c., 'who has [ever] effectually resisted his will or purpose, the will of his everlasting counsels and purposes?' which carries with it the adjunct sense, 'Who can resist it? and consequently we have only fulfilled his will;' which is (as Mr. Young observes) a well-known answer and excuse of men obstinate in wickedness. See Jerem. ii. 25. xviii. 12.

20. The Apostle does not directly answer the objection, because it was one not proper to be proposed; yet makes some reply to it in the way of reproof, 1. by showing that it is foolish and presumptuous for men to canvass the dispensations of God (vv. 20, 21). 2. That though God has the same power over his creatures, as the potter over the clay, yet that he does not act capriciously or arbitrarily, but that his dealings with the Jews, as with all men, are consistent with his attributes of justice and mercy, vv. 22—24.

— μενοῦνγε, ὦ ἄνθρωπε, &c.] Μενοῦνγε has the force of a strong negation of any thing, with an affirmation of the contrary, 'Nay, but?' The ἄνθρωπε is in direct antithesis with Θεῷ. Σὺ τίς εἶ; suggests, as Chrysostom remarks, the nothingness of man. 'Ανταποκρ. signifies 'to reply in a disputatious spirit.' Comp. Jer. xviii. 2—10, which passage throws much light on the present, from its evident reference, not to individuals, but to nations.

— μὴ ἐρεῖ τὸ πλάσμα, &c.] 'Shall the thing formed (meaning, the creature) say,' &c.? By τὸ πλάσμα is denoted the figure formed by the ὁ πλάσσων, or potter. So Aristophanes, Av. 587 (cited by Wetst.), calls men πλάσματα πηλοῦ, and other Classical writers use the phrase πλάσσειν πηλόν. So also in Plato, de Repub. 1. ii. God is called ὁ πλάσσων, where (as in the preceding passage) there is an allusion to the fiction (borrowed from the Scriptures) of Prometheus forming of clay the first man and woman.

These words are not (as they have been supposed) a quotation from Is. xlv. 9,—not even a quotatio ad sensum,—but simply formed on that passage; and their intent is to stop the mouth of the objector, who leaves an implication of wrong on the part of God in bestowing blessings on some, which he withholds from others; q. d. (by a sort of argumentum ad hominem,) 'Has the creature a right to call in question what is done by his Creator?'

21. ἢ οὐκ ἔχει—πηλοῦ;] Ἢ οὐκ, 'annon.' This use of the Genitive after ἐξουσία, in the sense over, occurs in Matt. x. 1, and John xvii. 2. In the Classical writers it is very rare. The only example I have met with is in Thucyd. v. 50, κατὰ τὴν οὐκ ἐξουσίαν τῆς ἀγωνίσεως. Φύραμα signifies any thing kneaded, especially dough. Σκεῦος is a general term, applied to vessels or utensils of every description. Εἰς τιμὴν and εἰς ἀτιμίαν are to be taken comparatè, 'for more or less honourable uses.' Comp. Wisd. xv. 7, a passage evidently formed on that of Jerem. xviii. 4, 6.

The purpose of the words is to teach, that we ought not to set ourselves up as censors or judges of the dealings of God with man; for shall he not do what he will with his own? Here Chrysostom shows that the sole point of similitude is to the perfect pliancy of the clay to the potter, no reference being had to conduct; so that it can have nothing to do with the question of free will. This is well shown by Dean Tucker, ubi supra, and Bp. Van Mildert, in his Bampt. Lect., p. 381.

22. Here we have a more direct answer to the objection at ver. 19; what had been said being applied to the present case of the Jews and Gentiles.

— εἰ δὲ θέλων, &c.] Some recent Expositors would take the εἰ interrogatively for nonne? or supply ἦν after θέλων. But it is better, with the older Commentators, to suppose an Anantapodoton, or Anacoluthon, supplying οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν;

23 καὶ ἵνα γνωρίσῃ τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ σκεύη
24 ἐλέους, ἃ προητοίμασεν εἰς δόξαν . . . οὓς καὶ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς, 25 οὐ μόνον ἐξ Ἰουδαίων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐξ ἐθνῶν· [u] ὡς καὶ ἐν τῷ [u Hosea 2. 23. 1 Pet. 2. 10.]
Ὠσηὲ λέγει· Καλέσω τὸν οὐ λαόν μου, λαόν μου, 26 καὶ τὴν οὐκ ἠγαπημένην, ἠγαπημένην. [x] Καὶ ἔσται [x Hos. 1. 10.]
ἐν τῷ τόπῳ οὗ ἐῤῥήθη αὐτοῖς· Οὐ λαός μου 27 ὑμεῖς, ἐκεῖ κληθήσονται υἱοὶ Θεοῦ ζῶντος. [y] Ἡσαΐας [y Isa. 10. 22. Infra 11. 5.]
δὲ κράζει ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ· Ἐὰν ᾖ ὁ ἀριθμὸς τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ ὡς ἡ ἄμμος τῆς θαλάσσης, τὸ κατάλειμμα

— θέλων ἐνδείξασθαι τὴν ὀργὴν] 'purposing to display his punitive justice against sin.' So ὀργὴ supra i. 18. Here Wetstein aptly compares Seneca, Controv. i. 2, 'voluerunt dii immortales in hac puellâ ostendere vires suas.' Τὸ δυνατὸν, for τὴν δύναμιν.

— ἤνεγκεν ἐν πολλῇ μακρ.] This is, as Theophylact says, for ὑπομονῇ ἠνέσχετο. By the σκεύη ὀργῆς are evidently meant the Jews, with whose perversity God had so long borne,—that, far from having to complain of severity, if now cast off, they would have to acknowledge much mercy and long-suffering. The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed that the expression is by no means to be taken of individuals created by God for eternal punishment, but of nations. See Chrysost. and Grot. The latter rightly explains κατηρτ. to mean, not 'fitted' (or 'adapted'), but 'fit,' ἕτοιμα, as Chrysostom expounds it, and Tucker understands it. This use of the past participle for a verbal adjective is an idiom of not unfrequent use, and, if borne in mind, will often solve great difficulties.

23. τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης α.] A Hebraism, for 'his most abundant glory.' See supra ii. 4. Similarly it is said in a passage of Philo (cited by Koppe), Θεὸς τὸν περιττὸν πλοῦτον ἐπιδεικνύμενος αὐτοῦ: and a little further on, τὴν ὑπερβολὴν τοῦ πλούτου καὶ τῆς ἀγαθότητος αὐτοῦ. By the σκεύη ἐλέους, as opposed to the σκεύη ὀργῆς, are, of course, meant persons mercifully accepted by God, with reference to the whole body of Christians, whether Jews or Gentiles. See Note on Acts ix. 15.

—προητοίμασεν εἰς δόξαν] 'had fore-ordained for glory.' So Eph. ii. 10, οἷς προητοίμασεν ὁ Θεὸς, ἵνα ἐν αὐτοῖς, &c. Philo-Jud. (cited by Carpzov), ὁ Θεὸς τὰ ἐν κόσμῳ πάντα προητοιμάσατο εἰς ἔρωτα καὶ πόθον αὐτοῦ. Also a Rabbinical writer, cited by Wetstein: 'Rex habebat duos filios; et dixit illis, Filii, vos ambo non præparati estis, nisi ad gloriam meam; etiam ego non præcidam mercedem vestram.'

'The glory here mentioned (says Macknight) is to be understood, not of the glory of eternal life (for the Scripture never speaks of that as bestowed on nations, or bodies of men, complexly), but of the glory of being made the Church and people of God.' Yet the glory (as Grotius remarks) is such as to have its commencement in this life, and its completion in another.

After δόξαν something is evidently wanting, to correspond with ἤνεγκεν above. Tholuck supplies ἐκάλεσε; which, however, is far from accomplishing the purpose. It is better, with Stuart, to supply ἐλέησε, suggested by σκεύη ἐλέους; or rather, we may suppose the ellipsis to be completed from the former part of ver. 23 thus: 'God, desiring that he might make known his rich grace toward the vessels of mercy, which he before prepared for glory, [ἐγνώρισε τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ] ἡμᾶς, οὓς καὶ ἐκάλεσε.'

24. ἐκάλεσεν.] This is explained by Grotius, 'has invited and brought over to obedience;' verbs of counsel and striving being often so taken as to include the event.

25. The ὡς καὶ serves to introduce an illustration. The passage in view is Hos. i. 6—10, blended with ii. 23. The Apostle (as Bp. Horsley observes) first alleges two clauses, but in an inverted order, from the 23d verse of the 2d chapter, which seems to relate more immediately to the call of the Gentiles; 'I will call them my people,' &c., 'and her beloved,' &c. And to these he subjoins, as relating solely to the restoration of the Jews, that part of the prophecy of the first chapter which affirms that 'in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there shall they be called the children of the living God.' From these detached passages thus connected, he derives the confirmation of his proposition concerning the joint call of Jews and Gentiles to the mercy of God.

Some minute differences here exist between the Hebrew, the Septuagint, and the Apostle; but no more than the accommodation of the passage from the restoration of the Jews to the calling of the Gentiles rendered necessary.

27. We have here another passage expressive of the same sentiment.

— κράζει.] This is not a mere Jewish form of citation, as Schoettgen and Wetstein regard it. The expression (signifying palam profitetur) is used with allusion to the loud and authoritative tone which Prophets were authorised to assume. See Note on John vii. 28.

— ὡς ἡ ἄμμος τῆς θαλάσσης.] So great that it cannot be numbered. So Hor. Od. i. 28. 1, 'numeroque carentis arenæ.' Comp. Hom. Il. ι. 385, Οὐδ' εἴ μοι τόσα δοίη, ὅσα ψάμαθός τε κόνις τε.

— τὸ κατάλειμμα] 'the residue [only];' implying that only a small number of them [as compared with those who had perished] will return to the Lord. The context is not redundant, but means, as Bp. Middleton says, 'the remnant or [small] portion of the Israelites reserved by God for the purposes of his promises;' probably with allusion to the name given to the small portion of dough reserved as leaven for the next bread-making, τὸ κατάλειμμα. Similarly Ecclus. xliv. 17, Νῶε—ἐγενήθη κατάλειμμα τῇ γῇ, ὅτε ἐγένετο κατακλυσμός. And so reliquiæ, and sometimes reliqui, in Latin, and 'reliques' in English.

σωθήσεται· λόγον γὰρ συντελῶν καὶ συντέμνων 28
ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ· ὅτι λόγον συντετμημένον ποιήσει Κύριος ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. [z] Καὶ, καθὼς προείρηκεν Ἡσαΐας· 29
Εἰ μὴ Κύριος Σαβαὼθ ἐγκατέλιπεν ἡμῖν σπέρμα, ὡς Σόδομα ἂν ἐγενήθημεν, καὶ ὡς Γόμοῤῥα ἂν ὡμοιώθημεν. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; ὅτι ἔθνη τὰ μὴ διώκοντα 30 δικαιοσύνην κατέλαβε δικαιοσύνην, δικαιοσύνην δὲ τὴν ἐκ πίστεως. [a] Ἰσραὴλ δὲ διώκων νόμον δικαιοσύνης, εἰς νόμον 31 δικαιοσύνης οὐκ ἔφθασε. [b] Διατί; ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, 32
ἀλλ' ὡς ἐξ ἔργων νόμου. Προσέκοψαν γὰρ τῷ λίθῳ τοῦ z Gen. 19. 24. Isa. 1. 9. & 13. 19. Jer. 50. 40. Lam. 3. 22. Ezek. 16. 46. a Infra 10. 2. & 11. 7.

b 1 Cor. 1. 23.

28. λόγον γὰρ, &c.] Λόγον is by some interpreted account; by others, matter, like the Heb. דבר. It would seem that both senses were in the mind of the Apostle, and that he meant, 'will soon settle this account, and cut short the affair.' There is thought to be a reference to Is. x. 23.

29. Here we have another passage on the same subject with the preceding; namely, that it is to be ascribed to the singular goodness of God, that a very small part only (to the exclusion of the great bulk of the Jews) possess the promised felicity. (Koppe.) Bp. Lowth and Koppe think there is here a reference to some invasions of Judæa, made by Resen and Pekah, at the latter end of Jotham's reign. Others think it descriptive of the times of Ahaz, when Judæa was invaded on all sides; by the Syrians and Israelites from the North, by the Edomites from the South, and by the Philistines from the West, 2 Chron. xxviii. 5—19. Whether the sense of the Apostle be an accommodation of that of the Prophet (as most recent Commentators maintain) may be doubted; for it is certain that the Prophets had often a two-fold view; and that under an exoteric sense, referring to political prosperity or adversity, was couched, καθ' ὑπόνοιαν, an esoteric and spiritual one. And as in κατάλειμμα there is a metaphor taken from bread-making, so in σπέρμα there is one from sowing; since it denotes the small remnant left, in the fertile countries of the East, for seed. In which view the Commentators compare Plato, Tim. p. 1044, ἐξ ὧν πᾶσα ἡ πόλις ἐστὶ ταννῦν ὑμῶν, περιλειφθέντος ποτὲ σπέρματος βραχέος.

In ὡμοιώθημεν there is a blending of two modes of expression, which are kept separate in a fine parallelism of Ezek. xxxii.

30. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; &c.] It is plain from the context, that the sense of this somewhat indefinite formula is as follows: 'What, then, are we to say? namely, in the way of inference from what has been urged.' This is intended to introduce a recapitulation of the whole of what the Apostle has been treating of in the present Chapter. The course of reasoning is thus traced by Mr. Young: 'The rejection of the Jews being vindicated, in ch. ix. 6—29, against the objections of the Jew, which would represent it to be contrary to the divine veracity and justice, the Apostle proceeds, ch. ix. 30—33, and x. 1—3, to inquire into the cause both of the rejection of the Jews, and the adoption of the Gentiles to be God's people in their stead; commencing, as usual, from an objection of the Jews, τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; &c.; his reply being understood to this effect: "However strange these things may appear, yet so they are;"—and the ground of the acceptance of the Gentiles to God's favour (viz. their embracing the condition of justification under the Gospel, which is faith in Jesus Christ) being briefly hinted in those few words, thrown in, as it were, in the middle of the objection, ver. 30, δικαιοσύνην δὲ τὴν ἐκ πίστεως, "but that justification which is by faith;" he goes on, ch. ix. 32 to ch. x. 3, to state more at length the ground of the Jews' miscarriage: this he places in that fatal error of theirs concerning the way of justification and acceptance with God; they sought it by the performances of the Law; whereas, it is only to be obtained through the faith of Christ.' The words δικαιοσύνην δὲ τὴν ἐκ πίστεως (scil. διδομένην) are exegetical of the preceding, and explain the kind of justification unto which they had attained, and how obtained. From what follows, it is plain that πίστεως is for τῆς πίστεως, i. e. faith in Christ, which implies a full acceptance of his Gospel, and an obedience to all its requisitions, whether of belief or practice.

31. Ἰσραὴλ δὲ διώκων, &c.] Some would remove the difficulty, which has here caused disagreement, by supposing a pleonasm; others, by supposing an hypallage: methods alike unfounded, unnecessary, and at variance with the antithetical clause εἰς νόμον δικαιοσ. οὐκ ἔφθασε. It is plain, from the next verse, that νόμος must be taken in its ordinary acceptation. The obscurity here has arisen from excessive brevity, and the complete sense is as follows: 'Israel, following after the Law, and aiming at justification from it, yet missed of its aim; not having attained unto a law which could give justification, or unto the law which gives justification, namely, that of Christ.'

32. διατί; ὅτι, &c.] Now follows the reason why God excluded the Jews from the felicity of Christ's kingdom; not because it had been so determined by God by any absolute decree, but because they, priding themselves on their attachment to the Law of Moses, rejected the Gospel of Christ. (Koppe.) The recent Commentators are generally of opinion that what is here adduced from the Old Test. does not properly refer to the Messiah, but is applied by accommodation. That principle, however, is here unnecessary; for the Prophets themselves often intermixed with promises of temporal deliverance encouraging anticipations of that deliverance, both temporal and spiritual, which was to be expected from the Mes-

33 προσκόμματος, [c] καθὼς γέγραπται· Ἰδοὺ τίθημι ἐν c Isa. 8. 14. & 28. 16.
Σιὼν λίθον προσκόμματος, καὶ πέτραν σκαν- Ps. 118. 22. Matt. 21. 42.
δάλου· καὶ πᾶς ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ᾽ αὐτῷ οὐ καται- Luke 2. 34. 1 Pet. 2. 7.
σχυνθήσεται.
1 X. ἈΔΕΛΦΟΙ, ἡ μὲν εὐδοκία τῆς ἐμῆς καρδίας, καὶ ἡ δέησις ἡ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ ἐστιν εἰς 2 σωτηρίαν. [a] Μαρτυρῶ γὰρ αὐτοῖς, ὅτι ζῆλον Θεοῦ ἔχουσιν, a Acts 21. 20. & 22. 3.
3 ἀλλ᾽ οὐ κατ᾽ ἐπίγνωσιν. [b] Ἀγνοοῦντες γὰρ τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ supra 9. 31. Gal. 1. 14.
δικαιοσύνην, καὶ τὴν ἰδίαν δικαιοσύνην ζητοῦντες στῆσαι, τῇ b Supra 9. 31. Phil. 3. 9.
4 δικαιοσύνῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐχ ὑπετάγησαν. [c] Τέλος γὰρ νόμου c Matt. 5. 17. Acts 13. 38.
5 Χριστὸς, εἰς δικαιοσύνην παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι. [d] Μωϋσῆς γὰρ 2 Cor. 3. 13. Gal. 3. 24.
γράφει τὴν δικαιοσύνην τὴν ἐκ τοῦ νόμου, Ὅτι ὁ ποιή- d Lev. 18. 5. Ezek. 20. 11. Gal. 3. 12.

siah. Nay, the Jewish Interpreters themselves refer the words to the Messiah. As to the discrepancies between the Apostle and the Hebrew and Sept., the best mode of adjusting them is to say we have here, properly speaking, no quotation at all. There is merely a reference to what is said in Scripture; and though formed on two passages, Is. viii. 14, and xxviii. 16, the words do not profess to be a citation from either. The latter clause, however, differs scarcely at all from the Sept., but recedes from the Hebrew. It is the opinion, however, of Grotius, Capell, and Randolph, that the LXX. read, not יחיש, but יביש. But this notion seems unfounded; for Pocock, Rosenmuller, and Gesenius have shown that חוש is itself susceptible of that sense. The meaning, however, intended by the Prophet seems to have been, 'he need not flee for fear.'

X. The Apostle now applies himself to correct the fatal error of the Jews concerning justification and acceptance with God, by stating at large the relative nature of the Law and the Gospel as means of justification. (Young.) And first he introduces what he is about to say with the softening expression of affectionate solicitude: 'Brethren, it is the anxious wish of my heart that,' &c.

The reading αὐτῶν, for τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, edited by Griesbach, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz, merits little attention. Internal, as well as external, evidence is against it.

2. μαρτυρῶ αὐτοῖς.] Meaning, 'I bear witness in their favour.' So, in a similar passage of Col. iv. 13, we have μαρτυρῶ γὰρ αὐτῷ, ὅτι ζῆλον πολὺν ἔχει ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν.

— ζῆλον Θεοῦ.] Not 'zeal of God,' as our Common Version renders, but 'a zeal for God and his service;' since nouns of this kind have a Genitive sometimes of subject, and sometimes, as here, of object. The expression is derived from Ps. lxviii. 9. Compare Acts xxi. 20, and xxii. 3.

— οὐ κατ᾽ ἐπίγνωσιν.] Meaning, 'not in conformity with, or regulated by, sound knowledge or true religion,' but proceeding upon ignorance of the true nature and intent of the Law, of which they were such tenacious zealots; not aware that it had ceased and was done away. Similar to the sentiment here is one of Thucyd. i. 68: σωφροσύνην μὲν ἔχετε, ἀμαθίᾳ δὲ πλέονι —χρῆσθε.

3. ἀγνοοῦντες γὰρ, &c.] This is meant to show how they came to be thus ignorant of divine truth, with the means for attaining unto it in their possession. By τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ δικ. is denoted that method of justification (viz. gratuitous, or by faith) which God has revealed in the Gospel of Christ. By ἰδίαν δικ. is meant a justification of their own, i. e. resting on the works of their Law. The Apostle so terms it, because, being a law of works, it made every one's salvation depend upon his own merits; and thus such a law might, in a popular sense, be called a justification of his own. Στῆσαι is the opposite to ἀναιρεῖν, and the metaphor seems derived from the propping up and buttressing of a weak structure, which cannot stand by itself.

— οὐχ ὑπετάγησαν] 'have not obediently accepted.' It was well remarked by an ancient Philosopher, that 'many would have attained unto wisdom, if they had not thought they had already attained unto it.'

4. τέλος γὰρ νόμου X.] Here is more plainly set forth the mode by which God is pleased that men should be brought to salvation by Christ. The term τέλος, however, admits of more than one sense. It may, with some ancient and modern Commentators, be explained, 'Christ hath put an end to, abrogated, the Law, in the case of every believer in him.' This sense, however, is not agreeable to the context. The true one seems to be that of Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators, adopted by Fell, Carpzov, Young, and Dr. Pye Smith, 'Christ is the end, perfection, and accomplisher, or rather the scope, end, and final object of the Law for justification;' as in Acts xiii. 38, sq. The Apostle shows that there is only one justification, and that what the Law attempted, the Gospel fulfils; and therefore he who chooses the one by faith, fulfils the other; whereas he who aims at the other, must miss of this. This benefit of Christ extends to all believers,—Gentiles no less than Jews. 'The proof of the whole,' observes Mr. Young, 'rests (as is expressed in vv. 1—10) upon the impossibility of the condition of justification by the Law, and the easiness of the condition under the Gospel.'

5. The words of this verse are meant to confirm what was just said,—namely, that what the Law did not, and could not, accomplish, Christ completed. For Moses, indeed, says a man is justified by the works of the Law. But then no e Deut. 30. 11, 12. σας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος, ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς· [e] ἡ δὲ ἐκ 6 πίστεως δικαιοσύνη οὕτω λέγει· Μὴ εἴπῃς ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου· Τίς ἀναβήσεται εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν; τοῦτ᾽ ἔστι Χριστὸν καταγαγεῖν· ἤ· Τίς καταβήσεται εἰς τὴν 7 ἄβυσσον; τοῦτ᾽ ἔστι Χριστὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναγαγεῖν.

F 2

f Deut. 30. 14. [f] Ἀλλὰ τί λέγει; Ἐγγύς σου τὸ ῥῆμά ἐστιν, ἐν τῷ 8 στόματί σου, καὶ ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου· τοῦτ᾽ ἔστι τὸ g Matt. 10. 32. ῥῆμα τῆς πίστεως ὃ κηρύσσομεν. [g] Ὅτι ἐὰν ὁμολογήσῃς ἐν 9 τῷ στόματί σου Κύριον Ἰησοῦν, καὶ πιστεύσῃς ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς αὐτὸν ἤγειρεν ἐκ νεκρῶν, σωθήσῃ· καρδίᾳ 10 γὰρ πιστεύεται εἰς δικαιοσύνην, στόματι δὲ ὁμολογεῖται εἰς

one was found able to fulfil it; so that it is not possible to be thus justified. (Chrysostom and Theophylact.) The proof of the above position the Apostle grounds upon the impossibility of legal obedience, and the easy condition of acceptance under the Gospel, and establishes the universality of the proffered acceptance by citations from the Prophets.

5. γράφει τὴν δικ., &c.] In γράφει τὴν δικαιοσύνην we have a popular ellipsis, in which two clauses have coalesced into one; q. d. 'Moses, treating of the justification to be had from the law, thus writes or speaks of it.'

— ζήσεται.] This is generally understood (as also it is explained by the Jewish interpreters) of life eternal, i. e. salvation. Some, however, of the best Commentators and Theologians explain it of life in this world, with an implied notion of happiness and prosperity. It should seem that the words of Moses were meant, under their chief and primary sense, of life and prosperity in this world, to contain an obscure promise of everlasting life.

6—8. Of these somewhat obscure verses the subject is justification by faith; and the admonition meant to be inculcated is to believe and doubt not. This the Apostle expresses in words derived from Deut. xxx. 11—14; and as the phrases 'ascending to heaven' and 'descending to Hades' were proverbially applied (like the in cœlum ire of Juvenal, Sat. iii. 75, and the cœlum petere of Horace, Od. i. 3. 38, to denote a moral impossibility, or at least an extreme difficulty); so there the sense intended is, that 'it is not impracticable to attain a knowledge of God's laws.' And here the Apostle, accommodating the words to his present purpose, and applying them to the Gospel, by the formulas τοῦτ᾽ ἔστι Χριστὸν καταγαγεῖν, and τοῦτ᾽ ἔστι Χρ. ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναγαγεῖν, means to inculcate the facility of exercising faith, and consequently obtaining salvation; q. d. (to use the words of Mr. Turner,) 'The system of the Gospel demands faith, which is comparatively easy of acquisition; it does not require from you any thing of vast difficulty, as if the heavens were to be scaled to bring down Christ, or the abyss of Hades to be fathomed to bring him up [see the Note on John iii. 13. Ed.]; but it asks only what is within the reach of every one, what cannot be withheld without obstinate prejudice,—that is, a belief in its divinity.' The above, however, are perhaps not to be regarded as mere formulas expressive of impossibility or great difficulty, but as meant to advert to those points at which the faith of the unbelievers chiefly staggered; see Theophylact and Carpzov ap. Recens. Synop. By the ἄβυσσον is meant (as the Syr. Translator and Macknight have seen) the place of departed spirits; so called because it was supposed by the Jews to be as far below the surface of the earth as heaven was thought to be above it; see Ps. cxxxix. 8, and Bp. Lowth de Sacr. P. Hebr. p. 200.

The words μὴ εἴπῃς ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου well express that sort of self-confidence in which unbelief usually originates.

8. ἐγγύς σου—καρδίᾳ σου.] The sense is, 'The word, i. e. the doctrine of justification by faith (termed in the next clause, "the word of faith"), is easy to be understood, and demands our faith.' What Moses meant by τὸ ῥῆμα was (as Bp. Bull observes, Harm. Ap. p. 13) præceptum justitiæ activæ, since he immediately subjoins לעשתו 'that thou shouldst do it.' Things obscure or difficult were by the Hebrews said to be far off; while things easy to be attained were said to be nigh.

9, 10. Taken out of the artificial form in which the sentiment is expressed, it would run thus: 'If thou shalt confess and profess with thy mouth, and believe with thy heart, by a vital and influential faith, that Jesus is the Lord, and that God, as such, hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; thy faith shall be counted for righteousness. For with the heart man believeth, and with the mouth confession is made unto justification and salvation;' see 1 John iv. 15, compared with v. 1.

Confession is here first mentioned, as standing first in the passage of Moses. The confessing with the mouth is, indeed, of greater consequence as regards men; and the believing with the heart, as respects God. For it is well observed by Origen, Exhort. ad Martyr.: Ἔστι γε εἰπεῖν, ὅτι μᾶλλον ἔστι τοῖς χείλεσι τιμᾶν τὴν καρδίαν πόῤῥω ἔχοντα ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, ἤπερ τῇ καρδίᾳ τιμᾶν αὐτὸν, τοῦ στόματος μὴ ὁμολογοῦντος. 'We may better talk of honouring God with our lips, while the heart is far from him, than of honouring him with the heart, while the mouth does not confess him to salvation.' Indeed, as Dr. Gloucester Ridley observes, the true saving faith, at the same time that it informs the understanding, influences the will and affections.

11 σωτηρίαν. [h] Λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφή· Πᾶς ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' h Isa. 49. 23. supra 9. 33.
12 αὐτῷ οὐ καταισχυνθήσεται. [i] Οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολὴ i Acts 10. 34, 35. & 15. 9.
Ἰουδαίου τε καὶ Ἕλληνος· ὁ γὰρ αὐτὸς Κύριος πάντων, supra 3. 22, 29.
13 πλουτῶν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους αὐτόν. [k] Πᾶς γὰρ, 1 Tim. 2. 5 Eph. 1. 7. & 2. 4, 7.
ὃς ἂν ἐπικαλέσηται τὸ ὄνομα Κυρίου, σωθήσεται. k Joel 2. 32. Acts 2. 21.
14 [l] Πῶς οὖν ἐπικαλέσονται εἰς ὃν οὐκ ἐπίστευσαν; πῶς δὲ l John 15. 22.
πιστεύσουσιν οὗ οὐκ ἤκουσαν; πῶς δὲ ἀκούσουσι χωρὶς κηρύσ-15 σοντος; [m] πῶς δὲ κηρύξουσιν ἐὰν μὴ ἀποσταλῶσι; Καθὼς m Isa. 52. 7. Nahum 1. 15.
γέγραπται· Ὡς ὡραῖοι οἱ πόδες τῶν εὐαγγελι-

11. πᾶς] 'every one,' whether Jew or Gentile. See v. 5. ix. 17. 33.

12. οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολή] 'no distinction.' See Note on iii. 22.

— ὁ αὐτὸς—πάντων.] Meaning, 'The same person (i. e. one and the same person) is Lord of all, both Jews and Gentiles.' Πλουτῶν, i. e. abundant. Εἰς, 'in respect,' namely, to some quality which those who call upon him need; either χάριτι, or χρηστότητι. So Eph. i. 7, πλοῦτος χάριτος, and Rom. ii. 4, πλοῦτος χρηστότητος. The same expression, too, occurs in Philostr. Vit. Ap. iv. 8, ἐς τὸ κοινὸν πλουτεῖν. Ἐπικαλεῖσθαι is here to be understood of every kind of precatory address to God. See Bp. Bull's Harm. Ap. p. 43.

13. Κυρίου.] The original word for this (in Joel ii. 32) is יהוה (Jehovah), whence it is certain that the Prophet speaks these words of the true and only God; and yet it is as certain that the Apostle here ascribes them to our Lord Jesus Christ, from the words following, 'How shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed?' For the Apostle in this whole Chapter discourses of faith in Christ, and from the words foregoing, of which these are a proof, and to which they are connected by the particle γάρ; for those words, 'whosoever believeth in him shall not be ashamed,' are spoken by the Prophet Isaiah, of Jesus Christ the Corner-stone (Isaiah xxviii. 16). And so they are interpreted by St. Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 6, 7. And in the Prophet Joel these words follow, εὐαγγελιζόμενοι οὓς Κύριος προσκέκληται, 'and the evangelised, whom the Lord shall call, shall be saved.' Here, then, we have two arguments for the Divinity of Christ:—1. That what is spoken of Jehovah is ascribed to him; 2. That he is made the object of our religious invocation. (Whitby.) This criticism is ably supported by Bp. Pearson on the Creed, p. 149, and by Bp. Bull, Harm. Apost. C. v. § 1. 4.

14, 15. On the scope of these and the following verses some difference of opinion exists. Grotius, Hammond, and Stuart suppose them to contain an objection, on the part of the Jews, to the Apostle's argument as to the necessity of calling on Christ in order to be saved, on the ground that they had not sufficient opportunities of knowing the truth, &c. To which the Apostle replies at vv. 16, 17. This view, however, rests on no sufficient proof. It should rather seem (according to the opinion of most Commentators, ancient and modern) that the words are from the Apostle himself. And the scope of the passage is well traced by Mr. Young as follows: 'Since the Jews were very greatly offended by the preaching of the Gospel to the Gentiles, and were, in a more peculiar manner, exasperated against St. Paul on that account (see Acts xxii. 2. 1 Thess. ii. 16), the Apostle takes occasion, from this last text of Scripture, to vindicate the Divine commission of himself and the rest of the Apostles to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles: this he does, 1st, From the necessity of the case; for if it was God's good pleasure, as the Prophets signified beforehand, to grant repentance unto life to the Gentiles, it must certainly have been his intention that the offer of salvation should be properly made to them, ver. 14; 2ndly, From the wonderful success which attended the preaching of the Gospel among the Gentiles, according to the saying of Isaiah, lii. 7, which showed that God's blessing and aid went with the work.'

14. πῶς οὖν ἐπικαλέσονται, &c.] The οὖν here denotes, as Crellius remarks, not conclusion, but deduction or simple relation, and may be rendered now. The force and beauty of the sentiment is much increased by its being thrown into the form of a Sorites of four members (as supra v. 3. 5. viii. 29, 30. James i. 15. 2 Pet. i. 5. 7), proceeding from effects to causes. See the researches of Crellius and Hyperius, especially the latter, who has ably traced the course of argument, which is, he shows, drawn 'a causa finali seu effectu fidei tendente ad Dei gloriam.' The sentiment, he observes, will be clearer if the interrogations be removed, and the whole resolved into the declarative form, thus: 'Ut aliqui Deum invocent, oportet prius credant. Ut credant, oportet prius audiant Evangelium. Ut audiant, oportet esse qui doceant. Ut aliquem doceant, oportet eos a Deo mitti.'

15. καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] The connexion is obscure. It may be that traced by Mr. Young. But more probable is the one laid down by Prof. Stuart, as follows: 'The importance of the heralds of salvation in order to bring men to believe on a Saviour is implied in the high commendation which the Saviour bestows on them, according to what is written,' &c. Such, too, was the view of the connexion adopted by Calvin.

— ὡς ὡραῖοι, &c.] The words are from Isaiah lii. 7; and though by most recent Commentators supposed not to have reference to the times of the Messiah; yet, since it appears from the Rabbinical citations of Wetstein that the Jews themselves so understood it, there is no reason to lower this to a mere accommodation; but we may suppose that the Prophet here, as in very many other passages, couches under the primary and literal (which referred to the messengers who ζομένων εἰρήνην, τῶν εὐαγγελιζομένων τὰ ἀγαθά!

n Isa. 53. 1. John 12. 38. supra 3. 3. [n] Ἀλλ' οὐ πάντες ὑπήκουσαν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ· Ἡσαΐας γὰρ 16 λέγει· Κύριε, τίς ἐπίστευσε τῇ ἀκοῇ ἡμῶν; Ἄρα ἡ 17
o Ps. 19. 6. Col. 1. 6, 23. πίστις ἐξ ἀκοῆς, ἡ δὲ ἀκοὴ διὰ ῥήματος Θεοῦ. [o] Ἀλλὰ λέγω· 18
Μὴ οὐκ ἤκουσαν; Μενοῦνγε εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν ἐξῆλθεν ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν, καὶ εἰς τὰ πέρατα τῆς οἰκουp Deut. 32. 21. infra 11. 11. μένης τὰ ῥήματα αὐτῶν. [p] Ἀλλὰ λέγω· Μὴ οὐκ 19
ἔγνω Ἰσραήλ; πρῶτος Μωϋσῆς λέγει· Ἐγὼ παραζηλώσω brought the first news of the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity), a secondary and mystical sense. The latter, indeed, is here indispensable to make the argument conclusive; as is well pointed out by Crellius, who freely admits the mystical sense.

Here the Apostle has not cited from the Septuagint version (which is manifestly corrupt), but given a new rendering of the Hebrew, with the omission of the unimportant words 'upon the mountains.' Unless (which I rather suspect) the LXX. in the time of St. Paul read ὡς ὡραῖοι οἱ πόδες ἐπὶ τῶν ὀρέων, afterwards corrupted (the οι being absorbed in the οἱ following) into ὡς ὥραι οἱ πόδες, and ὡς ὥραι ἐπὶ τῶν ὀρέων οἱ πόδες. By ὡραῖοι is meant grateful, acceptable; and by οἱ πόδες, 'the approach.' So Acts v. 9, ἰδοὺ οἱ πόδες τῶν θαψάντων. Thus, then, the feet of the messengers is put, not (as many explain) poetically for the messengers themselves, but for their approach; as in Eurip. Orest. 1217, παρθένου δέχου πόδας. For 'by their approach (as Bp. Jebb observes, Sacr. Lit. p. 126) is excited the idea of their progress towards us: we admire them yet afar off; our imagination kindles at the prospect of good things to come.' The figure is well illustrated from Soph. Elect. 1358, Ὦ φίλταται μὲν χεῖρες, ἥδιστον δ' ἔχων Ποδῶν ὑπηρέτημα, where the Scholiast, on the words ποδῶν ὑπηρέτημα, remarks, διὰ γὰρ τούτων τὰ πρὸς σωτηρίαν ἡμῖν ὑπηρέτησας.

Finally, the terms εἰρήνην and τὰ ἀγαθὰ are, by parallelism, synonymous, and denote what St. Paul, Eph. vi. 15, calls τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς εἰρήνης.

16. ἀλλ' οὐ πάντες ὑπήκουσαν, &c.] Here, as Crellius, Locke, and Taylor remark, we have the Jewish objection; q. d. 'But not all, nay, very few, have hearkened to this good news from heaven; which is strange, and may be thought some disparagement of a Divine commission.' The answer, then, to this will be found contained in the words following, where something from the preceding sentence must be repeated; q. d. 'True; very few have hearkened to the Gospel; insomuch that we may say, in the words of Isaiah, Who hath believed,' &c. This is not, indeed, to be considered as a mere accommodation of that passage. The Apostle (as Chrysostom, Theodoret, and Hyperius well point out) meant, by its introduction, to argue that the want of success complained of was foreseen and predicted by the Prophet, and, therefore, ought to be no well-founded objection to the Divine commission of the Apostle, or any reason why the ministers of the Gospel should not preach to all.

— Ἀκοῇ] 'preaching,' 'doctrine,' שמעה.

17. ἄρα ἡ πίστις, &c.] The ἄρα is conclusive; and, as Koppe remarks, the passage is of a similar kind to that at vv. 14, 15, being meant to inculcate the necessity of the Evangelical office, and to vindicate the Divine authority of the Christian religion against the Jews; q. d. as Abp. Newcome expresses it, 'Hearing is necessary to faith, which justifies our preaching, and the revelation of God to preachers which we have received is necessary to qualify us for being heard.'

18. ἀλλὰ λέγω· Μὴ, &c.] q. d. 'but though all have not obeyed the Gospel (ὑπήκουσαν), yet all have heard it, ἤκουσαν; it being meant, that 'how great soever the mass of incredulity might be, it must be attributed altogether to the perverseness and malignity of the hearers, and by no means to any want of diligence in the teachers, who had indeed most zealously fulfilled their commission; insomuch that what the Psalmist says concerning that universal teaching even to the Gentiles by which "the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handy-work," may fitly be applied to the preaching of the Apostles.' Two examples of a similar accommodation of the words of the Psalmist are adduced by Schoettgen from a Rabbinical writer; and a similar sentiment is adduced by Carpzov, from Philo. Agreeable to the above is the view adopted by Hyperius.

This quotation agrees verbatim with the Sept. and also with the Heb., except that it has the word קום rendered line, which discrepancy Dr. Randolph and others seek to remove by supposing that the LXX. read קולם: an ingenious conjecture, but not necessary to be adopted; for (as Rosenmuller and others have seen) קו may have been taken by the Sept. in the sense chord, which, by metonymy, will denote sound. Thus there will be a parallelism with the clause following. At all events, the Apostle followed the Sept. because it was more suitable to his accommodation of the words to the propagation of the Gospel throughout the whole world.

19—21. By way of reconciling these things to their belief, the Apostle now shows that both the preaching of the Gospel to the Gentiles, and their joyful acceptance of it, and the rejection of the Jews, had been foretold by their own Prophets. (Young.)

19. At ἔγνω supply τοῦτο, meaning the promulgation of the Gospel not only to the Jews, but to all nations. Here the interrogative with the negative implies a strong asseveration; q. d. 'But, I say, did not Israel know that, upon their unbelief, the Gentiles would be adopted, and made partakers of the privileges of the Gospel?' Yes, surely they did, or might; for Moses, first, tells,

ὑμᾶς ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνει, ἐπὶ ἔθνει ἀσυνέτῳ παροργιῶ 20 ὑμᾶς. [q] Ἡσαΐας δὲ ἀποτολμᾷ καὶ λέγει· Εὑρέθην τοῖς [q] Isa. 65. 1. supra 9. 30.
ἐμὲ μὴ ζητοῦσιν, ἐμφανὴς ἐγενόμην τοῖς ἐμὲ μὴ 21 ἐπερωτῶσι. [r] Πρὸς δὲ τὸν Ἰσραὴλ λέγει· Ὅλην τὴν [r] Isa. 65. 2. ἡμέραν ἐξεπέτασα τὰς χεῖράς μου πρὸς λαὸν ἀπειθοῦντα καὶ ἀντιλέγοντα. [a] Jer. 31. 37. 1 Sam. 12. 22.
1 XI. [a] ΛΕΓΩ οὖν· Μὴ ἀπώσατο ὁ Θεὸς τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ; 2 Cor. 11. 22. Phil. 3. 5.

&c. [speaking in the person of God]. The words (taken from Deut. xxxii. 21) agree with both the Hebrew and Sept., except that ὑμᾶς is, for accommodation sake, put for αὐτούς.

— ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνει.] Supply ὄντι. The meaning being, 'not a people of God by any peculiar covenant.' By ἀσυνέτῳ, as Grotius observes, is to be understood, not simply foolish, but affected with the folly of idolatry, than which no folly can be greater; the not having the knowledge of the one true God, which is the only true wisdom. Παραζηλώσω and παροργιῶ signify, 'I will excite your jealousy by conferring on them benefits which you thought belonged exclusively to you.' Ἐπὶ has here the sense respecting.

20. Ἡσαΐας δὲ ἀποτολμᾷ, &c.] The δὲ signifies imo verò. In ἀποτολμᾷ (a word not unfrequent in the Classical writers) the ἀπὸ is intensive, as ἐκ often is. Ἀποτολμᾷ καὶ λέγει is put, per Hendiadyn, for ἀποτόλμως λέγει, 'pronounces confidently;' i. e. tells them the plain truth, however it might offend their prejudices.

— εὑρέθην τοῖς, &c.] The words are from Is. lxv. 1, 2; but the two members of the sentences are, for the better understanding of the subject, taken in inverse order. The subject is the rejection of the Jews, and the adoption, in their place, of the Gentiles. The sense of the two parts of the parallelism will become plainer by mutual comparison. For, as Koppe and Rosenmuller observe, 'God is said εὑρίσκεσθαι and ἐμφανῆ γενέσθαι, when he by his benefits excites men to worship and obey him; and the terms ζητεῖν and ἐπερωτᾷν, like the Heb. בקש and שאל, are synonyms used to denote devout worship of God.'

21. That the Jews might not have to say, 'Thou wast found by the Heathen, but with us thou didst not choose to hold intercourse,' the Apostle subjoins, 'All day long I have stretched forth,' &c. (Theophylact.)

— πρὸς δὲ τὸν, &c.] The πρὸς should not be rendered to or against, but concerning. With the exception of a slight transposition, the words agree with the Sept.; but ἀπειθοῦντα and ἀντιλέγοντα have only one term corresponding to them in the Hebrew, namely, סורר. Hence some Critics suspect that they are a blending of two versions of the Hebrew word; one being a gloss on the other. It is more probable that the Translators used two words, in order to more accurately represent the force of the single Hebrew term: and ἀντιλέγοντα may indeed be taken as the stronger term; since, to disown all obedience, and at once avow refusal to obey, is worse than tacit disobedience. In ἐξεπέτασα we have, as Paræus says, 'metaphora a matribus, quæ petulantes pueros passis ulnis ad se revocant, venientes complecti paratæ.' So Dionys. Hal. vi. 86, ἀλλ' αὐτὴ καλεῖ, καὶ ἀντιβολεῖ, καὶ τὰς χεῖρας ὑμῖν ἅμα ταῖς πύλαις ἀναπετάσασα ὑποδέξεται. Plutarch, Vit. Dionys. § 29, ὀρέγων τὰς χεῖρας τοῖς Συρακουσίοις.

XI. Having thus plainly asserted the rejection of the Jews, and the reception of the Gentiles into their place as the people of God (and this without having yet made any particular explanations or limitations), the Apostle now proceeds to suggest various considerations [relative to the nature of the judgment which had come upon the Jewish nation, and to the plan and purpose of God in thus casting off his ancient people], in order thereby to correct the erroneous views which his countrymen might entertain in regard to those declarations [and keep alive the embers of piety which the exclusion of all hope would quite extinguish]. The Jew would very naturally ask (as Paul suggests in ver. 1), 'Is it true, then, that God has actually cast his people away, to whom pertained the adoption, and the glory, and the covenant, and the promises? Can this be consistent with his veracity?' These questions the Apostle, anticipating them, proceeds in ch. xi. to answer, showirg, vv. 1—5, that now, as formerly in times of the greatest declension, God has still a remnant among his people, who are true believers, i. e. belong to the spiritual seed of Abraham. But this remnant are those whom the election of God according to his purposes of grace has made the subjects of his mercy, and who are not saved by their own merits; while the rest are given up to their own hardness of heart and blindness of mind, even as their own Scriptures have expressly foretold, vv. 6—10. Yet it will not always remain thus. The whole of the nation will, at some future day, be brought within the pale of the Christian Church. Their present general unbelief is now the occasion of the Gospel being preached to the Gentiles, and of the increase of the Christian Church among them; so that even their rejection has been the occasion of blessings to others. How much more, then, is to be hoped from their general return to God! vv. 11—15. This return must take place. The nation, from its origin, was consecrated to God, and must yet return to him; for although some of its branches were broken off because of unbelief, and others were grafted in to supply their place, yet in due time they will be again received. The Gentiles, therefore, who have been thus grafted in, can have no reason to indulge in pride and boasting on account of this. They are cautioned against such a spirit, and exhorted to guard with the greatest watchfulness against unbelief, since this would occasion them also to be rejected. Nor ought they to demean themselves loftily towards the Jews, who were yet to be

Μὴ γένοιτο! καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ Ἰσραηλίτης εἰμὶ, ἐκ σπέρματος Ἀβραὰμ, φυλῆς Βενϊαμίν. Οὐκ ἀπώσατο ὁ Θεὸς τὸν λαὸν 2 b Supra 8. 29. αὐτοῦ, [b] ὃν προέγνω. Ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε ἐν Ἠλίᾳ τί λέγει ἡ γραφή; ὡς ἐντυγχάνει τῷ Θεῷ κατὰ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, [λέγων·]
c 1 Kings 19. 10. [c] Κύριε, τοὺς προφήτας σου ἀπέκτειναν, καὶ τὰ 3 θυσιαστήριά σου κατέσκαψαν· κἀγὼ ὑπελείφθην d 1 Kings 19. 18. μόνος, καὶ ζητοῦσι τὴν ψυχήν μου. [d] Ἀλλὰ τί λέγει 4 αὐτῷ ὁ χρηματισμός; Κατέλιπον ἐμαυτῷ ἑπτακισχιλίους ἄνδρας, οἵτινες οὐκ ἔκαμψαν γόνυ τῇ Βάαλ.
e Supra 9. 27. [e] Οὕτως οὖν καὶ ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ λεῖμμα κατ' ἐκλογὴν 5 received back to the divine favour, and fully restored as the people of God, vv. 16—27. Although they are now enemies of the Gospel, good comes to the Gentiles through this; and the promises made to their fathers of old are not forgotten, and will yet be fully carried into execution, vv. 28, 29. They, although now in a state of unbelief, will obtain mercy in the like manner as the Gentiles have obtained it, who were once in the same state, vv. 30, 31. For God had shown both Gentiles and Jews that they were alike included in unbelief, and justly subject to the condemning sentence of the Law; and he has suffered them to come into such a state, that he might display, in the most signal manner, his mercy towards them, ver. 32. The ways and judgments of God, in his proceedings with Jews and Gentiles, are beyond the reach of human wisdom: they are deep, unfathomable mysteries, which can be fully searched out and known only by the Infinite Mind. (Stuart.)

1. Concerning the nature of the rejection, the Apostle, speaking in the person of a Jewish objector, inquires whether it will be total and universal,—whether God has utterly cast off his people? An objection (says Koppe) refuted, 1. by experience; many of the Jews, and, among the rest, Paul himself, being followers of Christ (v. 1); 2. by a familiar example taken from the Old Test., and accommodated to the present purpose, vv. 2—4.

— μὴ ἀπώσατο, &c.] Ἀπώσασθαι is a very strong term, signifying literally to push any thing aside with abhorrence, as a nauseous potion; and, from the adjunct, to push away, cast off. Here it must denote perpetual rejection and total abandonment.

— μὴ γένοιτο! &c.] It is well observed by Grotius, that between μὴ γένοιτο and ἐγὼ γὰρ, &c. there is a sentence left to be supplied, viz. 'For how, then, would it fare with myself?' q. d. 'otherwise I should pronounce reprobation on myself, since I am an Israelite.' By ἐκ σπέρματος (for γένους) Ἀβρ. it is implied, 'and with all the privileges of that descent.'

2. The Apostle solemnly repeats the negation implied in μὴ γένοιτο! meaning to say that the rejection of the Jews here spoken of had no reference to those who, like himself, had received the faith of Christ. See ver. 5.

— προέγνω.] Meaning, 'whose acceptance he foreknew,' 'who he foreknew would be his people.' See Note supra viii. 28—30, and Macknight in loco.

— ἐν Ἠλίᾳ.] Meaning, in that part of the book of Kings which contains the actions of Elijah, namely, the 17th, 18th, and 19th chapters. On which mode of speaking, see Note at Mark xii. 26. The Apostle (as Mr. Young observes) means to argue, that as in the general apostasy in the days of Elias there was still a small remnant who had not bowed the knee to Baal, so there was now a remnant of converted Jews, who were comprehended in the election of grace, together with the believing Gentiles.

— ἐντυγχάνει.] This verb properly signifies, with the Dative of person, 'to have an interview with any one;' and as this is sometimes in behalf of another, so the verb also takes ὑπὲρ with a Genitive. But it is likewise applied (as supra viii. 26, where see Note) to a representation made against any one, as here and in 1 Macc. viii. 32. x. 61, 63. xi. 25, with or without κατά.

3. κατέσκαψαν] 'have dug down;' κατασκάπτω signifying to overthrow any thing by digging under it; consequently the term is very applicable to the destruction of edifices so solid as to be destroyed in no other way.

— κἀγὼ ὑπελείφθην μόνος.] Meaning, 'I alone of the Prophets am left.' Similar to this is a sentiment occurring in Aristoph. Plut. 1060, οὐ γὰρ εὑρήσεις ἐμοῦ ζητῶν ἔτ' ἄνδρα τοὺς τρόπους βελτίονα. Μὰ τὸν Δί'! οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἄλλος πλὴν ἐγώ.

4. ὁ χρηματισμὸς] 'the Divine response.' The word is used, like χρηματίζειν, of every extraordinary method by which God made his will known to men. Here, however, it has reference to that still small voice, the Bath-Col, 1 Kings xix. 12. Κατέλιπον, 'I have left to me,' 'there are left to me.' In ἑπτακισχιλίους we have a numerus finitus pro indefinito, meaning a considerable number.

— τῇ Βάαλ.] The masculine form is generally found in the Old Test., though sometimes the feminine. Indeed, as Selden de Diis Syris says, the god was supposed to be of both sexes, designating either the sun or the moon. In the former capacity it was worshipped (under the form of a bull) by the men; in the latter, by the women. Here, however, some would suppose an ellipsis of εἰκόνι.

5. 'Applicat exemplum ad suam ætatem: et quo faciat omnia similia, reliquias vocat, præ ingenti scilicet illo numero, cujus ob oculos versabatur impietas.' (Calvin.)

— κατ' ἐκλογὴν χάριτος.] Meaning, 'according to a gratuitous election to Christian privileges, not made on the ground of merit, but of free grace and mercy.'

6 χάριτος γέγονεν. [f] Εἰ δὲ χάριτι, οὐκ ἔτι ἐξ ἔργων· ἐπεὶ ἡ f Deut. 9. 4. supra 4. 4, 5.
χάρις οὐκ ἔτι γίνεται χάρις· [εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων, οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶ 7 χάρις· ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶν ἔργον.] [g] Τί οὖν; ὃ g Supra 9. 31. & 10. 3.
ἐπιζητεῖ Ἰσραὴλ, * τοῦτο οὐκ ἐπέτυχεν, ἡ δὲ ἐκλογὴ ἐπέ-8 τυχεν· οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ ἐπωρώθησαν· [h] καθὼς γέγραπται· Ἔδω- h Isa. 6. 9. & 29. 10.
κεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεὸς πνεῦμα κατανύξεως, ὀφθαλμοὺς Matt. 13. 14. John 12. 40.
τοῦ μὴ βλέπειν, καὶ ὦτα τοῦ μὴ ἀκούειν, ἕως τῆς Acts 28. 26.
9 σήμερον ἡμέρας. [i] καὶ Δαυὶδ λέγει· Γενηθήτω ἡ τρά- i Ps. 69. 22 πεζα αὐτῶν εἰς παγίδα καὶ εἰς θήραν, καὶ εἰς σκάν-

6. εἰ δὲ χάριτι—χάρις.] We have here (as Calvin and Hyperius observe) an amplification taken from a comparison of contraries, of which, if one of them be supposed, the other is excluded; q. d. 'Man must be saved either by grace, or by works of merit: but he is saved by grace; therefore in no wise by works.' Or, as Abp. Newcome explains, 'Now if this admission into the Gospel covenant be thus freely bestowed, it cannot arise from works; for then favour would lose its nature, and would become just retribution, and not free donation.'

The two last clauses εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων—ἔργον are omitted in 7 MSS., the Copt., Arm., Æth., and Vulg. Versions, in some Greek, and in most of the Latin Fathers; are rejected by Erasmus, Grotius, Mill, Semler, Gratz, Koppe, and Stuart; bracketed by Tittman and Vater, and cancelled by Griesbach, Newcome, and Scholz; but I think without sufficient reason. For, 1. the Versions in question are very inferior in weight to the Syriac and Arabic ones, which have the clause; 2. there is no proof that Chrysostom and Theodoret had not the words in their copy, since the latter often passes by clauses for the sake of brevity, and the former omits what is unsuitable to the purpose of a homily; though it has been shown by Matthæi that words and clauses are often omitted in MSS. for no better reason than that Chrysostom does not treat on them. The antiquity of this passage is attested by its being found in the Peschito Syriac Version, and the most ancient of MSS., the Vatican 1209. It may be added, that the MSS. in which it is not found are such as have been noted for various kinds of alteration. The valuable Venice MSS. recently collated by Rinck all have the clause.

7. τί οὖν;] scil. ἐροῦμεν, 'What conclusion shall we draw from what has been said [but this]?' Some, indeed, take the meaning to be, 'What is the sum and substance of what has been said?' But it has been fully shown by Hyperius that the formula τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; has the force of illation, or conclusion.

— ὃ ἐπιζητεῖ Ἰσραὴλ] 'what the people of Israel collectively (i. e. the bulk of the people) seek, [namely, justification and acceptance with God by their own merit,] they have not obtained.'

— τοῦτο.] This, instead of τούτου, found in all the early Editions and many of the best MSS., was adopted by Mill and Wetstein, and has been edited by Matthæi, Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz, rightly; since, while no reason can be given for the change of τούτου into τοῦτο by the scribes, that of τοῦτο into τούτου may very well be accounted for.

— ἡ δὲ ἐκλογὴ ἐπέτυχεν.] Meaning, 'This has been confined to the believing few, who separated themselves from the rest, and were the chosen of Christ;' ἡ ἐκλογὴ being for οἱ ἐκλεκτοὶ (abstract for concrete, as ii. 26. iii. 30. xv. 8), denoting the λεῖμμα κατ' ἐκλογὴν χάριτος at ver. 5, that very small but select and choice portion of the Jewish nation, which had faith in Christ, and thus obtained justification and acceptance.

— ἐπωρώθησαν] 'became hardened, or hardened themselves;' for the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed that the Passive is for the reciprocal, as in John xii. 40. Of course this is to be understood with the permission of God; and therefore, as Young says, 'judicially, in consequence of their impenitence, and rejection of all the means employed by God for their conversion.'

8. The sentiment is now confirmed from various passages of the Old Test., where the Prophets upbraid the Jews for a similar hardness of heart.

— καθὼς γέγραπται] 'agreeably to what is said.' This is not an exact quotation from any part of Scripture; but it most resembles Isaiah xxix. 10; and the sentiment of the latter passage is to be found in vi. 9. Ezek. xii. 2. Πνεῦμα κατανύξεως is by the best Commentators explained, a state of mind stupid and destitute of all sense of good and evil. The words ὀφθαλμοὺς—ἀκούειν are taken from Deut. xxix. 4, καὶ οὐκ ἔδωκε, &c., and must, as all the best Commentators are agreed, be understood of permitting them to become such. They have been well paraphrased by Theophylact thus: 'having eyes to see the miracles, and ears to hear the instructions of the Lord and the Apostles, yet (by a judicial infatuation) so as not to use either of them to the purpose intended.'

— ἕως τῆς σήμερον ἡμέρας.] The Apostle means by these words to intimate that this their obduracy had continued unto this present time.

9. γενηθήτω ἡ τράπεζα, &c.] As against those who had inflicted injuries on him, evils are denounced by the Psalmist, similar in kind (q. d. Would that their own table may be made bitter by misery and misfortune, and the food provided for their strengthening, turn to their utter injury, σκάνδαλον); so here, by accommodation, condign punishment is invoked on the Jews for their injurious treatment of the Messiah. Εἰς ἀνταπόδομα α., 'for a retribution upon them.' So Eccles. xiv. 6, καὶ τοῦτο ἀνταπόδομα τῆς κακίας αὐτοῦ: q. d. 'May δαλον καὶ εἰς ἀνταπόδομα αὐτοῖς. Σκοτισθήτωσαν 10 οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτῶν τοῦ μὴ βλέπειν, καὶ τὸν νῶτον k Acts 13. 46. supra 10. 19. αὐτῶν διαπαντὸς σύγκαμψον! [k] Λέγω οὖν· μὴ ἔπται- 11 σαν, ἵνα πέσωσι; Μὴ γένοιτο! ἀλλὰ τῷ αὐτῶν παραπτώ-l Acts 9. 15. & 13. 2. μάτι ἡ σωτηρία τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, εἰς τὸ παραζηλῶσαι αὐτούς.

& 22. 21. infra 15. 16. Εἰ δὲ τὸ παράπτωμα αὐτῶν πλοῦτος κόσμου, καὶ τὸ ἥττημα 12
Gal. 1. 16. & 2. 7, 8. αὐτῶν πλοῦτος ἐθνῶν· πόσῳ μᾶλλον τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῶν;
Eph. 3. 8. 1 Tim. 2. 7. [l] Ὑμῖν γὰρ λέγω τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, (ἐφ' ὅσον μέν εἰμι ἐγὼ ἐθνῶν 13
2 Tim. 1. 11. m Supra 9. 3. 1 Cor. 9. 22. ἀπόστολος, τὴν διακονίαν μου δοξάζω,) [m] εἴ πως παραζηλώσω 14 such evils be a retribution on them, for the injuries they have done to me!'

The words εἰς θήραν (found neither in the Sept. nor the Hebrew) are exegetical of εἰς παγίδα, where we have a metaphor taken from birds or beasts being caught by food placed in a trap.

10. σκοτισθήτωσαν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ—βλέπειν] i. e. 'May they fall, like blind persons, headlong into the evils prepared for them!' A not unfrequent mode of expression to denote falling into sudden and irremediable misery.

— καὶ τὸν νῶτον, &c.] i. e. 'make them groan under heavy burdens, which bow down the back with labour;' the whole forming a lively figure of misery and bondage, amply fulfilled in the yet more grievous subjection of the Jews to the Roman yoke, which took place soon after these words were written.

11, 12. λέγω οὖν· μὴ ἔπταισαν, ἵνα πέσ.;] We have here, as Hyperius remarks, an earnest interrogation carrying with it an objection, founded on σκάνδαλον just before; namely, whether what is there said is to be understood to intimate the final casting off of the Jews. For by πέσωσι is denoted an utter and irretrievable fall or ruin; see Hebr. iv. 11, and compare Soph. Œd. Tyr. 146, ἢ γὰρ εὐτυχεῖς, ξὺν τῷ Θεῷ φανούμεθα, ἢ πεπτωκότες;

The answer conveys a negation of the strongest kind,—μὴ γένοιτο! 'God forbid it should be so!' And the reasons for the denial are, as Hyperius shows, subjoined; namely, that this their lapse or stumbling by rejection of the Gospel has been the occasion of its being preached to the Gentiles. In short, 'the Apostle (as Mr. Young observes) shows that all has been done in order to the accomplishment of a plan of the most wonderful and comprehensive goodness; for, 1. The rejection of the Gospel by the Jews (which was the cause of their own rejection by God) was the means of salvation to the Gentiles, through the offer of the Gospel to them, and their embracing it; 2ndly, The fulness of the Gentiles, or their general acceptance of the Gospel, is one of God's remedies for the obduracy of the Jews; εἰς τὸ παραζηλῶσαι αὐτοὺς, ver. 11, by provoking them to jealousy and emulation; and so to a desire of regaining their ancient state of favour with God' (see vv. 11. 14. 25, 26. 31; and compare Deut. xxxii. 21).

At ver. 12 we have, as Hyperius remarks, the second reason for the above denial, and that deduced from the utility which would redound to the Gentiles from this restoration of the Jews; according to what he had just before said, that the lapse of the Jews had produced benefit to the Gentiles. Hence we have here an argumentum à minori ad majus et per contrarium; q. d. 'If from the lapse of the Jews so great a benefit followed to the whole world, undoubtedly a far greater would follow from their restoration.'

Between εἰ δὲ τὸ παράπτωμα—ἐθνῶν and πόσῳ—αὐτῶν there is an antithesis, though it is irregular, from the former member being of two parts which form a parallelism, whereas the latter has but one. The deficient apodosis is thus skilfully restored by Koppe, who lays down the construction as follows: εἰ δὲ τὸ παράπτωμα—κόσμου, πόσῳ μᾶλλον ἡ ἀνάστασις αὐτῶν; καὶ εἰ τὸ ἥττημα αὐτῶν πλοῦτος ἐθνῶν, πόσῳ μᾶλλον τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῶν; Again, πλοῦτος is for πλουτισμὸς, blessing and saving, by a true conversion. Ἥττημα is, by some, explained paucitas, diminution; but better by Wetstein, Carpzov, Koppe, and Schleusner, conditio deterior, the being in a worse state; i. e. of degradation. Thus, on the other hand, πλήρωμα will denote a prosperous condition; meaning, in the present case, great spiritual benefit; namely, as Hyperius remarks, 'by a removal of those hindrances which arose from the offence and opposition of the Jews, and by that revival of the true spirit of religion, which would arise from the concord of nations the most different coalescing into one Church.'

13, 14. Some place these verses in a parenthesis, ver. 15 being closely connected in sense with ver. 12. But though the portion is in some measure interposed, yet there is, properly speaking, no parenthesis; as is evident from the γὰρ which commences the passage. It would be nearer the truth to say, that the clause ἐφ' ὅσον—δοξάζω is parenthetical, as it was plainly considered by the Pesch. Syriac Translator. And thus the sense of the passage is much cleared; εἴ πως being, as Koppe says, equivalent to ἵνα εἰ δυνατὸν (as in Acts xxvii. 12. Rom. i. 10. Phil. iii. 11), 'to try if, by any means, I may,' &c. Thus the passage may be rendered: 'Now I speak [thus] to you Gentiles, (and, inasmuch as I am the Apostle of the Gentiles, I glory in, or I assert the honour and dignity of my office,) to try if, by any means, I may excite to emulation,' &c. q. d. 'if I may possibly.' A mode of expression, Koppe observes, neither savouring of despair on the one hand, nor extreme confidence on the other, and occurring at Acts xxvii. 12. Rom. i. 10. Phil. iii. 11. I would compare Eurip. Androm. 54, Εἴ πως τὰ πρόσθεν σφάλματ' ἐξαιτούμενος, θεὸν παράσχοιτ' ἐς τὸ λοιπὸν εὐμενῆ.

Such is, I find, the view adopted by Professor 15 μου τὴν σάρκα, καὶ σώσω τινὰς ἐξ αὐτῶν. [n] Εἰ γὰρ ἡ n 2 Cor. 5. 19.

ἀποβολὴ αὐτῶν καταλλαγὴ κόσμου· τίς ἡ πρόσληψις, εἰ 16 μὴ ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν; [o] εἰ δὲ ἡ ἀπαρχὴ ἁγία, καὶ τὸ φύραμα· o Lev. 23. 10. Num. 15. 18, 21.
17 καὶ εἰ ἡ ῥίζα ἁγία, καὶ οἱ κλάδοι. [p] Εἰ δέ τινες τῶν κλα- p Jer. 11 16. Eph. 2. 12. & 3. 6.
δων ἐξεκλάσθησαν, σὺ δὲ ἀγριέλαιος ὢν ἐνεκεντρίσθης ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ συγκοινωνὸς τῆς ῥίζης καὶ τῆς πιότητος τῆς

Stuart, who rightly considers the γὰρ as explicatory. I cannot, however, agree with him in regarding the μὲν as explicatory, or perhaps affirmative, still less as intensive: it is rather the contrary. Indeed, whenever this μὲν without δὲ occurs with the personal pronouns ἐγὼ or ἡμεῖς, it has this force. So John viii. 45. Acts xxvi. 9, ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν, and xxii. 3, ἐγὼ μέν εἰμι ἀνὴρ Ἰουδαῖος, ego, quod attinet ad me. And it not unfrequently so occurs in the Classical writers. So Xen. Œcon. xv. 4, ταῦτά μοι δοκοῦμεν μὲν —ἐπιδεδραμηκέναι τῷ λόγῳ. Cyrop. i. 4. 12, ἐγὼ μὲν οὐκ οἶδα. ii. 2, 3. Anab. vii. 7. 10, ἀλλ' ἐγὼ μὲν, ἔφη, λέγω. The sense of δοξάζω above assigned occurs in John viii. 54, and is supported by most of the best recent Commentators.

— παραζηλώσω μου τὴν σάρκα, &c.] These words are, as Koppe observes, added for the purpose of showing that while he is strongly interested for the Gentiles (to whom he was especially sent) and the Jewish Christians, he was not forgetful of the rest of his countrymen; for such is the sense of the expression σάρκα. Σώσω may be rendered (as it is by Piscator and Vorstius) 'put into the way of salvation.'

15. With these words (being a repetition of the sentiment at ver. 12) the Apostle, Koppe observes, commences a new section, the intent of which is to admonish the Gentile Christians not to despise even the unbelieving Jews. 'The reasons (continues he) for this exhortation are founded on the high dignity by birth which the Jews may, as the posterity of Abraham, unquestionably claim. The sentiment is couched under a double similitude: 1st, taken from the primitial fruits whence the leaven offering of dough was made; 2ndly, from a tree with spreading branches: on which latter the Apostle especially dwells, pointing out by it the respective condition of the Jews and the Gentiles.' See also Whitby.

— εἰ γὰρ ἡ ἀποβολὴ, &c.] The γὰρ is illustrative; and ἀποβολὴ is used (by a metonymy of the effect for the cause) to denote that obstinate unbelief which caused the rejection of the Jews. The meaning is: 'If their sin, which occasioned this casting away, has been the means of reconciling the world, by bringing about the death of Christ, what shall the receiving of them again into the divine favour be (whenever it shall take place) but so happy a change, both to themselves and to the Gentiles, as may, in a manner, be said to be ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν; an expression to denote, by a strong and lively figure, matter of the greatest rejoicing, even such as receiving a dead friend raised to life again. So Terence, Hecyr. v. 4 (cited by Wetstein), 'Egon' te, qui ab orco mortuum me reducem in lucem feceris, sinam sine munere a me abire?' 'Since (observes Stuart) we have at Ezek. xxxvii. 1—14, the moral renovation of the Jews designated under the similitude of a resurrection; so it is probable that the Apostle had that passage in mind; and if so, ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν must denote a general conversion of them to Christianity.' And no wonder that it should mean such; since in Scripture those who are brought to a conversion of heart and life are said to be 'raised from the death of sin unto the life of righteousness.' By καταλλαγὴ is denoted the occasion or means of their being reconciled.

16. εἰ δὲ ἡ ἀπαρχὴ—οἱ κλάδοι.] Here we have a continuation of the foregoing reasoning; the δὲ signifying furthermore. The Apostle now returns to the principal thesis propounded at ver. 11, that 'God has not for ever and finally rejected the Jewish people.'

On the exact nature of the imagery in this passage some difference of opinion exists. Now ἀπαρχὴ is a term denoting properly the first-fruits of the new corn (or the dough first made for bread) consecrated to God; see Thucyd. vi. 20, and Numb. xv. 21. Φύραμα, however, cannot (as some have imagined) denote the rest of the grain after the first-fruits had been presented; but (as coming from φυράω, to mix up and knead flour in bread-making) can only denote the dough; and here ἀπαρχὴ must mean only the cake made of the first mass of dough, and offered to God as first-fruits; and φύραμα the whole mass of dough out of which the cake was made. The meaning intended by the Apostle is well expressed by Schoettgen and Carpzov as follows: 'If now a great part of the Jews, at the beginning of the New Covenant, have, like primitial offerings of good fruit, been received, on account of their faith, into the Church of Christ, and made partakers of justification and sanctification (Acts ii. 41. iv. 4); so neither has the remaining mass of the Jews been rejected without hope of salvation, but may likewise be received into the Church of Christ, and obtain justification and sanctification; i. e. if the mass shall evince the same faith as the first-fruits.' 'By holy,' observes Mr. Locke, 'is here meant that relative holiness whereby any thing hath an appropriation to God.'

17. The Apostle here, as Crellius says, pre-occupies an objection; namely, that branches, though from a good trunk, yet when broken off, are valueless, and can derive no esteem from the virtue of the trunk; in answering which he paves the way for the admonition following, which is meant to restrain the Jews from showing the contempt which they were wont to evince towards the Gentiles.

— εἰ δέ τινες τῶν κλάδων, &c.] We have here a lively image, taken from engrafting trees; though not after the usual mode of introducing the wild olive into the garden olive, but the contrary; for which the Commentators assign many reasons. All, however, are rendered nugatory by the fact, ascertained by the researches of Bredenkamp, that it was in ancient times usual so to engraft, in order to promote fecundity.

Ἀγριέλαιος must here signify (by an ellipsis of κλάδος) a wild-olive branch. Ἐγκεντρίζω ἐλαίας ἐγένου, μὴ κατακαυχῶ τῶν κλάδων· εἰ δὲ κατακαυ- 18 χᾶσαι, οὐ σὺ τὴν ῥίζαν βαστάζεις, ἀλλ' ἡ ῥίζα σέ. Ἐρεῖς 19

οὖν· Ἐξεκλάσθησαν οἱ κλάδοι, ἵνα ἐγὼ ἐγκεντρισθῶ. [q] Κα- 20 λῶς· τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ ἐξεκλάσθησαν, σὺ δὲ τῇ πίστει ἕστηκας.
Μὴ ὑψηλοφρόνει, ἀλλὰ φοβοῦ· εἰ γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς τῶν κατὰ 21 φύσιν κλάδων οὐκ ἐφείσατο, μή πως οὐδὲ σοῦ φείσηται. [r] Ἴδε 22
οὖν χρηστότητα, καὶ ἀποτομίαν Θεοῦ· ἐπὶ μὲν τοὺς πεσόντας, ἀποτομίαν· ἐπὶ δὲ σὲ, χρηστότητα, ἐὰν ἐπιμείνῃς τῇ χρηστότητι· ἐπεὶ καὶ σὺ ἐκκοπήσῃ. [s] Καὶ ἐκεῖνοι δὲ, ἐὰν μὴ 23 ἐπιμείνωσι τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ, ἐγκεντρισθήσονται· δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ Θεὸς πάλιν ἐγκεντρίσαι αὐτούς. Εἰ γὰρ σὺ ἐκ τῆς κατὰ 24 φύσιν ἐξεκόπης ἀγριελαίου, καὶ παρὰ φύσιν ἐνεκεντρίσθης εἰς καλλιέλαιον· πόσῳ μᾶλλον οὗτοι, οἱ κατὰ φύσιν, ἐγκενq Prov. 28. 14. Isa. 66. 2. infra 12. 16. Phil. 2. 12.

r John 15. 2. 1 Cor. 15. 2. Heb. 3. 6, 14.

s 2 Cor. 3. 16.

literally signifies to prick in, and is used with reference to the notch made into the stock, in order to admit the graft; though several eminent Commentators assign to ἐν the sense of pro or loco, yet it most plainly means among. Thus the sense of the passage will be: 'If some of Abraham's children were cast off for their unbelief, and thou [Gentile], being a wild-olive branch, wert grafted in among them' (i. e. the branches which remained, the believing Jews), and with them partakest of the root and fatness (i. e. the fatness of the root, per Hendiadyn) of the olive-tree (i. e. of the promises to Abraham, and the privileges of God's Church), &c.

18. μὴ κατακαυχῶ τῶν κ.] 'do not boast against and despise.' In the clause εἰ δὲ κατακ., οὐ σὺ, &c., there is an ellipsis of γνῶθι, or ἴσθι, ὅτι: q. d. 'Know that the Jews owe nothing to you, but you all to the Jews; since the hope of salvation was transferred from the Jews to the Gentiles, not vice versâ.' (Koppe.)

19. ἐρεῖς οὖν· Ἐξεκλάσθησαν, &c.] The connexion is thus traced by Koppe: 'If you are inclined to insult the Jews on the ground that God has rejected them and received you, think, I pray you, that the same which has befallen them, may much more easily happen to you; and therefore you should rather adore the goodness of God, and stand in awe of his displeasure.'

The ἵνα here may, as some Commentators think, be used to denote the consequence, not, as others understand, the cause. The sense will thus be: 'God, by casting off the Gentiles, has made room for me.' Yet the καλῶς at ver. 20 will not prove this; since that may be taken populariter, in a concessive sense; as we say, 'Well, granting it to be so; but,' &c. So in Mark xii. 32. Luke xx. 39. John iv. 17. Indeed, Hyperius has shown at large that there is here a concessio rhetorica, which, seeming to grant something, carries, however, with it the assertion of something further, which is here introduced by δέ.

20. σὺ δὲ τῇ πίστει ἕστηκας.] Meaning, 'but it is by faith [alone] that thou standest;' i. e. continuest in the Divine favour, into which thou hast been admitted. At μὴ ὑψηλοφρόνει the force of the admonition is much increased by the Asyndeton. Φοβοῦ, i. e. lest thou shouldst, for a similar cause, be in like manner rejected.

21. τῶν κατὰ φύσιν] scil. κλάδων, 'the natural branches,' i. e. the Jews; so called because naturally descended from Abraham, the root or trunk of the olive-tree. At μή πως sub. ὅρα or the like.

22. ἴδε οὖν χρηστότητα, &c.] 'Behold now the goodness, and the severity of God.' I have placed a comma after χρηστότητα, because the two attributes are (as appears from what follows) considered separately. Here καὶ is, as often, for τε καὶ, 'not only—but.' The Apostle admonishes them not so to rest upon the goodness of God to them, as to grow secure, and forget his severity. So Psalm cxxx. 40: 'There is mercy with Thee, therefore Thou shalt be feared.' The words following show the objects and grounds for the exercise of each of these attributes.

— ἐὰν ἐπιμείνῃς τῇ χρηστ.] Meaning, 'If thou remain in that state, in which thou hast been placed by the goodness of God, through faith in Christ, by which this goodness is retained; if thou retainest God's goodness to thee, by continuing to endeavour to be worthy of it, and improving this advantage.' At ἐπεὶ there is an ellipsis of ἂν, which (as supra v. 6. iii. 6, and often) includes that of ἄλλως.

23. The sense of this verse and the last clause of the preceding is: 'The heathens too may finally be deprived of the benefits now offered or enjoyed; and, on the other hand, the Jews be finally invested with them.' Ἐγκεντρ. should be rendered, 'will be grafted in;' implying, however, only what may be, not what shall certainly be. Δυνατὸς, too, is by Crellius, Grotius, Macknight, Rosenmuller, and Koppe, supposed to have an adjunct notion of willing: for when God is said to be able to do a thing, there is often understood not solely his power but his will to do that which he is able. And accordingly here, from the power of God, Hammond and Whitby think we may reasonably include his will; a view also adopted by Calvin. Hence, then, it is implied that nothing but their unbelief hinders their being again received into the favour of God; 'Cessante causâ, cessat effectus,' as Iaspis remarks.

24. εἰ γὰρ σὺ ἐκ τῆς—τῇ ἰδίᾳ ἐ.;] The scope of the argument is this: 'That the Gentiles should be brought to the felicity of Christ's kingdom was far more improbable, than that the ἀδελφοὶ, τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο, (ἵνα μὴ ἦτε παρ' ἑαυτοῖς Luke 21. 24. 2 Cor. 3. 14.

25 τρισθήσονται τῇ ἰδίᾳ ἐλαίᾳ; [t] Οὐ γὰρ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν, t Supra ver. 7, 8.
φρόνιμοι,) ὅτι πώρωσις ἀπὸ μέρους τῷ Ἰσραὴλ γέγονεν, 26 ἄχρις οὗ τὸ πλήρωμα τῶν ἐθνῶν εἰσέλθῃ. [u] καὶ οὕτω πᾶς u Isa. 45 25. & 59. 20.
Ἰσραὴλ σωθήσεται· καθὼς γέγραπται· Ἥξει ἐκ Σιὼν ὁ ῥυόμενος, καὶ ἀποστρέψει ἀσεβείας ἀπὸ Ἰακώβ· 27 [x] καὶ αὕτη αὐτοῖς ἡ παρ' ἐμοῦ διαθήκη... ὅταν x Ps. 14. 7. Isa. 27. 9.
28 ἀφέλωμαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν. Κατὰ μὲν τὸ εὐαγ- Jer. 31. 31, &c. 2 Cor. 3. 16.
γέλιον, ἐχθροὶ, δι' ὑμᾶς· κατὰ δὲ τὴν ἐκλογὴν, ἀγαπητοὶ Heb. 8. 8. & 10. 16.
29 διὰ τοὺς πατέρας. [y] Ἀμεταμέλητα γὰρ τὰ χαρίσματα καὶ ἡ y Num. 23. 19.

Jews should be brought thereto, since it was originally destined for them.' Here the Gentile nations at large are compared to the wild-olive tree, and each of them singly to one of its branches. Κατὰ φύσιν, for φυσική. Παρὰ φύσιν. Some interpret this, 'contrary to the order of nature,' which forbids a wild and bad tree to be engrafted on a good stock. But see Note supra v. 17, 18. The sense would rather seem to be, 'not grafted in by nature, but by art.' Καλλιέλαιος is supposed to be a word formed by the Apostle, to correspond to ἀγριέλαιος. But Schleusner says it is found in Aristotle, de Plantis, i. 6.

25. Having shown the possibility of the restoration of the Jews, the Apostle now proceeds to announce its certainty; grounding his position on the sure word of prophecy; and calling this truth a μυστήριον, which word (agreeably to its use in the sacred writers) signifies, not a thing unintelligible, but what lies hidden and secret, till made known by the revelation of God. This mystery was the future conversion and restoration of the Jews,—now first announced,—implying that the blindness and obdurate unbelief of the Jews was not universal, but in part, and would only continue till the fulness of the Gentiles should come in, i. e. till their conversion should be completed.

— ἵνα μὴ ἦτε παρ' ἑαυτοῖς φρόνιμοι.] An expression taken from Prov. iii. 7, μὴ ἴσθι φρόνιμος παρὰ σεαυτῷ, and Isaiah v. 21, συνετοὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς. The meaning is, 'that ye may not be puffed up with an opinion of your own peculiar favour with God and consequent privileges, as if you were irrevocably chosen, and they utterly rejected.' At ἀπὸ μέρους (for ἐκ μέρους) there is an ellipsis of μόνον. And ἄχρις οὗ here denotes continuation, as in Rom. v. 15. xi. 8. By ἀπὸ μέρους τῷ Ἰσραὴλ we may understand 'some Israelites,' in opposition to the all at ver. 20. As to the objection of Estius, that there was no mystery in this, it is most futile; since, in fact, the mystery in question has respect to the words following, ἄχρις οὗ τὸ πλήρωμα, &c., where πλήρωμα is equivalent to πλῆθος τῶν ἐθνῶν (as opposed to ἥττημα at ver. 12), denoting the great bulk of the heathens, i. e. in a manner all. At ἄχρις before οὗ τὸ πλήρωμα τῶν ἐθνῶν εἰσέλθῃ must be supplied some such words as, 'and which will continue to perpetuity, until,' &c. Finally, at εἰσέλθῃ supply εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, or εἰς τὴν πίστιν.

26. καὶ οὕτω] i. e. when it shall be so that the πλήρωμα shall be brought in, then, &c., οὕτω being here equivalent to τότε. Σωθήσεται. Meaning, as the best Commentators are agreed, 'shall be put into the way of salvation, have the means of salvation bestowed on them.' See Note at Matt. i. 21. On the conversion of the Jews here spoken of, see a Dissertation of Whitby, abridged in Recens. Synop., and some judicious remarks of Carpzov, p. 280—282.

— καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] The words are from Is. lix. 20, and agree with the LXX., except that ἕνεκα is there used for the ἐκ here, which, indeed, Beza and Koppe suspect crept in from an abbreviation of ἕνεκα. But it were strange that it should have crept into all the MSS. It is better to suppose, with Vitringa, that, together with this passage of Isaiah, the Apostle had in mind Ps. xiv. 7, τίς δώσει ἐκ Σιὼν τὸ σωτήριον, and thus blended both into one. In καὶ ἀποστρέψει, &c. the Hebrew slightly differs from the Sept., as followed by the Apostle; but, as Vitringa observes, that is merely from a freedom of translation.

27. καὶ αὕτη—διαθήκη.] These words are, as Koppe remarks, taken from the same passage of Isaiah; though (as is not unusual in the Jewish writers) the passage is left incomplete, and to be supplied by the reader. The words ὅταν ἀφέλωμαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν are supposed to be taken from Is. xxvii. 9. They may, however, be from Jerem. xxxi. 31.

28. κατὰ μὲν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον—πατέρας.] This is meant to meet a tacit objection; q. d. 'It cannot be that all Israel will be saved, and experience such grace from God; since they are God's enemies, and God is theirs.' To which the reply is: 'They are indeed enemies, but are nevertheless beloved, though in another respect.' (Crellius.) Δι' ὑμᾶς. Render, 'for your sakes,' or advantage, viz. that the Gospel may come unto you.

— κατὰ δὲ τὴν ἐκλογὴν, &c.] Meaning, 'but in respect of their election (as the posterity of a nation chosen by God for his peculiar people), in that view they are beloved.' Διὰ τοὺς πατέρας, i. e. on account of and in respect of the love which God bore to their forefathers.

29. ἀμεταμέλητα γὰρ τὰ χαρίσματα, &c.] This assigns the reason why the Israelites even yet, on their forefathers' account, cease not to be beloved; and this is founded on the constancy of the Divine will, which decrees nothing of which the Deity can ever repent. (Koppe.) 'For God will never repent of the promises which he made to the fathers, and therefore never change his purpose in regard to the bestowment of spiritual z Eph. 2. 2. κλῆσις τοῦ Θεοῦ. [z] Ὥσπερ γὰρ καὶ ὑμεῖς ποτὲ ἠπειθήσατε 30 τῷ Θεῷ, νῦν δὲ ἠλεήθητε τῇ τούτων ἀπειθείᾳ· οὕτω καὶ οὗτοι 31 νῦν ἠπείθησαν τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ἐλέει, ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐλεηθῶσι.

a Supra 3. 9. Gal. 3. 22. [a] Συνέκλεισε γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς πάντας εἰς ἀπείθειαν, ἵνα τοὺς 32 b Job 11. 7. Ps. 36. 6. πάντας ἐλεήσῃ. [b] Ὦ βάθος πλούτου καὶ σοφίας καὶ γνώ- 33 σεως Θεοῦ! ὡς ἀνεξερεύνητα τὰ κρίματα αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀνεξ-c Ps. 92. 6. Isa. 4. 13. ιχνίαστοι αἱ ὁδοὶ αὐτοῦ! [c] Τίς γὰρ ἔγνω νοῦν Κυρίου; 34
Jer. 23. 18. Wisd. 9. 13. ἢ τίς σύμβουλος αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο; [d] ἢ τίς προέδωκεν 35
2 Cor. 2. 16. d Job 41. 11. αὐτῷ, καὶ ἀνταποδοθήσεται αὐτῷ; [e] ὅτι ἐξ αὐτοῦ καὶ δι' 36 e Prov. 16. 4. 1 Cor. 8. 6. Col. 1. 16. αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα· αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας!
ἀμήν.

blessings on their offspring.' (Stuart.) The purpose, however, of the Apostle was probably further than this, and is, I think, well pointed out by Hyperius, in the following statement of the sense: 'Erunt quidem semper aliqui ex Judæis electi; id autem, non adeo propter dignitatem Patrum, sed magis propter Dei promissiones ad Patres factas, quas is vult implere etiam erga degenerantes posteros, vel ob id quod promissis gaudet stare, et sententiam nequaquam mutat.'

30—32. Of this portion (which is parallel with ver. 11, and contains, as Hyperius says, a ratiocination à pari intended to draw a firm conclusion) the sense is as follows: 'As you Gentiles, who were once disobedient to God, by idolatry, and consequently without knowledge of God, have at last obtained mercy and introduction into God's church and covenant, as it were, through the obstinate unbelief of the Jews, who crucified the Lord of life (which was the occasion of the Gospel being preached to the Gentiles), even so they also, though now unbelieving, may obtain mercy, through your mercy [i. e. through the mercy vouchsafed to you exciting them to seek for mercy], (see vv. 11, 14,) and at length receive the Gospel from them; for God hath permitted all, both Jews and Gentiles, to be shut up and remain in unbelief, that he may have mercy on all;' the term ἐλεηθῶσι being employed to show that salvation is not of human merit, but of divine grace.

30. τῇ τούτων ἀπειθείᾳ.] Render, 'by,' or 'on occasion of, their disobedience.'

32. συνέκλεισε γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς πάντας εἰς ἀπ.] These words have been understood in two different ways. The ancient and earlier modern Commentators, with Wetstein and Carpzov, render, 'hath convicted all of sin, hath proved that they all lie under it,' namely, by his holy law. See iii. 9. Gal. iii. 22. Others, as Piscator and most of the recent Commentators (with the E. V.), interpret, 'hath shut up (i. e. included together) all in disobedience and sin, subjected them to its controul,' i. e. hath permitted them to be subject to it. So Diod. Sic. xix. 19, εἰς τοιαύτην ἀμηχανίαν συγκλεισθείς. On the phrase συγκλείειν εἴς τι, see the learned remarks of Raphel. By τοὺς πάντας is meant mankind at large, as the Israelites understood the words. The passage is well paraphrased by Stuart thus: 'God hath left both Jew and Gentile to fall into unbelief, or disobedience, in order that the true nature of sin might fully appear; and that he might thus magnify the riches of his grace in pardoning multiplied and repeated transgressions.' Compare Rom. v. 20, sq.

33—35. Filled with a deep sense of human demerit and Divine mercy, the Apostle concludes the doctrinal part of the Epistle by breaking forth into admiration at the unfathomable depth and infinite abundance of the wisdom and mercy of God, evinced in making first the rejection of the Jews a means of calling the Gentiles, and then working upon the contumacious Jews by his mercy shown to the Gentiles. On this noble epiphonema, compare Ps. xxxvi. 6. Job xi. 7, 8. v. 9. xxxvi. 22, 23. Jerem. xxiii. 18. Is. xl. 13—15. See also Wisd. ix. 16. Ecclus. xviii. 2—5.

33. βάθος πλούτου καὶ σοφίας, &c.] Here (as Chrysostom, Theophylact, and others have shown) πλούτου is merely intensive of βάθος, and stands for πλούσιον. So at Eph. iii. 8 we have τὸν ἀνεξιχνίαστον πλοῦτον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, for πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος or χρηστότητος, and Phil. iv. 19, κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον αὐτοῦ; meaning, as in the present passage, not riches, but abundant goodness and grace. Similarly it is said, Plato, Euthyd. 13, τρυφᾶς ὑπὸ πλούτου τῆς σοφίας.

— ὡς ἀνεξερεύνητα τὰ κρίματα αὐτοῦ.] By τὰ κρίματα understand the governance of God's providence; and by αἱ ὁδοὶ αὐτοῦ, the ways by which his purposes are carried into effect. The Apostle means to say, that his wisdom and ways are far above their comprehension; and will they take upon themselves to counsel him? for such is the import of ver. 34.

These words are partly formed on Ps. xxxvi. 6, (Sept.) τὰ κρίματά σου ὡσεὶ ἄβυσσος πολλή, and Ps. lxxvi. 19, (Sept.) ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ ἡ ὁδός σου, καὶ αἱ τρίβοι σου ἐν ὕδασι πολλοῖς, καὶ τὰ ἴχνη σου οὐ γνωσθήσονται.

35. ἢ τίς προέδωκεν αὐτῷ, καὶ ἀνταπ. αὐτῷ;] Meaning (as Locke well explains) 'Is God in their debt? Let them say for what, and he will repay it them.' This passage, formed on Job xli. 11, is (as Stuart remarks) designed to have a bearing on all claims to the Divine favour, which can be preferred on the score of desert or services rendered to God.

36. This verse is suspended upon a negative clause, involved in the interrogation of the preceding one; i. e. [Surely no one;] for of him, &c., and consequently he may dispose of all according to his sovereign will. The verse may be thus paraphrased: 'For from him, as their original τιρμῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, παραστῆσαι τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν θυσίαν ζῶσαν, 1 Pet. 2. 5.

1 XII. [a] ΠΑΡΑΚΑΛΩ οὖν ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, διὰ τῶν οἰκ- a 2 Cor. 10. 1. supra 6. 13, 16, 19.
ἁγίαν, εὐάρεστον τῷ Θεῷ, τὴν λογικὴν λατρείαν ὑμῶν. Ps. 50. 13, 14 2 [b] Καὶ μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ· ἀλλὰ μεταμορ- b Eph. 4. 23. & 5. 10, 17. 1 Thess. 4. 3. Col. 3. 10. 1 John 2. 15. 1 Cor. 12. 7, 11. Eph. 4. 7.

Creator, all things are derived; through him, as their continual preserver, all things consist and subsist, are upheld and preserved; and to him, as their ultimate end, all things and all actions tend, and terminate in him; so as to contribute to his praise and glory, illustrate his perfections, and finally accomplish his wise and benevolent purposes. Let, then, his majesty, wisdom, and goodness be magnified and adored for ever! Amen.'

XII. Having now completed the doctrinal and argumentative part of his Epistle, the Apostle proceeds, in conclusion, to the practical; urging, for the benefit of both the Jewish and Gentile converts, exhortations to the moral duties of justified Christians,—and those so comprehensive, that, as Carpzov says, they may be accounted as a compendium of moral theology. First, he inculcates the duties of believers generally, of whatever rank or degree, station or dignity. (Ch. xii.) Secondly, he treats of the political or social duties of Christians, such as are to be observed with respect to their superiors, their equals, and themselves. (Ch. xiii.) Thirdly, he treats of private duties, œconomical and ceremonial, such as are to be observed by Christians in their social intercourse with each other, especially towards those who have not hitherto been convinced, or are as yet weak in the faith.

1. παρακαλῶ οὖν ὑμᾶς, &c.] The Apostle earnestly exhorts them to lead a life worthy of such great and unspeakable mercies and benefits, to present their bodies to God a living sacrifice, as opposed to the dead ones under the Law, and holy, in opposition to external and legal ones, and acceptable to God,—in allusion to the selection of the victims for sacrifice, which, in order to be acceptable to God, were required to be immaculate. See Note on Mark ix. 49, πᾶς γὰρ πυρὶ ἁλισθήσεται.

The οὖν has reference to what preceded, intimating that a conclusion is made from all that has been said, and that in the way of exhortation, with an especial reference (as indicated by the words διὰ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ) to what is said at vv. 31 and 32 of the foregoing Chapter; q. d. 'Such being the case, as I have now stated, and especially such being the compassion of God towards sinful man, and the provision made for their acceptance through the Beloved, I entreat you to,' &c.

— παραστῆσαι τὰ σώματα, &c.] In παραστῆσαι we have a sacrificial metaphor; the expression standing for προσφέρειν, admovere: Heb. העמיד. Τὰ σώματα, the best Commentators are agreed, is for ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς (as at vi. 13, and James iii. 6), in accommodation to the foregoing metaphor; since the bodies of animals were offered in sacrifice, whereas believers are required to offer the sacrifice of themselves, both body and soul. So Hierocles, Aur. Carm., p. 24 (probably with this passage in mind) describes the good man as bringing or presenting himself, in the first place, a sacrifice and an offering unto God, and forming his soul into a divine image, and his mind into a temple fitted for the reception of the divine light; and so many other heathen authors who wrote after the time of the propagation of the Gospel, and from whom extracts may be seen in Recens. Synop. Perhaps, however, the term σώματα may be employed to intimate that devoted obedience which we owe to the Lord, as being 'not our own, but bought with a price.' And the expression may be most accurately explained, as it is done by Hyperius, to denote the corporeal and external actions, with all the powers of the mind which have their seat in the organs of the body; for it is the regulation of the actions, and the desires which govern action, that is here meant, and not the regulating the mind or soul. Thus the sense is far stronger than that expressed by ὑμᾶς αὐτούς.

— τὴν λογικὴν λατρείαν ὑ.] These words are in apposition with the preceding, by an ellipsis of οὖσαν; q. d. 'for this is your reasonable service.' On the exact sense, indeed, of λογικὴν, some difference of opinion exists. By Erasmus, Beza, Grotius, Zeg., Hammond, Macknight, Schleusner, and others, it is explained rational, as opposed to the irrational rites of heathenism or the corporeal ones of Judaism; while the ancients generally, and, of the moderns, Estius, Mede, Deyling, Olear., Wetstein, Carpzov, Koppe, Rosenmuller, Wahl, Iaspis, and Bretschneider, explain it 'spiritual, offered up with the spirit and heart,' as opposed to lifeless rites and ceremonies. So 1 Pet. ii. 5, ἀνενέγκαι πνευματικὰς θυσίας, and Test. xii. Patr., p. 547, προσφέρουσι Κυρίῳ λογικὴν προσφοράν. Perhaps the two interpretations (which, in some measure, merge into each other) may be united, as denoting rational and spiritual service, namely, such as is the service of rational creatures offered to the great source of all reason, and by which it is required that we should worship him in spirit and in truth. See John iv. 24. So Philo, p. 850 (cited by Carpzov), says, τὸ καθαρώτατον τοῦ θύοντος πνεῦμα λογικόν. Still it is to be borne in mind that actions are here especially regarded. So Hyperius considers the words; and Calvin lays it down as the sentiment here intended to be expressed: 'Tum demum rite colitur Deus, ubi ad ejus præscriptum facti omnia exigimus.' This is made yet more prominent in the next words, μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε, &c., which plainly have respect to action and conduct generally.

2. μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε, &c.] These two verbs συσχημ. and μεταμορφ. may be taken in the reciprocal sense, 'do not conform yourselves to.' So Plutarch, Vit. Num. § 20, συσχηματίζονται πρὸς τὸν ἐν φιλίᾳ καὶ ὁμονοίᾳ ἀμύμονα βίον. Similar to this is the expression of Thucyd. v. 103, μηδὲ ὁμοιωθῆναι τοῖς πολλοῖς, 'conformari ad multitudinem.'

Here, then, the Apostle intimates how the end of the above admonition may be attained,—namely, by seeking that transformation of the φοῦσθε τῇ ἀνακαινώσει τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν, εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν ὑμᾶς τί τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ εὐάρεστον καὶ τέλειον.

c Supra 1. 5. 1 Cor. 3. 10. Prov. 25. 27. [c] Λέγω γάρ, διὰ τῆς χάριτος τῆς δοθείσης μοι, παντὶ τῷ 3 ὄντι ἐν ὑμῖν, μὴ ὑπερφρονεῖν παρ᾽ ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν, ἀλλὰ φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ σωφρονεῖν, ἑκάστῳ ὡς ὁ Θεὸς ἐμέρισε μέτρον d 1 Cor. 12. 12, &c. πίστεως. [d] Καθάπερ γὰρ ἐν ἑνὶ σώματι μέλη πολλὰ ἔχομεν, 4
e 1 Cor. 12. 27. τὰ δὲ μέλη πάντα οὐ τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχει πρᾶξιν· [e] οὕτως οἱ 5
Eph. 1. 23. & 4. 16, 25. πολλοὶ ἓν σῶμά ἐσμεν ἐν Χριστῷ, ὁ δὲ καθ᾽ εἷς ἀλλήλων
f 1 Cor. 12. 4, &c. & 12. 10. μέλη. [f] Ἔχοντες δὲ χαρίσματα κατὰ τὴν χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσαν 6 1 Pet. 4. 10. ἡμῖν διάφορα· εἴτε προφητείαν, κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς heart which will alone regulate the actions. Μεταμορφ. is a strong expression, denoting complete transfoı mation, whether physical or mental. In the latter sense the term implies a thorough renewal of the mind. So Seneca, Epist. vi. (cited by Grotius) says, 'Sentio non emendari me tantum, sed transfigurari.' Here, of course, it means the transformation of the soul into the image of Christ from glory to glory (see 2 Cor. iii. 18), by such a renovation of the mind and affections, as can be effected alone by the aids of the Holy Spirit co-operating with our own zealous endeavours, as implied in the use of the Imperative.

2. εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν, &c.] The Apostle here seems to advert to the most remarkable effects of this ἀνακαίνωσις τοῦ νοός· namely, the proving, trying, and approving what the will of God is (or what he would have us both believe and practise); what is good and acceptable to him, and perfect, i. e. such in its full extent;—where the nouns (for such they are, τὸ ἀγαθὸν, &c.) are in apposition with, and exegetical of, τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'what is good, acceptable, and perfect.'

3. λέγω] for ἐπιτάσσω, 'I charge or enjoin.'

— διὰ τῆς χάρ. τῆς δοθ. μ.] Most modern Commentators explain this, 'by virtue of my Apostolical office and authority;' while the Greek Commentators explain it, 'by the divine grace,' the gift of inspiration, which authorizes me to direct and admonish. The latter interpretation is preferable, as yielding a more simple and natural sense, and such as may include the other. In παντὶ τῷ ὄντι ἐν ὑμῖν there seems to be a popular idiom for ἑκάστῳ ὑμῶν, such as we find in Eph. i. 1, and elsewhere.

— μὴ ὑπερφρονεῖν παρ' ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν.] Here a paronomasia exists between φρονεῖν, ὑπερφρονεῖν, and σωφρονεῖν; of which several examples might be adduced from Thucydides and other writers. Corresponding to ὑπερφρονεῖν παρ' ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν here is ὑπερηφανῶς φρονεῖν, 2 Macc. ix. 12. In φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ σωφρονεῖν we have an acutè dictum per paronomasiam. So Pindar has φρονεῖν ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ. This, then, is what our great Epic Poet (Paradise Lost, vii. 20) calls 'the knowledge within bounds.' And here, as Hyperius points out, the Apostle means to intimate that the root of all discord is curious and arrogant wisdom.

— ἑκάστῳ ὡς] for ὡς ἑκάστῳ, as at 1 Cor. iii. 5. Πίστεως the ancient and many eminent modern Interpreters explain of the χαρίσματα at ver. 6, namely, the extraordinary gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. So Eph. iv. 7, ἑνὶ δὲ ἑκάστῳ ἡμῶν ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις κατὰ τὸ μέτρον τῆς δωρεᾶς τοῦ Χριστοῦ. By others it is understood of the measure of religious faith and knowledge allotted to each. Both senses may, in some measure, be conjoined. So Carpzov: 'Μέτρον πίστεως est diversus gradus, ac portio diversa, beneficiorum et gratiæ Dei, cognitionis Dei, ac donorum Spiritus Sancti, cum administrantium tum sanctificantium, quæ ille singulis distribuit ad commune bonum Ecclesiæ, uti vult. (1 Cor. xii. 4, 11.) Est sive amplior sive arctior mensuræ quantitas, notitia rerum divinarum, quæ Christianis piis unà cum fide obtigit diversimodè, per unctionem Spiritus Sancti. (1 John ii. 27.)'

4, 5. καθάπερ γὰρ ἐν ἑνὶ σώμ., &c.] We have here a familiar illustration of the subject, from a comparison of the natural body with the body politic or social, as in the well-known Apologue of Menenius Agrippa in Livy, ii. 32.

5. οἱ πολλοὶ] scil. ὄντες; for οἱ ὄντες πολλοὶ, 'we who are many.' See 1 Cor. x. 17. The sense is, 'In like manner we Christians, who, though many, are one body, have been united into and form one body in (i. e. in respect of) Christ, considered with a reference to him as the head of the whole society.' In ὁ δὲ καθ' εἷς we have an anomalous idiom (found also at 3 Macc. v. 34) for οἱ καθ' ἕνα, or εἷς ἕκαστος καθ' ἑαυτόν.

6. Having hinted at the liability of new converts to be puffed up with the spiritual gifts which might be dealt out to them, the Apostle proceeds to lay down rules for the exercise of such gifts.

— ἔχοντες δὲ χαρίσματα, &c.] The construction in this and the verses following is anomalous. Ἔχοντες may best be regarded as a Nominativus pendens, to be taken at each member ἀπὸ κοινοῦ, its sense being adapted to circumstances. At any rate, the general intent of the Apostle is clear, which is to excite them to the zealous exercise of the gifts of the Spirit; so, however, that those who enjoyed the higher kinds should not interfere with one another; see ver. 8, and 1 Cor. xii. 4, sqq.

— εἴτε προφητείαν.] Supply ἔχει, ἐχέτω αὐτὴν, or ἔχοντες, ἔχωμεν. On the nature of this προφητεία there has been no little discussion. It should seem that the προφήτης was not merely (what some suppose) an Interpreter of Scripture, but one who, by Divine inspiration, and therefore authoritatively, explained and set forth all the mysteries of the Gospel, and publicly preached and exhorted, for the purposes of Christian edification and consolation; as 1 Cor. xiii. 2, Here the Apostle (as Photius, Beza, and Crellius

7 πίστεως· [g] εἴτε διακονίαν, ἐν τῇ διακονίᾳ· εἴτε ὁ διδάσκων, 8 ἐν τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ· [h] εἴτε ὁ παρακαλῶν, ἐν τῇ παρακλήσσει· ὁ μεταδιδοὺς, ἐν ἁπλότητι· ὁ προϊστάμενος, ἐν σπουδῇ· ὁ ἐλεῶν, ἐν ἱλαρότητι.
9 [i] Ἡ ἀγάπη, ἀνυπόκριτος· ἀποστυγοῦντες τὸ πονηρὸν, g 1 Cor. 12. 28. Eph. 4. 11. 1 Pet. 4. 10, 11.

h Deut. 15. 7. Matt. 6. 1—3. Acts 20. 28. 2 Cor. 9. 7. 1 Pet. 5. 2. 1 Tim. 5. 17.
i 1 Pet. 1. 22. Ps. 36. 4. & 97. 10. Amos 5. 15. 1 Pet. 4. 8.

observe) first lays down προφητεία and διακονία each as a genus; and then enumerates their species; of the former two, of the latter three.

— κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστ.] On the exact sense of this expression some difference of opinion exists; see Recens. Syn. and Dr. Campbell's Dissertation, iv. § 13. Certainly it is not to be understood, according to the acceptation in which it is used by Theological writers, of the general plan of revealed truth; nor ought it to be supposed to have reference to any article of faith. Of κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν the meaning is plainly, 'pro ratâ portione, pro ratione, in proportion to.' With respect to πίστεως, it is by some eminent Interpreters taken for χαρίσματος, as denoting the faith entrusted to him; a view most harsh. There is a plain reference to the various χαρίσματα mentioned just after; and consequently πίστεως here must carry with it an adjunct notion of the χάρις spoken of at ver. 3. The general sense will then be: 'Let the Prophets speak in proportion as they have faith and grace imparted so to do.'

7. διακονίαν.] The words διάκονος, διακονεῖν, and διακονία, though general terms, and used even of the Apostles themselves, are often in the New Test. taken of some certain specific office undertaken in the cause of the Christian religion (compare 1 Cor. xii. 5. 2 Cor. ix. 1), and exercised by those who did not so much employ themselves in explaining the doctrines of the Gospel, as in managing the external and temporal affairs of the Church and of individuals. On the kinds of Deacons, see Suic. Thes. i. 862, and Bingham's Eccl. Ant. ii. 20. At διακονίαν supply ἔχῃ, from the preceding ἔχοντες; and at ἐν τῇ διακονίᾳ supply ἔστω, as at Ælian, V. Hist. ὄντες ἐν γεωργίᾳ.

8. ὁ παρακαλῶν.] There has been no little debate as to the respective senses of ὁ διδάσκων and ὁ παρακαλῶν, which some regard as meaning the same thing, while others take them to relate to different offices. It would seem that as ὁ προφητεύων is plainly distinguished both from ὁ διδάσκων and ὁ παρακαλῶν, that so these two are also meant to be distinct. In what, however, the distinction consisted, it is not easy to say with certainty. It seems most probable that (as Stuart suggests) ὁ διδάσκων was an ordinary stated Teacher, who taught the doctrine of the Gospel according to the degree of religious knowledge which he possessed; while the παρακαλῶν was an Exhorter, i. e. one who urged men to the practical duties, dwelt upon the promises and threatenings of the Gospel, and thus aided and completed the work which the διδάσκαλος had begun. Thus the expression will be equivalent to ἀντιλήψεις at 1 Cor. xii. 28.

On the next words, ὁ μεταδιδοὺς—ἐν ἱλαρότητι, there is even yet greater diversity of opinion. Stuart is of opinion that by ὁ μεταδιδοὺς, ὁ προϊστάμενος, and ὁ ἐλεῶν, the Apostle refers to private individuals in the Church, conspicuous for their attention to the duties respectively indicated by those words, the management of the external temporal affairs of the Church, including the relief of the sick and poor. He truly remarks that the Commentators had gone upon an unfounded assumption, when they took for granted, rather than proved, that ὁ μεταδιδοὺς, ὁ προϊστάμενος, and ὁ ἐλεῶν designate officers or offices in the Church. Vitringa, indeed, long ago saw that in the case of ὁ ἐλεῶν; and it is true of the other two, at least of μεταδ. And therefore to endeavour to draw any parallel with the gifts and offices stated by the Apostle at 1 Cor. xii. 28, is to needlessly embarrass the subject. It would seem that the scope of the words ὁ μεταδιδοὺς—ἱλαρότητι is to give an admonition to the persons who exercised the gifts, or discharged the offices above mentioned. According to this view, there can be no difficulty in referring ὁ ἐλεῶν to the διάκονος, with allusion to that alacrity so requisite in the due discharge of so onerous and invidious an office. As to the ὁ μεταδιδοὺς and ὁ προϊστάμενος, they belong, I apprehend, both to the προφῆται and the διδάσκαλοι, and have reference to the then two great divisions of the ministerial office, namely, teaching and governing. Thus the two offices are mentioned apart at 1 Cor. xii. 28, and also at 1 Thess. v. 12, ἐρωτῶμεν ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, εἰδέναι τοὺς κοπιῶντας ἐν ὑμῖν, καὶ προϊσταμένους ὑμῶν ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ νουθετοῦντας ὑμᾶς, where the κοπ. is equivalent to the διδάσκ. in the present passage, and the καὶ νουθετοῦντας corresponds to the παρακαλ. here. This is confirmed by 1 Tim. v. 17, οἱ καλῶς προεστῶτες πρεσβύτεροι διπλῆς τιμῆς ἀξιούσθωσαν· μάλιστα οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ, i. e. who were both προεστῶτες and διδάσκαλοι. It is scarcely necessary to observe, that in ὁ μεταδιδοὺς the expression (which should be rendered, 'he who imparts') is quite as applicable to the communication of spiritual knowledge, as of worldly goods. So Rom. i. 11, ἵνα τὶ μεταδῶ χάρισμα ὑμῖν πνευματικόν. In this view, ἐν ἁπλότητι will mean, 'in simplicity and sincerity,' i. e. not δολῶν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ. So at Xen. Hist. iv. 4. 8, it is synonymous with ἀδόλως; see Note on James i. 5. And the word is joined with εἰλικρινεία at 2 Cor. i. 12, ἡ γὰρ καύχησις ἡμῶν αὕτη ἐστὶ—ὅτι ἐν ἁπλότητι καὶ εἰλικρινείᾳ Θεοῦ ἀνεστράφημεν—πρὸς ὑμᾶς: see also 2 Cor. xi. 3. Χαρίσματα seems to advert not to the extraordinary and miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit only, but also, as in the case of the παρακαλῶν, and perhaps the διδάσκων, to the ordinary graces of the Spirit.

9. Now follow the private virtues to be cultivated by all Christians. Ἀγάπη denotes the Christian philanthropy described at 1 Cor. xiii. 1.

— ἀποστυγοῦντες, &c.] The construction here and in the following verses is very irregular, κολλώμενοι τῷ ἀγαθῷ· [k] τῇ φιλαδελφίᾳ εἰς ἀλλήλους φιλό- 10 στοργοι, τῇ τιμῇ ἀλλήλους προηγούμενοι, [l] τῇ σπουδῇ 11 μὴ ὀκνηροὶ, τῷ πνεύματι ζέοντες, τῷ * Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες· [m] τῇ ἐλπίδι χαίροντες, τῇ θλίψει ὑπομένοντες, τῇ προσευχῇ 12 k Heb. 13. 1. Phil. 2. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 22. & 2. 17. 2 Pet. 1. 7.

l Rev. 3. 15.
m Supra 5. 2. 1 Thess. 5. 16, 17. Col. 4. 2. Heb. 10. 36. Luke 18. 1. Eph. 6. 18.

and like that at Heb. xiii. 5. To take the participles, with Koppe and others, for verbs, is explaining nothing. It is better to suppose an anantapodoton, the participles being used as if suspended on some verb which occurred in the preceding sentence. Had the Apostle written ἀγαπᾶτε ἀνυποκρίτως, the construction would have been regular. The terms ἀποστυγ. and κολλώμενοι are very strong: the former signifying, as Theophylact explains, ἐκ ψυχῆς μισοῦντες; and the latter denoting attachment the closest and most ardent.

10. τῇ φιλαδελφίᾳ—φιλόστοργοι.] Sub. ὄντες. From philanthropy the Apostle rises to something higher, and exhorts them to be φιλόστοργοι τῇ φιλαδελφίᾳ, where τῇ φιλ. is a Dative of instrument, denoting the mode in which they ought to be φιλόστοργοι. Φιλόστοργος (a word confined to the later Classical writers) is properly used of the natural affection subsisting between parents and children; but it is also employed to denote tender affection generally.

— τῇ τιμῇ ἀλλήλους προηγ.] The force of this injunction has, I apprehend, been mistaken by those who understand it of humility, which here surely would be out of place. The context rather suggests the idea of a readiness to treat others with courtesy and kindness, even anticipating them therein, and leading them to it by our example; a sense of τιμὴ not unfrequent in the New Test. This interpretation, too, is supported by the authority of Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators. I would here compare what Tacitus says of Jul. Agricola and his wife: 'Vixerunt mirâ concordiâ, per mutuam caritatem, et invicem se anteponendo.'

11. The sense of this verse has been not a little disputed; and that chiefly from the scope of the words not being sufficiently attended to. Expositors are not agreed whether the clauses are to be regarded as containing separate and independent injunctions, or as belonging to each other, and connected together. Of those who regard them in the former light, some suppose τῇ σπουδῇ μὴ ὀκν. to contain an admonition to diligence in their worldly callings; q. d. 'not slothful to business.' But, surely, that would suppose the sense to be very imperfectly developed. It should rather seem that the words τῇ σπουδῇ —ζέοντες are closely connected together, and are not an independent admonition, but merely meant to strengthen some other with which they are connected in the context. Thus Koppe and others refer them to the admonition following, τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλ., of course understanding σπουδῇ of spiritual concerns: a method, however, not a little harsh. It is far more natural to refer the words to what precedes, and suppose them intended to mark the manner in which the foregoing duties, of brotherly love and kindly attention, should be performed; namely, with active and zealous diligence. The word σπουδὴ is used, on this very subject, at 2 Cor. viii. 16, τὴν αὐτὴν σπουδὴν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν. The Article has the force of renewed mention; q. d. 'in this your diligent endeavour.' And if it be asked how σπουδὴ can be ὀκνηρὰ, we may answer (with Crellius), that though no one can be diligently slothful, or slothfully diligent, yet 'eâdem orationis formâ, in tradendis illis præceptis, uti voluit Apostolus, et in hoc quidem præcepto contrarium per contrarium illustrare.' Thus the phrase τῷ πνεύματι ζέοντες is meant to be exegetical of the preceding; and we may compare Acts xviii. 25, ζέων τῷ πνεύματι.

In determining the import of the words following, τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες, the reading has first to be settled. Now all the early Editions, except the Ed. Princ., with almost all the MSS. and the best Versions, have Κυρίῳ, which was edited by Beza, Schmid, and the Elzevir Editor, and was retained by Bengel, Wetst., and Matthæi. Καιρῷ, however, was restored, from the Ed. Princ., by Griesb. and Koppe; but Κυρίῳ was finally recalled by Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; and, I think, rightly; since the external evidence for καιρῷ is very slender (only that of about three MSS. and a few inferior Versions and Fathers), and the internal not superior to that of Κυρίῳ; for although it may seem entitled to preference, as being the more difficult reading, yet that Canon has its exceptions, and especially where the reading may, as here, be accounted for from a mistake in deciphering an abbreviation, or when the reading, though it seem the more difficult, may be suspected to have arisen from alteration, as being more suitable to the context, according at least to the view of the alterers. Now such might easily happen in the present instance; for, notwithstanding what the above Critics urge, καιρῷ is not unsuitable to the context, nor does it yield a sense unworthy of the sacred writer; see Calvin. Yet I believe Κυρίῳ to be the genuine reading, as being more in the manner of St. Paul. And it is only requisite to perceive the scope of the words τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλ. to discover the great propriety of Κυρίῳ. Now it was well seen by Chrysostom and Theophylact, of the ancients, and by Tolet., Calvin, Whitby, and Wetstein, of the moderns, that the words are not meant to inculcate an independent and general precept (as the Critics who altered the word thought), but to enforce the injunctions foregoing, to brotherly love and kindly attention, on the ground that whatever should be done, would be done unto the Lord, and would be rewarded by him. So Matt. x. 40—42, ὁ δεχόμενος ὑμᾶς ἐμὲ δέχεται—οὐ μὴ ἀπολέσῃ τὸν μισθὸν αὐτοῦ.

12. τῇ ἐλπίδι χαίροντες, &c.] The scope of these words has been variously understood. It would seem that they have no connexion with the preceding, but treat on a separate subject,—the bearing up under affliction by the power of hope, and the support and comfort of earnest prayer. Προσκαρτ. is a very strong term, occurring also in Acts i. 14. vi. 4. This absolute use 13 προσκαρτεροῦντες· [n] ταῖς χρείαις τῶν ἁγίων κοινωνοῦντες, 14 τὴν φιλοξενίαν διώκοντες. [o] Εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς διώκοντας

15 ὑμᾶς· εὐλογεῖτε, καὶ μὴ καταρᾶσθε. [p] Χαίρειν μετὰ χαι-16 ρόντων, καὶ κλαίειν μετὰ κλαιόντων. [q] Τὸ αὐτὸ εἰς ἀλλήλους φρονοῦντες· μὴ τὰ ὑψηλὰ φρονοῦντες, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ταπεινοῖς συναπαγόμενοι. μὴ γίνεσθε φρόνιμοι παρ' ἑαυτοῖς.
17 [r] Μηδενὶ κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ ἀποδιδόντες· προνοούμενοι καλὰ
18 ἐνώπιον πάντων ἀνθρώπων· [s] εἰ δυνατὸν, τὸ ἐξ ὑμῶν, μετὰ n 1 Cor. 16. 1. Heb. 13. 2, 16. 1 Pet. 4. 9. o Matt. 5. 44. Luke 6. 28. 1 Cor. 4. 12. 1 Pet. 3. 9. p Ecclus. 7. 34. q 1 Cor. 1. 10. Phil. 2. 2. 1 Pet. 3. 8. Ps. 131. 1. Prov. 3. 7. Is. 5. 21. supra 11. 25. r Prov. 20. 22. Matt. 5. 39. 1 Thess. 5. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 9. 2 Cor. 8. 21. s Mark 9. 50. Heb. 12. 14.

of ὑπομένω is found also at Matt. x. 22. 2 Tim. ii. 12. James v. 11, perhaps formed on Dan. xii. 12, μακάριος ὁ ὑπομένων.

13. ταῖς χρείαις—διώκοντες.] Here is enjoined charity to the poorer Christians, and hospitality to strangers, especially, as we may suppose, preachers of the Gospel (see Heb. xiii. 2); a kindness which the want of inns, and their utter abandonment by their former connexions, would make particularly acceptable. Διώκ. is a strong term, which may be rendered, 'studiously cultivating.'

14. After treating of brotherly love, charity, and hospitality, the Apostle proceeds to enjoin the duties of patience under injurious treatment, intermixing admonitions to the kindred duties of sympathy and humility, and the cultivation of concord and peace with all men. The terms εὐλογ. and καταρ. are of the strongest kind, and the emphasis, arising from the same thing being expressed affirmatively and negatively, imparts no little energy to the sentiment.

15. χαίρειν.] Infinitive for Imperative: in which case Grammarians usually suppose an ellipsis of δεῖ.

16. τὸ αὐτὸ—φρονοῦντες.] This injunction, as appears from the context, relates not to unity of sentiment, but of disposition. Μὴ τὰ ὑψηλὰ φρονοῦντες is equivalent to μὴ ὑψηλοφρονεῖτε at ii. 21. Of the words τοῖς ταπεινοῖς συναπαγόμενοι the meaning seems to be, 'holding intercourse with the lowly; not proudly standing aloof from them.' The ratio metaphoræ appears to be this:—A person is said συναπάγεσθαι when he is met by a crowd, and is hurried away with them in the direction they are going. But as passive verbs are often used in a reciprocal sense, so συναπάγεσθαι may signify to yield oneself to a multitude, and go with them. Now this admits of a good as well as a bad sense; in the former of which it is here taken, and figuratively denotes to condescend to; which will express humility in all its various offices, i. e. 'humble-mindedness.' In this second application συμπεριφέρεσθαι is always used. So Diog. Laert. Zenone: συμπ. φίλοις, morigerari, non morosum sese exhibere. 2 Macc. ix. 27, πέπεισμαι γὰρ αὐτὸν ἐπιεικῶς καὶ φιλανθρώπως συμπεριενεχθήσεται ὑμῖν.

— μὴ γίνεσθε φρόνιμοι, &c.] This admonition (formed on Prov. iii. 7, and Isaiah v. 21) is intended to warn them against that self-conceit, which effectually excludes the practice of the virtues just mentioned.

17. The Apostle having shown how studiously Christians ought to cultivate peace and concord one with another, proceeds to teach how they ought to do it with other men (Crellius); inculcating forbearance towards enemies, and patience in supporting the injuries inflicted by them, as opposed to that thirst of vengeance which only serves to perpetuate hatred, and inflame animosity. (Koppe.)

— μηδενὶ κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ ἀποδ.] Several parallel sentiments have been adduced from heathen writers.

— προνοούμενοι καλὰ, &c.] Meaning, 'taking care [to do] things of good report in the estimation of all men [whether Christians or heathens];' with which compare 2 Cor. viii. 21. Phil. iv. 8. Προνοεῖσθαι καλοῦ occurs in Sextus Empiricus ap. Wetstein; and προν. τοῦ δικαίου in Josephus, Ant. ix. 1. 1, where προν. is for πρόνοιαν ποιεῖσθαι. The syntax with the Accusative is somewhat rare. Similarly we have in Prov. iii. 4 (a passage which seems to have been had in view by the Apostle), προνοοῦ καλὰ ἐνώπιον Κυρίου καὶ ἀνθρώπων. In such a case the verb has a significatio prægnans, including the notion of doing, as if we were forecasting, which will imply the doing of a thing deliberately and ex animo, and consequently with zeal and assiduity.

18. εἰ δυνατὸν—εἰρηνεύοντες.] We have here an injunction to a virtue nearly allied to that of forbearance; the striving to live at peace with all men [both Christians and non-Christians]. The full import of εἰρηνεύειν is ably stated by Dr. Barrow, Works, vol. i. Serm. 29, on the present text, where he shows, 1. that 'it is not barely a negation of doing or suffering harm, or an abstinence from strife and violence, but a positive amity, a disposition to perform such kind offices, without which good correspondence among men cannot subsist; 2. that it implies not some few transitory performances, proceeding from caprice, but a stable condition, a continual cessation from injury, and a promptitude to do kind offices; 3. that it supposes a reciprocity not only in performing good and forbearing to do bad offices, but a receiving the like treatment from others; 4. that it imports not only an outward cessation from violence and a demonstration of amity, but an inward purpose of continuing therein.' 'Thus,' continues he, 'the being at peace differs only, in degree of obligation, and latitude of object, from the state of friendship properly so called.'

The limitation to the precept, contained in εἰ δυνατὸν and τὸ ἐξ ὑμῶν (where supply μέρος and κατὰ, and compare Hom. Il. α. 525, ἐξ ἐμέθεν γε) implies that, in spite of our utmost endeavours, it is not possible to live at peace with all men; see Ps. cxx. 7.

t Lev. 19. 18. Deut. 32. 35. Eccl. 28. 1. Matt. 5. 39. Luke 6. 29. Heb. 10. 30.
u Exod. 23. Prov. 25. 21. Matt. 5. 44 a Tit. 3. 1. 1 Pet. 2. 13. Prov. 8. 15, 16. Dan. 4. 32 Wisd. 6 3. b 1 Sam. 26. 9.

πάντων ἀνθρώπων εἰρηνεύοντες. [t] μὴ ἑαυτοὺς ἐκδικοῦντες, 19
ἀγαπητοὶ, ἀλλὰ δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ· γέγραπται γάρ· Ἐμοὶ ἐκδίκησις· ἐγὼ ἀνταποδώσω, λέγει Κύριος.
[u] Ἐὰν οὖν πεινᾷ ὁ ἐχθρός σου, ψώμιζε αὐτόν· ἐὰν διψᾷ, 20 πότιζε αὐτόν· τοῦτο γὰρ ποιῶν ἄνθρακας πυρὸς σωρεύσεις ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ. Μὴ νικῶ ὑπὸ τοῦ κακοῦ, ἀλλὰ 21
νίκα ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ τὸ κακόν.

XIII. [a] ΠΑΣΑ ψυχὴ ἐξουσίαις ὑπερεχούσαις ὑποτασ- 1 σέσθω. οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἐξουσία, εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ· αἱ δὲ οὖσαι ἐξουσίαι, ὑπὸ [τοῦ] Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι εἰσίν. [b] Ὥστε ὁ ἀντι- 2

19. In this verse the pronouns are emphatic, and the scope of the whole is to forbid private retaliation; enjoining the injured party to leave vengeance to God, or to the civil magistrate acting in his name. The clause δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ, however, admits of two senses. The ὀργῇ may be referred to the person injured; in which case δότε τόπον will mean, 'let it go, defer venting it,' give space to that anger which is a furor brevis, and may thus have time to cool. Yet no such sense can be shown to be inherent in the words; neither would it be suitable to the words following, 'for it is written,' &c. It is therefore better to refer the ὀργῇ to God; q. d. 'leave it to the wrath of God to avenge you, or to him who is properly the minister of vengeance, as representative of God.' So we have δοῦναι τόπον used at Eph. iv. 27; and Ecclus. xix. 17, (Sept.) ἔλεγξον τὸν πλήσιόν σου πρὶν ἢ ἀπειλῆσαι, καὶ δὸς τόπον νόμῳ Ὑψίστου. Thus the sentiment will correspond to the following in Eurip. Suppl. 511, ἐξαρκέσας ἦν Ζεὺς ὁ τιμωρούμενος· ἡμᾶς δ' ὑβρίζειν οὐκ ἐχρῆν τοιήνδ' ὕβριν.

In the quotation just after, the Apostle neither follows the Sept. (which is here very inaccurate), nor the Hebrew, but forms something founded on both; which, however, represents the full sense. The pronouns are highly emphatic. The words λέγει Κύριος form no part of the quotation, but are added (as often elsewhere) to point out the speaker.

20. ἐὰν οὖν—κεφ. αὐτοῦ.] Taken verbatim from Prov. xxv. 21, 22. The Hebrew has nothing corresponding to τοῦτο ποιῶν, which was added by the Translator to make the sense plainer. The ancient Commentators have well remarked that there is here a sort of climax; q. d. 'I not only exhort you to forbearance, and a striving after peace, abstaining from private vengeance, but I enjoin you to do good to your enemy, by performing the common offices of humanity to him, if he should need them.' Of the words following, ἄνθρακας — αὐτοῦ, there are two interpretations almost equally deserving of attention. 1. That of the Greek Fathers, and most of the earlier modern Commentators, as also Wetstein, Rosenmuller, Koppe, Locke, Schleusner, and others: 'By so doing, thou wilt, if he persevere in his enmity and injury, bring down an increased wrath and enmity from God.' Such is undoubtedly the sense of the phrase in the passage of Proverbs, and wherever it occurs in the Old Test.; and as the words preceding treat of the divine vengeance, it is very suitable: nor is this sentiment liable to any objection, when properly understood; for, as Locke remarks, 'the persevering malice of the injurer is supposed.' 2. That of Jerome and Hilary, of the ancients, and many eminent moderns up to the present time, by which there is supposed to be a metaphor taken from fusing metals; the meaning being, 'Thou shalt melt down his enmity, and soften him to kindness,' as metals are melted by covering the crucible with hot burning coals. And this seems supported by the admonition following, νίκα ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ τὸ κακόν. With this noble sentiment of subduing malice by kindness and benefits, Wetstein compares several similar ones from heathen writers.

XIII. This Chapter forms the second section of the practical part of the Epistle; in which are inculcated the moral duties of all Christians, commencing with those towards magistrates and governors; an injunction, considering the insubordinate spirit of the Jews and Jewish Christians, very necessary. Here, after explaining the nature and divine origin of government (telling them that all governments derived the power they had from God, though they had not the frame of the government from him, as the Jews had), he exhorts them to faithfully and cheerfully perform their duty in this respect. Similar admonitions are found at Tit. iii. i. 1 Pet. ii. 13, 14.

1. πᾶσα ψυχή.] So the Heb. כל נפש, meaning every individual, without exception, in whatever rank of subjects. Ἐξουσίαις ὑπερεχ., 'the magistrates set in high authority, celsis potestatibus.' So οἱ ἄρχοντες at ver. 3, and οἱ ἐν ὑπεροχῇ ὄντες at 1 Tim. ii. 2.

— αἱ δὲ οὖσαι ἐξουσίαι.] Including rulers and sovereigns not only de jure, but de facto. Ἐξουσίαι, not found in six MSS., the Vulgate, and some other Versions and Latin Fathers, is cancelled by Griesbach; but wrongly; for it is more probable that the word should have been accidentally omitted in so few MSS., than that the writer should have fallen into a harshness of ellipsis more than Thucydidean. Instead of ἀπὸ many MSS. have ὑπὸ, which was edited by Matthæi and Lachm.; but wrongly, for the sense (as denoting origin) rejects ὑπὸ, and requires ἀπὸ; there being a reference to the divine origin of government, as in Hesiod, Theog. 96, ἐκ δὲ Διὸς βασιλῆες, sc. εἰσι. Comp. Prov. viii. 15, 16. See also Hom. Il. α. 279, and the Scholiast.

— ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ τετ.] Meaning, that they τασσόμενος τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ, τῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ διαταγῇ ἀνθέστηκεν· 3 οἱ δὲ ἀνθεστηκότες ἑαυτοῖς κρίμα λήψονται. [c] Οἱ γὰρ c 1 Pet. 2. 14.

ἄρχοντες οὐκ εἰσὶ φόβος τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἔργων, ἀλλὰ τῶν κακῶν. Θέλεις δὲ μὴ φοβεῖσθαι τὴν ἐξουσίαν; τὸ ἀγαθὸν 4 ποίει, καὶ ἕξεις ἔπαινον ἐξ αὐτῆς· [d] Θεοῦ γὰρ διάκονός ἐστι d Wisd. 6. 4.
σοὶ εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν. ἐὰν δὲ τὸ κακὸν ποιῇς, φοβοῦ· οὐ γὰρ εἰκῇ τὴν μάχαιραν φορεῖ· Θεοῦ γὰρ διάκονός ἐστιν, 5 ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν τῷ τὸ κακὸν πράσσοντι. Διὸ ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαι, οὐ μόνον διὰ τὴν ὀργὴν, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὴν
6 συνείδησιν. Διὰ τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ φόρους τελεῖτε· λειτουργοὶ 7 γὰρ Θεοῦ εἰσιν, εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο προσκαρτεροῦντες. [e] Ἀπό- e Matt. 22. 21.
δοτε οὖν πᾶσι τὰς ὀφειλάς· τῷ τὸν φόρον, τὸν φόρον· τῷ are permitted to hold the office they hold by the disposing providence of God, though mediately appointed to it by the authority, or invested with it by the consent, of man. Τοῦ is absent from several ancient MSS., and is cancelled by Scholz; but without reason. The Article here has great propriety; for want of perceiving which, the ancient Critics, it seems, cancelled it, as Θεοῦ had it not just before; whereas here it has the use of renewed mention. Though otherwise the Article is more usually employed. So in a similar passage of Epict. Man. ch. xxi. τῶν δὲ βελτίστων σοι φαινομένων, οὕτως ἔχου, ὡς ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ τεταγμένος εἰς ταύτην τὴν τάξιν. The metaphor (a military one) in τεταγμ. was probably suggested by the ὑποτασσ. just before.

2. ὁ ἀντιτασσόμενος.] Literally, 'he who sets himself in array against.' See Note on Acts xviii. 6. Διαταγῇ, 'ordinance,' as in Ezra iv. 11, and διάταγμα at Heb. xi. 23. Κρίμα signifies condemnation, implying punishment, not merely in this world, but the next.

3. φόβος] 'terriculamentum,' 'cause of fear;' an idiom frequent both in the Scriptural and Classical writers. So in an inscription cited by Wetstein, εἰμὶ κριτὴς γὰρ ἤπιος ἰθυδίκοις, τοῖς δ' ἀδικοῦσι δέος. Ἔργων is for ἐργατῶν.

— ἔπαινον.] Implying favour, and, as the case may be, reward. Similarly it is said by Menand. ap. Grotii Excerp., p. 761, Νόμον φοβηθεὶς, μὴ ταραχθήσῃ νόμῳ.

4. εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν.] This suggests another reason,—namely, that the ruler is not only the appointed minister of God to us, but is such for good, and that natural, civil, and moral; being entrusted with power for the welfare of the governed.

— τὴν μάχ. φορεῖ] i. e. 'possesses the power of life and death,' which was represented by the governors having a sword carried before them. Ἔκδικος, 'an avenger.' The word is scarcely found elsewhere, except in the Greek Translators of the Old Test. and in Aristæas.

5. ἀνάγκη.] The expression is equivalent to καθῆκόν ἐστι, or δεῖ; for the obedience in question is plainly political, not religious, and the words following suggest the motives; viz. not only through dread of the ὀργὴ, or penalty annexed to disobedience, but διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν, 'for conscience sake,' through religious motives; q. d. (in the words of Newcome,) 'because he is a minister of that God, who makes civil obedience a matter of duty.' As, then, disobedience in such a case involves not only a breach of law, but a sin, so, taking the converse, we may say, in the words of Sophocles, Ant. 872, σέβειν μὲν, εὐσέβειά τις; i. e. 'honour rendered to whom honour is due, is piety.'

6. Of the two reasons here assigned why taxes should be paid to rulers, the first refers to the high usefulness of their vocation; the second adverts to their being appointed by God to a ministration which, in various ways, is found most beneficial to men. For 'rulers (says Dr. Barrow, Sermon on 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2) necessarily take much care and trouble, and are exposed to many hazards for our advantage. To their industry and vigilance, under God, we owe the fair administration of justice,' and all the other precious advantages of civilised society.

— φόρους τελεῖτε.] Supply αὐτοῖς. Αὐτὸ τοῦτο must be referred, not to φόρους τελεῖν comprehended in φόρους τελεῖτε, but to τὸ λειτουργεῖν τῷ Θεῷ, comprehended in λειτουργοί: meaning, as Barrow explains, 'the protection of right and innocency, the preservation of order and peace, the encouragement of goodness, and the correction of wickedness: all which governors are supposed to attend to, and on which their claim to honour and support must rest.' So Thucyd. i. 120, χρὴ γὰρ τοὺς ἡγεμόνας, τὰ ἴδια ἐξ ἴσου νέμοντας, τὰ κοινὰ προσκοπεῖν, ὥσπερ καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις ἐκ πάντων προτιμῶνται.

Now without the payment of taxes, these various ends could not be attained; for, as Tacitus says, 'Nec quies gentium sine armis, nec arma sine stipendiis, nec stipendia sine tributis haberi queunt.' And yet it is God's will that the λειτουργία should be performed, and consequently that the taxes necessary to that purpose should be paid.

7. After having enjoined obedience to magistrates, the Apostle subjoins briefly what is due to all persons generally.

— ἀπόδοτε, &c.] Meaning, 'I would not have you behind-hand with any man in any thing; but if you owe him any duty, perform it to the full. If any honour or respect, in whatever kind or degree, belong to him, account it as justly his due; and let him have it to the utmost of what can with justice or in equity be demanded.' (Bp. Sanderson.)

At τῷ some supply αἰτοῦντι; others, ὀφείλετε, taking the τῷ for ᾧ: both methods τὸ τέλος, τὸ τέλος· τῷ τὸν φόβον, τὸν φόβον· τῷ τὴν τιμὴν, τὴν τιμήν. [f] Μηδενὶ μηδὲν ὀφείλετε, εἰ μὴ τὸ ἀγαπᾷν 8 ἀλλήλους· ὁ γὰρ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἕτερον, νόμον πεπλήρωκε.

[g] τὸ γάρ· Οὐ μοιχεύσεις· οὐ φονεύσεις· οὐ κλέψεις· 9 [οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις·] οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις· καὶ εἴ τις ἑτέρα ἐντολὴ, ἐν τούτῳ τῷ λόγῳ ἀνακεφαλαιοῦται, ἐν τῷ· Ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς ἑαυτόν. [h] Ἡ 10 ἀγάπη τῷ πλησίον κακὸν οὐκ ἐργάζεται· πλήρωμα οὖν νόμου ἡ ἀγάπη.

f Gal. 5. 14. 1 Tim. 1. 5.
g Ex. 20. 14. Lev. 19. 18. Deut. 5. 18. Matt. 19. 18. & 22. 39.
h Matt. 22. 40. Mark 12. 31. Gal. 5. 14. James 2. 8. 1 Tim. 1. 5.

involving some harshness. With respect to the difference between φόρος and τέλος, the former term denoted a fixed tax, such as the land-tax and capitation-tax; the latter, the vectigalia, or customs, levied on the imports and exports. So Aristophanes has ἀγορᾶς τέλος. The general usage, however, requires the plural. By φόβος may here be denoted the reverential homage due to kings and governors; by τιμὴ, the respect due to all who are in authority. So Soph. Ant. 873:

Κράτος δ', ὅτῳ κράτος μέλει, Παραβατὸν οὐδαμῇ πέλει.

8. μηδενὶ — ἀλλήλους.] The Apostle takes occasion, from the mention of the word ὀφειλὰς, to pass from what respects the political law, to that which regards morals and the mutual offices of Christians one to another; and shows that these precepts, as they had been valid before Moses, so now also did they remain, but with the glorious supplementa of the Christian dispensation. (Grotius.) The general scope of the sentence is plain, though there has been some doubt as to the details.

To take ὀφείλετε, with De Dieu, Koppe, and Rosenmuller, as an Indicative, is little agreeable to the context, which is wholly occupied with injunctions. The common interpretation (adopted by the ancient and almost all modern Commentators), which regards it as an Imperative, is decidedly to be preferred. Here, indeed (as Hyperius observes), we have a persuasive to the performance of what is due by the law of charity, from the effect and excellence of charity; it being intimated that true charity is of such a nature, that it would omit nothing of what is enjoined by the Law: or, in other words, Christian charity is a continual debt, which is ever being paid, but is always owing, and never discharged in this life. A delicate turn, imitated by our great Epic Poet, Paradise Lost, B. iv. 55.

'A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays; at once Indebted and discharg'd.

— τὸν ἕτερον] for τὸν πλησίον, i. e. 'any person with whom we have any connexion whatever.' So our Lord, in his parable of the good Samaritan, has taught us to extend the signification of the word, making thereby the command as unlimited as the benevolence of the Deity, and coextensive with the sphere of human action. Πεπλήρωκε, 'implere solet,' 'fulfils.' By νόμου is, I think with Bp. Middleton, meant the Law in general, and not, as some Interpreters suppose, the second table only of the Law.

9. τὸ γάρ.] On the idiom here and at ἐν τῷ just after, some difference of opinion exists. It is not, I conceive, put for ὅτι; nor is it used δεικτικῶς. I would rather suppose, with Koppe, that there is an ellipsis of γεγραμμένον. So Prof. Scholefield well renders the verse thus: 'For the commandment, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet, and whatever other commandment there is, is briefly comprehended in the precept, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.' In the same view Hyperius observes: 'Probatio quòd tantus sit effectus charitatis, quâdam formâ inductionis.'

The words οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις, not found in six uncial and several other MSS. and the Edit. Princ., are rejected by Mill, Bengel, and others, and cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz, but without reason; since we may quite as well imagine the omission of the clause (by the homœotel.) as its insertion. If introduced, it would have been brought in at some other place. The clause is retained by Wetstein and Matthæi.

— εἴ τις ἑτέρα, &c.] On this idiom see Note at Mark xi. 25. Ἀνακεφαλαιοῦται. Lit., 'is summed up,' (a metaphor taken from casting up accounts,) intimating, as Newcome says, that the other commandments of the second table are only heads included under this.

— ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς ἑ.] Not meaning, that we should love him as much as ourselves, but in the same manner, though not to the same degree as we love ourselves. This is confirmed by the words following, which seem to be exegetical, and meant to show the nature of this love; namely, that we should be as careful to avoid injuring him, as we should of injuring ourselves. To which purpose it is admirably observed by Bp. Sherlock, in one of his Sermons, that 'what the principle of self-preservation is with respect to ourselves, the same is charity with respect to our neighbour.'

10. ἡ ἀγάπη—ἐργάζεται.] Here we may, with the Commentators, suppose abstract for concrete, 'He who loveth,' &c. But it should rather seem that the sense intended is, 'Love consists in not injuring our neighbour.' And true it is, that a great part of the love we owe to our fellow-creatures is only required to be shown by not injuring them; which will often operate as a positive benefit.

— πλήρωμα οὖν νόμου ἡ ἀγάπη.] This may mean, either that 'love is the end and scope of the commandments respecting our neighbour;' or rather, that 'in love is comprehended the fulfilment of the Law,—the sum total of what the Law enjoins as to our neighbour.' Hence the 11 [i] ΚΑΙ τοῦτο, εἰδότες τὸν καιρὸν, ὅτι ὥρα ἡμᾶς ἤδη ἐξ ὕπνου ἐγερθῆναι· (νῦν γὰρ ἐγγύτερον ἡμῶν ἡ σωτηρία, ἢ 12 ὅτε ἐπιστεύσαμεν· [k] ἡ νὺξ προέκοψεν, ἡ δὲ ἡμέρα ἤγγικεν·) ἀποθώμεθα οὖν τὰ ἔργα τοῦ σκότους, καὶ ἐνδυσώμεθα τὰ 13 ὅπλα τοῦ φωτός. [l] Ὡς ἐν ἡμέρᾳ, εὐσχημόνως περιπατή-σωμεν· μὴ κώμοις καὶ μέθαις, μὴ κοίταις καὶ ἀσελγείαις, μὴ 14 ἔριδι καὶ ζήλῳ· [m] ἀλλ' ἐνδύσασθε τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν Χρι-στὸν, καὶ τῆς σαρκὸς πρόνοιαν μὴ ποιεῖσθε εἰς ἐπιθυμίας.

i 1 Cor. 15. 34. Eph. 5. 14. 1 Thess. 5. 6.
k Eph. 5. 11. & 6. 13, 14. 1 Thess. 5. 5, &c. Col. 3. 8.
l Luke 21. 34. Gal. 5. 21. 1 Thess. 4. 12. & 5. 6.
m Gal. 3. 27. & 5. 16 1 Pet. 2. 11.

same precept is called, in James ii. 8, the νόμος βασιλικὸς, and in 1 Tim. i. 5, τὸ τέλος τῆς παραγγελίας.

11. The Apostle now proceeds to inculcate, up to the end of this Chapter, the duties of Christians towards themselves; and, to excite them to the zealous observance of these and the above-mentioned virtues, he adds this new reason,—that the return of Christ to the earth, to save and bless, is an event not far distant. Holiness of life is then compared to the conduct of men in the broad day-light, and in full view of their fellow-creatures, and who are thereby held in a strong moral restraint. (Koppe.)

— καὶ τοῦτο, εἰδότες, &c.] At καὶ τοῦτο supply ποιεῖτε, 'And this admonition especially observe, as knowing that this is the critical season [for action].' In explanation of which it is added, 'inasmuch as now it is time to be roused from the sleep of inactivity, security, &c., and to be awake to a sense of duty.' The reason for this is suggested in the next clause.

— νῦν γὰρ ἐγγύτερον, &c.] Render, 'now is salvation nearer to us,' &c.; for the ἡμῶν belongs to ἐγγύτερον rather than to σωτηρία. Of the various senses in which these words have been understood, the following alone have any semblance of truth:—1. that adopted by Crellius, Macknight, Rosenmuller, Schleusner, and most Commentators for the last century, who explain, 'Now is our knowledge of the doctrines of salvation greater than when we were first converted.' A sense, indeed, unobjectionable in itself, but such as cannot well be proved to exist in the words. 2. that of others, as Locke and Koppe, who understand σωτηρία of the second advent of Christ, when the day of glory to the Church would commence. Yet to this well-founded objections have been made, which are fully stated by Whitby and Stuart. The preference seems due to the interpretation of the ancient and some modern Commentators (as Taylor and Stuart), who by σωτηρία understand that eternal salvation which will to the righteous commence at the period of death—a period to them the beginning of life, and light, and glory; and of which St. Paul so often says the saints long after, as that period when they shall be freed from the bondage of corruption, and be received into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Salvation, too, is here represented as a day, or period, namely, that of death, which is also, in fact, practically speaking, coincident with the coming of the Lord and the day of judgment. See supra viii. 24. Thus it is meant that 'every day brings us nearer to our final salvation, if saved we are to be.' The argument is well stated by Stuart as follows: 'We are hastening to retribution: every day brings us nearer to it: and in prospect of the reward, which now almost appears in sight, as we approach the goal of life, let us act with renewed effort, as duty requires.' With respect to ἐπιστεύσαμεν, it is well observed by Grotius, that πιστεύω is one of those verbs which denote action either in commencement, progress, or conclusion. Here it denotes commencement, namely, at their conversion, as Eph. i. 13. So the Pesch. Syr. renders, 'than when we were converted to the Christian faith.'

12. ἡ νὺξ προέκοψεν—ἤγγικεν.] The metaphor here is founded on the imagery of the preceding verse; and the sense to be assigned to νὺξ and ἡμέρα will depend on the mode of interpretation there adopted. Hence it will be meant either that the night of heathen darkness or Jewish ignorance is drawing to a close, and the day of Gospel light is dawning; or that the dark and obscure state of this life is far advanced, and the day of eternity is fast approaching. According to either view, the following admonitions will be very apposite.

— ἐνδυσώμεθα τὰ ὅπλα τοῦ φωτός.] It has been disputed whether by ὅπλα be meant armour or apparel. The latter sense is adopted by many eminent modern Expositors; but there is no sufficient reason to abandon the former, which is the more general view. It would seem that by this expression the various Christian virtues are considered in the light of armour, as in Eph. vi. 11 we have ἐνδύσασθε τὴν πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, where the image is drawn forth into a complete allegory.

13. εὐσχημόνως περιπατήσωμεν.] Περιπατ. signifies 'to lead one's life,' like the Heb. הלך. The meaning, in other words, is: 'Let us conduct ourselves decorously, as men in the full blaze of day.' Agreeably to which metaphor, the Apostle subjoins earnest admonitions against those vices which, in ancient times, were committed almost exclusively in the night,—namely, those of drunken revelry, and its consequent, lewdness; and also those crimes usually arising from thence, as quarrelling and violence.

14. ἐνδύσασθε τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν.] Meaning, 'Take upon you his holy dispositions, follow his great example.' Comp. Phil. ii. 5. We have here a metaphor è re vestiariâ, also occasionally found in the Classical writers. So Lucian, Gall. 19, ἀποδυσάμενος δὲ τὸν Πυθαγόραν, τίνα μετημφιάσω μετ' αὐτόν; Dionys. Hal. Ant. xi. 5, τὸν Ταρκύνιον ἐκεῖνον ἐνδυόμενοι. Compare also Gal. iii. 27. Eph. iv. 24. Rom. viii. 29.

— τῆς σαρκὸς πρόνοιαν μὴ ποιεῖσθε, &c.] Importing, as the Greek Commentators, and, of a Infra 15. 1. 7. 1 Cor. 8. 9. & 9. 22. b Infra v. 14. Tit. 1. 5. c Col. 2. 16. d James 4. 12.

XIV. [a] TON δὲ ἀσθενοῦντα τῇ πίστει προσλαμβάνεσθε, 1 μὴ εἰς διακρίσεις διαλογισμῶν. [b] Ὃς μὲν πιστεύει φαγεῖν 2 πάντα, ὁ δὲ ἀσθενῶν λάχανα ἐσθίει. [c] Ὁ ἐσθίων τὸν μὴ 3 ἐσθίοντα μὴ ἐξουθενείτω· καὶ ὁ μὴ ἐσθίων τὸν ἐσθίοντα μὴ κρινέτω· ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ αὐτὸν προσελάβετο. [d] Σὺ τίς εἶ ὁ 4 modern ones, Calvin and Hyperius, explain, that 'the body is, indeed, to be taken care of by necessary aliment, as a means of help to us in our earthly pilgrimage, but not so as to cause us to forget our proper country.'

XIV. Now commences the third Section of the practical part of the Epistle (extending throughout this Chapter, and up to the 13th verse of the next), in which are detailed various duties, private and civil, to be performed in daily intercourse; especially towards those who, not being fully satisfied as to the abrogation of the ceremonies of the Mosaic Law, did not, in this respect, evince faith, but scrupled at the eating of certain foods, and the not regarding of seasons. Then is shown the use of Christian liberty in things indifferent. Lastly, is subjoined an exhortation to the preserving of concord, both among Jews and Gentiles recently converted to Christianity. (Carpzov.)

1. Who are meant by the ἀσθενοῦντες τῇ πίστει has been somewhat disputed. Certain eminent Commentators (as Carpzov, Koppe, and Eichhorn) maintain that they were a species of Jewish Essenes, who (like the Greek ἀσκηταὶ) practised all those various mortifications of the flesh, in order to attain greater power in the spirit,—such as were adopted by the Monks of a later age. But I entirely agree with Rosenmuller and Professor Stuart, that although there were then various classes of persons who practised asceticism, especially in their abstinence from animal food, either wholly or partially, yet the manner in which the Apostle here speaks of them forbids such a notion; for, instead of attacking their pride and vain-glory (as at Col. ii. 21—23), he throws his shield over them, and directs that their scruples, which were conscientious and sober, may be respected. And when we consider that in ver. 5 mention is made of the distinction that the persons in question made, between days, and compare this with what is said at Col. ii. 16, there can (as Stuart shows) be little doubt that the whole difficulty was one which arose from Jewish scruples about the use of meats which had been offered to idols, and afterwards sold in the market (which the persons in question thought would communicate pollution to those who used it), and the observance of certain fasts and feast-days. But for the better understanding of the whole matter, especially as a general question, the reader is referred to an admirable discourse of Bp. Sanderson ad Clerum, upon ver. 3, on 'the use of things indifferent;' wherein, after stating the occasion, tracing the scope, and showing the connexion of the text with the context, he divides it into two points of doctrine: I. That we are not to despise others, be they ever so weak, or we ever so strong: and that both for the sin's sake, by which it is hurtful to the despisers, and for the scandal's sake to the despised. II. That we are not to judge and condemn others, 1. from our want of commission; 2. our want of skill; 3. from the uncharitableness, and, 4. the scandalousness of the thing itself. Or thus: 1. We have no right to judge; and so our judging is usurpation. 2. We may err in our judgments; and so our judging is rashness. 3. We take things the worst way when we judge and condemn. 4. We give occasion of offence by our judging, and thus it is scandalous. 'Thus the Apostle,' he proceeds to say, 'endeavours to draw both parties (as being both in the wrong) to this honourable composition,—that the strong in faith shall remit somewhat of his superciliousness in despising the weak; and that the weak shall abate somewhat of his acrimony in condemning the strong.' The question is, indeed, as the Bishop observes, 'one of great importance, as laying down a rule for our guidance on all other occasions, wherein a weakness of judgment in faith may show itself,—if not in scruples about meats and days, yet in a scrupulous forbearance of some things, from a persuasion that they are, or a fear lest they should be, unlawful, but which, in truth, are not so, but only indifferent.'

— τὸν ἀσθενοῦντα τῇ πίστει.] According to the foregoing view, ὁ ἀσθενῶν will denote one who is doubtful, or not fully persuaded of the propriety or impropriety of certain things in themselves indifferent, and is not satisfied as to the liberty which Christianity allows in those cases. By τῇ πίστει (which should be rendered 'his faith' or belief) is denoted a full persuasion of mind as to what is lawful or unlawful. Προσλαμβάνεσθε has been variously interpreted. The word properly signifies to lay hold of and draw any thing or person to us; and, from the context, here seems to mean receive into Christian communion, with the adjunct notion of taking into friendly intercourse; see also xv. 7, and Gal. vi. 1.

— μὴ εἰς διακρίσεις διαλ.] Meaning (as the usual import of the terms and the context suggest), 'but not for the purpose of examining and agitating with him doubtful or disputed points,'—namely, since as contempt and harshness might urge him to apostasy, so to perplex his mind with points, which his Christian judgment is not sufficiently mature to enable him to grapple with, might drive him into scepticism. See Calvin.

2. The Apostle now illustrates the thing by an example, and shows why he has given the precept. Πιστεύει φαγεῖν, 'is persuaded he may eat.' This seems a popular idiom, since it is not found in the Classical writers. Πάντα: meaning, all kinds of food without distinction, even those forbidden by the Mosaic Law. Λάχανα, i. e. rather than forbidden meats.

3. ὁ ἐσθίων.] Supply πάντα. Κρινέτω, for κατακρ. Προσελάβετο, 'has accepted him, admitted him to the benefits of the Christian religion.' See Note on ver. 1.

4. σὺ τίς εἶ, &c.] 'by what right dost thou hold judgment over another's servant?' A further reason why the weak should not judge the strong. This use of the phrase σὺ τίς εἶ; occurs also in κρίνων ἀλλότριον οἰκέτην ; τῷ ἰδίῳ κυρίῳ στήκει, ἢ πίπτει.

Σταθήσεται δέ· δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ Θεὸς στῆσαι αὐτόν.
5 [e] Ὃς μὲν κρίνει ἡμέραν παρ' ἡμέραν, ὃς δὲ κρίνει πᾶσαν e Gal. 4. 10. Col. 2. 16.
6 ἡμέραν. ἕκαστος ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ νοῒ πληροφορείσθω. [f] Ὁ f 1 Cor. 10. 31.
φρονῶν τὴν ἡμέραν, Κυρίῳ φρονεῖ· καὶ ὁ μὴ φρονῶν τὴν 1 Tim. 4. 3.
ἡμέραν, Κυρίῳ οὐ φρονεῖ. καὶ ὁ ἐσθίων, Κυρίῳ ἐσθίει, εὐχαριστεῖ γὰρ τῷ Θεῷ· καὶ ὁ μὴ ἐσθίων, Κυρίῳ οὐκ ἐσθίει, 7 καὶ εὐχαριστεῖ τῷ Θεῷ. [g] Οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἡμῶν ἑαυτῷ ζῇ, καὶ g 2 Cor. 5. 15.
8 οὐδεὶς ἑαυτῷ ἀποθνήσκει. ἐάν τε γὰρ ζῶμεν, τῷ Κυρίῳ 1 Thess. 5. 10. 1 Pet. 4. 2.
ζῶμεν· ἐάν τε ἀποθνήσκωμεν, τῷ Κυρίῳ ἀποθνήσκομεν. Ἐάν τε οὖν ζῶμεν, ἐάν τε ἀποθνήσκωμεν, τοῦ Κυρίου ἐσμέν.
9 [h] Εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ Χριστὸς καὶ ἀπέθανε [καὶ ἀνέστη] καὶ h Acts 10. 42. 2 Cor. 5. 15.

the Classical writers. At τῷ ἰδίῳ, &c. sub. ἐπὶ, coram. Στήκει and πίπτει are forensic terms, and signify, 'to stand or fall in judgment,' to be acquitted, or be condemned. Σταθήσεται Carpzov explains, 'consistet ac stabilietur.' Since, however, there seems to be here a continuation of the forensic metaphor before used, I would rather render, 'He shall be held acquitted in judgment,' viz. of this matter. Δυνατὸς, under the idea of able, also implies that of willing, as supra xi. 23. The argument, then, in σταθήσεται, &c., is, as Hyperius observes, that 'there is no reason why the person should so interfere by judgment, since there is a sure hope of the restitution of the person lapsed, or supposed to be lapsed, without any such interference.'

5. ἡμέραν.] Meaning, such as the Jewish Sabbath, Passover, Pentecost, σκηνοπηγία, and other days, which the scruples of Jewish Christians deemed sacred; see Rev. i. 10. The παρὰ seems to mean holier than; that being implied in the comparison denoted by παρά. In the antithetical clause supply, from the context, ἴσην, in the sense 'equally appropriate to religious purposes.' In ἕκαστος—πληροφορείσθω there is a brevity of expression, which requires us to supply from the context ἐσθίων καὶ μὴ ἐσθίων, κρίνων καὶ μὴ κρίνων ἡμέραν. The general sense of the passage seems to be this: 'quisque de suâ animi sententiâ certus fieri studeat:' or, 'let every one act with fulness of persuasion, and according to the conviction of his mind, that he doth what is lawful.'

6. The Apostle now gives examples of both the discrepant sentiments, as well in respect of days, as of meats; and shows, by a new reason, that those who, in this instance, think differently, ought not to feel contempt for each other.

— ὁ φρονῶν.] Literally, 'he who minds, observes.' Κυρίῳ is for εἰς τὸν Κύριον, 'with a reference to the Lord,' and in obedience to his understood will. Εὐχαριστεῖ τῷ Θεῷ must be so accommodated, as to apply both to ὁ ἐσθίων and to ὁ μὴ ἐσθ. In the former case, it relates both to the returning thanks for the food, and to the Christian liberty of unrestricted use; in the latter case, the sense is, 'return thanks to God for the gift of abstinence.' The καὶ before ὁ ἐσθίων is inserted, on the authority of most of the best MSS. and Versions, and many Fathers, as also all the early Editions, except the Erasmian. It was, after being cancelled in the third edition of Stephens, that of Beza and the Elzevir, restored by Bengel, Matthæi, Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; and rightly; since it is required by propriety, and might easily have been omitted by the scribes.

7. The Apostle now confirms what he has just been saying, by an argument ex toto ad partem; as much as to say, that no wonder is it that the particular actions of our life ought to have respect unto the Lord, when our very life itself ought to be wholly subservient to his glory. (Calvin.)

— οὐδείς.] Meaning, no Christian. The general sense here may be, as Grotius and Koppe explain, that whether alive or dead, we are in the power of God. But to consider it more particularly, ἑαυτῷ ζῇ seems to signify, 'liveth after his own judgment, will, and pleasure,' so as to give no account of his actions to any one but himself; similarly to what we find in Menander, cited by Stob. p. 120, τοῦτ' ἐστι τὸ ζῆν, οὐχ ἑαυτῷ ζῆν μόνον. Plut. i. 819, Xyl. αἰσχρὸν γὰρ ζῆν μόνοις ἑαυτοῖς καὶ ἀποθνήσκειν. Eurip. Ion, 646, ἔα δ' ἐμαυτῷ ζῆν. Consequently, ex opposito, οὐδεὶς ἑαυτῷ ἀποθνήσκει must mean, 'no one has, at death, any power over himself and his fate in another state of existence, nor ceases to depend for every thing upon the Lord, by whom he is to be judged.' The sense of the next clause is, that in every state of our existence, whether in this world or in the next, we belong to Christ; he is our Lord both here and hereafter.

9. εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ, &c.] This is, as Calvin and Hyperius point out, a confirmation of what has been just before said, and is adduced in proof of the above assertion, that we are to live and to die unto Christ. Render, 'Nay, for this end and purpose Christ died, and, after his resurrection, rose again unto glory, and yet liveth, that he might be Sovereign of the whole human race, both the quick and the dead.' Hence it is indirectly inferred, that we are to live unto Christ, and not unto men. In καὶ ἀπέθανε—ἀνέζησεν the reading is disputed. Some MSS. have not the first καί; others are without καὶ ἀνέστη; and both are cancelled by Griesbach: while other MSS., with several versions and early Editions, for ἀνέζησεν read ἔζησεν, which is preferred by Mill and Wetstein, and edited by Bengel, Matthæi, Griesbach, Vater, and Scholz. Again, l Matt. 25. 31. 2 Cor. 5. 10. [ἀν]έζησεν, ἵνα καὶ νεκρῶν καὶ ζώντων κυριεύσῃ. [i] Σὺ δὲ 10

τί κρίνεις τὸν ἀδελφόν σου; ἢ καὶ σὺ τί ἐξουθενεῖς τὸν ἀδελφόν σου; πάντες γὰρ παραστησόμεθα τῷ βήματι τοῦ k Isa. 45. 23. Phil. 2. 10. Χριστοῦ· [k] γέγραπται γάρ· Ζῶ ἐγώ, (λέγει Κύριος,) 11 ὅτι ἐμοὶ κάμψει πᾶν γόνυ, καὶ πᾶσα γλῶσσα ἐξl Matt. 12. 36. Gal. 6. 5. ομολογήσεται τῷ Θεῷ. [l] ἄρα οὖν ἕκαστος ἡμῶν περὶ 12
Heb. 13. 17. 1 Pet. 4. 5. ἑαυτοῦ λόγον δώσει τῷ Θεῷ. [m] Μηκέτι οὖν ἀλλήλους κρί- 13
m 1 Cor. 10. 32. νωμεν· ἀλλὰ τοῦτο κρίνατε μᾶλλον, τὸ μὴ τιθέναι πρόσ-
2 Cor. 6. 3. n Matt. 15. 11. κομμα τῷ ἀδελφῷ ἢ σκάνδαλον. [n] Οἶδα καὶ πέπεισμαι ἐν 14 1 Tim. 4. 4. Tit. 1. 15. Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ, ὅτι οὐδὲν κοινὸν δι' ἑαυτοῦ, εἰ μὴ τῷ λογι-o 1 Cor. 8. 11. ζομένῳ τι κοινὸν εἶναι· ἐκείνῳ κοινόν. [o] Εἰ δὲ διὰ βρῶμα 15 ὁ ἀδελφός σου λυπεῖται, οὐκ ἔτι κατὰ ἀγάπην περιπατεῖς.

Tittman edits, καὶ ἀπέθανε καὶ ἀνέζησεν; while Rinck would read ἀπέθανε καὶ ἀνέστη. Under all the circumstances, I see no sufficient authority to cancel any word, especially as the sense of the context admits, nay, requires, the whole: and the words καὶ ἀνέστη might be omitted by reason of the two καί's. That ἔζησεν ought to be read for ἀνέζησεν there is little doubt. The ἀνα probably arose from the αι preceding, or came from those Critics who rejected καὶ ἀνέστη as useless; a very unsafe principle in a writer who, like Thucydides, is at some times as diffuse, as he is at others obscurely brief. Here, however, there is nothing verbose or pleonastic; ἀνέστη καὶ ἔζησε being for ἀναστὰς ἔζησε. Ἔζησε means, in its full sense, lived, liveth, and will live to all eternity; with reference to that immortal life wherein 'he ever liveth to make intercession for his faithful servants.' See Heb. vii. 25.

10. σὺ δὲ τί κρίνεις, &c.] Here the Apostle adduces another reason to dissuade them from exercising rash judgment, or entertaining undue contempt of each other; and that is suggested partly in the term ἀδελφ., which is emphatic, and meant to restrain rash judgment, but chiefly in the words following, πάντες γὰρ παραστησόμεθα τῷ βήματι τοῦ Χρ., which import, 1. that to Christ alone is committed the power of judging; 2. that we are all, whether strong or weak, alike amenable to this judgment, and therefore are not warranted in judging, much less contemning and despising each other: and accordingly, that all must be left to the judgment of one great and true Estimator, and none ought to presume to intrude upon his province.

11. The foregoing position is now confirmed from the sure word of prophecy.

— γέγραπται γάρ, &c.] Meaning, 'agreeably to what is said in Scripture;' namely, Isaiah xlv. 23, wherein there is indeed some variation from the Sept. and the Hebrew, yet not near so great as would at first sight appear; for, 1. the words λέγει Κύριος form no part of the quotation, but were (as often) added by the Apostle to indicate the speaker; 2. the words εἰ μὴ ἐξελεύσεται—ἀποστραφήσονται were omitted by the Apostle, as not necessary to his purpose; 3. in the next words the Apostle follows the Sept. (not the Heb.), at least in the Alexandrian and some other MSS. The only real discrepancy is in the first words, ζῶ ἐγώ, which, however, is really an equivalent (and Scriptural) expression to the κατ' ἐμαυτοῦ ὀμνύω of the Sept.

13. The Apostle had before reproved the weak who censured the strong in the use of their Christian liberty. He now proceeds to restrain the strong from offending their weak brethren, by too free a use of their liberty in not forbearing the use of it when it might give offence to the weak.

— μηκέτι οὖν ἀλλήλους κρίνωμεν, &c.] Commentators notice the antanaclasis in κρίνωμεν and κρίνατε, the word being first used in the sense to 'pass severe and unjust judgment upon,' and then to 'resolve.' A similar use of στασιάζειν is adduced by Raphel from Herodotus. Πρόσκομμα and σκάνδαλον are nearly synonymous: the latter, however, is the stronger term. See Note on ver. 21.

14. Here, as Calvin and Hyperius remark, is anticipated an objection on the part of the strong, to justify their not making any distinction between meats. It is shown that though there be no sin in the case simply, yet there may be from the circumstances of the use; namely, if thereby our brother be disquieted in his conscience.

— οἶδα καὶ πέπεισμαι, &c.] A strong expression, to denote full persuasion from complete knowledge. Ἐν Κυρίῳ Ἰ., i. e. 'by the teaching of Jesus Christ himself,' and not by human reasonings. See Theophylact.

— ὅτι οὐδὲν κοινόν.] By the limitation suggested in the context, the sense must be, 'no kind of meat is of, or by itself, in its own nature, impure (i. e. unlawful); but to him who accounts it to be unlawful,' to him it is unlawful; meaning (as Grot. and others explain) that 'the persuasion of any food being forbidden, is to a Christian Jew, as long as he is so persuaded, sufficient to make it unlawful for him to use that liberty, which it has given him from the yoke of the Mosaic ordinances.' The εἰ μὴ is not put for ἀλλὰ, but is used in its ordinary sense, and is only introductory of another and an exceptive clause.

15. διὰ βρῶμα] 'through [thy] eating of food.' Λυπεῖται is explained by the older Commentators, 'is injured and hurt;' by the more recent ones, 'is brought into grief,' i. e. self-condemnation, by being induced to do what he believed to be unlawful. The expression seems simply to mean, 'is disquieted and perplexed with doubts.' Κατὰ ἀγάπην, 'agreeably to Christian charity,' which requires us, for the sake of a weaker brother, μὴ τῷ βρώματί σου ἐκεῖνον ἀπόλλυε, ὑπὲρ οὗ Χριστὸς 16, 17 ἀπέθανε. Μὴ βλασφημείσθω οὖν ὑμῶν τὸ ἀγαθόν· [p] οὐ p 1 Cor. 8. 8.

γάρ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ βρῶσις καὶ πόσις, ἀλλὰ 18 δικαιοσύνη καὶ εἰρήνη καὶ χαρὰ ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ· [q] ὁ γὰρ q 2 Cor. 8. 21.
ἐν τούτοις δουλεύων τῷ Χριστῷ, εὐάρεστος τῷ Θεῷ καὶ 19 δόκιμος τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. Ἄρα οὖν τὰ τῆς εἰρήνης διώκωμεν, 20 καὶ τὰ τῆς οἰκοδομῆς τῆς εἰς ἀλλήλους. [r] Μὴ ἕνεκεν βρώ- r Matt. 15. 11.
ματος κατάλυε τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Θεοῦ. Πάντα μὲν καθαρά· Acts 10. 15. Tit. 1. 15.
ἀλλὰ κακὸν τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ τῷ διὰ προσκόμματος ἐσθίοντι.
21 [s] Καλὸν τὸ μὴ φαγεῖν κρέα, μηδὲ πιεῖν οἶνον, μηδὲ ἐν ᾧ ὁ s 1 Cor. 8. 13.
22 ἀδελφός σου προσκόπτει ἢ σκανδαλίζεται ἢ ἀσθενεῖ. Σὺ πίστιν ἔχεις· κατὰ σεαυτὸν ἔχε ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ· μακάριος to suffer one's own liberty to be circumscribed in any matter not unlawful. By ἀπόλλυε is meant, not final perdition, but rather a present falling from a state of salvation by apostasy or otherwise.

16. μὴ βλ. ὑ. τὸ ἀγαθὸν] 'act not so as to give occasion that your right sense of your Christian liberty in the indiscriminate use of foods be evil spoken of.' (Abp. Newcome.)

17. οὐ γάρ ἐστιν—πόσις.] A popular and familiar mode of expression, in which the Apostle adduces another reason for caution in the use of meats; and that drawn from the principal end of our religion; q. d. 'The essence of Christianity consists in far different things than the exercise of one's right to eat meats without distinction.' Here it is not meats and drinks that are considered, but virtue, peace (as opposed to a contentious opposition to conscientious prejudices), spiritual joy, or that inward joy which springs from the consolations of the Holy Ghost: meaning, in short (as Bp. Sanderson explains), that 'the religion of Christ consists in the exercise of holy graces, and the conscientious performance of unquestioned duties.'

18. τούτοις.] Meaning, 'these dispositions and habits.'

— εὐάρεστος τῷ Θεῷ καὶ, &c.] A familiar expression, to signify, 'is in favour both with God and man.' So a Rabbinical writer cited by Schoettgen: 'Ut diligatur superiùs (i. e. à cœlo, à Deo) et desideratus sit inferiùs (in terrâ) et acceptus hominibus.'

19. ἄρα οὖν τὰ τῆς, &c.] A conclusion drawn from the preceding: 'Since a peaceable spirit is so well pleasing to God, let us study peace, and what tends to mutual edification;' see Acts ix. 31, and note, and Bp. Sanderson, Serm. p. 472.

20. τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Meaning, the propagation of the Christian religion by the faith and Christian piety of the person in question.

— κακὸν τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ, &c. sc. ἐστι.] By κακὸν we are to understand, what is morally wrong. The words may be referred either to the weak Christian, who, if he eateth διὰ προσκόμματος (i. e. σὺν προσκόμματι, stumblingly, with an uncertain and dubious mind), sinneth; or, to the better instructed and advanced Christian, who, if by eating, he offends and causes another to sin (διὰ προσκόμματος, for μετὰ προσκόμματος, i. e. occasioning an offence to him), he himself also sinneth.

21. καλὸν (sc. ἐστι) τὸ μὴ φαγεῖν, &c.] Meaning, 'It is matter of duty to abstain from flesh used in sacrifice to idols; or to abstain from flesh altogether; or from any other act in the presence of those who may thus be ensnared into sin and perplexed with doubts.' (Abp. Newcome.) This use of the plural κρέα for the singular κρέας is found in the best writers, from Homer downwards. At ἐν ᾧ supply ποιεῖν. Προσκόπτει is for σκανδαλίζεται.

The words ἢ σκανδαλίζεται ἢ ἀσθενεῖ are not found in three MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, and have been rejected by Mill, as being a mere gloss. Such, however, can hardly be the case with ἢ ἀσθενεῖ; and if that clause be genuine, so probably is the preceding one. There is, indeed, great force in this use of three terms so nearly allied in sense; and here Chrysostom and Theophylact conjoined to represent the person as altogether weak. Calvin, indeed, traces here an anti-climax; q. d. 'Ne fratribus causa lapsus præbeatur, imo nec offensionis; imo nec infirmitatis.' Σκανδαλίζεσθαι, however, is rather a stronger term than προσκόπτειν, denoting such a stumbling as verges to a total fall; the two terms representing less or greater degrees of mental perturbation and perplexity. The third term is, I apprehend, meant to indicate the natural result of the foregoing (compare 1 Cor. viii. 9), in that state of mental vacillation, whereby any one is disabled from distinguishing between what is lawful and what is unlawful, in respect of Christian liberty,—which is a great impediment to growth in grace, and not unfrequently terminates in backsliding,—nay, sometimes in virtual apostasy.

22. σὺ πίστιν ἔχεις.] The ancient and early modern Commentators read this interrogatively; the more recent ones, declaratively; which latter mode is confirmed by the Peschito Syriac, and is more agreeable to the style of the Apostle. By faith is meant a full persuasion that what one is doing is right and lawful; or, in other words, the full assent of the judgment and conscience. Κατὰ σεαυτὸν ἔχε, 'keep this persuasion to yourself, and your God; use it when you have no other witness; and do not, in exercising it before men, employ it so as to cause your fellow Christian and weaker brother to fall from his duty.' Wetstein compares, from Heliod. vii. 16, κατὰ σεαυτὸν ἔχε, καὶ μηδενὶ φράζε.

— μακάριος ὁ μὴ κρίνων, &c.] Meaning, t Tit. 1. 15. ὁ μὴ κρίνων ἑαυτὸν ἐν ᾧ δοκιμάζει. [t] Ὁ δὲ διακρινόμενος, 23 ἐὰν φάγῃ, κατακέκριται, ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως· πᾶν δὲ ὃ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, ἁμαρτία ἐστίν.

a Supr. 14. 1. 1 Cor. 9. 22. Gal. 6. 1. b 1 Cor. 9. 19. & 10. 24, 33. & 13. 5. Phil. 2. 4, 5.

XV. [a] Ὀφείλομεν δὲ ἡμεῖς οἱ δυνατοὶ τὰ ἀσθενήματα 1 τῶν ἀδυνάτων βαστάζειν, καὶ μὴ ἑαυτοῖς ἀρέσκειν· [b] ἕκα- 2 στος [γὰρ] ἡμῶν τῷ πλησίον ἀρεσκέτω εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν πρὸς

'Happy is he who doth not condemn himself in the use he makes of what he allows himself to do; namely, by using it in an imprudent manner.' The words are probably formed on Ecclus. xiv. 2, μακάριος οὗ οὐ κατέγνω ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ.

23. ὁ δὲ διακρινόμενος, &c.] Meaning, 'And he who doubteth [whether it be right to eat] is condemned,' i. e. is liable to be condemned [nay, is self-condemned] if he eat; because he doth it not from faith.' So Bp. Sanderson, Serm. p. 511: 'Be the thing what it may in itself, yet his doubting makes it unlawful to him, so long as he remains doubtful, because it cannot be of faith.'

— πᾶν δὲ ὃ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, ἁμ. ἐ.] Meaning, 'whatever is done without a full persuasion that it is lawful, is sinful.' See a most masterly Discourse of Bp. Sanderson on this text, in which, after ably settling the connexion and scope of the text, he shows that faith must here be the persuasion of the judgment and conscience. He then proceeds to inquire, I. What is the power of the conscience, as concerning the lawfulness or unlawfulness of actions. II. Whether, in every thing we do, an actual consideration thereof be necessarily requisite. III. What degree of persuasion is required for the warranting of our actions: whether or no, and how far, a man may warrantably act, with reluctancy of conscience. Wherein is considered the case, 1. of a resolved conscience; 2. of a doubting conscience; 3. of a scrupulous conscience. Upon the whole, he proves that the true import of the text is, in effect, this: 'Whosoever shall enterprise the doing of any thing which he verily believeth to be unlawful, or, at least, is not reasonably well persuaded of the lawfulness thereof, let the thing be otherwise, and in itself what it may be, lawful or unlawful, indifferent or necessary, convenient or inconvenient, it matters not,—TO HIM IT IS A SIN.' Here Wetstein and Grotius compare similar sentiments from the Classical writers, and Schoettgen some from the Rabbinical ones.

The doxology τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ, &c. which in the textus receptus comes in at the end of the Epistle, is, in the far greater part of the MSS. and several Versions and Fathers, inserted here: a position approved by Grotius and Hammond, and adopted by Mill, Wetstein, Matthæi, and Griesbach; but which has been rejected by Knapp, Vater, and Scholz. It is a question of difficult determination, and in which no certainty can be attained. External evidence is certainly in favour of its insertion here; yet the testimonies for the former position are weighty, including the two most ancient of the MSS. (the Alexandrian and Vatican), and the most ancient of Versions. As to the internal, it cannot well be balanced, since there are various considerations drawing both ways, which tend to make the ordinary canons of criticism of uncertain application. The internal congruity, however, of the passage, as Stuart shows, is strongly against its insertion here, and though St. Paul does sometimes insert a doxology in the body of an Epistle, yet (as he points out) it is in quite a different situation from the present.

XV. In the present Chapter the Apostle continues to exhort the Church at Rome to strive after unity and peace. He sets before them the self-denial of Christ, vv. 3, 4. He beseeches God to give them the spirit of Christian unity and love, vv. 5, 6. He exhorts them to a mutual kind reception of each other, v. 7. He shows that the reception of the Gentiles into the Christian Church had been clearly and often predicted, vv. 8—12, and prays God to fill them all with joy and peace, v. 13. He apologizes, as it were, for writing to the Church at Rome, by describing the nature of his office as an Apostle to the Gentiles, the labours which he had performed while holding this office, and the affectionate desire which he had cherished of paying the Church at Rome a visit, vv. 14—24. He describes to them the plan of his future journeys and labours, expresses his hope of yet visiting them, and begs an affectionate interest in their prayers to God for him, vv. 25—32. (Stuart.)

1. By οἱ δυνατοὶ, as opposed to the ἀδύνατοι, must be understood the more abundant in knowledge, and the stronger in faith (xiv. 22, compared with Luke xxiv. 19, and Acts vii. 22, δυνατὸς ἐν λόγοις); and by the ἀδύνατοι, those less skilled and instructed, and therefore sometimes in hesitation and doubt as to the lawfulness or unlawfulness of any thing. By ἀσθενήματα are meant the unfounded, though conscientious, scruples adverted to in chap. xiv. Βαστάζειν signifies 'to bear with;' a metaphor taken from strong persons who aid their weak fellow-travellers, by occasionally carrying for them their burdens. It is here applied to the duty of using Christian forbearance, rather than offend the prejudices of a weak brother. By ἑαυτοῖς ἀρέσκειν is meant gratifying ourselves by having our own views received as absolute verities.

2. ἕκαστος ἡμῶν, &c.] Γὰρ after ἕκαστος is absent from nearly all the best MSS., many Versions and Fathers, and the Edit. Princ. It was introduced by R. Stephens from the Erasmian Editions, and, though expunged by Beza in his first Edition, afterwards crept into the subsequent ones, and so was introduced into the textus receptus; but was again cancelled by Bengel, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; and with reason; since it is weak both in external and internal evidence.

— ἀρεσκέτω εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν πρὸς οἰκοδ.] By the addition of this qualifying phrase, εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν (meaning, 'so far as may be for his good, i. e. his edification, and that of the Church'), the Apostle means to limit his precept, 3 οἰκοδομήν. [c] Καὶ γὰρ ὁ Χριστὸς οὐχ ἑαυτῷ ἤρεσεν, ἀλλά, c Ps. 69. 10.

καθὼς γέγραπται· Οἱ ὀνειδισμοὶ τῶν ὀνειδιζόντων 4 σε ἐπέπεσον ἐπ' ἐμέ. [d] Ὅσα γὰρ προεγράφη, εἰς τὴν d Supra 4. 23, 24.
ἡμετέραν διδασκαλίαν προεγράφη· ἵνα διὰ τῆς ὑπομονῆς καὶ 1 Cor. 10. 11. 2 Tim. 3. 16.
5 τῆς παρακλήσεως τῶν γραφῶν τὴν ἐλπίδα ἔχωμεν. [e] Ὁ δὲ e Supra 12. 16.
Θεὸς τῆς ὑπομονῆς καὶ τῆς παρακλήσεως δῴη ὑμῖν τὸ αὐτὸ 1 Cor. 1. 10. Phil. 2. 2. & 3. 15, 16.
6 φρονεῖν ἐν ἀλλήλοις κατὰ Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν· ἵνα ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐν ἑνὶ στόματι δοξάζητε τὸν Θεὸν καὶ Πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου showing that it must be for good, both morally and spiritually; for otherwise this pleasing will be for harm and evil, so easily does ἀρέσκεια fall into abject subservience. So Theophrastus, Char. Eth. 5. defines ἀρέσκεια to be a disposition of mind, οὐκ ἐπὶ βελτίστῳ ἡδονῆς παρασκευαστική.

3. καὶ γὰρ ὁ Χριστὸς, &c.] The above injunction is now confirmed by the example of Christ.

— οὐχ ἑαυτῷ ἤρεσεν] 'sought not his own gratification [but the good of others];' which latter circumstance is implied in the former. The next sentiment ('nay, he bore patiently the insults of men,') is clothed in the words of Scripture, Ps. lxix. 10.

4. ὅσα γὰρ προεγράφη, &c.] These words, as Grotius and Crellius well point out, are meant to anticipate an objection,—namely, that the above passage has reference to David, not to Christ or Christians. To this we have here the answer, part of which is contained in a suppressed clause dependent on γάρ: q. d. ['It does, indeed, pertain to David, but it is typical of Christ, or at least may serve to our example and instruction;] for whatever things were written,' &c. There is allusion to numerous passages occurring in the Old. Test., written for the instruction and consolation of believers in the promised Messiah.

— διὰ τῆς ὑπομονῆς καὶ τῆς παρακλ. τῶν γραφῶν.] Meaning, 'through the patience which the Scriptures enjoin and exemplify, and by the motives of consolation which they supply.' In ἔχωμεν is implied κατέχωμεν.

5. Here, Hyperius remarks, we have the conclusion of the whole passage, consisting of comprecation (vv. 5, 6), and exhortation, ver. 7. The full sense of the verse is ably drawn forth by Bp. Sanderson, in a Sermon on this text, where, after pointing out the connexion and scope of the words, he shows the nature of the prayer here made; and after observing that prayer is properly united with instruction, and that God is the only Author of peace; and having shown the necessity of that influence of God on the mind and heart of man, which alone can eradicate pride and instil humility,—he inquires why God is called the God of patience and of consolation, and treats on the choice of these attributes, and the reason for their union here. On the matter of the prayer, he considers these following particulars:—I. The thing itself prayed for, namely, like-mindedness, and then two amplifications thereof,—1. in respect of the persons, that it should be universal, and mutual; 2. in respect of the matter, that it should be according to Christ Jesus. II. He considers the second qualification in κατὰ Χριστὸν, importing an agreement, 1st, unto truth and holiness; 2dly, after the example of Christ. And rightly; for though some Expositors of eminence interpret it, 'according to what the spirit of Christ and his religion requires,' yet such a sense is too far-fetched; not to say that that may be implied in the foregoing.

— ὁ Θεὸς τῆς ὑπομονῆς καὶ τῆς παρακλ.] An expression, I apprehend, used not merely (as Commentators explain) with reference to the various means, whereby all things are made to work for good in the end to them that love God, in conjunction with the motives of patience and consolation supplied by the Scriptures; since it seems also to allude to the work of the Holy Spirit, the Comforter: a view, I find, adopted by Calvin, who observes: 'Ab effectis sic nominatur Deus, quæ prius Scripturæ attribuebantur; solus enim Deus patientiæ et consolationis auctor est, quia utrumque cordibus nostris instillat per Spiritum suum.'

Here it is well observed by Bp. Sanderson, that 'being to pray for unity, the Apostle might well make mention of patience, as an especial help thereto, and consolation as an especial fruit and effect thereof, since patience will ever be found the best peace-maker.'

— τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν.] An expression, as Bp. Sanderson remarks, 'peculiar to St. Paul, and which may here be supposed to have reference at once to the understanding and judgment, and to the will and affections; namely, that God would so frame the hearts of these Romans one towards another, that there might be, as far as possible, an universal accord amongst them, both in their opinions and affections.'

6. ἵνα ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐν ἑνὶ στόματι, &c.] The full import of these words is well pointed out by Bp. Sanderson, in a Sermon on this text; in which, I. He treats at large on the subject of glorifying God, and proves that the glory of God should be intended as our chief end, for two reasons: 1. as being our chief good; 2. as that whereunto we are both in duty and in wisdom obliged. Hence he adduces an inference of admonition, that we do not bestow on any creature, or draw to ourselves, any of that glory which is due to God. II. He shows the reason of the expression τὸν Θεὸν καὶ Πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰ. Χρ. III. He considers the glorification of God ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐν ἑνὶ στόματι, with mind as well as mouth, and what it imports. IV. He shows how much God is glorified by Christian unity, which constitutes the main scope and design of the whole passage.

— τὸν Θεὸν καὶ Πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου, &c.] Here and in 2 Cor. xi. 31. Eph. i. 3. 1 Pet. i. 3 (where the same expression occurs) we may render (with the most eminent Expositors) 'the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.' The first

f Supra 14. 1, 3
g Matt. 15. 24. Acts 3. 25, 26. supra 9. 4. h 2 Sam. 22. 50. Ps. 18. 49.
i Deut. 32. 43.
k Ps. 117. 1.
l Isa. 11. 1, 10. Rev. 5. 5. & 22. 16.
m 2 Pet. 1. 12. 1 John 2. 21.

ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. [f] Διὸ προσλαμβάνεσθε ἀλλήλους, 7 καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς προσελάβετο * ὑμᾶς, εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ.
[g] Λέγω δὲ, Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν διάκονον γεγενῆσθαι περιτομῆς 8 ὑπὲρ ἀληθείας Θεοῦ, εἰς τὸ βεβαιῶσαι τὰς ἐπαγγελίας τῶν πατέρων· [h] τὰ δὲ ἔθνη ὑπὲρ ἐλέους δοξάσαι τὸν Θεὸν, 9 καθὼς γέγραπται· Διὰ τοῦτο ἐξομολογήσομαί σοι ἐν ἔθνεσι, καὶ τῷ ὀνόματί σου ψαλῶ. [i] Καὶ πάλιν λέγει· 10 Εὐφράνθητε ἔθνη, μετὰ τοῦ λαοῦ αὐτοῦ. [k] καὶ 11
πάλιν· Αἰνεῖτε τὸν Κύριον πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, καὶ ἐπαινέσατε αὐτὸν πάντες οἱ λαοί. [l] Καὶ πάλιν 12 Ἡσαΐας λέγει· Ἔσται ἡ ῥίζα τοῦ Ἰεσσαὶ, καὶ ὁ ἀνι-στάμενος ἄρχειν ἐθνῶν, ἐπ' αὐτῷ ἔθνη ἐλπιοῦσιν.
Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς ἐλπίδος πληρώσαι ὑμᾶς πάσης χαρᾶς καὶ 13 εἰρήνης ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν, εἰς τὸ περισσεύειν ὑμᾶς ἐν τῇ ἐλπίδι ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος ἁγίου.
[m] ΠΕΠΕΙΣΜΑΙ δὲ, ἀδελφοί μου, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐγὼ περὶ 14
ὑμῶν, ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ μεστοί ἐστε ἀγαθωσύνης, πεπληρωμένοι

Person in the blessed Trinity is (as Whitby and Bp. Pearson remark, from the ancient Divines,) the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ in respect to the latter's manhood, and eternal filiation or derivation from the Father, being God of God; his Father, in respect of his divinity, or as he is the Word. Yet it may be doubted whether the common rendering, 'God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,' be not quite justifiable, and indeed preferable, for several reasons, which will appear to any one who attentively weighs the discussion of Bp. Sanderson on the reason why the expression was adopted.

7. διὸ προσλαμβάνεσθε ἀλλήλους, &c.] Meaning to say, that this unity would be especially evinced, if the Gentile and the Jewish Christians should mutually receive and show kindness to each other. On the force of προσλαμβ., see Note supra xiv. 1. The force of the word must, however, be somewhat accommodated in sense, as applied to Christ, with reference to his benignity, notwithstanding our being enemies by evil works. See supra v. 10. Εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ is by most Interpreters construed with what immediately precedes; by which a tolerable sense arises, but one not so good, or so suitable to the context, as by referring the words to προσλαμβάνεσθε ἀλλήλους, and considering καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς προσελάβετο ὑμᾶς as an illustration. Render, 'that so God may be glorified.' Compare John xvii. 23. Ὑμᾶς, for vulg. ἡμᾶς, is found in many MSS., and is adopted by all the best Editors.

8. The Apostle now urges as a reason why the Jewish and Gentile Christians should live in harmony, that the purpose of Christ's ministry, as shown by the prophecies of the Old Test., extended to both. To the Jews he came as their promised Messiah, and to the Gentiles as the minister of salvation through the mercy of God. Thus the Jews and the Gentiles had reason alike to glorify God for his mercy imparted to both.

— λέγω δὲ, &c.] The expression here and at Gal. iv. 1. v. 16, is regarded by Schleusner as a formula of connexion; but it rather serves to give force to the declaration following. Ὑπὲρ ἀληθείας Θεοῦ, 'for the establishment of the truth of God,' i. e. his faithfulness in keeping his promises. In ἐπαγγ. τῶν πατέρων the Genitive is one of object. Βεβαιῶσαι τὰς ἐπαγγ., 'to confirm the promises,' i. e. by performing what had been promised.

9. Koppe here supposes an anacoluthon, for τῶν δὲ ἐθνῶν—Θεοῦ. But most Commentators supply λέγων and ὀφείλειν, referring to a similar ellipse at iv. 13. 'The Apostle (says Taylor) is persuading the converts to a cordial coalition in public worship, and is giving each party a substantial reason why they ought to unite their hearts as well as voices. But, as it would be more difficult to persuade the Jew, he applies to him several quotations out of Scripture, Ps. xvii. 49. Deut. xxxii. 43. Ps. cxvii. 1. Isai. xi. 10; the first and last of which, as Whitby shows, the Jews interpreted of the Messiah. All of them agree with the Sept., and, in their general sense, with the Hebrew, and tend to prove that the Gospel privileges were to be extended to both Jews and Gentiles.

13. The Apostle concludes his exhortation to unity by a suitable prayer, that they may be filled with all joy and peace in believing, and may have a lively hope of future glory, through the influences of the Spirit shed abroad in their hearts, who thus will give them an earnest of that glory. Comp. Eph. i. 13, sq. and Rom. viii. 23. Thus ver. 13 is a kind of link to unite the foregoing admonitory with the subsequent apologetical matter; the latter to qualify and make more palatable the former.

14. Now commences the 4th and last portion of the Epistle, consisting of two parts; in the former of which, up to the end of this Chapter, the Apostle, after good wishes and prayers for their spiritual welfare, addresses them in endearing language, and apologizes for what might be likely to give offence; in the latter (which occu-

15 πάσης γνώσεως, δυνάμενοι καὶ ἀλλήλους νουθετεῖν. [n] Τολ- n Supra 1. 5 & 12. 3.
μηρότερον δὲ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοὶ, ἀπὸ μέρους, ὡς ἐπανα-μιμνήσκων ὑμᾶς, διὰ τὴν χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι ὑπὸ τοῦ 16 Θεοῦ· [o] εἰς τὸ εἶναί με λειτουργὸν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς τὰ o Acts 9. 15. & 13. 2. supra 11. 13.
ἔθνη, ἱερουργοῦντα τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα γένηται Gal. 2. 7, 8. 1 Tim 2. 7.
ἡ προσφορὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν εὐπρόσδεκτος, ἡγιασμένη ἐν Πνεύ- 2 Tim. 1. 11. & 4. 6.
17 ματι ἁγίῳ. Ἔχω οὖν καύχησιν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τὰ πρὸς Phil. 2. 17.
18 Θεόν· [p] οὐ γὰρ τολμήσω λαλεῖν τι, ὧν οὐ κατειργάσατο p Supra 1. 5. infra 16. 26.
19 Χριστὸς δι' ἐμοῦ, εἰς ὑπακοὴν ἐθνῶν, λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ, [q] ἐν q Acts 19 11. 2 Cor. 12. 12.
δυνάμει σημείων καὶ τεράτων, ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος ‡ Θεοῦ· ὥστε με ἀπὸ Ἱερουσαλὴμ, καὶ κύκλῳ μέχρι τοῦ Ἰλλυρικοῦ, pies the last Chapter) he resumes, and continues the same endearing language to the end.

— ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ, &c.] 'ye yourselves, [even without my admonition].' Beza well compares the Homeric τί με σπεύδοντα καὶ αὐτὸν ὀτρύνεις; The expression π. πάσης γνώσεως must not be too rigidly interpreted. Its sense, as determined by the words following, δυνάμενοι καὶ ἀλλήλους νουθετεῖν, is, 'Ye are full of benignity and kindness—so abounding in all [Christian] knowledge, as to be able to admonish each other, [as well as to receive admonition from me.]' Comp. 1 John ii. 20, 27.

15. The Apostle here replies to a tacit objection,—q.d. Why, then, have you plied us with admonitions, &c.?—and states the reason why he had written with such boldness and authority. (Crellius.) The expression τολμηρότερον is excusatory. This apologetical language was, as Macknight observes, necessary, since he had opposed some of their strongest prejudices, and rebuked them for certain irregularities of conduct. He excuses his freedom by pleading the strong obligation and sacred duty imposed on him as an Apostle, and the Apostle of the Gentiles. This gives him an occasion of adverting to his own labours in converting the heathens, and to mention what he further meant to do in that cause.

16. εἰς τὸ εἶναι—εἰς τὰ ἔθνη.] The general meaning is, 'That I should bestow my especial attention to the conversion of the Gentiles to the religion of Christ.' The Apostle, however, uses a formula derived from the Jewish religion, in order the more strongly to impress on the Jewish Christians the dignity of his Apostleship, calling himself, too, not διάκονος, but λειτουργὸς, a sacred minister (see Note on Acts xxvi. 16), and saying that his office is not κηρύσσειν, but ἱερουργεῖν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, i. e. to preach the Gospel as a priest of the New Covenant, by which men are made ϑυσίαι ζῶσαι. So 4 Macc. vii. 8, τοὺς ἱερουργοῦντας τὸν νόμον ἰδίῳ αἵματι. So προσφορὰ and ἡγιασμένη, a little after, are likewise terms borrowed from the Temple service; see more in Carpzov. The words ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ are meant to suggest the means whereby they have been made, and are preserved, pure; namely, by the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit on their hearts, and not by external rites.

17. καύχησιν] 'a reason for glorying and rejoicing;' namely, in his labours having been so blessed. At τὰ πρὸς Θεὸν sub. ἀνήκοντα.

18. οὐ γὰρ τολμήσω λαλεῖν, &c.] Gratz. and Carpzov recognise here a delicacy of idiom, q. d. 'I can scarcely venture to say what Christ hath not done by me,' i. e. how much he hath done. More simple and natural, however, is the sense commonly assigned: 'I do not, in saying this, claim any praise, by exaggerating my success, or taking to myself the credit of what others have done.' But, after all, the most correct view of the sense may be that adopted by the Greek Commentators, who consider this as a brief mode of expression (occasioned by modesty) for οὐ γὰρ τολμ. λαλεῖν τι, ὧν οὐκ ἐγὼ, ἀλλὰ κατειργ. Χριστός.

— λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ, ἐν δυνάμει—Πνεύμ. Θ.] There seems to be a parallelism between λόγῳ and δυνάμει Πνεύματος Θεοῦ, and again between ἔργῳ and δυνάμει σημείων καὶ τεράτων; marking respectively the miraculous gifts exercised by the tongue, such as the word of wisdom, of knowledge, and prophecy; and the gifts of healing, and the like. (Terrot.)

The λόγῳ refers to the preaching of the Gospel, and the ἔργῳ to the miracles by which he proved his Divine commission; for the words following, ἐν δυνάμει σημείων καὶ τεράτων, are exegetical of the preceding.

19. Πνεύματος Θεοῦ.] For Θεοῦ, ἁγίου is found in several MSS., some later Versions and Fathers, and is preferred by Mill and others, and edited by Griesbach, Knapp, and Tittman; but without reason. The common reading is justly retained by Wetstein and Matthæi, who have well remarked that the new one was merely è glossâ, the vulg. being a somewhat rare expression.

— ἀπὸ Ἰ. καὶ κύκλῳ] 'from Jerusalem and the neighbourhood.' The term κύκλῳ may, by the usage of the best Greek writers, have great latitude, and comprehend a very extensive radius of country about Jerusalem, including Palestine, Syria, and the adjacent parts of Arabia. But Jerusalem is especially mentioned, from its being the centre, whence the rays of Divine knowledge beamed. Πεπλ. τὸ εὐαγγ. τ. K. is an expression deviating from Classical usage, and alien to that of Col. i. 25, π. τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ. The early Commentators explain it 'to fully evangelize;' the latter ones regard it as a Hebraism, derived from a similar use of the correspondent term גמר, to complete, perfect, which (especially in the Chaldee dialect) often signifies to teach. But the other is the simpler and truer interpretation.

r 2 Cor. 10. 15, 16. πεπληρωκέναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ. [r] Οὕτω δὲ 20
φιλοτιμούμενον εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, οὐχ ὅπου ὠνομάσθη Χριστὸς, s Isa. 52. 15. ἵνα μὴ ἐπ' ἀλλότριον θεμέλιον οἰκοδομῶ· [s] ἀλλὰ, καθὼς 21 γέγραπται· Οἷς οὐκ ἀνηγγέλη περὶ αὐτοῦ, ὄψον-t Supra 1. 13 ται· καὶ οἳ οὐκ ἀκηκόασι, συνήσουσι. [t] Διὸ καὶ 22
1 Thess. 2. 18. ἐνεκοπτόμην τὰ πολλὰ τοῦ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς. [u] νυνὶ δὲ 23
Acts 19. 21. u Supra 1. 10. μηκέτι τόπον ἔχων ἐν τοῖς κλίμασι τούτοις, ἐπιποθίαν δὲ ἔχων & 15. 32. 1 Thess. 3. 10. τοῦ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἐτῶν,· [x] ὡς ἐὰν πορεύω- 24
2 Tim. 1. 4. x Acts 15. 3. μαι εἰς τὴν Σπανίαν, [ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς.] Ἐλπίζω γὰρ διαπορευόμενος θεάσασθαι ὑμᾶς, καὶ ὑφ' ὑμῶν προπεμφθῆναι y Acts 19. 21. ἐκεῖ, ἐὰν ὑμῶν πρῶτον ἀπὸ μέρους ἐμπλησθῶ. [y] Νυνὶ δὲ 25
& 24. 17. z 1 Cor. 16. 1. πορεύομαι εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, διακονῶν τοῖς ἁγίοις· [z] εὐδόκησαν 26
2 Cor. 8. 1, &c. & 9. 2, 12. γὰρ Μακεδονία καὶ Ἀχαΐα κοινωνίαν τινὰ ποιήσασθαι εἰς
Gal. 2. 9, 10. a Supra 11. 17. τοὺς πτωχοὺς τῶν ἁγίων τῶν ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ· [a] εὐδόκησαν 27
1 Cor. 9. 11. Gal. 6. 6. γὰρ, καὶ ὀφειλέται αὐτῶν εἰσιν. εἰ γὰρ τοῖς πνευματικοῖς αὐτῶν ἐκοινώνησαν τὰ ἔθνη, ὀφείλουσι καὶ ἐν τοῖς σαρκικοῖς b Phil. 4. 17. λειτουργῆσαι αὐτοῖς. [b] Τοῦτο οὖν ἐπιτελέσας, καὶ σφραγι- 28 σάμενος αὐτοῖς τὸν καρπὸν τοῦτον, ἀπελεύσομαι δι' ὑμῶν εἰς c Supra 1. 11. τὴν Σπανίαν. [c] Οἶδα δὲ ὅτι ἐρχόμενος πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐν πλη- 29 ρώματι εὐλογίας τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐλεύσομαι.
d 2 Cor. 1. 11. [d] Παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ 30 Phil. 2. 1. Col. 4. 12. Χριστοῦ, καὶ διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Πνεύματος, συναγωνίσασθαί μοι ἐν ταῖς προσευχαῖς ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν·
e 2 Thess. 3. 2. [e] ἵνα ῥυσθῶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπειθούντων ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ, καὶ ἵνα ἡ 31

20. οὕτω δὲ φιλοτ.] The participle depends upon a verb preceding, ὥστε πεπληρωκέναι; but, in translation, it may be rendered by a verb in the Preterite: q. d. Thus have I striven. Φιλοτιμεῖσθαι properly signifies to be studious of honour; and as such a pursuit supposes zeal, labour, and diligence, it comes to signify, to 'do any thing with zeal, diligence,' &c. Thus it here means, 'earnestly striving.'

21. ἀλλὰ, καθὼς γέγρ.] q. d. 'thus making good in my own case the words of Scripture.'

— οἷς οὐκ ἀνηγγέλη, &c.] The words (from Isaiah lii. 15) exactly agree with the Sept., and are by the Jewish Interpreters referred to the Messiah, but applied by the Apostle to his own case. The expression περὶ αὐτοῦ, however, has nothing corresponding to it in the Hebrew.

22. διὸ] i. e. for the reason adverted to at vv. 19, 20; his desire to visit new countries for the purpose of evangelizing the Gentiles. Τὰ πολλὰ is to be taken adverbially, for very much.

23. μηκέτι τόπον ἔχων, &c.] i. e. 'there being no longer any sufficient occasion for my apostolical labours here.' So τόπον ἔχειν in Heb. xii. 17.

— κλίμασι] 'parts of the country.' The term κλίμα properly denotes one of those divisions of the sphere, between the Equator and Arctic Pole, of which the ancient geographers made seasons. Ἐπιποθίαν, 'a strong desire.' The word is very rare, and synonymous with ἐπιπόθησις, which occurs in 2 Cor. vii. 11. Τοῦ ἐλθεῖν. for ὥστε ἐλθεῖν.

24. ὡς ἐὰν] 'as soon as;' an idiom found only in the later Classical writers. On the question whether St. Paul did ever take this journey into Spain, see Recens. Synop. I have there shown that it is very probable he did; but, at the same time, not improbable that St. James had several years before barely planted the Gospel in that country; which, from its vast extent, would admit of St. Paul's labours, without his being said to 'build on another man's foundation.'

— ἐὰν ὑμῶν—ἐμπλησθῶ.] The sense is, 'after I shall have been, in some measure, satisfied with [the pleasure of] your society.' So Ælian, cited by Koppe, says of the peacock, ἐᾷ γὰρ ἐμπλησθῆναι τῆς θέας τὸν παρεστῶτα. And in Susann. v. 32, we have, ὅπως ἐμπλησθῶσι τοῦ κάλλους αὐτῆς.

The words ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς and γὰρ after ἐλπίζω, not found in seven ancient MSS., several Versions, and some Fathers, are rejected by Mill, and cancelled by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz; but without reason. See Matthæi and Rinck.

25. νυνὶ δὲ πορ., &c.] The Apostle adds this, that they may not expect him very soon.

26. Μακεδονία καὶ Ἀχαΐα] i. e. the Christians in Macedonia and Achaia.

31. τῶν ἀπειθ. ἐν τῇ Ἰ.] i. e. the unbelieving Jews, who bore a deadly hatred to Paul, and διακονία μου ἡ εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ εὐπρόσδεκτος γένηται τοῖς 32 ἁγίοις· [f] ἵνα ἐν χαρᾷ ἔλθω πρὸς ὑμᾶς διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, 33 καὶ συναναπαύσωμαι ὑμῖν. [g] Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

1 XVI. ΣΥΝΙΣΤΗΜΙ δὲ ὑμῖν Φοίβην τὴν ἀδελφὴν ἡμῶν,
2 οὖσαν διάκονον τῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἐν Κεγχρεαῖς· [a] ἵνα αὐτὴν προσδέξησθε ἐν Κυρίῳ, ἀξίως τῶν ἁγίων, καὶ παραστῆτε αὐτῇ ἐν ᾧ ἂν ὑμῶν χρῄζῃ πράγματι· καὶ γὰρ αὕτη προ-3 στάτις πολλῶν ἐγενήθη, καὶ αὐτοῦ ἐμοῦ. [b] Ἀσπάσασθε Πρί-σκιλλαν καὶ Ἀκύλαν, τοὺς συνεργούς μου ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· 4 (οἵτινες ὑπὲρ τῆς ψυχῆς μου τὸν ἑαυτῶν τράχηλον ὑπέθηκαν· οἷς οὐκ ἐγὼ μόνος εὐχαριστῶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ πᾶσαι αἱ ἐκκλησίαι 5 τῶν ἐθνῶν·) [c] καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίαν. Ἀσπά-σασθε Ἐπαίνετον τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου, ὅς ἐστιν ἀπαρχὴ τῆς 6 * Ἀσίας εἰς Χριστόν. ἀσπάσασθε Μαριάμ, ἥτις πολλὰ

f Acts 18. 21. supra 1. 10. James 4. 15.
g Infra 16. 20. 2 Cor. 13. 11. Phil. 4. 9. 1 Thess. 5. 23. Heb. 13. 20.
a 3 John 6. Phil. 2. 29.
b Acts 18. 2, 26. 2 Tim. 4. 19.
c 1 Cor. 16. 15, 19. Col. 4. 15.

sought his life. 'Here,' remarks Koppe, 'the Apostle does not desire to be preserved from calamities, but only that he may be so strengthened, as to be enabled to overcome them; and that he may be the means of cheering the afflicted Christians at Jerusalem.'

— ἵνα ἡ διακονία, &c.] 'that my service may be acceptable to the saints;' i. e. kindly accepted by them; for acceptable, in a certain sense, it was sure to be to persons somewhat indigent. Though when Paul considered the violent prejudices of the Jewish Christians against the Gentile converts, and especially against himself, the Apostle of the Gentiles, and, as they thought, παραβάτην νόμου, and, on this occasion, their Almoner, he might well have some doubts whether they would come under any obligation to the charity of those who set so lightly by the Mosaic ceremonial ordinances. Hence, as Theodoret observes, he exhorts them not to let hatred overcome necessity.

XVI. This Chapter consists of various commendations and salutations, intermixed with a solemn warning, in reference to those among them who sowed divisions and caused offences, and an earnest injunction that they would cultivate kindliness and candour. Then, after expressing the salutations of several Christian friends who were with him, the Apostle concludes with a noble and impressive doxology, comprising earnest prayers for them, and devout ascriptions of glory to God.

1. Φοίβην.] She seems to have been in the company of those who conveyed this Epistle, though not herself the bearer of it. It is plain that she was known at Rome, and is here probably commended to the Roman Christians, as needing their friendly notice and assistance.

— διάκονον.] According to the constitution of the primitive Church, there was an order of women discharging part of the public business of the Church, consisting of two kinds; 1. Elderly women (πρεσβύτιδες), presiding over, and superintending the morals of, the other female Christians; 2. deaconesses (διάκονοι), who discharged some of the offices of the ministry, as baptizing the female converts; and who also collected and distributed the contributions for the relief of sick and poor females, besides other offices less important; see Bingham's Antiq. l. xi. 12; Coteler. on the Const. Ap. iii. 15.

2. ἐν Κυρίῳ] 'in the name and on account of Christ.' Ἀξίως τῶν ἁγ., 'in such a manner as Christians ought to receive each other.' Παραστῆτε αὐτῇ, literally, 'stand by her;' a military metaphor, with allusion to the advocates who, in defending their clients, were said παρίστασθαι, and were indeed called παρασταταί. Ἐν ᾧ ἂν ὑμῶν χρῄζῃ πράγμ., 'in whatever office she may need your assistance.' Προστάτις, 'a protectress,' like 'patrona' in Latin.

3. συνεργούς μου ἐν Χ.] 'my coadjutors in promulgating the Gospel of Christ;' see Phil. ii. 25. 1 Thess. iii. 2.

4. τὸν ἑαυτῶν τράχ. ὑπέθηκαν.] Literally, 'submitted their necks [to the sword];' i. e. hazarded their lives. Similarly, Ælian, V. H. x. 16, ὑποθήσω τὴν κεφαλὴν, i. e. for one to cut off. This is by some supposed to relate to the perilous situation of Aquila and Priscilla in the tumult at Corinth; see Acts xviii. 12.

5. τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐ. ἐκκλ.] Meaning, not, I conceive, 'their own family,' as some Commentators explain, but, as others, 'the congregation which met at their house;' the Christians, it seems, as yet, worshipping from house to house, and not in a public building for general worship; see Acts xx. 20.

— Ἀσίας.] This, instead of the Vulg. Ἀχαΐας, found in several ancient MSS. and some Editions and Fathers, is preferred by Grotius, Mill, Bengel, Whitby, Valcknaer, Koppe, and Rosenmuller, and has been edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, and Scholz. Indeed, it is so well supported both by external and internal evidence, that there can be little doubt that it is the true reading. The very nature of the term ἀπαρχὴ suggests the idea of one person only (see 1 Cor. xv. 20), and as in 1 Cor. xvi. 15, Stephanus is called the ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀχαΐας, Epænetus could have no claim to the name.

ἐκοπίασεν εἰς ἡμᾶς. ἀσπάσασθε Ἀνδρόνικον καὶ Ἰουνίαν, τοὺς 7 συγγενεῖς μου καὶ συναιχμαλώτους μου· οἵτινές εἰσιν ἐπί-σημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, οἳ καὶ πρὸ ἐμοῦ γεγόνασιν ἐν Χριστῷ. ἀσπάσασθε Ἀμπλίαν τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου ἐν Κυρίῳ. 8 ἀσπάσασθε Οὐρβανὸν τὸν συνεργὸν ἡμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ, καὶ 9 Στάχυν τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου. ἀσπάσασθε Ἀπελλῆν τὸν 10 δόκιμον ἐν Χριστῷ. ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου. ἀσπάσασθε Ἡρωδίωνα τὸν συγγενῆ μου. ἀσπάσασθε 11
τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ναρκίσσου τοὺς ὄντας ἐν Κυρίῳ. ἀσπάσασθε 12 Τρύφαιναν καὶ Τρυφῶσαν τὰς κοπιώσας ἐν Κυρίῳ. ἀσπά-σασθε Περσίδα τὴν ἀγαπητὴν, ἥτις πολλὰ ἐκοπίασεν ἐν Κυρίῳ. [d] ἀσπάσασθε Ῥοῦφον τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ 13 τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐμοῦ. ἀσπάσασθε Ἀσύγκριτον, Φλέ- 14 γοντα, Ἑρμᾶν, Πατρόβαν, Ἑρμῆν, καὶ τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς ἀδελφούς. ἀσπάσασθε Φιλόλογον καὶ Ἰουλίαν, Νηρέα καὶ 15 τὴν ἀδελφὴν αὐτοῦ, καὶ Ὀλυμπᾶν, καὶ τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς πάντας ἁγίους. [e] Ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ. 16 ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς αἱ ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ Χριστοῦ. [f] Παρακαλῶ 17
δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, σκοπεῖν τοὺς τὰς διχοστασίας καὶ τὰ σκάνδαλα, παρὰ τὴν διδαχὴν ἣν ὑμεῖς ἐμάθετε, ποιοῦντας· καὶ ἐκκλίνατε ἀπ' αὐτῶν. [g] Οἱ γὰρ τοιοῦτοι τῷ Κυρίῳ 18

d Mark 15. 31.
e 1 Cor. 16. 20. 2 Cor. 13. 12. 1 Thess. 5. 26. 1 Pet. 5. 14.
f 2 Thess. 3. 6, 14. 1 Tim. 6. 3. 2 Tim. 3. 2, 5, 6. Tit. 3. 10. 2 John 10.
g Phil. 3. 18, 19.

7. ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις.] The sense is somewhat uncertain. Whitby, Koppe, and others take it to mean, that 'they were eminent teachers;' ἀπόστολος being sometimes used in a lower sense; as in 2 Cor. viii. 23. Phil. ii. 25. But in both those passages the Article is not found, as here; which, I think, determines it to mean Apostle in the highest sense. Thus the ἐν will signify inter; q. d. 'who were well known to, and held in consideration by, or among, the Apostles.'

8—15. Salutations are sent to 26 individuals and two whole families. By which it is plain, 1. that Paul, though he had not yet been at Rome, yet well knew the Christians who resided there; 2. that he well remembered them, since he has called them all by name, and assigned to each his respective commendation; 3. that he felt persuaded that the Romans would not take this letter amiss, though written somewhat boldly, xv. 15. (Carpzov.)

10. δόκιμον ἐν Χρ.] Meaning a tried and approved Christian (ἐν Χριστῷ and ἐν Κυρίῳ being often, especially in the present Chapter, used to denote Christian); one who has approved himself such by his exemplary conduct; one whose piety is real and sincere.

13. ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κ.] Equivalent to τὸν δόκιμον ἐν Χρ. just before.

16. ἀσπάσασθε—φιλ.] As the Apostle had before bid them salute certain persons in his own name, so he now bids them salute each other: on the reason for which injunction, see Chrysostom and Theophylact in Recens. Synop. On this kiss of peace much has been written by Whitby and others, who trace it to ancient Oriental usage, and suppose it to have been borrowed from the Synagogue. It appears that, in the Apostolic age, the kiss was given to each other at the end of the Liturgy, and before the Communion Service, and was understood to express mutual love; and, in things spiritual, equality. The custom continued in use during a great part of the first century, and is noticed by several early Ecclesiastical writers. Why the Apostle has not more frequently made mention of it has been the subject of various conjectures. Be the cause what it may, there is reason to think that the custom, so liable to abuse and misrepresentation, was laid aside at a very early period of the Christian Church.

— αἱ ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ Χρ.] i. e. as Grotius has shown, of Greece, in which he was writing.

17. Before he concludes, the Apostle again touches on the subject of those dissensions, which he had heard prevailed among the Roman Christians, and the suppression of which was one principal purpose of the Epistle. Of these, then, he admonishes them to beware. He bids them mark those that caused divisions and raised factions, and also that occasioned scandals and offences among the unbelieving. Now these σκάνδαλα might arise both from the immoralities of those who made profession of Christianity, and from the folly of those who, by the introduction of heretical and false opinions, caused the Heathen to take unjust offence at the Gospel. But, from the context, it would seem that the former scandals were most in the mind of the Apostle.

18. Who these heretics were, and what their doctrine was, cannot with certainty be determined; yet, from the subject of the Epistle, it seems probable that they were Jews, who, with ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ οὐ δουλεύουσιν, ἀλλὰ τῇ ἑαυτῶν κοιλίᾳ· καὶ διὰ τῆς χρηστολογίας καὶ εὐλογίας ἐξαπατῶσι τὰς καρ-19 δίας τῶν ἀκάκων. [h] Ἡ γὰρ ὑμῶν ὑπακοὴ εἰς πάντας ἀφίκετο· h Matt. 10. 16.

χαίρω οὖν τὸ ἐφ' ὑμῖν· θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς σοφοὺς μὲν εἶναι εἰς τὸ supra 1. 8. 1 Cor. 14. 20.
20 ἀγαθὸν, ἀκεραίους δὲ εἰς τὸ κακόν. [i] Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης i Gen. 3. 15.
συντρίψει τὸν Σατανᾶν ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας ὑμῶν ἐν τάχει. ἡ 21 χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μεθ' ὑμῶν. [k] Ἀσπά- k Acts 13. 1. & 16. 1. ζονται ὑμᾶς Τιμόθεος ὁ συνεργός μου, καὶ Λούκιος καὶ Ἰάσων & 17. 5. & 20. 4.
22 καὶ Σωσίπατρος οἱ συγγενεῖς μου· ἀσπάζομαι ὑμᾶς ἐγὼ 1 Thess. 3. 2. 1 Tim. 1. 2.
23 Τέρτιος ὁ γράψας τὴν ἐπιστολὴν ἐν Κυρίῳ. [l] ἀσπάζεται l Acts 19. 22. 1 Cor. 1. 15.
ὑμᾶς Γάϊος ὁ ξένος μου καὶ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ὅλης. ἀσπάζεται 2 Tim. 4. 20.
ὑμᾶς Ἔραστος ὁ οἰκονόμος τῆς πόλεως, καὶ Κούαρτος ὁ ἀδελφός. m Supra 1. 5. & 15. 18.
24 Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων Eph. 1. 9. & 3. 9, 20.
25 ὑμῶν. ἀμήν. [m] Τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ ὑμᾶς στηρίξαι, κατὰ τὸ Col. 1. 26. 2 Tim. 1. 10. Tit. 1. 2. εὐαγγέλιόν μου καὶ τὸ κήρυγμα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, κατὰ ἀπο- 1 Pet. 1. 20. Jude 24.

an outward appearance of sanctity, were carnal, and led an immoral, or, at least, a sensual life (which latter seems to be adverted to in the words δουλεύουσιν τῇ ἑαυτῶν κοιλίᾳ, with which compare Phil. iii. 19, ὧν ὁ Θεὸς ἡ κοιλία), and only aimed at making the profession of the Gospel a means of gaining a luxurious livelihood. Χρηστολογία properly means a kind address; but is here used, in malam partem, to signify a plausible discourse, consisting of mere professions without any reality. And so χρηστοὶ λόγοι in Herodian, viii. 3. 10. Also Pallad. Epigr. C. 1, 2 (cited by Witsius), Μισῶ τὸν ἄνδρα διπλοῦν πεφυκότα· χρηστὸν λόγοισι, πολέμιον δὲ τοῖς τρόποις. The word following, εὐλογίας, is synonymous and exegetical of χρηστ., and is merely a detorsio ad deterius of the primary signification of εὐλογία, which is not blessing, but (in our old English idiom) 'speaking any one fair.' Ἀκάκων. The expression denotes not so much harmless, as guileless, persons, who, meaning well themselves, suppose others to do the same.

19. ἀφίκετο] 'has become known.' So Hippocrates, cited by Rosenmuller, πολὺ σοῦ τὸ κλέος—εἰς ἡμέας ἀφῖκται.

— τὸ ἐφ' ὑμῖν.] Supply μέρος, 'on your behalf,' 'on account of you.'

— θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς σοφοὺς, &c.] The words are well paraphrased by Grotius, 'I wish you to be so prudent as not to be deceived, and so good as not to deceive.' We may suppose the Apostle to here allude to the injunction of our Lord, Matt. x. 16, γίνεσθε φρόνιμοι ὡς οἱ ὄφεις, καὶ ἀκέραιοι ὡς αἱ περιστεραί, where, as well as here, ἀκέραιοι means simplices, ἁπλοῖ, as in Eurip. Orest. 920. Thus, in Arrian, Epict. iii. 23, it is combined with ἁπλοῦς. The Apostle says σοφοὺς εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν emphatically, as Eurip. Bacch. 611. Matth. σοφὸς, σοφός γ' εἶ· πλὴν ('and what is more') ἃ δεῖ σ' εἶναι σοφόν· (for so the passage should be pointed,) since there is a wisdom (namely, that spoken of, James iii. 15, as earthly, carnal, and demoniacal) which is εἰς τὸ κακόν.

20. τὸν Σατανᾶν.] Many modern, and especially recent, Commentators understand by this expression the persecuting Jews and Judaizers. But, as Grotius has shown, it must certainly mean the great enemy of God and man, who is also the malignant accuser of the brethren, and who delights in sowing discord where there should be peace. 'Since,' says Theophylact, 'there were divisions, the Apostle invokes the Giver of peace that he would put down the scandals. Now he does not say ὑποτάξει, but, what is more, συντρίψει; applying it not only to those who were the workers of the scandals, but Satan, the chief and prime mover. Here συντρίψει is both precatory and prophetical.' Yet it may be doubted whether the word is precatory; certainly it is not, as Stuart regards it, merely Optative. Far preferable is the view of Calvin, who recognises here rather a promise to strengthen, than a prayer to help. We may, however, best consider it as breathing that firm persuasion and assurance (see Phil. i. 19) which, in divinely inspired persons, partakes strongly of the prophetical, and therefore is the more calculated to encourage and console. The character of the present passage is exactly such as that at 1 Cor. i. 8, ὃς βεβαιώσει ὑμᾶς ἕως τέλους, &c., and Rom. vi. 14, Ἁμαρτία γὰρ ὑμῶν οὐ κυριεύσει, &c. There is, moreover, an allusion to the primeval promise (here, it is intimated, about to be fulfilled) of bruising the serpent's head, Gen. iii. 15. Nay, I cannot but suspect that the Sept. Translator wrote συντρίψει, the Hebrew being ישופך ראש (lit., 'he shall bruise thee on the head'); though our present copies have τηρήσει. And indeed Irenæus seems to have read συντρ.

— ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου, &c.] Meaning, 'And for these and all other purposes may the favour and help of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you.' Thus, as Theodoret observes, having shown the Enemy, he now points out the Helper.

25. The construction is suspended at τῷ δυν. (in the Apostle's manner) and resumed at ver.

n 1 John 1. 1. κάλυψιν μυστηρίου χρόνοις αἰωνίοις σεσιγημένου, [n] φανε- 26 ρωθέντος δὲ νῦν διά τε γραφῶν προφητικῶν, κατ' ἐπιταγὴν τοῦ αἰωνίου Θεοῦ, εἰς ὑπακοὴν πίστεως εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη
o Heb. 13. 15. γνωρισθέντος· [o] μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ᾧ ἡ 27 1 Tim. 1. 17. Jude 25. δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Ῥωμαίους ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Κορίνθου διὰ Φοίβης τῆς διακόνου τῆς ἐν Κεγχρεαῖς ἐκκλησίας.

27, μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ. We may render καὶ τὸ κήρυγμα 'even the Gospel;' for κήρ. is in apposition with εὐαγγ.; the object of Paul being (as Stuart observes) to show that the Gospel which he preached was the true one.

25. κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν—σεσιγημένου.] Render, 'agreeably to the revelation of the mystery [of the Gospel] which was kept secret or unrevealed from ancient times' (i. e. the earliest times, namely, before the Gospel was promulgated), hidden in the counsels of God. By 'this Gospel' understand the free justification of the Gentiles as well as the Jews by faith, without the observance of the law of Moses. Χρόνοις αἰωνίοις is nearly equivalent to ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων in Eph. iii. 9, and Col. i. 26. With respect to the doctrine itself of redemption, it is plain from those passages, and from 2 Tim. i. 9. Tit. i. 2, and 1 Pet. i. 20, that it had been revealed from the beginning, but faintly and obscurely; so that the term σεσιγημένου must be taken with limitation.

On the authenticity of vv. 25—27, or rather on their proper place, whether here or after xiv. 23, see Scholz.

26. The construction in this verse is, γνωρ. τε διὰ γραφῶν προφητικῶν, εἰς ὑπακοὴν πίστεως εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, 'and which was made known by prophetical declarations given, through the writings of the Apostles and Prophets, by the command of God, for the purpose of bringing all nations into obedience to the Gospel.'

27. μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ.] Koppe says this is for σοφωτάτῳ Θεῷ. But it is a far stronger expression than that. God is said to be the only wise God, as being the sole author of all wisdom, and the fountain whence alone it proceeds.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΚΟΡΙΝΘΙΟΥΣ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΠΡΩΤΗ.

---

1 I. ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, κλητὸς ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ διὰ a John 17. 19.
2 θελήματος Θεοῦ, καὶ Σωσθένης ὁ ἀδελφὸς, [a] τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ Acts 9. 14, 21. & 15. 9. & 22. 16.
Rom. 1. 7. Eph. 1. 1. 2 Tim. 1. 9. & 2. 22. Jude ver. 1.

I. Corinth was the capital of Achæa, and from its favourable situation (in the passage between Peloponnesus and the Upper Greece, and in connexion with both the Ægean and Ionian seas) it was a place of great resort, and in some measure the Emporium of Greece. Hence the inhabitants were rich, but luxurious; and, as in most commercial places, dissolute in their morals. From the devoted attention paid to commerce at Corinth, a considerable number of Jews had settled there, as well as in other trading places of the civilized world; and consequently there was a mixture of Jewish superstition and Gentile scepticism and licentiousness; for the place abounded in sophists, and swarmed with prostitutes. St. Paul, compassionating the miserable state of this great city, had gone thither first of Greece, about A.D. 52, remaining there a year and a half, and planting a church, consisting partly of converted Jews, but chiefly of Gentiles. On his departure, he was succeeded by Apollos, who preached the Gospel with great success. But the peace of the Church was soon afterwards disturbed by the intrusion of false teachers, who, with great pretensions to enlightened Christian knowledge, endeavoured to subvert St. Paul's apostolical authority, but were strenuously resisted by his friends and adherents. Hence two parties were formed,—Pauline and anti-Pauline; the latter comprehending not only all the followers of the false teachers, but some adherents of Apollos. And besides this, the same disputes between the Jewish and Gentile converts—as to the extent of Christian liberty, in the use of meats unlawful, or which had been offered up to idols,—existed, as did in the Roman Church. Moreover, the extremely corrupt state of society at Corinth had infected even the Christian converts, who had not entirely abandoned the licentiousness to which they had been addicted before their conversion, nor forsaken that philosophical scepticism so prevalent in Corinth, but introduced it into the Gospel. Hence both immorality and a kind of philosophized Christianity, which even denied the resurrection of the dead, were but too prevalent. Besides this, the licence of wealth had produced its usual pernicious effects among the richer members of the Church. Hence arose insolence to their poorer brethren, whom they prosecuted before the heathen tribunals concerning matters of pecuniary claims, which might have been settled by arbitrators among their Christian brethren; nay, they showed their contempt of them by contumelious treatment at the Lord's Supper. Even those persons, too, who were most enlightened in Christian knowledge entered into violent controversies respecting celibacy and marriage, &c.; nay, those who possessed the highest spiritual gifts abused them in various ways by pride, insubordination, or otherwise. The Apostle, being informed of this state of things, towards the close of his second visitation of Ephesus (about the end of A.D. 56, or the beginning of 57), partly from some of the family of Chloe (i. 11), and partly by letters from the Corinthian brethren, vii. 1, wrote this Epistle, with the design, 1. of supporting his Apostolical authority, and vindicating himself from the calumnies of his adversaries; and 2dly, of applying suitable remedies to the disorders which had crept in.

1—9 form the exordium of the Epistle, containing, as usual, a conciliatio benevolentiæ.

1. κλητὸς ἀπόστολος.] See Note on Rom. i. 1.

— διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ.] Meaning, by the good-pleasure, counsel, or purpose of God. Thus it is equivalent to κατ' ἐπιταγὴν Θεοῦ at 1 Tim. i. 1.

— Σωσθένης.] Supposed by some to be the person mentioned at Acts xviii. 17, though others imagine it was the scribe who wrote this Epistle; and St. Paul, they conceive, joins Sosthenes with Θεοῦ τῇ οὔσῃ ἐν Κορίνθῳ, ἡγιασμένοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, κλητοῖς ἁγίοις, σὺν πᾶσι τοῖς ἐπικαλουμένοις τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, αὐτῶν τε καὶ

b Rom. 1. 7. Eph. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 2. ἡμῶν. [b] Χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ 3 Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.
c Rom. 1. 8. [c] Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου πάντοτε περὶ ὑμῶν, ἐπὶ τῇ 4 d Infra 12. 8. 2 Cor. 8. 7. Col. 1. 9. χάριτι τοῦ Θεοῦ τῇ δοθείσῃ ὑμῖν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· [d] ὅτι 5
ἐν παντὶ ἐπλουτίσθητε ἐν αὐτῷ, ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ καὶ πάσῃ himself out of modesty, or from prudence. Almost every thing, however, concerning the person in question is mere conjecture. All we can be sure of is, that, from being joined with St. Paul in this prefatory address, he must have been a person of great consideration.

2. ἡγιασμένοις—κλητοῖς ἁγίοις.] Both these expressions are by the recent Commentators in general regarded as mere periphrastic designations of Christians, considered as separated from the world at large, set apart for the profession of true religion, and furnished with more than ordinary helps and motives to holiness,—even those who, being called to the Gospel, have obeyed that call, and are thus placed in a state of salvation. Surely, however, they are rather to be considered designations of true and faithful Christians, suggesting what all members of the visible Church ought to be; and, if they would obtain the blessings of the Gospel, must be; namely, as Hyperius explains, 'purgati, lustrati, mundati, devoti Deo,' dedicated and devoted to God, and no longer living to themselves. Compare the 19th Article of our Church.

The expression κλητοῖς ἁγίοις may, with Calvin, be resolved into the sense, 'sicut vocati estis ad sanctitatem.' In τοῖς ἐπικαλουμένοις τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, &c. we have a periphrasis for Christians, those who profess the Christian religion. Since the term ἐπικαλεῖσθαι must here denote (as often) invoking for religious purposes, worshipping, it is clear that such worship was paid to Christ. Consequently we have here supplied an unequivocal proof of the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ.

— ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ] i. e. 'in every place [as well as Corinth].' The words αὐτῶν τε καὶ ἡμῶν may, with some early modern Commentators, be referred to τόπῳ; but it is better, with the more recent ones, as well as the Greek Commentators, to refer them to Κυρίου ἡμῶν, per epanorthosin; q. d. 'our Lord, did I say? Not so; but theirs as well as ours:' meaning to represent Christians every where as on the same level, and having one common Master.

4. After the above affectionate salutation, the Apostle proceeds to congratulate the Corinthian Christians on the abundant gifts and graces bestowed on them from above; in order, by a praise calculated to conciliate their good-will, to introduce, with less offence, the reproofs which the state of the Church at Corinth rendered it necessary for him to administer. Not, indeed, that we are to consider the words as a mere captatio benevolentiæ; for it should seem that the intent of the Apostle was partly to intimate thereby the corresponding bounden duty on their part to do nothing that might argue them unworthy of the possession of such graces.

— εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου, &c.] A passage of the same nature as that at Rom. i. 8, where see Note. Here it is well remarked by Calvin: 'Amoris fidem facit a signis posterioribus, quod perinde ostendit eorum bonis se lætari, ac si collata sibi forent.'

— πάντοτε] 'perpetually;' i. e. whenever I make my prayers to God. Χάριτι. Meaning his favour, as vouchsafed in the things now particularized.

5. The Apostle now more fully explains what he had said, by enumerating those various benefits of which the Corinthians had been made partakers by Christ and his doctrine. (Krause.)

— ὅτι] 'siquidem, quandoquidem, prout.' Ἐπλουτίσθητε, 'ye have been enriched,' for περισσεύετε. Compare 2 Cor. viii. 7. ix. 11. 1 Thess. iii. 12. In ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ, &c. we have a further explication of the preceding general enunciation ἐν παντί: q. d. δηλονότι ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ, &c. On the exact sense, indeed, of the words, a difference of opinion exists. Some regard them as put, by Hendiadys, for ἐν πάσῃ γνώσει τοῦ λόγου. But that is paring down the sense. We may rather suppose, with others, that λόγῳ has reference to the doctrine of the Gospel, and γνώσει to the knowledge thence resulting. See Hyperius. Yet from ver. 7 it would appear that something more is intended; and I would, with Chrysostom and Theophylact, by λόγῳ understand the faculty of teaching and preaching the Gospel; by γνώσει, the knowledge of divine things, whereby alone that faculty would be made effectual: or rather, we may explain λόγῳ (with Theodoret, Beza, Calvin, Estius, and Stenersen) the faculty or power of imparting to others by word of mouth the divine knowledge they themselves possessed; as it is said, Eph. vi. 19, ἵνα μοι δοθείη λόγος γνωρίσαι τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. Thus, as Billroth observes, 'λόγος here refers to the doctrine of Christianity objectively, as that which is preached; γνῶσις, subjectively, as that which is received and apprehended.'

Moreover, from ver. 7, it would seem that the Apostle here meant to allude to the two cognate spiritual gifts spoken of infra xii. 8,—the Λόγος σοφίας and the Λόγος γνώσεως. It is, indeed, objected by Heydenreich that thus γνώσει would have been placed first, and λόγῳ after it; a criticism so precarious as scarcely to merit any answer. It is sufficient to reply, in the words of Chrysostom, that 'there is a knowledge without utterance, and there is an utterance without knowledge;' whereas the persons in question had BOTH, being καὶ νοῆσαι καὶ εἰπεῖν ἱκανοί. Now the stress is plainly laid on the latter particular, and for that reason λόγος, as being most prominent in the thought, is placed first.

6 γνώσει· ([e] καθὼς τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐβεβαιώθη ἐν e Infra 2. 1. 2 Tim. 1. 8.
7 ὑμῖν·) [f] ὥστε ὑμᾶς μὴ ὑστερεῖσθαι ἐν μηδενὶ χαρίσματι, f Phil. 3. 20. Tit. 2. 13.
ἀπεκδεχομένους τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ 8 Χριστοῦ· [g] ὃς καὶ βεβαιώσει ὑμᾶς ἕως τέλους, ἀνεγκλήτους g 1 Thess. 3. 13. & 5. 23.
9 ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. [h] Πιστὸς ὁ Col. 1. 22. h Infra 10. 13.
Θεὸς, δι' οὗ ἐκλήθητε εἰς κοινωνίαν τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ 1 Thess. 5. 24.
Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν. John 15. 4. 1 John 1. 3.
10 [i] Παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, διὰ τοῦ ὀνόματος τοῦ i Rom. 12. 16. & 15. 5.
Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες, Phil. 2. 2. & 3. 15, 16. 1 Pet. 3. 8.

6. καθὼς τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐβεβ. ἐν ὑμῖν.] These words have been variously understood, and are susceptible of more than one sense; but the most simple and natural mode of interpretation is that adopted by many very eminent Expositors, who explain τὸ μαρτύριον τ. Χρ. 'the testimony concerning Christ in the Gospel, whether read or preached; equivalent to the Gospel,' 'so called (as Calvin observes) inasmuch as its grand end is to manifest Christ to us, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom.' By the Gospel being confirmed and established is plainly meant its truth and excellence being evinced, and that by its fruits; meaning not merely the supernatural gifts of the Spirit, but its internal graces for faith and sanctification. See Calvin and Hyperius.

7. As consequent on the possession of the divine favour in general, we have adduced, in the words following, an illustration and proof, in the χαρίσματα bestowed on the Corinthian Church. (Olshausen.)

— μηδενὶ χαρίσματι.] Meaning, no spiritual gift, whether ordinary or extraordinary, such as was bestowed on other churches.

— ἀπεκδεχομένους] 'whilst ye are waiting for,' [namely, in humble hope]. Here ἀπεκδέχεσθαι denotes (as at Rom. viii. 19) not a bare historical belief in the fact of the future coming of the Lord, but expresses that longing desire after it, necessarily connected with love, faith, and hope. (Olshausen.)

— τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν τοῦ Κυρίου, &c.] An expression nearly equivalent to τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ in 1 Tim. vi. 14. 2 Tim. iv. 1, 8. Tit. ii. 13. The only difference is, that ἀποκάλ. suggests the appearance or advent to judgment, as 2 Thess. i. 7. 1 Pet. i. 7, 13.

8. ὃς καὶ βεβ.] Some Commentators refer the ὃς to Χριστοῦ· but most to Θεῷ, at ver. 4; which latter view is far preferable, not only because there is a manifest distinction between him who shall confirm, and our Lord, whose day is just afterwards mentioned; and because, if ὃς had been meant to refer to Ἰ. Χρ., the Apostle ought to have written, not ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ Κ. ἡ. Ἰ., but ἐν ἡμέρα αὐτοῦ; but especially because (as Pott well observes), from ver. 4 forwards, ὁ Θεὸς is he to whom the summa orationis is referred; while τοῦ Χριστοῦ is here only mentioned per occasionem ; and hence at v. 9 ὁ Θεὸς is again expressly mentioned. By βεβαιώσει is meant 'will do his part to confirm them, by furnishing them with the requisite means of grace here, as preparatory to the hopes of glory hereafter.' This is meant to encourage them to constancy, by the assurance of that divine aid and strength, of which all stand so greatly in need. Thus the passage is of the same character with another, infra xv. 58, ἑδραῖοι γίνεσθε—εἰδότες ὅτι, &c. Ἕως τέλους seems added, not so much to increase their encouragement, as to promote their constancy; since (as Hyperius observes) to persevere for a time is a light matter; to persevere to the end of our course, 'hic labor, hoc opus est.' So Matt. x. 22, ὁ ὑπομείνας εἰς τέλος, οὗτος σωθήσεται. See also Rev. ii. 10.

— ἀνεγκλήτους ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, &c.] Supply εἰς τὸ and εἶναι. Here we have the effect of the foregoing means of grace; namely, the being preserved in the main blameless, and being presented justified and sanctified in the day of judgment.

9. πιστὸς ὁ Θεὸς, &c.] A proof that God will confirm them, taken from his faith in performing his promises; q. d. 'As God is faithful to his promises, he will bring you to that participation of Christ and of salvation through him, to which he hath called you.'

— εἰς κοινωνίαν τοῦ Υἱοῦ, &c.] This designates the nature of that calling; and by κοινωνία, &c. is designated a participation in all the benefits of Christ both in this world and in the next, especially the latter (see vv. 8, 9): and no wonder; since this mystical communion with Christ, as members of his body (see 1 John i. 3), implies the adoption of sons, which is a pledge of perfect redemption and glory. See Rom. viii. 23.

10. After this conciliatory introduction, the Apostle comes closer to his main purpose, passing with great address from praise to censure, moderate indeed, but serious and energetic. And first he adverts to that leading evil, which had given risen to so many others he intended to reprove,—a party spirit. Moreover, he endeavours to vindicate the simplicity of Christian doctrine, as well against the ambitious boasters of the Greek Philosophists, as against the superstitious Jews, that he may draw both of them to the truth, ver. 10. ch. iv. 21.

— διὰ τοῦ ὀνόματος, &c.] This may signify, as some explain, 'in the name and by the authority of Jesus Christ;' or the words may be understood as standing for ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, 2 Cor. v. 20. But from the character of the context, which bears the stamp of earnest entreaty, some stronger sense is surely required; and it should seem that the meaning intended is, 'I beseech you, by the sacred name after which ye are called, even the name of him who loved us and gave himself for us.' (Gal. ii. 20.) See Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Calvin.

καὶ μὴ ᾖ ἐν ὑμῖν σχίσματα· ἦτε δὲ κατηρτισμένοι ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ νοῒ καὶ ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ. Ἐδηλώθη γάρ μοι περὶ 11
ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί μου, ὑπὸ τῶν Χλόης, ὅτι ἔριδες ἐν ὑμῖν εἰσι.
i John 1. 42. Acts 18. 24. infra 3. 4. & 16. 12. [i] Λέγω δὲ τοῦτο, ὅτι ἕκαστος ὑμῶν λέγει· Ἐγὼ μέν εἰμι 12 Παύλου· ἐγὼ δὲ, Ἀπολλώ· ἐγὼ δὲ, Κηφᾶ· ἐγὼ δὲ, Χριστοῦ. Μεμέρισται ὁ Χριστός; μὴ Παῦλος ἐσταυρώθη ὑπὲρ 13
j Acts 18. 8. Rom. 16. 23. ὑμῶν, ἢ εἰς τὸ ὄνομα Παύλου ἐβαπτίσθητε; [j] Εὐχαριστῶ 14 τῷ Θεῷ ὅτι οὐδένα ὑμῶν ἐβάπτισα, εἰ μὴ Κρίσπον καὶ Γάϊον· k Infra 16. 15, 17. ἵνα μή τις εἴπῃ ὅτι εἰς τὸ ἐμὸν ὄνομα ἐβάπτισα. [k] Ἐβά- 15,16 πτισα δὲ καὶ τὸν Στεφανᾶ οἶκον· λοιπὸν οὐκ οἶδα εἴ τινα ἄλλον ἐβάπτισα.

10. ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες.] Τὸ αὐτὸ λέγειν is equivalent to τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, τὸ ἓν φρονεῖν, ὁμοφρονεῖν, and other terms denoting concord and unanimity. And of the phrase in this sense several examples are adduced by Wetstein from Thucyd. and Polybius. So also Joseph. Ant. xviii. 9. 9, εἰ δυνηθεῖεν παῦσαι ταὐτὸν λέγοντας Ἰουδαίους καὶ Σύρους. In like manner our word concord, which was originally applied to harmony of sounds only, is now used to express mental and spiritual union.

By this some understand agreement in doctrine. Yet that is surely an undue limitation of the sense, more fully developed in the next words, where σχίσματα may denote disagreements in doctrine, as well as affections; especially since, in the words following, ἦτε δὲ κατηρτισμένοι ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ νοῒ (where we have a continuation of the same idea, by a metaphor derived from repairing a broken vessel, or mending a rent vestment), and the expression is equivalent to καταλλάσσεσθαι. Νοῒ refers to mind or disposition; γνώμῃ, to opinion or sentiment.

11. τῶν Χλόης] sub. οἰκείων.

12. The Apostle now proceeds to fully unfold his meaning; for λέγω δὲ τοῦτο, both in the New Test. and the Classical writers, is adapted to the purpose of explanation, and answers to the Latin scilicet, or nimirum. Literally, 'Now my meaning is this.' Ἕκαστος is only to be referred to the generality, i. e. the factions of which each one of them (singuli) said, I am of Paul, &c. On this whole passage (especially ἐγὼ δὲ, Χριστοῦ) Commentators have perplexed themselves to little purpose. No difficulty need be found in Paul, Apollos, and Cephas, being mentioned as heads of parties; for the words are not St. Paul's, but those of persons supposed so to speak. That parties called themselves of Paul, or of Apollos, or of Cephas, involved no blame to those personages, since it was done without their wish. Hence St. Paul lays the blame on the Corinthians themselves. As to Cephas, or Peter, the party called by his name seems to have been so denominated, not so much from any attachment to the person of Peter (as in the case of Apollos), but with reference to his understood (though in some respects misunderstood) opinions as to the obligation of the ritual part of the Mosaic Law on Jewish Christians. Accordingly the persons in question were doubtless Judaizers.

Finally, as to the difficulty connected with ἐγὼ δὲ, Χριστοῦ, the best mode of encountering it is to suppose (with Storr, Bertholdt, and Heydenreich) that those who so called themselves were persons pretending to have derived their knowledge of the Gospel either from the fountain-head, i. e. immediately from Jesus Christ, or at least from his nearest relatives, James the less, Simon, and Jude; the first of whom held a very great authority among the primitive Christians, being (as Euseb. H. E. i. 7, or iii. 11. 20, tells us) called ὁ δεσπόσυνος.

13. μεμέρισται ὁ Χριστός;] These words have been variously interpreted. Most modern Expositors take them to mean, either, 'is the doctrine of Christ divided and different?' or, 'is the Church divided? has Christ sanctioned divisions in it?' or, 'does Christ belong to any one part only?' But the simplest mode of interpretation, and the one most accordant with the context, is that adopted by others (consisting of the ancient and some modern Commentators) who explain, 'What, then, are there more Christs than one? or can Christ be divided?' Here we have, as Hyperius remarks, a ratio ab absurdo. In the next words, μὴ Παῦλος ἐσταυρώθη; there is a ratio à jure redemptionis, as in the ensuing ones (ἢ εἰς τὸ ὄνομα Παύλου ἐβαπτίσθητε;) a ratio à formâ Sacramenti. In all of them the interrogation involves a strong negation; and from the emphasis in Παῦλος the answer is, οὐχί· ἀλλὰ Χριστός.

14. εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ.] The best Commentators are agreed that this phrase (by an idiom common even to modern languages) signifies, 'I exceedingly rejoice.' Thus he means to say, his enemies would lose a fair opportunity of censuring him, as if drawing to himself partizans.

16. ἐβάπτισα δὲ καὶ, &c.] This is said by way of limiting the foregoing too general assertion. The formula δὲ καὶ may be rendered autem, or verò, etiam, but likewise. It is scarcely noticed in Steph. Thes., though occurring not unfrequently in Xenophon, and occasionally in other of the best writers. The καὶ corresponds to a preceding particle of connexion.

— οἶκον] 'family,' including persons of every age and sex, and, of course, infants. So Ignatius, Epist. p. 21, cited by Wolf: ἀσπάζομαι τοὺς οἴκους τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου σὺν γυναιξὶ καὶ τέκνοις. The phrase οὐκ οἶδα εἰ must (notwithstanding what some say) imply uncertainty, though such is by no means inconsistent with inspiration, when properly understood. See Dod-γελίζεσθαι· οὐκ ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγου, ἵνα μὴ κενωθῇ ὁ σταυρὸς 2 Pet. 1. 16.

17 [l] Οὐ γὰρ ἀπέστειλέ με Χριστὸς βαπτίζειν, ἀλλ' εὐαγ- l Infra 2. 1, 4, 13.
18 τοῦ Χριστοῦ. [m] Ὁ λόγος γὰρ ὁ τοῦ σταυροῦ τοῖς μὲν m Infra 2. 14 ἀπολλυμένοις μωρία ἐστὶ, τοῖς δὲ σωζομένοις ἡμῖν δύναμις Rom. 1. 16.
19 Θεοῦ ἐστι. [n] γέγραπται γάρ· Ἀπολῶ τὴν σοφίαν τῶν n Isa. 29. 14. Jer. 8. 9.
20 σοφῶν, καὶ τὴν σύνεσιν τῶν συνετῶν ἀθετήσω. [o] Ποῦ & 44. 25. o Isa. 33. 18.
σοφός; ποῦ γραμματεύς; ποῦ συζητητὴς τοῦ αἰῶνος τού- Job 12. 7. & 20. 24.

dridge and Whitby. All that is meant is, that he had baptized only a very few of them, and none in his own name.

17. The Apostle now passes to a vindication of his doctrine, and the method he had pursued in communicating it. Up to ii. 2, he treats of its nature, and declares that he cannot accommodate it to the prejudices of men, so as (like the false Apostles) to keep out of view, or sophisticate, what would be censured by many, and seem to them foolishness. Then at chap. ii. 3, seqq., he details the method he had pursued at Corinth in preaching the Gospel. (Rosenmuller.)

The γὰρ has reference to a clause suppressed; q. d. '[I have baptized very few;] for Christ sent me not so much to baptize, as to preach the Gospel;' οὐκ—ἀλλὰ being here, as often, used comparatè, meaning, not for the especial purpose of baptizing; q. d. 'That was not the end for which he sent me forth:' and, as Bengel well observes, 'quo quis mittitur, id agere debet.' Baptism might be administered by any, but the chief office of the Apostles was to evangelize.

— οὐκ ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγου, &c.] Here (as Calvin remarks) there is an anticipation of an objection to Paul's preaching, on the score of its being devoid of the attractions of human eloquence. The answer to which is, that he was not sent to be a rhetorician, who should puff himself forth by the splendour of eloquence, but a minister of the Spirit, who should be content to use plain and popular diction.

Ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγου is for ἐν λόγῳ σοφίας, or λόγῳ σοφῷ (as ii. 13, ἐν διδακτοῖς ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις, or as 2 Pet. i. 16, σεσοφισμένοις μύθοις), i. e. not what appeared to men learning, acumen, or eloquence, of which the false teachers so boasted.

— ἵνα μὴ κενωθῇ ὁ σταυρὸς τ. Χρ.] i. e. 'lest to human eloquence that success should be ascribed, which ought to be attributed to the divinity of the doctrine, and the agency of the Spirit, in the miracles wrought in its support.' (Campbell.)

18. ὁ λόγος γὰρ ὁ τοῦ σταυροῦ, &c.] This we may regard (with Calvin) as a rhetorical concession, to be thus resolved: 'However, the word of the cross (meaning, the doctrine of salvation through a crucified Redeemer), because it is not made palatable by the communication of human wisdom, may be regarded as folly by those who perish, yet to us the wisdom of God shines forth therein;' or, as Hyperius thinks, we have here a reason drawn from the opposite effects of the Gospel in those who wish to believe, and those who disbelieve, intimating, 'nihil referre quam simpliciter proponatur, modo in animo auditorum sequatur fructus sive effectus;' q. d. (in the words of Abp. Newcome,) 'for the Gospel needs not such support as your philosophy rests on, because it is the power of God.'

Ἐστὶ, for φαίνεται, appears. Μωρία, for μωρός. So Thucyd. v. 41, τοῖς δὲ Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐδόκει μωρία εἶναι πάντα. To the depraved conceptions of such it appears foolishness. 'Just,' says Chrysostom, 'as to the dangerously sick even the most wholesome and grateful viands seem distasteful, and all the kindest assiduities of friends troublesome.' The expressions ἀπολλυμένοις and σωζομένοις 'rem denotant ex effectu;' the sense being, 'To those who disbelieve and reject the Gospel (see 2 Thess. ii. 15), and therefore perish, it appears foolishness; but by those, like ourselves, who believe and embrace it, and are thereby saved (see 2 Cor. ii. 15), it is regarded as the power of God,' i. e. the powerful means employed by Him for bestowing salvation on men; see Rome i. 16, and Note. 'Here,' observes Heydenreich, 'since the term μωρία has a two-fold opposite, δύναμις Θεοῦ and σοφία, there seems to have been in the mind of the Apostle a double idea, both that of foolishness and that of weakness or inefficacy; the former pointing to the wisdom of God; the latter to the power of God.'

19. In proof of the above position, the Apostle now appeals first to the testimony of Scripture (ver. 19), then to that of experience (vv. 20—31), showing how strikingly the power of the Gospel appears in its triumph over the wisdom of this world.

The citation agrees verbally with the Sept., except that for the literal version κρύψω there, we have here the free version ἀθετήσω. By σοφῶν and συνετῶν are meant those who are thought so, or seem so to themselves. Σοφία and σύνεσις properly differ as our learning and talent (i. e. natural acuteness); but the terms are in use synonymous. The full sense of the passage, in its present application, seems to be, 'I will destroy and take away the credit of the wisdom, &c., of the wise, by showing its inefficiency towards discovering any means of obtaining pardon and reconciliation for man from his offended Maker.'

20. ποῦ σοφός; &c.] The Apostle now applies the sense of the passage, thus understood, to the present case; and adverting to the situation of the Christian Church, of which the greater part consisted of uneducated persons, employs words which are by some supposed to be a quotation from Isaiah xxxiii. 18, but by others, more properly, regarded as a sort of parody on it, retaining the point in ποῦ—ποῦ· quo ordine? quâ dignitate? where the interrogation has the effect of a strong negation: q. d. 'They are no where, are nought;' with which Bp. Middleton compares Demosthenes, ποῦ δ' ἅλες; ποῦ τράπεζαι; ποῦ p Matt. 11. 25. Luke 10. 21. Rom. 1. 21, 28.

q Matt. 12. 38. & 16. 1. John 4. 48.
r Is. 8. 14. Rom. 9. 32. infra 2. 14.
s Rom. 1. 16. Col. 2. 3.

του; Οὐχὶ ἐμώρανεν ὁ Θεὸς τὴν σοφίαν τοῦ κόσμου τού-του; [p] Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐκ ἔγνω ὁ 21 κόσμος διὰ τῆς σοφίας τὸν Θεὸν, εὐδόκησεν ὁ Θεὸς διὰ τῆς μωρίας τοῦ κηρύγματος σῶσαι τοὺς πιστεύοντας. [q] Ἐπειδὴ 22 καὶ Ἰουδαῖοι ‡ σημεῖον αἰτοῦσι, καὶ Ἕλληνες σοφίαν ζητοῦσιν· [r] ἡμεῖς δὲ κηρύσσομεν Χριστὸν ἐσταυρωμένον· Ἰου- 23 δαίοις μὲν σκάνδαλον, ‡ Ἕλλησι δὲ μωρίαν· [s] αὐτοῖς δὲ τοῖς 24

σπουδαί; Stenersen thinks the phrase derived è palæstrâ, or re militari; such being the words with which those who have come off conquerors are accustomed to mock their antagonists, who, for the shame of their defeat, dare not go forth openly.

By the σοφὸς are designated the heathen philosophers, especially the ethical ones; and by γραμματεὺς the סופרים, or Jewish Theologians; though it may also include men of letters in general, especially the Grammatici and Critici. By the συζητητὴς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου is meant, 'the subtile disputer of this world,' the Sophist, who rests on mere human wisdom only. It is not agreed whether the Apostle has reference to the Heathen σοφισταὶ, or to the Jewish דורשים, who deduced from Scripture allegorical, mystical, and cabalistic senses; held subtile disputations on decrees and customs; and, in short, were very like the Scholastic Theologians of the middle ages. Both, it should seem, are intended; and the sense taken generally is, 'a subtile disputant on difficult questions, and curious but empty speculations' (so Theophylact explains by τὸν λογισμοῖς καὶ ἐρεύναις τὰ πάντα ἐπιτρέποντα); the ζητήσεις καὶ λογομαχίας of 1 Tim. vi. 4. By τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου is intimated an attention to what concerns this world only, without any serious thought about the next.

— οὐχὶ ἐμώρανεν, &c.] i. e. 'convicted of foolishness?' This interrogation with a negation involves a strong affirmation; and the sense is,—that God, by promulgating a plan of salvation which no human wisdom could have devised, much less accomplished, has thereby placed in a strong point of view the inefficiency of mere human wisdom for the attainment of salvation; see Theophylact and Chrysostom.

21. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ—πιστ.] These words are closely connected with the preceding, and show the cause why God did so; serving the purpose of further illustration. Render, 'For after that, by the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God.' By ὁ κόσμος is here meant (as at John vii. 7. xii. 31, &c.) 'the world that lieth in sin,' the corrupt and unregenerate world. Thus ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ may mean either, 'by permission of God's wise providence' (which is confirmed by the exposition of the Greek Commentators); or, according to others, 'amidst the wisdom of God, so conspicuous in his works both of nature and providence.' The former interpretation, however, bears in its simplicity the stamp of truth, and is more agreeable to the paronomasia. The force of διὰ τῆς σοφίας may be expressed, with Pott, 'adhibito omni ingenii acumine, ac eruditionis apparatu.' Or, with Winer and Olshausen, 'by means of their wisdom;' q. d. Their wisdom was not the true means for the knowledge of the truth. Εὐδόκησεν, 'thought good, vouchsafed.' Μωρίας τοῦ κηρύγματος is for κηρύγματος μωροῦ, i. e. according to a figure occurring in the Classical writers (as Thucyd. vi. 17, οὐκ ἄχρηστος ἥδε ἡ ἄνοια, and Soph. Antig. 95, ἀλλ' ἔα με, καὶ τὴν ἐξ ἐμοῦ δυσβουλίαν. Œd. Tyr. 397), what was thought, or seemed to men, foolishness. Σῶσαι τοὺς πιστεύοντας is best explained, 'to put into the way of salvation those who should believe and embrace the Gospel propounded by this preaching;' see Whitby.

22, 23. Here a reason is given, by illustration, why the Gospel should seem foolishness to so many of the Jews and Gentiles. Repeat γὰρ from the preceding verse; the sense being, 'For whereas the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks, &c., we, on the other hand, preach Christ crucified.' The Apostle means to contrast his own conduct with that of the votaries both of Judaism and Gentilism.

22. σημεῖον.] Several MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have σημεῖα, which was preferred by Bengel, and edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, and Scholz; but the common reading is retained by Vater, Pott, Wetstein, and Matthæi; and rightly; for the evidence of MSS. is quite insufficient, and that of Versions and Fathers, though strong, yet, in a case of this kind, is exceptionable. But the internal evidence in favour of the common reading is yet stronger than the external; and it is most convincingly established by Whitby, Wolf, and Bp. Jebb, Sacr. Lit. p. 190, who remarks, that 'if the Jews had but required signs and miracles in general, abundance had been performed by our Lord and his Apostles, abundance were at that very time performing in the Corinthian Church, to which St. Paul was then writing. It is evident, therefore, that they were eagerly expecting some particular sign of the Messiah in and from the heavens.'

Here the Jews and Greeks are well characterized. The Jews seek a sign from heaven, some miracle agreeable to their gross conceptions: the Greeks do not so much require miracles, as wisdom; but it must be human wisdom, set off by the arts of rhetoric, and grounded on the deductions of human reason and philosophy.

23. ἡμεῖς δὲ, &c.] 'But we simply preach,' &c. Χριστὸν ἐστ. is equivalent to τὸν λόγον (the doctrine) τοῦ σταυροῦ (of the Gospel). The sense of the next words is, 'Though it be to the Jews a stumbling-block (as contrary to all their secular expectations) and to the Greeks foolishness, as not resting mainly on the principles of human reason.'

For Ἕλλησι many MSS., several Versions, and some Fathers, and early Editions, have ἔθνεσι, which is edited by Griesbach, Knapp, κλητοῖς, Ἰουδαίοις τε καὶ Ἕλλησι, Χριστὸν Θεοῦ δύναμιν 25 καὶ Θεοῦ σοφίαν. Ὅτι τὸ μωρὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ σοφώτερον τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐστί· καὶ τὸ ἀσθενὲς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἰσχυρότερον τῶν 26 ἀνθρώπων ἐστί. [t] Βλέπετε γὰρ τὴν κλῆσιν ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί, t John 7. 48. James 2. 5.

ὅτι οὐ πολλοὶ σοφοὶ κατὰ σάρκα, οὐ πολλοὶ δυνατοί, οὐ 27 πολλοὶ εὐγενεῖς· [u] ἀλλὰ τὰ μωρὰ τοῦ κόσμου ἐξελέξατο ὁ u 2 Cor. 10. 5. Ps. 8. 2.
Θεός, ἵνα τοὺς σοφοὺς καταισχύνῃ· καὶ τὰ ἀσθενῆ τοῦ 28 κόσμου ἐξελέξατο ὁ Θεός, ἵνα καταισχύνῃ τὰ ἰσχυρά· [x] καὶ x Rom. 4. 17. infra 2. 6.
τὰ ἀγενῆ τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τὰ ἐξουθενημένα ἐξελέξατο ὁ Θεός,

Tittman, Vater, and Scholz. I have, however, chosen, with Matthæi, to retain the common reading; ἔθνεσι being evidently a gloss. It is justly observed by Matthæi: 'Alibi in Nov. Test. Ἕλληνες sunt Christiani ex gentilibus. Hoc loco intelliguntur gentiles in genere, maximèque Græci. Ergo aliqui substituerunt ἔθνεσι.'

24. κλητοῖς.] Meaning, those called, who obey the call, the σωζόμενοι supra ver. 18. The words Ἰουδαίοις καὶ Ἕλλησι are (as Billroth observes) added for the purpose of showing the universality of the Gospel, as promulgated, for all who shall believe.

— Θεοῦ δύναμιν καὶ Θεοῦ σοφίαν] i. e. the powerful and wise means by which God works the salvation of men (see supra ver. 18); meaning that the Gospel is really the sign which the Jews asked for, and the wisdom which the Greeks sought after.

25. ὅτι τὸ μωρὸν—ἀνθρώπων ἐστί.] This verse (explained by ver. 27, and proved by vv. 26, 27) is meant to anticipate an objection, and supply a reason for the preceding; and that by a common sentiment, where τὸ μωρὸν and τὸ ἀσθενὲς are to be taken like the μωρίας supra ver. 21; and after σοφώτερον we are to supply, from the context, τοῦ σοφοῦ; and also at ἰσχυρότερον, τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ. There is, moreover, a sort of Oxymoron, and, as Sclater observes, a concessio ironica; what is said being after the opinion of men. So Chrysostom: 'When he speaks of foolishness and weakness in connexion with the cross, he speaks only of that which appears, not of that which is; for he is replying to their supposition.' Thus the meaning is, as Billroth explains, 'That which to them appears weak, or powerless in God, is stronger than all the strength of men.' Similarly it is said in a passage of Philo-Judæus: νομίσας γὰρ τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην λογιότητα, κατὰ σύγκρισιν τῆς ἀληθείας, ἀφωνίαν (infantium balbutiam) εἶναι.

26—28. The Apostle now proceeds to trace the counsel of God in bringing men to the Christian religion, and to explain who those are, whom He will think worthy of the benefits of it; appealing to the example of those Corinthians who had been converted to Christianity. (Pott.) Thus proving the sentiment propounded at ver. 19 from experience.

The above view, indeed, proceeds on the supposition that by τὴν κλῆσιν is meant their call to the Gospel in general. But from the context it would rather seem that the expression denotes the particular calling of the ministers to their office. Thus the supplementary words at the end of the verse, κλητοί εἰσι, to be fetched from the foregoing κλῆσιν, must mean, 'called to preach the Gospel. So Mr. Greswell, on the Parab. ii. 310, rightly explains, βλέπ. τὴν κλῆσιν ὑμῶν, 'look at the nature of your calling, look at them that call you.' 'The context of the passage,' continues he, 'shows that the writer is drawing the attention of the Corinthians to the peculiar character of the instruments by which, not that of the objects for which, God had thought proper to carry on the work of evangelization.' Such, too, is, I find, the view adopted by Professor Turton (Text of the English Bible, p. 65), in the following able examination of the context: 'The Apostle, from ver. 17 to ver. ult. is discoursing on the mode of preaching the Gospel, and the agents employed for that purpose. The preaching of the Gospel was (ver. 17) not with "wisdom of words;" it was, as it were (ver. 21), "the foolishness of preaching;" and with regard to the agents, St. Paul declares (vv. 27, 28), that "God had chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty, and base things of the world, and things that are despised, yea, and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are." And the reason assigned (ver. 29) is, that "no flesh should glory in his presence." In the midst of all this comes in ver. 26, which, of course, ought to accord with what goes before, and what follows. Can any thing be more manifest than the object of the Apostle in this place? For the purpose of the "calling" spoken of, it was not the "wise," not the "mighty," not the "noble;" no: God had chosen "the foolish things" to confound "the wise," "the weak things" to confound "the mighty," "things base and despised" to confound "the noble."'

27. τὰ μωρὰ—τὰ ἀσθενῆ.] Here we have things for persons, namely, τοὺς μωροὺς and τοὺς ἀσθενεῖς: and τοῦ κόσμου is for ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ.

— ἵνα τοὺς σοφοὺς καταισχύνῃ] i. e. 'to put them to shame, by showing that what they could not effect by their wisdom, had been accomplished by what they accounted foolishness.'

28. καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα—καταργ.] The Apostle adds another link in the chain of antithesis, by employing an expression which partakes of the Hyperbole, or the Oxymoron, but is not unfrequent in good writers; τὰ μὴ ὄντα being for τοὺς μηδὲν ὄντας (Gal. vi. 3. 2 Cor. xii. 11). Similar to the sentiment here is one found in Eurip. Troad. 616, Ed. Matthiæ, Ὁρῶ τὰ τῶν θεῶν, ὡς τὰ μὲν πυργοῦσ' ἄνω· Τὰ μηδὲν ὄντα, τὰ δὲ δοκοῦντ' ἀπώλεσαν.

y Rom. 3. 27. Eph. 2. 9. z John 17. 19. Rom. 4. 25. Eph. 1. 7. Col. 2. 3. a Jer. 9. 23, 24. 2 Cor. 10. 17. a Supra 1. 17.

καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα, ἵνα τὰ ὄντα καταργήσῃ· [y] ὅπως μὴ καυ- 29 χήσηται πᾶσα σὰρξ ἐνώπιον * τοῦ Θεοῦ. [z] Ἐξ αὐτοῦ δὲ 30 ὑμεῖς ἐστε ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· ὃς ἐγενήθη ἡμῖν σοφία ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, δικαιοσύνη τε καὶ ἁγιασμὸς καὶ ἀπολύτρωσις· [a] ἵνα, 31
καθὼς γέγραπται· Ὁ καυχώμενος, ἐν Κυρίῳ καυχάσθω.
II. [a] Κἀγὼ ἐλθὼν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, ἦλθον οὐ καθ' ὑπερ- 1 οχὴν λόγου ἢ σοφίας καταγγέλλων ὑμῖν τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ

Καταργεῖν is here, as often, to be understood logicè; i. e. in the sense to cause men to see that such are no-bodies, of no esteem.

29. ὅπως μὴ—πᾶσα σὰρξ, &c.] The connexion here with the preceding is very close; q. d. 'God pursued the above course; chose those that are of no account, in order that no human being should boast, or ascribe what he doth to his own power, wisdom, or eloquence.' For the common reading αὐτοῦ I have edited from very many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, τοῦ Θεοῦ, also preferred by Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, and Scholz.

30. ἐξ αὐτοῦ] scil. Θεοῦ. Supply μόνου. The scope of the Apostle seems to be to repress all boasting, and to intimate to them that whatever were their Christian privileges and gifts, as opposed to the carnal endowments of their opponents, they ought to refer them solely to the grace of God, and not to any human agency; since by the free choice of God alone they are in Christ as members of his mystical body, and thereby partakers of the benefits of his death. So Calvin well explains: 'A Deo vobis est principium; in Christo vero subsistentia vestra fundata est.' 'In ἐξ αὐτοῦ,' he adds, 'the Apostle is speaking of that spiritual essence by which we are born again by the grace of God.'

— ὃς ἐγεν. ἡμ. σοφία, &c.] These words seem meant to awaken in them a sense of deep thankfulness, by reference to the great spiritual benefits obtained through Christ (especially with allusion to his crucifixion, see ver. 23), so forming a beautiful summary of Gospel blessings, and representing the true nature of the Christian religion; Christ being (as Whitby shows) here designated as the author of that Evangelical wisdom which far excels the wisdom of Gentile philosophy or of Jewish learning, being that which 'maketh wise unto salvation.' Again, he is represented as the author of Justification, because he procures for us that remission of sins which the law could not give (see Rom. iii. 21. 26); the author of Sanctification, as procuring for and working in us, not only an external and relative, but a true and internal holiness (Eph. iv. 24), wrought in us by the Holy Spirit; finally, he is the author of Redemption from the dominion of sin and death to the glorious liberty of the children of God; see Rom. viii. 21, seqq.

Here δικαιοσύνη should be rendered, not righteousness, but justification, meaning the author of it; for in all the nouns of this verse there is a metonymy of the effect for the cause, and abstract for concrete; by an idiom not unknown (especially in words denoting qualities or dispositions) to the Classical writers. With respect to ἀπολύτρωσις, it should seem that the expression has reference not so much to redemption from the penalty of sin, in that spiritual death which consists in the servitude to sin, as to the temporal consequences of sin in this world by sickness and death, with reference to that period (adverted to at Eph. iv. 30, and Rom. viii. 23, υἱοθεσίαν ἀπεκδεχόμενοι, τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν) when, by the redemption of the body from the grave, death itself shall be swallowed up in victory, and we be completely and for ever delivered from the power as well as penalty of sin, and thus the promise, that sin shall not have dominion over us (Rom. vi. 14), be finally fulfilled in us.

Such is, I find, the view of the sense adopted by Calvin, who explains the meaning to be, that through Christ we are freed at once from all the slavery of sin, and all the misery consequent thereon. 'Thus,' continues he, 'in this redemption we have that gift of Christ which, as it is the first begun, so it is the last completed, in us. For it is the beginning of our salvation, that we are extricated from the labyrinth of sin and death; though in the mean time we groan within ourselves, anxiously awaiting the final day of resurrection, as it is said Rom. viii. 26.' Such being 'the day of redemption (ἡμέρα ἀπολυτρώσεως, spoken of at Eph. iv. 30) to which he who is in Christ (the regenerate Christian) is sealed.' This may account for the expression ἀπολύτρωσις coming last, whereas we should rather, as observes Billroth, have expected it to stand first. The emphasis, he truly remarks, is accumulated on the predicate.

31. Abit cohortatio in sententiam communem fere eandem à quâ exorsa erat, ver. 29. (Pott.) To give it the greater weight, the Apostle expresses it in the words of Scripture.

— ἵνα, καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] 'So that, to use the words of Scripture.' The words in question are taken, in sense, from Jerem. ix. 23, 24; the application being as follows: 'He who would boast, let him ascribe all that of which he boasts, to the Lord Jesus,' to his abundant grace and all-sufficient salvation; see Hebr. vii. 25.

II. 1—6. The Apostle, returning to the subject treated of at i. 17 (whence at vv. 18—31, he had somewhat digressed), now more copiously handles it. It was, he declares, no purpose of his to catch their attention by splendour of diction, by ingenuity of reasoning, or the trappings of human eloquence. His sole object being to deliver the message of salvation by Christ. Whatever knowledge, therefore, he possessed, he resolved to keep it out of sight, and speak as if he had it not; confining himself solely to the things which related to the redemption for sinners through the blood of Jesus. Whatever did not bear upon this great doctrine, he disclaimed. We are not to understand the Apostle's meaning to be, that he confined himself to the topic of the 2 Θεοῦ. [b] οὐ γὰρ ἔκρινα [τοῦ] εἰδέναι τι ἐν ὑμῖν, εἰ μὴ b Gal. 6. 14. c Acts 18. 1, 3.

3 Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν καὶ τοῦτον ἐσταυρωμένον. [c] Καὶ ἐγὼ ἐν 2 Cor. 10. 10. & 11. 30.
ἀσθενείᾳ, καὶ ἐν φόβῳ καὶ ἐν τρόμῳ πολλῷ ἐγενόμην πρὸς & 12, 5, 9. Gal. 4. 13.
4 ὑμᾶς· [d] καὶ ὁ λόγος μου καὶ τὸ κήρυγμά μου οὐκ ἐν ‡ πειθοῖς d Supra 1. 17. infra 2. 13. 1 Thess. 1. 5.

crucifixion of Christ, i. e. to the exclusion of other parts of the revealed truth (as the various relations of man to God, the attributes of God, and man's nature and destination, &c.), but that (to use the words of Scott) he preached 'the whole counsel,' as the great circumference to that circle of which 'Christ crucified' is the centre in which all the lines meet. The Apostle then proceeds to show why he purposely disclaimed all human wisdom, namely, because the doctrines he had to teach, being a special revelation from God, were far above the reach of the human understanding, insomuch that their nature could not be thoroughly understood, or correctly received, by the naturally corrupted minds of men.

1. A difference of opinion here exists as to the construction. Some, as Rosenmuller and Krause, trace it as follows: κἀγὼ ἐλθὼν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, καταγγέλλων ὑμῖν τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἦλθον οὐ καθ' ὑπεροχὴν λόγου ἢ σοφίας, for ἐν ὑπεροχῇ. Others thus: Κἀγὼ ἐλθὼν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, οὐκ ἦλθον καταγγέλλων (for ὡς καταγγ., i. e. ὥστε καταγγέλλειν) ὑμῖν τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Θεοῦ καθ' ὑπεροχ. λόγου ἢ σοφίας. The sense is the same either way; but I agree with Chrysostom and Heydenreich in preferring the latter mode of construction, as being the more natural. Thus καθ' ὑπεροχὴν (for καθ' ὑπερέχοντα λόγον) signifies literally, 'after excellence,' &c.; i. e. by striving after it, by striving to shine thereby. In τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Θεοῦ we have a periphrasis for 'the Gospel,' as supra i. 6, where see Note.

2. οὐ γὰρ ἔκρινα τοῦ εἰδέναι, &c.] The οὐ is to be taken with τι for οὐδέν. In this use of εἰδέναι we have a sort of familiar idiom (two examples of which are adduced by Wetstein) signifying, 'I resolved so to carry myself as to show no knowledge but of,' &c. So a Latin writer, cited by Poole, has, 'Nescias quod scis, si sapias.'

The τοῦ has been cancelled, on the authority of a few MSS., by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz; but injudiciously. The word was, doubtless, thrown out to remove a difficulty in construction. But the idiom (on which see Winer, Gr. Gr. § 38, 3. 6, Note 3) is elsewhere used in the New Test.; and yet not so often as to induce us to suppose it to have been introduced by the scribes.

3. Thus far the Apostle has spoken of the subject of his teaching. He now adverts to the method which, at Corinth, he had pursued in preaching the Gospel.

— ἐγενόμην πρὸς ὑμᾶς] for ἤμην παρ' ὑμῖν, 'I was among you;' perhaps a Latinism for 'apud vos.' Ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ is, with reason, supposed to have reference to those bodily infirmities and personal disadvantages which impeded the Apostle's usefulness, and were the source of much mortification to him. Indeed, it is not improbable to suppose that the ἀσθένεια here and the ἀσθενὴς at 2 Cor. x. 10, allude to what is called 'the thorn in the flesh' at 2 Cor. xii. 7. By φόβῳ καὶ τρόμῳ may be meant apprehension lest he should fall a sacrifice to the malignity of the Jews. But it would rather seem to mean (as Piscator and Estius explain) apprehension lest by his insufficiency he should occasion offence, and injure the great cause he was so zealous to promote; or, as Camerarius, Piscator, and Heydenreich understand, 'in deep humility and unaffected modesty;' as Phil. ii. 12. 2 Cor. vi. 15. 1 Pet. iii. 15. Eph. vi. 5. These two last views may perhaps be combined.

4. The Apostle adds, that the mode of bringing forward the doctrine he delivered was not directed by the rules of human art.

— οὐκ ἐν πειθοῖς ἀνθρωπ. σοφίας λόγοις.] So many are the varr. lectt. here existing, that Critics have suspected some corruption. Yet such variety is sometimes only an attestation of the difficulty found by the ancient Interpreters, and often serves merely to show the different modes in which they sought to remove it by critical conjecture; a procedure which, as it is never to be recommended, is the less to be approved in cases like the present, where the general sense of the passage is clear. It would, indeed, on a slight glance, seem difficult to perceive what there is exceptionable in the common reading. The only objection (and that which, I conceive, led to such extensive alteration of the passage) is to πειθοῖς; for the adjective πειθὸς, persuasorius, is, we are told, found in no other writer. Be it so: but since the Apostle uses many rare words, and his style differs materially from that of the Classical writers, where is the wonder that he should use a word which, though it may not have been employed by other writers, yet was probably in use in the language of common life? It is not, however, (as some say) contrary to analogy; but it is formed on the model of φειδὸς and μῖμος. As to the reading πειθοῖ (from πειθὼ, persuasion, which occurs in Eusebius and Zonaras) found in 7 or 8 MSS., several Fathers, and the Syriac, Armenian, Slavonic, and Italic Versions, its authority is by no means sufficient to warrant any alteration of the text; for the evidence of Fathers is negatived by their sometimes citing the passage in the common way of reading: that of Versions is, in a case of obscurity, difficulty, or doubt, exceptionable. As to the argument urged by some, that in πειθοῖς the ς has been repeated from the σ following,—that depends upon whether ἀνθ. be retained; which will be considered further on: or, at all events, the argument turns two ways; since it was as likely that the ς should be absorbed by an σ following, as that an σ should have been added to πειθοῖ from the following word: indeed this does not occur in some MSS. and Fathers; or it might be so altered to suit ἀποδείξει. Finally (which involves the greatest objection), the reading in question will render it necessary either to cancel λόγοις, or to change it into λόγων; for neither of which alterations is there any tolerable authority, except that of those MSS. and Fathers in which πειθοῖ is found: and to admit that, would be reasoning in a circle. The common reading, then, must, by every rule of criticism, be retained.

With respect to ἀνθρωπίνης, it is omitted in 8

e 2 Cor. 4. 7. & 6. 7. supra 1. 17. f Phil. 3. 15. supra 1. 20. infra 3. 19. g Infra 4. 1. Rom. 16. 25. Eph. 3. 9. Col. 1. 26. 2 Tim. 1. 9. h Matt. 11. 25. John 7. 48. & 16. 3. Acts 3. 17. & 13. 27. 2 Cor. 3. 14.

[ἀνθρωπίνης] σοφίας λόγοις, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀποδείξει Πνεύματος καὶ δυνάμεως· [e] ἵνα ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν μὴ ᾖ ἐν σοφίᾳ ἀνθρώπων, 5 ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ.
[f] Σοφίαν δὲ λαλοῦμεν ἐν τοῖς τελείοις· σοφίαν δὲ οὐ τοῦ 6 αἰῶνος τούτου, οὐδὲ τῶν ἀρχόντων τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, τῶν καταργουμένων· [g] ἀλλὰ λαλοῦμεν σοφίαν Θεοῦ ἐν μυστηρίῳ, 7 τὴν ἀποκεκρυμμένην, ἣν προώρισεν ὁ Θεὸς πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, εἰς δόξαν ἡμῶν· [h] ἣν οὐδεὶς τῶν ἀρχόντων τοῦ αἰῶνος 8

MSS. and the Syriac and Æthiopic Versions, as also in some MSS. of the Vulg. and Origen; evidence only just sufficient to occasion some doubt of its genuineness, but not to warrant its being cancelled, with Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz. Indeed, it is not easy to see how the word can be dispensed with; since (as Hyperius observes) divine is here opposed to merely human wisdom, and it is required by the equivalent phrase σοφία ἀνθρώπων in the next verse.

4. ἀλλ' ἐν ἀποδείξει, &c.] Notwithstanding what some recent Commentators maintain, πνεῦμα must here denote the operations of the Holy Spirit, both ordinary and extraordinary, as shown in the gifts imparted by St. Paul; and δυνάμει may refer to that highest mode of its operation, which produced the working of miracles. But from the verse following, it would rather seem that (by a Hendiadys) it has reference to the mighty power of the Spirit accompanying the Apostle's ministrations, both as regarded the communication of the Spiritual gifts, and the ordinary graces of the Spirit; meaning, as Hyperius explains, that by the power of God, silently and powerfully acting in the words of St. Paul, as by certain secret motions, men were moved to believe far more than they could by the influence of any oratorical pithanalogia. Such, too, seems to have been the view adopted by Calvin. Here, then, there is doubtless a reference to the strong internal operations of the Holy Spirit, as the author of the divine life in regeneration. See Scott. And probably, as Hyperius supposes, there is a tacit opposition to the external power of human oratory and eloquence in swaying the hearts of men, by strongly acting on their imaginations, and moving their passions.

6. σοφίαν δὲ λαλοῦμεν ἐν τοῖς τελ.] The Apostle now shows that his preaching, if it be wanting in human, is not in the only true, nay, is even divine wisdom. This wisdom, however, he speaks to the truly enlightened and spiritual, who alone can appreciate it,—true believers, who seek not worldly wisdom, but find in Christ the only true wisdom,—a wisdom not of this world, mere earthly wisdom, such as, being temporary, would perish with the world; not such a wisdom as that professed by the great, the celebrated, and the influential, whose power, however, would through the Gospel be brought to nought. See Theophylact and Billroth.

By σοφίαν we are to understand the doctrine of Christ crucified, and salvation by him alone, who, it is said, supra i. 30, 'is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption:' a doctrine well suited to promote the best ends,—the glorification of God and the salvation of men. The τέλειοι are opposed to the οἱ μανθάνοντες or the νήπιοι further on (as Hierocles opposes τοὺς τελείους to τοῖς ἀρχομένοις), and are the same with the πνευματικοί, as opposed to the ψυχικοί, ver. 14, and the σαρκικοί at iii. 1, 4; denoting persons of matured understanding, and thoroughly instructed in divine things. By τῶν ἀρχόντων seem to be meant generally persons of authority and influence in the world, both Jews and heathens, whether as political governors, or teachers of religion, or masters of human wisdom, the σοφοί, δυνατοί, and εὐγενεῖς at i. 26. Τῶν καταργουμένων is best explained by Pott as signifying (by a popular idiom), 'qui vanitatis convicti sunt.' This is, in fact, meant to be affirmed of their wisdom itself, which is proved to be emptiness and folly, as compared with true wisdom.

7. The Apostle adds, that this only true knowledge, though hitherto involved in mystery, was now made manifest, for the salvation of all who would embrace it, by those means which could alone work that manifestation, by the operation of the Spirit of God; q. d. 'We teach those things which could not have been discovered without a revelation.'

— λαλοῦμεν σοφίαν Θεοῦ, &c.] The phraseology here is elliptical and popular. At ἐν μυστηρίῳ supply οὖσαν; the sense being, 'a divine and mysterious wisdom,' namely, that of the Gospel: so called chiefly with respect to the great purpose of calling the Gentiles to be God's people, through Christ, the promised Messiah. Τὴν ἀποκεκρυμμένην is added by way of further unfolding the idea (see Eph. iii. 9. Col. i. 26. Eph. i. 9. Rom. xvi. 25), and both expressions together denote the all-wise counsels of God for the salvation of men, planned from all eternity, but not to be fathomed before their completion; nay, not even then to be thoroughly understood. See v. 9. At προώρισεν supply, from the subject-matter, ἀποκαλύπτειν. The expression has reference to the eternal counsels of God (πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου) for the salvation of the human race. See Acts iv. 28. Rom. viii. 29, sq. Eph. i. 5, 11. Render, 'which God had from eternity planned and purposed to reveal.'

The words εἰς δόξαν ἡμῶν may be referred (as they are by some) to the Apostles in general; q. d. 'to the glory of those by whom this revelation has been promulgated.' But it is better to understand them, with others, in the sense 'us Christians;' q. d. 'to our future glory and high felicity;' the εἰς denoting end or purpose. The general meaning of the verse may be thus expressed: 'What we preach is not the wisdom of this world, but that which proceeds from God; mysterious, indeed, and formerly hidden and unknown, but which God had from eternity pre-τουτου ἔγνωκεν· (εἰ γὰρ ἔγνωσαν, οὐκ ἂν τὸν Κύριον 9 τῆς δόξης ἐσταύρωσαν·) [i] ἀλλὰ, καθὼς γέγραπται· [Ἃ] i Isa. 64. 4. infra v. 14.

ὀφθαλμὸς οὐκ εἶδε, καὶ οὖς οὐκ ἤκουσε, καὶ ἐπὶ καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου οὐκ ἀνέβη, ἃ ἡτοίμασεν ὁ Θεὸς k Matt. 13. 11.
10 τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν. [k] ἡμῖν δὲ ὁ Θεὸς ἀπεκάλυψε & 16. 17. 1 John 2. 27.

determined to reveal and promulgate, to be the means of glorification to us believers. By what has been said in the foregoing verses, the Apostle means (as Bp. Van Mildert explains), that they were not to suppose the extent of divine revelation to be limited to what the mind of man is naturally able to discern, but were to regard what was preached as coming from the fountain of Infinite Wisdom, and relating to truth which could not have entered into the heart of man, unless supernaturally imparted to him. Hence he infers, that whatever difficulties might present themselves respecting detached parts of the divine system, they were to be obviated, not so much by reference to what is known independently of revelation, as by what may be collected from the Sacred Word.

9. ἀλλὰ, καθὼς γέγραπται, &c.] Meaning, 'But it is no wonder that they should not have known; since the divine truths respecting human salvation, as revealed by the Divine wisdom, are alone to be manifested by the Spirit of God, who alone can fathom the depths of his counsels; for to apply the words of Scripture, 'Eye hath not seen,' &c. The passage here had in view is doubtless Is. lxiv. 4. So great, however, is the dissimilarity of the words with the Hebrew and Sept., that some have supposed the words to be quoted from a lost apocryphal book, or traditionary story of the Rabbis. But the opinion is at once discountenanced by the expression ὡς γέγραπται; this being never applied to any but the canonical books of Scripture. Moreover, the resemblance to the Hebrew in sense, nay, even in words, is such, that we cannot suppose any other passage intended. Indeed, on attentive consideration, it will evidently appear that this is a tolerably faithful citation ad sensum, though not ad literam. For, 1. the words ἐπὶ καρδίαν—ἀνέβη form no part of the quotation, but are merely exegetical of the preceding, though formed on Is. lxv. 17. The words ἀπὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος οὐκ ἠκούσαμεν ought not to be adduced in comparing the Apostle with the Hebrew and Sept., since he plainly did not mean to cite them. As to the ἃ at the beginning of the verse (which has nothing corresponding to it in the Hebrew or the Sept.), I am inclined to suspect that it is not genuine, but arose from the αι preceding. As far as concerns the vestigia literarum, I should be ready to adopt the conjecture ὁ, if there were better authority for it than its being merely found in two MSS. (though supported by the reading ὃ being followed in the Vulgate and many Latin Fathers), and did I not doubt whether such a use of the Article could be admitted, or would be agreeable to the Hellenistic usage, which rather rejects the Article where it seems necessary, than causelessly introduces it. Thus, at Job xxix. 11, ὅτι (I conj. ὅτε) οὖς ἤκουσε καὶ ἐμακάρισέ με, ὀφθαλμὸς δὲ ἰδών με ἐξέκλινε, where we should have expected τὸ οὖς. It is not my present purpose to consider the question as to the corruption of the Hebrew or Sept.; suffice it therefore to say, that the Sept. seems to me here to be very corrupt, but the Hebrew quite correct, though very elliptical; and yet the ellipsis of איש is scarcely a less frequent one than ἄνθρωπος in Greek. At איש there would be an impersonal use (as in 1 Sam. ix. 9), like the French on and the German man. As to the ellipsis of the relative אשר before יעשה, it is frequent. The next ellipsis, corresponding to 'such things,' or rather, 'what thou doest,' is very unusual, yet is agreeable to the genius of the language. The sense is well expressed by Bp. Lowth, and is in itself so good, that it is matter of wonder why the learned Prelate should have thought that 'we are here reduced to the dilemma of supposing, either that the Hebrew has been wilfully corrupted by the Jews, or that the Apostle's quotation is not made from Isaiah, but from some Apocryphal Book.'

The Apostle, then, plainly accommodates the words of the Prophet to his present purpose. Now accommodation admits of some change, and it may easily be shown that there is here no change in sense; and a slight modification of the words is the more permissible, since the best Interpreters, ancient and modern, think that the subject is probably the same both in the Prophet and the Apostle; namely, the blessings of the Gospel dispensation: the general sentiment being, that 'the spiritual benefits which God hath prepared for such as love and obey him (see John xiv. 21—24) are such as transcend all human faculties adequately to understand.' In the expression, however, of the sentiment, there is a force and brevity not to be overlooked; an apt distribution or enumeration being here made of the several parts which conduce to the understanding of any thing—the eyes, the ears, and the heart: in which, too, there seems to be a climax; ἃ ὀφθαλμὸς οὐκ εἶδε denoting the things which no one has known by experience of them; ἃ οὖς οὐκ ἤκουσε, 'those which no one has heard by information from others;' finally, ἐπὶ καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου οὐκ ἀνέβη, 'those which no one has found out by mental thought:' an elegant mode of expression, of which several examples have been adduced; ex. gr. Empedocles: οὔτως οὔτ' ἐπιδερκτὰ τάδ' ἀνδράσιν, οὔτ' ἐπακουστὰ, οὔτε νόῳ περίληπτα. Maimonid. de fundamentis Legis, 2. 14, 'Hæc autem res non potest ore proferri, nec auribus usurpari, aut mente hominis perspicuè comprehendi. Surgit eleganter: multa ipsi videmus pulchra; plura aliorum relatu vidimus; plurima nec visa nec audita mente concipimus.' In ἀναβαίνειν εἰς καρδίαν we have a Hebraism, equivalent to עלה על לב, to which there is something parallel in the Classical εἰς ἐπίνοιαν ἐλθεῖν, occurring in Thucyd. iv. 92. iii. 46.

10. The Apostle now shows ('per occupationem objectionis,' as Hyperius observes,) how things so hidden and remote from human imagination could διὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος αὐτοῦ· τὸ γὰρ Πνεῦμα πάντα ἐρευνᾷ, l Prov. 20. 27. & 27. 19. Jer. 17. 9. καὶ τὰ βάθη τοῦ Θεοῦ. [l] τίς γὰρ οἶδεν ἀνθρώπων τὰ τοῦ 11 ἀνθρώπου, εἰ μὴ τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ ἀνθρώπου τὸ ἐν αὐτῷ; οὕτω καὶ τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐδεὶς οἶδεν, εἰ μὴ τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ

m Rom. 8. 15 Θεοῦ. [m] Ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐ τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ κόσμου ἐλάβομεν, ἀλλὰ 12 τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα εἰδῶμεν τὰ ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ n 2 Pet. 1. 16. supra 1. 17, 24. χαρισθέντα ἡμῖν. [n] Ἃ καὶ λαλοῦμεν, οὐκ ἐν διδακτοῖς 13 ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις, ἀλλ' ἐν διδακτοῖς Πνεύματος o Rom. 5. 7. [ἁγίου]· πνευματικοῖς πνευματικὰ συγκρίνοντες. [o] Ψυχικὸς 14 have been known to himself and the rest of the Apostles, and other τέλειοι,—namely, by the revelation of the Holy Spirit. The next clause shows why we cannot of ourselves conceive or know these truths.

10. τὸ γὰρ Πνεῦμα.] Sub. μόνον; 'for the Spirit [alone] searcheth into and knoweth all [these] things, even the deep counsels of God.' This sense of ἐρευνᾶν, 'to know thoroughly, as from complete scrutiny,' occurs also in Rom. viii. 27. Rev. ii. 23. By βάθη is meant the σοφία ἐν μυστηρίῳ ἀποκ., ver. 7, those mysterious dispensations which lie hid from human view; the most hidden counsels of God, such as the calling of the Gentiles. Comp. Rom. xi. 23.

11. This exact knowledge of the mysteries of God by the Spirit is now illustrated by an apt comparison; q. d. 'for as no one can tell the inward thoughts and designs of any man, but the man himself, in his own mind or spirit, so it is the Spirit of God alone that can be acquainted with the secret counsels of God;' or, in the words of Scott, 'so none can know, discover, or comprehend the things of God, but his own infinite Spirit, who is one with the Father and the Son, in the unity of Godhead;' 'as much (says Newcome) one with God, as the conscious and thinking principle of a man is one with that individual.' A most decisive testimony both to the personality and the Deity of the Spirit; who, we may hence infer, is omniscient, intimately united with God the Father (even as the soul of man is with the body), and consequently divine.

— τίς γὰρ, &c.] Τίς ἀνθρώπων stands for τίς ἄνθρωπος. The ἀνθρ. is emphatic. At τὰ before τοῦ ἀνθρώπου supply, from the context, νοήματα. Τὸ πνεῦμα is for ὁ νοῦς, 'the mind.' Τὸ ἐν αὐτῷ is for τὸ ἐνοικοῦν, denoting its privacy, and its being hidden from others. Τοῦ ἀνθρώπου is used, and not τινὸς or ἑαυτοῦ, in order (as Pott observes) that the application of this example from man to God (in which we have an argument à minori ad majus) may thus be rendered more prominent.

At τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ (with which I would compare a similar expression in Theophr. Char. Eth. κε. p. 30, καὶ τί αὐτῷ δοκεῖ τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ;) must be supplied, from the preceding, τὰ βάθη, meaning the deep thoughts or counsels of God.

12. Here the connexion is obscure, and the scope of what is said disputed. Billroth thinks that the Apostle proceeds now in the same course as at ver. 10; q. d. 'No man knoweth God, except him to whom he shall communicate the knowledge; but we have received his Spirit.' It should rather seem, as Calvin supposes, that the Apostle means to amplify the certainty before spoken of, by a comparison of contraries; q. d. 'The Spirit of revelation which we have received is not of the world, that it should grovel on earth, be subject to vanity, and be a matter of doubt and perplexity; but it is of God, and therefore of solid and unchanging truth, and removed far beyond the reach of doubt.' So Hyperius.

— ἡμεῖς δὲ, &c.] We, &c.; meaning perhaps, not merely, as many explain, the Apostle himself, by a use of the plural for singular, but himself and the other Apostles. By τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ κόσμου we may understand the spirit and disposition that prevail in the world, which values human wisdom only; see John iii. 13. 31. Τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ has been variously interpreted. By the best Expositors it is taken to denote (vi oppositi) the spirit, or mind, which is given by God [through the Holy Spirit]; so equivalent to ἡ σοφία Θεοῦ ἐν μυστηρίῳ.

— ἵνα εἰδῶμεν—ἡμῖν.] Meaning, '[And this has been done,] that we may fully know [and duly appreciate] the things freely given to us by God;' i. e. the various spiritual benefits, both of this world and the next, imparted by the Gospel of grace; see Calvin, and compare i. 5, and 30.

13—16. The scope of these verses is, as Stenersen observes: 'We speak true wisdom; but all do not receive it, because all are not spiritual.'

13. λόγοις.] Meaning, as Dr. Henderson has shown, not single expressions, but the whole manner of wording their discourses; comprehending, as Pott says, the 'expositionis rationem, argumentorum delectum, pondus atque ordinem, totumque dicendi genus.' In short, 'the words of this verse are,' as Dr. Henderson observes, 'little else than a repetition of the statement made at ver. 4, and cannot therefore have any sense but the above; and certainly cannot be made to prove, as some imagine, the hypothesis of universal verbal inspiration.'

— πνευματικοῖς πνευμ. συγκρίνοντες.] By πνευματικὰ are meant the things revealed by the Spirit in the Old Test.; and by πνευματικοῖς, the revelations of doctrine made by the same Spirit to the Apostles under the New Dispensation. Thus the full sense is, as Dr. Henderson says (Lect. on Insp. p. 439), that 'the teaching of the Spirit consisted in exciting them under His infallible guidance to exercise their own judgment upon the πνευματικά, spiritual subjects to which he revealed them; and by comparing these with πνευματικοῖς, similar subjects revealed by inspired Prophets under the Old Testament, to employ, as far as it went, identical phraseology.'

δὲ ἄνθρωπος οὐ δέχεται τὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος τοῦ Θεοῦ· μωρία γὰρ αὐτῷ ἐστι, καὶ οὐ δύναται γνῶναι· ὅτι πνευματικῶς 15 ἀνακρίνεται. [p] Ὁ δὲ πνευματικὸς ἀνακρίνει μὲν πάντα, 16 αὐτὸς δὲ ὑπ' οὐδενὸς ἀνακρίνεται. [q] τίς γὰρ ἔγνω νοῦν Κυρίου, ὃς συμβιβάσει αὐτόν; ἡμεῖς δὲ νοῦν Χριστοῦ
1 ἔχομεν. III. Καὶ ἐγὼ, ἀδελφοὶ, οὐκ ἠδυνήθην λαλῆσαι p Prov. 27. 19. & 28. 5. 1 Thess. 5. 21. 1 John 4. 1.

q Job 15. 8. Isa. 40. 13. Jer. 23. 18. Wisd. 9. 13. Rom. 11. 34.

At πνευματικοῖς some, indeed, propose to supply ἀνθρώποις, meaning the τελείοι at ver. 6. This, however, besides other objections which it involves, would require the Article. Ἁγίου, not found in some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, is rejected by Grotius, Mill, and Bengel, and cancelled by Griesbach and Vater; but, I think, without sufficient reason.

14. The Apostle now gives the reason why this heavenly wisdom was treated with contempt; namely, that the natural man, unassisted by the aids of the Holy Spirit, cannot appreciate it.

— ψυχικὸς δὲ ἄνθρωπος οὐ δέχεται, &c.] By ψυχικὸς ἄνθρωπος is here meant the disposition of those who have only the ψυχὴν (or animal and natural nature, which man possesses in common with the brutes), without having, or at least using, the πνεῦμα, or rational faculty, which distinguishes man from the brute creation; consequently denoting those destitute of the illumination of the Holy Spirit; a sense of ψυχικὸς derived from that existing in the Pythagorean and Platonic philosophy, by which ψυχὴ is considered as the lower and animal nature, common to man with the beasts that perish, as distinguished from the higher and rational nature; ὁ νοῦς, τὸ πνεῦμα, belonging to man alone. So Arrian, Epict. iii. 7. 5, ἡ ἡδονὴ ἡ ψυχική. Here, then, by the ψυχικὸς ἄνθρωπος is denoted one who is either led by sensual impulses only, or relies solely on the light of nature, slighting every thing which cannot be brought to the evidence of the senses. Accordingly it is said, such an one οὐ δέχεται τὰ τοῦ Πνεύμ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, does not admit, or hearken to, the doctrines revealed under the guidance of God's Holy Spirit, does not care to understand or appreciate them; for, in fact, they seem to him foolish; nor can he understand them, they being to be searched out and discovered alone by the spirit or understanding, under the illumination of the Holy Spirit, of which he is destitute. 'For as,' says Chrysostom, 'the eyes of the body, though the most beautiful and useful of the members, yet, without light, cannot see; so the ψυχὴ cannot discern, unless enlightened by the Holy Spirit.' Comp. John iii. 3.

15. ὁ δὲ πνευματικὸς, &c.] From the context it is evident that the sense must be: 'On the contrary, the man who is guided by the intellectual faculty, enlightened by the Holy Spirit, is able to discern all things [revealed by the Spirit of God], but he himself is not to be discerned, understood, or judged of, by any natural (i. e. non-spiritual) person;' q.d. (as the words are expressed by Calvin,) 'Though the flesh here exercise all its acumen, it is the spiritual man alone that can possess such a sure and solid knowledge of the mysteries of God, as with certainty to distinguish truth from falsehood, and the doctrine of God from the traditions of men. He is, however, judged of no man, because the certainty of faith is not made subject to men, to stand or fall at their bidding, being, indeed, above the angels themselves.'

16. Now follows the reason for this inability; in expressing which the Apostle tacitly employs the words of Isaiah xl. 13; and as there is no direct citation, the application of the words may well be, as it is, very different from that of the Prophet. On their exact sense, indeed, Commentators differ in opinion, according to the view they take of αὐτόν: which some (consisting of the ancient and most modern Expositors) referring to Κυρίου, understand the inquiry to be, whether any man has so known the mind of the Lord, as to be able to give him counsel or instruction; see Heydenreich. But Theoph. and others (comprising many of the best Commentators), referring the αὐτὸν to ὁ πνευματικὸς before, assign the following sense: 'for what [natural] man hath known the purposes of God, so that he may instruct him' (i. e. the spiritual man)? but we have the mind of Christ, and are therefore able to judge all things, and to instruct and discern the spiritual man. Of these two modes the latter is far more agreeable to the context, it being evidently the Apostle's intention to expose the absurdity of a natural man presuming to instruct a spiritual man in spiritual things, or of any ordinary Christian, or even Teacher, presuming to dictate to an inspired Apostle like himself; for it was plainly the Apostle's principal purpose here to establish his own authority, which had been called in question among the Corinthians.

This use of συμβιβάζω (derived from the Sept., which thus expresses the Hebr. הוֹדִיעַ, to make to know,) is very rare, but may be accounted for thus: συμβιβάζω signifies properly, 'to make to come together, to bring together,' in a physical sense. 2. In a moral one, 'to mentally put together, to conclude;' also 'to prove or demonstrate, to show what a thing is,' and thus 'to teach or instruct others therein.'

III. In order to check their contentious spirit about teachers, and their boasting of having had a clearer insight into Divine truths, the Apostle now proceeds to anticipate an objection of his adversaries,—that the Corinthians had scarcely received from him the rudiments of the Gospel, and that they therefore did right to prefer teachers who had communicated the capita rerum. He shows why he had not fully instructed them on those abstruse subjects, on which their teachers had plausibly speculated,—namely, because, though they had been many of them endued with the supernatural gifts of the Spirit, yet he had observed such things in their disposition and conduct, as rendered it improper for him to speak unto them, as to persons qualified to receive the deeper discoveries of Divine wisdom. On these the Apostle did not much treat, because he knew the Corinthians could not bear them; and also ὑμῖν ὡς πνευματικοῖς, ἀλλ' ὡς σαρκικοῖς, ὡς νηπίοις ἐν Χριστῷ. [a] Γάλα ὑμᾶς ἐπότισα, [καὶ] οὐ βρῶμα· οὔπω γὰρ 2 ἠδύνασθε· ἀλλ' ‡ οὔτε ἔτι νῦν δύνασθε· [b] ἔτι γὰρ σαρκικοί 3 ἐστε. ὅπου γὰρ ἐν ὑμῖν ζῆλος καὶ ἔρις καὶ διχοστασίαι, οὐχὶ σαρκικοί ἐστε, καὶ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον περιπατεῖτε; [c] Ὅταν 4 γὰρ λέγῃ τίς· Ἐγὼ μέν εἰμι Παύλου· ἕτερος δέ· Ἐγὼ Ἀπολλώ· οὐχὶ σαρκικοί ἐστε;

a Heb. 5. 12, 13. John 16. 12. 1 Pet. 2. 2. b Supra 1. 11. Gal. 5. 19, 20. James 3. 16.
c Supra 1. 12.

that instructions would feed carnal passions, instead of generating faith and love: see more in Scott.

1. καὶ ἐγὼ, ἀδελφοὶ, &c.] What is here said closely connects with the 13th and two following verses of the preceding Chapter, where it is at least implied, that for spiritual persons only are spiritual things fitted. Accordingly, St. Paul, with allusion to the wide difference between the natural and the spiritual man, just before adverted to, proceeds to meet a tacit objection; q. d. 'How is it that you who have the full mind of Christ (ii. 16) should not have instructed us more completely in the sublimer parts of the Gospel?' To which he replies by representing their then, and indeed their present, condition, as being such as to quite unfit them for a full communication of the whole of the system of Gospel truths. And he illustrates his meaning by a metaphor taken from the feeding of infants or children, as compared with that of persons of more advanced years. To the former is given the lightest food, as milk, pap, &c.; to the latter, solid food, here expressed by βρῶμα, but in a parallel sentiment, Heb. v. 12, more definitely, by στερεὰ τροφή: both expressions denoting the more sublime and mysterious doctrines, as γάλα does the elementary and simple ones,—namely, the corruption of human nature, and the rich mercy of God in redemption by the blood of Christ; faith, regeneration, the nature and necessity of holiness, the influences and fruits of the Spirit, the eternal happiness or misery of all men, &c. Ἐπότισα is meant to apply, per syllepsin, as well to the former as to the latter; see Luke i. 63. Finally, πνευματικοὶ here is equivalent to τέλειοι supra ii. 6, and Rom. xv. 1; meaning persons so enlightened by the Spirit, as to comprehend and appreciate the deeper mysteries of the Gospel.

2. The καὶ after ἐπότισα, not found in several MSS., some Versions, and many Fathers, has been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz; but on insufficient grounds; its omission being far easier to be accounted for than its insertion. So Matthæi observes: 'Redundare videbatur. Nemo ergo id addiderit, sed potius omiserit.' At ἠδύνασθε supply, from the subject-matter, πέπτειν. Comp. John xvi. 12.

— ἀλλ' οὔτε, &c.] For οὔτε the best MSS. and several Fathers have οὐδὲ, which has been received by Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz. And certainly propriety of language is quite in its favour; but this is a case, like others in the New Test., in which that principle has little weight. And far more probable is it that οὔτε was altered to οὐδὲ by some ancient Critics (especially as the MSS. in which οὔτε is found are in general such whose text has been systematically altered) than that οὐδὲ should have been altered by the scribes to οὔτε. So Matthæi terms it 'manifesta correctio.' Moreover, consistency would require an Editor, if he adopted οὐδὲ here, to adopt it in Matt. v. 3, and Luke xii. 26. And yet Scholz there retains οὔτε; doubtless because fewer MSS. there have οὐδέ. But this is a case in which internal far overbalances external evidence: and that is decidedly in favour of οὔτε.

These words ἀλλ' οὔτε ἔτι νῦν δύνασθε imply more than they seem to express; q. d. 'Nay, ye are not even now able [even when ye have had time to be thoroughly grounded in the faith]; nor can I now expound the more recondite truths of the Gospel, with any hope of promoting your spiritual improvement.'

3. The Apostle now shows the grounds on which this opinion of their inability is founded, i. e. that they are yet carnal, &c.

— ὅπου] 'whereas;' as often in the best writers. Ζῆλος, ἔρις, and διχοστασία are not, as Krause imagines, mere synonymes; but there is rather a Climax; envy (as Grotius observes) leading to strife, and strife to division. The first represents the inner feeling; the second, the outward demonstration of it; the third, the results, in open and continued rupture and disunion.

— οὐχὶ σαρκικοί ἐστε;] i. e. 'does not the flesh yet too much prevail? are ye not yet σαρκικοὶ, compared to the truly spiritual, the πνευματικοὶ just before mentioned?' Thus envying and strife are by the Apostle, at Gal. v. 20, numbered among the works of the flesh, which comprehend (says Grotius) all those affections that do not tend to the glory of God and the good of man, but are merely directed to our own selfish gratification. In this view a man may be, in some respects, carnal, though, in others, not destitute of spirituality. Κατὰ ἄνθρωπον, meaning, 'correspondent to the habits of mere unregenerate man.'

4. See Note on i. 12. Here the Apostle, as Crellius and Hyperius show, takes occasion, from the expression just used, to make a transition to the second part of the foregoing head, and thus reverts to the principal topic he meant to treat of; namely, of the schisms and dissensions among the Corinthians, which had arisen mainly from the invidious distinctions and comparisons of one minister of God with another. In thus ascribing to one more honour than to another, or in attaching themselves exclusively to one or to another, he shows that they are highly censurable; for none of their teachers were masters, but merely servants employed by the common Master to teach the truths of his Gospel; merely persons instrumental in producing, and not the authors of, faith and conversion, and who therefore ought not to be set up as heads of the religion.

5 [d] Τίς οὖν ἐστι Παῦλος, τίς δὲ Ἀπολλὼς, [ἀλλ' ἢ] διάκο- d Supra 1. 12. & 4. 6.
νοι, δι' ὧν ἐπιστεύσατε, καὶ ἑκάστῳ ὡς ὁ Κύριος ἔδωκεν;
6 [e] ἐγὼ ἐφύτευσα, Ἀπολλὼς ἐπότισεν, ἀλλ' ὁ Θεὸς ηὔξανεν. e Acts 18. 26. & 19. 1.
7 ὥστε οὔτε ὁ φυτεύων ἐστί τι, οὔτε ὁ ποτίζων, ἀλλ' ὁ αὐξάνων
8 Θεός. [f] Ὁ φυτεύων δὲ καὶ ὁ ποτίζων ἕν εἰσιν· ἕκαστος f Ps. 62. 12. Matt. 16. 27. Rom. 2. 6. Gal. 6. 5.
9 δὲ τὸν ἴδιον μισθὸν λήψεται κατὰ τὸν ἴδιον κόπον. [g] Θεοῦ g 2 Cor. 6. 1. Eph. 2. 20. Col. 2. 7. 1 Pet. 2. 5.
γάρ ἐσμεν συνεργοί· Θεοῦ γεώργιον, Θεοῦ οἰκοδομή ἐστε.
10 [h] Κατὰ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι, ὡς σοφὸς h Rom. 1. 5. & 15. 20.
ἀρχιτέκτων θεμέλιον τέθεικα· ἄλλος δὲ ἐποικοδομεῖ· ἕκαστος

5. τίς] for ποῖος, qualis (as in Matt. xvi. 13. Luke i. 66, and elsewhere), meaning, 'What sort of person?' At ἑκάστῳ ὡς there is, as Grotius observes, an inverse construction, for ὡς ἑκάστῳ; q. d. 'to each his office, his ability to exercise it, and his success in it.' At ἔδωκε supply πιστεύειν, if, at least, the words be referred to the evangelized; but if to the evangelizers, the sense will be, 'even according as the Lord gave to each his peculiar office ἐν τῷ διακονεῖν.' The words ἀλλ' ἢ are not found in several very ancient MSS. and some Versions, and are cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz; but on insufficient grounds. The external proof that they are not genuine is very slender, and the internal by no means strong; since it is more probable that the words should have been removed by those who objected to the inelegance of the Greek, than inserted by those who wished to remove an abruptness.

6. Here the subject (the nature of this ministry) is illustrated by metaphors derived from agriculture, of which, in the East, irrigation forms the most important operation. Ηὔξανεν, lit., 'made to grow;' namely, by the influence of his Spirit.

7. ἐστί τι.] Supply μέγα, i. e. comparatè: an idiom frequent in the New Test. See Acts v. 36, and Galat. ii. 6, and Notes.

8. ἕν εἰσιν] i. e. 'are one and the same,' as being engaged in the same work, and exerting themselves for the same end, namely, your edification; even as in agriculture all the labourers work with the same end and aim, the ingathering of the fruits. Hence it is implied, no one ought to be magnified above another, since they were occupied in the same labour, the success of which rested with God alone.

— ἕκαστος δὲ τὸν ἴδιον, &c.] This (as the Greek Commentators and Hyperius remark) is added by way of stirring them up to diligence, that it might not be supposed that all the labourers, however inferior in industry, would be on the same footing, and receive the same reward. The words, therefore, form an epanorthosis; q. d. 'They are not so far one, but that respect will be had to each one's labour and pains, and he will receive his own reward proportionably.' Hence would arise a strong incentive to diligence and activity, supplied by their knowing that their 'labour should not be in vain in the Lord.' For to labour it is that the reward is promised, not success of labour, which is not in any minister's power.

9. Previously to describing this labour (which is done at ver. 10), the Apostle briefly points out the scope to which it is to be directed.

— Θεοῦ ἐσμεν συνεργοί.] We have here a resumption of the foregoing agricultural metaphor. The συν in συνεργοὶ is by some referred to God; q. d. 'we are fellow-labourers with God.' But from the context it ought rather to be applied to the Apostles and preachers of the Gospel; q. d. 'We are fellow-labourers of (or under, i. e. employed by) God.' So σύνδουλος in Matt. xviii. 29. By γεώργιον is meant the cultivated field.

In the next clause the Apostle slides from the agricultural into an architectural metaphor; both being employed in Scripture with reference to men as the object of God's purposes in the Gospel; see Matt. xiii. 38. John xv. 1. Isaiah lxi. 5, and 2 Cor. vi. 16. Eph. ii. 20. The several pronouns in this sentence are emphatic; q. d. 'We are God's labourers, whether in cultivating the field, or rearing the building; ye are the tilled field of God, ye are the building of God.'

10—15. Thus far the Apostle has proceeded on the supposition that the labourers were skilful and faithful: he now adverts to those who were, more or less, not so; and in doing this, he continues in the architectural metaphor just adopted. In short, the whole passage is allegorical; the Christian congregation being the building, and its ministers the architects. St. Paul had laid a sure foundation; if that be removed, there is quite another building. Whatever superstructure be added, it must await the issue of that day of trial, which will bring every man's work to the test.

10. κατὰ τὴν χάριν, &c.] Here the Apostle adverts to himself; but in doing this he introduces an expression of deep humility, of which the meaning is not, as most recent Commentators understand, 'according to the office of Apostle of the Gentiles graciously committed to me by God.' Here, though the office in question be included, the principal idea intended to be presented is, the portion of Divine grace given to him for the discharge of his apostleship. We may in this instance (as Calvin observes) trace the accustomed modesty of the great Apostle, who is ever careful to avoid arrogating to himself a single particle of the glory due to God, 'by whose grace,' says he, infra xv. 10, 'I am what I am.' Thus referring every thing to God, and regarding himself as the mere instrument.

— ὡς σοφὸς ἀρχιτέκτων θεμέλιον, &c.] This use of σοφὸς to signify skilful or expert, as applied to mechanics, is found also at Exod. xxix. 3. xxxvi. 1. And the very phrase σοφὸς ἀρχιτέκτων occurs in Isaiah iii. 2, and sometimes in the later Classical writers. In ἀρχιτέκτων (which should be rendered architect) St. Paul adverts to his own dignity, as Apostle of the i Isa. 28. 16. Matt. 16. 18. Eph. 2. 20. δὲ βλεπέτω πῶς ἐποικοδομεῖ. (i Θεμέλιον γὰρ ἄλλον οὐδεὶς 11 δύναται θεῖναι παρὰ τὸν κείμενον, ὅς ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς [ὁ] Χριστός.) Εἰ δέ τις ἐποικοδομεῖ ἐπὶ τὸν θεμέλιον τοῦτον, 12 χρυσὸν, ἄργυρον, λίθους τιμίους· ξύλα, χόρτον, καλάμην·— k 1 Cor. 4. 5. 1 Pet. 1. 7. & 4. 12.

k ἑκάστου τὸ ἔργον φανερὸν γενήσεται· ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα δηλώσει· 13
ὅτι ἐν πυρὶ ἀποκαλύπτεται· καὶ ἑκάστου τὸ ἔργον ὁποῖόν ἐστι τὸ πῦρ δοκιμάσει. Εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον μένει, ὃ ἐπῳκο- 14

Gentiles. Θεμέλιον τέθεικα, i. e. by communicating the elementary truths. Ἄλλος is, as Pott remarks, to be taken collectively, with reference to those persons (Apollos and others) who had followed the Apostle at Corinth. On the mention of 'building thereon,' the Apostle engrafts an admonition to those who are, or may hereafter be, employed in it; that they may mind with what kind of doctrines they follow up the first elements, so that they may be suitable thereto. Ἐποικοδομεῖ scil. ἐπ' ἀλλότριον θεμέλιον.

11. This verse is hypoparenthetical, and in it the Apostle (as Billroth observes) despatches the erroneous notion that it is possible to lay some foundation besides.

— οὐδεὶς δύναται.] Meaning, 'he cannot, consistently with right principle, i. e. ought not.' (Grot.) The παρὰ after ἄλλος (used, as often, for a comparative), signifies ἤ, than or besides. This idiom is supposed to be Hellenistic, but it occurs in the Classical writers, as Plato, Phæd. § 42. Κείμενον, scil. ὑπ' ἐμοῦ. By Ἰησοῦς Χρ. is, as the best Commentators have seen, to be understood the History of Jesus Christ, comprehending the doctrines and precepts, the promises and threatenings of the Gospel, as we find them laid down in the Evangelists. I have double-bracketed ὁ, since it is not found in the earliest Editions and many MSS. and Fathers, and has been cancelled by Bengel, Wetst., Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, and Vater.

12. The sense of this and the following verses is somewhat obscure, arising from some confusion in metaphor: though, indeed, the difficulty has been increased by not adverting to the close connexion of this ver. with v. 10, and by a misapprehension of the Apostle's general purpose in this passage; which was not, I apprehend, as is commonly thought, to represent one edifice, but two. He means to say, that on the foundation of those elementary principles two very different buildings might be erected. And thus the metaphorical expressions here used are meant to designate the good and the bad superstructure respectively; and the different terms employed represent the different degrees of goodness or badness in each. I have pointed accordingly; for, as Pott and Heydenr. have seen, there is after ξύλα an ellipsis of εἴτε, for ἢ εἴ τις ἐποικοδομεῖ.

The connexion here is well traced by Billroth as follows: 'If, however, any one will build further, the consideration is what it is that is further built;' and still better by Stenersen, in the following paraphrase of the whole passage: 'I having laid the foundation, others will now build upon it; but let them see how they do this. For though the foundation itself, once laid, cannot be changed, yet on this foundation may be raised different kinds of buildings: but what each is good for will hereafter appear; for what is built of worthless materials will fall, but what is formed of proper materials, and diligently built up, will remain firm and stedfast.'

13. In this verse we have the apodosis to v. 12.

— ἑκάστου τὸ ἔργον φανερὸν γενήσ.] These words are closely connected with the foregoing, and form, as Pott says, the apodosis. The general sense is, 'Whether any one builds on this foundation a solid and splendid building, like a magnificent temple, or a mean hut formed of boards and thatched with dried grass, each architect's work will be made manifest.' The best Commentators are agreed that in λίθους τιμ. we have an allusion to those precious marbles with which palaces and temples were then built, or at least the walls cased, as now the church of St. Peter at Rome. See Is. liv. 11, 12. The hut in question is supposed to be built of upright posts and pales, filled up with twigs daubed over with clay, and the whole thatched with stubble or offal hay.

— ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα δηλώσει.] The meaning may be, as many Commentators suppose, 'time will show [this].' So the Latin adage, 'dies docebit,' and the Greek χρόνος πάντα εἰς φῶς φέρει: but this interpretation is forbidden by the presence of the Article. From the words following, it seems best, with the ancient and several eminent modern Expositors (and recently Pott and Heydenr.), to take it of the day, i. e. the day of judgment. Some, indeed, as Wolf, Macknight, Middleton, and Burton, indeed, understand the day of persecution (see James v. 3. 1 Pet. i. 7. iv. 12); but besides that that would suppose the meaning to be most enigmatically expressed, the other is more suitable to the context, and is required by the idea meant to be suggested in ἐν πυρὶ ἀποκαλ.; for God's judgment is often elsewhere compared to a fire, which is here considered as a test. Ἀποκαλύπτεται may be, with some, referred to ἔργον (building), the words ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα δηλώσει being regarded as in some measure parenthetical; and thus a good sense will arise. But it is more natural to refer it to the nearer antecedent ἡμέρα, and thus a more simple construction is obtained. The sense, too, which it yields is equally good; for the day of judgment will (as we learn from 2 Pet. iii. 10) be revealed with fire. According to the former view, the sense intended will be, that 'the fiery trials and conflicts to which Christian teachers and their doctrines are subject will test their truth and value;' the system of teaching being represented under the figure of a building, of which only the solid parts can withstand the fire.

14. μένει.] Meaning, 'remains uninjured by the flames, abides the fiery trial.' For μένει, Scholz edits μενεῖ, from the Edit. Princ. and the Syriac and Vulgate Versions: an authority, however, quite insufficient, since Versions, in a case

15 δόμησε, μισθὸν λήψεται· εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον κατακαήσεται, ζημιω-16 θήσεται· αὐτὸς δὲ σωθήσεται, οὕτω δὲ ὡς διὰ πυρός. [l] Οὐκ οἴδατε [l] Infra 6. 19. 2 Cor. 6. 16.
ὅτι ναὸς Θεοῦ ἐστε, καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ οἰκεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν; Eph. 2. 21, 22. Heb. 3. 6.
17 Εἴ τις τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ φθείρει, φθερεῖ τοῦτον ὁ Θεός· ὁ 1 Pet. 2. 5.
18 γὰρ ναὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἅγιός ἐστιν, οἵτινές ἐστε ὑμεῖς. [m] Μηδεὶς [m] Prov. 3. 7. Isa. 5. 21.

of this nature, are of little weight; and as to that of the Edit. Princ., it is next to none, since it abounds in minute errors arising from the carelessness of scribes, chiefly, indeed, errors of orthography, but sometimes more. Here I suspect that, by a common transmutation, the scribes must have written μείνῃ, found in a few MSS., but evidently a correction of the Grammatici, yet an injudicious one; since, although the strict proprietas linguæ would require the Subjunctive, yet the Indicative is not unfrequently found in the New Test. (as Matt. xix. 10. Acts v. 39. Rom. viii. 25. 1 Cor. ix. 17), and sometimes, though rarely, in the Classical writers.

Here μισθὸν λήψεται and ζημιωθήσεται are opposed to each other, and in the former there is an ellipsis of ἔργου, to be taken from τὸ ἔργον just before; in the latter (which is a juridical term), an ellipsis of τοῦ μισθοῦ, from μισθὸν preceding; q. d. 'He shall be mulcted of, lose the reward, which he would have received for his work.' At αὐτὸς σωθ. those Commentators are not a little perplexed, who refer the passage to Christians in general: but without reason; for it is plain that the Apostle had only in view Christian teachers. The sense of the passage is, indeed, obscured by a blending of the physical and the metaphorical parts of the comparison; the first of which represents a builder, whose house is, as it were, burnt over his head, and who with difficulty and danger escapes through the fire. From the passages cited by the philological illustrators, this appears to have been an almost proverbial expression, as in Jude 23, and Livy xx. 35, 'ex damnatione collegæ et suâ propè ambustus evaserat.' The second designates a Christian teacher, the superstructure of whose doctrine does not square with the fundamental principles of Christianity previously laid down, and accordingly is brought to ruin: thus, then, he loses his labour, and is himself saved with very great difficulty. By a similar mode of expression it is said, Artemid. On. i. 50, θᾶττον γάρ, καὶ ὡς εἰπεῖν, ἐκ πυρὸς ἁρπάζουσι τὰ σκέλη. Aristid. in Apell., p. 126, ἐκ μέσου πυρὸς τὸν ἄνδρα σώζειν.

Here, for οὕτως, I have edited οὕτω from the Ed. Pr., 1. Steph., Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz; such being required by the usus linguæ. The Σ arose, I suspect, from the Δ following. Certainly this passage cannot, upon any principles of just interpretation, be adduced to countenance the Romish doctrine of purgatory. That notion has no support in any of the earlier Fathers, and the countenance seemingly afforded by the later ones is not without suspicion of interpolation; of which we are enabled to convict the Romanists in one instance, that of Theodoret in loco, where see the Note of Noesselt.

16. Having thus reminded the teachers of their duty, the Apostle now addresses himself to the taught, that they also should take heed. To the former he had said, 'Ye are the master-builders of the house of God.' To the latter he now says, 'Ye are the temples of God: it is therefore your part to keep yourselves unpolluted by the world.' (Calvin.) Now, turning from the ministers to the people, he warns them to beware of those who promulgate false doctrine, and not to rest upon their own human wisdom. (Hyperius.)

— οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι ναὸς, &c.] There is here a recurrence to the idea at ver. 9, probably suggested by the foregoing architectural metaphor; and under this imagery the Apostle speaks of the whole body of Christian converts as being the temple of God, built by him, and consecrated to his service; just as in the Old Test. God is said to dwell among the Jews, who are accordingly styled the habitation and even the temple of God. Hence the metaphor occurs also in the Rabbinical writers and in Philo. It is further declared that the Spirit of God dwelleth in them, and is attested by his gifts and graces, as God manifested his presence in the Temple at Jerusalem; q. d. 'Ye are not merely the building of God, but his temple, as being that in which his Spirit dwelleth.' This is meant to point a denunciation against false teachers, who corrupt the minds of their disciples with error. The general sense is, that the indwelling of the Spirit constitutes the temple of God, and that every true Christian is both individually such a sacred shrine, and also that the whole Christian Church forms collectively the complete and magnificent building substituted in the place of the Jewish Temple.

The next assertion (founded, as Stenersen shows, on a general sentiment so universally approved by the consent of all nations, as to seem born in the very nature of man) is, that 'if any one shall corrupt or injure this body of the Church, composing the spiritual temple of God (whether by false doctrines or a contentious and sectarian spirit, or by a conduct unworthy of his high calling, see vi. 15—19), him shall God destroy.' It is strange that Abp. Newcome should render φθερεῖ 'will corrupt,' which spoils the beauty of the antanaclasis subsisting between φθείρει and φθερεῖ. Compare Acts xxiii. 2, 3, where the expression used is not imprecatory, but predictive; and so here φθερεῖ is not so much predictive as denunciatory. See Note on Acts viii. 20. Ἅγιος is here very significant, and even emphatic; q. d. 'holy [and therefore not to be violated or injured with impunity].'

17. οἵτινές ἐστε ὑμεῖς.] This clause gives a reason for the foregoing assertion; q. d. 'which kind of temple [in inviolability] ye [the body of Christ] are; and therefore that temple is not to be violated with impunity.' The construction here is remarkable; the plural οἵτινες being used instead of the singular ὅστις, by a not very unusual idiom, whereby, when a relative is placed between two substantives, it sometimes takes the number of the preceding; sometimes, as here, of the following.

18. 'Hîc Apostolus ea, quæ nuper dixerat, ad lectores transfert, reditque simul ad rem, v. 5, ἑαυτὸν ἐξαπατάτω· εἴ τις δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι ἐν ὑμῖν ἐν τῷ n Job 5. 13. supra 1. 20, 26. αἰῶνι τούτῳ, μωρὸς γενέσθω, ἵνα γένηται σοφός. [n] Ἡ γὰρ 19

σοφία τοῦ κόσμου τούτου μωρία παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ ἐστι.
γέγραπται γάρ· Ὁ δρασσόμενος τοὺς σοφοὺς ἐν τῇ
o Ps. 94. 11. πανουργίᾳ αὐτῶν. [o] καὶ πάλιν· Κύριος γινώσκει 20 τοὺς διαλογισμοὺς τῶν σοφῶν, ὅτι εἰσὶ μάταιοι.
p 2 Cor. 4. 15. [p] Ὥστε μηδεὶς καυχάσθω ἐν ἀνθρώποις· πάντα γὰρ ὑμῶν 21 inceptam, copiosius tractandam.' Comp. iv. 1. (Stenersen.) There is now traced the origin of the dissensions which agitated the Corinthian Church. (Crellius.) And this forms a third argument to prove the folly of making schisms. (Pott.)

18. μηδεὶς ἑαυτὸν ἐξαπ.] These words ought to be referred, not (as some have supposed) to what precedes, from ver. 10, but to what follows, being a formula (similar to others, Matt. xxiv. 4. Eph. v. 6. 2 Thess. ii. 3. 1 John iii. 7, and Jer. xxxvii. 9) intended to impart force and solemnity to a warning or a precept, by hinting at the danger of despising it through the deceivableness of persons or the deceitfulness of things. Thus the sense is, 'let no one (whether teacher or taught) deceive himself, either by resting on the vain opinion of his own wisdom, or of wisdom in general, which, without divine illumination, cannot but fail him.'

— δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι.] Not 'thinketh himself to be wise,' nor 'seemeth to be wise,' but 'has the reputation of being wise.' So Thucyd. i. 79, ἀνὴρ ξυνετὸς δοκῶν εἶναι. The words ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ are by some ancient and modern Interpreters construed with the words following: but it is more natural and agreeable to the style of Scripture and the context to connect them with the preceding. Render, 'in knowledge of the things of this world;' or, as Calvin and Grotius, 'in the esteem of men of the world, who know not the true wisdom.' Μωρὸς γενέσθω, 'let him renounce all pretensions to wisdom superior to that which the word of God reveals.' Ἵνα γέν. σοφὸς, 'in order that he may become really wise,' i. e. unto salvation.

19. We have here, as Calvin observes, an argumentum à contrario, in which the laying down of one contrary destroys the other.

— ἡ γὰρ σοφία, &c.] Meaning, '[And this indeed is necessary,] for the wisdom of this world [only] is [but] foolishness in the estimation of God.' Dr. South (in an able Sermon on this text, vol. i. 375, seqq.) takes σοφία here to mean that worldly wisdom which lies in practice, and goes by the name of policy,—a kind of practical cunning, having something of the nature of a trade. This he thinks plain from the πανουργία in the next clause; but from what the Apostle immediately subjoins at ver. 10, especially adverting to διαλογισμοὺς (see Rom. xiv. 1) and μάταιοι (see Rom. i. 21), it would seem that he had also in view that sort of wisdom which consists in speculation, and, however admired by the learned among the heathens, was accounted by St. Paul 'vain philosophy,' and science falsely so called. To this, there is reason to think, the false teachers and their disciples were exceedingly attached, and with it corrupted the simplicity of the Gospel. In short, by σοφία is meant the wisdom of men who rest on their own intellectual powers, without a reference to God; a wisdom which has no more effect in procuring salvation than folly. This truth the Apostle then establishes from Scripture, namely, Job v. 13.

— ὁ δρασσόμενος] scil. ὁ Θεός ἐστι. Render, 'it is God who catcheth [and holdeth fast] the crafty in their own cunning.' The Apostle here follows the Hebrew rather than the Sept., and renders more forcibly. Διαλογισμοὺς, 'devices, plans.'

21—23. Here follows the epilogus, in which the Apostle returns to his former proposition, 'not to glory in masters or teachers.' (Estius.) Having thus shown the folly of schisms, the Apostle adds an exhortation (introduced in the form of a conclusion from what has been said) not to boast, some of one teacher and some of another, to the disregard of all the rest; since not only all teachers, but all events that may befal them, are made subservient to the general good of the Christian body. (Pott.)

21. μηδεὶς καυχάσθω, &c.] 'let no one boast of,' namely, by ranging himself under any one's banners, as leader of a sect; which was the case both with the Jews and the Greeks. The term ἀνθρώποις is adopted by way of intimating a reason why this should not be done; because they are all but men, and only instruments of God for the salvation of mankind.

— πάντα γὰρ ὑμῶν ἐστιν, &c.] Πάντα here is by some Commentators referred to things,—namely, the endowments of the Apostles and teachers; by others, to persons, namely, all teachers. Of these two modes, the latter is preferable, especially as the other sense may be included; to hint which, it seems, the neuter was used for the masculine. Render, 'All teachers and all the various endowments they respectively enjoy are yours,' i. e. meant to be promotive of your spiritual good. Compare Rom. viii. 28. This πάντα is then explained, per μερισμόν. The terms themselves are not to be too much pressed; since, as Calvin and Hyperius are agreed, this is merely meant as a representation καθ' ὑπερβολὴν or κατ' αὔξησιν, of things the most excellent in the universe, by a sort of magnificent gradation; q. d. 'Yours are all teachers [and their endowments], whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas; nay, yours is the whole universe, and whatever it affords, whether distributed into things endued with life, or destitute of it; whether into things present, or things future (compare Col. i. 16. Rom. viii. 39), all are yours, i. e. are meant to be subservient to your real and ultimate good.'

The argument here is evidently à majori ad minus, as thus stated by Hyperius: 'The world, life, death, things present, things to come, are yours; therefore much more are Paul, Apollos, and Cephas.' Or, as traced by Calvin, as follows:

22 ἐστιν· εἴτε Παῦλος, εἴτε Ἀπολλὼς, εἴτε Κηφᾶς, εἴτε κόσμος, q Infra 11. 3.
εἴτε ζωὴ εἴτε θάνατος, εἴτε ἐνεστῶτα εἴτε μέλλοντα· πάντα ὑμῶν 2 Cor. 10. 7. a Matt. 24. 45.
23, 1 ἐστιν· [q] ὑμεῖς δὲ Χριστοῦ· Χριστὸς δὲ, Θεοῦ. IV. [a] Οὕτως 2 Cor. 4. 5. & 6. 4. ἡμᾶς λογιζέσθω ἄνθρωπος, ὡς ὑπηρέτας Χριστοῦ καὶ οἰκο- Col. 1. 25. Tit. 1. 7.
2 νόμους μυστηρίων Θεοῦ. [b] Ὃ δὲ λοιπὸν, ζητεῖται ἐν τοῖς 1 Pet. 4. 10. b Luke 12. 42.

'Since Christ has subjected to us life and death, and whatever else exists, is there any doubt that he has subjected men, too, that they should aid us by their ministration, not oppress us by their domination.' To advert to the component parts of the above μερισμὸς (in which we have a specimen of what is most excellent), it is, as Hyperius remarks, 'by no means difficult to show, that all these things are appointed for the especial service of the righteous. The world, as created for the righteous,—life, as given for the righteous, and death subdued to them—all things, whether present or future, meant for their final good.' Here, it would seem, the world is first mentioned generally, and then the most important particulars contained under that general idea, are then particularized. The general sense, then, is that 'under the direction of God's providence, the world and all things which form parts of its course, whether things of the present or of a future state, are made subservient to the final benefit of the righteous,' working together for their good in the end, serving to make them holy here and happy hereafter.

— πάντα ὑμῶν ἐστιν.] These words are, as Crellius points out, resumptive; q. d. 'All things, I say, are yours;' the clause being repeated in order the better to enforce the great lesson intended to be impressed on them,—that they should not be enslaved to teachers, nor give up their faith to any but Christ, whose disciples alone they ought to be regarded. For the argument in the next words, ὑμεῖς δὲ Χριστοῦ, &c. is: 'But if all things and persons be yours, you yourselves are Christ's subjects,' and therefore ought not to attach yourselves to any other, as head of the Church. The words Χριστὸς δὲ Θεοῦ are meant to carry the gradation (with which Wolf compares a similar one in Philemon, frag. p. 306) to the highest pitch: 'Christ is God's,' i. e. (as the best Commentators explain) in his office of Mediator and Redeemer.

The inference from the foregoing is (as Billroth suggests) an admonition to teachers, as follows: 'Let not therefore pride be among you: ye belong to Christ the Lord; but even he sought not to serve himself, but in all things did the will of God. Belong, then, to him, and be one with him.'

IV. The Apostle goes on to show that all preachers are but stewards of the manifold grace of God, and are valued in the sight of God according to their fidelity, which cannot now be known to men; and that therefore they ought neither to be too much extolled nor depreciated till Christ, their Lord, shall come, who will assign them their due honour. Moreover, that having nothing but what they have by him received, such stewards have no ground of glorying. Then, in order to point out the difference between the false teachers (so admired by the factious) and himself, with the other Apostles, he draws a striking contrast between the luxury and ease in which the former were living at Corinth, with the poverty and persecution which the Apostles endured. He further intimates that he shall shortly come, and put to the test the claims of his adversaries, by seeing the supernatural powers which they can bring forward for their confirmation. Such is the view of this portion of the epistle taken by the best Commentators. Billroth, however, is of opinion that the connexion of the first five verses with the preceding and following context has not been satisfactorily made out. He lays it down as follows: 'In the preceding Chapter, the Apostle had said that the teachers, as servants of God and of the Church, could not possibly become rulers over the latter and founders of sects; in this Chapter he proceeds to state that the teachers are simply stewards of that which God hath committed to their charge. The only praise that could accrue to them was that which they might procure by fidelity. But even for this praise he himself did not look, in so far as men were concerned (ἐμοὶ δὲ εἰς ἐλάχιστόν ἐστιν, ἵνα ὑφ' ὑμῶν ἀνακριθῶ, ἢ ὑπὸ ἀνθρωπίνης ἡμέρας): nay, so little did he think of judgment, that he had not even judged himself, but had left all to the Lord. If, then, the Apostle were so humble, how much more ought the Corinthians to be so!'

1. This verse forms, as Krause observes, a sort of corollary from the foregoing argumentation, representing forcibly the proper degree of estimation in which Christian teachers should be held; who should neither be over-magnified on the one hand, nor undervalued on the other. Such, too, seems to have been the view, as to the general import, taken by the Ethiopic Translator, who renders: 'Let therefore a man account,' &c.

— οὕτως ἡμᾶς λογιζέσθω ἄνθρωπος, &c.] Ἄνθρωπος is here put (like the Hebr. אדם or איש) for ἕκαστος. Οὕτως, i. e. 'in this [following] light alone;' namely, ὡς ὑπηρέτας Χριστοῦ, for διακόνους Χριστοῦ, iii. 5. So Luke i. 2, ὑπηρέται τοῦ λόγου. The absolute use occurs also at Acts xxvi. 16. These, then, are not to be accounted Lords of their faith, so that they should bear their appellation from them.

— οἰκονόμους μυστηρίων Θεοῦ] i.e. 'stewards and dispensers of the benefits of the Gospel, by preaching its doctrines;' which are called mysteries, because they are not discoverable by human reason, but only to be known from Divine revelation. It is meant that they are stewards only, not proprietors, of that which they dispense, and ought therefore in all respects to follow the directions of their Master, and accordingly fidelity is their chief duty.

2. ὃ δὲ λοιπόν.] This is equivalent to τὸ λοιπὸν at Eph. vi. 10, and may be rendered cæterum, moreover.

— ζητεῖται ἐν τοῖς οἰκονόμοις ἵνα, &c.] Meaning, that 'fidelity is the most essential duty of a steward.' See Calvin.

c Supra 3. 13. οἰκονόμοις, ἵνα πιστός τις εὑρεθῇ. [c] ἐμοὶ δὲ εἰς ἐλάχιστόν 3 ἐστιν, ἵνα ὑφ' ὑμῶν ἀνακριθῶ, ἢ ὑπὸ ἀνθρωπίνης ἡμέρας·
d Ps. 143. 2. Job 9. 2. ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἐμαυτὸν ἀνακρίνω· ([d] οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐμαυτῷ σύνοιδα, 4 Rom. 3. 20. & 4. 2 1 John 3. 20, 21. ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐν τούτῳ δεδικαίωμαι·) ὁ δὲ ἀνακρίνων με Κύριός
e Matt. 7. 1. ἐστιν. [e] Ὥστε μὴ πρὸ καιροῦ τι κρίνετε, ἕως ἂν ἔλθῃ ὁ 5
Rom. 2. 1, 16, 29. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Κύριος· ὃς καὶ φωτίσει τὰ κρυπτὰ τοῦ σκότους, καὶ φανε-
Rev. 20. 12. ρώσει τὰς βουλὰς τῶν καρδιῶν· καὶ τότε ὁ ἔπαινος γενήσεται ἑκάστῳ ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

f Supra 1. 12. & 3. 4. [f] Ταῦτα δὲ, ἀδελφοὶ, μετεσχημάτισα εἰς ἐμαυτὸν καὶ 6

3, 4. ἐμοὶ δὲ εἰς ἐλάχιστόν ἐστι.] An Hellenistic phrase for ἐλάχιστόν μοι ἐστιν, equivalent to the Classical παρ' οὐδέν ἐστι, or οὐδὲν διαφέρει, non curo, &c. Ἐμοὶ is emphatic; q. d. 'But whether it be thought thus or not, with me it,' &c. Ἀνακρίνειν properly signifies, 'to examine the qualities of any thing or person;' and sometimes it denotes, as here, the result of such scrutiny, whether for praise or blame. Now the result of the ἀνάκρισις in question would, in the followers of Paul, be praise; in the followers of Apollos and others, blame. To soften the seeming harshness of this, the Apostle adds, ἢ ὑπὸ ἀνθρωπίνης ἡμέρας, i. e. 'or of any man's judgment;' ἡμέρα being often, per metalepsin, used to denote a day of judgment (in the forensic sense of fixing a day for any trial), but here simply judgment. It is, however, so anomalous an expression, that Jerome would regard it as a Cilicism. Yet we may rather suppose (with Beza, Olearius, Dobree, and Pott) that St. Paul chose to employ the term with allusion to that great day of final judgment, about the award of which alone he was anxious; his meaning being that 'whether he be approved or censured by a human award is of little consequence to him, in comparison with the unerring judgment of God at the great day.' Thus, we may observe, he cares not to prove his fidelity to those who chuse to doubt it, but contents himself with simply protesting it, with an appeal to the tribunal of the great Searcher of hearts.

— ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἐμαυτὸν ἀνακρίνω.] Meaning to say, 'As to human judgment, so far are the judges from being able to determine, that I cannot even judge myself [or determine whether I am superior or inferior to the other teachers].'

The next clause, οὐδὲν γὰρ—δεδικαίωμαι, is parenthetical, and the sense is, 'Though I am not conscious to myself of having done any wrong [in my ministry], yet am I not, on that account, regarded as justified and free from blame;' namely, it should seem, that of sinning occasionally through ignorance, or at least deficiency in what was right. At οὐδὲν understand κακὸν, as in the Nil conscire sibi of Horace. The word is sometimes expressed, as in a kindred passage of Job xxvii. 6, οὐ γὰρ σύνοιδα ἐμαυτῷ ἄτοπα πράξας. The words ὁ δὲ ἀνακρίνων με Κύριός ἐστιν must, from the context, mean, 'He alone, who is to judge me at the last day, is the Lord;' q. d. 'whether I deserve praise or blame must be decided by him.'

5. On this the Apostle founds a most weighty admonition, of universal application, similar to others at Rom. xiv. 3, 4. 10. 14, and in the form of a conclusion from what has been said; q. d. 'Such being the case (ὥστε) abstain from all sitting in judgment upon others, as being premature;' literally, 'before the time [appointed].' And at ἕως ἂν ἔλθῃ there is an ellipsis; q. d. 'But wait until the Lord shall come to exercise such judgment at his second advent.' The next clause, ὃς καὶ φωτίσει, &c., (where the ὃς is to be resolved into καὶ οὗτος, 'and, or for, He') is meant to intimate why this judgment should be abstained from,—namely, since we weak mortals are destitute of that competent knowledge of all the circumstances of any case, without which the office of judgment cannot properly be exercised; and ought therefore to leave judgment to the great Searcher of hearts, who will not only bring to light the most secret actions, but (καὶ φωτίσει—καὶ, &c.) will manifest the hidden counsels of the heart.

The phrase βουλαὶ τῶν καρδιῶν is formed on several in the Old Test.; especially Ps. xliv. 22: 'Will not God search it out; for He knoweth the secret things of the heart?' תעלמות לב, Sept., τὰ κρύφια τῆς καρδίας. The nearest approach to this phrase that I have observed in the Classical writers is Theophylact, Sim. p. 106, εἰς τὸ φανερὸν ἐπιβουλὰς τῆς ψυχῆς οὐ παρεδείκνυε, where, I conjecture, ought to be read ἐπιβολάς.

— καὶ τότε ὁ ἔπαινος.] Ἔπαινος is, like the Latin fama, a word of middle signification, denoting what is thought or said of any one, either for praise or blame; and sometimes, as here, it has an adjunct notion of reward or punishment as resulting therefrom. Of course this is intended primarily of the teachers before mentioned; but it is applicable to all Christians.

6. ταῦτα δὲ, ἀδελφοὶ, μετεσχ. εἰς ἐμ.] Μετασχηματίζειν signifies properly 'to change the σχῆμα, form or habit;' and figuratively, 'to change the form of speech or address;' also, in a rhetorical sense, 'to transfer, by accommodation, to oneself what may be said of another.' The sense is: 'These things [namely, "which I have now written, on the authority of teachers," iii. 35. seqq.] I have in figure applied to myself and Apollos for your sakes, for your instruction;' q. d. 'I have brought forward this in my own person and that of Apollos, as if what was said of others (whom I, out of delicacy, forbear to mention) were applicable to us; intending, under my own name and his, to admonish you, for your edification, as to the degree of estimation in which you ought to hold any teachers of the Gospel, and where you should stop.' The Apostle had recourse to this μετασχηματισμὸς, no doubt, partly from

Ἀπολλὼ δι' ὑμᾶς· ἵνα ἐν ἡμῖν μάθητε τὸ μὴ ὑπὲρ ὃ
γέγραπται φρονεῖν, ἵνα μὴ εἷς ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἑνὸς φυσιοῦσθε κατὰ 7 τοῦ ἑτέρου. [g] Τίς γάρ σε διακρίνει; τί δὲ ἔχεις ὃ οὐκ g John 3. 27 James 1. 17. 1 Pet. 4. 10.
ἔλαβες; Εἰ δὲ καὶ ἔλαβες, τί καυχᾶσαι ὡς μὴ λαβών;
8 Ἤδη κεκορεσμένοι ἐστὲ, ἤδη ἐπλουτήσατε, χωρὶς ἡμῶν ἐβασιλεύσατε· καὶ ὄφελόν γε ἐβασιλεύσατε! ἵνα καὶ ἡμεῖς ὑμῖν h Ps. 44. 22. Rom. 8. 36.
9 συμβασιλεύσωμεν. [h] Δοκῶ γὰρ ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς ἡμᾶς τοὺς ἀπο- 2 Cor. 4. 11. Heb. 10. 33.

motives of prudence and moderation, but chiefly that he might be enabled thus to intimate, in the least invidious manner, the true dignity of ministers of the word.

— ἵνα ἐν ἡμῖν μάθητε, &c.] Ἐν ἡμῖν means, 'by the instance of us,' namely, as those who stand the highest. Γέγραπται is an expression commonly serving to introduce something written in Scripture for general admonition; but the best Expositors are agreed that here it can only mean what has been written in this Epistle; see supra iii. 7. 9. 22. With this phrase, ὑπὲρ ὃ γέγραπται φρονεῖν, I would compare one of Philostr. Vit. Ap. vii. 33, μήθ' ὡς φρονῶν ὑπὲρ τοὺς νόμους.

— ἵνα μὴ εἷς ὑπὲρ, &c.] Meaning, 'that ye may not be vain of one teacher to the prejudice of (κατὰ) another.' So Test. xii. Patr. p. 579, κατὰ τῶν ἐντολῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ φυσιούμενοι.

7. Having warned the people in general, the Apostle now turns to the teachers; and severely stigmatizes their conceit; apostrophizing them in terms of keen sarcasm, and bitter irony. To make the address the more pointed, or perhaps with allusion to one of those teachers who might be the leader of the anti-Pauline faction, the Apostle employs the singular number.

— τίς γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. [' Why art thou thus puffed up;] for who maketh thee to differ, distinguisheth thee, maketh thee superior to others?'

8. ἤδη κεκορεσμένοι ἐστὲ, &c.] The best Commentators are of opinion that this is spoken ironically, and directed against the false teachers, Paul's adversaries; q. d. 'I see ye are like persons who are satiated at a feast; ye think ye have all, and need no more knowledge.' By κεκορ., ἐπλουτήσατε, and ἐβασιλεύσατε the Apostle merely places the same idea in different points of view, by varying the metaphor, so as to rise by a climax. The first is taken from persons so filled with food, as neither to need nor desire any more; the second, from persons so rich as to have no need of or desire for more wealth; the third, from one who, from being a private person, is raised to the throne; and, having therefore attained the highest station, has nothing further, in the way of ambition, to wish. 'Εβασιλ. ought (as in the case of ἐπλουτ.) to have been rendered ' ye reign;' ' are reigning;' which must be taken in the metaphorical sense, (common in the Latin regno,) as denoting the obtaining whatever we desire, without being subject to the control of others. So Horat. Epist. i. 10. 8, ' Vivo et regno, simul ista reliqui.'

— καὶ ὄφελόν γε, &c.] In these words irony passes into indignant sarcasm and indirect reproach. To advert to the sense here intended, that assigned by most Commentators, 'I wish from my heart ye had the authority of princes, that ye might afford protection to us in persecution,' is not a little jejune, and quite at variance with the context, which rather requires the figurative sense above indicated. The right mode of explication is, I apprehend, that of the ancients and some moderns (as Calvin, Lightfoot, Tiren., Menoch., Krause, Vater, Pott, and Heydenreich), who assign as the sense, ' Would that ye were so abundant in all spiritual riches! for then I might partake of your prosperity, by the credit and honour which I should enjoy from having converted and taught you; since the fame of the disciple tends to the honour of the teacher.'

9. δοκῶ γὰρ ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς, &c.] In order to arrive at the exact sense of these words (rendered obscure by deep pathos) it is necessary to ascertain the connexion, and trace the scope of the passage. The intent of the Apostle would seem to be, to contrast his own situation with theirs, and thus put them to shame. And here the link of connexion seems to subsist in a clause omitted, to which the γὰρ has reference, q. d. [And well may we Apostles form such a wish;] for how different is our situation as compared with yours? thus while you abound in every good thing, and carry your heads high, we, &c. This use of δοκῶ is (like our I trow) subservient to irony or sarcasm. Ἡμᾶς τοὺς ἀποστ. ἐσχάτους ἀπέδειξεν, 'hath set us Apostles in the lowest place.' Ἀποδείκνυμι signifies to show, appoint any one his place. As to the expression ἐσχάτους (literally signifying, the lowest or last in a row), whether this contains (as some have imagined) an allusion to the gladiatorial exhibitions of the amphitheatre may be doubted. It would rather seem a mode of speaking to denote the meanness of their condition. At ἐπιθαν. repeat ἀπέδειξε. The word is one of rare occurrence. Yet I have noted it in Dionys. Hal. vol. i. 427. Sylb. An allusion is here supposed either to the bestiarii, or the gladiatores. But possibly the Apostle intended (as Chrysostom, Pott, and Heydenreich, think) to express only the general idea of men condemned to death, and who are in continual expectation of meeting their fate. The words following, indeed, ὅτι θέατρον ἐγενήθημεν, rather favour the former view; but it would seem that in those words we have a new figure, engrafted on the foregoing one. Thus the sense of ὅτι θέατρον— ἀνθρώποις appears to be, '[And, in one point of resemblance we may truly be called ἐπιθανάτιοι:] for we, like them, are become a gazingstock to the whole universe, both angels and men.' Θέατρον is taken for θέαμα; and θέατρον ἐγεν. is for θεατριζόμεθα, as in a kindred passage of Hebr. x. 33. With respect to the difficulty started by some—how angels can be supposed present at such a spectacle, it may be i Supra 2. 3. & 3. 18. Acts 17. 18. k Acts 23. 2. 2 Cor. 4. 8. & 11. 23. l Matt. 5. 44. Luke 6. 28. & 23. 34. Acts 7. 60. & 18. 3. & 20. 34. Rom. 12. 14. 1 Thess. 2. 9. 2 Thess. 3. 8.

στόλους ἐσχάτους ἀπέδειξεν, ὡς ἐπιθανατίους· ὅτι θέατρον ἐγενήθημεν τῷ κόσμῳ, καὶ ἀγγέλοις καὶ ἀνθρώποις. ⁱ Ἡμεῖς 10 μωροὶ διὰ Χριστὸν, ὑμεῖς δὲ φρόνιμοι ἐν Χριστῷ· ἡμεῖς ἀσθενεῖς, ὑμεῖς δὲ ἰσχυροί· ὑμεῖς ἔνδοξοι, ἡμεῖς δὲ ἄτιμοι.
ᵏ Ἄχρι τῆς ἄρτι ὥρας καὶ πεινῶμεν καὶ διψῶμεν, καὶ γυμνη- 11 τεύομεν, καὶ κολαφιζόμεθα, καὶ ἀστατοῦμεν, ˡ καὶ κοπιῶμεν 12 answered, that καὶ ἀγγέλ. καὶ ἀνθρ. are put per μερισμὸν, being enumerated as the constituent parts of τῷ κόσμῳ preceding; by a mode of expression similar to one of Plato, cited by Bp. Middleton, on Gr. Art. C. vi. § 2, ἀνθρώποις τε καὶ θηρίοις. So also Billroth says that καὶ ἀγγέλοις καὶ ἀνθρώποις is a subdivision of κόσμῳ not co-ordinate with it, but explicatory of it. If this be thought not satisfactory, we may, with Chrysostom, Grotius, and Heydenreich, suppose that the world [of intelligent beings] is here distinguished into two parts, the superior and the inferior family, forming as it were the visible and invisible spectators. Comp. 1 Tim. v. 21.

10. ἡμεῖς μωροὶ—ἄτιμοι.] In this antithetical sentence (in which is resumed the comparison between himself and his fellow Apostles on the one hand, and the Corinthian teachers and people on the other) the Apostle repeats ironically the things which his enemies said of him; and in the same spirit of irony attributes to them the opposite qualities.

— μωροὶ διὰ Χριστὸν] for μ. διὰ τὸν λόγον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, 'on account of the plain preaching of Christ and him crucified;' see supra i. 18. 23. ii. 2. In ἡμεῖς μωροὶ there is an ironical concession.

On the sense intended in ἀσθενεῖς and ἰσχυροὶ some difference of opinion exists. Pott and Heydenreich are agreed in regarding this clause as tantamount in sense to the preceding; φρόνιμοι and ἰσχυροὶ,—ἀσθενεῖς and μωροὶ being, they think, synonymous, and respectively opposed to each other, like τὰ μωρὰ καὶ τὰ ἀσθενῆ, and τοὺς σοφοὺς καὶ τὰ ἰσχυρὰ, supra i. 27. And it is true that that passage is of a similar kind to the present. Yet the proof is any thing but decisive; for it is an acknowledged principle, 'Nil agit exemplum litem quod lite resolvit.' The interpretation there of the terms ἀσθενὴς and ἰσχυρὸς is equally uncertain as here; though the sense intended should seem to be the same in both passages. Here, however, we are not obliged to interpret, 'weak in intellect, as opposed to strong-minded;' since there is nothing in the context to require that sense; and I am not aware of the slightest authority for it in the usus loquendi: for though in Thucyd. ii. 61, we have ἐν τῷ ἀσθενεῖ τῆς γνώμης; yet (as I have shown in my Note there) γνώμη must, from the context, be understood not of the mind, but of the will and resolves. Indeed, to suppose the sense to be what those Critics maintain, would be to mar the beauty of this triple antithesis, by making one of the three members nugatory; whereas it is plain that the Apostle meant here to advert to the three great means whereby any influence is gained with men, or effects produced in the world; namely, wisdom, wealth (or power), and fame. Consequently, ἀσθενὴς, in both these passages, means the being destitute of external endowments and worldly advantages; and ἰσχυρὸς, the being possessed of and buoyed up with them. Of course ἔνδοξοι and ἄτιμοι here correspond to τὰ ἀγενῆ καὶ τὰ ἐξουθ. and τὰ μὴ ὄντα at i. 28. One may remark on the inverse order in the last clause here, where the paronomasia would rather have required ἡμεῖς ἄτιμοι, ὑμεῖς ἔνδοξοι. The other, however, was (as Pott points out) purposely adopted, in order to draw the connexion closer with the next verse, and the better to introduce an enumeration, by way of example, of the adverse circumstances implied in the extensive term ἀσθενής.

11—13. The contrast is here carried forward, from what affected the mind, to what pressed on the body; and that in a pathetic enumeration, by way of example, of various acute sufferings. In which lively picture there seems to be a sort of climax, 'eo ordine (says Hyperius) ut in extremis incrementum sit, summaque significetur abjectio.' The expression with which the description is introduced, ἄχρι τῆς ἄρτι, serves to denote the incessancy of the evils in question; q. d. 'Nay, not to mention past afflictions, up to this present time we are scantily supplied with the common necessaries of food, drink, and clothing.' Γυμνητεύειν properly signifies to be lightly clothed (like the γυμνῆται), and from the adjunct, to be ill clothed. The first καὶ is emphatical, and signifies even.

To want of the common necessaries of life is then subjoined another class of evils, scarcely less trying; 1. Κολαφιζόμεθα. This is by many of the best Expositors interpreted of being beaten with the fist, or cudgelled, or scourged. But it should rather seem that the term is to be understood (as Estius, Pott, and Macknight explain it) in a figurative sense, of contumelious or ignominious treatment in general: for examples of which sense they appeal to 2 Cor. xii. 7. 1 Pet. ii. 20. They might more aptly have compared a similar figure in περιωθεῖσθαι; ex. gr. Thucyd. iii. 574, περιεώσμεθα ἐκ πάντων, and Aristot. Polit. lib. v. 6, γίνονται αἱ στάσεις ἐκ τοῦ περιωθεῖσθαι ἑτέρους ὑφ' ἑτέρων, κατὰ γάμους ἢ δίκας. Περιωθεῖσθαι signifies literally, 'to be shoved or pushed about,' as low persons who stand in the way of their superiors; but figuratively, as here, of being spurned or contemned. In like manner, κολαφίζεσθαι may be taken in the same sense as we occasionally use the terms 'to be cuffed, or kicked about.'

To this is subjoined the affecting particular, ἀστατοῦμεν, meaning the having no settled abode, not having where to lay their heads (see Matt. viii. 20. x. 23), but wandering from city to city, as the Poet says, 'incerti quo fata ferant, ubi sistere datur.' A state this, among the ancients considered so deplorable, as to be numbered among the execrations imprecating evil on the wicked.

ἐργαζόμενοι ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσί· λοιδορούμενοι, εὐλογοῦμεν· 13 διωκόμενοι, ἀνεχόμεθα· [m] βλασφημούμενοι, παρακαλοῦμεν· m Lam. 3. 45.
ὡς περικαθάρματα τοῦ κόσμου ἐγενήθημεν, πάντων περίψημα 14 ἕως ἄρτι. [n] Οὐκ ἐντρέπων ὑμᾶς γράφω ταῦτα, ἀλλ' ὡς n 1 Thess. 2. 11.
15 τέκνα μου ἀγαπητὰ νουθετῶ. [o] Ἐὰν γὰρ μυρίους παιδα- o Acts 18. 11. Gal. 4. 19. Philem. 10. James 1. 18.
γωγοὺς ἔχητε ἐν Χριστῷ, ἀλλ' οὐ πολλοὺς πατέρας· ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἐγὼ ὑμᾶς ἐγέννησα.
16,17 [p] Παρακαλῶ οὖν ὑμᾶς· μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε. [q] Διὰ τοῦτο p Infra 11. 1. Phil. 3. 17. 1 Thess. 1. 6. 2 Thess. 3. 9. q 1 Tim. 1. 2. 2 Tim. 1. 2.
ἔπεμψα ὑμῖν Τιμόθεον, ὅς ἐστι τέκνον μου ἀγαπητὸν καὶ πιστὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ, ὃς ὑμᾶς ἀναμνήσει τὰς ὁδούς μου τὰς ἐν Χριστῷ, καθὼς πανταχοῦ ἐν πάσῃ ἐκκλησίᾳ διδάσκω.
18 Ὡς μὴ ἐρχομένου δέ μου πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐφυσιώθησάν τινες·

12. The Apostle now adverts to the manner in which he bears all this, and his general demeanour. 'The foregoing endurances,' observes Theodoret, 'put his fortitude to the proof; the following sprang from a higher principle.'

— εὐλογοῦμεν.] Literally, 'we give good words;' see Rom. xii. 14, and Note. Ἀνεχόμεθα, 'we bear it patiently.' The word, in this absolute use, is rare; yet it is found in Symmachus's version of Job xxi. 3, and in Josephus, Ant. xvi. 9. 4, Ἡρώδης δὲ ταῦτα πάντα φέρων, ἠνείχετο, and xvii. 2. 4.

13. παρακαλοῦμεν] 'we entreat [to be better used];' we mildly expostulate. The next clause, ὡς περικαθάρματα—ἄρτι, forms the highest step of the climax; in which the Apostle sums up the details of injurious treatment in a few words, the sense of which, however, is disputed. Περικάθαρμα τοῦ κόσμου, is by many Commentators, ancient and modern, regarded as a sacrificial term, with allusion to the expiatory sacrifices of the Greeks and Romans, among whom, in times of public calamity, some poor wretch was selected from the dregs of the people, to be offered up as a lustration sacrifice. Such persons, however, were called καθάρματα, or περικαθάρματα, with reference to the purification, or expiation, effected by their sacrifice; which can have no place here, unless the term be taken, in a very qualified and highly figurative sense, of those who undergo the greatest evils from their fellow-creatures; see Heydenreich and Photius. And when we consider the expression which follows (evidently meant, by a parallelism, to be exegetical), πάντων περίψημα, there is little doubt that the sense of περικαθάρματα is 'the cleansings up,' as περίψημα is 'the sweepings up or around;' metaphorically denoting the vilest things or persons, the very outcasts of society. Of περίψημα in this sense, examples are frequent; of περικαθ. very rare. The Apostle seems here to have had in view the words of Lament. iii. 45, 'Thou hast made us as the offscouring and refuse.'

The Apostle now turns from the teachers to the taught, addressing himself to the Corinthian Christians in general. And here he softens the seeming harshness of the foregoing expressions, by assuring them that he did not mention his sufferings as a reproach to them, but as a proof of his fatherly affection for them (v. 15) in bearing so much for their good, and in order to excite them to follow his example.

14. οὐκ ἐντρέπων, &c.] Ἐντρέπειν properly signifies to turn away, and then to make any one turn away his eyes, by staring at him; and hence, figuratively, 'to make him ashamed.'

15. In παιδαγωγοὺς and πατέρας the Apostle contrasts the severity and mercenary service of paid instructors to the gentleness and the disinterested paternal spirit evinced by himself.

— ἐν Χριστῷ.] Construe this with ἐγέννησα. These words show the nature of the paternity just spoken of; namely, that of having converted them to Christianity. The figure here used is one of frequent occurrence in the Rabbinical writers, and found occasionally in Philo.

16. μιμηταί μου.] Not 'imitators of my modesty,' as many Commentators explain; for it seems to be simply the Apostle's intention to deduce from his spiritual paternity the inference, that they should be imitators of him, as far as he imitated Christ; just as parents and teachers are, to their children and pupils, the exemplar by which they are to model their character.

17. διὰ τοῦτο ἔπεμψα, &c.] 'for which reason,' i. e. in order that ye may the better be enabled to trace my exemplar in doctrine and duty.' Τέκνον, 'disciple or convert.' Ἐν Κυρίῳ, 'in the work of the Lord,' the spreading of his Gospel. Τὰς ὁδούς μου τὰς ἐν Χρ., i. e. 'my methods of Christian instruction.' By the next words, καθὼς πανταχοῦ ἐν πάσῃ ἐκκλησίᾳ διδάσκω, it is suggested that these injunctions involve nothing new, but what is common to all the Christian congregations, and therefore ought not to have been neglected.

18. ὡς μὴ ἐρχομένου, &c.] Meaning, 'as if they supposed I should not come to you.' This use of ὡς with Genitives absolute is found also in the Classical writers. So Xen. Mem. iii. 5. 20, ὡς οὐκ εὐτάκτων ὄντων Ἀθηναίων. The force of the δὲ after ἐρχομένου will appear from the following connexion of the words, as traced by Billroth: 'I have sent Timothy at present, but not because I do not myself intend to come, as some,' &c. So Stenersen explains: 'Do not interpret this sending of Timothy to imply that I dare not come to you, as some among you, puffed up with vain confidence, venture to maintain.'

Ἐφυσιώθησαν is an expression of very extensive import, well explained by Pott, 'are puffed r Rom. 15. 32. James 4. 15. Heb. 6. 3. s Supra 2. 4. 1 Thess. 1. 5. 2 Pet. 1. 16.

t 2 Cor. 10. 2. & 13. 10.
a Lev. 18. 8. Deut. 27. 20.

[r] ἐλεύσομαι δὲ ταχέως πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐὰν ὁ Κύριος θελήσῃ, καὶ 19 γνώσομαι οὐ τὸν λόγον τῶν πεφυσιωμένων, ἀλλὰ τὴν δύνα-μιν. [s] οὐ γὰρ ἐν λόγῳ ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλ᾽ ἐν 20 δυνάμει. [t] Τί θέλετε; ἐν ῥάβδῳ ἔλθω πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἢ ἐν 21
ἀγάπῃ πνεύματί τε πρᾳότητος;
V. [a] Ὅλως ἀκούεται ἐν ὑμῖν πορνεία, καὶ τοιαύτη πορ- 1 up with an opinion of their superior wisdom, carry themselves insolently, and arrogate all the authority of deciding in matters pertaining to the Church.

19. In order to preclude the suspicion that by this Epistle, and the mission of Timothy, he only meant to previously try how they were disposed towards him before he ventured to come to them, the Apostle boldly adds, 'But they are mistaken; for, by God's permission, I will quickly come unto you.'

— γνώσομαι οὐ τὸν λόγον, &c.] 'I shall know, or prove, not the words of those puffed up, but the power which manifests itself in them.' By this power some Commentators understand the power of working miracles; but it is better (with other ancient and most recent Interpreters) to explain it of the ability of performance, as opposed to that of mere words, boasting and promises, of what they can and will effect. So Chrysostom, Theophylact, Grotius, Whitby, Locke, Krause, Pott, and Heydenr. We need not, however, exclude the power of the Holy Ghost as evinced in the spiritual gifts, which contributed so much to the δύναμις of the Apostles and first teachers of the Gospel.

20. οὐ γὰρ ἐν λόγῳ, &c.] The interpretation of these words mainly depends upon that of the preceding. According to the view of those words first stated, the δυνάμει here will denote, as Abp. Newcome explains, the power of working miracles, of knowing the heart, and of inflicting divine punishments. According to the second (which, on various accounts, deserves the preference), it will denote the power of effecting something, as opposed to bare words. Thus by the two expressions λόγῳ and δυνάμει will be denoted respectively boasts, promises, and mere words, as opposed to the power of accomplishing what may serve to confirm the truth of the Gospel, to explain its doctrines, or promote its efficacy on the heart and life. By ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ understand the promulgation of the Gospel, and supply ἐστι, in the sense κατεργάζεται.

21. τί] for πότερον, 'Whether [of the two things] do you choose?' Ἔλθω, 'must I come.' Ἐν (for σὺν) ῥάβδῳ, 'furnished with,' as Heb. ix. 25. This seemingly proverbial expression (which has, as Schoettgen thinks, a reference to the corporal discipline of the Jewish Church) is equivalent to ἐν κολάσει, or ἐν παιδευτικῇ ἐνεργείᾳ, alluding to the castigation by severe reproof, or, if need were, by spiritual censures, or, when the extremity of the case demanded it, by inflicting miraculous judgments on the refractory. In ἐν ἀγάπῃ πνεύματί τε πρᾳότητος there is an Hendiadys, or the latter may have been added by way of explication. Not but that the other course might be (as Chrysostom observes) ἐν ἀγάπῃ, i. e. well-meant correction, but this would be also ἐν πνεύματι πρᾳότητος.

V. With this Chapter commences the second section of the Epistle, in which the Apostle animadverts on a most flagrant abuse connived at by the Corinthians; rebuking them for not having visited with ecclesiastical censure a scandalous incest committed by a member of the congregation of Corinth. He enjoins the immediate excommunication of the offender; and, for further warning, subjoins a serious admonition to avoid all familiar converse with persons who, by immorality, disgrace their Christian profession.

1. ὅλως ἀκούεται ἐν ὑμῖν, &c.] The force of the assertion here mainly depends upon the sense to be assigned to ὅλως, which is employed in an unusual manner, and hence has been variously interpreted, according to the construction adopted; some construing it with πορνεία, others with ἐν ὑμῖν; whereby various senses have been assigned, specious, indeed, but too factitious, and, from the harshness of the construction, inadmissible. The natural construction of the word is with ἀκούεται, and it may have the sense, assigned by some, of καθ' ὅλου, 'ab omni parte,' 'generally.' Yet for that signification the authority is very slender, and, as regards the position of the word at the beginning of the sentence, none at all. Nay, from that position, it would rather seem to have been the Apostle's intent to use the word, like the Latin omnino, at the beginning of a sentence (as in Cic. de Off. l. i. 20, 'Omnino fortis animus et magnus duabus rebus maxime cernitur'), by which it has the force of confirming the assertion following. This position is, indeed, in the Classical writers so rare, that I am not aware of a single example. The word, however, is so employed a little after the beginning of a sentence, as in Plutarch, Vit. vii. p. 636. Reiske, καὶ ὁ λόγος ὅλως ἠνίχθαι δοκεῖ τῷ Ἡσιόδῳ. And so infra vi. 7, we have ἤδη μὲν οὖν ὅλως ἥττημα ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστιν, ὅτι, &c. When it occurs at the beginning of a sentence, it has a stronger intensive force. Thus the sense is: 'It is very generally reported, or it is the subject of very general report (publica fama est) that there is fornication among you;' there being here an ellipsis of εἶναι. A Classical writer would have expressed it thus: φήμη ἐστὶν περὶ τῆς πορνείας οὔσης ἐν ὑμῖν, or φήμη ἐστὶ ὅτι πορνεία ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστιν.

Here, then, the Apostle first notices the reported existence of πορνεία in general, and then specifies a flagrant instance of it. The term πορνεία (a general one to denote illicit intercourse of all kinds) is here employed to denote incest; and, unless the woman in question had been separated from the father by legal divorce, adultery. Whether the parties were living in marriage, or in concubinage, cannot be determined. The latter is the more generally supposed, yet probability rather lies the other way. Ἔχειν, in the sense to be united in conjugal union, is frequent both in the Classical and Scriptural writers; while in the other sense it probably no where occurs in the νεία, ἥτις οὐδὲ ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν [ὀνομάζεται], ὥστε γυναῖκά 2 τινα τοῦ πατρὸς ἔχειν. [b] Καὶ ὑμεῖς πεφυσιωμένοι ἐστέ; καὶ b Supra 4. 8. 2 Cor. 12. 21.

οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἐπενθήσατε, ἵνα [ἐξ]αρθῇ ἐκ μέσου ὑμῶν ὁ τὸ 3 ἔργον τοῦτο ποιήσας; [c] Ἐγὼ μὲν γὰρ, ὡς ἀπὼν τῷ σώματι, c Col. 2. 5.
παρὼν δὲ τῷ πνεύματι, ἤδη κέκρικα ὡς παρὼν, τὸν οὕτω d Matt. 16. 19. & 18. 18.
4 τοῦτο κατεργασάμενον, [d] ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν John 20. 23.

Scriptural ones. Yet from 2 Cor. vii. 12, it would seem that the father was then alive.

— οὐδὲ ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν ὀνομάζεται.] The true meaning here would seem to be, not 'is named,' but 'is heard or spoken of as occurring among,' &c. in which sense the word is used at Eph. v. 3, πορνεία—μηδὲ ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν, 'reported as being practised among you.' That such instances were not unknown, is plain from what is said in Horne's Introd., vol. ii. p. 394, sq. vol. iii. p. 149, sq. 307, sqq.; and accordingly the assertion must be regarded as hyperbolical, and to be taken with some qualification. If, however, this hyperbole be objected to, we may, with several eminent Commentators, especially the more recent ones, explain the word to mean, 'is named with approbation:' a sense which will be quite agreeable to fact; since, as Mr. Locke observes, the marriage of a son-in-law and a mother-in-law, though not prohibited by the laws of the Roman empire, was, however, looked upon as so scandalous and infamous, that it never had any countenance from precedent, as is plain from the words of Cicero in his Oration pro Cluentio, § 4, 'Nubit genero socerus, nullis auspiciis, nullis auctoribus. O scelus incredibile, et præter hanc unam, in omni vitâ inauditum!'

The word ὀνομάζεται has been rejected by many Critics, and cancelled by most of the recent Editors, including Scholz, but, I think, on insufficient grounds; since the MSS. (not many) which are without it are confined to one family, and, however ancient, are altered ones; and Versions and Fathers are not valid evidence in a case like the present. The word was probably thrown out either by some bold Critics, who scrupled at the sense arising, or fastidious ones, who thought that the style would be improved by removing the word. Finally, I must notice, the word is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version.

2. καὶ ὑμεῖς πεφυσιωμένοι, &c.] Editors and Commentators are not agreed whether the sentence should be taken interrogatively, or declaratively. Several modern Editors and Expositors prefer the latter; but I suspect that they were biassed by the Vulgate, which had a great influence both on punctuation and interpretation. It must be confessed, too, that there is some difficulty connected with the former mode. Yet it seems to have more spirit, and to be more agreeable to the air of the context, and is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version and the Greek Fathers and Commentators; and the more difficult construction is, in a writer like St. Paul, more likely to be the true one. Though, indeed, there is no great harshness; for the sense may be thus expressed: 'And yet [while such enormities are committed in your society,] are ye puffed up with spiritual pride? [as if all things were right among you;] and do not ye [as ye ought] rather mourn [over this fall and your disgrace], and take measures that he who hath done this deed shall be removed from among your society?' Καὶ here stands for καίτοι. There is also an ellipsis of ὡς ἔδει, implied, indeed, in the force of the comparative. Ἐπενθ. alludes to that formal mourning over any scandal brought on the whole body, which accompanied the excommunication of the offender; who was bewailed as one dead, by a custom borrowed from the synagogue, and long retained in the Church. Hence, under the idea of mourning is couched that of excommunication, which is particularly enjoined in the next clause.

— ἵνα ἐξαρθῇ ἐκ μέσου ὑμῶν.] A mild expression, instead of the harsher one ἐκκοπῇ, and meant to suggest the possibility of his restoration to the Christian body, after thorough repentance and reformation. See 2 Cor. ii. 7.

For ἐξαρθῇ some ancient MSS. have ἀρθῇ, which has been edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, and Scholz; but, I think, injudiciously: since it is more likely that the ἐξ was thrown out by the Alexandrian Critics, to remove a tautology and polish an unclassical phrase (for while αἴρειν ἐκ μέσου occurs both in the Classical writers and the New Test., as Col. ii. 14, ἐξαίρειν ἐκ μέσου is no where else found), than that the ἐξ should have been introduced from ver. 13 in nearly all the MSS. Moreover ἐξαρθῇ has a stronger sense (probably with allusion to the idea involved under this of ἐκκόπτειν); and so ἐξέλθετε ἐκ μέσου αὐτῶν, infra vi. 17, and ἐξελέσθαι ἐκ χειρὸς τοῦ, &c. at Deut. xxv. 11, and many other passages.

The reading of some ancient MSS. and some Fathers, πράξας for ποιήσας, is evidently an alteration of the Alexandrian Critics, for greater elegance. The common reading is confirmed by 2 Sam. xii. 5, ὁ ἀνὴρ ὁ ποιήσας τοῦτο, which passage seems to have been in the mind of the Apostle.

3. The construction here is: ἐγὼ μὲν γὰρ ἤδη κέκρικα—τὸν οὕτω τοῦτο κατεργ. παραδοῦναι τῷ Σατανᾷ: the remainder of the words being reckoned as sentences inserted. See Pott. The force of the μὲν is nearly as at John viii. 45; q. d. 'I for my part.' And so, I find, it is considered by Winer, Gr. Gr. p. 378, who well expresses the force of the γὰρ thus: 'Are ye not grieved [rather, concerned]? I say ye; for I, for my part, have already decided,' &c. We may also compare 2 Tim. iv. 6, ἐγὼ γὰρ ἤδη σπένδομαι, and Gal. ii. 19. Acts xxvi. 9, ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν.

The ὡς before ἀπὼν is not, as some consider it, redundant; but rather elliptical, for ὡς εἰμί; q. d. 'Being, as I am, absent in person.' Of κέκρικα the full sense is: 'I have determined, I do hereby determine and direct.' Meaning, that they will do well to use this his Apostolical authority, to take steps (such as are then suggested) for removing the offending member. Οὕτω, 'so [scandalously].' Τὸν κατεργασάμενον, 'who hath perpetrated.' For the word is, as Wets. shows, generally used in a bad sense, especially

Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, (συναχθέντων ὑμῶν καὶ τοῦ ἐμοῦ πνεύματος,)
e 1 Tim. 1. 20. supra 2. 6, 7. σὺν τῇ δυνάμει τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, [e] παρα- 5 δοῦναι τὸν τοιοῦτον τῷ Σατανᾷ εἰς ὄλεθρον τῆς σαρκὸς, ἵνα f Gal. 5. 9. τὸ πνεῦμα σωθῇ ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ. [f] Οὐ καλὸν 6 τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν. Οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι μικρὰ ζύμη ὅλον τὸ g Isa. 53. 7. John 1. 29. φύραμα ζυμοῖ; [g] Ἐκκαθάρατε οὖν τὴν παλαιὰν ζύμην, ἵνα 7 infra 15. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 19. ἦτε νέον φύραμα, καθώς ἐστε ἄζυμοι· καὶ γὰρ τὸ πάσχα when joined with ἔργον in the sense facinus or flagitium, meaning, in the present case, incest.

4. The construction here is disputed. That some of the words are parenthetical, is obvious; but how far the parenthesis ought to extend, is not so certain. Some, as Chrysostom, include ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι—πνεύματος. Others (and indeed the most eminent Commentators) only take συναχθέντων—πνεύματος, which seems preferable. Παραδοῦναι, scil. ὑμᾶς, depends upon εἰς τὸ, or ὥστε, understood, 'in order to your delivering him;' and the passage may be rendered thus: 'I do hereby determine and direct, that ye, being assembled together, and I being spiritually and virtually present with you [by the signification of this my opinion], do, in the name and in behalf of our Lord Jesus Christ, and acting by his power, deliver the person so described,' &c. At τὸν τοιοῦτον there is an epanalepsis, for τὸν οὕτω τοῦτο κατεργ.

5. παραδοῦναι—Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ.] On the exact sense of this passage no little difference of opinion exists. See Recens. Synop. The most eminent Commentators think we have here plain vestiges of a formal excommunication, indicated by παραδοῦναι τῷ Σατ. (with allusion to the form of the excommunication), and a punishment in the flesh, indicated by εἰς ὄλεθρον τῆς σαρκός. Now that the Apostles had the power, and sometimes exercised it, of inflicting death or disease supernaturally, cannot be denied. But whether this is to be considered as an example of its exercise is doubtful. There seems to be more than an injunction to pass sentence of excommunication, but not to inflict disease. In εἰς ὄλεθρον τ. σ. is, I think, only intimated one purpose of the excommunication, which might be expected to follow, and, if God so pleased, would follow it.

The words ἵνα τὸ πνεῦμα—Ἰησοῦ may be thus paraphrased: 'that his soul, corrected, humbled, and reformed by these sufferings, may be saved at the day when Christ shall come to judge the world.'

6. The Apostle here reverts to reproof, rebuking the Corinthians for their supineness in tolerating so scandalous a character among them, and not promptly ridding themselves of him by excommunication. He then subjoins the reasons for this injunction, especially with reference to the pernicious effect of such an example in the Church. Such seems to be the real scope of the words; for I would, with Menoch., Hall, Rosenmuller, Krause, Jaspis, Pott, and Heydenreich, regard οὐ καλὸν τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν as containing a general reproof, founded on πεφυσιωμένοι at v. 2; the Corinthians having, it seems, in a letter to Paul, boasted of the excellent state of things in the Church, and perhaps hinted at their superiority to other Churches. Thus the sense is: 'Your boasting is not well founded or commendable, [while such foul sins are committed among you, and connived at by you].'

— οὐκ οἴδατε.] This must neither be regarded as merely a form of transition, nor, on the other hand, ought its sense to be too much pressed on. It merely refers to what is subjoined as what is, or ought to be, well known. So iii. 16, and elsewhere. In μικρὰ ζύμη, &c. we have a proverbial saying, occurring also at Gal. v. 9. Its general force is to denote that from very small beginnings great things arise; as it is said, Ecclus. xi. 32, ἀπὸ σπινθῆρος πυρὸς πληθύνεται ἀνθρακία. So Pind. Pyth. iii. 66, πολλάν τ' ὄρει πῦρ ἐξ ἑνὸς Σπέρματος ἐνθορὸν ἀΐστωσεν ὕλαν. Here, however, the application is somewhat different; and as the process of fermentation implies a kind of corruption, so, with reference thereto, ζύμη was applied figuratively to whatever has the power of morally corrupting. So the Rabbinical writers speak of evil concupiscence as corrupting the whole man, just as a little leaven leavens a large mass of dough. With a view to this idea, the Priest of Jupiter among the Romans was forbidden to touch any leaven. Here there is an especial reference to the moral contagion of evil example; and the μικρὰ is emphatical, overruling the plea that there is but one such person in the congregation: the admonition intimated being, that 'even one such pestilential member may corrupt the whole society.' So Juvenal, Sat. ii. 79, 'Sicut grex totus in agris Unius scabie cadit et porrigine porci.'

7. The Apostle takes occasion, from the above similitude, to exhort the Corinthians (under a new allegory, derived from the Jewish custom of putting away leaven at the Passover, then probably at hand) to forsake vice and vicious persons, and, in order to prevent the spread of moral contagion, to banish them from their society, since vice can never be banished from the Church, unless those who will not abstain from it are banished likewise. It should seem that the Apostle had here in view all persons who sinned like the offender in question.

— ἐκκαθάρατε τὴν παλαιὰν ζύμην.] Similarly it is said, Dinarch. c. Aristog., p. 67, ἐκκαθ. τὴν δωροδοκίαν.

— νέον φύραμα.] Meaning a new-made mass of dough, namely, before the leaven is put in.

— καθώς ἐστε ἄζυμοι] 'as ye, by your Christian profession, are bound to be unleavened,' i. e. uncorrupted by vice and vicious persons.

— καὶ γὰρ τὸ πάσχα, &c.] Meaning, 'We Christians have also a Paschal lamb, even Christ, who died for the expiation of our sins; [which sacrifice obliges us to greater purity of life than the Jews were bound to practise.]' There is, as Abp. Magee has shown, an evident allusion to the whole work of atonement and expiation accomplished by Jesus Christ, who is compared 8 ἡμῶν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἐτύθη, Χριστός. [h] Ὥστε ἑορτάζωμεν μὴ ἐν h Exod. 12. 3, 15 ζύμῃ παλαιᾷ, μηδὲ ἐν ζύμῃ κακίας καὶ πονηρίας, ἀλλ' ἐν Deut. 16. 3.

ἀζύμοις εἰλικρινείας καὶ ἀληθείας.
9 [i] Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι i Supra v. 2, 7.
2 Cor. 6. 14.
10 πόρνοις. (καὶ οὐ πάντως τοῖς πόρνοις τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, Eph. 5. 11.
ἢ τοῖς πλεονέκταις, ἢ ἅρπαξιν, ἢ εἰδωλολάτραις· ἐπεὶ 11 ὀφείλετε ἄρα ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου ἐξελθεῖν.) [k] νυνὶ δὲ ἔγραψα k 2 Thess. 3. 14.

to the Paschal lamb. As offering the best illustration of this passage, see the remarks of Mr. Greswell on the Parable of the Leaven, especially pp. 196. 198. 'St. Paul,' says he, 'means to urge, that as the Passover wont to be sacrificed was Christ, so the old leaven, the leaven required to be put away in order to a due participation in the feast, was the leaven of malice and wickedness; the new leaven, which was to supersede the old, or, as he terms it, the unleavened bread with which the feast was to be kept by Christians was the leaven of sincerity and truth.'

8. ὥστε ἑορτάζωμεν.] 'So then let us keep our feast,' i. e. (as Loesner explains) 'let us with alacrity worship and serve God in holiness of life;' or (as Pott explains), 'let our whole life be spent as a festival-day.' The words μηδὲ—ἀληθείας are explained by Pott as put for δηλονότι μὴ κατέχοντες ζύμην, τουτέστι τὴν κακίαν καὶ πονηρίαν, ἀλλὰ τὰ ἄζυμα, τουτέστι τὴν εἰλικ. καὶ ἀλήθειαν. Ἀλήθ. denotes true virtue; and εἰλικρίνεια, such a purity and whiteness, as will bear the closest examination, like that of an article inspected in the full light of the sun.

9. ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, μὴ, &c.] On these words ἐν τῇ ἐπιστ. a considerable difference of opinion exists; some of the most eminent Commentators supposing the expression to have reference to an Epistle which St. Paul had already written to the Corinthians, but which is now no longer extant. Others, of no less note, maintain that by ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ we are to understand the Epistle he is then writing. Bp. Middleton, indeed, admits that the question can never be so decided as to preclude all future doubt; since the reference in the Article may be either to the Epistle St. Paul was writing, or to a former one; and the meaning of ἔγραψα is not less ambiguous. He justly observes that one thing alone is certain; that our common version, 'in an Epistle,' is not correct. 'Ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, then,' he argues, 'must be rendered, "in the letter," or "in my letter;" but the question is, What letter? the present, or a former one? That it may,' continues he, 'denote the letter St. Paul is writing, is beyond dispute; as appears from Rom. xvi. 22. Col. iv. 16. 1 Thess. v. 27. 2 Thess. iii. 14, and two passages of Libanius cited by Lardner. At 2 Cor. vii. 8, indeed, ἡ ἐπιστολὴ can only mean the former Epistle; but there the reference to it is evident, because the Apostle had just been speaking of its effects; which is not the case here. There seems, then, no internal evidence for a lost Epistle, unless ἔγραψα and the general import of the passage compel us to suppose one. But the first Aorist, it is well known, has often a Present signification, and even a Future one, and is not necessarily to be understood in a Past sense. [Thus it may be rendered, 'I have just written to you.'] At ver. 11 ἔγραψα again occurs, where we have, νυνὶ δὲ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, ἐάν τις, ἀδελφὸς ὀνομαζόμενος,' κ. τ. λ.

Supposing, however, the present Epistle to be the one here spoken of, the reference must surely be, not (as some make it) to what follows in this Epistle, but rather to the direction which has been given to expel the fornicator; which certainly might, from the Apostle, be regarded as equivalent to a general command not to associate with fornicators, especially as the admonition to 'purge out the old leaven,' i. e. fornicators and such like, would favour the same opinion. Lest, however, they should so far mistake the command, as to withdraw themselves entirely from the world, the Apostle explains himself, and informs them, ver. 10, that this injunction does not extend to fornicators among the heathens, for with such, in the ordinary intercourse of life, they must associate, but that it applies only to their Christian brethren.'

But, after all, it may be doubted whether the former view is not preferable, from its greater simplicity as compared with the latter, which involves no inconsiderable harshness; insomuch that Dr. Henderson thinks no construction can be more violent, or further removed from what the language used naturally suggests. 'Indeed,' continues he, 'it is difficult to conceive how such ever could have obtained, but for the influence of a covert indisposition to admit that any writing can possibly have been lost which was penned by an inspired Apostle. But what real difficulty is there in this, or any other supposable case, more than in the universally admitted fact, that a portion only of the gracious and Divine words which proceeded out of the mouth of the Saviour himself has been preserved to us?'

10, 11. Sequitur commentatio de illis superioribus epistolæ verbis μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι πόρνοις; et quomodo ea intelligi nolit uberius Apostolus declarat. (Pott.)

10. καὶ] for καίτοι, 'and yet.' Πάντως, 'in totum.' By the τοῖς πόρνοις understand, lewd persons in general. Τοῦ κόσμου here is tacitly opposed to τῆς ἐκκλησίας or τῶν ἀδελφῶν. And what is said of dissolute persons is also applied to other notoriously worldly persons (as avaricious and rapacious ones, see Luke xviii. 15), or to open heathens. On the ellipsis of ἄλλως after ἐπεὶ, see Note at Rom. iii. 6.

11. Jam addit, quomodo cohortationem illam intelligi velit. (Pott.)

— νυνὶ δέ.] The δὲ is not, as it would seem to be, adversative, nor used with a reference to time, but has a sense similar to that at Hebr. xi. 16, νυνὶ δὲ κρείττονος ὀρέγονται. Thus the meaning will be, 'But now what I really mean by writing thus, is,' &c. So that the words will be added in explanation of, not in opposition to, the ὑμῖν, μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, ἐάν τις, ἀδελφὸς ὀνομαζόμενος,

* ᾖ πόρνος, ἢ πλεονέκτης, ἢ εἰδωλολάτρης, ἢ λοίδορος, ἢ μέθυσος, ἢ ἅρπαξ· τῷ τοιούτῳ μηδὲ συνεσθίειν. [1] Τί 12
γάρ μοι καὶ τοὺς ἔξω κρίνειν; οὐχὶ τοὺς ἔσω ὑμεῖς κρίνετε; τοὺς δὲ ἔξω ὁ Θεὸς * κρινεῖ. [Καὶ] ἐξαρεῖτε τὸν πονηρὸν ἐξ 13 ὑμῶν αὐτῶν.

[1] Mark 4. 11. Col. 4. 5.

VI. ΤΟΛΜΑ τις ὑμῶν, πρᾶγμα ἔχων πρὸς τὸν ἕτερον, 1

ἔγραψα at ver. 9. Billroth attributes to the δὲ the force occasionally found in the Latin nunc vero, to signify, 'quæ cum ita sint, potius.'

11. ἀδελφὸς ὀνομαζόμενος.] This is more significant than ἀδελφὸς ὤν; intimating that he is such only by profession, and in name, not in reality, there being no spiritual affinity. Instead of the common reading ἢ before πόρνος 7 MSS. and many Versions and Fathers, the Ed. Princ., and those of Beza, Schmid, and Bengel, have ᾖ, which is approved by Wetstein and Matthæi, and edited by Griesb., Knapp, Vater, and Tittm.; and rightly; since propriety requires it, and the evidence of MSS., were they far better collated than they are, is, in matters of accentuation, of no authority; whereas that of Versions is, on any thing affecting the sense, as strong.

In enumerating the vices on account of which any Christian brother ought to be avoided, the Apostle, it may be observed, does not strictly follow the former list, but, because so much more is expected in a Christian, adds other particulars not contained therein. And those which he expresses are only a specimen, meant to include others of the same kind.

With respect to εἰδωλολάτρης, that must be accommodated to the nature of the case, and, as the best Commentators are agreed, must denote that kind of idolatry in which some, though retained in Christian societies, indulged themselves; namely, by frequenting the idol-feasts, or by so eating of the meat there provided as to offend weak brethren. Stenersen, indeed, contends at large for the usual sense of the word being retained.

— μηδὲ συνεσθίειν.] Meaning, as the best Commentators explain, 'to hold no familiar intercourse' (μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, ver. 9, of which this is an explanation); community of table being a figure expressive of intimacy; see Luke xv. 2. Gal. ii. 12. This was meant to strengthen the efficacy of excommunication, and, under certain circumstances, to supply its place.

12. Subjungitur ratio cohortationis suæ sic explicatæ. (Pott.) The connexion is this: 'I give these directions respecting your conduct towards sinning brethren; for what business is it of mine (supply at τί μοι the verb μέλει or προσήκει) to judge (i. e. assume Ecclesiastical jurisdiction over) those likewise without the pale of the Church?' Kypke compares Josephus, Ant. iv. 13, where οἱ οἰκεῖοι (the Jews) are opposed τοῖς ἔξωθεν.

The sentiment is then illustrated by an example drawn from common life; where some eminent Commentators point, οὐχί· τοὺς ἔσω ὑμεῖς κρίνετε. But this, as Pott observes, neither the context nor the use of the particle οὐχὶ will permit. Indeed, there is no good reason to abandon the common punctuation, according to which the sense will be: 'Have you not the right to judge those within the Church? Those that are out of its pale God will judge. So then [exercise ye this power, and] cast out that wicked person from among you!' The Apostle here seems to have had in mind Deut. xxiv. 7, καὶ ἐξαρεῖς τὸν πονηρὸν ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν. And hence is confirmed the καὶ of the present passage, which Griesbach, Vater, Krause, Tittman, Pott, and Scholz, have cancelled, on the authority of several MSS.

13. κρινεῖ.] This, instead of κρίνει, has been edited, from many good MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, by Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Krause, Tittman, Vater, and Pott.

— καί.] Render, 'and so;' meaning, 'so then.' For ἐξαρεῖτε, many ancient MSS. and some Fathers and early Editions have ἐξάρατε (or, as it should be written, ἐξάρατε), which has been received by Vater and Lachmann; but on weak grounds; since though Griesbach and Pott regard the reading ἐξάρατε as of equal weight with ἐξαρεῖτε, yet this is far from being the case. It may, indeed, be equally good, nay, better, Greek (though the form is of rare occurrence); but it is evidently (as also ἐξαίρετε) a mere correction of the Alexandrian School; ἐξαρεῖτε being not a Greek, but an Hellenistic, idiom, formed on the Hebraic use of the Future Indicative for the Imperative. Finally, the reading ἐξαρεῖτε is strongly confirmed by Deut. xvii. 7. xxii. 21. xxiv. 7, passages doubtless had in view by the Apostle.

VI. The Apostle now proceeds to touch on a subject perhaps suggested to him by the foregoing κρίνετε; namely, the litigious and grasping spirit which prevailed among the Corinthian Christians; and he introduces it with the abrupt earnestness of one astonished and shocked at the existence of the evil practice in question.

1. τολμᾷ τις, &c.] Render, 'sustinet aliquis,' &c. We may remark the strong force of the expression, which, as Heydenreich says, 'usurpatur de ausis impiis et nefandis, quæ quâ ratione quis sustinere, quâ fronte illa a se impetrare quis possit, mirum, et animo vix complectendum, videatur.' Πρᾶγμα is a forensic term, signifying a suit, or such a matter as would afford ground for a suit at law. Τὸν ἕτερον, 'another,' or, as Bp. Middleton takes it, 'his neighbour,' as Rom. xiii. 8, and infra x. 24. 29. The reason of the Article being used is, he says, this,—that two persons are supposed, who stand in a certain relation to each other. The truth is, that in almost every instance of this idiom (and here especially), it would be better to render, 'the other party.' Κρίνεσθαι, litigari, 'to be impleaded.' Τῶν ἀδίκων is for τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, equivalent to τῶν ἀπίστων, τῶν ἔξω at ver. 6, the Gentiles, as

2 κρίνεσθαι ἐπὶ τῶν ἀδίκων, καὶ οὐχὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἁγίων; [a] Οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι οἱ ἅγιοι τὸν κόσμον κρινοῦσι; καὶ εἰ ἐν ὑμῖν 3 κρίνεται ὁ κόσμος, ἀνάξιοί ἐστε κριτηρίων ἐλαχίστων; [b] οὐκ a Dan. 7. 22. Matt. 19. 28. Rev. 2. 26.

b 2 Pet. 2. 4. Jude v. 6.

opposed to οἱ δίκαιοι, or ἅγιοι. So Olshausen observes, 'the expression is not meant to convey any individual stigma on the heathen magistrates, as though absolutely unjust judges, but only to denote their common character as wanting the righteousness evangelical.' In καὶ οὐχὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἁγίων there is, as Kypke observes, an emphasis; the argument being, he says, drawn from the quality of the judges, which is such as to forbid you to expect justice at their hands.

Recent Commentators are of opinion 'that as the Jews had permission from the Romans to hold courts for the decision of suits at law, one among another, so this privilege had been granted to the Christians, especially the Jewish Christians; but that some Corinthian believers, despising the Christian Judges, had recourse to the Heathen ones, from some false notions respecting Christian liberty, and a disinclination to assimilate themselves with Jews.' But besides that there is no proof of the existence of such courts as held by the Jews, it is plain that by τῶν ἁγίων are here meant, not Christian Judges authorized to finally decide suits, but private arbitrators, by whose decision they were not obliged to abide, and often did not abide, but brought their suits before the Roman Judges. In after-times, however, it appears from the Const. Apost. C. 46, 47 (where there is much matter illustrative of this passage), that there were regular trials, in courts composed of the presbyters and deacons.

2. οὐκ οἴδατε.] For this several ancient MSS. and some Versions and Fathers have ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε, which has been edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz. I have not ventured to follow their example, because the external evidence for the reading is not great, and the internal quite against it, since we can far better account for the insertion of the word (namely, from ver. 9) than for its rejection.

— οἱ ἅγιοι τὸν κόσμον κρινοῦσι;] Of the various interpretations that have been proposed of this obscure passage, the principal ones may be distributed into two classes: 1. that of those who suppose that κρίνειν (which is generally admitted to refer to some privilege and honour) designates a privilege to be enjoyed by Christians, or at least some of them, on earth, and in this life; either then, or to be bestowed afterwards. 2. That of those who understand by it a privilege to be enjoyed in a future state, and at the day of judgment. Now, in order to arrive at the true sense, in the interpretation of any passage confessedly obscure, it is proper to keep close to the literal import of the terms used, neither straining the meaning of any, nor explaining it away by undue limitations. And, above all, we must admit no interpretation that is not agreeable to the context, and does not accord with the scope of the argument. Now, if the various interpretations above mentioned be tried by this test, they must nearly all of them be rejected. As, for instance, those which are founded on a limitation of the sense of οἱ ἅγιοι, so as to designate Christian teachers, or magistrates; whereas it must denote Christians at large, meaning, of course, true Christians, and those accepted in Christ. The same remark applies to the confining of the privilege, or honour, to this life; whereas, from the context, it must be meant of another world. Again, as judging is the subject of the context, no interpretation of κρίνειν must be admitted that is inconsistent therewith, or is unsuitable to the scope of the argument carrying on, which is to show the fitness of private persons (if they correspond to the title of οἱ ἅγιοι) to act as arbitrators, in order to settle disputes between their fellow Christians. Now, if tried by this test, that interpretation must be rejected which has been adopted by most of the Foreign Commentators for the last century, who suppose the sense to be, 'Christians can rightly judge of heathens,' i. e. perceive their errors in things pertaining to religion. Moreover, no interpretation of κριν. τὸν κόσμον must be admitted, that is inconsistent with κριν. ἀγγέλους. Now, this axiom is fatal to the interpretation of Whitby and others, who suppose the sense of κριν. τὸν κόσμον to be, 'they shall judge and condemn the world,' i. e. by the faith preached for a testimony unto them; as did Noah. Far more attention is due to the interpretation of the ancient Expositors almost universally, and some few modern ones, by which, κρινοῦσι being taken for κατακρινοῦσι, the sense is supposed to be, that 'the accepted servants of Christ shall condemn both men and angels, by comparison, i. e. shall place them in a worse light, and increase their condemnation;' see Matt. xii. 29. 41, seqq. But, though this has been ably maintained by Chrysostom and others, it would seem to be untenable, as being by no means agreeable to the scope of the context, and the course of argument. Upon the whole, there is, after all, no interpretation that involves less of difficulty than the common one, supported by some Latin Fathers, and, of modern Divines, by Luther, Calvin, Erasmus, Beza, Casaubon, Crellius, Estius, Wolf, Bp. Taylor, Doddridge, Pearce, Newcome, Scott, Billroth, and others, by which it is supposed that the faithful servants of God, after being accepted in Christ, shall be, in a certain sense, assessores judicii, by concurrence, with Christ, and being partakers of the judgment to be held by him over wicked men and apostate angels, who are, as we learn from 2 Pet. ii. 4, and Jude 6, 'reserved unto the judgment of the last day.' We may suppose the Apostle to have here had in mind the words of Christ, Matt. xix. 28, ὑμεῖς οἱ ἀκολουθ. μοι, ἐν τῇ παλιγγενεσίᾳ— καθίσεσθε ἐπὶ δώδ. θρ. κρίνοντες, &c., where see Note. And ἐν ὑμῖν may mean, as Billroth explains, 'by means of you.' This view, I would observe, avoids the objections so formidable, if not fatal, to which the other is open, of interpreting κρίνειν strictly of judging; and, on the other hand, it is abundantly sufficient for the purpose of the Apostle's argument. In the words καὶ εἰ ἐν ὑμῖν, &c., there is, as Calvin remarks, an argumentum à minori ad majus, or rather, as Hyperius says, à majori ad minus; q. d. 'Quum Deus tanto honore dignatus est sanctos, ut constituerit (quodammodo) totius mundi (imo angelorum) judices, indignum est eos excludi a levibus judiciis, tanquam minus idoneos.'

οἴδατε ὅτι ἀγγέλους κρινοῦμεν; μήτι γε βιωτικά; βιωτικὰ 4 μὲν οὖν κριτήρια ἐὰν ἔχητε, τοὺς ἐξουθενημένους ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, τούτους καθίζετε. Πρὸς ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν λέγω. 5 οὕτως οὐκ *ἔνι ἐν ὑμῖν σοφὸς οὐδὲ εἷς, ὃς δυνήσεται διακρῖναι ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ; ἀλλὰ ἀδελφὸς μετὰ 6 ἀδελφοῦ κρίνεται, καὶ τοῦτο ἐπὶ ἀπίστων; c Ἤδη μὲν οὖν 7 ὅλως ἥττημα [ἐν] ὑμῖν ἐστιν, ὅτι κρίματα ἔχετε μεθ᾽ ἑαυ-τῶν. Διατί οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἀδικεῖσθε; διατί οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἀπο-c Matt. 5. 39. Rom. 12. 17, 19. 1 Thess. 4. 6. & 5. 15. Prov. 20. 22.

In ἀνάξιοί ἐστε κριτηρίων ἐλαχίστων there is an elliptical mode of expression to signify, 'unworthy of being entrusted with the exercise of judgment on matters of the smallest moment,' things of this life only (βιωτικὰ) as compared with those of a future state. By κριτήρια is meant, as Grotius points out, matters for judges, causes.

3. μήτι γε] 'much more then.' Supply, from the preceding, κρινοῦμεν.

4. βιωτικὰ μὲν—καθίζετε.] Some eminent Commentators place a mark of interrogation after καθίζετε, which they take as an Indicative, in the sense: 'If, then, you have controversies about worldly affairs, do you set them to judge who are the least esteemed in the Church, i. e. heathen magistrates?' This, however, is, as I have shown, liable to serious objections. Indeed, there is no reason to abandon the common interpretation, by which καθίζετε is considered as an Imperative. After καθίζετε supply κριτὰς, which is expressed in Lucian, Tox. 62, οὐ γὰρ ἐκάθισα μέν τινα δικαστὴν τοῦ λόγου. Τοὺς ἐξουθ. is for τοὺς καὶ ἐξουθ., 'even those in least esteem, [rather than heathen judges;]' i. e. 'if ye have not wise or prudent men, or if they be otherwise occupied.' Here is intended an indirect censure of the vain glory of the chief persons. The word τούτους is by no means pleonastic; but rather serves to strengthen the sense. Καθίζειν is a term properly used of judges; but it is also applicable to arbitrators.

5. πρὸς ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν λέγω.] Meaning, 'What I have said may serve to shame you (comp. iv. 14); namely, as proceeding on the supposition that there is no person of judgment among you to decide your controversies.'

— οὕτως οὐκ ἔνι, &c.] This use of οὕτω, as of the Latin itane, imports wonder mixed with censure; q. d. 'Is it really so?' For ἔστι many MSS. and Fathers, and all the early Editions except the Erasmian, have ἔνι (for ἔνεστι), which is edited by Bengel, Wetst., Matthæi, Griesb., Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; and rightly. Ἔνι for ἔνεστι is found both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, and even where ἐν follows. Σοφὸς is to be understood of judgment or knowledge in the business of common life; as σοφίας at Acts vi. 3, where see Note. In the repetition at οὐκ οὐδὲ εἷς, and even in the dialysis, there is much force; q. d. 'Are none of your boasted teachers wise enough, none of your eloquent preachers acute enough, to decide a petty case of common equity between Christian brethren?' With allusion, perhaps, to the μεσιταὶ or διαιτηταὶ, private arbitrators chosen (as αἱρετοὶ) by two parties disagreeing upon any claim, in order to settle the matter between them. On which see Mitchell on Aristoph. Vesp. p. 241. At διακρῖναι supply τὰ διαφέροντα, expressed in a passage of Dio Cass. p. 34. Ed. Reim.

— τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ.] At the use of the singular here many have stumbled, and would read, from some MSS., ἀδελφῶν; but most uncritically, and, indeed, unnecessarily; since we may very well (with Storr, Heydenreich, and Winer) regard this as a singular used collectively; see Gen. iii. 8. Or rather, with Pott, consider it as a formula, contracted, by long use, from ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ καὶ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ, 'between his brother and his brother,' i. e. between one brother and another.

6. We have here a repetition of the reprehension at ver. 1, with a yet stronger animadversion on their litigious spirit; q. d. 'But ye are not content with arbitration, but go to law one with another, and even carry your causes before heathen judges.'

— κρίνεται] 'is impleaded,' has a suit.

7. Waving the censure of their carrying their complaint before the heathen courts, the Apostle now, at ver. 7, keeping to the reproof of their litigiousness commenced at ver. 6, and at ver. 8 proceeds to animadvert on the grasping spirit which prevailed among them. (Pott.)

— ἤδη μὲν οὖν.] This formula has the force of conclusion; the expression being (as Krause says) one used in a sentence where something less is mentioned, by way of setting in a stronger point of view something greater, as collected from it. Render, 'Now then.' Ὅλως, 'omnino, assuredly.' See Note supra v. 1.

— ἥττημα ἐν ὑμῖν ἐ.] Ἥττημα properly signifies an inferiority; but is here put figuratively for ἐλάττωμα or ὑστέρημα, 'a defect or fault, a coming short.' The ἐν is not found in very many MSS. (chiefly ancient ones) and some Versions and Fathers, and the early Editions. Κρίματα, for κριτήρια, 'suits at law.'

— διατί οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἀδικεῖσθε; &c.] In ἀδικεῖσθε and ἀποστερεῖσθε (of which the former is supposed to denote personal or general injury, and the latter injury in one's property) there is an idiom (by no means frequent) to signify 'bear to be injured, or deprived of one's own;' on which see Glass. Phil. Sac. and Win. Gr. Gr. § 32. 3. A Classical writer would have expressed the sense by οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἑκόντες ἀδικεῖσθε; So Thucyd. iii. 47. 5, ξυμφορώτερον ἡγοῦμαι— ἑκόντας ἡμᾶς ἀδικηθῆναι, ἢ δικαίους, οὓς μὴ δεῖ, διαφθεῖραι. So Aristotle, Eth. v. 10, describes the mild and gentle person as being μὴ ἀκριβοδίκαιος ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον· ἀλλὰ ἐλαττωτικὸς, καίπερ ἔχων νόμον βοηθόν. To the present purpose is a fine remark of Menander, cited by Stephens: Οὗτος κράτιστός ἐστ᾽ ἀνὴρ,

8 στερεῖσθε; Ἀλλὰ ὑμεῖς ἀδικεῖτε καὶ ἀποστερεῖτε, καὶ ταῦτα 9 ἀδελφούς. [d] Ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι ἄδικοι βασιλείαν Θεοῦ οὐ κληρονομήσουσι; Μὴ πλανᾶσθε· οὔτε πόρνοι, οὔτε εἰδω-λολάτραι, οὔτε μοιχοί, οὔτε μαλακοί, οὔτε ἀρσενοκοῖται, 10 οὔτε κλέπται, οὔτε πλεονέκται, οὔτε μέθυσοι, οὐ λοίδοροι, 11 οὐχ ἅρπαγες, βασιλείαν Θεοῦ οὐ κληρονομήσουσι. [e] Καὶ ταῦτά τινες ἦτε. ἀλλὰ ἀπελούσασθε, ἀλλὰ ἡγιάσθητε, ἀλλ' ἐδικαιώθητε, ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ, καὶ ἐν τῷ Πνεύματι τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν.

d Gal. 5. 21. Eph. 5. 5. Rev. 22. 15.

e Eph. 2. 1, 2, 3. Tit. 3. 3. Heb. 10. 22.

ὦ Γωργία, Ὅστις ἀδικεῖσθαι πλεῖστ' ἐπίσταται βροτῶν.

8. We have here an amplification followed by a circumstance serving to aggravate the offence. (Calvin.)

— ἀλλὰ] 'whereas.' Καὶ ταῦτα for καὶ τοῦτο, et quidem: a rare idiom; but of which Rosenmuller has adduced one example from Josephus, and Rinck some few from Plato.

9. Against the unholy dispositions above-mentioned (litigiousness and a grasping spirit) they are now warned by a reference to the punishment denounced against these and all other unchristian dispositions, such as they had before been given up to, but now, under the Gospel, professed to renounce.

— ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε, &c.] The force of the declaration is increased by its being expressed by the formula οὐκ οἴδατε; q. d. 'I need hardly tell you what you must know.' Ἄδικοι for οἱ ἄδικοι, the ἀδικοῦντες just mentioned.

'This admonition,' observes Olshausen, 'is rendered highly impressive by reference to the character of the kingdom of God, which, as a kingdom of purity, excludes from it all that is impure; and at the same time by the serious consideration, that having been purified from their evil deeds by the blood of Christ, the giving themselves up to the dominion of sin would make them doubly guilty.'

— μὴ πλανᾶσθε· οὔτε πόρνοι, &c.] The Apostle now proceeds to enumerate, in the way of example, all such vices (including those he has been censuring) as exclude from salvation. This he introduces with the impressive words μὴ πλανᾶσθε, formed on those of Luke xxi. 8, βλέπετε μὴ πλανηθῆτε, and found also at 1 Cor. xv. 33. Gal. vi. 7, and sometimes in the Classical writers. So Philemon, cited by Krause: Μηδὲν πλανηθῇς· ἔσται κἀν Ἅιδου κρίσις, Ἥνπερ ποιήσει Θεὸς, ὁ πάντων δεσπότης. The sense, then, intended is, 'Deceive not yourselves, but be well assured that,' &c.

10. μέθυσοι.] Drunkards are thus classed among those guilty of greater crimes, since vices go in clusters, and it is very rare to find drunkenness unattended with one or more of the other vices, especially the sins of uncleanness, and also brawling and brutality.

— ἅρπαγες.] This is a stronger term than πλεονέκται (though a weaker one than κλέπται); the latter denoting those who defraud others by deceit, the former those who injure them by extortion. So Thucyd. iv. 86, ἀπάτῃ εὐπρεπὲς πλεονεκτῆσαί τινα, and i. 77, where πλεονεκτεῖσθαι signifies to be over-reached, as opposed to καταναγκάζεσθαι, to be deprived of any thing by compulsion.

11. καὶ ταῦτα.] To account for the neuter here, some supply γένη, adducing examples of such a use from the Classical writers. We may, however, with Billroth, simply suppose that the words ταῦτα τινὲς are to be taken together, as equivalent to τοιοῦτοι, analogously to the Latin id genus homines, the grammatical harshness of using ταῦτα for persons being softened by the addition of τινές. The sense will then be, that they, generally speaking, had belonged to the class of persons by whom such vices were practised.

— ἀλλὰ ἀπελούσασθε, ἀλλὰ ἡγιάσθητε, &c.] A sentence pregnant with meaning, and of which the scope is two-fold—to soften the pungency of the previous reproof, and to stir up their minds to profit by the benefits of the Gospel. 'The three terms ἀπελούσασθε, ἡγιάσθητε, and ἐδικαιώθητε, express (says Olshausen), by a sort of climax, the experience of Christian regeneration, and thus the passage is of a similar kind to those of Rom. v. 1, 2, and vi. 1—23; and the thrice repeated ἀλλὰ gives force to the implied admonition;' conveying, as Beza remarks, 'a solemn warning, that repentance and forgiveness, justification and sanctification, are united by an indissoluble bond.' In explaining these three terms, Commentators have gone to the two extremes, either of too nicely distinguishing the three spiritual benefits, or of, as it were, melting them into one; though, indeed, the three are so closely connected, as scarcely to be separated one from the other. In the first of the three terms there is a manifest allusion to baptism, and in the second and third, to its effects,—sanctification and regeneration, or, as one might rather have expected from what is said at i. 30, justification and sanctification; but it should seem, as Calvin supposes, that it is placed last, as presenting the weightiest sense. 'By ἀπελούσασθε (which must, agreeably to the other two terms, be taken passively,) is denoted (observes Olshausen) the negative effect of divine grace, in the forgiveness of sins, through baptism; by ἐδικ., the positive effect, the being endued with the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ.'

With respect to the next clauses, ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ and ἐν τῷ Πνεύματι τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, the first is by Hammond and others referred to ἐδικ.; but it ought rather to be referred to ἀπελούσασθε, or perhaps conjointly to both, there being, it would seem, an allusion to the form of baptism 'in the name,' &c. The second must be referred to ἡγιάσθ., and the f Infra 10. 23.

g Matt. 15. 17. Rom. 14. 17. infra vv. 15, 19, 20. 1 Thess. 4. 3.
h Acts 2. 24. Rom. 6. 5, 8. & 8. 11. 2 Cor. 4. 14.
i Eph. 4. 12, 15, 16. & 5. 30. infra 12. 27.

f Πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα συμφέρει· πάντα 12 μοι ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγὼ ἐξουσιασθήσομαι ὑπό τινος. g Τὰ 13 βρώματα τῇ κοιλίᾳ, καὶ ἡ κοιλία τοῖς βρώμασιν· ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καὶ ταύτην καὶ ταῦτα καταργήσει. τὸ δὲ σῶμα οὐ τῇ πορνείᾳ, ἀλλὰ τῷ Κυρίῳ, καὶ ὁ Κύριος τῷ σώματι· h ὁ δὲ Θεὸς 14
καὶ τὸν Κύριον ἤγειρε, καὶ * ἡμᾶς ἐξεγερεῖ διὰ τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ. i Οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν μέλη Χριστοῦ 15 words may be rendered, 'by the Holy Spirit proceeding from, and imparted by, God.' So at 1 Cor. vii. 40 we have simply Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ. There is, however, as Whitby well points out, an Hyperbaton; the natural order being, 'ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and are sanctified by the Spirit of our God.' Certainly there is, as Calvin shows, a just distinction to be made between the offices of Christ and of the Holy Spirit. And thus, as the Apostle commences with the first attained grace, so he concludes with the perfective energy of the Holy Spirit.

12. πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν, &c.] The best Commentators are agreed that these words are supposed (by an ellipsis of ἀλλ' ἐρεῖς μοι) to be the words of an objector, and such as were probably often used by those who wished to indulge in sensuality, and eating meats offered to idols, and who sought to justify it under the pretence of Christian liberty. By 'all things' are meant all things which the Apostle has here in view; i. e. all kinds of food. To this the answer is, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα συμφέρει, where the ἀλλὰ has both a concessory and an exceptive force; q. d. 'True: all things are given us to enjoy; but οὐ πάντα συμφέρει, all meats are not expedient to be eaten, because they may throw a stumbling-block in the way of others.' Meaning, as Billroth says, that 'even in matters indifferent, Christian liberty must not be pleaded, much less in matters which are in themselves unlawful and improper.'

The Apostle then repeats the objection, in order to answer it more effectually. In the words of the answer the Commentators suppose a paronomasia with ἔξεστι; q. d. 'I have power over all meats, but none of them shall have power over me,' i. e. so as to make me a slave to my appetites. 'Εγὼ is adapted to the μοι of the supposed opponent, and (by an idiom peculiar to the popular style) the Future is to be rendered must.

13. τὰ βρώματα—βρώμασιν] scil. ἐστι, i. e. ἀνήκει, 'are meant for.' Here the foregoing sentiment is further illustrated by examples, and an objection anticipated; q. d. 'All aliments are meant for the sustenance of the body, and the body is fitted to the reception and digestion of them.' Or rather it may be regarded, with some, as another argument of the opponent, containing an excuse for indulgence in sensuality. The words following, τὸ δὲ σῶμα, &c. contain the answer of St. Paul, in which the words τὸ δὲ σῶμα—σώματι are meant to reply to τὰ βρώματα—βρώμασι, and ὁ δὲ Θεὸς—αὐτοῦ to ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καταργήσει. It is true that, in the first case, there seems no direct answer; but, in fact, the argument needed none, as it would be like arguing from the use to the abuse of any thing. The Apostle, therefore, it would seem, waves this, and replies to the apology in the peculiar case for which it was, no doubt, often pleaded, namely, fornication; and which may have been meant by the opponent to be implied in what was said. The answer, then, of the Apostle is this: 'But [be that case of the body and meats as it may,] it will not apply to natural appetites of another kind; for the body was not made for fornication,' (i. e. There exists no necessity for satisfying the natural appetites in this case, as in that of food: the body was made to require food for its existence, but the gratifying the other appetites is not necessary to existence,) but τῷ Κυρίῳ, i. e. for his service, which implies obedience to his will. 'Now the will of God (says the Apostle elsewhere) is your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication.' 'Yield not your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin; but yield yourselves unto God—and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God.' Rom. vi. 13.

The words καὶ ὁ Κύριος τῷ σώματι admit of more than one sense. Most modern Commentators explain τῷ σώματι 'for raising and glorifying the body;' but far preferable to so harsh an interpretation is that of the Fathers and some modern Commentators, which supposes the sense to be that the body is dedicated to the service of Christ as its proprietor.

14. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς—δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ.] Here the Apostle replies to the second argument of the opponent; namely, ὁ δὲ Θεὸς—καταργήσει. It is well observed by Heydenreich, that the sentence would have been more exact in inverse order, and with particles of comparison, thus: ὁ δὲ Θεὸς ἐξεγερεῖ ἡμᾶς διὰ τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ, καθὼς καὶ τὸν Κύριον ἤγειρε. Pott construes the words thus: 'Ο δὲ Θεὸς καὶ (ὡς) τὸν Κύριον ἤγειρε καὶ (οὕτω καὶ) ἡμᾶς (τὰ σώματα ἡμῶν) ἐξεγερεῖ διὰ τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ. The argument is: 'How, then, can you maintain that our body is utterly to perish, and therefore that while we live, we may do as we please? Our bodies are not destined to come to nought, but to rise to immortality,—an immortality of glory and felicity: but lust renders them unfit for the resurrection to life and bliss with Christ. See Phil. iii. 21, and John v. 29. Who, then, will suppose impure pleasures a thing indifferent, when they, for a transitory delight, plunge a man into an eternity of woe?' Ἤγειρε and ἐξεγερεῖ contain an adjunct notion of raising up to glory and felicity. For ἡμᾶς the common reading is ὑμᾶς. But that is justly regarded by Wetstein as a typographical error of the 2d Edit. of Beza and the Elzevir Edit.

15. The Apostle now reverts to the foregoing subject, and uses another and still more powerful argument against fornication; namely, that Chris-ἐστιν; Ἄρας οὖν τὰ μέλη τοῦ Χριστοῦ ποιήσω πόρνης μέλη; 16 Μὴ γένοιτο! [k] Ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι ὁ κολλώμενος τῇ πόρνῃ ἓν σῶμά ἐστιν; Ἔσονται γάρ, φησιν, οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα 17,18 μίαν· [l] ὁ δὲ κολλώμενος τῷ Κυρίῳ ἓν πνεῦμά ἐστι. Φεύ-γετε τὴν πορνείαν! Πᾶν ἁμάρτημα, ὃ ἐὰν ποιήσῃ ἄνθρωπος, ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματός ἐστιν· ὁ δὲ πορνεύων εἰς τὸ ἴδιον 19 σῶμα ἁμαρτάνει. [m] Ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε, ὅτι τὸ σῶμα ὑμῶν ναὸς τοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν ἁγίου Πνεύματός ἐστιν, οὗ ἔχετε ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, 20 καὶ οὐκ ἐστὲ ἑαυτῶν; [n] ἠγοράσθητε γὰρ τιμῆς· δοξάσατε δὴ τὸν Θεὸν ἐν τῷ σώματι ὑμῶν, [καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι ὑμῶν, ἅτινά ἐστι τοῦ Θεοῦ.]

k Gen. 2. 24. Matt. 19. 5. Eph. 5. 31.
l John 17. 21, 22, 23. Eph. 4. 4. & 5. 30. m Supra 3. 16. 2 Cor. 6. 16. Eph. 2. 21. Heb. 3. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 5.
n Infra 7. 23. Gal. 3. 13. Heb. 9. 12. 1 Pet. 1. 18. 2 Pet. 2. 1.

tians are members of Christ's mystical body. 'Here (observes Bp. Warburton, Serm. ix. 356) St. Paul, in order to expose the enormity of fornication amongst Christians, considers every man as a member of Christ's spiritual body, and every man living in fornication as the member of a harlot; a profanation which renders the criminal unworthy of the spiritual union with Christ. But then, to make the Corinthians still more sensible of this profanation, he sets before them the closeness of that spiritual union, which, in his accustomed manner, he enforces by analogy to the thing profaning; just as, in another place of this Epistle, he exposes the profanation of the Lord's supper when joined to an idol-feast, by a comparison between what those two rites had, or were supposed to have, in common. But the union of concubinage not so well suiting his purpose as that of marriage, he employs the latter to enforce the enormity of the former, and, without stopping to change the terms, continues the use of the word harlot, to predicate of her, what is strictly true only of a wife, namely, that 'he which is joined to her is one body.'

— τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν.] Meaning, 'yourselves, both body and soul.' At μέλη Χριστοῦ supply σώματος, the members of Christ's mystical body, namely, the Church, of which he is head, and the rest are members inserted by baptism, and dedicated to his service in the sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

— ἄρας οὖν τὰ μέλη, &c.] Ἄιρας is not (as Krause regards it) pleonastic, but we have here two clauses blended into one. Prof. Scholefield, indeed, regarding this use of ἄρας as uncouth, would (with Valcknaer) read, from several MSS. ἄρα. But the MSS. are of little value; and it is far more likely that an uncouth reading should be altered into an easy one, from conjecture, or pass into it by accident (since ἄρα οὖν often occurs in the New Test.), than that so plain a reading as ἄρα should inadvertently be changed into the difficult one ἄρας. Besides, not to mention that the reading ἄρας has been proved by Matthæi to be as ancient as the time of Origen, the proposed change enervates the vigour of the language of dissuasion resorted to by the Apostle. Here, then, St. Paul employs the same comparison as at iii. 16; and, in calling the body the temple of the Holy Ghost, he uses the same image as Philo-Judæus, who, in speaking of the first man, thus describes his body: οἶκος γάρ τις, ἢ νεὼς ἱερὸς ἐτεκταίνετο ψυχῆς λογικῆς.

16, 17. We have here a further illustration of the preceding.

16. ἓν σῶμά ἐστιν.] Supply σὺν αὐτῇ, and at φησιν, ἡ γραφή. Comp. John iii. 6.

17. ἓν πνεῦμα] scil. σὺν αὐτῷ, for ἕν ἐστι σὺν αὐτῷ κατὰ τὸ πνεῦμα, 'is one heart and soul with him' (see Acts iv. 32), as intimate friends are said to be ψυχὴ μία. Comp. 1 John iii. 24.

18. ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματος.] This must be understood comparatè (being expressed popularly and hyperbolically), especially if εἰς τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα ἁμαρτ. be understood, as it is done by many recent Commentators, of injuring the body by wasting its health and strength. An argument, however, which would be more suitable to a heathen moralist, than to the great Apostle; and which, in fact, is adduced, in reference to intemperance of every kind, by Socrates ap. Xen. Mem. i. 5. 3. See also Ecclus. xix. 2, 3. We may suppose that while meaning to include the idea of injuring (and so the expression sinning against is used in a Rabbinical writer cited by Schoettgen on Luke x. 30), the Apostle chiefly intended that of disgracing and polluting the body, by using it for purposes not intended by its Maker, rendering the person thereby unfit for a spiritual union with Christ (v. 18), and profaning what was meant to be dedicated, like a temple, to holy uses, as the Apostle more particularly mentions in the next verse.

19. τὸ σῶμα ὑμῶν] for ὑμεῖς, though σῶμα is used for the argument's sake. Τοῦ, scil. ὄντος. Οὗ is put for ὅ, by grammatical attraction. Compare Rom. xiv. 7, 8.

— οὐκ ἐστὲ ἑαυτῶν.] A popular mode of expression, to signify, 'ye are not at your own disposal, but Christ's.' The same, indeed, occurs in Demosth. Olynth., p. 26. l. 27. Reisk., δεῖ δὴ ταῦτα ἐπανέντας καὶ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν γενομένους, &c. Thus, then, it is meant, that to abuse the body is to abuse what is not their own.

20. ἠγοράσθητε τιμῆς] 'ye have been bought off, or redeemed.' So the Latin pretio emere, in which the word pretio is by the Scholiasts supposed to be emphatical for pretio magno. The meaning is: 'Ye are bound to his service, as a bought slave is to that of his purchaser, or him who has purchased his redemption.' The word τιμῆς is emphatical. So the Vulgate expresses the sense by 'pretio magno.'

— δοξάσατε δή, &c.] 'make your body, then, subservient to the glory of God,' i. e. 'consecrate

VII. ΠΕΡΙ δὲ ὧν ἐγράψατέ μοι, καλὸν ἀνθρώπῳ 1 γυναικὸς μὴ ἅπτεσθαι· διὰ δὲ τὰς πορνείας ἕκαστος τὴν ἑαυ- 2 a 1 Pet. 3. 7. τοῦ γυναῖκα ἐχέτω, καὶ ἑκάστη τὸν ἴδιον ἄνδρα ἐχέτω. [a] Τῇ 3 γυναικὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ τὴν ὀφειλομένην εὔνοιαν ἀποδιδότω· ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ἡ γυνὴ τῷ ἀνδρί. Ἡ γυνὴ τοῦ ἰδίου σώματος οὐκ 4 ἐξουσιάζει, ἀλλ' ὁ ἀνήρ· ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ τοῦ ἰδίου b Joel 2. 16. σώματος οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει, ἀλλ' ἡ γυνή. [b] Μὴ ἀποστερεῖτε 5 ἀλλήλους, εἰ μή τι ἂν ἐκ συμφώνου πρὸς καιρὸν, ἵνα σχολάζητε τῇ [νηστείᾳ καὶ τῇ] προσευχῇ· καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ both body and soul to his service.' Ἅτινά ἐστι τοῦ Θεοῦ, '[both of] which are God's, viz. by right of creation, and still more of redemption.'

The words καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι—Θεοῦ, not found in several MSS. of the Western recension, the Vulgate, Coptic, and Æthiopic Versions, and several Fathers, are cancelled by Griesbach, Krause, Pott, and Scholz, but defended by Matthæi, who has shown that the evidence of the Fathers is contradictory, and not of any great weight. It must, however, be confessed that, though they seem almost necessary to complete the sense, and correspond to vv. 16, 17, 19, yet they might have been added for that reason.

VII. Having concluded the reprehensory portion of the Epistle, the Apostle now proceeds to answer certain questions, which, it seems, had been proposed by the Corinthians, on matrimony and other kindred subjects. Whether that concerning the expediency and necessity of matrimony, and the validity of a Christian's marriage with a Pagan, proceeded from the Jewish Christians or from the Gentile converts, the Commentators are not agreed. The former seems to be the most probable. It may, however, be safest to suppose that the question was propounded by some persons of both the Jewish and Gentile converts. These several questions, then, the Apostle answers, v. 1—16, and after subjoining some general counsel respecting other conditions of life, vv. 17—20, he adds his Apostolical counsel, both to the unmarried (vv. 25—38) and to widows, vv. 39, 40.

1. καλὸν ἀνθρώπῳ, &c.] The best Commentators are agreed that, from the context, καλὸν cannot have the sense pulchrum, or honestum, but must mean utile, σύμφορον, i. e. (by a common idiom) expedient, namely, for the reason mentioned at v. 32, for the avoiding of care and anxiety. It is obvious that this is not an authoritative decision, but a friendly counsel, and that not treating the question generally, but with reference to those times.

2. διὰ δὲ τὰς πορνείας] 'on account of fornications;' meaning, lest you should be led to commit them: a sense of διὰ found also at Gal. ii. 4. The plural here may be referred to the various kinds of lasciviousness mentioned supra vi. 9, 10, or to the prevalence of lewdness in the Christian Church which might thus arise.

— ἕκαστος τὴν ἑαυτοῦ, &c.] The words ἑαυτοῦ and ἴδιον are by recent Commentators generally considered as pleonastic; but they serve to denote property, which involves the duty of reciprocal fidelity, and, by implication, they forbid both polygamy and concubinage. This, of course, is not to be regarded as a permission to marry, for that was unnecessary; but as an admonition meant for those who could not lead a life of virtuous celibacy.

3. τὴν ὀφειλομένην εὔνοιαν.] Not a few of the most ancient MSS., several Versions, and some Fathers have ὀφειλήν· which was preferred by Grotius, Mill, and Bengel, and has been edited by Griesbach, Krause, Tittman, Pott, Heydenr., and Scholz, but, I think, on insufficient grounds. The external evidence for it is slender, and the internal not very strong; for as to the common reading being a gloss on ὀφειλὴν, that is far from being certain. Nay, considering the commonness of the expression debitum conjugale, the contrary may be nearer the truth; or rather ὀφειλὴν might be an alteration of an ordinary Greek phrase into a Classical one, though εὔνοιαν is a term sufficiently suitable, and is so used by Joseph. Ant. xvii. 3. 1, and xvi. 7, 3. vii. 12, 4, and Dio Chrys., p. 52. Finally, such an alteration might easily creep into the Vulgate and the Latin Fathers, and from thence into some Greek ones, and finally into the Western recension. Of the Greek Fathers, Chrysostom, whose authority is alleged for ὀφειλὴν, did not so read. The expression only occurs in his paraphrase, which rather confirms the suspicion of ὀφειλὴν being a mere emendation. From the commencing words of his exposition, it is plain that he read ὀφειλομένην τιμὴν, as indeed do some MSS., but evidently by a gloss on εὔνοιαν. The common reading, then, is justly retained by Wetstein, Semler, Matthæi, and Vater.

4. The words of this verse are exegetical of the former (giving a reason for the precept), and depend on ὀφειλομένην preceding.

5. The Apostle now returns to the exhortation at v. 3.

— εἰ μή τι.] Equivalent to the Hebr. אִם לֹא. At τι supply κατὰ, quodammodo. Ἐκ συμφώνου, for ἐκ τοῦ συμφώνου, or ἐκ συμφωνίας, i. e. συμψυχίας. The ἂν belongs to γένοιτο understood. Πρὸς καιρὸν contains a preceptory limitation of the Apostle, applying to both parties; though we find, from Ecclesiastical history, that it was sometimes not observed in the early Christian Church. Σχολάζειν τινὶ signifies properly to have σχολὴ, leisure, for any thing, and, from the adjunct, to give one's individual attention to it, apply to it. Thus the verb is followed by a dativus commodi, equivalent to πρὸς and an accusative. So Demosth., p. 594, 16. Reiske, ἐσχόλακεν ἑνὶ τούτῳ πάντα τὸν βίον.

The words τῇ νηστείᾳ καὶ (not found in 7

‡ συνέρχεσθε, ἵνα μὴ πειράζῃ ὑμᾶς ὁ Σατανᾶς διὰ τὴν ἀκρα-
6 σίαν ὑμῶν. [c] Τοῦτο δὲ λέγω κατὰ συγγνώμην, οὐ κατ' ἐπι- c Infra v. 12, 25.
7 ταγήν· [d] θέλω γὰρ πάντας ἀνθρώπους εἶναι ὡς καὶ ἐμαυτόν. d Matt. 19. 12.
ἀλλ' ἕκαστος ἴδιον χάρισμα ἔχει ἐκ Θεοῦ, ὃς μὲν οὕτως, ὃς δὲ οὕτως.
8 Λέγω δὲ τοῖς ἀγάμοις καὶ ταῖς χήραις, καλὸν αὐτοῖς uncial MSS. and a few others, besides several Versions and Fathers) were rejected by Mill and Bengel, and have been cancelled by Griesbach, Krause, Tittman, Vater, Pott, and Scholz, but without sufficient reason. The external evidence here is but slender, and the internal not strong, since the omission might arise from homœoteleuton; and, as Grotius, Lightfoot, and Wetstein have shown, fasting, in that age, usually accompanied a more than ordinary attention to religious duties.

— συνέρχεσθε.] The reading of MSS. and Editions here varies. The early Editions and several MSS., with some later Versions and Fathers, have συνέρχησθε, which has been edited by Scholz; but συνέρχεσθε was edited, from several MSS. and early Versions, by Beza, 5, Schmidt, and Elzevir, and thus was introduced into the textus receptus. Again, ἦτε, which is found in some ancient MSS. of the Western recension, as also in several Fathers, is preferred by Mill and Bengel, and edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Krause, Tittman, and Pott. Considering, however, the source of the reading, and the nature of the expression, we may suspect this to be an alteration of the ancient Critics, in order to remove the seeming pleonasm, which, however, occurs infra xi. 20. xiv. 23, and sometimes in the Sept., nay, even the Classical writers. The reading in question has very little countenance from MSS. or ancient Versions, and must therefore be rejected, and the truth supposed to lie between συνέρχησθε and συνέρχεσθε. The latter is supported by the most important MSS., by many Fathers, and the Greek Commentators, and is, I think, recommended by its greater fitness. Scholz, however, edits συνέρχησθε, and, just before, σχολάσητε; wrongly, I apprehend.

— μὴ πειρ.] i. e. 'may not throw you into carnal temptation.' This does not necessarily imply (as Estius, Camerarius, Pott, and Winer suppose) that the temptation would be with effect, or successful (though the word has that sense at Gal. v. 1); but there is merely denoted great danger, as at Matt. vi. 13, μὴ εἰσενέγκῃς ἡμᾶς εἰς πειρασμόν.

6. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, &c.] Commentators are not agreed whether this is to be referred to what follows, or to what precedes; or, if to what precedes, whether to what immediately precedes, ver. 5, or to that a little further off, at vv. 1, 2. The latter method is greatly preferable, and the words may be referred to μὴ ἀποστερεῖτε and καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ συνέρχεσθε at ver. 5, or to ver. 2, and then συγγνώμην may be rendered, with some ancient and several modern Interpreters, indulgence. Yet they are better referred to ver. 1. But there is no reason why the λέγω δὲ τοῦτο may not be meant to apply both to what precedes and what follows on this subject, and thus the sense will be: 'But I say what I say, or am saying.' It is not necessary to render συγγν. 'counsel' (with many eminent Commentators), but 'permission,' as in our English Versions generally. (See my Note on Thucyd. vii. 15. 3.) The Apostle means, in explanation of what he is saying on this subject, to apprize them that he is speaking of what is allowable or expedient, not what is enjoined to be done; q. d. (as Billroth explains) 'You will learn, from what I have enjoined, not what you must do, but what you may do.'

7. θέλω] for θέλοιμι, 'I could wish:' a mode of speaking belonging to the language of common life.

— εἶναι ὡς καὶ ἐμαυτόν.] Since, as Doddridge observes, 'it would be absurd to suppose the Apostle wished marriage to cease,' the expression must be taken with limitation to mean, 'have the same mastery over their appetites and passions as he had,' so as to be able to remain in virtuous celibacy, while it was by circumstances required. Thus Chrysostom and Theodoret add, ἐν ἐγκρατείᾳ. The καὶ after ὡς is said by the Commentators to be pleonastic (like ו in the Hebrew), as is often the case after nouns of similitude. In such instances, however, it always signifies either even, or too. Χάρισμα denotes the ability to remain such; called, says Chrysostom, a gift, out of modesty, as not claiming any merit from continency. Yet this and every other gift of the Spirit does not preclude the necessity of human exertion; see James i. 17, and Matt. xix. 11. In ὃς μὲν οὕτως, ὃς δὲ οὕτως, we are not, with most Commentators, to suppose the sense to be, 'One hath this gift, another hath it not;' for that would be inconsistent with the ἔχει χάρισμα just before. The words (as Pott observes) refer to the different degrees in which the χάρισμα is supposed to be granted.

8. The Apostle now briefly recapitulates what has been before said.

— τοῖς ἀγάμοις.] Some doubt has been entertained as to the exact sense here. The expression ἄγαμος properly signifies unmarried, without determining whether the person, to whom it is applied, has ever been married. And such is commonly supposed to be its use here, to denote both bachelors and widowers. But the best Commentators, from Grotius to Heydenreich, are of opinion that it denotes those who have no longer a wife; i. e. widowers; observing that, as the usus loquendi did not permit the Apostle to write χήροις, so he employed the general term in a special application. The case of those who have never married is, say they, entered upon at ver. 25. And as to the opposition alleged between οἱ ἄγαμοι and οἱ γεγαμηκότες at verse 10, and ὁ ἄγαμος and ὁ γαμήσας at vv. 32, 33, the connexion, they observe, is there different. At μείνωσιν sub. ἐγκρατευόμενοι from ἐγκρατεύονται just after.

e 1 Tim. 5. 14.
ἐστιν ἐὰν μείνωσιν ὡς κἀγώ. [e] εἰ δὲ οὐκ ἐγκρατεύονται, 9 γαμησάτωσαν· κρεῖσσον γάρ [ἐστι] γαμῆσαι ἢ πυροῦσθαι.
f Mal. 2. 14, 16. Matt. 5. 32. & 19. 6, 9. Mark 10. 11, 12.
[f] Τοῖς δὲ γεγαμηκόσι παραγγέλλω οὐκ ἐγὼ, ἀλλ' ὁ Κύριος, 10 γυναῖκα ἀπὸ ἀνδρὸς μὴ χωρισθῆναι· (ἐὰν δὲ καὶ χωρισθῇ, 11 μενέτω ἄγαμος, ἢ τῷ ἀνδρὶ καταλλαγήτω·) καὶ ἄνδρα γυναῖκα μὴ ἀφιέναι. Τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς ἐγὼ λέγω, οὐχ ὁ 12 Κύριος· εἴ τις ἀδελφὸς γυναῖκα ἔχει ἄπιστον, καὶ αὐτὴ συνευδοκεῖ οἰκεῖν μετ' αὐτοῦ, μὴ ἀφιέτω αὐτήν· καὶ γυνὴ ἥτις 13 ἔχει ἄνδρα ἄπιστον, καὶ αὐτὸς συνευδοκεῖ οἰκεῖν μετ' αὐτῆς, g Mal. 2. 15.
μὴ ἀφιέτω αὐτόν. [g] ἡγίασται γὰρ ὁ ἀνὴρ ὁ ἄπιστος ἐν τῇ 14

9. εἰ δὲ οὐκ ἐγκρ.] 'if they have not the power to practise continence.'

10, 11. The Apostle now answers their inquiries as to the preservation of the marriage bond among Christians.

10. παραγγέλλω—Κύριος.] The sense is commonly supposed to be, 'It is not so much I who command, as the Lord,' or, 'not only I command, but the Lord also.' It does not seem, however, that the Apostle meant even to include himself, when he used the strong term παραγγέλλω. The positive command of the Lord could require no reinforcement from the Apostle; and to his Master therefore (in whose code of morality the preservation of the marriage bond formed a new and striking feature, in strong contrast with the levity of divorce then practised under the sanction of the Law) the Apostle wholly refers this positive command, founded on Matt. v. 32; compare xix. 3—10. Or we may suppose that the words οὐκ ἐγὼ, ἀλλ' ὁ Κύριος are added, per epanorthosin, to show that he here speaks κατ' ἐπιταγήν: and therefore the command is not his own, but the Lord's. So Billroth regards it as a correction of the first position in παραγγέλλω; q. d. 'not of my own wisdom, but as declaring the command of the Lord.' So on the other hand, at ver. 12, he says, ἐγὼ λέγω, οὐχ ὁ Κύριος.

— μὴ χωρισθῆναι.] This is closely connected with ἄνδρα γυναῖκα μὴ ἀφιέναι at ver. 11; for the best Commentators are agreed that the words ἐὰν δὲ—καταλλαγήτω are parenthetical. The καὶ there is emphatic, meaning, 'but if she must even separate herself.' With respect to the two terms here, ἀφιέναι and χωρισθῆναι, it may be observed, that a husband when divorcing his wife was said ἐκβάλλειν, or, by a milder term, ἀποπέμπειν, or, by the mildest, ἀφιέναι. The first term is most used in the Old Test. as Gen. xxi. 10. Wisd. vii. 27. On the contrary, a wife who, from whatever cause, left her husband, was said ἀπολείπειν, or χωρίζεσθαι, 'to separate herself from him;' for the wife could not send away the husband, but only leave the house. Καταλλάττεσθαι and διαλλ. are by the best writers used of reconciliation of every kind, both public and private; see Note on Rom. v. 10. From the use of καταλλ. and the air of the context, it is plain that the Apostle is not here speaking of formal divorces, effected by law, but of separations arising from misunderstandings or otherwise.

12. Here St. Paul answers to the third point on which he had been consulted; namely, whether the marriage of a Christian and a non-Christian ought to be dissolved. This the Apostle decides in the negative.

— τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς] scil. γεγαμηκόσι, 'the rest [of married persons].' Ἐγὼ λέγω, οὐχ ὁ Κύριος. Many eminent Commentators consider the words as equivalent to, 'This is only my private opinion;' 'this is not founded upon any revelation from Christ, and forms no part of his doctrine delivered personally while he was on earth.' A mode of explanation, however, open to strong objections; see Heydenreich. Certainly ἐγὼ λέγω must not be limited to private opinion as if apart from inspiration; for the Apostle speaks with authority, as if in the full persuasion and consciousness of inspiration, especially when he concludes his decision (ver. 17) with καὶ οὕτως ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις πάσαις διατάσσομαι. Our Lord, indeed, could not, without anticipating the designs of the Deity, touch on this question; but left it, together with many others, to be decided by the Apostles, under the guidance of that Holy Spirit, who was to lead them into all truth, as the Apostle was fully conscious of when declaring at ii. 16, ἡμεῖς δὲ νοῦν Χριστοῦ ἔχομεν.

14. The Apostle now gives a reason why diversity of religion could not authorize separation; and that by an anticipation of the objection, 'Shall I not be polluted by such close union with a profane person?' To which the answer is: 'No; the believing wife is not polluted by the unbelieving husband, but rather the unbelieving party is sanctified by the believing.' (Krause and Crellius.)

— ἡγίασται ὁ ἀνὴρ ὁ ἄπιστος, &c.] By ἄπιστος is meant simply non-believing, non-Christian. Ἡγίασται cannot well mean, 'will gradually become holy, by feeling better disposed to Christianity;' a sense most harsh, not to mention that the argument is touched on at ver. 16. Equally objectionable is the sense assigned by others, 'is received into the number of Christians;' for thus, as Heydenreich observes, the end of the verse would not correspond to the beginning, and a manifest inconsequence would arise. Preferable is the view of Chrysostom, Piscator, Grotius, and others, who suppose ἁγιάζεσθαι to be here equivalent to οὐκ ἔστιν ἀκάθαρτος, or βέβηλος. Or that of other eminent Commentators, who understand the meaning to be, that 'the one is so sanctified by the other, that their matrimonial connexion is as lawful as if they were of the same faith.' Perhaps, however, it may be best simply (with Theophylact of the ancient, and, of modern Commentators, Billroth) to suppose the sense to be, that 'by the abound-γυναικὶ, καὶ ἡγίασται ἡ γυνὴ ἡ ἄπιστος ἐν τῷ ἀνδρί· ἐπεὶ 15 ἄρα τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν ἀκάθαρτά ἐστι, νῦν δὲ ἅγιά ἐστιν. Εἰ δὲ ὁ ἄπιστος χωρίζεται, χωριζέσθω. οὐ δεδούλωται ὁ ἀδελφὸς ἢ ἡ ἀδελφὴ ἐν τοῖς τοιούτοις· ἐν δὲ εἰρήνῃ κέκληκεν 16 ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεός. [h] Τί γὰρ οἶδας, γύναι, εἰ τὸν ἄνδρα σώσεις; h 1 Pet. 3. 1.

17 ἢ τί οἶδας, ἄνερ, εἰ τὴν γυναῖκα σώσεις; Εἰ μὴ ἑκάστῳ ὡς ἐμέρισεν ὁ Θεὸς, ἕκαστον ὡς κέκληκεν ὁ Κύριος, οὕτω περιπατείτω· καὶ οὕτως ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις πάσαις διατάσ-18 σομαι. Περιτετμημένος τις ἐκλήθη· μὴ ἐπισπάσθω. ἐν ἀκρο-19 βυστίᾳ τις ἐκλήθη· μὴ περιτεμνέσθω. [i] Ἡ περιτομὴ οὐδέν i Gal. 5. 6. & 6. 15. Col. 3. 11.

ing purity of the believing party, the uncleanness of the unbelieving party is overcome, and in some measure sanctified.' It may also be implied that there is hope thereby of the salvation of the unbelieving party.

— ἐπεὶ ἄρα τὰ τέκνα, &c.] We have here, as Calvin and Hyperius remark, an argumentum ab effectu; or, as Crellius says, a confirmation of what was before said, à consequenti absurdo. The sense is: 'For otherwise (namely, if one party be not sanctified) your children would be considered impure and profane (see 2 Cor. vi. 17. Acts x. 28); but now (i. e. in this case) they are holy, and form part of the people of God.'

15. After having at vv. 12, 13 directed that the Christian wife should not be the first to separate if the other party be willing to live with her, the Apostle shows, in this verse, what is to be done by the Christian wife if the Pagan husband be the first to break the marriage bond. She is directed to let the unbelieving party, if he will separate, separate. We are not, however, to suppose (with Grotius and others) that the marriage was, in such a case, ipso facto dissolved, so that the believing party might contract a fresh one. This is alike at variance with the letter and the spirit of our Lord's decision (Matt. v. 32); and, indeed, with the Apostle's own words in this Chapter; see vv. 10, 11. 30, and Rom. vii. 1—3. The sense, therefore, seems to be, that the conjugal union is not to be dissolved by reason of difference in religion; yet if the unbelieving party be disposed to separate, the believing party may blamelessly submit to such separation. Χωριζέσθω is to be taken in a popular acceptation; q. d. 'let him go; bring no action to recover your matrimonial rights.' At οὐ δεδούλ. supply συνοικεῖν αὐτῷ from the context and the subject matter. Ἐν τοῖς τοιούτοις. Supply πράγμασι, 'in such circumstances.'

The next clause limits the liberty, lest it should run into licence; q. d. God, however, hath called us [Christians] to live in peace; and, therefore, we must do every thing we can to live in peace; accordingly, the believing must not afford the unbelieving party any cause for separation, by an unyielding spirit or over-precise scruples.

16. Redit Apostolus ad præceptum, vv. 12, 13, datum, rationem afferens [ex utilitate, vel spe bonâ] quæ homines posset ad præceptum illud religiose servandum excitare. (Stenersen.)

— τί γὰρ οἶδας—σώσεις;] Here is another reason for avoiding causeless separation, and cultivating peace (and that à bonâ spe); namely, that thus the believing party may bring over the unbelieving to the Christian faith, and thus put him into the way of salvation; see Note on Matt. i. 21. Σώζειν is here used like κερδαίνειν at ix. 22; and εἰ signifies annon, as in Thucyd. iv. 40. The Articles τὸν and τὴν are for pronouns possessive.

17—24. This portion is digressive; the Apostle therein incidentally touching on other conditions of human life, which ought likewise not to suffer change by reason of the transition from Paganism to Christianity; showing by those examples that the Gospel does not dissolve, or interfere with, civil relations, or any other obligations before contracted, or which may be incumbent on men by their situation in life. At the same time this portion forms, as Hyperius remarks, a general conclusion to the whole of the foregoing disputation. Accordingly, εἰ μὴ is for ἀλλά; as at Matt. xii. 9. Rom. xiv. 14. Gal. i. 7, and often in the Classical writers. The phrase, however, is very elliptical; and its full sense is well expressed by Hyperius as follows: 'In summâ, utcunque res se habeat,' i. e. whether married or single. For 'in these words there is (as Billroth remarks) a limitation of the former limitation; the Apostle viewing the subject from every point, and considering every thing both for and against.' Render, 'Nevertheless, according as God hath apportioned to each his situation in life, let him continue to live [content].' Compare Horace, Sat. i. 1, 1—3.

17. καὶ οὕτως ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησ. π. δ.] A brief mode of expression, introducing two examples illustrative of the sense, in which something is left to be supplied to make up the sense; q. d. 'And so do I ordain [not in your case only, but] to be done in all the Churches [which I govern].' At ver. 18 we have an illustration by example of the preceding precept. I have (with Griesbach, Knapp, Krause, Vater, Tittman, Pott, and Scholz) removed the mark of interrogation at ἐκλήθη (introduced from the Vulgate), as in the Ed. Princ., and in the copy from which the Peschito Syriac Version was formed. The sense may be thus expressed: 'Any one is [we will suppose] circumcised: [then] let him,' &c. At μὴ ἐπισπάσθω supply τὴν ἀκροβυστίαν. Compare 1 Macc. i. 15, and especially see Celsus de Med. v. 2. 25.

19. We have here the reason for the injunction at ver. 18, and that by an argument drawn from the non-necessity of the thing, and its uselessness as compared with something far more excellent.

— ἡ περιτομὴ οὐδὲν, &c.] Οὐδέν ἐστι is ἐστι, καὶ ἡ ἀκροβυστία οὐδέν ἐστιν, ἀλλὰ τήρησις ἐντολῶν Θεοῦ. Ἕκαστος ἐν τῇ κλήσει ᾗ ἐκλήθη, ἐν ταύτῃ μενέτω. 20 Δοῦλος ἐκλήθης; μή σοι μελέτω· (ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ δύνασαι 21 ἐλεύθερος γενέσθαι, μᾶλλον χρῆσαι·) [k] ὁ γὰρ ἐν Κυρίῳ 22 κληθεὶς δοῦλος, ἀπελεύθερος Κυρίου ἐστίν· ὁμοίως καὶ ὁ ἐλεύθερος κληθεὶς δοῦλός ἐστι Χριστοῦ. [l] Τιμῆς ἠγοράσθητε· 23 μὴ γίνεσθε δοῦλοι ἀνθρώπων. Ἕκαστος ἐν ᾧ ἐκλήθη, ἀδελ- 24 φοὶ, ἐν τούτῳ μενέτω παρὰ [τῷ] Θεῷ.

[m] Περὶ δὲ τῶν παρθένων, ἐπιταγὴν Κυρίου οὐκ ἔχω· γνώμην 25 δὲ δίδωμι, ὡς ἠλεημένος ὑπὸ Κυρίου πιστὸς εἶναι. Νομίζω 26 οὖν, τοῦτο καλὸν ὑπάρχειν διὰ τὴν ἐνεστῶσαν ἀνάγκην, k John 8. 36. Rom. 6. 18, 22. infra 9. 21. Gal. 5. 13. Eph. 6. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 16.

l Supra 6. 20. Heb. 9. 12. 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19.
m 1 Tim. 1. 12.

equivalent to οὐδὲν ἰσχύει at Gal. v. 6, and οὐδὲν ὠφελεῖ at Rom. ii. 25. The meaning is, 'Circumcision is of no moment, and uncircumcision of no moment; but keeping the commandments of God is something of moment;' namely, as being the test of genuine faith. The same mode of expression occurs supra iii. 7.

20. Here, and in the next verse, a general precept is first laid down, then followed by a special one, introduced by way of example, and to limit and explain the sense of the former. Μή σοι μελέτω is an idiomatical expression, signifying, by an ellipsis of περὶ τούτου, 'let not this be a trouble to you: be not solicitous about this [as though it could affect your acceptance with God]; for grace knows no distinctions of bond or free.' Μᾶλλον χρῆσαι. Sub. ἐλευθερίᾳ, take it in preference.

22. ὁ γὰρ ἐν Κυρ., &c.] This is closely connected with μή σοι μελ. at ver. 21, and the sense is, 'for the Christian slave is the Lord's freed man (i. e. in a moral and spiritual sense); and in like manner the Christian freeman is the slave of Christ,' i. e. metaphorically, by being bound to obey his precepts. Comp. Rom. vi. 20—22.

Almost all our English Translators render ἀπελεύθερος, freeman; whereas the true sense is freedman; as the Vulgate and Pesch. Syr. render. It may, indeed, be asked, Is not the master, too, an ἀπελεύθερος Κυρίου? True; but, as Photius has acutely remarked, 'the Apostle places the parallel in this light, the better to comfort the slave, by suggesting a point of superiority over the master.' In fact, the whole is intended, as Calvin says, 'ad servorum consolationem et simul retundendum ingenuorum fastum.'

23. τιμῆς.] See Note on vi. 20.

— μὴ γίνεσθε δοῦλοι ἀνθρ.] 'do not be blindly followers of men, by conforming to their opinions,' &c. Probably with allusion to the false teachers, above adverted to, and in order to caution the Corinthians against taking an unnecessary yoke, by subjecting their consciences to such dogmatical directors. He then, at ver. 24, again repeats, on account of its importance, the general injunction, with which he had begun to treat on this subject, and with which he concludes, subjoining, however, for better understanding, the phrase παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, which has been variously explained, and, indeed, admits of more than one sense. The most probable is, 'conformably to the will of God, and as living in his presence.'

The τῷ before Θεῷ is not found in many of the best MSS. and nearly all the early Editions; and, after being introduced by Beza, was thrown out by Bengel, Matthæi, Griesbach, and Scholz.

25. περὶ δὲ τῶν παρθένων, &c.] The Apostle now returns from his digression; and having before treated of the married and the widowed, now adverts to the unmarried of both sexes; for such is the sense here of the expression παρθένοι, as is plain from the context. And that the word is used of males as well as females has been fully proved. Indeed, the word was originally an adjective, and is so used in Eurip. Phœn. 852. Ion. 270, and Hippol. 1006.

— ἐπιταγὴν Κυρίου οὐκ ἔχω.] Meaning, 'I have no special command of Christ [issued by him while on earth] to urge.' This deficiency, then, the Apostle proceeds himself to supply.

— γνώμην δὲ δίδωμι.] Some interpret, 'I give my counsel and private opinion.' Others, 'I give my decision.' The former sense is preferable, and it leaves nothing wanting; for surely the very private judgment of an inspired Apostle, even when not suggested by a special revelation, may be thought sufficient to decide in extraordinary cases, on which Christ left no command. Indeed, this may seem meant to be suggested in the words following, ὡς ἠλεημένος — πιστὸς εἶναι, especially if they be interpreted (with the most eminent Commentators), 'As one who hath been so graciously dealt with by the Lord, as to be entrusted by him with the office of Apostle,' equivalent to δεδοκιμασμένος ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ πιστευθῆναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, 1 Thess. ii. 4; see ix. 17. Gal. ii. 7. 1 Tim. i. 11, 12; a sense strongly confirmed by the similar words 2 Cor. iv. 1, ἔχοντες τὴν διακονίαν ταύτην, καθὼς ἠλεήθημεν, &c., answering to ὡς ἠλεημένος here. The construction seems to be as follows: ὡς (οὕτως) ἠλεημένος ὑπὸ Κυρίου [ὥστε] πιστὸς εἶναι, 'as being one who has been so graciously dealt with [as to be favoured with the Holy Spirit, and entrusted with the Apostleship], insomuch that I am worthy of entire credit.'

26. νομίζω.] The sense, as required by the γνώμην just before, must be judico, arbitror: a signification very frequent in Scripture, and not rare in the Classical writers. Καλὸν is to be taken as at ver. 1, where see Note.

— διὰ τὴν ἐν. ἀνάγκην.] The sense seems to be, 'because of the present afflicted state of the Church.' Ἀνάγκη is used both in the Scriptures and the Classics for θλίψις, to denote affliction

27 ὅτι καλὸν ἀνθρώπῳ τὸ οὕτως εἶναι. Δέδεσαι γυναικί; μὴ ζήτει λύσιν· λέλυσαι ἀπὸ γυναικός; μὴ ζήτει γυναῖκα.
28 Ἐὰν δὲ καὶ γήμῃς, οὐχ ἥμαρτες· καὶ ἐὰν γήμῃ ἡ παρθένος, οὐχ ἥμαρτε· θλίψιν δὲ τῇ σαρκὶ ἕξουσιν οἱ τοιοῦτοι· ἐγὼ 29 δὲ ὑμῶν φείδομαι. [n] Τοῦτο δέ φημι, ἀδελφοί· ὁ καιρὸς συν- n Rom. 13. 11. 1 Pet. 4. 7. 2 Esd. 16. 40—44.
εσταλμένος τὸ λοιπόν ἐστιν· ἵνα καὶ οἱ ἔχοντες γυναῖκας and calamity in general. Here some understand the difficulties of life, and the inconveniences of matrimony. But, then, why should ἐνεστ. have been prefixed? It is in vain to attempt to change this from a special admonition intended for that time into a general one for all ages. The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, that what is said (as especially appears from ver. 29, seqq.) must have reference to the persecutions for the Gospel's sake, which were then beginning; though at the same time it may, I think, also advert to those peculiar difficulties, in which a religion so much at variance with the customs of the world would involve its professors —difficulties inseparable from a state of society, where a new order of things was struggling for the mastery with the ancient and long accustomed one. Now, in such a situation the married would be liable to many more troubles than the single. So Eurip. cited by Grotius: Μία γὰρ ψυχὴ, ἧς ὕπερ ἀλγεῖν Μέτριον ἄλγος.

At ὅτι καλὸν there is a sort of anacoluthon; not, however, from inadvertence as to the construction, but resorted to as a kind of repetition serving to impart emphasis; q. d. 'It seems to me, I say, good.' At οὕτως εἶναι supply ὡς ἔστι, as we should say, to be (i. e. remain) as he is, namely, unmarried. An example of the idiom is adduced by Heydenreich from the Acta Theclæ.

27, 28. Jam Paulus totius disputationis ambitum in summam colligit, quæ inde efficitur. (Pott.)

27. δέδεσαι γυναικί; &c.] The terms δεδέσθαι and λελύσθαι are in the best writers used of matrimony, with allusion to the vinculum implied. Here it has been debated whether by λελύσθαι ἀπὸ γυναικὸς we are to understand the dissolving of marriage by death or lawful divorce, or of the being without a wife. The expression itself, from its nature, suggests the former sense; while the admonition following points to the latter. So that the expression was probably meant of both, and should be rendered free; which (as in the case of fitted and fit) will express both senses, namely, freed and free. Of a similar cast is a passage in Hipparchus ap. Stob. Serm. 375. 13, ναυαγὸς γέγονας; εὖ τὸν ναυαγόν· ('play well the shipwrecked mariner:') πένης ἐκ εὐπόρου; ('art thou poor after having been rich?') εὖ τὸν πένητα.

28. ἐὰν δὲ καὶ γήμῃς, &c.] By this the Apostle means to correct any misapprehension of what was just before said, as though he had (after the manner of many false teachers at that time, see 1 Tim. iv. 3) almost forbidden wedlock as unlawful.

— θλίψιν δὲ τῇ σαρκὶ ἕξουσιν οἱ τ.] Render: 'However, such will have trouble in the flesh;' namely, that of the ἀνάγκη mentioned at ver. 26. The next words ἐγὼ—φείδομαι may either mean (as they are explained by the ancient and many modern Commentators, from Grotius down to Schleusner, Pott, Iaspis, and Heydenreich) 'I [would] wish to keep you free from these evils' (so answering to θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς ἀμερίμνους εἶναι at ver. 32); or (according to many Latin Fathers and some modern Commentators, as Estius, Wells, Newcome, and Macknight) 'I spare you [the pain of dilating on these evils].' The latter interpretation is confirmed by a parallel expression in 2 Cor. xii. 6.

29—35. The Apostle here more fully intimates what he meant by the expressions θλίψιν τῇ σαρκὶ ἕξουσι, and ἐγὼ δὲ ὑμῶν φείδομαι, treating on the former in vv. 29—31; and on the latter in vv. 32—35.

29. τοῦτο δέ φημι.] This, like λέγω δὲ τοῦτο, is a formula of transition, introducing a strengthening of what has been before said, or a farther explanation thereof. Before ὁ καιρὸς the textus receptus has ὅτι, which was first inserted, on slender grounds, by Schmidt and Elzevir, but was afterwards cancelled by Matthæi, Griesbach, and Scholz; rightly; for it probably arose from interpretation. In the interpretation of συνεσταλμένος Commentators are divided in opinion; the term being susceptible of two different senses. I. Since συστέλλω signifies properly to draw together, and, as used of clothes or vests, to fold up, hence, as applied to time, it may mean figuratively to contract, shorten; and thus συνεσταλμένος will have the sense short, just as in Latin we have the phrases contracti dies, or contractæ noctes. Thus a very suitable sense arises, whereby they are reminded of the shortness of life, and the transitory nature of all earthly things, even in their best estate, and so are admonished to sit loose to earthly enjoyments, remembering how short the time is as to the remainder of life; comp. Ps. lxxxix. 47. Similarly, too, are the words of Eurip. Bacch. 375, βραχὺς αἰών· ἐπὶ τούτῳ δὲ τίς ἂν μεγάλα διώκων τὰ παρόντ' οὐχὶ φέροι; and Pindar, Pyth. iv. 509, Οὐδὲ μακύνων τέλος οὐδέν· (nullam rem procrastinans) ὁ γὰρ καιρὸς πρὸς ἀνθρώπων (quod ad homines attinet) βραχὺ μέτρον ἔχει. II. From its primitive sense, συστέλλω may also mean to hem in, reduce to straits or distresses; both as applied to persons and to things: see Stephens' Thesaurus, Schleusner, and Bretschneider; from whence it appears that the idiom is one occurring both in the Sept. (including the Apocrypha) and the Classical writers. Thus συνεσταλμένος will mean, 'encompassed with distresses,' equivalent to ἡ ἐνεστῶσα ἀνάγκη at ver. 26. The sentiment will then correspond to that at 2 Tim. iii. 1, ἐνστήσονται καιροὶ χαλεποί; alluding to the persecution shortly coming on.

Which of the above interpretations merits the preference it is difficult to determine. Either of them is very agreeable to the context, but the ὡς μὴ ἔχοντες ὦσι· καὶ οἱ κλαίοντες, ὡς μὴ κλαίοντες· καὶ 30 οἱ χαίροντες, ὡς μὴ χαίροντες· καὶ οἱ ἀγοράζοντες, ὡς μὴ o Ps. 39. 6. James 1. 10. & 4. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 24. 1 John 2. 17. p 1 Tim. 5. 5. κατέχοντες· ° καὶ οἱ χρώμενοι τῷ κόσμῳ τούτῳ, ὡς μὴ κατα- 31 χρώμενοι. παράγει γὰρ τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου.

ᵖ Θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς ἀμερίμνους εἶναι. Ὁ ἄγαμος μεριμνᾷ τὰ τοῦ 32
Κυρίου, πῶς ἀρέσει τῷ Κυρίῳ· ὁ δὲ γαμήσας μεριμνᾷ τὰ τοῦ 33 latter has the far greater support of the usus loquendi. Hence it has been, with reason, adopted by all the most eminent modern Commentators.

With respect to the next words, τὸ λοιπόν ἐστιν, they may be construed either with the preceding or the following. In the latter case they will have the sense 'reliquum est, ut,' &c., as the Vulgate renders; ἵνα here denoting the final ut; q. d. 'There yet remains the obligation that,' &c. This is, however, somewhat harsh; and therefore it is better to join the words with the preceding. And then if the interpretation of the passage first mentioned be adopted, τὸ λοιπὸν will stand for ὁ λοιπός: an idiom, however, not well authorized. If the latter, τὸ λοιπὸν will be for εἰς τὸ μέλλον, as λοιπὸν in 2 Tim. iv. 8, or rather, κατὰ τὸ λοιπὸν μέρος χρόνου. Thus, then, we may suppose the two senses above mentioned to be included; that of shortness being implied in [κατὰ] τὸ λοιπὸν [μέρος], 'as to what remains of it,' as to the brief remnant of it which persecution may permit to us.

29. ἵνα καὶ οἱ, &c.] Ἵνα here has been variously rendered, according to the different views adopted of the preceding words, either 'when,' or 'that.' But it rather seems to denote, as often, result or consequence; the sense being, 'So that they who have wives will be as those who have them not;' at least according to what most recent Commentators consider as the force of ὦσι here and throughout the whole passage. And such may be the sense intended; but from the air of the context, and the words which follow the whole passage (namely, παράγει γὰρ τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου), it would rather seem to be: 'So that they who have wives may (or should) be as though they had them not.' A very similar admonition, and similarly pointed, occurs in 2 Esdr. xvi. 40—44: 'In those evils be even as pilgrims upon the earth. He that selleth let him be as he that fleeth away; and he that buyeth as one that will lose: He that occupieth merchandise as he that hath no profit by it; and he that buildeth as he that shall not dwell therein: He that soweth as if he should not reap; so also he that planteth the vineyard as he that shall not gather the grapes: They that marry as they that shall get no children; and they that marry not as the widowers.' So in Arrian, Diss. Epict. iv. 7, the Galilæans (meaning the Christians) are said to be πρὸς τὰ τέκνα καὶ τὴν γυναῖκα, ὥστ' ἐν μηδενὶ ποιεῖσθαι τὸ ἔχειν ταῦτα, ἢ μὴ ἔχειν.

30. καὶ οἱ κλαίοντες, ὡς, &c.] Similarly Aristotle, Rhet. ii. 15, says of the aged, καὶ οὔτε φιλοῦσι σφόδρα, οὔτε μισοῦσι· καὶ φιλοῦσιν ὡς μισήσοντες, καὶ μισοῦσιν ὡς φιλήσοντες.

— καὶ οἱ ἀγοράζοντες, &c.] 'Let us that buy [and sell and get gain] be,' &c.; i. e. act as those that are not long to retain their gains and possessions, but are 'usufructuarii ad vitam,' and consequently should study so to use as not to abuse God's gifts. Thus it is said, in a very similar passage of Plutarch, de Educ. § 17, Στιγμὴ χρόνου πᾶς ὁ βίος ἐστί· ζῆν, καὶ οὐ παραζῆν, προσήκει. The exhortation, however, to refrain from abuse is here not direct, but indirect; and the sense of the words καὶ οἱ χρώμενοι, &c., is well expressed by Dr. Shuttleworth: 'And those who use this world as though they used (or rather, I might say, abused) it not.' (See Note infra ix. 18.) Thus is conveyed a passing censure at the too luxurious way of living among certain Christians at this seat of Grecian profligacy.

In short, the scope of the Apostle is to inculcate, not a philosophic apathy, or a reining in of the passions for interest's sake, but a sitting loose to the things of this world, a keeping themselves superior to its joys or sorrows, and a great moderation in the use of their possessions; and that for the reason subjoined,—that they cannot long keep what they now possess; for, &c.

31. παράγει τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τ.] The expression τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κ. is not, as many recent Commentators take it, for κόσμος; but τὸ σχῆμα has reference to that external appearance of this worldly scene which, as we say, makes a figure and catches the eye. So in Plato, de Rep. ix. 4, we have, σχήματα ποιεῖν, and Philostr. Vit. Ap. viii. 7 (in imitation of the present passage) says, καὶ τί τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου; And taking the term here in combination with the word following, παράγει, we may trace a dramatic metaphor, with allusion to those grand scenic spectacles for which Corinth and Athens were so celebrated. Accordingly the sentiment here intended will be, that 'the world, and all its fairest forms, is constantly passing away, like the ever-shifting scenes in a theatre;' and thus is impressed the important truth, that the distinguishing characteristic of the world is transitoriness. A sentiment not dissimilar occurs in Sophocles ap. Stob. Serm. 172, ἀλλὰ χαρτοῖσί τε χαῖρε καὶ κακοῖσιν ἀσχαλλε μὴ λίην. γίνωσκε δ' οἷος ῥυσμὸς ἀνθρώπους ἔχει, where ῥυσμὸς answers to the σχῆμα of the present passage.

32. Θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς ἀμερ. ε.] The δὲ is not adversative, but continuative; the Apostle here recommending celibacy by a further argument; and that, as Hyperius says, from three considerations; 1. ab utili; 2. ab honesto; 3. à pio. Moreover, as Hyperius observes, the representation is rendered the more forcible by being expressed in the form of a wish.

Ἀμερίμ. is, of course, to be understood comparatively; viz. 'as much as your respective conditions in life may permit;' q. d. 'my object in speaking thus is to keep you as far as possible unentangled with worldly cares.' The words following are an illustration by example; and what is said must be taken emphatically. The unmarried person, more especially, employs his thoughts so to act, as to approve himself to the 34 κόσμου, πῶς ἀρέσει τῇ γυναικί. [q] Μεμέρισται ἡ γυνὴ καὶ ἡ [q] Luke 10. 40.

παρθένος. ἡ ἄγαμος μεριμνᾷ τὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, ἵνα ᾖ ἁγία καὶ σώματι καὶ πνεύματι· ἡ δὲ γαμήσασα μεριμνᾷ τὰ τοῦ 35 κόσμου, πῶς ἀρέσει τῷ ἀνδρί. Τοῦτο δὲ πρὸς τὸ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν συμφέρον λέγω· οὐχ ἵνα βρόχον ὑμῖν ἐπιβάλω, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸ εὔσχημον καὶ ‡ εὐπρόσεδρον τῷ Κυρίῳ ἀπερισπά-36 στως. Εἰ δέ τις ἀσχημονεῖν ἐπὶ τὴν παρθένον αὐτοῦ νομίζει, ἐὰν ᾖ ὑπέρακμος, καὶ οὕτως ὀφείλει γίνεσθαι·—ὃ

Lord; while the married person devotes his chief attention to worldly cares. Πῶς ἀρέσει τῇ γυν., i. e. may promote her domestic comforts, and amply provide for her and her children, which brings a multiplicity of cares. So Menander, cited by Wetstein: τὸ γυναῖκ' ἔχειν, εἶναί τε παίδων, Παρμένων, πατέρα, μερίμνας τῷ βίῳ Πολλὰς φέρει.

34. Μεμέρισται is by several eminent Commentators explained, 'is distracted by cares.' That interpretation, however, is harsh, and not agreeable to the context. The true sense seems to be that assigned by the ancients, and several eminent moderns, 'there is a difference between.'

In this verse there are many varr. lectt. Some MSS. introduce a καὶ before μεμέρισται, others before ἡ γυνή: and others, again, at both places. The evidence for the second var. lect. is considerable, and that for the first not slight. It will mean 'so also.' Indeed, authority is so great as to seem to demand the insertion of καὶ likewise before ἡ γυνή. But surely the Apostle would not have used καὶ thrice in a clause of six words. May we not therefore suppose that those MSS. which have the καὶ there, were copied from others which had the καὶ marked for insertion, above or in the margin, and that they introduced it in the wrong place? Besides, the καὶ might easily be introduced before γυνὴ by those who pointed τῇ γυναικὶ, καὶ μεμέρισται, since καὶ would thus be necessary: others repeated the μεμ., which is unwarily adopted by Heydenreich. For my own part, I cannot but suspect that the καὶ, which has been so variously inserted, has place no where, and only arose from those who mistook the construction of the passage; and therefore I have chosen to follow Erasmus, the textus receptus, Griesbach, and Tittman, in inserting it no where, rather than the Edit. Princ., Bengel, Matthæi, Vater, and Scholz, in inserting it after μεμέρ.

— πῶς ἀρέσει τῷ ἀνδρί.] This must mean the discharge of her domestic duties acceptably to her husband, whose will is to be her law. See 1 Pet. i. 3—7. So Theano, the celebrated philosopher, being asked what was the first duty of a wife, answered, τὸ τῷ ἰδίῳ ἀρέσκειν ἀνδρί. And Melissa (ap. Frag. Pythag., p. 749, Gal.) answers the same question thus: ἀρέσκειν τῷ αὐτῆς ἀνδρὶ, ἐπιτελέας ποιεῦσαν τὰς ἐκείνῳ θελησίας.

35. τοῦτο δὲ πρὸς, &c.] The αὐτῶν is, as Billroth says, emphatic; q. d. 'I say this for your own good, and not for the sake of making my opinion of importance.'

— οὐχ ἵνα βρόχον ὑμῖν ἐπιβ.] On the sense of this expression βρόχον, and the nature of the metaphor, a difference of opinion exists; some assigning the sense 'rope,' i. e. snare; others, 'yoke,' i. e. bond: and, indeed, the yokes of the ancients were often made of rope. The latter view is adopted by the ancient and many eminent modern Interpreters, as Vorst., Grotius, Piscator, Locke, and Heydenreich; the former by the greater part of the modern ones, which seems preferable. But whether the metaphor be, as they imagine, derived from bird-catching, may be doubted; since ropes were employed for other purposes as well as snares, and we may rather suppose a military metaphor; since, in war, ropes were thrown out, with which an enemy was dragged away, and put to death, or captured. That, however, would require περιβάλω. The term is more probably used with allusion to the rope with a noose, used by the ancient huntsmen, whereby, when thrown over the head of an animal, the beast was taken, and compelled to go where the huntsman pleased. However, since the ratio metaphoræ is uncertain, it may be safest so to express the sense as to include both metaphors; q. d. 'My meaning is not to lay snares for, entangle your conscience, or put any force on your wishes.'

— πρὸς τὸ εὔσχημον, &c.] Supply ὑμῶν. It is put for πρὸς τὸ εὐσχημονεῖν καὶ εὐπροσεδρεύειν ὑμᾶς τῷ Κυρίῳ, 'for your more decorous and assiduous or continued service to the Lord.' See Luke ii. 37. Instead of εὐπρόσεδρον, many MSS., early Versions, and Fathers have εὐπάρ., which is edited by Bengel, Griesbach, Tittman, Pott, and Scholz. But the external evidence for that reading is not very strong; that of the Fathers being, in such a case, slight, and here not consistent. Moreover, the MSS. which support it abound in altered readings, of which this seems one; since εὐπάρεδ. is a more Classical word than εὐπρόσ.; whereas εὐπρόσ. is found in the later Greek and Hellenistic writers, and its cognate words in the New Test., as προσεδρεύοντες, where some of these very MSS. have παρ., though no Critic pleads for it. To advert to another strong internal evidence,—εὐπρόσ. is (as Wetstein and Matthæi remark) the more modest and respectful term; προσεδρεύειν being applied to inferiors, and having a notion of respectful attention; παρ. to equals in rank. Ἀπερισπάστως, i. e. without distraction from worldly affairs. The word is derived from περισπᾶσθαι, and is here used as at Luke x. 40.

36. The Apostle now subjoins a counsel, meant for those parents who may not follow the foregoing advice. Εἴ τις ἀσχημονεῖν—νομίζει is best explained by the ancient and most modern Commentators, 'If any [father] think he is incurring somewhat of disgrace with respect to his unmarried daughter,' namely, by her being unmarried; since the disgrace, which female celibacy implied, extended in some degree to the father.

θέλει ποιείτω, οὐχ ἁμαρτάνει· γαμείτωσαν. Ὃς δὲ ἕστηκεν 37
ἑδραῖος ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ, μὴ ἔχων ἀνάγκην, ἐξουσίαν δὲ ἔχει περὶ τοῦ ἰδίου θελήματος, καὶ τοῦτο κέκρικεν ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ r Ecclus 7. 25. Heb. 13. 4. αὐτοῦ τοῦ τηρεῖν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ παρθένον, καλῶς ποιεῖ. [r] Ὥστε 38 καὶ ὁ ἐκγαμίζων καλῶς ποιεῖ· ὁ δὲ μὴ [ἐκ]γαμίζων κρεῖσσον ποιεῖ.

s Rom. 7. 1, 2. [s] Γυνὴ δέδεται [νόμῳ,] ἐφ᾽ ὅσον χρόνον ζῇ ὁ ἀνὴρ αὐτῆς· 39 ἐὰν δὲ κοιμηθῇ ὁ ἀνὴρ αὐτῆς, ἐλευθέρα ἐστὶν ᾧ θέλει γα-t 1 Thess. 4. 8. μηθῆναι, μόνον ἐν Κυρίῳ. [t] Μακαριωτέρα δέ ἐστιν ἐὰν οὕτω 40 μείνῃ, κατὰ τὴν ἐμὴν γνώμην· δοκῶ δὲ κἀγὼ Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ a Acts 15. 20, 29. Rom. 14. 3, 10, 14, 22. ἔχειν.

VIII. [a] ΠΕΡΙ δὲ τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων, οἴδαμεν—(ὅτι 1

The above sense of τὴν παρθ. α. is required by the context, and is confirmed from the Classical citations adduced by Krause. Ὑπέρακμος; i. e. past the ἀκμή, or flower, of her age, the ἀκμὴ γάμου. So Suid., ὑπερδραμὼν τὴν ὥραν. Καὶ (sub. ἐὰν) οὕτως ὀφ. γίν. Here we have a popular expression, like our 'If it must be so,' which will include reasons of all sorts, both on the side of the parent and of the daughter. Γαμείτωσαν. Meaning the maid and her suitor.

37. ὃς] scil. ὁ πατήρ, as almost all the best Commentators are agreed, since the subject of this sentence must be that of the last.

— ἕστηκεν ἑδραῖος] 'continues stedfast in his purpose.' A stronger expression than ἑδραῖος γίνεται would be, which occurs in 1 Cor. xv. 58, or even ἐπιμένει ἑδραῖος at Col. i. 23, in which there is a metaphor derived, not (as has been imagined) è palæstra, but (as in Eph. ii. 22, and iii. 17) an architectural one, with allusion to a statue standing firm on its pedestal (so Stob. Serm. i. 4, cited by Krause, ἀνδριὰς μὲν ἐπὶ βάσεως, σπουδαῖος δὲ ἀνὴρ ἐπὶ καλῆς προαιρέσεως ἑστὼς, ἀμετακίνητος ὀφείλει εἶναι), or to a pillar, or column, standing firm on its base. So 2 Tim. ii. 19, ὁ στερεὸς θεμέλιος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἕστηκεν, standeth sure. Ἀνάγκην refers both to the disposition of the daughter, and to the domestic circumstances of both father and daughter.

— περὶ τοῦ ἰδίου θελήματος.] Θέλημα here denotes simply the faculty of willing, or, as we say, free-will. The construction here is anomalous, the regular Classical one being a simple genitive (as supra ver. 4), or an accusative with εἰς or πρός.

— τοῦτο κέκρικεν.] A strong term, used to express firm determination. Τοῦ τηρεῖν τὴν ἑ. παρθ. A popular expression, signifying 'to keep her with him at home unmarried, not wed her.'

39. The Apostle now subjoins an admonition respecting widows (probably in answer to some inquiry), tending to check their hastily forming second marriages.

— νόμῳ.] This, not found in about six MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, has been cancelled by Griesbach, Lachmann, and Scholz, but without reason. It seems to have been expunged, as admitting of no very Classical construction, and also because some may have stumbled at the sense, which is (as Bp. Middleton has well explained) 'by moral obligation,' 'by the spirit of every law, divine or human.' See Rom. ii. 25. Ἐλευθέρα ἐστὶ γαμ. A popular idiom, like one in our own language. Μόνον ἐν Κ., 'so that it be consistent with her obligations as a Christian;' i. e. as Theodoret remarks, to one ὁμοπίστῳ, εὐσεβεῖ, or, as Calvin explains, religiously and in the fear of God; for so alone are matrimonial connexions auspiciously formed.

40. δοκῶ δὲ—ἔχειν.] These words are by some ancient and many modern Commentators thought so far from being, as some have imagined, expressive of doubt, as really to be an emphatic meiosis, expressive of the highest certainty. This, however, is, with reason, denied by Mr. Slade, who renders thus: 'And I trust that I have the Spirit of God.' But though that Version be confirmed by the authority of Rosenmuller and others, it seems to be going too far the other way; for δοκῶ must at least denote full persuasion, though modestly expressed. So Aristoph. Ach. 904, τρία δοκῶ γ' ἂν ἔτι προσβαλεῖν, where Mr. Mitchell rightly remarks, that 'δοκῶ thus followed by an Infinitive, and especially when accompanied by μοι, denotes, not that doubtful state of mind to which the present use of language attaches the word to think, but more frequently a full assurance and conviction, as in Aristoph. Pac. 13, and Ran. 1420. Plut. 1186.' This is sufficient to fully answer those who call in question the continual inspiration of the Apostle. With respect to the expression Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ, Bp. Middleton thinks it cannot be taken of the Holy Spirit in the personal sense, but must mean 'divine guidance.' And Wakefield lowers it still further, to 'a divine spirit;' i. e. (as Bp. Middleton on Rom. viii. 9 thinks the phrase may mean) 'a godly frame of mind.' But it must surely imply 'Divine aid, by the influence and inspiration of the Holy Spirit,' 'the influence or inspiration of the Holy Spirit sent from God.' That Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ may be equivalent to τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, the Bishop himself would not deny, since it falls under his own Canon, C. iii. § 6. of nouns in regimen, in which 'the Article is either prefixed to both the governing and the governed nouns, or else is omitted before both.'

VIII. In this Chapter the Apostle (doubtless in answer to some previous inquiry) proceeds to treat of the use of meats which had been offered to idols. On the sense of εἰδωλόθυτα, see Note πάντες γνῶσιν ἔχομεν·—ἡ γνῶσις φυσιοῖ, ἡ δὲ ἀγάπη

2 οἰκοδομεῖ· [b] Εἰ δέ τις δοκεῖ εἰδέναι τὶ, οὐδέπω οὐδὲν ἔγνωκε b Gal. 6. 3. 1 Tim. 6. 4.
3 καθὼς δεῖ γνῶναι· εἰ δέ τις ἀγαπᾷ τὸν Θεὸν, οὗτος ἔγνωσται c Deut. 4. 39. & 6. 4. infra 10. 19.
4 ὑπ' αὐτοῦ.)—[c] περὶ τῆς βρώσεως οὖν τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων, Eph. 4. 6. Is. 41. 24.

on Acts v. 20. It appears, from the researches of the learned, that it does not merely mean meat actually sacrificed to idols, but also that part of the victim which was reserved for the use of the Priests, and from which they often entertained their friends, or gave part to the poor, or sometimes sold it in the market; though, as the animal, when alive, had been formally consecrated to the use of the god, and had been partly offered on his altar, so the meats might, in a certain sense, be said to be offered to the idol. See more in the Tract on the Lord's Supper, appended to Cudworth's Intellectual System, and also Heydenreich in loc. Now it was a question of some moment to Christians living among idolatrous Gentiles, whether it was lawful for them to participate in any such meats. In deciding this, the Apostle seems to allude to certain plausible arguments employed to justify the use of it; ex. gr., that the idol was not a god, but a mere stock or stone; and if this their opinion of the idol was notorious, their participation of food, in the temple consecrated to its worship, could not involve any acknowledgment of its godhead, and therefore could be no more a sin than eating a common meal. This sophistry he confutes, and shows that, though idols were mere 'vanities,' yet, by participating in feasts made of meats which had been offered to them, Christians occasioned a scandal to their weaker brethren, and ought therefore to abstain.

1. On the punctuation and interpretation of this whole passage, vv. 1—4, some doubt exists; to remove which, many eminent Critics would regard οἴδαμεν ὅτι πάντες γνῶσιν ἔχομεν as a part of the letter of the Corinthians; to which the Apostle answers in the following words. Thus the passage, they think, forms a kind of dialogue between St. Paul and the Corinthians. All this, however, is purely hypothetical, and really creates more difficulties than it removes. It is besides unnecessary; for the difficulty may be removed by supposing a parenthesis, commencing either at ἡ γνῶσις (as Vater, Knappe, Krause, Gratz, Pott, and Heydenreich suppose), or rather (according to Schmidt, Bos, Raphelius, Wolf, Schulz, Newcome, Griesbach, Winer, and Scholz,) at ὅτι πάντες. Yet I cannot entirely agree with those who insert ὅτι πάντες γνῶσιν ἔχομεν in the parenthesis; for the words evidently do not well consort with those following. I have, therefore, chosen a middle course, and separated the clause both from what precedes and what follows, by a kind of hypo-parenthesis, which also, by its notation, will indicate that, in the words preceding, there is a breaking off of the construction; which, after the long parenthetical portion introduced to show the effects of knowledge without charity, is taken up with an οὖν resumptive, and a repetition of the most necessary words which occurred before the parenthesis; of which idiom several examples may be seen in Winer's Gr. Gr. § 5. Thus ὅτι πάντες γνῶσιν ἔχομεν may be rendered, 'for we have all knowledge;' a tacit censure on the prevalent conceit of the Corinthian converts. It is well remarked by Calvin and Hyperius, that we have here a concession. The Apostle grants whatsoever they could demand, or object; q. d. 'You pretend Christian liberty, and claim to possess knowledge. This I grant. But of what use is knowledge, when detrimental to your brethren?' He thus concedes their assumptions, that he may show the vanity of the plea founded on them.

This mention of knowledge, then, gives the Apostle an opportunity of introducing, for admonition's sake, a weighty gnome (introduced, for greater effect, without a particle) on real, as contrasted with false knowledge, and on its value, as compared with the love of God. By ἡ γνῶσις, however, is not to be understood 'knowledge' simply, but 'the knowledge [I allude to];' (as at v. 7,) even religious knowledge, when confined to speculation only, and unaccompanied with an attention to practice, as well as theory,—love to man, as well as devotion to God. Thus, in the very opposition of γνῶσις and ἀγάπη, it is implied that the former is separate from the latter. Οἰκοδομεῖ, 'promotes the true edification of themselves, and the furtherance of the Gospel.' See Rom. xiv. 19. 1 Cor. x. 23, and ch. xiv. We have here, as Beza observes, an architectural metaphor; the knowledge in question being compared to a mere pasteboard fabric; the other, to a real and solid building.

2. In this verse the sentiment at ἡ γνῶσις φυσιοῖ is amplified, as in the next verse that at ἡ ἀγάπη οἰκοδομεῖ is expanded. (Pott.)

— δοκεῖ εἰδέναι τὶ] 'fancies that he knows something [great, or any thing thoroughly];' is as it were a δοκησίσοφος, who is vain of his knowledge, and rests in it, without applying it to practice, by the discharge of his duty to men. Such a person as yet knoweth nothing; neither that, nor any thing else, as he ought to know it, i. e. completely; namely, because he neglects the true end and use of real knowledge, practice; and neglects to duly resort to the fountain of all knowledge, the light of God's revealed truth.

3. ἔγνωσται ὑπ' αὐτοῦ.] Some ancient and many modern Commentators interpret, 'is acknowledged and approved by God.' But this, though a frequent signification of the word, is here not permitted by the context; since, as Pott remarks, in order to preserve the antithesis, the idea of having must appear in both members, and cannot, without destroying the essence of the argumentation, be exchanged for the idea of acknowledgment or approbation. Indeed, as Pott says, a sense is here required the opposite to οὐδέπω—γνῶναι. Preferable, therefore, is the view of some ancient and many of the best modern Commentators, who suppose ἔγνωσται used in a Hophal sense, 'is made to know,' i. e. 'is taught by him,' as in 1 Cor. xiii. 12. Gal. iv. 9. An idiom which, Pott asserts, is found both in Classical and Hellenistic Greek. Even this interpretation, however, is scarcely tenable, being founded on no sure grammatical proof. Accordingly it is best to retain the fundamental sense, d Gal. 4. 9. e John 10. 34. f Mal. 2. 10. John 13. 13. Acts 17. 28. Rom. 11 36. infra 12. 3 Eph. 4. 5, 6. Phil. 2. 11. g Rom. 14. 14, 23. infra 10. 28.

οἴδαμεν ὅτι οὐδὲν εἴδωλον ἐν κόσμῳ, καὶ ὅτι οὐδεὶς Θεὸς ἕτερος εἰ μὴ εἷς. [d] Καὶ γὰρ εἴπερ εἰσὶ λεγόμενοι θεοὶ, εἴτε 5 ἐν οὐρανῷ εἴτε ἐπὶ [τῆς] γῆς· ([e] ὥσπερ εἰσὶ θεοὶ πολλοὶ, καὶ κύριοι πολλοί·) [f] ἀλλ' ἡμῖν εἷς Θεὸς ὁ πατὴρ, ἐξ 6 οὗ τὰ πάντα, καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτόν· καὶ εἷς Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα, καὶ ἡμεῖς δι' αὐτοῦ. [g] Ἀλλ' οὐκ 7 and regard this as a real passive, understanding it, however, as meant to express true and complete knowledge, as Gal. iv. 9, νῦν δὲ γνόντες Θεὸν, μᾶλλον δὲ γνωσθέντες ὑπὸ Θεοῦ. Comp. infra xiii. 12. Such, too, I find, was the view of the sense adopted by Hyperius. We may also suppose it to have been the intent of the Apostle to thus inculcate a lesson of humility. Indeed, as Billroth observes, 'it is a frequent mode of expression with St. Paul, when he has to mention any thing resulting from the identification of the human will with the divine, instead of ascribing it to man, by the use of an active voice, to use a passive, and thereby to indicate that God is the primary and essential agent.' See Phil. iii. 13.

4. We have here a resumption of the sentiment above propounded, together with a concession. (Vorstius.) The Apostle at vv. 4—6 refutes the arguments urged in defence of eating idol meats: especially that the heathen gods are non-existent, are no gods. This he grants and confirms, but shows, at ver. 7, that the conclusion thence deduced is false.

— οὖν.] This resumptive use of οὖν is by no means unfrequent. By εἴδωλον is meant, not the image itself of the god worshipped under the image, but the so called gods, deastri, thus termed by the Jews in contempt; q. d. a mere 'shadow,' a non-entity, μάταια, vanities, non-existent, much less divine. Οὐδὲν ἐν κόσμῳ ἐστὶ is a popular phrase, similar to one in our own language, denoting literally, 'nothing in the world' [mere stocks and stones], things which have no real existence in rerum natura, much less Divinity. So Isaiah, xli. 24, thus apostrophises idols: 'Behold ye are of nothing, and your works are nothing.'

5. καὶ γὰρ εἴπερ, &c.] This is meant for explanation, and to anticipate an objection. By λεγόμενοι is meant νομιζόμενοι, i. e. (by the power of the emphasis) only those accounted, not really such; μὴ φύσει θεοί; as Gal. iv. 8. The whole passage is well illustrated by Loesner from the following one of Philo, p. 122, οἱ δὲ λεγόμενοι δεσπόται δόξῃ μόνον, οὐ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν νομίζονται· ἀνάγκη δ' ὡς ὑπήκοον καὶ δοῦλον οὕτως ἡγεμόνα ἐν τῷ παντὶ εἶναι καὶ κύριον· γένοιτ' ἂν ὁ τῷ ὄντι ἄρχων καὶ ἡγεμὼν εἷς ὁ Θεὸς, ᾧ λέγειν ἦν πρεπῶδες ὅτι πάντα αὐτοῦ κτήματα.

Εἴτε ἐν οὐρανῷ and εἴτε ἐπὶ γῆς are enumerations of the constituent parts of the κόσμος preceding. By the former, it is thought, are meant the Dii Olympii, or majores; by the latter, the ἐπιχθόνιοι, the minores, inferior deified powers, presiding over the fountains, woods, mountains, rivers, &c.; or the Dii minorum gentium, the Demi-gods, Divi, Genii, received into the number of gods for their virtue, and acting as messengers between the celestial gods and mankind.

— ὥσπερ, &c.] 'as indeed.' For so the word ought to be rendered when coming after a hypothetical proposition, as asserting or confirming its truth; see Matthiæ, Gr. Gr. § 629.

— θεοὶ πολλοὶ καὶ κύριοι π.] Here, as Pott remarks, the θεοὶ are the same with the οἱ λεγόμενοι θεοὶ before; and not to be distinguished from the κύριοι, by which name (he adds) the gods and goddesses both of Greece and Rome were called. By the same term (denoting power and dominion) the Hebr. בעל was used to designate the Canaanitish gods and goddesses adopted by the Israelites; and sometimes the Tyrian Hercules, and such other deified mortals, become tutelary deities; see Bp. Warburton's Divine Leg. vol. vi. p. 388. Pott well remarks that, 'by this accumulation of term the Apostle meant to exhaust the notion of polytheism, in order thereby to make more prominent the notion of the one God to be worshipped by Christians.'

6. The connexion of this passage with the preceding, and the scope of the argument, are well expressed by Billroth as follows: 'As respects the eating of flesh offered in sacrifice to idols, we know that there is no idol-god in the world, and that there is no God but one (viz. Jehovah). Although, then, there be what are called gods, whether they be in heaven or on earth, as, indeed, there are gods many and lords many (to the heathen, according to the ideas of the heathen), yet is there to us but one God (i. e. there is only one Being whom we acknowledge as divine) and one Lord.'

— ἐξ οὗ τὰ πάντα, καὶ ἡμεῖς, &c.] 'from whom, as Creator and First Great Cause, all things have their origin, and we [exist] for Him (i. e. for his service and glory, see Col. i. 16); and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom (i. e. as the immediate and efficient cause) are all things, and we by Him;' i. e. are what we are; 'language (as Dr. Pye Smith observes, Script. Test. vol. iii. 332) in perfect accordance with the uniform testimony of Scripture, which regularly attributes all the operations of the Deity ad extra according to an established constitution of Divine wisdom to the Father, as the supreme Origin, and to the Son, and to the Spirit, as Immediate and Effective Agents.'

By δι' αὐτοῦ, as applied to God the Son, the ancient Commentators understand to be denoted mediately the creation of all things, and, as respects Christians, a two-fold creation, both natural and spiritual. Others, however, and especially almost all the recent Commentators, with reason recognise only a moral creation; explaining καὶ ἡμεῖς δι' αὐτοῦ, 'and we [Christians] are by him [what we are];' i. e. regenerated and saved; see 1 Pet. i. 21. As to the Socinian perversion, founded on the distinction here recognised between the Father and the Son, the Apostle, by thus calling the Father the one God, does ἐν πᾶσιν ἡ γνῶσις· τινὲς δὲ τῇ συνειδήσει τοῦ εἰδώλου ἕως ἄρτι ὡς εἰδωλόθυτον ἐσθίουσι, καὶ ἡ συνείδησις αὐτῶν, ἀσθενὴς 8 οὖσα, μολύνεται. [h] Βρῶμα δὲ ἡμᾶς οὐ παρίστησι τῷ Θεῷ· h Rom. 14. 17.

οὔτε γὰρ ἐὰν φάγωμεν, περισσεύομεν· οὔτε ἐὰν μὴ φάγωμεν, 9 ὑστερούμεθα. [i] Βλέπετε δὲ μήπως ἡ ἐξουσία ὑμῶν αὕτη i Rom. 14. 13, 20.
10 πρόσκομμα γένηται τοῖς ἀσθενοῦσιν. ἐὰν γάρ τις ἴδῃ σὲ, τὸν Gal. 5. 13.
ἔχοντα γνῶσιν, ἐν εἰδωλείῳ κατακείμενον, οὐχὶ ἡ συνείδησις αὐτοῦ, ἀσθενοῦς ὄντος, οἰκοδομηθήσεται εἰς τὸ τὰ εἰδωλόθυτα 11 ἐσθίειν; [k] καὶ ἀπολεῖται ὁ ἀσθενῶν ἀδελφὸς ἐπὶ τῇ σῇ γνώσει, k Rom. 14. 15, 20.

not exclude Jesus Christ from being the God of Christians, any more than he excludes the Father from being Lord by calling Christ 'the one Lord.' In short, as Dr. Pye Smith (Script. Test. vol. iii. p. 332) proves, 'the Deity of Christ can no more be denied because the Father is here called the One God, than the dominion of the Father can be denied because the Son is called the One Lord.' By this mode of expression it is intimated that Father and Son are one God and one Lord in the unity of the Godhead.

7. In this verse the Apostle briefly refutes what had been urged in the way of excuse on the part of those who had knowledge; and that on the ground that it was not sufficient for them if they knew they were doing rightly, unless they had respect to their brethren likewise; (Calvin,) q. d. 'You rightly hold that there is but one God, and that the heathen idol-gods are non-entities; but this knowledge the weak have not, and therefore ye do not act rightly.' (Hyperius.)

— ἡ γνῶσις] 'the knowledge of this;' namely, that an idol is nought, has no virtue, whether to sanctify or to pollute. In the remaining words of the verse we have a declaration à contrario, and meant to show how it is that all have not this full knowledge: the complete sense being, 'But some, in the secret persuasion of the idol's being something (i. e. a real being), even yet eat of the food, as if it were food offered to some really existing demon; and [their perception of right and wrong being weak and ill-informed] their conscience is, as it were, defiled or stained in its purity, [and they feel self-condemned;]' i. e. by doing what they believe to be wrong. So, in Ammian. Marc. xv. 2 (cited by Pott), he is said 'polluere conscientiam,' who is troubled with the reproaches of an evil conscience.

8. βρῶμα δὲ ἡμᾶς, &c.] This we may, with the best Commentators, regard as spoken in the person of the Corinthians, and as containing the other plea (and that derived è rerum naturâ), by which they justified their eating idol-meats; q. d. 'But food (i. e. the eating, or the abstaining from, certain meats) does not recommend us to the favour of God;' or, as St. Paul himself teaches, Rom. xiv. 17, 'the kingdom of God is not meat and drink.' To advert to the phraseology, παριστάναι signifies properly 'to introduce any one to the notice of another,' his superior; and, from the adjunct, 'to recommend to his favour.' So Arrian, Epict. i. 16, αὐτὰ ἐπαινέσαι, ἢ παραστῆσαι. Περισσεύομεν and ὑστερούμεθα signify, 'are we the better or the worse [Christians]?' The inference (left to be supplied) is: 'Therefore it matters not, whether we sit down to table at idol-feasts or not.' To which the Apostle answers, βλέπετε δὲ, &c.; q. d. [True;] 'but be careful, lest the exercise of this liberty of yours,' &c.; for such (as the ancient and many modern Commentators explain) is the sense of ἐξουσία, as denoting what is claimed as a right, though it may be an abuse of right. Thus it is shown to be sinful at x. 15—23.

10. ἐὰν γὰρ—ἐσθίειν;] Here we have an illustration by example; q. d. 'So, for instance, if any one thus weak see you, who have this [boasted] knowledge, sitting at table in an idol-temple, will not his conscience [weak and wavering as he is] be emboldened, so as to eat what has been offered to idols?'

But, to briefly consider the phraseology in detail, κατακείμενον is a term appropriate to the reclining posture of eating food both among the Orientals and the Greeks. Εἰδωλείῳ, 'idol-temple,' a word frequent in the Apocrypha, and of the same form with Ποσιδώνειον and many others ending in ειον, which are properly adjectives with an ellipsis of ἱερόν. On the sense of οἰκοδομηθήσεται there has been some doubt. By Wetstein, Storr, Rosenmuller, and Pott, it is thought to be used ironically; which, however, is too harsh. It is better, with some ancient Commentators, and, of the moderns, Grotius, Schmid., Kypke, Valcknaer, Krause, and Heydenreich, to render it, 'will be confirmed or emboldened;' as Mal. iii. 15, οἰκοδομοῦνται ποιοῦντες ἄνομα, and Josephus, Ant. xvi. 6, εἰς νουθεσίαν τὴν ἐκείνων οἰκοδομῶν αὐτόν. There is, indeed, a sort of phrasis prægnans; the full sense being, 'he will be confirmed in his opinion as to the lawfulness of eating idol-meats,' &c.; and thereby be emboldened and induced to do what his conscience tells him is wrong,—to eat idol-meats. The word is well rendered by Schlichting, 'erigetur et excitabitur;' and he acutely remarks, 'qui enim ædificantur erigi solent.' In fact, erigetur is the best single term wherewith to express the sense; that word signifying both to be emboldened, and to be incited.

11. καὶ ἀπολεῖται] 'and thus by thy knowledge will thy weak brother perish,' &c. Ἀπολ. is a very strong term, probably adopted in order to make an antithesis with ἀπέθανεν; the last clause being intended to place in the strongest point of view the enormity of the offence. And yet the exact amount of evil done (and consequently of guilt incurred) was, as appears from the next verse and ver. 7, inflicting a wound on the conscience of the weak brother, by inducing him to do that which he could not reconcile with his conscience. The word must therefore be under-

l Rom. 14. 18.
δι' ὃν Χριστὸς ἀπέθανεν. [l] Οὕτω δὲ ἁμαρτάνοντες εἰς τοὺς 12
ἀδελφοὺς, καὶ τύπτοντες αὐτῶν τὴν συνείδησιν ἀσθενοῦσαν, εἰς m Rom. 14. 21. 2 Cor. 11. 29.
Χριστὸν ἁμαρτάνετε. [m] Διόπερ, εἰ βρῶμα σκανδαλίζει τὸν 13 ἀδελφόν μου, οὐ μὴ φάγω κρέα εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, ἵνα μὴ τὸν ἀδελφόν μου σκανδαλίσω.

a Acts 9. 3, 17, & 22. 14, 17, 18. & 23. 11. supra 4. 15. infra 15. 8. 2 Cor. 12. 12.
IX. [a] ΟΥΚ εἰμὶ ‡ ἀπόστολος; οὐκ εἰμὶ ‡ ἐλεύθερος; 1 οὐχὶ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν ἑώρακα; οὐ τὸ ἔργον μου ὑμεῖς ἐστε ἐν Κυρίῳ; Εἰ ἄλλοις οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος, 2 stood of grievous injury to the soul, and such as, except by the special grace of God, would prove fatally ruinous.

12. What is here said, is meant to further illustrate the enormity of the offence; q. d. that the injury and wrong done to the weak brother is regarded as an offence against Christ, by impeding the progress of his Gospel.

— τύπτοντες αὐτῶν, &c.] Τύπτ. is a strong term denoting injury done by violence, and is used figuratively to denote deep mental perturbation, as in 1 Sam. i. 8, and Prov. xxvi. 22.

13. διόπερ, εἰ βρῶμα, &c.] We have here the conclusion of the whole reasoning; expressed, however, by the Apostle, through modesty, not in the form of a command (though meant to be such), but, per κοίνωσιν, in his own person. At οὐ μὴ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα we have a strong expression, to signify 'never, as long as one lives.'

IX. In continuation of the same subject (the extent of Christian liberty) the Apostle proceeds to show, by his own example, that many things in themselves lawful, ought to be abstained from, for the sake of others; and that many things of much greater consequence he had abstained from, that he might not offend weak brethren, or throw an impediment in the way of religion. (Krause and Rosenmuller.)

After establishing his full claims to be obeyed, on the ground of an Apostleship of a nature fully equal to the other Apostles, as one, in some degree, an eye-witness of the resurrection of Christ, he shows that he had sometimes not exercised the various privileges resulting from that station, but, as far as was permitted by conscience, had yielded to the prejudices of weak brethren. In short, he adduces himself as an example, that he demanded nothing from them but what he had himself done and was doing.

1. οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος; οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐλεύθερος;] Seven MSS., and some Versions and Latin Fathers, make ἐλ. precede ἀπόστ.; which was approved by Grotius, Beza, and Bengel, and has been edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Krause, Tittman, Pott, and Scholz; but without sufficient reason. The MS. evidence is slender, that of Latin Fathers of little weight, and far overbalanced by the Greek Fathers; and that of Versions is liable to exception. The above Critics, indeed, urge that the climax requires this; there being, they think, a gradation from St. Paul's right as a man to his right as an Apostle. But that is taking for granted what requires to be proved. It would rather seem that in this verse he (as Lightf. remarks) does not treat of political, nay, not even of Christian liberty generally, but of Apostolical liberty. The common reading is, with reason, retained by Wetstein, and also Matthæi, who has well vindicated it, and shown its superiority to the new reading. Rinck, too, after testifying that all the MSS. he has collated have the common reading, gives the preference to it, and ably shows the origin of the transposition. There could, indeed, have arisen no doubt as to the correctness of the common reading, had the true nature of the words been perceived, though it was long ago shown by Crellius, who remarks that it is equivalent to, 'Am I not an Apostle, and thence free to act accordingly?'

The next words are meant (as Crellius observes) to anticipate an objection,—that Paul was not one of the Apostles, and therefore had not any such authority. The words of the answer to which, by the interrogation with a negation, have the force of a strong affirmation; namely, that he has seen Jesus Christ in the flesh; which must be understood, not (as some recent Commentators explain) of those visions of an ecstatic kind mentioned at 2 Cor. xii. 1, but of the transaction on the road to Damascus (Acts xxii. 13—15), as the course of argument requires. For, as Billroth observes, 'St. Paul is here vindicating his claim to the dignity of an Apostle, in virtue of which he stood upon a par with the other Apostles; and the justness of this depended upon whether he had received the apostolic office from Christ, in the same way as they had received it.' In short, as Whitby remarks, 'The Apostles being chosen to be witnesses of the resurrection, it was requisite that St. Paul likewise should have seen him risen. Hence the language addressed to him by Ananias, Acts xxii. 13—15, and his own declaration to Agrippa, Acts xxvi. 26. Accordingly we find that Christ was seen of him, xv. 8; nay, often appeared to him after his resurrection, Acts xviii. 9. xxii. 18, and that he was taught the Gospel by the immediate revelation of Jesus Christ.' In the words following, οὐ τὸ ἔργον—Κυρίῳ; St. Paul proves his Apostleship ab effectis; namely, from having, in the actual exercise of that office, converted them to Christianity; which, without Divine assistance (a proof of his Divine mission) could not have been done. Therefore, by so doing, ἀποστολικὴν διακονίαν πεπλήρωκε. So in the Classical writers the pupils or élèves of any one are said to be their work; ex. gr. Philo, cited by Wetstein: ἐμόν ἐστι ἔργον Γάϊος, and Seneca, Epist. 34, 'Assero te mihi; meum opus es.' By ἐν Κυρίῳ we are to understand, 'in the business of the Lord and his religion.'

2. εἰ ἄλλοις—ὑμῖν εἰμι.] It is well observed by Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators, that St. Paul here speaks κατὰ συγχώρησιν; q. d. 'granted that I am not an Apostle to others, or, if there be any who doubt of my Apostleship, ἀλλά γε ὑμῖν εἰμι· ἡ γὰρ σφραγὶς τῆς ἐμῆς ἀποστολῆς

3 ὑμεῖς ἐστε ἐν Κυρίῳ. Ἡ ἐμὴ ἀπολογία τοῖς ἐμὲ ἀνακρί-4 νουσιν αὕτη ἐστί· [b] Μὴ οὐκ ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν φαγεῖν καὶ b Infra v. 14. 1 Thess. 2. 6. 2 Thess. 3. 9.
5 πιεῖν; [c] μὴ οὐκ ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα περιάγειν, c Matt. 13. 55.
ὡς καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ ἀπόστολοι, καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, καὶ 6 Κηφᾶς; [d] ἢ μόνος ἐγὼ καὶ Βαρνάβας οὐκ ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν d 2 Thess. 3. 8, 9.
7 τοῦ μὴ ἐργάζεσθαι; [e] Τίς στρατεύεται ἰδίοις ὀψωνίοις ποτέ; e John 21. 15. 1 Pet. 5. 2. Deut. 20. 6.
τίς φυτεύει ἀμπελῶνα, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ καρποῦ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἐσθίει; ἢ τίς ποιμαίνει ποίμνην, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ γάλακτος τῆς

you at least cannot doubt it, to whom I have approved myself as such:' probably glancing at some who had denied him to be an Apostle, though they acknowledged him as a Teacher.

— ἡ γὰρ σφραγὶς, &c.] These words are confirmatory of the preceding. Σφραγὶς, as it properly denoted the impression made by a seal,—which, being affixed to writings, is a proof and evidence of their authenticity,—so it came to mean generally a demonstration. Thus the sense is, 'Your being in the Lord (i. e. your conversion to Christianity) is a decided proof of my Apostleship' (ἀποστολῆς for διακονίας ἀποστολικῆς), as a seal is of the authenticity of a writing; or as a seal, put by a workman on his work, proves it to be his work; compare 2 Cor. iii. 2. Ἐν Κυρίῳ. The expression is to be taken as at ver. 1, where see Note.

3. ἡ ἐμὴ ἀπολογία—ἐστί.] Expositors are not agreed whether what is here said, be meant of what precedes, or what follows. Most of them refer it to the latter: but though a good sense thus arises, it is more agreeable to the course of the argument to refer it to what precedes; as is done by the most eminent Expositors, ancient and modern. So Hyperius says it is equivalent to 'Certè si quispiam multum roget, num sim Apostolus, hæc mihi est usitata et sufficiens responsio, quam jam dedi, quod vos estis sigillum mei Apostolatus.' Ἀπολογία and ἀνακρ. are forensic terms, used by St. Paul in order to glance at the arrogance of those who sat in judgment (ἀνακρ.) on his Apostleship, debating on his claims; as if, because he had waved the use of his privilege of Apostle, he was no Apostle, but only an ordinary minister.

4. Having vindicated his Apostleship, he adverts to his rights and privileges therein; which, however, he shows, by examples, he had often forborne to use. (Krause and Pott.)

— ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν φαγεῖν, &c.] Ἔχομεν is by the best Commentators taken for ἔχω. But it may be understood of all the Apostles. By φαγεῖν καὶ πιεῖν is meant maintenance suitable to the situation which they held; a right originally granted to the Apostles by our Lord, Matt. x. 9. It was, indeed, as the Commentators have shown, the custom, among all the nations of antiquity, for the publicly appointed teachers of religion to be liberally supported by those whom they instructed.

5. ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα περιάγειν.] Most ancient, and many modern, Commentators take ἀδ. γυν. to mean a sister-woman, i. e. a Christian woman, or matron. Thus it will refer to those pious women, who followed the Apostles for instruction, and sometimes, as in the case of our Lord, ministered to them of their substance. As, however, περιάγειν implies both conveyance and sustenance at the expense of the Church, (of course, by journeys taken for the spread of the Gospel,) that interpretation cannot be admitted. The best modern Commentators are with reason agreed that ἀδελφ. γυν. means a sister-wife, i. e. a wife who shall be a sister, namely, Christian, as vii. 15. Or rather, we may take γυναῖκα as a substantive qualifying ἀδελφ., and suppose an ellipsis of οὖσαν, q. d. 'a sister who shall be our wife.' A similar use of περιάγω occurs in Demosthenes, p. 958. 15, τρεῖς παῖδας ἀκολούθους περιάγειν. The chief reason for the Apostles being allowed this privilege was, not only that those females might minister to their domestic comfort, but that they might be instrumental to the conversion or religious instruction of females, especially the unmarried.

6. ἢ μόνος ἐγὼ, &c.] Meaning, 'or am I only and Barnabas to be made exceptions to the general rule,—that Apostles have the privilege,' &c.? Doddridge supposes μόνος ἐγὼ to point at some peculiar spleen, which had arisen against the two Apostles of the uncircumcision. But it would rather seem that this was especially expected from them, by the circumstances under which they had begun and carried forward the work of evangelization; which had led them first to adopt, and afterwards to persevere in, the method of subsisting by their own labour, and probably with the same view, of practising celibacy. The drift of the Apostle, in adverting to his having waved this liberality, was probably what Mr. Scott supposes,—namely, that the Corinthians might see, as in a glass, the impropriety of their selfish exercise of their liberty in eating εἰδωλόθυτα.

7—14. The Apostle here adduces arguments for the right in question, and illustrates it by three examples; two taken from common life, and the custom of the Gentiles, the third from the injunctions of the Mosaic Law.

7. τίς στρατεύεται ἰδ. ὀψ. π.;] 'Who ever serves as a soldier at his own expense?'

— καὶ ἐκ τοῦ καρποῦ αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἐσθίει;] We may here suppose either an ellipsis of μέρος τι, by a Hebraism, or a partitive construction, more or less common to all languages. Ἐσθίειν has here the sense to feed oneself, as 2 Kings iv. 42, and Judith x. 5. xiii. 11. The construction of ἐσθίειν with a Genitive is rare, and with the Genitive and ἐκ is regarded by Steph. Thes. p. 1909 C., as unexampled elsewhere.

The application, as Pott observes, left to be supplied, is, 'So neither ought the Apostles.'

ποίμνης οὐκ ἐσθίει; Μὴ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον ταῦτα λαλῶ; ἢ 8
f Deut. 25. 4. 1 Tim. 5. 18. οὐχὶ καὶ ὁ νόμος ταῦτα λέγει; [f] ἐν γὰρ τῷ Μωϋσέως νόμῳ 9 γέγραπται· Οὐ φιμώσεις βοῦν ἀλοῶντα. Μὴ τῶν g 2 Tim. 2. 6. βοῶν μέλει τῷ Θεῷ; [g] ἢ δι' ἡμᾶς πάντως λέγει; δι' ἡμᾶς 10 γὰρ ἐγράφη, ὅτι ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ὀφείλει ὁ ἀροτριῶν ἀροτριᾷν, h Rom. 15. 27. Gal. 6. 6. καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν τῆς ἐλπίδος αὐτοῦ μετέχειν ἐπ' ἐλπίδι. [h] Εἰ 11 ἡμεῖς ὑμῖν τὰ πνευματικὰ ἐσπείραμεν, μέγα, εἰ ἡμεῖς ὑμῶν i Acts 20. 33. 2 Cor. 11. 9, 12. & 12. 13. 1 Thess. 2. 7. τὰ σαρκικὰ θερίσομεν; [i] Εἰ ἄλλοι τῆς ἐξουσίας ὑμῶν μετέ- 12 χουσιν, οὐ μᾶλλον ἡμεῖς; Ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐχρησάμεθα τῇ ἐξου-σίᾳ ταύτῃ· ἀλλὰ πάντα στέγομεν, ἵνα μὴ ἐγκοπήν τινα

8—11. To human enactments are now subjoined Divine sanctions; there being, too, a conclusio à minori ad majus.

8. κατὰ ἄνθρωπον] i. e. by a reference to the practice of men and the sanction of human law, as opposed to arguments drawn from Scripture; q. d. 'Is what I say, that the labourer is worthy of his reward, a principle of human law only, or is it not also recognised in the Divine law of Scripture?' The γὰρ has reference to the affirmation implied in the immediately foregoing interrogation; q. d. '[Yea;] for,' &c.

9. μὴ τῶν βοῶν.] Supply μόνον, suggested by the emphasis, whence also is implied, 'and not of men also.' For perspicuity, however, there is added, ἢ δι' ἡμᾶς πάντως λέγει; of which words the sense is, 'Or saith he it [not] especially for us [men]?' q. d. may not men learn much from this? namely, that (by an argument à minori ad majus) the ministers of the Gospel have a right to maintenance. Then the words following, ver. 10, directly affirm what was only before indirectly propounded. The γὰρ is to be explained as at v. 9.

10. καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν, &c.] With these words both the ancient and modern Interpreters have been perplexed. The numerous varr. lectt. only show that the ancients felt the difficulty, and endeavoured to remove it in the same manner as have some moderns, namely, by Critical conjecture. Griesbach and others edit (from a few MSS. and some Versions and Fathers) ὅτι ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ὀφ. ὁ ἀ. ἀ. καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν, ἐπ' ἐλπίδι τοῦ μετέχειν. But I agree with Rinck, that this is 'magis facilius intellectu quam verius.' And he truly remarks, that no one would have added the somewhat obscure words τῆς ἐλπίδος αὐτοῦ, by way of explication, and least of all in an inverse order. The passage assuredly needs not emendation, but explanation; and the following will, I apprehend, be found the true construction and interpretation: καὶ ὁ ἀλοῶν (ὀφείλει ἀλοᾷν) ἐπ' ἐλπίδι (τοῦ) μετέχειν τῆς ἐλπίδος αὐτοῦ, 'And he that reapeth ought to reap in hope to partake of [the fruits of] his hope.' So Horace speaks of the husbandman as 'spe finis dura ferentem.' Here we have an argutè dictum united with a paronomasia, such as is frequent in St. Paul. Of this sense of ἐλπὶς (as denoting the object of hope, as Col. i. 5) several examples are adduced by Krause and Rosenmuller. In this phrase the ἐπὶ denotes the ground of hope, that on which it is founded and rests. By the same metaphor we say, 'upon condition,' as the Latin 'sub conditione,' and here 'sub spe.' Finally, μετέχειν is here put for ἔχειν or χρῆσθαι, as in Hebr. v. 13. Herodot. vi. 107. Xen. Œcon. xvii. 6. So Thucyd. vii. 69, has ἡλικίας μετέχων.

11. The Apostle, continuing the above agricultural figure, now proceeds to show, by another argument à minori ad majus (similar to that at Rom. xv. 27), that, on principles of commutative justice, ministers are fairly entitled to a competent provision; q. d. 'If, for instance, we [the ministers of the Gospel] have committed to you, as it were, the seed of spiritual and religious instruction, is it a mighty matter (i. e. an unreasonable thing) that we should reap and enjoy the carnal and temporal supports you can supply us with.' The argument proceeding, as Estius observes, on the inequality of that which is given and that which is received.

— ὑμῖν.] A dativus commodi; 'for your spiritual benefit.' At μέγα supply μήτι εἴη, and ἔργον, expressed in Eurip. Inc. Frag. 401 (cited by Kypke), τὸν λαβόντα τῶν λόγων καλὰς ἀφορμὰς, οὐ μέγ' ἔργον εὖ λέγειν. This ellipsis (which occurs also at 2 Cor. xi. 15) is rare in Greek; while in the Latin, magnum, so used, is common. The English idiom here exactly corresponds.

— τὰ σαρκικὰ θερ.] 'enjoy the corporeal supports of your substance.'

12. εἰ ἄλλοι, &c.] Another argumentum à minori ad majus. By ἄλλοι are meant those who had casually visited and evangelized the Corinthians; and of whom some probably settled at Corinth, and became the ψευδαπόστολοι, false teachers, so often alluded to by St. Paul, and whose own conduct, in this respect, was directly the reverse of the Apostle's, evincing both tyranny and rapacity.

— τῆς ἐξουσίας ὑμῶν.] The best Commentators are, with reason, agreed that ἐξουσία here signifies right, as in Matt. xxi. 23. Acts xxvi. 10, and elsewhere; and moreover, that ὑμῶν is a Genit. of object for εἰς ἡμᾶς, as ἐξουσία πνευμάτων, 'power over spirits,' in Matt. x. 1, and ἐξ. πάσης σαρκὸς in John xvii. 2. But the true ratio idiomatis would seem to be, that as μετέχουσιν ἐξουσίας is a compound phrase, equivalent to ἐξουσιάζουσι, it may take the same regimen as that would,—namely, the Genitive.

— οὐ μᾶλλον.] This seems to stand, per ellipsin, for πῶς οὐ μᾶλλον, which occurs in full at 2 Cor. iii. 8.

— ἀλλὰ πάντα στέγομεν.] Στέγω (which is cognate with τέγω, tego) signifies properly to keep out or off (as a ship when it is not leaky), 13 δῶμεν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ. [k] Οὐκ οἴδατε, ὅτι οἱ k Num. 18. 8—20.

τὰ ἱερὰ ἐργαζόμενοι ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἐσθίουσιν· οἱ τῷ θυσι- Deut. 18. 1.
αστηρίῳ προσεδρεύοντες τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ συμμερίζονται;
14 οὕτω καὶ ὁ Κύριος διέταξε τοῖς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον καταγγέλ-15 λουσιν, ἐκ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ζῆν. [l] Ἐγὼ δὲ οὐδενὶ ἐχρησάμην l Acts 18. 3. & 20. 34.
τούτων. οὐκ ἔγραψα δὲ ταῦτα, ἵνα οὕτω γένηται ἐν ἐμοί· supra 4. 12. 2 Cor. 11. 10.
καλὸν γάρ μοι μᾶλλον ἀποθανεῖν, ἢ τὸ καύχημά μου ἵνα 1 Thess. 2. 9. 2 Thess. 3. 8.
16 τὶς κενώσῃ. [m] Ἐὰν γὰρ εὐαγγελίζωμαι, οὐκ ἔστι μοι καύ- m Rom. 1. 14.
χημα· ἀνάγκη γάρ μοι ἐπίκειται· οὐαὶ δέ μοι ἐστὶν ἐὰν Acts 9. 6.
17 μὴ εὐαγγελίζωμαι. [n] εἰ γὰρ ἑκὼν τοῦτο πράσσω, μισθὸν n Supra 9, 14.
18 ἔχω· εἰ δὲ ἄκων,—οἰκονομίαν πεπίστευμαι. [o] Τίς οὖν μοί & 4. 1. Col. 1. 25.
ἐστιν ὁ μισθός; ἵνα εὐαγγελιζόμενος ἀδάπανον θήσω τὸ o 2 Cor. 11. 7.
εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, εἰς τὸ μὴ καταχρήσασθαι τῇ or to keep in, as a vessel to hold liquid. Hence it comes to mean continere and sustinere. See my Note on Thucydides, ii. 94. 10. Schleusner, after Kypke, well explains: 'Sed continemus nos, quæ [omnia] nempe alios offendere possint:' οὐ χρώμεθα τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ ἡμῶν, namely, that of receiving a stipend. Ἐγκοπὴν δῶμεν is for ἐγκόπτωμεν, 'should hinder the [success of] the Gospel,' by the people grudging the expense of my maintenance, and imputing to me interested motives.

13. Here we have another argument in proof of his ministerial rights, derived from the Mosaic Law. Τὰ ἱερὰ ἐργαζ. is for ἱερατεύοντες, 'qui sacris operantur,' meaning those who officiated in the worship of the Temple. Wetstein compares Hom. Od. ε. 101, οἵ τε θεοῖσι ἱερά τε ῥέζουσι. The words οἱ τῷ θυσ. προσεδρεύοντες, &c. form a parallelism; though the superior priesthood, who especially attended at the altar, seem by those words to be designated, as by τὰ ἱερὰ ἐργαζ. the inferior. See Chrysost. On προσεδρ., see Note at vii. 35, and compare προσέχειν τῷ θυσ. in Heb. vii. 13.

14. Here we have another argument in vindication of the above right.

— διέταξε] for διάταγμα ἐποίησε, or ἐνομοθέτησε, namely, at Matt. x. 10, and Luke x. 7. In τοῖς καταγγέλλουσιν we have a Dative of reference, instead of an Accusative with a preposition. Of the phrase ζῆν ἐκ or ἀπό τινος, as said of that which supplies a livelihood, several examples are adduced by Kypke. With the sentiment compare Joseph. Bell. v. 13. 6, ἔλεγεν, ὡς δεῖ μετὰ ἀδείας καταχρήσασθαι τοῖς θείοις ὑπὲρ τοῦ θείου, καὶ τοὺς τῷ ναῷ στρατευομένους ἐξ αὐτοῦ τρέφεσθαι.

15. Having thus asserted his right, the Apostle now shows that he has not used this right, and why.

— ἐγὼ δὲ οὐδενὶ, &c.] The ἐγὼ (as at xi. 23. xv. 9) is emphatic: 'I at least, I for my part, whatever others may do.' Οὐδενὶ τούτων, i. e. none of the things which pertain to that right, and are included in it (see vv. 4, 5), i. e. neither money, nor its equivalent. Ἵνα οὕτω γέν. ἐν ἐμοὶ, 'that this should be done in my case.' Καλὸν with μᾶλλον is for καλλίον, as Mark ix. 42. The syntax with the Dative is Hellenistic Greek.

— ἢ ἵνα τὶς κενώσῃ.] Meaning, 'rather than any one should be enabled to make void my boasting [namely, that I am burdensome to none], by being enabled to assert that I took pay.' Τὸ καύχ. Meaning, that whereof I may be proud.

16, 17. On the general scope of these verses, see Recens. Synop. The sense is very well expressed by Abp. Newcome thus: '[I say my glorying;] for if I merely preach the Gospel, I have no glorying. For I am under a moral necessity of doing this, and incur guilt if I do it not. And I must not merely preach the Gospel, but preach it with ardour and disinterestedness. For, &c.; but if I preach it against my will, a trust is committed to me, of which I must give an account.' After ἄκων must be supplied, from the preceding context, ἀνάγκη μοι ἐπίκειται πράσσειν τοῦτο, 'do it I must,' for οἰκονομίαν πεπίστευμαι· where observe the inversion of construction for ἡ οἰκ. πεπίστευταί μοι, as Rom. iii. 2. So Thucyd. vii. 57, ξυνέβη δὲ τοῖς Κρησὶ—ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀποίκους ἄκοντας μετὰ μισθοῦ ἐλθεῖν, where see my Note.

18. The import of this verse mainly depends upon the force assigned to the expression μισθὸς, on which some difference of opinion exists. Most Expositors take it in its ordinary sense, and Wetstein, Rosenmuller, Krause, and Iaspis here recognise an acutè dictum; q. d. 'What, then, is my reward? why, truly to receive no reward at all.' But, though such terms do occasionally occur in the Apostle, they are not to be supposed unnecessarily. And here the sentiment would not suit the context; for the οὖν is here evidently meant to introduce a conclusion from the foregoing premises. That sense, too, is forbidden by the phrase ἵνα θήσω, which rather denotes the means than the mode. It is best, with the ancient and the early modern Commentators generally, to consider μισθὸς here used, by metonymy, for the cause of reward, the ground of boasting; for the two are, in the present passage, interchanged: q. d. 'What, then, is my claim of reward, or ground of glorying, the thing in which I am superior to the other Apostles? namely, this, that I preach the Gospel to you without charge, and do not use my power of living at your expense.' See Calvin and Hyperius.

Καταχρ. is usually taken for χρήσασθαι, compound for simple. Yet that the compound p Gal. 5. 13. Matt. 18. 15. ἐξουσίᾳ μου ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ. [p] Ἐλεύθερος γὰρ ὢν ἐκ 19 πάντων, πᾶσιν ἐμαυτὸν ἐδούλωσα, ἵνα τοὺς πλείονας κερ-q Acts 16. 3. & 21. 23, &c. δήσω. [q] Καὶ ἐγενόμην τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις ὡς Ἰουδαῖος, ἵνα 20 Ἰουδαίους κερδήσω· τοῖς ὑπὸ νόμον ὡς ὑπὸ νόμον, [μὴ ὢν

r Gal. 2. 3. supra 7. 22. αὐτὸς ὑπὸ νόμον] ἵνα τοὺς ὑπὸ νόμον κερδήσω· [r] τοῖς 21 ἀνόμοις ὡς ἄνομος, (μὴ ὢν ἄνομος Θεῷ ἀλλ' ἔννομος s Rom. 15. 1. & 11. 14. infra 10. 33. Χριστῷ,) ἵνα κερδήσω ἀνόμους. [s] Ἐγενόμην τοῖς ἀσθενέσιν 22 ὡς ἀσθενὴς, ἵνα τοὺς ἀσθενεῖς κερδήσω. Τοῖς πᾶσι γέγονα t Gal. 5. 7. Phil. 2. 16. & 3. 14. 2 Tim. 4. 7. τὰ πάντα, ἵνα πάντως τινὰς σώσω. Τοῦτο δὲ ποιῶ διὰ τὸ 23 εὐαγγέλιον, ἵνα συγκοινωνὸς αὐτοῦ γένωμαι. [t] Οὐκ οἴδατε, 24 should here be used without some cause, can hardly be supposed. It would rather seem that the prep. κατὰ is, as often, intensive, and the sense intended is 'ut perutar,' 'that I may use to the uttermost:' meaning (as Calvin suggests) to intimate that the pressing his right in a case like this would be a kind of abuse of it. In fact, καταχρ. here seems to correspond to καταχρ. supra vii. 31 (by a kind of significatio prægnans), the full sense being, 'so as to not use (or rather I might say abuse) my power.'

19. Having, at vv. 2—18, spoken with reference to the question οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος (showing that he had, for avoiding offence, waved his right as Apostle, and preached the Gospel costfree), the Apostle now adverts to the other and subsequent question, οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐλεύθερος; (Pott.)

— ἐλεύθερος ἐκ πάντων] i. e. 'under no obligation to serve them.' Ἐμ. ἐδούλ., i. e. acting as their servant, declining no labour, and making myself subservient to their wills, becoming τοῖς πᾶσι τὰ πάντα; 'and that not for an unworthy end, as a flatterer, but that I might,' &c.

— τοὺς πλείονας.] The article means 'the more,' i. e. more than he otherwise would. Κερδ. may be rendered, 'might gain over to Christianity.' Comp. Matt. xviii. 9, 15. 1 Pet. iii. 1.

20, 21. Here is shown the nature of the δουλεία just mentioned. Ὡς Ἰουδαῖος, viz. by the observance of Jewish rites and ceremonies. See Acts xxi. 26, and xvi. 3. By τοῖς ὑπὸ νόμον are meant Gentile proselytes to Judaism, some of them converted to Christianity, but yet adhering to the Jewish rites and ceremonies.

Between ὑπὸ νόμον and ἵνα are found, in several MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, the words μὴ ὢν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ νόμον, which were approved by Mill and Bengel, and admitted into the text by Griesbach, Knapp, Krause, Tittman, Vater, and Pott. But I rather agree with Matthæi, that they ought not to be received, since, although the clause might have been omitted per homœoteleuton, yet it is very improbable that this should have taken place in all the MSS. except fifteen; which might, as Matthæi observes, be corrupted from the Vulgate, the insertion being, as he thinks, formed in order to correspond to the μὴ ὢν—Χριστῷ in the next verse. The authority of Fathers here is of no great weight, especially since they are inconsistent with themselves. I have, in this third edition, admitted the clause, but have taken care to express my doubt of its authenticity, by inclosing it in brackets.

21. τοῖς ἀνόμοις] i. e. τοῖς μὴ ὑπὸ νόμον, ver. 20,—namely, the Gentiles, οἱ νόμον μὴ ἔχοντες, Rom. ii. 12. 14. To these he became ἄνομος, by not observing the Mosaic Law. This use of the word ἄνομος, however, being somewhat irregular, the Apostle explains it by the parenthetical clause μὴ ὢν ἄνομος Θεῷ, which signifies, 'not as though I were under no Divine Law,' ἀλλ' ἔννομος Χριστῷ, 'but under law towards Christ, and the precepts of the Christian religion.'

22. τοῖς ἀσθενέσιν.] This has reference to the less instructed, and therefore superstitiously scrupulous, both of Jews and Gentiles. See supra viii. 11, 12. To these Paul accommodated himself in things indifferent, and, to sum up the whole, says, τοῖς πᾶσι (scil. καὶ Ἰουδαίοις, καὶ ἀνόμοις, καὶ ἀσθενέσι) γέγονα τὰ πάντα; i. e. (as Pott explains) εὐτράπελος (sensu bono,) μυρίας τροπὰς τραπόμενος, πρὸς πάντας εὐάρμοστος, παντοῖος γέγονα. By a similar mode of expression it is said in Lucian, de Morte Pereg. (cited by Krause,) ἅπαντα γὰρ, δόξης ἕνεκα γενόμενος, καὶ μυρίας τροπὰς τραπόμενος. So also Heraclit. ap. Stob. Serm. xlviii. 13. ἀνθρώποις γίνεσθαι ὁκόσα θέλουσιν οὐκ ἄμεινον. And, by a similar paronomasia, Joseph. Ant. xvii. 10. 7, ἀνεπιφανὴς τοῖς πᾶσι εἰς τὰ πάντα.

The τὰ before πάντα is not found in several MSS. and Fathers, and Bp. Middleton would cancel it. Indeed, two passages of Ach. Tatius and Lucian, cited by the Commentators, have πάντα joined with γενέσθαι without the Article. But there it is only used for παντοῖος γενέσθαι, and is not followed by τοῖς πᾶσι· which makes a material difference. The Apostle, it seems, used the Article at πάντα because he used it at πᾶσι, intending thus to strengthen the antithesis, as is the case in the above passage of Josephus.

— ἵνα πάντως τινὰς σώσω] 'may put into a state of salvation.' Πάντως is by some rendered omnino ; by others, utique, or saltem. Perhaps both senses may be united. So Heydenreich on 1 Cor. ii. 7, renders omnino saltem. Τινὰς, q. d. οὐ πολλοὺς, as compared to the number of those to whom the offer of salvation was made.

23. τοῦτο δὲ ποιῶ—γένωμαι] q. d. 'This conduct I pursue (i. e. these compliances I make) for the Gospel's sake (i. e. for its further propagation), to the end that I may, with you, be partaker of its benefits.'

24. The mention of the future rewards of the Gospel probably suggested to the Apostle the idea of the prizes in the Grecian agonistic contests ; and, accordingly, on this he founded the earnest exhortation following,—to strive after the rewards of the Gospel as strenuously as the athletæ did after ὅτι οἱ ἐν σταδίῳ τρέχοντες πάντες μὲν τρέχουσιν, εἷς δὲ λαμβάνει τὸ βραβεῖον; οὕτω τρέχετε, ἵνα καταλάβητε.

25 [u] Πᾶς δὲ ὁ ἀγωνιζόμενος, πάντα ἐγκρατεύεται· ἐκεῖνοι μὲν u Eph. 6. 12. 1 Tim. 6. 12.
οὖν, ἵνα φθαρτὸν στέφανον λάβωσιν, ἡμεῖς δὲ ἄφθαρτον. 2 Tim. 2. 5. & 4. 7, 8. 1 Pet. 1. 4.
26 [x] Ἐγὼ τοίνυν οὕτω τρέχω, ὡς οὐκ ἀδήλως· οὕτω πυκτεύω, & 5. 4. James 1. 12.
27 ὡς οὐκ ἀέρα δέρων. [y] Ἀλλ' ὑπωπιάζω μου τὸ σῶμα καὶ x 2 Tim. 2. 5. & 4. 8. y Rom. 8. 13.
δουλαγωγῶ· μήπως ἄλλοις κηρύξας, αὐτὸς ἀδόκιμος γέ- Col. 3. 5. Rom. 6. 18.
νωμαι.

those of the public games; such as the Olympic, the Isthmian, the Pythian, and the Nemæan; q. d., in the words of Billroth, 'I wish to benefit the cause of the Gospel as much as may be, but this distinction is one not easily obtained; for as in the racer's course, so here,' &c. The Apostle points his admonition by the argument, that whereas in those games, though all run, only one receives the prize, in the Christian race all may receive the rewards, inasmuch as they are held out to all. See 2 Tim. iv. 8. The Apostle's reasoning (says Bp. Warburton, in a Sermon on this text, vol. x. p. 91, seqq.) is this:—'Worldly attainments are like the contentions in your games, where, though the athletes be many, and the struggle great, yet the prizes are extremely few, and the success very uncertain; for each adventurer hath an adversary in every other. On the contrary, they who aspire to that immortal crown, which religion holds out, are sure to win, the rewards being certain, as coming from the all-bounteous hand of our heavenly Father. Therefore put in for this prize, which no accidents of time or fortune, nor any thing but your own fault, can hinder you from obtaining.'

25. ὁ ἀγωνιζόμενος] for ὁ ἀγωνιστής. This is referable to all the various kinds of gymnastic games. Ἐγκρατεύεται, 'practises ἐγκράτειαν;' with allusion to the preparatory training for ἀγωνισταί, which lasted ten months. Of the extreme temperance, and even abstinence, here required, three examples are given by Ælian, V. H. iii. 30. 10. 2. 11. 3. So Epictetus, Enchir. C. 35. (cited by the Commentators) graphically describes the thing thus: δεῖ σ' εὐτακτεῖν, ἀναγκοτροφεῖν, ἀπέχεσθαι πεμμάτων, γυμνάζεσθαι πρὸς ἀνάγκην, ἐν ὥρᾳ τεταγμένῃ, ἐν καύματι, ἐν ψύχει, μὴ ψυχρὸν πίνειν, μὴ οἶνον, ὡς ἔτυχεν· ἁπλῶς, ὡς ἰατρῷ παραδεδωκέναι σεαυτὸν τῷ ἐπιστάτῃ, εἶτα εἰς τὸν ἀγῶνα παρέρχεσθαι. Bp. Warburton, ubi supra, observes that 'the Apostle here urges another argument for their engaging in the heavenly race, and preferring the pursuit of spiritual things to things temporal; q. d. 'The pursuit of the former has not only these advantages of certainty above that of the games, but they are without any peculiar drawback; since the preparation for the spiritual prize is not more severe than that for the earthly.''

— ἐκεῖνοι μὲν, &c.] Supply τρέχουσι καὶ ἐγκρατεύονται from the context. Φθαρτὸν στέφανον, i. e. a wreath of the leaves of trees, laurel, or wild olive, or pine, and sometimes (at least at Corinth) only of parsley. The Apostle is here only speaking of that reward which the candidates especially strove after,—the CROWN; though, as Rosenmuller shows from Vitruv. Arch. ix. Præf., that carried with it certain other and more solid advantages, which to coarser minds would have most weight.

26. ἐγὼ τοίνυν οὕτω τρέχω.] q. d. 'Having, then, this heavenly prize in view, I, for my part, so run,' &c. On the sense of οὐκ ἀδήλως considerable difference of opinion exists. The most probable interpretations are the two following: 1. That of Bp. Pearson, Pott, and Billroth, who regard it as put for οὐκ ὡς ἀδήλου ὄντος βραβείου vel σκόπου. 2. That of Theodoret, Beza, Luther, Hammond, Elsner, Wolf, Kypke, Wells, Warburton, Rosenmuller, Schleusner, Wahl, Bretschneider, Krause, and Heydenreich, who take ἀδήλως for ἐπ' ἀδήλῳ, 'in incertum [eventum], dubio exitu, obscurâ et ancipiti victoriâ,' as if dubious of the result, and therefore faintly. So Lucian: ἐπὶ τῷ ἀδήλῳ καὶ ἀμφιβόλῳ τῆς νίκης πονοῦσι. This use of ἀδήλ. also occurs in 2 Macc. vii. 34, and the interpretation connected with it deserves the preference; though, indeed, the two merge into each other, and may be united.

In ὡς οὐκ ἀέρα δέρων we have a pugilistic metaphor, there being many ways in which pugilists might beat the air,—namely, either in private exercise, or as a prelude to the contest, or during the contest itself, when aiming a blow and not reaching their object. So Ariosto, Orl. Fur., canto ii. 51, 'Feri Gradasso il vento è l'aria vana.' This last seems to be the meaning in the present case. With this metaphorical use of πυκτεύω I would compare Anacr., cited by Casaubon, Anim. ad Athen., p. 782, ὡς μὴ πρὸς Ἔρωτα πυκταλίζω.

27. ἀλλ' ὑπωπιάζω, &c.] After having shown how he does not, the Apostle shows how he does fight. Ὑπωπιάζειν is an agonistic term, properly signifying to strike under the eye, as Aristoph. Pac. 539; and as that is especially severe to an adversary, it thus came to denote 'to treat harshly,' so as to subdue any one's spirit. The next term δουλ. goes still further, and signifies, 'to gain the complete mastery over.' Hence both terms denote figuratively, 'to mortify the body, by bringing its appetites into complete subjection.'

— μήπως ἄλλοις κηρύξας, &c.] Most recent Commentators here suppose a continuation of the agonistic figure. Κηρύξας they explain, 'after having served as a herald to others, by proclaiming the Gospel;' and ἀδόκιμος, they say, was the term applied to one who failed to obtain the victory. But it was rather applied to those who, from badness of character, were not allowed to contend. See Chrysostom, cited by Wetstein. Besides, not to say that it would involve some confusion of metaphor, by the Apostle representing himself both as an ἀγωνιστής and a κήρυξ, the κήρυξ (as appears from Euripides, a Exod. 13. 21. & 14. 22. Deut. 1. 33. Ps. 78. 13, 14. & 105. 39.

X. ᵃ ΟΥ θέλω ‡ δὲ ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοί, ὅτι οἱ πατέρες 1 ἡμῶν πάντες ὑπὸ τὴν νεφέλην ἦσαν, καὶ πάντες διὰ τῆς θαλάσσης διῆλθον, καὶ πάντες εἰς τὸν Μωϋσῆν ‡ ἐβαπτί- 2

Suppl. 426, and Troad. 425, and Aristoph. passim) was not a person of sufficient dignity for the Apostle to represent himself under that character. And moreover, there is no proof that the κήρυξ addressed any exhortations to the candidates for the prize, but only that he proclaimed (as our criers do) the laws of the combat; to which custom there is an allusion at 2 Tim. ii. 5, οὐ στεφανοῦται, ἐὰν μὴ νομίμως ἀθλήσῃ. The task of exhorting to the contest, as well as of announcing the victory and crowning the victor, belonged solely to the ἀγωνοθέτης. In short, it would seem that there is no agonistic allusion at all; that being dropped at δουλ. As to the sentiment, it is injudicious to lay such a stress as is done by some anti-Calvinistic Commentators on this expression, as if the Apostle doubted or feared for his salvation. The best Commentators, from Chrysostom to Pott, are agreed that the Apostle here, as often, speaks per κοίνωσιν, and intends to hint an admonition to the Corinthians, that they should bring under the body, lest, &c. Yet the passage will, even in this view, prove the possibility of Christians falling from a state of grace.

X. On the connexion of this Chapter with the preceding, a difference of opinion exists. Nay, some eminent Commentators contend that there is no connexion at all; but the ancient, and many considerable modern Interpreters (as Grotius, Crellius, Pearce, Wetstein, and Heydenreich), are (more rightly) of opinion that there is one; and they only differ as to the actual vinculum; which some suppose to be in the ἀδόκιμος just before; while others (as Pott) trace it to the subject of the εἰδωλόθυτα at ch. viii. The former view seems the best founded. 'The Apostle (says Grotius) had just before described himself as mortifying the lusts of the flesh, that he might not fail of the hoped-for prize. He admonishes the Corinthians to do the same, and not to suffer themselves to be lulled into security (as many then did) by the consideration of the ample spiritual gifts they had received from God; since by these they were by no means placed beyond danger, but were under so much the greater obligation to care and watchfulness.' This he shows to be adumbrated in the circumstances of the Hebrew people in the desert; in which the wiser Jews recognised a type of the times of the Messiah. In short, the connexion may be briefly traced as follows: '[I have spoken of so running that ye may obtain, and of becoming reprobate and rejected ;] for [mind] all do not inherit God's favour who enjoy external privileges, as will appear by the example of our forefathers, who, though they enjoyed many precious external privileges, yet incurred the Divine displeasure and severe punishment.' So Billroth explains: 'I bestow upon my course all possible vigour, and am neither indolent nor secure: the same thing ought you to do; for ye are no more than your forefathers freed from the accountability of being the chosen people of God.' On this the Apostle, ver. 12, founds the general conclusion, ὥστε ὁ δοκῶν ἑστάναι, βλεπέτω μὴ πέσῃ: and to this he at ver. 14 subjoins a special one, on the duty of avoiding the eating of meats offered to idols; implying that 'they must not think every thing lawful to them, because they are called by God as his chosen people; for the Jews were God's chosen people, yet they were formerly punished for disobedience, and are now rejected for contumacy.'

1. Ἀγνοεῖν may signify, not so much to be ignorant of, as unmindful of. Ὑπὸ τὴν νεφ. ἦσαν, i. e. 'were all under the guidance and protection of the cloud.'

2. εἰς τὸν Μ. ἐβαπτίσαντο.] Of this obscure passage the two most probable expositions are the following: 1. That supported by nearly all the ancient and early modern Commentators, thus expressed by Theophylact: εἰς τὸν Μωϋσῆν ἐβαπτίζοντο, ἀντὶ τοῦ, αὐτὸν ἀρχηγὸν ἔσχον τοῦ τύπου τοῦ βαπτίσματος· τύπος γὰρ βαπτίσματος ἦν, τό τε ὑπὸ τὴν νεφέλην εἶναι, καὶ τὸ τὴν θάλασσαν διελθεῖν. 2. That of almost all Commentators, from the time of Hammond downwards, who take the sense to be: 'were, by passing under the cloud (yielding themselves to its guidance) and through the sea, as it were baptized, or initiated into the religion promulgated by Moses (Moses here standing metonymically for the institutes of the Mosaic religion), and thus entirely recognised his Divine mission, and bound themselves in future to obey his laws.' For baptism, say they, was a symbolical rite, by which any one bound himself unto faith and obedience to any teacher of religion, and the baptism itself was a form of initiation into that religion. Now this, indeed, does express St. Paul's meaning; but not, I apprehend, his full meaning. He did not, I conceive, merely mean to trace a similarity, by tacit comparison, between what the Israelites went through and Christian baptism, but intended to represent the former as typical of the latter; i. e. the being baptized unto Moses, as typical of the being baptized unto Christ. The expression occurs twice in a similar sense, Rom. vi. 3, and Gal. iii. 27, denoting, as Dr. P. Smith observes (see Scrip. Test., vol. iii. p. 18), 'not any external act, but a mental and practical consecration to the influence of genuine Christianity.' It has been well observed by Whitby and Bp. Marsh (Lect., p. 384), that 'the Jews, who admitted proselytes by baptism, appear to have generally considered the passage of their forefathers through the Red Sea, not as a mere insulated historical fact, but as something representative of admission to the Divine favour by baptism. They said that they were baptized in the desert, and admitted into covenant with God before the Law was given. Nay, both they and St. Paul seem to have regarded all the circumstances of the Exodus as typical; namely, either of Christ, or of some rite of his religion.' See also Is. iv. 5. The complete sense, then, seems to be that laid down by Abp. Newcome, as follows: 'They were figuratively and typically baptized: they were initiated into the law given by Moses, and led to acknowledge his divine mission, through these miracles expressive of baptism.' The material of the cloud and sea (being nothing but water) was well adapted to express this typical representation of baptism, both Jewish and Christian.

3 σαντο ἐν τῇ νεφέλῃ καὶ ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ· [b] καὶ πάντες τὸ — b Exod. 16 14, &c.
4 αὐτὸ βρῶμα πνευματικὸν ἔφαγον, [c] καὶ πάντες τὸ αὐτὸ — Ps. 105. 40. c Exod. 17. 6.
πόμα πνευματικὸν ἔπιον· ἔπινον γὰρ ἐκ πνευματικῆς ἀκολου- — Num. 20. 11. & 21. 16. Ps. 78. 15.
5 θούσης πέτρας· ἡ δὲ πέτρα ἦν ὁ Χριστός. [d] Ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐν — d Num. 14. 23, 37.
τοῖς πλείοσιν αὐτῶν εὐδόκησεν ὁ Θεός· κατεστρώθησαν γὰρ — & 26. 64, 65.
6 ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ. [e] Ταῦτα δὲ τύποι ἡμῶν ἐγενήθησαν, εἰς τὸ — e Num. 11.
μὴ εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἐπιθυμητὰς κακῶν, καθὼς κἀκεῖνοι ἐπεθύ- — 4, 33. Ps. 106. 14.
7 μησαν. [f] Μηδὲ εἰδωλολάτραι γίνεσθε, καθώς τινες αὐτῶν· — f Exod. 32. 6.

For ἐβαπτίσαντο many MSS. and Fathers have ἐβαπτίσθησαν. But that is evidently a gloss, proceeding from those who were not aware how closely connected the reciprocal force of the Middle verb is with the Passive voice.

3, 4. These verses form one connected sense, consisting of two parts: 1. καὶ πάντες τὸ αὐτὸ βρῶμα πνευματικὸν ἔφαγον, καὶ πάντες τὸ αὐτὸ πόμα πνευματικὸν ἔπιον. 2. ἔπινον γὰρ ἐκ πνευματικῆς ἀκολουθούσης πέτρας· ἡ δὲ πέτρα ἦν ὁ Χριστός,—the latter as explanatory of the former. Thus as the Apostle had alluded to what had been typical in the ordinance of baptism, so he now alludes to what had been such in that of the Lord's Supper. See Hyperius and Calvin.

— βρῶμα πνευματικὸν—πόμα πν.] Some suppose the food and the drink to be called πνευματικὸν because given miraculously from heaven. But the sense would rather seem to be (as others explain), 'inasmuch as they had a spiritual import, by being typical,'—the food, of Christ (the true bread from heaven, John vi. 50), and the drink, of the blessing of the Gospel, including an allusion to the Holy Spirit. See John vii. 37—39. The latter is evidently the true view.

— ἔπινον—πέτρας.] Pressing on the literal sense of these words, many eminent Commentators have supposed the meaning to be, that the water, at first miraculously drawn from the rock, was afterwards conveyed as miraculously through the desert. They have, however, no better authority for the fact, than some Rabbinical stories adduced by Wetstein and Schoettgen; and the whole is a mere superstitious notion, resting on no solid foundation, and proceeding from utter misapprehension of the figurative language of the Apostle, which is by Theodoret, Calvin, Glass, Wolf, Rosenmuller, Krause, and Heydenreich rightly understood, not of a natural rock, 'tanquam causa materialis (to use the words of Wolf) ex quâ,' but of a spiritual rock, 'tanquam causa efficiens, à quâ illa aqua et potatio profecta sit.' Of this signification of ἐκ there are examples in abundance. The meaning, then, is, that 'Christ, who is typified by that rock, every where accompanied and was present with them,' supplying water miraculously furnished; which, as it never failed them, might be said popularly to follow them, as Christ, who supplied it, did; either really, though invisibly, or figuratively and spiritually, by his perpetual and present help and protection.

5. ἐν τοῖς πλείοσιν.] i. e. 'most or very many,' namely, with all but Joshua and Caleb. On which sense of οἱ πλείονες, see Note on Rom. v. 19. Οὐκ εὐδόκησε. A meiosis, meaning 'was highly displeased with.' The more Classical expression would be οὐκ ἠρέθη, followed by a Dative without a preposition.

At κατεστρώθησαν γὰρ, &c. there is a clause omitted, to which the γὰρ refers; q. d. '[This we may infer,] for they were strewed,' &c. i. e. from their being strewed; since κατεστ. (founded on Numb. xiv. 16, κατέστρωσεν ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ) signifies, not were overthrown, but 'were stretched or strewed [dead] over the desert;' a usage of καταστρ., like שחט in Numb. xiv. 16, frequent in the Classical writers, (so Herodot. ix. 75, κατέστρωντο οἱ βάρβαροι, and Ælian, Anim. vii. 2, λοιμὸς δὲ αὐτοὺς ἄφνω συλλαβὼν κατέστρωσε), and meant to represent death in its most appalling form, here denoting (as Theophyl. says) τὴν ἀθρόαν αὐτῶν ἀπώλειαν. So also a Rabbinical writer, cited by Wetstein, says, 'Homines qui in deserto fuerunt non habuerunt partem in mundo futuro.' Doubtless, too, this was intended as an awful image of the eternal perdition of the wicked, and meant to serve for an awful warning, by example, to sinners of every age.

6. τύποι ἡμῶν ἐγενήθ.] 'came to pass as examples to us' (ἡμῶν being put for ἡμῖν, as in a kindred passage of 1 Pet. v. 3); or were figurative representations of God's dealings with his disobedient creatures. Ἐπιθυμητὰς κακῶν, 'cravers after evil things,' is a general expression, further on unfolded particularly. The word is properly a term of middle signification, and in the Classical writers is for the most part used in a good sense, though sometimes, as here, in a bad one. So Plato, cited by Wetstein: ὄντων τινῶν, οἳ τῶν κακῶν ἐπιθυμοῦσι. Pollux viii. 7, τῶν ἀλλοτρίων ἐπιθυμητήν. The expression may, too, be used, because every evil may be said to originate in ἐπιθυμία. There is reference not merely, as Theophyl. supposes, to the savoury idol-feasts, nor, as Grotius, to a discontent with necessaries, and a coveting of luxuries; but to evil concupiscence generally, namely, the coveting sinful or inexpedient indulgences (see Calvin); something like that 'evil covetousness,' against which God, by the mouth of his prophet (Hab. ii. 9) denounces a most heavy woe. In which passage I would understand the expression evil to allude, not, as Expositors explain it, to the evil means by which wealth is too often acquired, or to the ruinous consequences resulting from ill-gotten gain; but simply to the sinful coveting what is another's property, as in the passage of Pollux above cited.

7. The Apostle now applies the above principle to the different vices and sins to which the Corinthians were prone; commencing with that of abusing their Christian liberty, by indulging in the use of meats offered to idols.

— εἰδωλ. γίνεσθε.] Namely, by participating ὡς γέγραπται· Ἐκάθισεν ὁ λαὸς φαγεῖν καὶ πιεῖν, καὶ ἀνέστησαν παίζειν. [g] μηδὲ πορνεύωμεν, καθώς τινες 8 αὐτῶν ἐπόρνευσαν, καὶ ἔπεσον ἐν μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ εἰκοσιτρεῖς χιλιάδες. [h] Μηδὲ ἐκπειράζωμεν τὸν Χριστὸν, καθὼς καί 9 τινες αὐτῶν ἐπείρασαν, καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν ὄφεων ἀπώλοντο.

[i] Μηδὲ γογγύζετε, καθὼς καί τινες αὐτῶν ἐγόγγυσαν, καὶ 10 ἀπώλοντο ὑπὸ τοῦ ὀλοθρευτοῦ. [k] Ταῦτα δὲ πάντα τύποι 11
συνέβαινον ἐκείνοις· ἐγράφη δὲ πρὸς νουθεσίαν ἡμῶν, εἰς οὓς τὰ τέλη τῶν αἰώνων κατήντησεν. Ὥστε ὁ δοκῶν 12 ἑστάναι βλεπέτω μὴ πέσῃ. [l] Πειρασμὸς ὑμᾶς οὐκ εἴληφεν, 13

g Num. 25. 1, 9. Ps. 106. 28.
h Exod. 17. 2, 7. Num. 21. 6. Ps. 78. 18, 56. & 95. 9. & 106. 14.
i Exod. 16. 2. & 17. 2. Num. 14. 2, 29, 36. Ps. 106. 25. k Rom. 15. 4. supra 9. 10.
l Rom. 11. 20.
l Supra 1. 8, 9. 1 Thess. 5. 24. 2 Pet. 2. 9.

in idol-feasts; as is plain from the rest of the words of this verse, which refer to the sacrificial feast to the honour of the golden calf mentioned at Exod. xxxii. 6.

— ἐκάθισεν] 'sat down to table;' according to the ancient posture, afterwards changed to reclining, and adopted from Gentile customs. On the sense of παίζειν here, see Rec. Syn., where I have shown that it is best to assign to the word here a general signification (similar to that in Herodot. ix. 11, and 1 Chron. xv. 29. Esdr. v. 3), including leaping, dancing, singing, and all other kinds of festal sport.

8. πορν.] This has reference to all sorts of illicit connexion with women, but with especial allusion to the sin of the incestuous person. For twenty-three, the Hebrew and Sept. give twenty-four thousand. And so Josephus and Philo. The best mode of reconciling the discrepancy is to suppose (as do Calvin, Bengel, and Macknight) that in neither of the sacred writers is the exact amount intended, but only a round number given; which, as the number of those who fell probably exceeded 23,000, and came short of 24,000, would be an approximative round number.

Again, the best mode of removing the seeming discrepancy between St. Paul and Moses, as to the particular offence which drew down the heavy wrath of God on the people, is to suppose, that the fornication mentioned by the former accompanied the idolatrous worship of Baal peor, recorded by Moses, Numbers xxv. 3. In fact, from the account there, it is plain that the people were, as on many other occasions, drawn into the idolatrous worship in question by the meretricious arts of the Moabitish women, with whom they committed fornication.

9. μηδὲ ἐκπειρ. τὸν Χρ.] There are here two varr. lectt., Κύριον and Θεὸν, of which the former is by many recent Critics supposed to be the true reading; though, from the very slender authority for it, no Editor has ventured to introduce it into the text. It has, indeed, most authority; but there is reason to suspect that both proceeded (as Vater remarks) from those who stumbled at Χριστὸν, not well knowing how the Israelites could be said to tempt Christ: and both, in some measure, from those who wished to destroy this proof of the Divinity of Jesus Christ; for, as Bp. Bull (Defens. Fid. Nic. i. 1. 15) has shown, the words of the textus receptus prove both the pre-existence of Christ, and his Deity. In fact, He whom they then tempted, was the same Person whom they now tempted; their Redeemer, who was then with them as JEHOVAH, and had often appeared to Moses in the form of an Angel; see Calvin. On the perfect propriety of Χριστὸν in this instance, see Abp. Magee on the Atonement, vol. ii. 657. Ἐπείρασαν signifies 'tried the patience and long-suffering of God; namely, by murmuring at their condition and God's dispensations,' under the influence of impatience, 'which (as Calvin remarks) seeks to anticipate the designs of God, and refuses to be governed by Him; but would bind him down to its own will and pleasure.' Thus some of the Corinthians murmured at the restraints of the Gospel, and indeed at the spiritual authority exercised over them.

10. καθὼς καί.] Render, as in the preceding verse, simply even as; not, as also.

— τοῦ ὀλοθρευτοῦ] i. e. 'the destroying angel' who brought a plague upon the murmurers, mentioned at Exod. xii. 23. Heb. xi. 28, and often in the Old Test., under the name of 'the angel of death.' There is here a reference to Numbers xiv. and other parts of the Old Test. This verse seems meant to be, in some measure, exegetical of the former.

11. ταῦτα δὲ πάντα—ἡμῶν.] Here we have a repetition, though more perspicuously and forcibly expressed, of the admonition at ver. 6. The verse is, moreover, parenthetical; and the δὲ is exemplificatory; see Note on John iii. 1.

— τὰ τέλη τῶν αἰώνων.] It has been fully established, by the researches of the most eminent Commentators, that this does not mean, as is commonly supposed, 'the ends of the world;' but that there is an allusion to the Jewish mode of computing the duration of the world, and distributing it into three Æons, or periods, of 2000 years each: 1. the age before the Law; 2. that of the Mosaic Dispensation; 3. that of the Messiah. Thus the sense will be, 'upon whom the end of the æons, or ages, (i. e. the last æon or age,) is come,' namely, the age of the Messiah, the last dispensation of God to man. So Schoettgen remarks, that the Apostle is here describing the men of his time as those on whom the boundaries, τὰ τέλη, of two worlds, or ages, had met—of this world, and that which is to come; of the old covenant and the new; see Hebr. ix. 26.

12. An admonition is now subjoined, founded, by inference, on the examples which had been adduced of the consequences of abusing God's mercy and long-suffering, by any kind of disobedience to his will.

— ἑστάναι,] Namely, in sure acceptance with God. Πέσῃ, i. e. fall away by sinful habits from a state of grace.

εἰ μὴ ἀνθρώπινος· πιστὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς, ὃς οὐκ ἐάσει ὑμᾶς πειρασθῆναι ὑπὲρ ὃ δύνασθε· ἀλλὰ ποιήσει σὺν τῷ πειρασμῷ καὶ τὴν ἔκβασιν, τοῦ δύνασθαι [ὑμᾶς] ὑπενεγκεῖν.
14 [m] Διόπερ, ἀγαπητοί μου, φεύγετε ἀπὸ τῆς εἰδωλολατρείας. m 2 Cor. 6. 17. 1 John 5. 21.
15,16 Ὡς φρονίμοις λέγω· κρίνατε ὑμεῖς ὅ φημι. [n] Τὸ ποτή- n Matt. 26. 26. infra 11. 23, 24.
ριον τῆς εὐλογίας ὃ εὐλογοῦμεν, οὐχὶ κοινωνία τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐστι; τὸν ἄρτον, ὃν κλῶμεν, οὐχὶ κοινωνία

13. πειρασμὸς ὑμᾶς, &c.] We have here an anticipation of an objection, and a removal of an excuse; q. d. 'These temptations are not, as they are sometimes alleged to be, above human strength; are no more than human nature is subjected to, and may be enabled to bear.' So Æschyl. Pers. 702, ἀνθρώπεια δ' ἄν τοι πήματ' ἂν τύχοι βροτοῖς. Josephus, Antiq. vii. 7. 1, ἀνθρώπινόν ἐστι τὸ συμβεβηκός. See also Soph. Œd. Col. 598, and Thucyd. v. 103.

— πιστὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς, ὃς οὐκ ἐάσει, &c.] Meaning, it would seem, that 'God will so direct and overrule every event, as well as communicate strength to bear even the most adverse occurrences, that we shall never be tried or tempted above our power, if duly employed, to bear; but that He will, in his Providence, or by his grace, make a way, by which we may, if we are not wanting to ourselves, escape unhurt from the temptation or trial.' On the subject of temptations being not irresistible, see a Discourse of Bp. Atterbury on this text; and on the means of the deliverance from temptations, and the condition on which the promise of it is suspended, see a Sermon of Dr. South on the present text. The two ideas, of tempting and trying, are here united.

— τὴν ἔκβασιν] 'the mode of deliverance;' the Article being used (as Bp. Middleton remarks) in reference to the temptation from which escape is to be made. Ὑμᾶς (not found in a few MSS. mostly ancient, and several Versions and Fathers,) has been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz; but wrongly; since external authority is decidedly in its favour, and internal evidence not less so. Its absence would involve considerable harshness; and we may readily account for its being thrown out by the Alexandrian critics; namely, for the purpose of removing a tautology.

14. The Apostle subjoins (as an inference from the above examples and warnings) a solemn admonition against idolatry.

— φεύγετε ἀπὸ τῆς εἰδωλ.] i. e. 'carefully avoid every approach to idolatry,' such as was contracted in attending on idol-feasts. The Apostle now returns to the subject treated of at C. viii. —namely, the eating of idol-meats, and shows how far it is lawful, and how far unlawful. He first shows that it is not lawful for them to eat at idol-feasts, since that is a kind of idolatry, 14—24; but that it is lawful for them to eat the flesh that had been so offered, when sold in the market and set on private tables, 25—33. In order to evince the necessity for this abstinence from participation in heathen rites, he lays down the position, that every sacrificial feast is a kind of worship; and consequently attendance at it is an association in the worship of the deity to whose honour the feast is instituted. This he illustrates by two examples; one taken from the Christian Lord's Supper, the other from the sacrifices of the Jews; from which he, at ver. 20, draws the conclusion, that Christians who were accustomed to be present at heathen sacrificial feasts were considered by other heathens as persons favourable to their idolatrous religion, in the same manner as those who were present at the sacred feasts of the Christians thereby declared publicly that they belonged to the society of Christians.

15. ὡς φρονίμοις λέγω.] An expression (as Theodoret observes) meant to soften the harshness of what he may have to say. The Apostle addresses them as persons of wisdom and judgment, because they valued themselves on their superior knowledge, and in order that he might make his appeals to their reason and conscience more effectual.

16. τὸ ποτήριον τῆς εὐλ.] This is best explained as put for τὸ ποτήριον τὸ εὐλογητὸν, or εὐλογημένον, ('the cup for, or over which, we give thanks to God,' the opposition being in the we,) and it is supposed to have been a popular phrase to denote the Eucharist, and adopted from what was called 'the cup of blessing' at the Paschal feast; see Note on Matt. xxvi. 6. Ὃ εὐλογοῦμεν is exegetical of ποτ. εὐλ., and, according to the opinion of most of the more eminent Interpreters, ancient and modern, is put for καθ' ὃ εὐλογ. [i. e. εὐχαριστοῦμεν] τὸν Θεὸν, or περὶ οὗ εὐλογοῦμεν τὸν Θεόν.

In οὐχὶ κοινωνία, &c., many Commentators think that ἐστι signifies 'is a symbol of.' But it may more simply be taken in the usual sense, and, conjoined with κοιν., be regarded as a popular form of expression. Thus the best Commentators, ancient and modern, adopting a metonymical mode of interpretation, suppose the wording to be equivalent to, οὐχὶ οἱ πίνοντες τὸ ποτήριον τὸ εὐλογ. κοινωνοὶ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ Χρ. εἰσι; οὐχὶ οἱ ἐσθίοντες τὸν ἄρτον τὸν εὐλογ. κοινωνοὶ τοῦ σώμ. τοῦ Χ. εἰσι; the sense being, 'Are not those who participate in the Lord's Supper κοινωνοὶ τοῦ αἵματος καὶ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, thereby forming one society of worshippers of Christ, and commemorators of his death and sacrifice for sin?' The accusatives ἄρτον and ποτήριον are regarded as put for ὁ ἄρτος ὃν κλῶμεν, &c.; or else κατὰ, 'quod attinet ad,' is supplied. There may, however, be an anacoluthon, as at Soph. Œd. Tyr. 451, λέγω δὲ τὸν ἄνδρα τοῦτον, ὃν πάλαι ζητεῖς, οὗτός ἐστιν ἐνθάδε. The argument is, as Hyperius remarks, taken from the rite and the effect of the Christian Lord's Supper, thus: By using the bread and wine we communicate with the body and blood of Christ, and are made one with Christ. Therefore, in the same manner, those who use the food and drink offered to idols, communicate with idols, are made one with idols. In other words, 'as Christians who participate in the Lord's Supper are supposed, by commemorating his expiatory

o Rom. 12. 5. infra 12. 27. τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐστιν; [o] ὅτι εἷς ἄρτος, ἓν σῶμα 17 οἱ πολλοί ἐσμεν· οἱ γὰρ πάντες ἐκ τοῦ ἑνὸς ἄρτου μετέ-p Lev. 3. 3. & 7. 15. χομεν. [p] Βλέπετε τὸν Ἰσραὴλ κατὰ σάρκα· οὐχὶ οἱ ἐσθί- 18
q Supra 8. 4. οντες τὰς θυσίας κοινωνοὶ τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου εἰσί; [q] Τί οὖν 19 φημι; ὅτι εἴδωλον τί ἐστιν; ἢ ὅτι εἰδωλόθυτον τί ἐστιν;
r Lev. 17. 7. Deut. 32. 17. Ps. 106. 37. Rev. 9. 20. [r] ἀλλ' ὅτι ἃ θύει τὰ ἔθνη, δαιμονίοις θύει, καὶ οὐ Θεῷ· οὐ 20 θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς κοινωνοὺς τῶν δαιμονίων γίνεσθαι. [s] Οὐ 21
s Deut. 32. 38. 2 Cor. 6. 15. δύνασθε ποτήριον Κυρίου πίνειν καὶ ποτήριον δαιμονίων· οὐ death, to be in communion with Christ, and the Christian society; so, by a parity of reasoning, those who participate in heathen sacrificial feasts must thereby be supposed to be in communion with idols and idolaters, or at least to be favourably inclined to idolatry.'

17. ὅτι εἷς ἄρτος—ἐσμεν.] Render, not bread, but loaf; as Gataker long ago pointed out. The loaves, or rather cakes, of Judæa were usually (especially at the Paschal feast) of a very large size; so that a considerable number may be supposed to have partaken in common of one of them. The sense, then, is: 'for as there is one loaf, so we, the many, become one body;' i. e. 'as the loaf is one, so we, the many (i. e. we all), are one body,' professing ourselves thereby to be all members of that body, of which Christ is the head. Thus (as Hesych. shows) it is as if St. Paul had written, Ὥσπερ εἷς ἄρτος ἐστὶν, οὗ μετέχομεν, οὕτως ἐστὶν ἓν σῶμα (Eph. iv. 4) ὃ ἡμεῖς οἱ πολλοὶ (for ἡμεῖς πάντες) ἐσμεν. The words may be thus paraphrased, with Bp. Warburton, ubi supra: 'Our being partakers of one bread (or loaf) in the communion, makes us, of many, [which we are by nature,] to become, by grace, one body in Christ;' the communion of the body and blood of Christ uniting the receivers into one body, by an equal distribution of one common benefit.

18. βλέπετε τὸν Ἰσρ., &c.] Another example to show the force which is inherent in a feast conjoined with religious observances; and that taken from the customs of the Israelites, who used, at festivals, to make an entertainment of the relics of the victims, not only for their servants, but for strangers. (Pott.) By Ἰσρ. κατὰ σάρκα are here denoted the natural descendants of Israel as a nation—Jews by birth, who worshipped God by sacrifices, and were as yet unconverted to the Christian religion. The sense of οὐχὶ οἱ ἐσθ., &c., is, 'Are not those, who eat of the flesh of the victims, supposed to be participators in the sacrifice on the altar, and of the benefits of that sacrifice?' For the flesh of the victim was eaten by the priests and the sacrificants; see Lev. viii. 31, and Deut. xii. 6, 7. The application is left to be supplied,—which is, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐσθίοντες τὰ εἰδωλόθυτα, κοινωνοὶ δαιμονίων γίνεσθε. Now that was supposed to bring them in communion with the Deity; especially as He was supposed to be personally, though invisibly, present. Indeed, that communion was implied by the benefits, whether real, or, as in the case of the heathens, imaginary, being confirmed by a pact or convention between the sacrificer and his God, see Bp. Warburton, ubi supra.

19—22. The Apostle here shows that, even their own premises being conceded, the conclusion they draw would not follow; since the ground of censure consisted in this,—that the Pagans must necessarily suppose, that Christians who were present at their sacred feasts worshipped the deities to whose honour those feasts were instituted. (Krause.)

19. τί οὖν φημι;—ἐστιν.] By a similar mode of expression it is said, in Plato, Gorg. p. 73, Τί δὴ οὖν λέγομεν περὶ τοῦ ὁσίου; Render, 'What is my meaning? That an idol is any thing, i. e. has any divinity; or, that the idol-meat is any thing? (i. e. differs from other meats.) No; that is not my meaning.'

20. ἀλλ' ὅτι.] Render, '[No;] but my meaning is, that,' &c. This ellipsis of οὐχὶ after an interrogation is occasionally found both in the Scriptural and Classical writers. So Arrian, Diss. i. 29. 4, μὴ γὰρ τὸ ἦθος ἐζήλωκα αὐτοῦ; ἀλλὰ τὴν παιδίαν σώζων ἔρχομαι πρὸς αὐτήν. Liban. Or. 104. D., κειμένοις ἐπεμβαίνει ἀνδρεῖος; ἀλλ' ὁ πρῶτος κατενέγκει. The words ἃ θύει —Θεῷ are taken from Deut. xxxii. 17. By δαιμον. are meant either the falsely called deities of the heathens, elsewhere termed εἴδωλα, or rather (as Luther, Calvin, Beza, Grotius, and Billroth are of opinion) evil demons, considered as actual existences, and who are meant at Ps. xcvi. 5. (Sept.) Billroth supposes the Apostle to have here had in mind Deut. xxxii. 17. Sept., ἔθυσαν δαιμονίοις, καὶ οὐ Θεῷ. The above sense is, Calvin shows, required by the context.

— οὐ θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς, &c.] 'Now I would not wish you,' &c. On κοιν. γίνεσθαι, &c. see Note supra ver. 18.

The reason of the injunction is, that the gods themselves were supposed to be virtually, though invisibly, present at the sacrifices; with whom (as Maimonides observes, More Nevochim, iii. 46), they contracted a sort of brotherhood, eating at one table, and sitting at one board.

21. οὐ δύνασθε] q. d. 'Ye cannot, consistently; it is not suitable, and therefore not lawful for you.' 'The inconsistency (as Bp. Warburton shows) was this: that they who eat and drink in the feast on that sacrifice are partakers of the supposed benefits of the sacrifice, and consequently are parties to the federal rites which confirmed those benefits; so that the same man could not, consistently with himself, be partaker of both tables,—the Lord's, and that of devils. The inconsistency arising from the Pagan and Christian rites having one common nature (a feast or sacrifice), which, springing from contrary originals, destroy one another's effects.'

Πίνειν ποτήριον and μετέχειν τραπέζης Κυρίου signify, per merismon, a partaking of the Lord's Supper. The expression πίνειν ποτήρ.

δύνασθε τραπέζης Κυρίου μετέχειν, καὶ τραπέζης δαιμονίων.
22 [t] Ἢ παραζηλοῦμεν τὸν Κύριον; μὴ ἰσχυρότεροι αὐτοῦ ἐσμεν; [t Deut. 32. 21.]
23 [u] Πάντα [μοι] ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα συμφέρει· πάντα [μοι] [u Supra 6. 12.]
24 ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα οἰκοδομεῖ. [x] μηδεὶς τὸ ἑαυτοῦ [x Rom. 15. 1, 2.]
25 ζητείτω, ἀλλὰ τὸ τοῦ ἑτέρου [ἕκαστος]. Πᾶν τὸ ἐν μακέλλῳ [infra 13. 5. Phil. 2. 4.]

alludes to the wine partly poured out and partly drunk at the sacrificial feasts. See Virg. Æn. viii. 273. Now to drink of this vinum libationis was strictly forbidden by the Jewish Rabbis. So, among the Rabbinical citations in Wetstein, Horajoth, fol. 2, 1, 'Quinam est apostata? qui edit morticina et à bestiis discerpta, abominabilia et reptilia, et bibit vinum libaminis.' The expression μετέχειν τραπέζης alludes to the banquet set out, from the remains of the victim, for the votaries, in the temple or elsewhere. Krause observes, that τραπέζης depends upon μέρος understood; of which very rare plena locutio he adduces an example from Lysias. I add Æschyl. Agam. 490, οὐ γάρ ποτ' ηὔχουν—θανὼν μεθέξειν φιλτάτου τάφου μέρος.

22. The Apostle here intimates, that to attempt such an inconsistency must be highly displeasing to God. Παραζηλοῦν may signify either to excite any one to jealousy, or to anger; of which intensive sense of παρὰ we have an example in παραθήγω, occurring in Dionys. Hal. Ant. vol. i. p. 483. Sylb. The former sense has much to recommend it in the usage of the Sacred writers, but the latter is more agreeable to what follows, μὴ ἰσχυρ. αὐτοῦ ἐσμεν; in which something is required to be supplied; q. d. 'Are we stronger than he, [that we can venture to brave his wrath?]' The two senses, however, merge into each other; the jealousy and the anger of God being convertible terms, and accordingly united in a parallelism at Ps. lxxix. 5, which ought to be thus rendered: 'How long, O Lord, wilt thou be angry?—for ever? How long shall thy jealousy burn like fire?—for ever?' The repetition is required by the context, and admitted by the proprietas linguæ. For we have here an example of the Synthetic or Constructive parallelism, on which see Bp. Lowth, de Sacr. P. Lect. xix., and Bp. Jebb, Sacr. Lit., p. 27; of whom, the latter well observes, that 'in this kind of construction a part is sometimes to be supplied in the latter line, taken from the former, as Job xxvi. 5.' This view is confirmed by Jerem. iv. 4. 'Lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it.' See also Ezek. xxxvi. 5. By 'like fire' is meant 'so as not to be satisfied.' For at Prov. xxx. 16 fire is numbered among the four things which never say 'It is enough.' Of course the jealousy here spoken of is to be understood ἀνθρωποπαθῶς; the relation of God to his chosen people being in Scripture often compared with that of the husband to the wife.

23. The Apostle now reverts back to the objections at vi. 12, and (to use the words of Bp. Sanderson, in his two Sermons on this text) 'sets bounds to our Christian liberty; first in the power, and then in the exercise of that power; and he encounters the error both of those who would shrink it in, and of those who would stretch it out, more than is meet. He extends our liberty in the power, but restrains it in the use of that power.' In his first Sermon, after showing that by πάντα are meant all things [indifferent], the learned Prelate points out what things are indifferent; namely, all such things whose expediency or inexpediency are fit to be taken into consideration. He then proceeds to show the liberty which all Christians have to the use of things indifferent, and the error of those who restrain it too much, as also the cause of that error. With respect to the former, he shows that it must not be pleaded, except in things lawful. He points out what expediency is, and how it differs from lawfulness. Then he considers what edification is, and shows that it is the measure of expediency, and then concludes by pointing out that in the exercise of our Christian liberty much is left to the discretion of particular persons.

— πάντα μοι, &c.] Μοι, not found in some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, has been cancelled by Griesbach, Krause, Pott, and Scholz, but without reason; for the suspicion that it may have been introduced from vi. 12 seems ungrounded. I rather agree with Rinck, that the Apostle seems to have here, as often, repeated the same objection in the same words, as at vi. 12. It is surely, as Rinck says, less credible that the Eastern Recension should have repeated μοι from the parallel passage, than that the Western should have thrown it out, probably from mistaking its scope; it simply serving to indicate the κοίνωσις, a figure so frequent in the writings of St. Paul. Indeed, I see not how the μοι can well be dispensed with, since in the latter, at least, of the two clauses it is emphatical, having reference to τὸν ἕτερον or τοὺς ἑτέρους, as was seen by Chrysostom and Crellius; and as, indeed, is plain from the next verse. At any rate, πάντα μοι ἔξεστι contains the objection of the Corinthians, and the words following, its answer.

24. μηδεὶς—ἕκαστος.] Many regard this as a general gnome, like the one at 1 Cor. xiii.: 'Charity seeketh not her own.' That passage, however, is not of general application; nor is this. Both are to be restricted to the case in question, and the subject-matter. Here there can only be reference to the use of idol-meats, and other ἀδιάφορα. The passage is evidently meant to directly bring forward a sentiment which was only implied in the preceding verse, and the sense is; 'Let no man consider how his actions affect himself only, but also others;' meaning, that we must not consider our own gratification when it injures the spiritual welfare of others. By a similar mode of expression it is said, Thucyd. i. 17, τὸ ἐφ' ἑαυτῶν μόνον προορώμενοι, and vi. 16, τὸ ἑαυτοῦ μόνον σκοπῶν. Soph. Aj. 1313, ὅρα μὴ τοὐμὸν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ σόν.

Ἕκαστος, not found in several MSS. of the Western recension, as also some Versions and Fathers, has been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz, but on insufficient grounds. That the word is not necessary, because implied in the μηδεὶς, and that it is omitted in similar constructions in the best writers (see Hor. Sat. i. 1. 1—3), πωλούμενον ἐσθίετε, μηδὲν ἀνακρίνοντες διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν·

[y] τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου ἡ γῆ καὶ τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῆς. 26
Εἰ δέ τις καλεῖ ὑμᾶς τῶν ἀπίστων, καὶ θέλετε πορεύεσθαι, πᾶν 27
τὸ παρατιθέμενον ὑμῖν ἐσθίετε, μηδὲν ἀνακρίνοντες διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν. [z] Ἐὰν δέ τις ὑμῖν εἴπῃ· Τοῦτο εἰδωλόθυτόν 28
ἐστι· μὴ ἐσθίετε, δι' ἐκεῖνον τὸν μηνύσαντα, καὶ τὴν συνείδησιν· [[a] τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου ἡ γῆ καὶ τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῆς.] συνείδησιν 29
δὲ λέγω, οὐχὶ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὴν τοῦ ἑτέρου· ἱνατί γὰρ y Exod. 19. 5. Ps. 24. 1. & 50. 12. infra v. 28.

z Supra 8. 10, 11. & 10. 26.

a Ps. 24. 1.

rather supplies internal evidence in favour of its genuineness.

25. πᾶν τὸ ἐν μακέλλῳ πωλούμενον ἐσθ.] The Apostle now gives a rule for their conduct as to the eating of idol-meats, by which he both leaves room for Christian liberty, and again tempers it with due regard to the spiritual good of others. (Crellius.)

— μηδὲν ἀνακρ.] The best recent Commentators consider this phrase as put for μηδὲν κρέας (scil. κρέατος γένος) ἀνακρ., 'examining no kind of meat, to see [whether it be idol-meat or not].' And the interpretation is supported by the πᾶν following. See Note on Acts xvii. 11. Διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν may refer either to the con cience of others (i. e. 'lest by so doing you raise needless scruples'), or one's own; q. d. 'lest, on inquiry, you should learn that it is idol-meat, and your conscience be wounded if you eat it; or, if you ascertain that it is not so, your conscience be unnecessarily disturbed.'

26. τοῦ γὰρ K.—αὐτῆς.] This passage is taken from Ps. xxiv. 1. It refers only to the second interpretation of συνείδ.; q. d. '[You need none of you feel scruples in your own minds;] for as the earth and all its productions are the Lord's, so there is nothing naturally impure, but it is only so in the opinion of any one.' Consequently (to use the words of Billroth) 'as all good things come from God, they are in themselves unexceptionable, if they be used as coming from God with thanksgiving.' Compare 1 Tim. iv. 4.

Πλήρωμα here signifies whatever fills up the world, and is contained therein; all God's creatures, animate or inanimate. So πλήρωμα θαλάσσης in Ps. xcvi. 11.

27. καλεῖ] for παρακαλεῖ ἐπὶ δεῖπνον.

28. δι' ἐκεῖνον τὸν, &c.] Meaning 'on account of, in deference to the scruples of the informant.' The words following, καὶ τὴν συνείδ., are exegetical of the foregoing, and put for διὰ τὴν συνείδ. αὐτοῦ, or τοῦ ἑτέρου; there is also a Hendiadys, for διὰ τὴν συνείδ. τοῦ μηνύσαντος, scil. ἀσθενοῦς; the full sense being, 'Eat not, out of respect to the conscientious scruples of your informant.'

The next clause, τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου—αὐτῆς, is absent from almost all the uncial MSS., and, in general, those of the Western recension, as also the Syriac, Vulgate, Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, Armenian, and Italic Versions, and several Fathers; rejected by almost every Critic, and cancelled by Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, Pott, and Scholz,—yet, I apprehend, on insufficient grounds. As to the objection to the clause, that 'it seems superfluous,' it may readily be replied, 'How, then, came such a superfluous clause to be introduced into the great bulk of MSS.?' Unless this could be satisfactorily accounted for, the question would have to be decided in favour of the clause. But here it is acutely remarked by Bengel, Griesbach, and Rinck, 'Ad v. 26, vocabulo συνείδησιν utrinque prævio, librarius Orient. recidit.' This answer is, I think, satisfactory; and considering that, if admitted, the clause cannot be made apposite, without supposing the omission of a very long sentence to which it might be referred, I must decide against its authenticity.

29. συνείδησιν—ἑτέρου.] This is a further explanation of the foregoing; q. d. 'I used the word συνείδησις simply; which, nevertheless, I wish to be understood not so much of your own conscience (for you who have knowledge are, I know, not troubled by the promiscuous use of food), but that of others, who possess not that knowledge, and are easily disquieted.' (Pott.)

— ἱνατί γὰρ ἡ ἐλευθερία, &c.] The sense of this clause has been not a little disputed. By many Expositors the words are regarded as not the words of the Apostle, but an objection of the Corinthians to his directions, in the sense, 'Why is my liberty to be thus judged of or determined by other men's consciences, or restrained out of regard to the conscience of others?' q. d. 'I may have it, though I forbear to exercise it, on account of their scruples.' Thus the words following are explained: 'If I partake [of the meat] with thankfulness, why,' &c. But that these are the words of an objector is negatived by the γάρ; and surely to suppose them so without proof were uncritical. Besides, when St. Paul is introducing the words of an objector, he always, I believe, subjoins an answer; whereas none such is found here: for to suppose it at ver. 31 is utterly without foundation, and the supplementum in the place of it, introduced by some, is quite unauthorized. There is every reason, with the ancient and the most eminent modern Commentators, to suppose the words to be those of the Apostle, and intended as a caution (suggested by the use of συνείδησιν) to the following effect: 'For why is my liberty to be so exercised, as to be condemned by another's conscience [while I do what he thinks wrong, but I believe to be right]?' Thus v. 30 may be rendered: 'If I, by [Divine] grace, be a partaker of this liberty, why should I so use it, as to be evil spoken of for the use of that liberty for which I am thankful;' i. e. why am I to occasion censure and give offence by the rash and imprudent use of that liberty, for the possession of which I am thankful? So Theodoret: οὐχ ὅσιόν (φησιν) ἄλλον λωβᾶσθαι διὰ τῆς ἐμῆς τελειότητος. This interpretation is strongly confirmed by the context, and there is nothing philologically unsound in it; for κρίνεσθαι may very well be taken for κατακρίνεσθαι, or βλασφημεῖσθαι.

30 ἡ ἐλευθερία μου κρίνεται ὑπὸ ἄλλης συνειδήσεως; [b] Εἰ [δὲ] b Rom. 14. 6. 1 Tim. 4. 4.
ἐγὼ χάριτι μετέχω, τί βλασφημοῦμαι ὑπὲρ οὗ ἐγὼ εὐχα-31 ριστῶ; [c] Εἴτε οὖν ἐσθίετε εἴτε πίνετε, εἴτε τι ποιεῖτε, πάντα c Col. 3. 17.
32 εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ ποιεῖτε. [d] Ἀπρόσκοποι γίνεσθε καὶ Ἰουδαίοις d Rom. 14. 13.
33 καὶ Ἕλλησι, καὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ· [e] καθὼς κἀγὼ e Rom. 15. 2. supra 9. 19. 22.
πάντα πᾶσιν ἀρέσκω, μὴ ζητῶν τὸ ἐμαυτοῦ συμφέρον, ἀλλὰ 1 τὸ τῶν πολλῶν, ἵνα σωθῶσι. XI. [a] μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε, a Supra 4. 16. 1 Thess. 1. 6. 2 Thess. 3. 9.
καθὼς κἀγὼ Χριστοῦ.
2 ἘΠΑΙΝΩ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, ὅτι πάντα μου μέμνησθε,

Ἄλλης is for ἀλλοτρίου, which occurs in Rom. xv. 20, and Thucyd. i. 78. 1. Χάριτι may better be rendered 'by grace,' than 'with thankfulness,' which would require σὺν χάριτι. Also εἰ may, with Heydenreich, be taken for εἰ καὶ, although, (אִם) as in 1 Cor. ix. 2. 2 Cor. xiii. 14. The above view of the sense is supported by the authority of the best Commentators, ancient and modern. See especially Calvin.

I cannot omit to remark one peculiarity untouched on by all the Commentators, and yet closely connected with the true interpretation of the passage, and for want of seeing which many have missed the sense. I mean that idiomatical, and perhaps popular or provincial, use of the Present tense, by which it denotes not what is, but what is to be, or ought to be. Nearly allied to this idiom is the use of the Present for the Future, so common in Scripture, and also the Classics.

30. The δὲ, not found in many of the best MSS. and Versions, several Fathers, and the Editio Princeps, has been rejected by most Editors, and cancelled by Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, Pott, and Scholz; and rightly, I conceive. It arose, I suspect, from misapprehension of the true sense of the passage.

31. εἴτε οὖν ἐσθίετε—ποιεῖτε.] It has been well observed by Grotius, that 'the scope of the admonition is, to bid them beware, lest by any act of theirs, under any circumstances, the glory of God (namely, by the spread and influence of the Gospel) should be injured.' The sense comprehends a general admonition couched under a particular one, and the οὖν is conclusive; what is said in this and the two following verses being the conclusion deduced from what has been brought forward in the three foregoing Chapters. Render, 'Upon these principles, then, act:—In whatever ye eat and drink, and in all your conduct, keep an eye to the glory of God (by promoting his conscientious and sincere worship in Christ. See Whitby); and do not injure the cause of religion by throwing stumbling-blocks in the way either of unbelievers, to hinder them from embracing it, or of weak and scrupulous believers, to shake their attachment to it.' 'An exhortation (says Bp. Sanderson, Serm.) not only, in the performance of good works and necessary duties, to intend the glory of God, but even in the use of the creatures, and of all indifferent things; in eating and drinking, in buying and selling, and in all the like actions of common life.'

Similar to this is the sentiment of Arrian, Ep. i. 19, εἰς Θεὸν ἀφορῶντες ἐν παντὶ, μικρῷ καὶ μεγάλῳ. And so Socrates, ap. Plat. Crito, 47. B. ταύτῃ ἄρα αὐτῷ πρακτέον καὶ γυμναστέον, καὶ ἐδεστέον γε καὶ ποτέον, ᾗ ἂν τῷ ἑνὶ δοκῇ τῷ ἐπιστάτῃ, καὶ ἐπαΐοντι μᾶλλον ἢ ξύμπασι τοῖς ἄλλοις.

32. ἀπρόσκοποι γίνεσθε.] The sense is: 'Be none occasion of stumbling, either to the Jews, or Greeks, or Christians.' 'Beware lest the Jews have it to say that you are not sincere worshippers of the true God; lest the Greeks say that you think there is no harm in idolatry; and lest Christians weak in the faith be induced to forsake their Christian profession.' (Rosenmuller.)

33. καθὼς κἀγὼ, &c.] It is well observed by Chrysostom, that after having struck them with fear by setting forth their heavy responsibility for the injury and prejudice they might occasion to the Jews and the Heathens, the Apostle makes his caution more palatable by proposing himself as an example; q. d. 'I exhort you to no more than I set you an example of: for I study,' &c.

— πᾶσιν ἀρέσκω] i. e. 'I endeavour to please them; I consider what will approve itself to them; avoiding what will throw a stumbling-block in the way of their faith, defile and wound their conscience, lead them into sin, and imperil their souls.' Πάντα must be taken with due limitation. (See Calvin.) The words seem meant to suggest the principle which alone would make the rule of 'pleasing all men' a safe one,—namely, by not consulting one's own interest, but the spiritual good of one's fellow-Christians.

XI. 1. This verse is closely connected with the last of the preceding Chapter, from which it ought not to have been separated. 'Lest (says Bp. Sanderson) he might be thought to extol himself, and that we might know how unsafe a thing it were to rest barely on his or any other man's example, he leads them higher, and to a more perfect example, even that of Christ;' q. d. 'Although my example be little considerable in itself, yet wherein it is guided by the example of Christ, you may not despise it. Nor do I lay it upon you as a rule; I only set it before you as a help and encouragement. My example only shows the thing to be feasible: it is Christ's example only that can show it to be warrantable.' Thus the words κἀγὼ Χριστοῦ are subjoined, in order to preclude the idea of his holding himself up as a primary example.

The Apostle now proceeds to treat of various Ecclesiastical matters, and censures certain irregularities, which had occurred in the assemblies for divine worship, or for religious purposes.

2. πάντα.] As they were, we know, chargeable with some inattention to his directions, the expression must be taken, with limitation, to mean, b Eph. 5. 23. supra 3. 23. John 14. 28. Phil. 2. 7, 8, 9.

καὶ, καθὼς παρέδωκα ὑμῖν, τὰς παραδόσεις κατέχετε. ᵇ Θέλω 3 δὲ ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι, ὅτι παντὸς ἀνδρὸς ἡ κεφαλὴ ὁ Χριστός ἐστι. κεφαλὴ δὲ γυναικὸς, ὁ ἀνήρ· κεφαλὴ δὲ Χριστοῦ, ὁ Θεός. Πᾶς ἀνὴρ προσευχόμενος ἢ προφητεύων κατὰ κεφα- 4

'ye have, upon the whole, been observant of my ordinances.' By παραδόσεις are meant the directions, injunctions, and ordinances, whether written or oral, which the Apostle had left with them, or transmitted to them, for the regulation of the Church. Thus the word is often used in the sense precept, institution, &c., as 2 Thess. ii. 15.

3. Θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι, &c.] Here it is the purpose of the Apostle to draw their attention to certain cases in which they had abused their Christian liberty in things indifferent, and thereby occasioned great offence to the Jews, the Gentiles, and even Christians themselves. That they may be the better disposed to obey his present injunctions, he begins with commending their obedience aforetime. In θέλω ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι we have a form of serious exhortation to attend to what is going to be said, and implying that it is spoken authoritatively. Thus, in an Epistle of a Roman Proconsul to the Milesian Magistrates, Joseph. Ant. xiv. 10. 21, we find βούλομαι οὖν ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι, 'I wish you to mind this.'

— ὅτι παντὸς ἀνδρὸς, &c.] The Apostle (doubtless in answer to some inquiry in the letter of the Corinthians) proceeds to treat of the behaviour of women who were moved by inspiration to speak in their assemblies. And first, as to whether the women ought to have their heads covered. Now this question the Apostle thought proper to deal with as one closely connected both with the subjection of wives to their husbands, and with the honour of the husbands; which would be disgraced by any such impropriety in their demeanor as might be imputed to levity, or such violation of custom as would imply insubordination. See xiv. 34. 1 Tim. ii. 12. Now the custom was, for all married women, as well as single ones, to wear veils in public. Hence to depart from that custom (which was regarded as symbolical of subjection to her husband, and amongst the Jews was a token of modesty) would be to act out of character, and thus occasion disgrace to the husband, and scandal to the Church in the eyes of the heathens. This disorderly practice had, no doubt, first arisen among the Gentile converts; and has been, with great probability, ascribed to an imitation of the custom of the heathen priestesses, to prophesy, or otherwise discharge their religious functions, unveiled. In fact, it was the custom for all women to attend the sacred rites in the temples with heads uncovered. All this, however, was directly the reverse among the Jews and Jewish converts. Consequently, when the practice arose, it was sure to be imputed by the heathens to immodest feeling, especially since, the women being in the heathen temples unveiled, led to that familiarity between the sexes, which often produced very improper results. Hence it is here strictly forbidden. The Apostle, however, insists first on the argument as regards the dishonour done to the husband, by thus seemingly disavowing his authority; and he contrasts the case of covering the head during public worship, as it regarded the women and the men respectively. Upon the whole, it must be borne in mind, that all that is here said has reference only to those times and places, in which the customs were directly the reverse of our own. And accordingly it is of no further importance to us, than as furnishing us with a principle of universal application,—namely, that Christians must not, in externals, rashly recede from decorum; that in things indifferent they should use the same manners and customs as their contemporaries and fellow-countrymen; so that whatever may be accounted as base must be abstained from, though it may in itself have nothing wrong, in order to avoid all suspicion or offence; and, above all, that in public assemblies for religious worship, persons of both sexes should assume such a dress and demeanour as may be according to the custom of the country thought decorous, and suitable to their respective relations to each other, and to the common Head of the Church; 'so that all things may be done decently and in order.'

— Κεφαλὴ is here for κύριος, as in Achmet, Onir. cited by Wolf. Had St. Paul, indeed, written the sentence with rhetorical exactness, he would probably have employed the particles of comparison ὡς and οὕτως, and framed it thus: ὡς παντὸς ἀνδρὸς ἡ κεφαλὴ ὁ Χριστός ἐστι, οὕτως κεφαλὴ γυναικὸς ὁ ἀνήρ· καὶ ὡς κεφαλὴ γυναικὸς ὁ ἀνὴρ, οὕτως Χριστοῦ ὁ Θεός. It is well observed by Dr. Burton, 'that κεφαλὴ γυναικὸς ὁ ἀνὴρ (in which we have a general sentiment, of the authority of the man over the woman, similar to very many occurring in ancient writers) would have been enough for the argument; but that St. Paul adds the analogy of order and subordination in the Church.'

— κεφαλὴ δὲ Χριστοῦ, ὁ Θεός.] The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed that Christ is here represented as subordinate to God, considered as Mediator. Or we may suppose, with Theodoret, Ambrose, and Heydenreich, that there is simply a reference to the human nature of Christ.

4. The sense of the term προφητεύειν in this and the next verse has been disputed. Some, as T. Aquinas, Beza, Calvin, and Paræus, take it to signify to interpret Scripture under Divine inspiration; others, as Estius, Wells, and Bp. Pearce, to teach and communicate by inspiration the doctrines of revelation. Since, however, the word is in the next verse applied to women (who it appears from xiv. 34, sq. were not permitted to teach and preach in public), most Commentators for the last century have adopted the interpretation of Menoch. and Mede; to sing sacred hymns under the impulse of the Holy Spirit. But such a sense of the word is unauthorized. The first mentioned sense is indeed liable to the same objection as the second; though, in fact, that would seem to hold equally against every possible one; for the Apostle says in the same Chapter, ver. 14, that 'it is a shame for a woman to speak in the Church.' Bp. Pearce, however, maintains that teaching is consistent with both the above passages; since here it is teaching by divine inspiration (a circumstance quite extraordinary), which is not the

5 λῆς ἔχων, καταισχύνει τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ· πᾶσα δὲ γυνὴ προσευχομένη ἢ προφητεύουσα ἀκατακαλύπτῳ τῇ κεφαλῇ, καταισχύνει τὴν κεφαλὴν ἑαυτῆς· ἓν γάρ ἐστι καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ 6 τῇ ἐξυρημένῃ. [c] εἰ γὰρ οὐ κατακαλύπτεται γυνὴ, καὶ κει- c Num. 5. 18. Deut. 21. 12. & 22. 5.
ράσθω· εἰ δὲ αἰσχρὸν γυναικὶ τὸ κείρασθαι ἢ ξυρᾶσθαι, κατα-7 καλυπτέσθω. [d] Ἀνὴρ μὲν γὰρ οὐκ ὀφείλει κατακαλύπτεσθαι d Gen. 1. 26, 27. & 5. 1. & 9. 6.
τὴν κεφαλὴν, εἰκὼν καὶ δόξα Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων· γυνὴ δὲ δόξα case in those passages; for (continues he) 'when St. Paul imposes silence on women in the Church, he means silence not in opposition to any gift of the Spirit, but to the desire, which those who had not the Spirit might have, of instructing others, or being themselves instructed in Christian knowledge.' I see not, however, why he should confine the sense to teaching. It may, I think, denote every other sort of speaking under divine inspiration,—to edification, exhortation, and instruction, in addition to that of praying just before mentioned; all equally fulfilling the prophecy of Joel ii. 28, applied by St. Paul, Acts ii. 17, to the times of the Gospel, namely, that their daughters should prophesy. So also Acts xxi. 9, τούτῳ δὲ ἦσαν θυγατέρες παρθένοι τέσσαρες προφητευούσαι.

— κατὰ κεφαλῆς ἔχων.] Supply τι, scil. κάλυμμα, expressed in some MSS. and Versions; or ἱμάτιον, as in Plutarch, Apophth. (cited by Krause) ἐβάδιζε κατὰ τῆς κεφαλῆς ἔχων τὸ ἱμάτιον. A yet more remarkable ellipsis is found at Esther vi. 12: Ἀμὰν δὲ ἐπέστρεψεν εἰς τὰ ἴδια λυπούμενος κατὰ κεφαλῆς, where ἔχων ἱμάτιον may be supplied to complete the sense. But considering that in the Hebrew we have חפוי ראש, and that the Septuagint Translators do not usually seek out harsh ellipses, I suspect that after λυπούμενος there has slipped out of the text, ob homœoteleuton, κεκαλυμμένος, which seems to have been in the text in Origen.

The word κατὰ is here used, because the article worn is supposed to hang down from the head. Otherwise ἐπὶ (found, indeed, in one or two MSS.) might have been employed.

—καταισχύνει τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐ.] It has been disputed whether κεφαλὴ here should be taken in a figurative sense, as just before, or in the natural one. Certain it is that, as there are here two propositions affirmed, of the man, and of the woman, in the same terms, to interpret one in the natural, and the other in the figurative sense, would be not a little harsh. Nay, thus the import of κεφαλὴ might be thrice changed in the compass of three short verses, a thing perhaps unprecedented. And as in the case of the woman, the natural sense is plainly alluded to in the words following, and therefore cannot be excluded; so also it cannot well be excluded in the case of the man. And yet the context (at ver. 3) strongly supports the metaphorical sense, which, indeed, is the most important, and was probably most in the mind of the Apostle. In order to remove the above difficulty, it should seem best to suppose, with Heydenreich, that there is intended a union of the two senses, per amphiboliam, either, as he supposes, by engrafting the metaphorical sense on the natural, or (which is preferable) by understanding the metaphorical sense to be the principal, and the natural the subordinate, or under sense, in the case of the woman. And thus there may also be supposed a double sense of καταισχύνει, denoting, in the former case, 1. to insult, or disparage, namely, by contravening the intentions of the Great Head of the Church, or disobeying her head; 2. to disgrace or dishonour, namely, by acting out of character, and violating common propriety. Now, in the case of the man, to carry the symbol of subjection (i. e. having the head covered up in public) was tantamount to acting like a woman, and consequently disgracing his dignity as a man. In the case of the woman, the Apostle (to represent the dishonour in the strongest point of view) says, that if the woman be not covered, wear a covering, it is one and the same thing (i. e. as bad) as if her head were shaven; for such is the force of the idiomatical expression καὶ κειράσθω, 'let her even be shorn;' meaning (by a reductio ad absurdum), 'she may as well be shorn;' so standing for ἓν καὶ τὸ αὐτό ἐστι [αὐτῇ καὶ] τῇ ἐξυρημένῃ. Now that was regarded as the greatest possible disfigurement and disgrace to a woman; and was only adopted in extreme grief (see Deut. xxi. 12), or inflicted, as a mark of infamy, on adulteresses or harlots. So Philo, ii. 309. 14, ὅθ' ἱερεὺς τοὐπίκρανον ἀφελὼν, ἵν' ἐπικρίνηται γεγυμνωμένη τῇ κεφαλῇ τὰ τῆς αἰδοῦς περιῃρημένη σύμβολον, ᾧ ταῖς εἰς ἅπαν ἀναιτίαις ἔθος χρῆσθαι.

7—12. The scope of these verses is further to illustrate the impropriety of such an abandonment of the coif or head-covering, as being alike a dishonouring of the man and a disgracing of the woman; inasmuch as, notwithstanding the woman enjoys the same dignity in things pertaining to religion, yet nature herself requires that the superiority should be conceded to the MAN in domestic and civil affairs; and the Law of God, by its injunctions, confirms those dictates. First, the Apostle, at ver. 7, draws a contrast between the man and the woman, as to the use of head-covering in public. The man (he says) ought not to employ it, as being εἰκὼν καὶ δόξα Θεοῦ,—the image of God, as holding, in delegation from Him, the governance of all creatures (Gen. i. 26, 27. Ps. viii. 4. 6. Wisd. ix. 2), including woman. Man is thus considered as a type and image of God, just as a viceroy was called εἰκὼν τοῦ βασιλέως, i. e. a ray from his brightness. And so in the ancient writers man is often spoken of as an image of God. Accordingly, it is implied that woman is a ray from man's brightness, shining like the moon, with borrowed light, and deriving her glory from him. So in Hom. Od. xviii. 254, Penelope says, 'if Ulysses would return and sway the sceptre,' μεῖζόν κε κλέος εἴη ἐμὸν καὶ κάλλιον οὕτω. Thus, then, is implied the duty on the part of the man to consult the glory of God by not abandoning the place of dignity assigned e Gen. 2. 18, 21, 22. ἀνδρός ἐστιν. [e] οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἀνὴρ ἐκ γυναικὸς, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ 8 ἐξ ἀνδρός· καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἐκτίσθη ἀνὴρ διὰ τὴν γυναῖκα, ἀλλὰ 9 f Eccles. 5. 6. γυνὴ διὰ τὸν ἄνδρα· [f] διὰ τοῦτο ὀφείλει ἡ γυνὴ ἐξουσίαν 10 ἔχειν ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς, διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους. Πλὴν οὔτε 11

by Him. As to the woman, the contrary is meant to be asserted of her. And the sense, if expressed at full length, would be, γυνὴ [ὀφείλει κατακαλύπτεσθαι ὅτι] δόξα ἀνδρός ἐστιν. The woman is said to be δόξα ἀνδρὸς in the same sense as the man is δόξα Θεοῦ, and with the same additional meaning by implication; i. e. she was created out of him, and for his use, and therefore ought not only to be subject to him, but should so act as to contribute to his credit and honour; see 2 Cor. viii. 23. 1 Thess. ii. 20.

8, 9. Here are shown the grounds of this inferiority; 1. in respect of nature, by the woman having been formed from the man (Gen. ii. 18—21); 2. in posteriority of creation; 3. in purpose of creation, namely, to be a help meet for him. Now subserviency implies inferiority.

10. ἐξουσίαν ἔχειν—ἀγγέλους.] There are few passages that have so perplexed the Commentators as the present. The difficulty centres in the meaning of the terms ἐξουσίαν and ἀγγέλους, which, though in themselves plain, yet seem to yield, according to their ordinary import, no very apposite sense. The former is by almost all Commentators explained to mean a veil. But, from the context, and from its being at ver. 15 interchanged with περιβόλαιον, it should rather seem to mean a kerchief (couvre-chef). So Theophylact, κάλυμμα. 'Εξουσία is plainly the name of the article of dress in question, and hence it is best left untranslated; i. e. Exousia. Of this use of the word (exceedingly rare) one example has been adduced by Olearius from Callistratus, who uses the expression ἐξουσία τριχώματος to denote a kind of topping, composed of braids of hair. So also the Latin Imperium is used in the later writers. Here, however, it seems to denote a kind of head-gear, like the ancient couvre-chef (or kerchief), consisting of a piece of cloth of a square form thrown over the head, and tied under the chin, and thereby nearly covering the face, except the eyes; similar to the velamen mentioned by Dicæarchus as worn by the Theban women: ἱμάτιον ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς τοιοῦτό ἐστιν, ὥστε προσωπιδίῳ δοκεῖν πᾶν τὸ πρόσωπον κατειλῆφθαι, οἱ γὰρ ὀφθαλμοὶ διαφαίνονται μόνον.

The reason for the appellation here, as in many other names of things, is far from certain. The term itself denotes power or authority; but with what reference as to its present use, has been disputed. The ancient and most modern Commentators suppose it to have been so called, as being emblematical of the authority of the husband over the wife: while many recent Expositors have adopted the opinion of Salmasius and others, that it is so called, not with reference to the authority of the husband over the wife, but of the married woman over the maiden. Yet, notwithstanding that there is much to countenance this opinion, it must, I think, be abandoned; the other view being far more suitable to the context and the scope of the Apostle's argumentation. Thus the sense is, 'For that reason (i. e. in acknowledgment of the superiority of the husband, whose delegated authority she holds) the wife ought to have on her head an Exousia.'

It still remains, however, to consider the import of the following words, διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους, which have been thought to involve even more difficulty than the former. Most Commentators, adopting the usual signification of ἄγγελος, take the sense to be, 'through reverence of the Angels;' who, according to what we read in various parts of Scripture, were ministering spirits attendant on the house of God, and symbols of his presence. To others, indeed, this has appeared so little satisfactory, that they have sought out such a signification of ἄγγελος, as, however rare in itself, might yield a more suitable sense. Thus some of the recent Expositors understand it of spies, sent by the heathen to watch for and report any improprieties that might occur at the Christian assemblies: a method of exposition liable to insuperable objections, stated by me in Recens. Synop. Other interpretations have been adopted, which it is not necessary here to notice, and conjectures proposed alike improbable and inadmissible. To suppose, with Dr. Owen and Abp. Newcome, that the words διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους are a marginal gloss, is running counter to all the MSS., and indeed violating probability itself; for the words would, in effect, be no gloss at all. Upon the whole, as we are not authorized to deviate from the received reading,—so, I apprehend, it involves no such difficulty as should make us abandon the usual interpretation, ably supported by Hyperius. As to what is urged by Pearce and Newcome, that 'a just and sufficient reason having been assigned before, we can scarcely suppose that a new and less cogent one would be subjoined'—this is surely being too hypercritical, not to say disrespectful to the sacred writer. And certainly there is no reason why the Apostle should not strengthen his injunction by the addition of a consideration which, though less powerful, yet was likely to have material force,—though it would be rather in the way of appeal than of argument. As an illustration of which, it may be sufficient to notice another similar passage of the Apostle at 1 Tim. v. 21, διαμαρτύρομαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν ἀγγέλων, ἵνα, &c. In the present instance, where propriety and decorum were more particularly concerned, none surely could be fitter objects by whom to make the appeal, than those 'ministering spirits, sent forth to minister unto those who shall be heirs of salvation' (see iv. 9), and who, by their peculiar characteristics, of purity, humility (see Is. vi. 2), and preservation of that subordination, in which we have reason to suppose the various orders are placed, would feel peculiarly grieved (from the interest which they take in the concerns of men, considered as the lower family of God, see iv. 9.) at any such violation of the customary forms of propriety and decorum as might bring scandal on the Christian name. On the subject of the presence of Angels in places of Divine worship, the following examples and illus-

ἀνὴρ χωρὶς γυναικὸς, οὔτε γυνὴ χωρὶς ἀνδρὸς, ἐν Κυρίῳ·
12 [g] ὥσπερ γὰρ ἡ γυνὴ ἐκ τοῦ ἀνδρὸς, οὕτω καὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ διὰ τῆς [g Rom. 11. 36.]
13 γυναικός· τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ. Ἐν ὑμῖν αὐτοῖς κρί-νατε· πρέπον ἐστὶ γυναῖκα ἀκατακάλυπτον τῷ Θεῷ προσ-14 εύχεσθαι; ἢ οὐδὲ αὐτὴ ἡ φύσις διδάσκει ὑμᾶς, ὅτι ἀνὴρ 15 μὲν ἐὰν κομᾷ, ἀτιμία αὐτῷ ἐστι· γυνὴ δὲ ἐὰν κομᾷ, δόξα αὐτῇ ἐστιν; ὅτι ἡ κόμη ἀντὶ περιβολαίου δέδοται αὐτῇ.
16 [h] Εἰ δέ τις δοκεῖ φιλόνεικος εἶναι·—ἡμεῖς τοιαύτην συνήθειαν [h 1 Tim. 6. 4. infra 14. 33.]
οὐκ ἔχομεν, οὐδὲ αἱ ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ Θεοῦ.
17 Τοῦτο δὲ παραγγέλλων οὐκ ἐπαινῶ, ὅτι οὐκ εἰς τὸ κρεῖτ-18 τον, ἀλλ' εἰς τὸ ἧττον συνέρχεσθε. [i] Πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ, συν- [i Supra 1. 10, 11, 12.]

trations (selected out of a great number adduced by the Commentators) are important in defending the usual interpretation. Ps. cxxxviii. 1. Sept. ἐναντίον ἀγγέλων ψαλῶ σοι. (Compare also v. 2.) Philo de Amore reckons among the auditors of the hymns sung at the Temple τοὺς ἀγγέλους λειτουργοὺς, ἐφόρους κατὰ τὴν σοφῶν ἐμπειρίαν, θεασαμένους μή τι τῆς ᾠδῆς ἐκμελές (i. e. out of tune, inharmonious, incongruous). So also, in the most ancient Liturgies and the Const. Apost. viii. 4, angels are supposed to be present at Divine worship (as they were supposed to be present in the synagogue, see Deut. xxxiii. 20, and still more in the Temple, where the cherubim were meant to represent their presence); especially on solemn occasions,—either as joining in the services, or as being witnesses to what takes place, and also, as we read in Origen c. Cels. l. v. p. 233, in order that they may convey the prayers of the just to the throne of God.

11, 12. As the Apostle had given great pre-eminence to the man, saying that the woman is for him and on account of him, and under him; so here, lest he should too much elevate the one and depress the other party, he brings in the correction πλὴν, &c.; meaning, that nevertheless there was much to comfort the inferior party, since the superior had the superiority vested in him to use for the benefit of the inferior, and that, upon the whole, the sexes were made so dependent upon each other, that it was their mutual interest to cultivate indissoluble union. (Chrysostom and Calvin.)

The expression χωρὶς may, however, be understood (as it is done by Theophylact) to intimate a point of superiority on the part of the woman; namely, that though at the first creation the woman was from the man, yet the man is descended from the woman. And thus the sense may be expressed, with Bp. Middleton, as follows: 'Notwithstanding, (such is the ordinance of God,) neither is any man brought into being without the intervention of a woman, nor any woman without that of a man; for as (v. 12) the woman (i. e. women generally) is originally from the man, so the man (i. e. men generally) is brought into being by the intervention of the woman (i. e. women): these and all other things are ordained to be as they are by the wisdom of God.'

14. The Apostle here adds another proof of the impropriety of the thing in question, deduced from the natural sense of propriety. For ἡ φύσις is best explained of an 'instinctive and natural perception of what is right or wrong;' though some interpret it of use and custom; which, indeed, merges into the foregoing, since use is second nature.

It was the national custom of both Hebrews and Greeks for the men to wear their hair short, and the women long.

15. δόξα αὐτῇ ἐστι;] Meaning, 'it is an ornament to her,' and becomes her. So Galen, cited by Wetstein, says that woman has need of long hair καὶ σκέπης ἕνεκα καὶ κόσμου. Ἀντὶ περιβολαίου, 'as a sort of natural covering, or veil.' The force of the term περιβ. is admirably illustrated by the description given by a recent traveller (Lamartine) of a Syrian girl, whose hair is described as 'so long and bushy as to completely cover her, like the branches of a weeping willow falling in all directions over its trunk.'

16. δοκεῖ φιλ. εἶναι.] This is well explained by Luther, Casaubon, Grotius, and Wetstein, 'thinks good;' i. e. 'is pleased to be contentious or disputatious [about this matter].' After εἶναι there seems to be a clause omitted,—namely, φιλόνεικος ἔστω· τοῦτο μόνον λέξομαι.

— ἡμεῖς τοιαύτην—Θεοῦ.] 'Such a custom as that of women being uncovered in public worship is neither tolerated by us Apostles, nor in use in the churches of God generally.' 'Thus (observes Abp. Newcome) to the contentious he speaks with authority; to others, with deference.'

17—22. The Apostle now brings forward another exception to the general commendation which he had bestowed on them, as to attention to his directions and ordinances; and that was in the celebration of public worship, and especially the Lord's Supper. He complains of their divisions and factions, and, as consequent thereupon, their irregularities in the celebration of the Lord's Supper; which were so great, as almost to contravene the purpose of its institution. In order to remedy these, he reminds them of its first institution and intent.

17. τοῦτο παρ. οὐκ ἐπ., &c.] The full sense is: 'While I am giving you this direction, I cannot but take occasion to censure you, on the ground that,' &c. In οὐκ ἐπ. there is an elegant meiosis, of which examples are adduced by Raphelius and Wetstein from Aristophanes, Plato, and Xenophon. The εἰς following denotes not purpose, but result; which was not edification, but the reverse: a consequence which we may, with Grotius, attribute to the abuse of the Agapæ which accompanied the Lord's Supper.

ἐρχομένων ὑμῶν ἐν [τῇ] ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἀκούω σχίσματα ἐν ὑμῖν ὑπάρχειν, καὶ μέρος τι πιστεύω· [k] δεῖ γὰρ καὶ αἱρέσεις ἐν 19 ὑμῖν εἶναι, ἵνα οἱ δόκιμοι φανεροὶ γένωνται ἐν ὑμῖν. Συνερ- 20
χομένων οὖν ὑμῶν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, οὐκ ἔστι Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον k Matt. 18. 7. 1 John 2. 19.

18. συνερχομένων — ἐκκλησίᾳ.] Expositors are not agreed whether ἐκκλησίᾳ means church, or assembly. The former interpretation is maintained by Grotius, Estius, Fuller, and Mede. But the arguments they urge only prove that the word may have that sense, not that it must. Nay, the comparison with ver. 20 leads to the contrary conclusion. There is more reason to suppose (with Cameron, Piscator, Wolf, and most of the recent Commentators), that the expression means conventu, congregation, or assembly: a sense more suitable to the Apostle's argument, which is to warn them against dissensions in an assembly met together for the worship of God. Besides, συνερχ. ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ here cannot well differ in sense from the repetition of the same thing, συνερχ. ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ at ver. 20, which can only be understood of the assembly. Not to say that there is some reason to doubt whether the word ἐκκλησία had acquired the sense church (as of a building) so early; for (as Olshausen observes) the state of the Apostolic Church was as yet such as did not allow of the Christians having ecclesiastical edifices properly so called; and although the term would seem, by the antithesis, to have that sense at ver. 22, yet even there it may only denote an assembly meeting in a particular place, i. e. a sense midway between cœtus and ecclesia. The Article, indeed, here might seem to decide in favour of ecclesia; but it is not found in many of the best MSS. and the Edit. Princ., and was thrown out by Matthæi, Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz, very properly; for it was more likely to be inserted by those who wished to make the sense church certain, than cancelled by those who sought to confirm the sense assembly or congregation.

By σχίσματα is meant, not what we understand by schisms, namely, separations from the Church, but factions and dissensions in it; and the expression is synonymous with αἱρέσεις in the next verse.

19. δεῖ γὰρ, &c.] Here δεῖ (like the similar expression ἀνάγκη at Matt. xviii. 7, and xxiv. 6,) does not import an absolute necessity; but, as Hyperius remarks, a necessity of consequence, or when by Divine permission, on account of preceding causes, certain things must happen; or, as Bp. Pearce explains, such as arises from the tendency of several causes to effect it: or we may say, with Theophylact, it expresses what will and must take place while men continue to be men; q. d. 'It cannot but be, from the passions of men and the propensities of human nature, that divisions will occur.'

"Ινα is here by many of the best Commentators, ancient and modern, supposed to have, not the final or causal, but the eventual force; q. d. 'whence it will come to pass, that they who are approved will be made manifest.' Since, however, this is somewhat straining the sense, it is better to take the ἵνα in the final use, to denote end; namely, as adverting to the purpose of God in permitting this mixture of truth and falsehood in the moral world: a view, indeed, required by the course of reasoning, which has been ably traced by Bp. Warburton, in a Sermon on this text; in which he considers the purpose of God in permitting heresies and dissensions to subsist in the world, and ably vindicates the general course of Divine Providence therein. 'The Apostle (says he) in these words hints at one condition of the moral world, inseparable, as it is at present constituted, from its existence,—a mixture of truth and falsehood, analogous to things salutary and noxious in the natural. But, in both worlds, the good produced by this mixture is so eminent, as fully to support the trite observation, that evil was suffered for the sake of a greater good: a species of which is here mentioned,—the manifestation of the approved.' The learned Prelate then proceeds to consider, 1. who are meant by the approved; namely, those who so pass through the trial of their faith and Christian charity resulting from communication with heretical opinions, as to be purified in faith and virtue, and generally approved by God, explorati et probati, tried and approved, δεκτοί. Comp. Ecclus. ii. 5. And so the word is used in James i. 12. 2. He then goes on to show the nature and end of that manifestation,—its benefits to the approved themselves, and to the Church at large; evincing that thus the evil of heresies, by the gracious disposition of things, is turned to good; and heresy, by a contrary exertion, made to produce faith and charity: and thus God's general providence, in permitting evil to exist for the sake of good, and in bringing good out of evil, is amply vindicated.

20. συνερχομένων οὖν, &c.] Οὖν is here, as often, resumptive; the Apostle now coming close home to the point he intended to animadvert on, and showing how and in what respect they assembled in worship, not to edification, but to the reverse; namely, by abuse of the ordinance of the Eucharist.

— Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον.] By modern Commentators this is usually supposed to denote the Eucharist, while the ancient Commentators in general, and, of the modern ones, the Roman Catholic Expositors almost universally, and some eminent Protestant ones (as Grotius, Michaelis, Markland, and Bp. Middleton,) suppose it to mean 'a (or "the") Lord's-day meal;' understanding it of the Agapæ, or feasts of charity, which then preceded the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper: and certainly δεῖπνον is frequently used in the sense convivium; and we find Tertullian (cited by Heydenreich) calling the Agapa a convivium Dominicum. Besides, as Heydenreich remarks, it is clear from the whole context that the Apostle in this passage had in mind the Agapa; since the abuses he censures are such as do not apply to the Eucharist, but to the Agapa. And yet, as Heydenreich admits, it can as little be denied that the Apostle had in view, at the same time, the Eucharist, which was added to the Agapa as a post cœna; for the abuses that prevailed at the Agapa are chiefly censured on the ground that they made Christians unfit for the worthy cele-

21 φαγεῖν· ἕκαστος γὰρ τὸ ἴδιον δεῖπνον προλαμβάνει ἐν τῷ 22 φαγεῖν· καὶ ὃς μὲν πεινᾷ, ὃς δὲ μεθύει. [l] Μὴ γὰρ οἰκίας  l James 2. 6.
οὐκ ἔχετε εἰς τὸ ἐσθίειν καὶ πίνειν; ἢ τῆς ἐκκλησίας τοῦ Θεοῦ καταφρονεῖτε, καὶ καταισχύνετε τοὺς μὴ ἔχοντας; Τί 23 ὑμῖν εἴπω; ἐπαινέσω ὑμᾶς ἐν τούτῳ; οὐκ ἐπαινῶ. [m] Ἐγὼ  m Infra 15. 3.
γὰρ παρέλαβον ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου, ὃ καὶ παρέδωκα ὑμῖν· ὅτι  Gal. 1. 12. Matt. 26. 26. Mark 14. 22.
ὁ Κύριος Ἰησοῦς, ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ᾗ παρεδίδοτο, ἔλαβεν ἄρτον,  Luke 22. 19.

bration of the holy Sacrament, and indeed involved contempt and desecration of that sacred rite, as the Apostle sets forth at large in a representation of the true nature and purpose of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. It is therefore best to suppose (with Heydenreich) that the Apostle has reference to the whole of the Lord's-day solemnity, which was composed of both Agapa and Eucharist,—in imitation of Christ's last repast with his disciples; which consisted of both the ordinary supper, and, after it, the Lord's Supper, then instituted and celebrated for the first time. Hence it is highly probable that in the Apostolic age these Agapæ took place before the celebration of the Eucharist, though in after ages the reverse became customary, and that, as we may suppose, from the abuse of the Agapæ. One may remark the δεινότης, or spirit, of the words οὐκ ἔστι Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον φαγεῖν, which should be rendered, 'It is not to eat the Lord's supper,' i. e. as it ought to be eaten; q. d. 'That cannot be the purpose of your meeting together: the reason for which supposition is given in the words following (v. 21), which contrast what the repast was with what it ought to be; q. d. 'A repast of that kind you do not take; for your meal is not common, but separate; every one eateth his own supper, without waiting for others to join in it.'

21. τὸ ἴδιον δεῖπνον.] Meaning the supper which each one had brought to the common meal. Προλαμβάνει (antecapit) merely has reference to the eagerness with which each one (of the richer sort, we may presume,) snatched up the food he had brought, and filled himself therewith, before the poorer class could well touch it; which would cause them (who had brought little or nothing with them) to fare very scantily. And as this (which is to be understood of the Agapa preceding the Lord's Supper) was not an ordinary meal, it was a violation of propriety as well as Christian charity so to act; for though each brought his own supper, yet when it had been thrown into the common stock, it ceased to be his own. Thus the plenty of some shamed the want of others, which occasioned heart-burnings, and so defeated the very end of the ordinance.

— ὃς μὲν πεινᾷ, ὃς δὲ μεθύει.] The antithesis may here seem to require μεθύει to be taken, as it is done by Heydenreich and Schleusner, of excess in eating. This, however, would involve a catachresis so harsh, as by no means to be tolerated. It is better, with Chrysost., to include both eating and drinking, the verb by a sort of sensus prægnans standing for two verbs. The expression is, indeed, as Chrysostom observes, one of great emphasis (otherwise ἐσθίει might have been used); being meant to stigmatize more cuttingly the offence in question, by contrasting the state of the poorer with that of the richer classes. The former are described as having little or no food, and their drink, if any, water; the latter, as indulging to satiety not only in food, but strong drink. The sense, then, is literally, 'he is well soaked with drink;' a sense of μεθύειν also occurring at John ii. 10 (where see Note). That drunkenness, however, is not here meant, is plain from what is said in the next words, 'Have ye not houses to eat and drink (not get drunk) in, that ye set so light by the Church as to do that there which ought to be done elsewhere?' Or if we (with some eminent Commentators) take ἐκκλ. of the congregation, as at ver. 18, καταφρονεῖτε will have the sense 'hold in contempt, by doing that before all, which must shock the feelings of the well-disposed.'

22. τοὺς μὴ ἔχοντας] scil. φαγεῖν; meaning those who had brought scanty provision, and who would thus be put to shame very wrongly; for, if they must struggle with want, they ought to be left to bear it at home, not shamed with it by rude comparison with the plenty of their richer brethren; for (as a great heathen poet feelingly observes), 'Nil habet infelix paupertas durius in se, Quam quod ridiculos homines facit!'

23. To further show how unseemly and censurable was the abuse in question, the Apostle places in contrast the true use of the rite; laying before them the whole history of the institution of the Lord's Supper, that they might the better understand the purpose of Him who instituted it, and thus more clearly see, that by such conduct that purpose was entirely frustrated.

I have in Rec. Synop. shown that παρέλαβον, &c., cannot be understood of tradition derived from the other Apostles; nor be supposed to denote merely that the Eucharist is not the invention of himself or any man, but a Divine ordinance; but that the context, and the parallel passages at 1 Cor. xv. 3. Gal. i. 11, 12, and 2 Cor. xii. 1, admit no other sense than the following: 'The institution which I am now about to treat on is what I myself (the ἐγὼ being emphatic, as xv. 9, et al.) received from the immediate and personal communication of the Lord himself; and, according to the express injunction therein contained, it is appointed for your observance. It is not, therefore, of my own inventing, nor that of any man; but Divinely instituted, and consequently imperatively binding on all Christians.' Παρεδίδοτο is rendered by most recent Interpreters, 'was delivered up.' But though that be the proper sense of the word, yet it is only with the adjunct εἴς τινα or τινας, or εἰς φυλακήν; and as treachery was combined with the delivering up of Christ, and seems by the context to have been in the mind of the Apostle, there is no reason to abandon the common interpretation, 'was betrayed.'

καὶ εὐχαριστήσας ἔκλασε καὶ εἶπε· [Λάβετε, φάγετε·] 24 τοῦτό μου ἐστὶ τὸ σῶμα τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν κλώμενον· τοῦτο ποιεῖτε εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν. Ὡσαύτως καὶ τὸ ποτήριον, 25 μετὰ τὸ δειπνῆσαι, λέγων· Τοῦτο τὸ ποτήριον ἡ καινὴ δια-θήκη ἐστὶν ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ αἵματι· τοῦτο ποιεῖτε ὁσάκις ἂν n John 14. 3. Acts 1. 11. πίνητε, εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν. [n] ὁσάκις γὰρ ἂν ἐσθίητε τὸν 26 ἄρτον τοῦτον, καὶ τὸ ποτήριον τοῦτο πίνητε, τὸν θάνατον o Num. 9. 10, 13. John 6. 51, 63, 64. & 13. 27. infra 10. 21. τοῦ Κυρίου καταγγέλλετε, ἄχρις οὗ ἂν ἔλθῃ. [o] Ὥστε ὃς 27
ἂν ἐσθίῃ τὸν ἄρτον τοῦτον ἢ πίνῃ τὸ ποτήριον τοῦ Κυρίου ἀναξίως, ἔνοχος ἔσται τοῦ σώματος καὶ αἵματος τοῦ p Gal. 6. 4. 2 Cor. 13. 5. Κυρίου. [p] Δοκιμαζέτω δὲ ἄνθρωπος ἑαυτόν· καὶ οὕτως ἐκ τοῦ 28 ἄρτου ἐσθιέτω καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ποτηρίου πινέτω· ὁ γὰρ ἐσθίων 29 καὶ πίνων ἀναξίως, κρίμα ἑαυτῷ ἐσθίει καὶ πίνει, μὴ δια-

24. On the exact sense of this whole passage, containing St. Paul's doctrine of the Eucharist, and on the full force of the terms of the institution, especially the word ἐστὶ, see Note on Matt. xxvi. 26. Luke xxii. 19, sq., Bornemann on Luke ii. 14, and especially Dean Turton's Roman Catholic Doctrine of the Eucharist considered, pp. 311—332.

— λάβετε, φάγετε.] These words, not found in several MSS. of the Western recension, the Italic, Copt., and Sahidic Versions, and some Fathers, are cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz. And indeed we may imagine more reasons why the words should have been inserted, than ejected. But as the present account bears a strong similarity to that of St. Luke, in whom the words are not found, may we not suspect that the early critics omitted the words to purposely make that correspondence the stronger? Besides the MSS. in question are all of the altered sort, and not many in number. As to what some urge, that the Apostle did not intend a statement of the exact words of our Lord, it is a mere gratuitous assumption.

Κλώμενον signifies, by a significatio prægnans, 'broken and given [up to death].' Εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν, 'in commemoration of my sacrifice, and the benefits thereby imparted to all Christians.'

26. καταγγέλλετε.] There is here a significatio prægnans, 'ye proclaim and commemorate.' At ἄχρις οὗ ἂν ἔλθῃ there seems an omission of a clause; q. d. '[And this you are to continue to do] till he come,' at his second coming to judgment.

27. ὥστε] 'this being the case,' i. e. such being the intent of the Lord's Supper. The best Commentators are agreed that the ἢ is for καί. Ἀναξίως must not be construed with Κυρίου (as some recent Commentators contend), but be taken absolutely. In this representation, of course, must have been chiefly meant the particular kind of abuse just adverted to; and thus the unworthy partaker will principally be (as Billroth explains), 'He who in observing an ordinance which is symbolical of oneness with Christ, and so with all his members (by which what is done unto them is done unto Him, see Matt. xxv. 40), yet affronts or injures his brother.' Though to confine it, as do most recent foreign Commentators, to that, is, I think, unwarrantable; for it would seem, as Calvin points out, that St. Paul, as is customary with him, here passes from a particular case to a general doctrine. Accordingly the full meaning intended in ἀναξίως will be οὐ καθηκόντως, in a manner unworthy of and unsuitable to the purposes for which this sacred rite was instituted, whether by irreverence or carelessness in the celebration, or due previous preparation for it, or the prevalence of uncharitable or injurious dispositions, or of excess while receiving it.

— ἔνοχος ἔσται τοῦ σώματος, &c.] Meaning, 'he will be guilty with respect to the body and blood,' i. e. guilty of profaning the symbols of the body and blood of Christ, and consequently will be amenable to the punishment due to such an irreverence and abuse of the highest of the means of grace; see James ii. 10. For (to use the words of Billroth) 'as by the power of the Spirit the fruits of Christ's death are in the right observance of the Lord's Supper appropriated to the life of the person through faith, so, conversely, the abuse, knowingly and wittingly, of the Sacrament, renders the person absolutely a present partaker in the guilt of the death of Christ. Compare Luke xi. 47, 48.'

28. δοκιμαζέτω, &c.] 'Let, then, each person [previously] examine himself, whether he shall eat it, as he ought to eat the representation of the Lord's body, and see whether he hath the dispositions which the participation in so holy a rite demands; whether he feels a lively faith in God's mercy through Christ, and a suitable gratitude for the sacrifice it commemorates, and is firmly resolved to observe the injunctions of its divine Founder, especially as to being in charity with all men; otherwise he will participate not only ineffectually, but unworthily, and therefore guiltily.'

— καὶ οὕτως] 'and [having] thus [examined himself];' or, tum demum. So Chrysostom explains by τότε.

29. κρίμα ἑαυτῷ ἐ.] i. e. 'causes, by so eating, condemnation to himself, and consequently punishment, whether temporal, as in the infliction of sickness or adversity,'—or, if that fail of its effect, eternal, in a future state, by being condemned and punished with the impenitent and unregenerate world; see ver. 32.

— μὴ διακρίνων τὸ σῶμα τ. K.] Meaning, as the best Commentators explain, 'not dis-

30 κρίνων τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Κυρίου. Διὰ τοῦτο ἐν ὑμῖν πολλοὶ
31 ἀσθενεῖς καὶ ἄῤῥωστοι, καὶ κοιμῶνται ἱκανοί. [q] εἰ γὰρ ἑαυ- q Ps. 32. 5. Prov. 18. 17.
32 τοὺς διεκρίνομεν, οὐκ ἂν ἐκρινόμεθα· [r] κρινόμενοι δὲ ὑπὸ r Heb. 12 5–10.
τοῦ Κυρίου, παιδευόμεθα, ἵνα μὴ σὺν τῷ κόσμῳ κατακρι-33 θῶμεν. Ὥστε, ἀδελφοί μου, συνερχόμενοι εἰς τὸ φαγεῖν, 34 ἀλλήλους ἐκδέχεσθε· [s] εἰ δέ τις πεινᾷ, ἐν οἴκῳ ἐσθιέτω· ἵνα s Supra ver. 21, 22.
μὴ εἰς κρίμα συνέρχησθε. Τὰ δὲ λοιπὰ ὡς ἂν ἔλθω διατάξομαι.
1 XII. ΠΕΡΙ δὲ τῶν πνευματικῶν, ἀδελφοὶ, οὐ θέλω tinguishing between the sacramental elements and symbols of the Lord's body, and the food used at an ordinary meal.' Ernesti, in his Opusc. Theolog. p. 136, remarks, that this use of διακρ. is derived from the distinguishing of meats according to the Mosaic law, in which persons are said not to distinguish meats, who eat alike of meats both pure and unclean, or forbidden, without distinction, regarding the profane and forbidden as lawful and permitted.

30. διὰ τοῦτο.] 'On this account;' i. e. because of their partaking of the sacrament unworthily. For almost all Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that the Apostle means to make his warning of future punishment for such abuse the more effectual, by adverting to what had already taken place, in the sickness and mortality which had been already inflicted. Ἀσθενεῖς and ἄῤῥωστοι are nearly synonymous terms; but the latter is the stronger, and exegetical of the former. As κοιμᾶσθαι is almost always used in the New Test. of the death of the righteous, we may presume that the Apostle has reference to those who, although they had been visited with the temporal punishment of death, yet had, before they died, made their peace with God by sincere repentance.

Notwithstanding the presumptuous attempts of certain foreign Commentators to explain away the reality of the judicial inflictions of temporal punishments, here adverted to, they must certainly be considered as proceeding from God, and as altogether supernatural (similar to others mentioned at Acts v. 5, and supra v. 5. 2 Cor. xiii. 2. 1 John v. 16. James v. 14, 15. Rev. ii. 22); being intended to preserve the purity of Christianity, and vindicate the authority of the Apostles. These interpositions, however, were probably confined to the Apostolic age, or at least to a short period after it.

31. εἰ γὰρ ἑαυτοὺς διεκ. &c.] These words are exegetical of the preceding; the γὰρ being illustrative: and the full sense is, 'if now we would so judge and discern ourselves,' as before mentioned, (viz. whether we receive the Lord's Supper worthily or not,) 'we should not be adjudged to suffer such punishments as those just adverted to.'

32. κρινόμενοι δὲ — κατακριθῶμεν.] This seems added to console those who were suffering under sickness so inflicted, and at the same time to impart serious admonition as to the use to be made of this correction from the Lord. The force of the reasoning turns upon the expression παιδευόμεθα: and the full sense is: 'But when we are so judged and visited by the Lord, we are not capriciously tormented, but disciplined, like scholars at the hands of a master, for our good ultimate reformation, in order that we may not be finally condemned with the impenitent and unbelieving world.'

33. συνερχόμενοι εἰς τὸ φαγεῖν] scil. εἰς τὸ Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον, to the Agapa, and the Lord's Supper which followed it. Ἀλλήλ. ἐκδέχ. The older Commentators in general regard this as equivalent to μὴ προλαμβάνετε, wait for each other; q. d. 'Let not the rich hastily consume what they have brought with them, but give a chance to others of participating in it.' The more recent ones, however, in general assign the sense, 'receive each other with the hospitality of private guests;' implying a cordial community between the rich and the poor. Either sense is agreeable to the context; but since the latter is founded on a signification occurring no where in the Scriptures, whereas the former is perpetually met with, there seems no good reason to desert the ancient and usual interpretation.

34. εἰ δέ τις πεινᾷ, &c.] Meaning, it should seem, 'If any one be so hard to be satisfied, that he cannot sufficiently gratify his appetite at the Agapa, let him take an antepast at home; and not make a feast, meant for religious purposes, subservient to the mere gratification of sensual appetite; lest he should so act as to incur condemnation and punishment.'

— τὰ λοιπά.] Namely, other less important points of ecclesiastical discipline, that required to be set in order; though we may, with Billroth, refer it to the arrangement of particulars, in respect to those already, as above, set in order.

XII. This and the two next chapters treat of the origin, nature, use, and comparative value of the SPIRITUAL GIFTS. In chap. xii. St. Paul shows that all those gifts were alike imparted by the Holy Ghost, and were all for the use of the Church; and therefore that no one should value himself upon his gift, so far as to contemn another who had an inferior one. In chap. xiii. he recommends love as a higher perfection than all the gifts of the Holy Ghost put together, because all those gifts must cease here, but love will remain for ever in heaven. In chap. xiv. he gives particular rules about the use of their gifts in public assemblies. (Bp. Pearce.)

The Corinthian Church was richly endowed with the gifts, but not so with the graces of the Spirit. Hence their gifts too often administered only to strife and disorder, creating pride in some, and calling forth envy in others. To remedy these disorders, St. Paul directs the people's attention to the origin and use of the gifts so con-

a Supra 6. 11. Eph. 2. 11, 12. 1 Thess. 1. 9.
b Mark 9. 39. supra 8. 6. 1 John 4. 2, 3.

ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν. ^a Οἴδατε ὅτι ἔθνη ἦτε, πρὸς τὰ εἴδωλα τὰ 2 ἄφωνα, ὡς ἂν ἤγεσθε, ἀπαγόμενοι. ^b διὸ γνωρίζω ὑμῖν, ὅτι 3 οὐδεὶς ἐν Πνεύματι Θεοῦ λαλῶν, λέγει ἀνάθεμα Ἰησοῦν· καὶ οὐδεὶς δύναται εἰπεῖν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν, εἰ μὴ ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ.

ferred; showing that they were all imparted by the Spirit of God, according to his own sovereign will and pleasure, without reference to the merits of the persons themselves, and that they were bestowed, not for the aggrandisement of the favoured individuals, but for the benefit of the Church. (Simeon, Hor. Hom.)

1. περὶ τῶν πνευματικῶν.] Some here (as infra xiv. 37) supply ἀνθρώπων. Others, χαρισμάτων. Either is suitable to what follows (for the Apostle proceeds to treat fully of both spiritual gifts and spiritual persons); but the latter is the more so, and is confirmed by xiv. 1, and Rom. i. 11, and therefore deserves the preference. And, as Dr. Henderson observes (Lect. on Insp. p. 178), 'it is more in accordance with the Apostle's general use of the word, to understand him as referring to things rather than persons.' The Corinthians, it seems, had disputed concerning the relative excellence and dignity of these gifts, and had applied to the Apostle to decide the preference amongst them.

Οὐ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν is a formula (occurring also at x. 1,) requesting serious attention and implicit credit.

2. οἴδατε ὅτι—ἀπαγόμενοι.] These words are meant to suggest the necessity of being well-informed on this important subject; since they have now no longer the excuse of being immersed in the ignorance of heathen idolatry. So far, indeed, from being parenthetical, they serve to open out the subject to be treated of, by reminding the Corinthians of an important truth which they ought to bear in mind.

There seems to be an emphasis on ὅτι ἔθνη ἦτε; q. d. 'but are now converted to the worship of the one true God.' Τὰ εἴδωλα τὰ ἄφωνα, i. e. mere stocks and stones; q. d. (as Henderson explains) 'which being themselves inanimate and speechless, could not of course impart to their votaries any thing like the gift of tongues or prophesying.' Ἀπάγεσθαι denotes the being hurried away by a force which cannot be resisted: and here it refers to the blind infatuation, by which the heathens were led away into idolatry and vice, like brute beasts that have no understanding. This is especially alluded to in ὡς ἂν ἤγεσθε, 'as ye might be led;' viz. by custom, example, or inclination, just as it might happen.

3. διὸ] 'for which purpose,'—namely, that ye may not be thus ignorant, but have the requisite information. 'For the Apostle,' as Dr. Henderson observes, 'next lays it down as a principle particularly to be borne in mind by those who had been Jews, and might still be exposed to the influence of Jewish impostors, pretending to be actuated by the Holy Spirit, that no person who spoke by the inspiration of that Divine Agent, could blaspheme the Redeemer; just as it was equally certain that no one could sincerely profess belief in his divine character and mission, except in virtue of his supernatural influence.'

—γνωρίζω.] 'I give you this rule or principle, to enable you to distinguish concerning spiritual things and persons.' The first οὐδεὶς must be understood chiefly of the Jews, who pretended to the Holy Spirit, and yet denied the Messiahship of Jesus. The phrases λέγει ἀνάθεμα Ἰησοῦν, and εἰπεῖν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν (of which the former signifies literally 'to call any one fit to be put away from the earth'), are here to be explained, with reference to each other, of utter rejection, and of cordial acceptance of the Gospel. Εἰπεῖν Κύριον (scil. εἶναι) Ἰησοῦν imports, to acknowledge instantly, publicly, and sincerely, that Jesus is Christ the Lord, and thoroughly to embrace his religion. Ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ must, from the context, mean, 'by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.'

Thus the full sense of the passage may be laid down, after Dr. Pye Smith (Scrip. Test.), as follows: 'None can duly honour Him, in his august capacity of Lord and Head over all things, unless they are imbued with that vital, spiritual, and practical religion which is the work of heavenly grace on the soul.'

The best comment on this passage may be found in a kindred one at 1 John iv. 1—3, where is mentioned a similar mode of distinguishing true from false Christians. St. Paul means, that 'no one can solemnly disavow all belief in the divine mission of Jesus, and have the gifts of the Holy Spirit, however he may pretend to them: and, on the other hand, that there is no one who makes that confession sincerely and heartily, but must have the Holy Spirit, in some degree or other.'

4—12. The Apostle now proceeds to enumerate the various gifts of different Christian teachers; and that for the purpose of showing that no one of them is to be despised, nor any one to be extolled above the rest; intimating withal, that, however various were the gifts, they were all to be traced to the same Holy Spirit, as their common source. In the fourth and fifth verses he extends the idea of diversity, so as to make it comprehend all the modes in which the gifts were employed, and all the results which followed their exercise, in order the more forcibly to exhibit the unity which pervades the whole of the Divine administration. (Dr. Henderson on Insp.)

It is scarcely necessary to say how utterly inadmissible is the view of certain foreign Commentators for the last half century, (see Recens. Synop.), who (for the purpose of removing certain difficulties) suppose the χαρίσματα here mentioned to have been merely natural endowments, improved by use and art. However we may acknowledge the difficulty of determining the exact import, and defining the limits of the several χαρίσματα, nevertheless there is not the less reason to suppose them to have been all, more or less, supernatural. And, although some of them may seem to imply human agency, yet that is not inconsistent with their being likewise supernatural gifts; since, in all such cases, the co-operation of the human ἐνεργούμενος with the Divine ἐνεργῶν is perfectly agreeable to the analogy of the Gospel system. The first occurring and most important term Πνεῦμα must be interpreted of 4, 5 [c] Διαιρέσεις δὲ χαρισμάτων εἰσὶ, τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα· [d] καὶ c Rom. 12. 6. Eph. 4. 4.

6 διαιρέσεις διακονιῶν εἰσι, καὶ ὁ αὐτὸς Κύριος· [e] καὶ διαιρέ- Heb. 2. 4. 1 Pet. 4. 10.
σεις ἐνεργημάτων εἰσὶν, ὁ δὲ αὐτός [ἐστι] Θεὸς ὁ ἐνεργῶν d Eph. 4. 11. e Eph. 1. 23.
7 τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν. [f] Ἑκάστῳ δὲ δίδοται ἡ φανέρωσις τοῦ f Eph. 4. 7.

the Holy Spirit, I mean in the personal sense; since personal agency is as much implied here as in the next two clauses. It is manifest that there is here alike a distinct recognition of the three Persons of the Godhead: for the terms prove not only the personality of the Holy Spirit, but his Deity; as Bp. Middleton evinces in the following able observations:—'The concluding clause ὁ ἐνεργῶν τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν must be understood as applicable alike to the Three Persons; else the two preceding verses would be defective, and only the last complete. It is the same Spirit—who does what? and the same Lord—who does what? ὁ ἐνεργῶν τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν. The personality of the Spirit is also clearly asserted v. 11, where it is said to distribute gifts according to his pleasure, which is the attribute not only of a Person, but of a Being, who is omnipotent. The Spirit is there said to work πάντα ταῦτα, plainly comprehending all the miraculous powers enumerated from vv. 7 to 11 inclusive, among which are χαρίσματα, spoken of in v. 4, and ἐνεργήματα in v. 6. It appears, therefore, that all the miraculous powers mentioned vv. 4, 5, 6, are in v. 11 ascribed to the influence of the Spirit, who is thereby made solely to be the cause of effects above severally ascribed to the Spirit, to the Lord, and to God; and, consequently, that He is identified with the other two Persons.' So also Bp. Sanderson, in his third Sermon ad Clerum, p. 42, well observes, that 'that variety of gifts which in v. 4 is said to proceed from the same Spirit, is said likewise in v. 5 to proceed from the same Lord; and in v. 6, to proceed from the same God: and this only the Holy Ghost. And again (continues he) at v. 11, the Apostle ascribes to this Spirit the collation and distribution of such gifts, according to the free power of his own will and pleasure; which free power belongs to none but God alone. Which yet ought not to be so understood of the Spirit, as if the Father and the Son had no fellowship in this business. For all the actions and operations of the Divine Persons are the joint work of the whole three Persons. And perhaps here the three words, Spirit, Lord, and God, are all used to intimate that these spiritual gifts proceed equally and undividedly from the whole three Persons, as from one entire, indivisible, co-essential Agent.' So also Dr. Henderson observes: 'The gifts are the gifts of the one Spirit; the administrations are carried on under the rule of the one Lord; the results of both are effected by the universally operative power of the one Father, who is above all, and through all, and in us all.'

4. διαιρέσεις δὲ χαρισμάτων] for διάφορά ἐστι χαρίσματα. The word χάρισμα signifies 'any thing which has been freely bestowed' (κεχάρισται) at the pleasure of the donor. In the New Test. the term is confined to God's gifts, as ἐνέργημα is to his operations. Thus it is suggested, that these gifts are not mere natural endowments of mind or acquired talents, but powers and faculties conferred by Divine influence. With respect to the three terms here employed, (namely, χαρισμάτων, διακονιῶν, and ἐνεργημάτων,) they are generally regarded as synonymous. And such they, in one sense, are; being, as Chrysostom says, ὀνομάτων διαφοραὶ μόνον, ἐπεὶ πράγματα τὰ αὐτά. The difference, I conceive, refers only to the various particular views under which the gifts, taken generally, may be considered. 'Thus, (says Dr. Henderson) though they all designate what the Apostle describes as belonging to the subject of which he is treating, they nevertheless mark its several parts with sufficient distinctness to authorize their separate consideration.' They were all χαρίσματα, as being freely bestowed (supra ii. 12); they were all διακονίαι, as being connected, more or less, with offices of various kinds belonging to the persons who held the gifts; Apostles, Prophets, Teachers, Workers of healing miraculously, Speakers with and Interpreters of tongues supernaturally. The term διακ. is used perhaps to intimate, that the possession of the gifts, or faculties, carried with it an obligation on the part of the possessors to diligently exert them in the discharge of their particular functions. These offices are adverted to at vv. 7—11, and especially at vv. 28—31. So Dr. Henderson explains the διακονίαι to be 'the different forms in which these endowments were exercised, the functions by which they were called into operation, or the services engaged in by those who possessed them.' They were ἐνεργήματα, since the gifts, considered as powers or faculties, were worked in men by the power of the Holy Spirit. In the words of Dr. Henderson, the ἐνεργήματα were 'the actual effects, which resulted from the application of the various supernatural powers or gifts in the modes specified, and are so called in reference to the divine energy with which they were produced; the term (like other nouns in —μα) denoting, not action, but effect of action.'

7. After finishing the climax produced by the idea of Κύριος having been suggested by the use of the correlative term διακονία, the Apostle returns to the agency of the Holy Spirit, on which he expatiates in the remaining portion of the section. The miraculous endowments, by the exercise of which the influence of the Divine Donor was manifested, were not conferred for the purposes of ostentation and vanity, to which one of them at least had been awfully prostituted in the Corinthian church, but each recipient was so favoured, that he might contribute that which in his particular circumstances might be most advantageous to the interests of the Gospel, ver. 7. (Dr. Henderson.)

— ἑκάστῳ δὲ δίδοται, &c.] Meaning, 'But to each [in particular] is given the manifestation of the Spirit [vouchsafed to him], and that for usefulness (namely, to the Church at large,) [not for ostentation or lucre's sake,' to himself]. Φανέρωσις τοῦ Πνεύμ. is for φαν. χαρίσματός τινος τοῦ Πνεύμ. 'Thus the χάρισμα was (as Bp. Sanderson observes) a manifestation of the Spirit, just as every other sensible effect is a manifestation of its proper cause.'

g Infra 13. 2. Πνεύματος πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον. [g] ᾧ μὲν γὰρ διὰ τοῦ Πνεύ- 8 ματος δίδοται λόγος σοφίας, ἄλλῳ δὲ λόγος γνώσεως κατὰ

8. The Apostle now proceeds to notice the different gifts separately. And here we enter upon a subject of the most difficult nature, and on which a wide difference of opinion exists. That it should be a most arduous task to settle the exact nature, and mark the discrimination of these χαρίσματα, is not surprising, since, as Paræus remarks, 'we have lost the things which those terms were intended to denote.' On this subject the earlier modern Commentators (with the exception of Grotius and Lightfoot) are but indifferent guides. In later times more has been accomplished by Vitringa, Dr. Owen, Whitby, Locke, Doddridge, Dr. Lightfoot, Lord Barrington, and especially Bp. Horsley, Dr. Hales, Mr. Townsend, Prof. Heydenreich, Mr. Greswell, Mr. Macloed, Billroth, Olshaus., and Dr. Henderson. Yet still an obscurity hangs over the subject. The great error which runs through the disquisitions of most of the above learned persons is that of supposing far more of regularity of plan in what the Apostle says, here and at vv. 28—31, than what, I suspect, he intended; though I am ready to admit, with Dr. Henderson, that there is a symmetrical connexion in the enumeration of the gifts. Upon the whole, I agree with him, that 'most of the obscurity complained of has been occasioned partly by want of due attention to the structure of the Apostle's language, and partly by abortive attempts to harmonize the list here with that at the end of the Chapter.' Here, at least (vv. 9, 10, 11), the Apostle, I apprehend, did not intend any regular list of the χαρίσματα, but only meant to adduce, by way of example, instances of diversity in those gifts, even where there seemed such a coincidence as might mark them out as belonging to the same class. It is, I should think, equally clear, that no regular list was intended at vv. 29, 30. At ver. 28 there is, indeed, more appearance of it; yet even that, it seems, was not meant to be complete, since there is no mention made of the διακρίσεις πνευμάτων and the ἑρμηνεία γλωσσῶν, adverted to at ver. 10. With respect to the list of persons holding offices in the Church, and exercising gifts of a supernatural order, Dr. Henderson observes, that 'it discovers nothing which indicates a design on the part of the Apostle to adhere to the order in which he had classed the miraculous endowments, or to place the one table in juxta-position with the former.' To the latter of these assertions I entirely assent, but not quite to the former. In the passage before us (vv. 9, 10, 11), it would seem that the gifts are, with the exception of πίστις (which is placed alone, as being the fundamental principle on which all the others rested), distributed into four pairs; or we may, with Dr. Henderson, adopt a three-fold classification, as follows:

I. ῼι μὲν—λόγος σοφίας.
2. ἄλλῳ δὲ λόγος γνώσεως.
II. ἙΤΕΡΩι δὲ πίστις.
1. ἄλλῳ δὲ χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων.
2. ἄλλῳ δὲ ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων.
3. ἄλλῳ δὲ προφητεία.
4. ἄλλῳ δὲ διακρίσεις πνευμάτων.
III. ἙΤΕΡΩι δὲ γένη γλωσσῶν.
2. ἄλλῳ δὲ ἑρμηνεία γλωσσῶν.

To advert to the first of these, i. e. λόγος σοφίας and λόγος γνώσεως, the distinction between them has been variously explained. The ancient Commentators, in general, supposed the former to denote the faculty of speaking and teaching; the latter, the mere knowledge of the Gospel, without the faculty of communicating that knowledge to others. But thus the word λόγος would, in the latter case, be useless: not to say that it is only those higher endowments, and those by which Christians could be useful to the Church, that are here meant. Again, Heydenreich takes λόγος σοφίας of the gift of teaching and preaching, in a popular way, the fundamental truths of Christianity, and λόγος γνώσεως 'de facultate, ingeniosioribus res altioris indaginis, doctrinas sublimiores atque arcanas, sermone polito coloribusque rhetoricis ornato tradendi.' And so Neander and Billroth explain γνῶσις of the theoretical, and σοφία of the practical knowledge of the Christian religion. And there is something to countenance this view in the use of the word γνῶσις by the earlier Fathers. But how uncertain is that interpretation, may be imagined from the fact, that another class of Expositors entirely reverse the sense, understanding γνώσεως of elementary and fundamental, and σοφίας of more recondite doctrines and instructions. It would rather seem that λόγος σοφίας and λόγος γνώσεως are simply meant to intimate the qualities requisite for the discharge of those functions connected with the Spiritual gifts corresponding to the terms in question, and, of course, must refer alone to the preaching and teaching, as carried on by the ἀπόστολοι, προφῆται, and διδάσκαλοι. Thus the λόγος σοφίας (especially as it comes first) seems to have reference to the Apostles; the λόγος γνώσεως to the Prophets and the Teachers. This view is, I find, confirmed by the diligent researches of Dr. Henderson, who in discussing the signification of λόγος and also of the phrases λόγος σοφίας and λόγος γνώσεως, observes that 'the sense of λόγος which best suits the connexion is that of a faculty or power of communicating to others the things to which reference is made (comp. Eph. vi. 19), and therefore whatever σοφία or γνῶσις may denote in this connexion, the λόγος was necessary for its impartation to others.' By σοφία, he shows, is here meant the sublimer truths of the Gospel, directly revealed to the Apostles, of which the λόγος was the supernatural ability rightly to communicate them to others; while λόγος γνώσεως, he shows, consisted in the immediate communication of an exact and competent knowledge of the truths which God had already revealed through the instrumentality of the inspired prophets and apostles, in consequence of which those who possessed it became qualified, independently on the use of all ordinary means, forthwith to teach them to the church. 'They differed,' continues he, 'from the Apostles, who possessed the word of wisdom, inasmuch as the latter had new truths revealed to them; whereas it was the department of the former infallibly to explain truths and doctrines which had been previously divulged. They also differed from ordinary teachers,—these being under the necessity of acquiring their knowledge

9 τὸ αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα· [h] ἑτέρῳ δὲ πίστις ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ Πνεύματι· h Matt. 17. 19.
10 ἄλλῳ δὲ χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ Πνεύματι· [i] ἄλλῳ Mark 16. 18. i Infra 14. 29.
δὲ ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων· ἄλλῳ δὲ προφητεία, ἄλλῳ δὲ & v. 28—30. Acts 2. 4. διακρίσεις πνευμάτων· ἑτέρῳ δὲ γένη γλωσσῶν, ἄλλῳ δὲ & 10. 46.
11 ἑρμηνεία γλωσσῶν. [k] Πάντα δὲ ταῦτα ἐνεργεῖ τὸ ἓν καὶ τὸ k Rom. 12. 3, 6. John 3. 8.

of the great principles of revelation by a diligent study of the holy Scriptures, and all the subsidiary means at their command; whereas the primitive instructors, who were supernaturally endowed with the γνῶσις here specified, were at once prepared to discharge the duties of their office. They had imparted to them clear, accurate, and connected views of the Divine dispensations, a profound acquaintance with the more intricate and obscure parts of the ancient inspired oracles, and such enlarged and definite conceptions of the doctrines preached by the Apostles, as enabled them by their ministry greatly to contribute to the instruction and confirmation of the disciples in the faith of the Gospel.'

9. ἑτέρῳ δὲ πίστις.] Supposing πίστις to refer to the gifts which involved the exercise of supernatural powers, we may either, with Chrysost. and Heydenreich, explain it of the fiducia, or confident reliance on Divine aid, which was always indispensable to the working of miracles, even by the Apostles; (see Matt. xvii. 20. xxi. 21. Luke xvii. 5, 6. Mark iv. 40.) or, with Dr. Henderson, understand it to denote what is commonly called the faith of miracles, and consequently indispensable to the exercise of all the four species of the χαρίσματα which are ranged under it. Compare Rom. xii. 2. 'We now (says Dr. Henderson) come to the second class of χαρίσματα, of which there are four species, ranged under the general head of πίστις. Though itself a miraculous endowment, and essential to the effective exercise of those which immediately follow in the classification, this πίστις is to be contemplated, not as a separate and distinct gift, but as the immediate source to which these endowments are to be traced, or the fundamental principle by which they are called into operation. It holds the same place in regard to the succeeding χαρίσματα which λόγος does to the two χαρίσματα which precede.'

'The first (says Dr. Henderson) of the supernatural gifts placed under this special faith, as their operative principle, is χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων, where the use of the plural has reference to the number and variety of the diseases healed. The second class is designated ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων.' Between these two particulars it has been thought difficult to mark the distinction; the gift of miraculous healing (which must here be meant) being itself an ἐνέργημα δυνάμεως. To avoid this difficulty, some, as Macknight and Heydenreich, explain ἐνεργ. of an in-working of miracles, i. e. the enabling others to work them: an interpretation, however, philologically invalid, and destitute of all foundation either in reason or analogy; in short, unsupported by any thing in the records of ecclesiastical history. Indeed, as Dr. Henderson observes, 'to thus operate on the human mind is the sole prerogative of him who 'worketh all in all,' v. 6. We can only suppose that the Apostle has reference to miraculous powers in general. The terms are, indeed (what were allowable, from their forming a pair), transposed, as we find from vv. 28, 29; in both which places ἐνεργ. δυν. is placed before the χαρ. ἰαμ., and that as proceeding from genus to species. 'Ενεργήματα (as Dr. Henderson observes) is descriptive, not of the act of performing the miracles, but of the effects of that power by which they were performed. Both words may indeed be taken as a common hendiadys, and are equivalent to ἐνεργήματα δυνατὰ, miraculous results, or, as δυνάμεις by itself is frequently rendered in our common version, 'mighty deeds.' The learned writer then proceeds to show, that in the production of more extraordinary and astonishing miracles, this χάρισμα differed from the last; being the restoration of the limbs or of the senses, the resuscitation of the dead, the innocuous use of empoisoned liquor, the dispossession of demons, the infliction of blindness, and even of death itself. In short, differing as the supernatural does from the preternatural.

In the above view, I find, Calvin, Schliting, Crellius, Grotius, Hammond, Heydenreich, Macknight, and Billroth entirely coincide.

10. προφητεία.] This, as Dr. Henderson shows, is to be understood of prophecy in its fullest extent; namely, prophesying future events, to the existence of which faculty the New Test. supplies abundant evidence; and in this extent of signification it is not without reason assigned to faith as its operative principle.

With this is classed, as a cognate gift, the διακρίσεις πνευμάτων, or faculty of determining (as Chrysostom and other ancient Commentators suppose) on the pretensions of persons to the gift of prophecy and teaching, and, indeed, of spiritual gifts in general, and sometimes (as we find from xiv. 29) on the mode of exercising even acknowledged gifts. This faculty denotes (as Dr. Henderson shows) the distinguishing [by Divine inspiration] persons possessed of spiritual gifts (especially those of prophecy and teaching) from mere pretenders to them, whether deceiving or being deceived. Their office was not merely to discern and distinguish true from false pretensions, but to expose the latter to the view of others, and hence almost required the additional gift of the προφητεία, in the sense above laid down. The persons in question are here, as at 2 Thess. ii. 2. 1 John iv. 2, 3, called πνεύματα, as professing to speak ἐν Πνεύματι, from the extraordinary impulse of the Spirit.

— γένη γλωσσῶν—ἑρμηνεία γλωσσῶν.] This last-mentioned class and pair of gifts (so placed, doubtless, to intimate the inferior estimation in which the Apostle held them) are the faculty of speaking in various sorts of languages never previously learnt, and the interpretation (doubtless in the vernacular tongue) of what was uttered by the persons endued with the gift of tongues. These two gifts did not necessarily go together (i. e. the latter with the former), though (as we l Rom. 12. 4, 5. Eph. 4. 4, 16.

m Rom. 6. 5. Gal. 3. 28. Eph. 2. 14, 15, 16. Col. 3. 11.

αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα, διαιροῦν ἰδίᾳ ἑκάστῳ καθὼς βούλεται. [l] Καθ- 12
άπερ γὰρ τὸ σῶμα ἕν ἐστι, καὶ μέλη ἔχει πολλὰ, πάντα δὲ τὰ μέλη τοῦ σώματος [τοῦ ἑνὸς], πολλὰ ὄντα, ἕν ἐστι σῶμα· οὕτω καὶ ὁ Χριστός. [m] Καὶ γὰρ ἐν ἑνὶ Πνεύματι 13
ἡμεῖς πάντες εἰς ἓν σῶμα ἐβαπτίσθημεν· εἴτε Ἰουδαῖοι εἴτε Ἕλληνες, εἴτε δοῦλοι εἴτε ἐλεύθεροι· καὶ πάντες εἰς ἓν Πνεῦμα ἐποτίσθημεν. καὶ γὰρ τὸ σῶμα οὐκ ἔστιν ἓν μέλος, ἀλλὰ 14 πολλά. Ἐὰν εἴπῃ ὁ πούς· Ὅτι οὐκ εἰμὶ χεὶρ, οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐκ 15
τοῦ σώματος· οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ τοῦ σώματος.
καὶ ἐὰν εἴπῃ τὸ οὖς· Ὅτι οὐκ εἰμὶ ὀφθαλμὸς, οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐκ 16
τοῦ σώματος· οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ τοῦ σώματος.
Εἰ ὅλον τὸ σῶμα ὀφθαλμὸς, ποῦ ἡ ἀκοή; εἰ ὅλον ἀκοὴ, 17
ποῦ ἡ ὄσφρησις; Νυνὶ δὲ ὁ Θεὸς ἔθετο τὰ μέλη, ἓν ἕκα- 18 στον αὐτῶν, ἐν τῷ σώματι καθὼς ἠθέλησεν. Εἰ δὲ ἦν τὰ 19 πάντα ἓν μέλος, ποῦ τὸ σῶμα; νῦν δὲ πολλὰ μὲν μέλη, 20 ἓν δὲ σῶμα. οὐ δύναται δὲ ὁ ὀφθαλμὸς εἰπεῖν τῇ χειρί· 21
Χρείαν σου οὐκ ἔχω· ἢ πάλιν ἡ κεφαλὴ τοῖς ποσί· Χρείαν may infer from xiv. 5, 13) they sometimes accompanied each other.

11. πάντα δὲ ταῦτα—βούλεται.] Meaning: 'Now that one and the same Spirit inworketh all these [diversities of gifts], dividing and distributing to each [of the persons favoured with them] separately his own gift, as he pleaseth.' At ἰδίᾳ sub. μερίδι. It is very rarely found without some corresponding term, but an example occurs in Thucyd. ii. 13.

12. καθάπερ γὰρ, &c.] Under a metaphor derived from the mutual dependence of the various parts of the human body, the Apostle (as at Rom. xii. 4, 5) inculcates the lesson, that all true members of the Christian body should so act as to form one united whole, each mutually contributing to the common benefit of the Church Universal. Render, 'For as the body is but one, and [yet] hath many members, and all the members of this one body, many as they are, are but one body, so also is Christ (i. e. his Church) but one.' Τοῦ ἑνὸς is not found in some MSS. and Versions, and is considered as an interpolation by Mill and Bengel. It has, indeed, the appearance of coming from the margin; but its omission may have arisen from carelessness, it not seeming necessary to the sense.

13. καὶ γὰρ ἐν ἑνὶ Πνεύματι—ἐποτίσθημεν.] Most recent foreign Commentators understand this of the communication of the χαρίσματα; and to this the ἐποτίσθημεν is not unsuitable, while the sense arising is specious. But this method requires ἓν Πνεῦμα to be read in the place of εἰς ἓν Πν., and then yields a sense not so natural as that arising from the interpretation adopted by almost all Commentators, ancient and modern, who here suppose an allusion to the two Sacraments. 'By being baptized (say they) we are all made members of the body of Christ, and united one to another under him, our head; and thus, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, we are all one in Christ, who, by baptism, have been admitted into his Church; and this union of ours one with another is testified and declared by our communion at the Lord's table, which is here called a drinking into one spirit; referring to the sacramental cup.'

14. In this and the next two verses the parallel is further developed and illustrated. Of καὶ γὰρ τὸ σῶμα—πολλὰ the sense is, 'It is not one member, however important, which constitutes the body, but all together;' an argument often employed by orators to excite large bodies of men to unanimity and concord. The Apostle had probably in mind the well-known apologue in Æsop, which was probably derived (together with most of his others) from the East, that ever-fertile source of fable.

15. οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο—σώματος] 'it does not on this account form no part of the body;' παρὰ here signifying propter, as Thucyd. ii. 141. Such is the sense, according to the punctuation which I have adopted, with several eminent Editors and Translators, and as is required by the proprietas linguæ. Those who adopt the interrogation are obliged to sink the second οὐ by calling in the rule that two negatives make an affirmative; which principle will not apply in a construction like the present.

18. νυνὶ δὲ, &c.] Here we have another argument, from the ordination of God. (Calvin.) 'But as they are now constituted, God hath placed the members each of them in the body in that situation, and for that office which it hath pleased him.'

19. εἰ δὲ ἦν, &c.] 'But if all the members were one member, where would be the body?' q. d. there would be no body.

20. Here we have a repetition, in order the more strongly to impress the great truth, on which the whole question turned.

21. So far it has been shown what is the office of the inferior members; namely, to minister to the body, and not to envy the superior ones. Now, from the converse he lays it down as the duty of the worthier members not to despise the inferior, whom they cannot do without. (Calvin.)

22 ὑμῶν οὐκ ἔχω. Ἀλλὰ πολλῷ μᾶλλον τὰ δοκοῦντα μέλη τοῦ 23 σώματος ἀσθενέστερα ὑπάρχειν, ἀναγκαῖά ἐστι· καὶ ἃ δο-κοῦμεν ἀτιμότερα εἶναι τοῦ σώματος, τούτοις τιμὴν περισσοτέραν περιτίθεμεν· καὶ τὰ ἀσχήμονα ἡμῶν εὐσχημοσύνην 24 περισσοτέραν ἔχει. τὰ δὲ εὐσχήμονα ἡμῶν οὐ χρείαν ἔχει.
Ἀλλ' ὁ Θεὸς συνεκέρασε τὸ σῶμα, τῷ ὑστεροῦντι περισσο-25 τέραν δοὺς τιμήν, ἵνα μὴ ᾖ σχίσμα ἐν τῷ σώματι, ἀλλὰ 26 τὸ αὐτὸ ὑπὲρ ἀλλήλων μεριμνῶσι τὰ μέλη. Καὶ εἴτε πάσχει ἓν μέλος, συμπάσχει πάντα τὰ μέλη· εἴτε δοξάζεται ἓν μέλος, 27 συγχαίρει πάντα τὰ μέλη. [n] Ὑμεῖς δέ ἐστε σῶμα Χριστοῦ καὶ μέλη ἐκ μέρους.
28 [o] Καὶ οὓς μὲν ἔθετο ὁ Θεὸς ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, πρῶτον ἀπο-στόλους, δεύτερον προφήτας, τρίτον διδασκάλους, ἔπειτα δυνάμεις, εἶτα χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων, ἀντιλήψεις, κυβερνήσεις, n Rom. 12. 5. Eph. 1. 23. & 4. 12. & 5. 23, 30. Col. 1. 24.

o Eph. 4. 11. & 2. 20. Acts 13. 1. Rom. 12. 8. 1 Tim. 5. 17. Heb. 13. 17.

22. τὰ δοκοῦντα μέλη τ. σ. ἀσθεν.] It is not agreed whether this refers to the eyes, or the brains, or the lungs and intestines. But there is no reason why it should not have reference to all such parts as are at once delicate and indispensable to the functions of the whole body.

23. ἀτιμότερα.] By this is meant the lower parts of the trunk of the body, especially (as Abp. Newcome explains) 'the ducts by which nature throws off what is redundant.' Τιμ. περισσ. Meaning, the more studiously clothing and cherishing them with raiment. The words καὶ τὰ ἀσχήμονα, &c., form a sort of parallelism on the former, to introduce the paronomasia between ἀσχ. and εὐσχ. This sense of εὐσχ. is illustrated by Krause from Diod. Sic. lib. v. 32, τὰ πρόβατα τοῖς ἐρίοις τὴν σκέπην ἅμα καὶ εὐσχημοσύνην περιποιεῖ.

24. οὐ χρείαν ἔχει.] Sub. ἵνα αὐτοῖς τιμὴν περισσ. περιτίθεμεν. By the term εὐσχήμονα St. Paul adverts to the face, hands, &c.

— ἀλλ' ὁ Θεὸς—τιμήν.] Render, 'But God hath attempered [the various parts of] the body by assigning more abundant honour to any meaner part.' By συνεκέρασε is meant, 'hath attempered and adjusted the respective advantages of the various members, so as to form a just compound of the whole.'

25. σχίσμα] 'division, separation,' by which the members would want mutual aid.

26. δοξάζεται.] This must be interpreted agreeably to the antithetical πάσχει, and the synonymous συγχαίρει; and the sense is, 'receives attention,' is made much of.

27. The Apostle now applies this apt similitude to the case he intended to illustrate; q. d. 'what I have been saying holds good of you.'

28. ἔθετο] 'hath constituted;' a sense sometimes occurring in the Classical writers. On the various names of offices in this verse, see Notes supra, vv. 8, 9, 10.

— δεύτερον προφήτας, τρίτον διδασκ.] Dr. Robinson in his Lexicon, in voce, supposes the προφήτης to have differed from the διδάσκαλος in this, that while the latter spoke in a calm, connected, didactic discourse, adapted to instruct and enlighten; the former spoke more from the impulse of sudden inspiration from the light of a sudden revelation at the moment; (so ἀποκάλυψις, infra xiv. 30;) and his discourse was probably more adapted, by means of powerful exhortations, to awaken the feelings and consciences of the hearers. One thing seems plain, that the διδάσκαλοι, though not specified at xii. 8—10, were persons who possessed a lower degree of the λόγος γνώσεως, and perhaps for purposes of practical utility in teaching; the other in preaching the truths of the Gospel.

— δυνάμεις.] Equivalent to ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων at ver. 10; meaning the persons having those powers.

— ἀντιλήψεις, κυβερνήσεις.] These are terms not found either at vv. 8, 9, 10, or at vv. 29, 30, though here inserted, because the present particulars are more in the form of a regular list. With respect to the former, the most probable of the many opinions as to the office thereby designated is, that it is equivalent to the διάκονοι, or persons who attended to the sick, poor, and destitute, and probably had other duties, not always the same. Such, too, is, I find the view adopted by Dr. Henderson, who thinks that these terms can only, with propriety, be referred to the administration of the affairs of the Church; the one designating the Deacons, whose office it was to afford ἀντίληψις to the poor, and otherwise assist in conducting the affairs of the Church; the other, the Elders or Bishops, on whom, as προϊστάμενοι, προεστῶτες or ἡγούμενοι, devolved its γυβέρνησις in regard to worship or discipline.

The term κυβερνήσεις (which has also been not a little disputed) seems to be best explained by the ancient Commentators to mean those who had the government of a Church, and the management of its affairs (as an Ecclesiastical body); an office formed on that of the Ruler of the Synagogue among the Jews, and which afterwards merged in the office of the Presbyter, the προεστῶτες πρεσβύτεροι of 1 Tim. v. 17. The above view is confirmed by what is said at a similar passage of Rom. xii. 7, 8, where, after the same comparison as occurs at vv. 12—17, the Apostle argues from thence as to the use of the various χαρίσματα, to which he then refers, but in a general way: εἴτε ὁ παρακαλῶν, ἐν τῇ παρακλήσει· ὁ μεταδιδοὺς, ἐν ἁπλότητι· ὁ γένη γλωσσῶν. Μὴ πάντες ἀπόστολοι; μὴ πάντες προ- 29 φῆται; μὴ πάντες διδάσκαλοι; μὴ πάντες δυνάμεις; μὴ πάντες χαρίσματα ἔχουσιν ἰαμάτων; μὴ πάντες γλώσσαις 30 p Infra 14. 1. λαλοῦσι; μὴ πάντες διερμηνεύουσι; [p] Ζηλοῦτε δὲ τὰ χα- 31

ρίσματα τὰ κρείττονα· καὶ ἔτι καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ὁδὸν ὑμῖν a 1 Pet. 4. 8. b Matt. 7. 22. & 17. 20. & 21. 21. Mark 11. 23. Luke 17. 6. Rom. 12. 7. supra 12. 8, 9. δείκνυμι. XIII. [a] Ἐὰν ταῖς γλώσσαις τῶν ἀνθρώπων λαλῶ 1 καὶ τῶν ἀγγέλων, ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω, γέγονα χαλκὸς ἠχῶν ἢ κύμβαλον ἀλαλάζον. [b] Καὶ ἐὰν ἔχω προφητείαν, καὶ εἰδῶ 2 τὰ μυστήρια πάντα καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν γνῶσιν· καὶ ἐὰν ἔχω πᾶσαν προϊστάμενος, ἐν σπουδῇ· ὁ ἐλεῶν, ἐν ἱλαρότητι, where προφ. and διακονία are, I think, meant to refer to the grand division of the gifts (by which are to be understood the gifts of all those under the rank of Apostles) into preaching, or teaching, and ministration, διακονία, or οἰκονομία. Then, in what follows, he means to refer to the distribution of the former into preaching and instructing (answering to προφητεία and διδασκαλία here) put for ὁ παρακαλῶν. Ὁ μεταδιδοὺς and ὁ ἐλεῶν seem to correspond to ἀντιλήψεις here; and ὁ προϊστάμενος to κυβερνήσεις here: see the Notes on that passage.

Finally, the gift γένη γλωσσῶν must, from a comparison of verse 10 and verse 30, be supposed to include ἑρμηνεία γλωσσῶν. Nay, some Versions and Fathers insert ἑρμηνεία γλωσσῶν, which Heydenreich supposes to have been lost in the Greek Text, by reason of the repetition of the word γλωσσῶν. But it is far more probable that the words should have been supplied (as seeming necessary to complete the list) in the Versions and Fathers, than that they should have been lost, from such a cause, in all the MSS.

31. ζηλοῦτε δὲ—κρείττονα.] Some Commentators, ancient and modern, take ζηλ. as not in the Imperative, but in the Indicative, and take the sentence as interrogative. This, however, is liable to much objection; for (as Mr. Simeon observes, Hor. Hom. App. v. p. 192) 'the same word occurs again at the commencement of chap. xiv. (the whole of chap. xiii. being parenthetical, and explanatory of the last); and it is incapable of being understood in any other way than Imperatively.' Indeed, the difficulty which has induced Commentators to abandon the usual rendering (by which ζηλ. is taken as in the Imperative) will entirely vanish, when we recollect that ζηλ. is a word of middle signification. Now, if the term be taken in a good sense (of which see examples in Rec. Syn.), the Apostle will not, as has been thought, 'thus unsay what he has before been saying.' The sense intended by the Apostle seems to be as follows: 'Have all of you the higher gifts? No; but all (you say) earnestly desire them. Be it so. Seek after them by prayer unto God, ye that have the lesser.' The Imperative has often this sense of per me licet. The καὶ following is for καί τοι, sed tamen. Δείκνυμι, 'I am showing,' i. e. going to show you. Ὁ*δὸν*, 'a method of attaining what you aim at,' namely, by the cultivation of love, or universal benevolence. Καθ' ὑπερβολὴν is an adverbial phrase, here used for an adjective, as often in the Classical writers.

XIII. 1. This verse ought not to have been separated from the last verse of the preceding Chapter; since it is closely connected with it. In order to fully expose the error of the Corinthians, in overvaluing and priding themselves on Spiritual gifts, without due regard to the graces of the Spirit, and ordinary usefulness as regarded their Christian brethren, the Apostle now declares the most illustrious of them to be as nothing compared with charity; his object being to fix the attention of the Corinthian Church on the intrinsic superiority of Christian charity to all the supernatural gifts he had enumerated, the most illustrious of which are nothing compared with LOVE.

— ἐὰν ταῖς γλώσσαις, &c.] q. d. if we could speak the language of every nation, nay, even that of angels.' It is not necessary to debate whether the angels have a language or not. It was sufficient for the Apostle to suppose this; especially as that was the opinion of his countrymen, some of whom even thought that certain of their Rabbis had attained a knowledge of it, which they supposed was the key to all mysteries; and moreover all he means is the highest imaginable faculty of a miraculous character.

— ἀγάπην.] This should be rendered, not charity (for that does not correctly represent the sense of ἀγάπη, and suggests a wrong idea, as if almsgiving were meant), but love; not meaning, however, as some explain, love to God and man, but, as is required by the context, wherein are described the properties of this ἀγάπη, love to man only; by which must, of course, be understood a Christian love; i. e. such a love to man as is founded, as to its ultimate object, on love to God and regard to his will (see John xiv. 21. 23); his will being, that his rational creatures, dependent as they are on each other by various mutual wants, should love each other; and still more on love to Christ, One with God, whose express injunction it was that we should love one another as he hath loved us (thereby setting us the example as well as giving us the precept); compare 1 John iv. 11.

— χαλκὸς ἠχῶν.] By this is plainly meant some brazen wind instrument. And the epithet ἠχῶν suggests the idea of a trumpet; especially as æs is so used in the Latin. Or perhaps another brazen wind instrument, like our horn, mentioned in Virg. Æn. iii. 140. The κύμβαλον was a hollow brazen plate, which, being struck against another such plate, emitted a very acute and sonorous clangor; and therefore the term should be rendered, not tinkling (which would only suit the κώδων or tintinnabulum), but clangorous.

τὴν πίστιν, ὥστε ὄρη μεθιστάνειν, ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω, οὐδέν 3 εἰμι. Καὶ ἐὰν ψωμίσω πάντα τὰ ὑπάρχοντά μου, καὶ ἐὰν παραδῶ τὸ σῶμά μου ἵνα καυθήσωμαι, ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω, 4 οὐδὲν ὠφελοῦμαι. [c] Ἡ ἀγάπη μακροθυμεῖ, χρηστεύεται· ἡ c Prov. 10. 12. 1 Pet. 4. 8.

The true key to the interpretation of this verse is to keep in view, that the Apostle is here adverting to the highest of those spiritual gifts before mentioned, which the persons whom he was addressing could aim at,—namely, that of the προφῆται, those possessed of the λόγος σοφίας, or the λόγος γνώσεως. The πίστις is the same as that at xii. 9 (where see Note), but may be supposed to be of the most exalted kind; namely, a faith of miracles. See Melancthon.

2. ὥστε ὄρη μεθ.] An hyperbolical expression, founded on that of our Lord at Matt. xxi. 21, 22, and elsewhere. Οὐδέν εἰμι, i. e. 'I am entitled to no distinction on that account.'

3. ψωμίσω πάντα τὰ ὑπάρχ. μ.] In order to perceive the full import of this passage, it is necessary to advert to the scope of the Apostle in the whole Chapter. He is here exerting himself to lessen the too great anxiety of the generality of the Corinthian Christians for the χαρίσματα above mentioned; and, in order to do this the more effectually, he brings forward a certain principle, which, he says, is of more value than them all, namely, ἀγάπη.

The Apostle, it must be observed, speaks in the first person (rather than the second person plural, Ye, or the first person plural, We) in order as much as possible to avoid giving offence; especially as he meant, in describing Christian charity, to obliquely censure the uncharitable spirit of many Corinthian Christians of the highest spiritual endowments. This indirect censure is discernible in the mode of distributing the various particulars, which form the component parts of the great and comprehensive virtue here inculcated; namely, into two parts; the former consisting of negations, the latter of affirmations; the first showing what Christians ought not to be (though too many of them are); the second what they ought to be, and must be, if they hope to be accepted of God.

The present is, indeed, a portion of Scripture of such great importance, that a more particular statement of its plan may be not unacceptable. In the first four verses of this Chapter the Apostle shows in the strongest terms, and illustrates by the liveliest images, the transcendent superiority of Christian charity over even the most illustrious spiritual gifts; and, in order to show the indispensable necessity thereof in order to attain acceptance with God, establishing the important truth, that however those gifts might edify others, Christian charity could alone benefit ourselves. Having said thus much in recommendation of this divine principle, he proceeds in the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh verses to describe it; and that by showing its effects and properties, as the marks by which it may be distinguished from counterfeits, or such as are only (as alms-giving) a part and not the whole. The remaining verses of the chapter are illustrative of the superiority of Christian charity to every other principle, even the graces of Faith and Hope, highly essential as these are to salvation; and that on the ground both of its perennity, as compared with the temporary nature and purpose of Spiritual gifts of even the most illustrious kind, and also of its own intrinsic excellence, as rich in blessings to man, which redounds to the glory of God.

It is well remarked by Olshausen, 'that this noble celebration of the praises of Christian love comes with a peculiar force and beauty from St. Paul: St. John being otherwise the preacher of love, while St. Paul is rather the preacher of faith.' The Apostle commences his proof of the inferiority of the gifts in question by adducing four or five of the most illustrious; and by showing that these are unavailing without Love, he proves his point as to all the rest.

3. In the words ἐὰν ψωμίσω, &c., and ἐὰν παραδῶ, &c., the Apostle appears to have intended to give an example of two of the most remarkable of those external marks of religion, in its principal parts, love to God and to man; and thus to show that if even these be of no worth, it must à fortiori be true of others.

Ψωμίζειν signifies properly to break up any food into bits (ψώμια, as John xiii. 26); and from the adjunct, to distribute them, in order to feed any one therewith. There is here an allusion to the mode in which charity was then usually evinced—namely, by doling out food in such ψώμια at the gate of the house. So Is. lviii. 7, 'Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry?'

— ἐὰν παραδῶ—καυθήσωμαι.] Alluding, it is thought, to what is said at Dan. iii. 28, of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, that they 'yielded up their bodies to be burned, that they might not serve any god except their own God.' Here, then, is supposed the very laying down one's life, by martyrdom, in the most excruciating tortures, to bear testimony to the truth of our religion. That this may be done from fanaticism, obstinacy, vain-glory, and such other carnal motives, the records of ecclesiastical history amply prove.

— οὐδὲν ὠφελοῦμαι] i. e. 'I am nothing the nearer to salvation; the thing being done for my own sake, not man's for God's sake.'

4. Having said thus much in recommendation of this divine principle of Love, "the golden key, which opes the palace of eternity," the Apostle proceeds to describe it; and that as a man would gold, by showing its effects and abstract properties, and the marks by which it may be distinguished. Of these characteristics no less than fifteen particulars are brought forward. And even these are not to be regarded as all that could be adduced, but as so many apt exemplifications of the grace of Christian love, as we have at ch. xii. exemplifications of the spiritual gifts: in short, such specimens of the grace in question, as those of the fruits of the Spirit, Gal. v. 16, seqq. Of the terms which express these specimens, the two first seem designed to give a general view of the subject; those following, a special one, comprehending the particulars therein contained. Of these two, the first, μακροθυμεῖ, 'is long-suffering,' denotes the enduring patiently all kinds of evil, as contrasted with a spirit quick in taking affront, and bitter in retaliating on a supposed injury. The second, ἀγάπη οὐ ζηλοῖ· ἡ ἀγάπη οὐ περπερεύεται, οὐ φυσιοῦται, d Supra 10. 24. Phil. 2. 4. [d] οὐκ ἀσχημονεῖ, οὐ ζητεῖ τὰ ἑαυτῆς, οὐ παροξύνεται, οὐ 5 e Ps. 10. 3. & 15. 4. Rom. 1. 32. 2 John v. 2. λογίζεται τὸ κακόν· [e] οὐ χαίρει ἐπὶ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ, συγχαίρει 6 δὲ τῇ ἀληθείᾳ· πάντα στέγει, πάντα πιστεύει, πάντα ἐλπίζει, 7 χρηστ., denotes the doing cheerfully all kinds of good—the overcoming evil with good—and thus involving a principle far superior to the boasted 'Bear and forbear' of the Philosophers. Compare supra vi. 6, and Gal. v. 22.

4. οὐ ζηλοῖ.] This seems directed against the envious spirit with which the possessors of the higher gifts were viewed by those who had the lesser, or none at all.

— οὐ περπερεύεται.] Most ancient and many modern Commentators (especially the more recent) explain it (by a reference to its derivation from the old Latin perperus and the Æolic πέρπερος), 'to act precipitately and rashly;' a signification confirmed and illustrated by Wetstein with numerous examples from the Classical writers, and which has much to recommend it; but is here scarcely agreeable to the context. Hence we may rather adopt the sense assigned by some ancient and several eminent modern Commentators, 'vaunteth not itself,' for ἀλαζονεύεται, a signification of the word found in Polyb. and Marc. Anton. It would seem that περπερεύεται, as well as φυσιοῦται, denotes pride and vanity on account of certain external advantages. And it is obvious how inconsistent such dispositions are with the love here inculcated, inasmuch as they sow the seeds of hatred and variance. Comp. Rom. xii. 3.

5. οὐκ ἀσχημονεῖ.] Of this term the expositions are very various and unsatisfactory. The earlier moderns take the sense to be, 'non agit inverecundè,' 'doth not behave itself unseemly;' while most of the recent Commentators explain it (after Grotius), 'avoids whatever in the opinion of men may be base or unseemly.' The former interpretation is the simpler and more natural, and may very well include the latter. The word is, indeed, properly a dramatic term, and was used of an actor who did not support the σχῆμα or deportment suitable to his assumed character. The meaning, then, would be, 'avoids all other such conduct as may be indecorous, or, in common estimation, unbecoming the professors of pure religion;' comp. Rom. xii. 17. This, however, is not sufficiently suitable to the context, where the term properly groups with the preceding, and seems to form the highest stage in the climax at περπερεύεται, φυσιοῦται, and ἀσχημονεῖ. And as περπερεύεται and φυσιοῦται denote affections of the mind, so that may refer to the result of such in gesture and action. Thus it is said, Prov. xix. 1, 'he that is perverse in his lips, and is a fool;' or, as it ought to be rendered, 'who is a fool,' or plays the fool. Thus ἀσχημονεῖν here seems to denote the eagerly catching at applause, and the arrogance associated therewith. So Calvin well explains, 'non exultat ostentatione inepta;' i. e. unbecoming the Christian character, whose prime virtue is humility; see Eph. iv. 2. Thus ἀσχημονεῖ is said per meiosin, for ἀφρονεῖ, 'plays the fool [by boasting].' So 2 Cor. xii. 11, γέγονα ἄφρων καυχώμενος.

The next three terms, οὐ ζητεῖ τὰ ἑαυτῆς, οὐ παροξύνεται, οὐ λογίζεται τὸ κακὸν are connected together, and seem meant to illustrate the preceding; and consequently relate to the same subject. Thus they denote not (as they are commonly explained) selfishness in general, but that species of it which is a constant concomitant of pride, and consists in men making claims on others beyond what their merit will justify: the very character of the proud man, who is also ever ready to take offence where none is meant, prone to suspect evil or injury to be intended, and, as it were, keeps a note-book for future retaliation; which two last traits are meant in οὐ παροξύνεται and οὐ λογίζεται τὸ κακὸν, of which the first should be rendered, 'is not prone to exasperation or bitter anger.'

6. τῇ ἀληθείᾳ] i. e. 'true and sincere virtue,' as opposed to the ἀδικία just before, which is a general expression to denote iniquity of every kind. How easily the two terms truth and virtue may be interchanged will sufficiently appear, if we consider (as Bp. Warburton beautifully observes, Sermon on 2 Pet. i. 4—7) that 'Truth and Virtue are twin-born sisters, and, with only a name of distinction, participate of one common nature; Truth being speculative virtue, and Virtue only practical truth;' so John iii. 21, ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν. Thus the sense is, 'rejoices not over any reported iniquity, but in true virtue.'

7. We are now come to the affirmative particulars.

— στέγει.] In order to avoid what has been thought a tautology, if the word be explained according to its usual sense beareth, Expositors have proposed various other senses, only one of which, however, is entitled to attention; namely, tegit, reticet, covers, suppresses; as Ecclus. viii. 20; and so St. Peter, 1st Ep. iv. 8, says, πρὸ πάντων δὲ τὴν εἰς ἑαυτοὺς ἀγάπην ἐκτενῆ ἔχοντες, ὅτι ἡ ἀγάπη καλύψει πλῆθος ἁμαρτιῶν. Yet it would be difficult to justify the sentiment, 'charity suppresseth all things;' for surely the kindness thus shown to one, and he an offender, would be cruelty to society at large. And to interpret πάντα 'many things,' would be not a little harsh and frigid. Hence it is better to adhere to the ordinary sense of στέγω, supported as it is by all the ancient Versions and the usus loquendi of St. Paul. So 1 Thess. iii. 1. 5, μηκέτι στέγοντες, 'no longer enduring.' Or rather the term is here to be taken in the same sense as supra ix. 12, ἀλλὰ πάντα στέγομεν, where the meaning is, 'we have in all things abstained from the use of this power or right to be maintained at the expense of our converts.' And such, if I mistake not, is the sense here intended; namely, that true Charity puts up with much abridgment of her Christian liberty, rather than give needless offence to others by the demand of her proper rights, or the use of things lawful; see supra x. 23, and Bp. Sanderson's Sermon on that text. It is plain that the πάντα here must be taken with the same limitation (according to the circumstances of the case) as in 8 πάντα ὑπομένει. Ἡ ἀγάπη οὐδέποτε ἐκπίπτει. εἴτε δὲ προφητεῖαι, καταργηθήσονται· εἴτε γλῶσσαι, παύσονται· εἴτε 9 γνῶσις, καταργηθήσεται. ἐκ μέρους γὰρ γινώσκομεν, καὶ ἐκ

10 μέρους προφητεύομεν· ὅταν δὲ ἔλθῃ τὸ τέλειον, τότε τὸ ἐκ 11 μέρους καταργηθήσεται. Ὅτε ἤμην νήπιος, ὡς νήπιος ἐλά-λουν, ὡς νήπιος ἐφρόνουν, ὡς νήπιος ἐλογιζόμην· ὅτε δὲ 12 γέγονα ἀνὴρ, κατήργηκα τὰ τοῦ νηπίου. [f] Βλέπομεν γὰρ f 2 Cor. 3. 18. & 5. 7. Phil. 3. 12. 1 John 3. 2.
ἄρτι δι' ἐσόπτρου ἐν αἰνίγματι, τότε δὲ πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον· ἄρτι γινώσκω ἐκ μέρους, τότε δὲ ἐπιγνώσομαι καθὼς 13 καὶ ἐπεγνώσθην. Νυνὶ δὲ μένει πίστις, ἐλπὶς, ἀγάπη, τὰ τρία ταῦτα· μείζων δὲ τούτων ἡ ἀγάπη.

the words following: πάντα πιστεύει, πάντα ἐλπίζει, πάντα ὑπομένει.

— πάντα πιστεύει] i. e. animated by such a spirit as is disposed to hope, and, as far as plain facts will permit, to believe the best of others. Such a spirit as, in the words of Seneca, Epist. v. 11, 'quidquid dubium est, humanitati inclinat ad melius.'

— πάντα ὑπομένει.] The best comment on this may be found in the words of 2 Tim. ii. 10, πάντα ὑπομένω (endure) διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς, ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ σωτηρίας τύχωσι.

8. To show the paramount pre-eminence of Love above spiritual Gifts, the Apostle, in conclusion, adduces another and the strongest ground of superiority (thus showing it to be really the καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ὁδὸν he had termed it supra xii. 31); namely, in its perennity, or rather, sempiternity; it remaining in time, and enduring to eternity.

— οὐδέποτε ἐκπίπτει] for οὐδέποτε ἐκλείπει, 'is never to cease, whether in the present or a future state.'

— εἴτε δὲ προφητεῖαι, &c.] The εἴτε is mostly interpreted that the sense may be, 'Whatever portion of these spiritual gifts be possessed by any one.' But it seems rather to be, 'Whatsoever spiritual gifts of this kind there may be;' meaning all imaginable ones, and in every conceivable degree. Καταργηθήσονται. Render, 'shall be done away;' namely, by being no longer of any use. Γνῶσις here simply denotes the spiritual gift so called.

9, 10. Here the Apostle states the reason why these, and such like spiritual gifts, will cease and be done away; namely, because they will be partly useless, and partly imperfect,—and accordingly will have to be superseded by the perfect knowledge to be enjoyed in heaven.

9. ἐκ μέρους.] It is here meant, that both the endowments and the use of these spiritual gifts are alike imperfect, as compared with that degree of both which is imaginable, or with the complete discoveries of another world.

11. 'We have here,' as Hyperius says, 'a confirmatio probationis à simili.' This truth, that the thing must necessarily be so, the Apostle now illustrates by two similitudes derived from common life; one taken from the state of boyhood as compared to manhood, the other from the view of objects through an obscure medium, as compared with one through a pellucid one.

—ὡς νήπ. ἐφρ.] i. e. 'I was affected as a child,' had the dispositions, feelings, and understanding of a child. Ὡς νήπ. ἐλογ., i. e. 'I reasoned about things with a childish ignorance' and misapprehension. By τὰ τοῦ νηπίου are meant the toys, trifles, and frivolities of that age. Wetstein compares Xenoph. Cyrop. viii. 7, ἐγὼ γὰρ παῖς τε ὢν, τὰ ἐν παισὶ νομιζόμενα καλὰ δοκῶ κεκαρπῶσθαι· ἐπεὶ δὲ ἥβησα, τὰ ἐν νεανίσκοις· τέλειός τε ἀνὴρ γενόμενος, τὰ ἐν ἀνδράσι. Other illustrations may be found in Recens. Synop.; as Philostr. Vit. Ap. i. 17, p. 22, and Horat. Carm. iv. 10. 7. The application (left to be supplied) is: 'Such will be the attainments in knowledge of the heavenly state, as compared with that imparted by the most exalted spiritual gifts.'

12. Here we have the application of the above similitude.

— βλέπομεν γὰρ ἄρτι δι' ἐσόπτρου ἐν αἰνίγματι.] Some obscurity has here been occasioned by an intermingling of the natural with the metaphorical sense, and of the thing itself together with that with which it is compared. Thus βλέπομεν, while properly belonging to the latter, is used for γινώσκομεν; and ἐν αἰνίγματι, which properly belongs to the former, and for which one would have expected ἀμυδρῶς, is used of the latter. Ἐν αἰνίγ. denotes, as Hesych. explains, ἐν παρεικασίᾳ, 'by guess,' as in attempting to solve a riddle. By ἐσόπτρου is to be understood some of those transparent substances, which the ancients, in the then imperfect state of the arts, used in their windows for glass; such as thin plates of horn, transparent stone, and such like; through which they saw, indeed, the objects without but obscurely. By a similar mode of expression it is said in a Rabbinical writer, Jebamoth, fol. 49. 2, 'Omnes prophetæ viderunt per specular non lucidum: Moses magister noster vidit per specular lucidum.' With the present compare a beautiful passage of Seneca, Epist. 103, 'Tunc in tenebris vixisse te dices, cum totam lucem, et totus, aspexeris, quum nunc per angustissimas oculorum vias obscurè intueris, et tamen admiraris illam procul.'

— πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον.] An expression occurring in Judges vi. 22, to signify what is seen on the closest inspection. Ἐπιγνώσομαι, 'I shall thoroughly know.' Καθὼς καὶ ἐπεγνώσθην, 'even as I am (lit., have been) known by God' (importing, thoroughly and completely); even that God 'who spieth out all our ways; nor is there a thought in our hearts but he knoweth it altogether.'

13. νυνὶ δὲ μένει, &c.] The δὲ is resumptive;

a Supra 12. 31.
b Acts 2. 4. & 10. 46.
c Acts 13. 15. Rom. 12. 8.

XIV. [a] ΔΙΩΚΕΤΕ τὴν ἀγάπην· ζηλοῦτε δὲ τὰ πνευ- 1 ματικὰ, μᾶλλον δὲ ἵνα προφητεύητε. [b] Ὁ γὰρ λαλῶν γλώσσῃ, 2 οὐκ ἀνθρώποις λαλεῖ, ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ· οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἀκούει, πνεύ-ματι δὲ λαλεῖ μυστήρια· [c] ὁ δὲ προφητεύων ἀνθρώποις λαλεῖ 3 οἰκοδομὴν καὶ παράκλησιν καὶ παραμυθίαν. Ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσῃ 4

vv. 8—12 being in some measure parenthetical, and merely illustrative of what is said in the first. The Apostle here resumes the subject before treated of, i. e. the superiority of Charity,—the ground of which superiority, though not expressed, is hinted at in the words νυνὶ μένει,—meaning, that the πίστις and ἐλπὶς only remain in use now, in the present state only (for ἄρτι); but the ἀγάπη will be exercised in another world, and to all eternity,—when faith will be superseded by sight, and hope swallowed up in fruition. There is no reason to suppose, with some eminent Commentators, that the number three is here mentioned as 'a sacred one.' Indeed, as (to use the words of Dr. Henderson) 'the Apostle had mentioned three gifts as a specimen of a particular class which were to cease, so he here specifies three which are to be permanent in the Church.' Yet there is, as the same learned writer observes, a peculiarity of emphasis in the expression 'these three :' with which I would compare Thucyd. vi. 73, Ἑρμ., καὶ Ἡρακλ., καὶ Συμμ., τούτους τρεῖς. Euseb. ap. Stob. Serm. p. 271. 22, χρημάτων, καὶ σώματος, καὶ ψυχῆς, τριῶν ὄντων. and Aristoph. Nub. 425, Ἀλλ' ὅτι δῆτ' οὖν νομιεῖς ἤδη θεὸν οὐδένα πλὴν ἅπερ ἡμεῖς, Τὸ Χάος τουτὶ, καὶ τὰς Νεφέλας, καὶ τὴν γλῶτταν, τρία ταυτί;

13. μείζων δὲ τούτων ἡ ἀγάπη.] Not meaning (observes Bp. Bull, Harm. Apost. p. 11), 'that the superiority is due to love only on account of its enduring to another life, but also because in this present life it is, as the Apostle admits at ver. 2, far more useful and excellent.' So also Calvin says 'it is greater; first, if we consider its excellence as shown in the effects above enumerated; and secondly, by a reference to its perpetuity. Faith and hope benefit the believer himself; charity diffuses itself to others. Faith and hope savour of imperfection; charity will remain even in a state of perfection.' This, then, is all that the Apostle says, though more might have been added; namely, that Charity will teach us to hide the fault we see. On the subject of the excellence of Charity over Faith and Hope, see Bp. Coneybeare, Serm. i. 469—504; also Bp. Warburton, Serm. xxxi., where he commences by observing, 'that an inquiry into the superiority in question seems hardly needful, since the obvious nature of Charity, as it signifies universal benevolence, shows that it must be at the head of human virtues; universal benevolence, which prefers the good of the whole to any of its parts, being of the essence, as it is the end, of all virtue.'

XIV. In this Chapter is brought forward the comparative excellence of tongues and of prophecy (vv. 1—26); and then are subjoined (vv. 26—40) directions for the proper use of each of these gifts.

1. διώκετε τὴν ἀγάπην.] q. d. 'Studiously, then, endeavour to acquire this love.' The metaphor being one derived from the eager pursuit of battle or the chase.

— ζηλοῦτε δὲ, &c.] 'but [at the same time] be earnestly desirous of spiritual gifts.' The Imperative has here, as often, a preceptive force. Μᾶλλον δὲ ἵνα προφ., 'rather, however, that ye may have that of prophecy;' see Note on xii. 10. 28.

2. ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσῃ.] This is equivalent to the γένη γλωσσῶν, at xii. 10. 28.

From what follows, a case is contemplated, which would doubtless often occur,—that the language so spoken was unknown to the congregation, the gift being exercised only as an evidence of the Divine origin of the Christian religion; in which case the Apostle directs that there should be an interpreter.

— οὐκ ἀνθρ. λαλεῖ] i. e. 'he, as it were, addresses not men.' It is as if he addressed them not; for, as the Apostle adds, 'no one (nemo ferè, next to none, see Pers. Sat. i. 1) understands him.' Ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ, 'but to God [only].'

— πνεύματι δὲ λαλεῖ μυστ.] On the exact sense here some difference of opinion exists. The ancient Expositors generally, and almost all the modern ones, suppose it put for ἐν πνεύματι, and to mean, 'although, by the impulse of the Holy Spirit, he speaketh mysteries.' But thus πν. will not yield a sufficiently weighty sense; and the interpretation is forbidden by the doctrine of the Greek Article. It is, therefore, better (with Estius, Hyperius, Vorstius, Abp. Newcome, Bps. Middleton and Pearce, and Dr. Henderson) to take it in the sense mind, 'in his mind;' rendering, with Casaubon, 'Quippe cum nemo intelligat; sed animo loquitur arcana;' for, as observes Casaubon, it being the purpose of speech, 'ut animi sensum declararet aliis; qui ita loquitur ut alii non intelligant, is animo magis quam ore loquitur.'

3. Most of the older Commentators, following the Vulg., regard οἰκοδομὴν, παράκλησιν, and παραμυθίαν as dependent upon εἰς understood. This, however, is too arbitrary, and makes the sense not so direct. Hence it is better with the Syriac, and most of the recent Commentators, to regard the words as governed of λαλεῖ (of which use see examples from Ælian and Æschines in Schleusner's Lex.); the meaning being, 'speaketh what may fill their minds with edification, exhortation, and consolation.' At ver. 4, Grotius and Olshausen observe, that οἰκοδομὴν is the general term, and παράκλησιν and παραμυθίαν constitute its parts. It would rather seem that οἰκοδομεῖ refers to the principal purpose of the προφήτης, which was to speak (as Calvin says) that whereby men might be instructed in piety and faith, in the worship and fear of God, and in the duties of holiness and righteousness. The next terms refer to certain other important purposes of the προφητεία,—which were, to rouse the sluggish, caution the unwary, and comfort the faint-hearted and timorous. So also at 2 Tim. iii. 16, the Apostle, after stating the general purpose of Scripture to be πρὸς διδασκαλίαν, subjoins the particular ones in the words πρὸς ἔλεγχον, and πρὸς ἐπανόρθωσιν.

ἑαυτὸν οἰκοδομεῖ· ὁ δὲ προφητεύων ἐκκλησίαν οἰκοδομεῖ.
5 Θέλω δὲ πάντας ὑμᾶς λαλεῖν γλώσσαις, μᾶλλον δὲ ἵνα προφητεύητε· μείζων γὰρ ὁ προφητεύων ἢ ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσαις, 6 ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ διερμηνεύῃ, ἵνα ἡ ἐκκλησία οἰκοδομὴν λάβῃ. [d] Νυνὶ d Eph. 1.17.
δὲ, ἀδελφοὶ, ἐὰν ἔλθω πρὸς ὑμᾶς γλώσσαις λαλῶν, τί ὑμᾶς ὠφελήσω, ἐὰν μὴ ὑμῖν λαλήσω ἢ ἐν ἀποκαλύψει, ἢ ἐν γνώ-7 σει, ἢ ἐν προφητείᾳ, ἢ ἐν διδαχῇ; Ὅμως τὰ ἄψυχα φωνὴν διδόντα, εἴτε αὐλὸς εἴτε κιθάρα, ἐὰν διαστολὴν τοῖς φθόγ-γοις μὴ δῷ, πῶς γνωσθήσεται τὸ αὐλούμενον ἢ τὸ κιθαρι-

4. ἑαυτὸν] scil. μόνον, i. e. by the confirmation of his faith; for to speak thus must to himself be an undeniable proof of his being divinely inspired.

5. θέλω δέ.] Render, 'vellem autem,' 'I could wish you.' Ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ is thought to be a pleonastic form; but perhaps it is meant to be more strongly exceptive than εἰ μὴ above. Εἰ μὴ διερμηνεύῃ, sub. τις, i. e. if there be no interpreter at hand. Thus it will not be, as Dr. Macknight supposes, at variance with ver. 28. Besides, this is required by the spirit of ver. 13.

6. By way of illustrating the subject, the Apostle puts the case, that if he, for instance (meaning, per κοίνωσιν, any one of the persons who possessed the above-mentioned χαρίσματα), should visit them, and should merely display the gift of tongues, what would his visit benefit them? Not at all; unless, he adds, I should address you ἢ ἐν ἀποκαλύψει—ἐν διδαχῇ, which words have given rise to not a little discussion. Now in all these forms of expression, the ἐν is by Heydenreich supposed to denote the object of the speaking in question. But it may rather be said to mark the manner,—though, indeed, the two senses merge into each other; q. d. 'in the exercise of, so as to exercise.' It is, however, of more consequence to advert to the meaning of the terms ἀποκαλύψει, γνώσει, προφητείᾳ, and διδαχῇ, on which Expositors are much divided in opinion. Some take them all for Accusatives with εἰς, in the sense 'so as to explain and make known to you my meaning, either in the way of prophecy, or teaching in general;' a mode of interpretation harsh and inadmissible. The general sense seems plainly this,—that the use of the gift of tongues would be unprofitable, unless it were accompanied with some other gifts, which might contribute, in some way or other (see ver. 3), to the edification of the hearers. That the Apostle has reference to the Spiritual gifts above described, is with reason supposed by the best Commentators. But what those are it is not so easy to determine. It would seem most obvious to refer the προφητεία to the προφῆται supra xii. 28, 29. But they undoubtedly correspond to the possessors of the λόγος γνώσεως; and since (as Dr. Henderson observes) the Apostle has distinguished it from doctrine on the one hand, and from revelation on the other, it is plain that he intended it to be taken in the highest sense of the term; namely, of predicting future events; the very sense in which it is used supra xii. 10, where see Note. In short, I am inclined to think, with Neander, Billroth, and Olshausen, that the four particulars here specified are to be resolved into two parallel members, the latter pair being exegetical of the former. Or the ἀποκάλυψις may (as it is by Olshausen) be regarded as the efficient cause of the προφητεία; and the γνῶσις, of the διδαχή. Thus we may render: 'Unless I address you, either in the way of revelation or of knowledge, either by prophecy or by teaching.' The expression ἀποκαλύψει will then have reference to the inspiration necessary for the λόγος σοφίας; and γνώσει to that for the λόγος γνώσεως. Though here utility being especially had in view, the possessors of the λόγος γνώσεως in the second degree, namely, the διδάσκαλοι of xii. 28, 29, would seem alone to be understood.

7. Here we have illustrated by example the inutility of discourse delivered in a foreign language without any interpretation. (Heydenreich.)

— ὅμως.] The best Commentators take this to signify similiter, for ὁμοίως (as in Gal. iii. 15); of which sense examples in abundance are adduced by Kypke.

— ἄψυχα.] Supply ὄργανα. Φωνὴν is for ἦχον, or φθόγγον, and is a term applicable both to wind and to stringed instruments.

— ἐὰν διαστολὴν τοῖς φθόγγοις μὴ δῷ] 'unless they give a distinction in the sounds,' or rather 'to the sounds.' It would seem that the Apostle is not (as many suppose) speaking of the intonation necessary to the distinction of one tone from another; for that would be little pertinent to his argument, which does not respect one who can speak no language, but one who uses a language that is not understood by his hearers. Yet neither can I agree with Rosenmuller and Krause, that he is speaking of the laws of harmony and melody: for that will as little suit the argument. In fact, as Calvin says, 'non est subtilius disputandum; quia Paulus id tantum sumpsit, quod vulgo percipitur.' Yet he must certainly have adverted to something which strikes the senses of the vulgar; and that, I am inclined to think, is the peculiar characteristic of any tune,—which the ancients denoted by the term mode, using it, in some measure, as we do key. This, I would observe, is confirmed by the expression just after, ἄδηλον φωνήν; for without attending to the distinction of tones, the performer surely could not be said to perform on the instrument at all. There would indeed seem to be an allusion to those various and strongly marked characteristics, which among the ancients distinguished different kinds of music, as sacred, domestic, dramatic, or military; insomuch that any person, with a tolerable ear, could tell to what class to refer any composition which he heard: whereas, if those characteristics were not observed in the air, he would not know what the tune was meant to be; which ζόμενον; καὶ γὰρ ἐὰν ἄδηλον φωνὴν σάλπιγξ δῷ, τίς 8 παρασκευάσεται εἰς πόλεμον; Οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς διὰ τῆς 9 γλώσσης ἐὰν μὴ εὔσημον λόγον δῶτε, πῶς γνωσθήσεται τὸ λαλούμενον; ἔσεσθε γὰρ εἰς ἀέρα λαλοῦντες. Τοσαῦτα, 10 εἰ τύχοι, γένη φωνῶν ἐστιν ἐν κόσμῳ, καὶ οὐδὲν αὐτῶν ἄφωνον. Ἐὰν οὖν μὴ εἰδῶ τὴν δύναμιν τῆς φωνῆς, ἔσομαι 11

τῷ λαλοῦντι βάρβαρος· καὶ ὁ λαλῶν, ἐν ἐμοὶ βάρβαρος.
Οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, ἐπεὶ ζηλωταί ἐστε πνευμάτων, πρὸς τὴν 12
[e] Supra 12. 10. οἰκοδομὴν τῆς ἐκκλησίας ζητεῖτε ἵνα περισσεύητε. [e] Διόπερ 13
ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσῃ προσευχέσθω ἵνα διερμηνεύῃ. ἐὰν γὰρ 14 is, I apprehend, what the Apostle means, as is plain from the words following, which contain another illustration of the same kind, but more perspicuous, and meant to explain the preceding.

8. καὶ γὰρ ἐὰν ἄδ., &c.] The Apostle here adverts to a use of musical tunes, in which their distinction was especially necessary, viz. for military purposes. See Thucyd. v. 69. 2, and my Note there. Now the military wind instruments of the ancients were not used merely for the purpose of directing the steps in marching, but also for the purpose of signifying to the soldiers, as it were by signals, what they were to do,—whether to advance or retreat, take up arms, or go to quarters; in fact, they performed all that is now done by our trumpets or bugles.

— ἐὰν ἄδηλον φωνὴν σάλπ. δῷ.] q. d. 'if the trumpeter sound his instrument without proper attention to this distinction of tunes, and thereby make the signals in question indistinct, not distinguishing between that which sounds to arms, and that which signifies a retreat, or other military evolution, no one will know what to do.' So Polyb. xxx., οἱ μὲν αὐληταὶ φυσῶντες ἀδιάφωνα, and Livy, lib. xxv. 10, 'Tuba inscienter inflata, quis aut quibus signum daret, incertum efficiebat.'

9. The Apostle now passes from the example to the case in point. (Stenersen.)

— διὰ τῆς γλώσσης] 'by the tongue,' meaning the organ of speech, as opposed to the musical instrument just spoken of. Εἰς ἀέρα λαλεῖν is a proverbial expression, to denote speaking in vain, like the phrase ventis verba profundere in Latin, and a similar one in our own language.

Εὔσημον, for εὔδηλον, as often in the later writers.

10. Here we have another illustration by example of the inutility of discourse in a foreign language, in which we must attend to the elliptical and idiomatical cast of the words. The true ellipsis here is, not ὅσα ἀνδρῶν, which would lead to a wrong sense, but ὅσα ἂν θέλοιτε; and at εἰ τύχοι must be repeated τοσαῦτα. The formula εἰ τύχοι means literally, 'if it should chance [so to be];' but, in use, it often merely denotes, by implication, 'for example,' as here and in Philo-Jud., p. 1067, μουσικὸν γάρ, εἰ τύχοι, καὶ γραμματικόν, &c. The sense may be thus expressed: 'There are, for example, as many kinds of tongues in the world as ye choose, if so many there should be.'

— καὶ οὐδὲν αὐτῶν ἄφωνον.] Meaning, 'and not one of them formed of inarticulate sounds, but adapted to be significant to the persons who use it:' 'importing,' says Dr. Henderson, 'that every language is intelligible to some nation or other; and it is only to persons who are ignorant of it, that its words are destitute of signification.'

11. ἐὰν οὖν μὴ εἰδῶ, &c.] Render, 'Now, unless I know the meaning of the language [which may be addressed to me], ἔσομαι τῷ λαλοῦντι βάρβ., &c., I shall be, with respect to the speaker of it, a foreigner; and the speaker will be, with respect to me, a foreigner;' q. d. 'we shall be mutually ignorant of each other's meaning.' On this sense of βάρβαρος to signify one who speaks in a language the hearer understands not, see Note on Acts xxviii. 2, and Rom. i. 14, and my Note on Thucyd. iii. 68. The above signification of ἐν, 'in respect to,' is Hebraic. A Classical writer would either have used ἐπὶ, or dropped the preposition. So, in a kindred passage of Diog. Laert., Anacharsis says of the Greeks, ἐμοὶ δὲ πάντες Ἕλληνες σκυθίζουσι; and Ovid, Trist. v. 10, 'Barbarus hic ego sum, quia non intelligor ulli.'

12. οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς.] This must be taken, not with the preceding, but with the following words, and construed with ζητεῖτε. Οὕτω may best be rendered, so then, or wherefore. The full force of οὕτω will appear by supplying the ellipsis, as follows: 'Thus also (to apply this to your case), since you are anxious for, &c., strive,' &c. Ζηλωταί ἐστε is used for ζηλοῦτε at xii. 31, and xiv. 1. Πνευμάτων is for πνευματικῶν (scil. χαρισμάτων), abstract for concrete, which occurs at xiv. 1. In the next words there is a transposition (for ζητεῖτε ἵνα περισσεύητε πρὸς τὴν οἰκοδομὴν τῆς ἐκκλησίας), the reason for which seems to have been, that as οἰκοδομὴ was the principal thing meant to be enforced, so it is put first.

13. We have here, as Calvin observes, an anticipation of an objection; q. d. 'Of what use, then, will be the gift, and why should that be suppressed, which will be to the glory of God?' The remedy for the evil is suggested in the words following.

— προσευχέσθω ἵνα διερμ.] Most of the best modern Commentators explain, 'Let him [so] pray, as that he may, or in such a manner that he may (by the words used in his prayer, or by explaining it in a known language), interpret and impart to others what the afflatus has imparted to him, and not, out of vain ostentation, utter it in a tongue unknown.' But that sense cannot be extracted from the words without much violence. The most simple, and, it would seem, the true interpretation, is that of the ancient προσεύχωμαι γλώσσῃ, τὸ πνεῦμά μου προσεύχεται, ὁ δὲ 15 νοῦς μου ἄκαρπός ἐστι. [f] Τί οὖν ἐστι; Προσεύξομαι τῷ [f] Eph. 5. 19. Col. 3. 16. Ps. 47. 7.

Πνεύματι, προσεύξομαι δὲ καὶ τῷ νοΐ· ψαλῶ τῷ Πνεύματι, 16 ψαλῶ δὲ καὶ τῷ νοΐ. [g] Ἐπεὶ, ἐὰν εὐλογήσῃς τῷ Πνεύματι, [g] Supra 11. 24.
ὁ ἀναπληρῶν τὸν τόπον τοῦ ἰδιώτου πῶς ἐρεῖ τὸ ἀμὴν 17 ἐπὶ τῇ σῇ εὐχαριστίᾳ, ἐπειδὴ τί λέγεις οὐκ οἶδε; σὺ μὲν γὰρ καλῶς εὐχαριστεῖς, ἀλλ' ὁ ἕτερος οὐκ οἰκοδομεῖται.

and some modern Expositors, as Calvin and Hyperius, who assign the following sense: 'Let him pray that he may be enabled to so interpret [what he speaks].' See xii. 10, and Notes. The words following contain a reason for the above.

14. Here the Apostle urges them to aim at higher gifts than speaking with tongues, by pointing out the inefficiency of that gift to general edification. The pronoun I denotes, per μετασχηματισμὸν, any person having the gift of tongues. Hence it is plain that τὸ πνεῦμά μου cannot mean the Holy Spirit, as many Commentators suppose, nor, as others explain, 'my spiritual gift.' The true interpretation is doubtless that of the ancients and most moderns for the last century, 'my mind.' So πνεῦμα is used at Rom. i. 9. 2 Tim. iv. 22, supra v. 3, and νοῦς at ver. 19. Render, 'If I pray in a foreign language (without interpreting my words), my mind prayeth, but my meaning (i. e. the meaning or purport of my prayer) produces no benefit to others;' namely, by being not understood and laid to heart.

15. τί οὖν ἐστι;] Sub. πρακτέον, as Rom. vi. 15. The answer to the question is made (agreeably to the μετασχηματισμὸς) in the first person. The exact sense, however, is disputed. Some ancient, and almost all the early modern Expositors (together with Hammond, Whitby, Rosenmuller, Krause, Iaspis, and Macknight), suppose it to be this: 'The best to be done is, to ask of God to be endued with the faculty of divinely-inspired prayer in a foreign language; not with the spirit and soul alone, and to our own edification only, but τῷ νοΐ, with meaning, so as to be understood by others also,' i. e. that we may have, too, the gift of interpretation, as well as tongues; a sense of νοΐ, it is said, required by the context. See ver. 19. But how that word or προσεύξ. can be supposed to contain any such sense as that which is here ascribed to it, however agreeable to the context, I see not; and the whole interpretation is so harsh, as to be quite inadmissible. For my own part, I would render as follows: 'What, then, is to be done? I must pray in the Spirit, but I must likewise pray unto the understanding [of what is said];' προσεύξομαι being for προσεύξωμαι, which is, indeed, found in several ancient MSS., but is evidently a gloss. Τῷ νοΐ is, as the best Commentators are agreed, a dativus commodi for εἰς τὸ νοεῖσθαι, 'so as to be understood,' namely, by others. Thus νοΐ will stand for νοῆσαι. Of this use of a vox intelligentiæ, in a transitive sense, i. e. as used of what others may understand, examples are adduced by Heydenreich from Nehem. viii. 9. 1 Chron. xxv. 7, 8. The means of being so understood by others would be by either himself expressing in a known tongue what he had said in an unknown, or having some one to interpret. Τῷ Πνεύματι is for ἐν τῷ Πνεύματι, as Jude v. 20, ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ προσευχόμενοι. If, however, it be thought that the antithesis requires the Dative to have the same force in both places, we may take Πνεύματι as standing, by a common idiom, for εἰς τὸ Πνεῦμα, 'conformably to the motions of the Spirit;' which, it must be remembered, the person could suppress, or resist, as is plain from ver. 32, πνεύματα προφητῶν προφήταις ὑποτάσσεται.

— ψαλῶ.] The word may here, as in a kindred passage of James v. 13, be understood not necessarily of a hymn actually sung, but of an extemporaneous composition (perhaps half prose and half poetry) recited. This at least would seem to be the case from the passage of James, where see Note. See also Col. iii. 16.

16. The Apostle now confirms what he has been saying by an example. (Hyperius.)

— ἐπεὶ, ἐὰν, &c.] Ἐπεὶ here (as also at Rom. iii. 6. xi. 6. 1 Cor. v. 10. vii. 14. xv. 29. Heb. ix. 26. x. 2, and sometimes in the Classical writers, signifies 'since [in that case],' meaning, that other case, and so may be rendered 'otherwise.' Ἐὰν εὐλογ., 'if, or when, thou givest God thanks.' Τῷ Πνεύματι, 'in the Spirit,' as at ver. 15.

— τοῦ ἰδιώτου.] Here (as I have shown in the Note on Acts iv. 13) ἰδιώτης denotes a private person, as opposed to one holding any office. Hence the sense assigned here by many Commentators, 'one of the laity,' might be admitted, if the context, &c. permitted it. But as that requires some more special sense, and the distinction between clergy and laity was probably not yet made, I would, as the context demands, interpret it (with the best Expositors, ancient and modern), 'one who occupies the situation of an uninspired person,' one not endued with the gift of tongues, or the interpretation of tongues. The Article here denotes the genus of persons so circumstanced. Ἀναπ. τὸν τόπον is not a mere Hebraism, but the metaphor is common to both ancient and modern languages, especially the Latin, meaning 'to sustain the character of,' with the adjunct idea of really being such. The word ἀμὴν is properly an adjective signifying true, and, as such, was used as well in solemn asseverations, as after any prayer, which involved either asseveration (as when the praises of God were pronounced), or supplication, when his aid was sought; which required the ellipsis ἔστω. The τὸ at ἀμὴν ought to be expressed, since it denotes what was customary. Εὐχαριστίᾳ is equivalent to εὐλογίᾳ, both being general terms to denote prayer and praise; and so εὐχαριστεῖς, a little after, is for εὐλογεῖς, though the two terms are properly distinct. See Note on Matt. xiv. 19. Yet it is agreeable to the Jewish idiom by which doxologies and public prayers to God were styled ברכת.

Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ [μου], πάντων ὑμῶν μᾶλλον γλώσσαις 18 λαλῶν· ἀλλ' ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ θέλω πέντε λόγους διὰ τοῦ νοός 19 μου λαλῆσαι, ἵνα καὶ ἄλλους κατηχήσω, ἢ μυρίους λόγους ἐν γλώσσῃ. [h] Ἀδελφοί, μὴ παιδία γίνεσθε ταῖς φρεσίν· ἀλλὰ 20 τῇ κακίᾳ νηπιάζετε, ταῖς δὲ φρεσὶ τέλειοι γίνεσθε. [i] Ἐν τῷ 21
νόμῳ γέγραπται· Ὅτι ἐν ἑτερογλώσσοις, καὶ ἐν χείλεσιν ἑτέροις, λαλήσω τῷ λαῷ τούτῳ, καὶ οὐδ' οὕτως εἰσακούσονταί μου, λέγει Κύριος. Ὥστε αἱ 22 γλῶσσαι εἰς σημεῖόν εἰσιν οὐ τοῖς πιστεύουσιν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ἀπίστοις· ἡ δὲ προφητεία οὐ τοῖς ἀπίστοις, ἀλλὰ τοῖς πιστεύουσιν. [k] Ἐὰν οὖν συνέλθῃ ἡ ἐκκλησία ὅλη ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, 23 καὶ πάντες γλώσσαις λαλῶσιν, εἰσέλθωσι δὲ ἰδιῶται ἢ ἄπιστοι, h Ps. 131. 2. Matt. 11. 25. & 18. 3. & 19. 14. Eph. 4. 14. Heb. 5. 12. 1 Pet. 2. 2.

i John 10. 34. Deut. 28. 49. Isa. 28. 11, 12.
k Acts 2. 13.

18. εὐχαριστῶ, &c.] This is introduced (like καθὼς just before) to show that he does not depreciate the gift, because he possesses it not. The μου, not found in several ancient MSS. and Versions, and some Fathers, is cancelled by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz. But the same phrase occurs at Phil. i. 3, and Philem. 4; and it is less likely that it should have been interpolated here from those passages, than have been thrown out by the early Critics, as savouring of inelegance. Λαλῶν is for ὅτι λαλῶ, being so expressed, though somewhat inaccurately, to avoid egotism.

19. In πέντε λ. there is an idiom, common to all languages, by which a small certain number is put for a very few. And the same, mutatis mutandis, may be said of μυρίους. Διὰ τοῦ ν. μου (or, as is read in many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, τῷ νοΐ μου) is by the best Commentators shown to mean 'ex mentis meæ sensu.' See Note supra v. 15. The next words are exegetical of the preceding.

20. After pointing out the true nature and comparative value of the gift of tongues, the Apostle endeavours to repress in them a too great anxiety for its possession,—by showing that to wish for it without regard to the advantage thence resulting, were puerile. And then, using a delicate turn, suggested by the word παιδίον, he adds, ἀλλὰ τῇ κακίᾳ νηπ., of which the sense is, 'but as respects vice, be even infantile,' or, 'as ignorant as children.' So the Greek proverb, Διαφέρει τοῦ νηπίου καθ' ἡλικίαν οὐδὲν ὁ ἐν ταῖς φρεσὶ νηπιάζων. Comp. Matth. x. 16.

— ταῖς δὲ φρεσὶ τέλ. γίνεσθε] 'but as to prudence and judgment in approving those things which are excellent, be grown-up persons, and attain to something of the maturity of your Christian profession.' A sense of τέλειος occurring in Eph. iv. 13, and Heb. v. 14, and elsewhere in the best writers.

21. Another argument is now adduced to prove that the gift of tongues ought not to be so magnified, as to be preferred to all others; namely, that in Holy Writ itself we find God, not in kindness promising, but in threatening words declaring, that he would speak unto them in tongues which they should not understand—not to benefit them, but to punish them for their unbelief and disobedience. (Heydenreich.) The argument may be thus expressed: 'Since God threatened this as a curse, do not voluntarily bring it upon the Church, merely to make a show of your gifts.'

— ἐν ἑτερογλώσσοις.] 'This, while it seems primarily to have related to the languages of those foreign nations by whom God intended to execute vengeance on Israel, might also denote that he would instruct them by persons endued with the gift of tongues, to convince them that those persons taught the true religion.' (Scott.) The words here quoted (taken from Is. xxviii. 11, 12) differ considerably from the Sept., but agree in substance with the Hebrew; this being a citation ad sensum, rather than ad literam. In fact, the only material difference is in the substitution of the first person for the third, to make the sense more pointed. Λέγει Κύριος are the words of the Apostle, and do not profess to be from the Prophet. By νόμος is here, as often, denoted the Old Testament. See John x. 34.

22. In order further to show the inferiority of tongues to interpretation, the Apostle adverts to the chief purpose which such signs as the gifts of tongues were meant to serve,—namely, for the conviction of unbelievers, rather than the edification of believers.

— ὥστε αἱ γλῶσσαι, &c.] The full sense is: 'Wherefore the tongues in question are [meant] to serve for a sign, or mark, [by which it may be known that the Christian doctrine is true.] Yet these are [intended] not [so much] for believers as unbelievers; whereas the προφητεία, though it is not so much a sign to the unbeliever, yet is especially such to the believer; namely, as being a sign and a confirmation of their faith, and an increase of their knowledge.'

23. The Apostle further evinces the inferiority of tongues, by showing the misconstruction which the use of the gift might occasion to the heathens; so that, unless employed in conjunction with interpretation, it might tend rather to the injury than the benefit of the Gospel.

The ἐὰν οὖν is not conclusive, but transitive, signifying now if, if for example. By πάντες I would not understand, with most Expositors, 'all together, confusè, tumultuariè,' but simply all the persons then present who speak in the exercise of a spiritual gift. Ἰδιῶται should not (with some) be taken as supra v. 16 (for that would be unsuitable to what follows), but in the sense, 'persons not conversant with the Gospel.' So 24 οὐκ ἐροῦσιν ὅτι μαίνεσθε; Ἐὰν δὲ πάντες προφητεύωσιν, εἰσέλθῃ δέ τις ἄπιστος, ἢ ἰδιώτης, ἐλέγχεται ὑπὸ πάντων, 25 ἀνακρίνεται ὑπὸ πάντων· [l] [καὶ οὕτω] τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς [l Zach. 8. 23. Is. 45. 14.]

καρδίας αὐτοῦ φανερὰ γίνεται· καὶ οὕτω πεσὼν ἐπὶ πρόσωπον, προσκυνήσει τῷ Θεῷ, ἀπαγγέλλων ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς ὄντως ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστι.
26 [m] Τί οὖν ἐστιν, ἀδελφοί; ὅταν συνέρχησθε, ἕκαστος ὑμῶν [m Supra 12. 8, 9, 10.]
ψαλμὸν ἔχει, διδαχὴν ἔχει, γλῶσσαν ἔχει, ἀποκάλυψιν ἔχει,

Hesychius explains ἰδιώτας by ἀπείρους, and Theodoret by ἀμυήτους. See my Note on Thucyd. vi. 72, 3. The Apostle, we may suppose, is here designating such heathen (strangers) as might occasionally attend, or be induced to go once or twice, out of curiosity; and this by a tacit allusion to two sorts of such persons: 1. those who were well inclined to the Gospel, but uninstructed in its doctrines; 2. such as were disposed to reject it, and went merely from curiosity, or to catch up something for censure or ridicule. The words following will have no difficulty, whether referred to both, or to either of those classes, as the case may be. The words οὐκ ἐροῦσιν ὅτι μαίνεσθε; ('will they not say you are frantic enthusiasts?') are evidently meant for both. At ver. 24 we have the plural changed into the singular, in order that what has now been said, should be referred to either of the above sorts of persons respectively. Ἐλέγχεται is meant for the ἄπιστος, and signifies, 'he is convicted of error in the notions he had entertained of Christianity, and convinced of his sin in opposing God's true religion; his understanding being convinced, and his conscience awakened.' Ἀνακρίνεται (which is intended chiefly for the ἰδιώτης) seems to mean, 'he is put on his examination in foro conscientiæ, is made to discern aright of his condition, as a poor ignorant sinner needing the salvation of a Saviour.' Ὑπὸ πάντων, 'by all [the preachers],' each saying something that comes home to his conscience. See Calvin and Scott.

25. τὰ κρυπτὰ—γίνεται.] This may mean (as Mr. Scott explains), 'his secret thoughts are divulged (viz. by being, as it were, spoken to (see Heb. iv. 12), his secret objections answered, his secret sins reproved, and the real state of his heart made known to him.' The words καὶ οὕτω before τὰ κρυπτὰ are not found in some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, and are cancelled by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz; but they were more likely to have been thrown out by fastidious Critics to remove a tautology, than to have been introduced, as they must, through mistake, originating in the words καὶ οὕτω just after. That such a mistake should have crept into nearly all the MSS., is very improbable. Besides, the words have great propriety, as serving to mark the effects or results of the former; self-knowledge being the necessary consequence of close self-examination, carried on under the power of an awakened conscience and the teaching of the Spirit; for although the generality of Expositors understand the τὰ κρυπτὰ—φανερὰ γίνεται of the κρυπτὰ being made known to others, yet it would rather seem (as Calvin also considers it) meant of the person himself.

The next words describe the effects of this conviction of sin and true compunction,—namely, humble and hearty prayer to God for forgiveness and acceptance, or furtherance in his grace, and an open acknowledgment of the truth of the religion which had before been rejected: for such is implied in the words ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς ὄντως ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστι: of which the full sense is, 'that God is really and actually with you [as you aver];' q. d. 'that the God of the Christians is the true God, and consequently Christianity the only true religion.'

The Apostle had here doubtless in mind a passage of Is. xlv. 14, 'They shall fall down unto thee (Sept. προσκυνήσουσι), saying, Surely God is in thee.'

26. Now follows the conclusion,—that the value of these χαρίσματα is not to be measured by the nature of the gift, considered in itself, but by the mode and degree in which the advantage of others, as well as the possessor, is promoted.

—τί οὖν;] See Note supra v. 15. In the words following something seems wanting; to supply which, some suppose an ellipse of εἰ,—a rather precarious expedient. Others read the words interrogatively; which is frigid and inefficient. Others, again, reject both the interrogation and the insertion, and render ἕκαστος ἔχει, 'each is ready and eager to supply.' But that is too much straining the sense. There is, in fact, no difficulty, if the words be taken of what is supposed to be done, and εἴτε or ἢ may, with Œcumen., Cameron, and Schliting, be understood, which is expressed in the verse following. Thus the sense of the whole passage will be: 'What, then, is to be done [to avoid these evils, and promote the good in view? why this]. Each [we will suppose], i. e. of the πνευματικοί, hath ready at hand some gift or other: either he hath a psalm, or he hath, &c. [Well, be it so, so that all be done unto edification. Keep that in view.] Let every thing be done unto edification.' What is here meant by edification is by no writer better explained than by Bp. Sanderson, Serm., p. 549, who shows that 'in this and most other passages where the expression is used, we are to understand, especially in the case of brotherly condescension, a yielding somewhat to the infirmities of our brethren, for charity's sake, when we see it expedient so to do for their own or the common good.'

The terms expressing these several gifts are to be explained with reference to what the Apostle has before said concerning them. Ψαλμὸν seems to have reference to the ψαλῶ at ver. 15, and probably denotes an extemporaneous and inspired piece of poetry, adapted either for recitation, or to be sung to some melody. Διδαχὴ seems to denote the instruction of the διδάσκαλοι mentioned at xii. 28, 29. The γλῶσσαν and the ἑρμ. must be explained on the same principle.

ἑρμηνείαν ἔχει· — πάντα πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν γινέσθω. Εἴτε 27 γλώσσῃ τὶς λαλεῖ, κατὰ δύο, ἢ τὸ πλεῖστον τρεῖς, καὶ ἀνὰ μέρος· καὶ εἷς διερμηνευέτω. Ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ᾖ διερμηνευτὴς, 28 σιγάτω ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ· ἑαυτῷ δὲ λαλείτω καὶ τῷ Θεῷ. Προ- 29
φῆται δὲ δύο ἢ τρεῖς λαλείτωσαν, καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι διακρινέτωσαν.
Ἐὰν δὲ ἄλλῳ ἀποκαλυφθῇ καθημένῳ, ὁ πρῶτος σιγάτω· 30 δύνασθε γὰρ καθ' ἕνα πάντες προφητεύειν, ἵνα πάντες 31 μανθάνωσι καὶ πάντες παρακαλῶνται· (καὶ πνεύματα προ- 32

With respect to ἀποκάλυψιν, it may, from the general air of the context, be supposed to be something brought forward by a προφήτης; see Note supra v. 6.

27. The Apostle now gives some special directions, by which the gift of tongues may be exercised to edification. The τις is used (like the French on) to denote several persons, as in 1 Pet. iv. 11, εἴ τις λαλεῖ. Thus in both passages it is equivalent to εἴτε τινὲς λαλοῦσι γλώσσῃ, and in both we may supply λαλείτωσαν from λαλεῖ. Κατὰ δύο ἢ—τρεῖς means 'two or three [only] at each time of meeting.'

28. ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ᾖ διερμ.] 'but if there be no one [present] who has the gift of interpretation' (i. e. neither another nor himself); σιγάτω, scil. ὁ λαλεῖν βουλόμενος. By ἑαυτῷ δὲ λαλείτω is meant, as Chrysostom explains, λαλ. κατὰ διάνοιαν, ἢ ἠρέμα καὶ ἀψοφητί; so implying, 'for his own edification only.' Thus at ver. 4 it is said, ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσῃ ἑαυτὸν οἰκοδομεῖ. Of the phrase λαλεῖν ἑαυτῷ several examples are adduced by Wetstein.

29. προφῆται δὲ δύο ἢ τρεῖς λαλ.] Render, 'Moreover, let two or three prophets [only] speak.' By οἱ ἄλλοι understand the rest of the prophets who are not speaking; namely, all but the one who is speaking at any one time. Of διακρινέτωσαν the sense is, 'let them decide on what is spoken, whether it be dictated by the Spirit of truth or not;' namely, lest false prophets (of whom St. Paul warns them in his second Epistle, written a year after) should creep in. This office was, we may suppose, generally attached to the prophetical one, and was especially exercised by those who possessed the gift of the διάκρισις πνευμάτων, spoken of at xii. 10, where see Note.

30. ἐὰν δὲ ἄλλῳ—σιγάτω.] The sense (which has been debated) seems to be, as the ancient and early modern Commentators in general explain, this: 'If any revelation be made [by the Spirit] to another [prophet], let the first [prophet] have done speaking.' And in this sense σιγ. occurs in Acts xv. 13, and often in the Classical writers, as Polyb. ix. 13. 2. Several eminent modern Commentators, however, stumbling at the idea of any one speaking by the Holy Spirit being silenced, take σιγάτω in the sense 'let him permit the first to come to a conclusion,' or, 'let him wait till the first has done speaking.' But so to strain the plain sense of words is by no means the true mode of removing difficulties. Here that may be done without resorting to such means: not, indeed, by sinking (with many recent Commentators) the supernatural in these gifts; but by supposing, that, in the exercise of this office, the prophets were at times so entirely removed from the operation of their own understanding, or the guidance of their own feelings of prudence or propriety, as to need the suggestions of their brethren the other prophets, and sometimes to require being reminded to come to a conclusion (though we need not suppose an abrupt one), when running into undue prolixity, which, it is plain from the words following, the Apostle had principally in view. Besides, that a person endued with any spiritual gift had the power, as free agent, of using or not using it, and might be controlled by authoritative admonition (without any disparagement of the respect due to the Spirit), is clear from this, that those who possessed the gift of tongues are commanded to be silent when there was no one by to interpret it. It is a just remark of Calvin and Paræus, that whether speaking, or sitting in silence, they were endued, indeed, with the Holy Spirit; but very differently at different times. Besides that general assistance of the Holy Spirit, which they at all times enjoyed, and by which they were enabled to discharge their duty, they were, no doubt, at times sensible of a special illapse of the Holy Spirit; which, being extraordinary, might, in the case of a silent prophet, demand its requisition to be complied with by a speaking one.

The expression καθημένῳ has here great propriety, in allusion to the sitting posture of auditors, as opposed to the standing one of speakers, common both to the Jews and the Gentiles.

31. δύνασθε γὰρ, &c.] The sense is, 'For [thus] ye may all [who are prophets] be enabled to prophesy one after another; so that all may [in their turn] receive or communicate instruction, or admonition.'

32. καὶ πνεύματα προφ. προφ. ὑποτάσσεται.] The Commentators are not agreed on the exact sense contained in these words. Some ancient, and most of the best modern Expositors, regard this verse as asserting the possibility of obeying the foregoing injunctions; q. d. 'The spiritual gifts of the prophets are [not, like the phrenzy of the Heathen priests, beyond their own control, but] subject to the prophets, who may exercise them or not, as occasion may require.' Bp. Middleton, indeed, urges that the propriety of the Article would require τοῖς προφήταις; and he adopts the interpretation of Schulz, Rosenmuller, and Schleusner: 'They who are divinely inspired are bound, at proper seasons, to give place to others who have been gifted with the same inspiration.' This interpretation, however, involves no little harshness; it being thus necessary to take πνεύματα προφητῶν for προφ., and to supply τοῖς ἄλλοις. As to the objection urged by the learned prelate, with respect to the absence of the Article τοῖς, it has no force;

33 φητῶν προφήταις ὑποτάσσεται· [n] οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἀκαταστασίας n Supra 11. 16.
ὁ Θεὸς, ἀλλ' εἰρήνης· ὡς ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῶν 34 ἁγίων. [o] Αἱ γυναῖκες ὑμῶν ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις σιγάτωσαν· o 1 Tim. 2. 11, 12.
οὐ γὰρ ἐπιτέτραπται αὐταῖς λαλεῖν, ἀλλ' ὑποτάσσεσθαι, καθὼς Col. 3. 18. 1 Pet. 3. 1. Gen. 3. 16.
35 καὶ ὁ νόμος λέγει. Εἰ δέ τι μαθεῖν θέλουσιν, ἐν οἴκῳ τοὺς ἰδίους ἄνδρας ἐπερωτάτωσαν· αἰσχρὸν γάρ ἐστι γυναιξὶν ἐν 36 ἐκκλησίᾳ λαλεῖν. Ἢ ἀφ' ὑμῶν ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐξῆλθεν; 37 ἢ εἰς ὑμᾶς μόνους κατήντησεν; [p] Εἴ τις δοκεῖ προφήτης p 2 Cor. 10. 7. 1 John 4. 6.

since, as both the nouns προφητῶν and προφήταις are without the Article, it cannot be necessary to the latter, especially as what is said may be supposed to be expressed gnomicè. Moreover, the connexion, as regards what precedes (ὁ πρῶτος σιγάτω), is quite in favour of the first-mentioned interpretation. And as regards what follows, no connexion is necessary, the words of ver. 32 being parenthetical; and the γὰρ which commences at ver. 33 has reference (as R. Stephens appears to have considered it) to the injunction and the reason for it at vv. 30, 31; q. d. 'Let this injunction be observed, for it is the ordinance of that Being who is the Author not of confusion, but of peace and order.' They were meant, I conceive, to anticipate an objection; q. d. 'How can it be proper for any prophet to be thus silenced?' or 'how should he be able to control the suggestions of the Spirit?' To which the answer is, that the exercise or non-exercise of their spiritual gifts was at their own discretion (for such, the best Expositors are agreed, must be the sense of πνεύμ.; namely, spiritual gifts); whence it followed, that whatever impropriety, or evil, arose from the undue exercise of the gift must be imputed not to the Spirit, but to the Prophet himself, whose duty it would therefore be to rein in his impetuosity, and yield to another, before he had finished all that he intended to say.

33. ἀκαταστασίας.] On the proper sense of the word see Luke xxi. 9. It here denotes tumult and confusion, as being opposed to εἰρήνη, quietness, and order (τάξις) at ver. 40.

The words ὡς ἐν πάσαις—ἁγίων may be rendered, 'as is the case in all other congregations of Christians.' There is no reason, with many eminent Editors and Expositors from Bp. Pearce downwards, to connect these words with the words following: for thus the gravity and authority of the Apostle's injunction will be injured, and a great irregularity supposed,—namely, that of introducing an inferior reason first in the sentence. And what example is there of a sentence thus commencing with ὡς? This seems to have been an expedient resorted to from the connexion between these words and the preceding ones being not very obvious. But why should we not consider this (like very many others in St. Paul's Epistles) as a briefly-worded clause, standing in the place of a complete sentence, introduced by an illative particle? Such is evidently the view adopted by Calvin, who rightly makes it refer to all that has been before said on the observance of order and the cultivation of peace,—expressing the sense thus: 'Nihil vobis hactenus præcepi, quod non observatur in omnibus Ecclesiis; atque ita continentur in pace.' And so Hyperius says, we have here urged a common reason for the observance of the foregoing rules; and that deduced, 1. from the will of God; 2. from the example of the other churches of the Christian world.

34. ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλ. σιγάτωσαν· οὐ γὰρ, &c.] This injunction (which, it is almost universally admitted, implies a total prohibition to women to speak at all in the congregation) seems to be contradictory to that at xi. 5. To reconcile which with the former, many Commentators suppose that the Apostle here refers to voluntary discourse, though even spoken with the ordinary aid of the Holy Spirit; but in chap. xi. to praying and prophesying under the extraordinary influence of the Spirit. According to this, the women were to keep silence; i. e. to refrain from speaking in public in the churches, except when they were influenced by an extraordinary inspiration. But to that sense Whitby and Macknight urge serious objections; and they maintain, that the Apostle at chap. xi. only intended to say how the women should speak if they spoke at all, but here means absolutely to forbid it. Both solutions of the difficulty, however, are open to objections, and there seems to be no safe mode of removing them, but by supposing the προφ. there to mean some such inferior sort of the προφητεία, (perhaps expounding Scripture,) as should not, by its exercise in public, contravene the order in this passage.

35. εἰ δέ τι μαθεῖν, &c.] This is meant to exclude the pretence of speaking for the purpose of interrogation to seek instruction; which, as it would produce disorder, is forbidden.

36. The Apostle fortifies the injunctions contained in this and the two preceding chapters, (but chiefly those in the foregoing verses, especially ver. 33, which refers to the example of other churches) by adverting to a fact,—namely, that the Corinthians had no priority of conversion to plead, or any superiority over other Churches, which might give them a privilege to deviate from the general practice; as if theirs were the mother Church, or the only Church. There is an allusion to Isaiah ii. 3. The implied inference is, 'You must therefore submit to the custom of the generality.' Now the mention of these irregularities naturally brought to the Apostle's mind the authors and abettors of them,—certain persons who pretended to be endued with the Gift of Prophecy, and other spiritual Gifts.

37. Δοκεῖ is not well rendered in our common Version, 'seemeth to himself;' and still worse by Macknight, 'is sure;' a sense which the word no where bears. Rather, 'is accounted, is reputed' (as iii. 18, εἴ τις δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι): meaning, if any one be really a prophet. Πνευματικὸς, εἶναι ἢ πνευματικὸς, ἐπιγινωσκέτω ἃ γράφω ὑμῖν, ὅτι [τοῦ] q 1 Thess. 5. 20. Κυρίου εἰσὶν ἐντολαί· εἰ δέ τις ἀγνοεῖ, ἀγνοείτω. [q] Ὥστε, 38, 39 ἀδελφοὶ, ζηλοῦτε τὸ προφητεύειν, καὶ τὸ λαλεῖν γλώσσαις μὴ κωλύετε. Πάντα εὐσχημόνως καὶ κατὰ τάξιν γινέσθω. 40 a Gal. 1. 11, 12. Rom. 5. 1 XV. [a] ΓΝΩΡΙΖΩ δὲ ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοὶ, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ὃ 1 for πνευματόφορος used in Hosea ix. 7, to express איש הרוח, implying the possession of the extraordinary influence of the Holy Spirit. In the words ἐπιγινωσκέτω—ἐντολαὶ there is a frequent Hellenism; and we may render, 'let him understand or know that what I write unto you (i. e. my injunctions) are commands of the Lord;' just as what comes from an Ambassador may be said to come from his Sovereign. The τοῦ before Κυρίου—not found in many of the best MSS. and some Fathers, and not found in the earliest Editions,—is cancelled by Matthæi, Griesbach, Krause, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz, and is probably an interpolation.

38. ἀγνοεῖ] i. e. professes ignorance, or, as it seems, from the antithesis, to mean, 'is not disposed to acknowledge them as such.' Ἀγνοείτω, i. e., by a popular idiom (being an example of the permissive Imperative), 'per me licet, let him do so, suo periculo, I have no more to say to him.' Comp. xi. 16.

39, 40. Here the Apostle recapitulates the main points of the foregoing arguments, summing them up in one comprehensive precept.

— μὴ κωλύετε.] Meaning, 'be no hindrance to, discountenance not.' Εὐσχημόνως καὶ κατὰ τάξιν, 'in a decorous and orderly manner.' Εὐσχ. refers to the breaches of Ecclesiastical decorum before adverted to; and κατὰ τάξιν to the violation of order and subordination in the ministrations of the Church, with allusion to which the Apostle enjoined Christians (Eph. v. 21) ὑποτάσσεσθαι ἀλλήλοις ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ. Comp. also Coloss. ii. 5, βλέπων ὑμῶν τὴν τάξιν. In short, from the various passages of the Classical writers which I have adduced in Recens. Synop. it is plain that τάξις was applied to discipline and subordination, both political and religious.

XV. After repressing breaches of decorum, order, and discipline, the Apostle now proceeds to stop the progress of heresy; and especially on that vital doctrine of the Gospel, the RESURRECTION. The Corinthians were, it is plain, tinctured both with the Sadducæan spirit of Jewish scepticism, and corrupted with the philosophical dogmas of the Grecians; each alike subversive of, or discouraging, all expectation of a resurrection; at least in the sense in which it is here meant by St. Paul, namely, a resurrection of both soul and body in a future state. There were, it would seem, not a few, both of the Jewish and Gentile Christians at Corinth, who entertained notions (founded on the dogmas they had held before their conversion) adverse to, at least, a resurrection of the body, and who had, in fact, brought with them their old tenets into the Christian Church, and had hence corrupted its doctrines. Now the Sadducees, and also the Epicureans and Stoics, rejected alike the resurrection of the body and the soul; while the Essenes, the Professors of the Oriental philosophy, and the Platonists in general agreed in rejecting a resurrection of the body; while all three admitted a resurrection of the soul, at least in words, though there is great reason to think that the Philosophers of that age denied even the resurrection of the soul, at least in their esoteric doctrines. At all events, the various sects of Gentile Philosophers all agreed in rejecting a resurrection of the body. Hence the ill reception which St. Paul met with at Athens from his avowal of this doctrine. It appears, then, that the Corinthian heretics were of two kinds, corresponding to the above two classes; 1. those who rejected a resurrection both of the body and soul; 2. those who disbelieved a resurrection of the body, but admitted one of the soul. The persons of this class, however (namely, the Essenes and the Platonists), rejected a resurrection of the body on different grounds. The latter, taking for granted the absolute physical identity of the raised body with the mortal body before existing, denied the possibility of the thing; the former, taking for granted the moral identity, i. e. the being equally frail and corrupt, thought that if it were possible, it would be most undesirable, and the thing not to be reconciled with the wisdom and benevolence of the Deity. As to the former class, those who had been Sadducees or Epicureans, and still clung to the same notion, they endeavoured to justify this departure from what had been revealed by Christ, by taking (as the heathen Philosophers, of the Platonic school especially, often did) the term ἀνάστασις in a metaphorical and allegorical sense, to designate a bidding adieu to ignorance and vice, and embracing light and truth, and the practical approving of this regeneration by a reformed life. Thus the ἀνάστασις they professed was nearly equivalent to the Stoical ἀναγέννησις, or παλιγγενεσία. Hence they might well maintain (as did Hymenæus and Philetus), that the resurrection (i. e. of the just), if such was its nature, was already past. The Sadducæan notion had been plainly borrowed from the Gentile Philosophers, with whose writings the Jews became conversant soon after their return from the Babylonian captivity; and when the necessity of preserving their liberty against the attacks of the neighbouring monarchs of Syria, Persia, and Egypt, compelled them to form connexions with the Gentile nations of the West, especially the Greeks and Romans. But besides the *un*believers, and the half-believers, in the doctrine of the resurrection, there was a third class, composed of those who might be called weak believers,—inasmuch as, though admitting the doctrine of a resurrection of the body as well as soul, yet they felt doubts and scruples as to the time when, and the manner in which, it would take place; and also whether those found alive at the general resurrection would have need to die, or be received into the company of the raised saints and angels without any such change.

Now to the above three classes of persons, the Apostle, I apprehend, is here addressing himself;

εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν· ὃ καὶ παρελάβετε, ἐν ᾧ καὶ ἑστή-2 κατε, [b] δι' οὗ καὶ σώζεσθε· (τίνι λόγῳ εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν, b Rom. 1. 16. supra 1. 21. Gal. 3. 4.

and he does, I conceive, in the natural order; i.e. of unbelievers, half (or mis)-believers, and doubting believers as to the doctrine of the resurrection; the first, it should seem, vv. 1—34; the second, vv. 35—50; the third, vv. 51—57. V. 58 contains the inference to be drawn from what has been before said, and contains an earnest exhortation. To advert to particulars; the errors or doubts of the several classes are encountered and corrected by the discussion of the two following questions: I. Whether there will be a resurrection of the dead? This is proved, 1. from Scripture, vv. 1—4; 2. from the testimony of eye-witnesses of Christ's resurrection, vv. 5—12. For the connexion of the truth of Christ's resurrection from the dead with that of the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, was of the closest nature; so that what proved one, must prove the other; and the possibility of such a resurrection being once shown, all arguments on the score of the impossibility of the thing would be completely demolished; II. he argues the same question ex absurdo,—i.e. by showing the absurdity of the contrary doctrine: thus; 1. If the dead rise not, Christ is not risen (ver. 13); 2. it would be absurd to have faith in him, according to the preaching of the Gospel, if He be not risen; 3. the Apostles, who attest his resurrection, must be false witnesses; 4. the faith of the Corinthians, who believe it, must be vain; 5. all the believers, who have died in the faith of Christ, have perished if Christ be not risen; 6. believers in Christ are in a more miserable state than any others, if there be no resurrection; 7. those who are baptized in the faith, that Christ died for them, and rose again, are deceived; 8. the Apostles, and Christians in general who suffer persecution on the ground that after they had suffered awhile here they shall have a glorious resurrection, are acting a foolish and unprofitable part (vv. 30—35). Now here it may be proper to observe, that there seems great reason to suppose (with Cocceius and Gerdes.) that by ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν the Apostle, in his arguments for the resurrection of the soul (especially when he argues ex absurdo), means, in a general sense, not merely a resurrection of the body, but also the transition of the soul to a state of bliss in heaven. For (as Cocceius and Gerdes. show) the Apostle's arguments at vv. 19—35 would be inconclusive, as based on a sophism technically called fallacis consequentis, unless those, whom he is here immediately encountering, denied the resurrection of the soul as well as the body; i.e. the doctrine of a future state in general, as did the Sadducees and Epicuræans. And consequently ἀνάστ. must be taken as at Matt. xxii. 31. Assuredly the strong expression ἀπολέσθαι and others would lose their force; since the reply would have been at hand, that 'the soul might live apart from the body; that thus our better part might ἐνδημῆσαι πρὸς τὸν Κύριον, and consequently our hope would not be utterly cut off, though the particles of flesh should not be restored to life; and accordingly there would still remain that anchor of hope for the faithful, that of preserving the soul in the blissful communion of Christ, and in the fruition of God himself.' Again, how would it follow, from there being no resurrection of the body only that there would be no such thing as virtue, piety, or faith, since those might nevertheless profit the soul? So that supposing an immortality of the soul only, it would still be the true interest of man to mortify carnal lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. Whereas the contrary doctrine, which denied the immortality of the soul, cut at the root of all virtue, and was calculated to engender immorality of every kind. We are (as Gerdes. well suggests) carefully to distinguish between the persons here had in view. The persons whom the Apostle addresses, informs, warns, and exhorts, are different from those against whose heresy and arts of persuasion he cautions them. The latter he no where directly attacks, but confines himself to addressing the former. Otherwise, indeed, his arguments would have been invalid (as addressed to Sadducæan Jews or Atheistical Gentiles); whereas they have their full force, as addressed to persons who acknowledged certain principles on which the Apostle argues. Hence what is said of the resurrection, is meant of the resurrection of Christians, and of the just and pious, not of the wicked (though the Apostle recognises both at Acts xxiv. 15); their resurrection (which, as it appears, will be after that of the just) being, in some measure, implied in the former, as in the case of the immortality of the soul, in regard to the resurrection of the body; especially since (as Gerdes. observes) 'qui distribuenda Deo supremo terrarum orbis Judaici præmia asserit, distribuendas quoque pœnas negare nullo modo possit.'

To pass on to the two other general heads, the Apostle at 35—49, or 50, with reference to the second class above mentioned (namely, those who disbelieved, or at least doubted of the resurrection of the body, but held a resurrection of the soul), shows that the resurrection in question will be a resurrection of the body as well as soul, and informs us what will be the nature of the bodies thus raised, and in what manner the whole will be accomplished. Again, at ver. 49, or 50—57 inclusive, he adverts to the third class, and shows the time and manner of the resurrection, and what will become of those who are found alive at that period. Finally, he concludes with a most solemn and impressive exhortation, as to the use to be made of the doctrine he is now communicating.

1, 2. The difficulty in these verses has been partly occasioned by the uncommonness of the construction, and partly by the somewhat rare senses in which the terms γνωρίζω and λόγῳ are used. As to the former, there need be no doubt that it is, according to a common Grecism, for γνωρίζω τίνι λόγῳ εὐηγγελισάμην τὸ εὐαγγέλιον: compare Gal. i. 11. Here γνωρίζειν must, from the context, mean πάλιν γνωρ. or ἀναγνωρ., with reference to the re-communication of knowledge by calling it to remembrance. For the Apostle does not mean to say that they need to be taught the doctrine, but only to be reminded of it, and kept firm in the belief of it; see Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Œcumen., and compare a very similar passage in 2 Pet. i. 12. By εὐαγγέλιον c Isa. 53. 5. Dan. 9. 24. Zach. 13. 7. 1 Pet. 2. 24. d Ps. 16. 10. Isa. 53. 9. Hos. 6. 2. Matt. 12. 40. e Luke 24. 34. Mark 16. 14. Acts 10. 41. f Acts 9. 3, 17. & 23. 11. supra 9. 1.

εἰ κατέχετε·) ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ εἰκῇ ἐπιστεύσατε. [c] Παρέδωκα 3 γὰρ ὑμῖν ἐν πρώτοις, ὃ καὶ παρέλαβον, ὅτι Χριστὸς ἀπέθανεν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, κατὰ τὰς γραφάς· [d] καὶ 4 ὅτι ἐτάφη, καὶ ὅτι ἐγήγερται τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ, κατὰ τὰς γραφάς· [e] καὶ ὅτι ὤφθη Κηφᾷ, εἶτα τοῖς δώδεκα· ἔπειτα 5, 6 ὤφθη ἐπάνω πεντακοσίοις ἀδελφοῖς ἐφάπαξ· ἐξ ὧν οἱ πλείους μένουσιν ἕως ἄρτι, τινὲς δὲ καὶ ἐκοιμήθησαν· ἔπειτα 7 ὤφθη Ἰακώβῳ, εἶτα τοῖς ἀποστόλοις πᾶσιν. [f] ἔσχατον δὲ 8 understand the doctrines of the Gospel, especially those of the incarnation and resurrection of Christ, and the like resurrection and redemption of the righteous; see Rom. viii. 11. In ἑστήκατε (which means 'ye have persevered and do persevere') there is either an agonistic metaphor (see Eph. vi. 13), or an architectural one, like ἑδραῖοι γίνεσθε at ver. 58, where see Note. On the force of λόγῳ no little difference of opinion exists. Of the various senses assigned, Heydenreich prefers that of method, or way; a signification, however, not sufficiently established. It would seem that there is an ellipsis of ἐπὶ, and that λόγῳ is (as Theodoret supposes) for σκόπῳ, 'ground, purpose, purport, subject, or object,'—with reference to the doctrine of the incarnation and resurrection of Jesus.

In δι' οὗ σώζεσθε we have, as Hyperius remarks, an argument for receiving the Gospel, deduced from its effect, namely, in promoting their salvation. Σώζεσθε is by Whitby explained, 'are brought into a state of salvation.' The expression, however, rather denotes the blessings of salvation by the Gospel, both in this world and the next; importing, as Gerdesius says, at once regeneration, justification, and sanctification, together with the hope by which believers are saved, and glorification, 'the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls.'

— εἰ κατέχετε, &c.] Meaning (as Dobree well expresses) 'as you will perceive, if you have not forgotten my words; unless, indeed, you,' &c. Εἰκῇ ἐπιστ. is for κενὴ ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν. These two exceptions, εἰ κατέχετε and ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ εἰκῇ ἐπιστεύσατε, Calvin observes, have much point: the Apostle meaning thereby (as Hyperius says) to make them at once attentive and docile. They must have believed in vain if they have not truly believed; if they have been careless, they must have heard the Gospel without profit.

3, 4. It is now more fully indicated what that Gospel was which the Apostle had preached to the Corinthians. (Heydenreich.) The Apostle now particularises what he had taught the Corinthians concerning the resurrection of Christ; accordingly reminding them that he had first taught that Christ had risen from the dead, and then had confirmed the truth of the thing by so many and such certain arguments, that to the sincere inquirer there could be left no room for doubt. (Stenersen.)

— ἐν πρώτοις] i. e. among the principal, fundamental truths of the Gospel. Ὃ καὶ παρέλαβον. This is, Hyperius observes, said by way of commendation and confirmation of his doctrine, that he did not invent it, but had simply delivered what he had received from God. See Gal. i. 12, and especially supra xi. 23, ἐγὼ παρέλαβον ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου ὃ καὶ παρέδωκα ὑμῖν.

— ἀπέθανεν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμ.] The ὑπὲρ is not, as some consider it, for περὶ, but should be rendered on account of, for the expiation of; with allusion to the atonement made for us by Christ suffering in our stead. See Rom. iv. 25.

— τὰς γραφάς.] Meaning (notwithstanding what certain recent Commentators allege) such parts of the Scriptures of the Old Testament as have reference to the sufferings, death, and resurrection of Christ; namely, not only the prophecies of the Messiah, but also the sacrifices, and, in general, the ritual and typical ordinances which prefigured the great Sacrifice. See especially Is. liii. 4, seqq.

— καὶ ὅτι ἐτάφη.] Christ's burial is mentioned, as proving his death, just as the appearing to Cephas and the 500 brethren attested his resurrection.

5. τοῖς δώδεκα.] There were then but eleven. But the Apostles were so called, by a figure common to all languages, whereby any body of persons who act as colleagues are called by the number of which the body is properly composed, though it may not be complete at the time.

6. ἐπάνω.] Supply ἤ. This very peculiar use of ἐπάνω for πλεῖον occurs also in Mark xiv. 5, but with a Genitive. Perhaps, however, ἐπάνω has properly no regimen, but is used parenthetically, like the Latin plus trecentos, 300 and more. On the nature of this evidence, see Doddridge, and also an elaborate Dissertation of G. Olearius de resurrectione Christi, appended to his Obs. Sac., p. 750.

7. This is by Expositors generally supposed to be a transaction (like that in the next verse) not recorded in the Gospels. This principle, however, should not be resorted to unnecessarily; and to suppose the appearance to be the same with that in Galilee, according to the promise in Matt. xxvi. 32, is founded on weak grounds. It is far better to suppose (with Paræus and Gerdes.) that there is an allusion to the last appearance of Christ to his Apostles and disciples generally, recorded at Matt. xxviii. 16. As to the particles εἶτα and ἔπειτα, they must not be rigidly interpreted, as if the appearances are referred to in exact chronological order, but merely taken for porro; for I entirely agree with Bp. Warburton, in his Sermon on ver. 17 of this Chapter, that 'the Apostle here does not mean to enter into particulars, but introduces his cloud of witnesses, with becoming dignity, in the gross.' Certainly the words cannot be referred (as Heydenreich would suppose) to the ascension of our Lord; for that would require, not ἀποστόλοις, but ἀδελφοῖς.

8. ὡσπερεὶ τῷ ἐκτρώματι — ἐμοί.] There are two points connected with this passage on which Commentators are divided in opinion: 1.

9 πάντων, ὡσπερεὶ [τῷ] ἐκτρώματι, ὤφθη κἀμοί. [g] ἐγὼ γάρ g Eph. 3. 7, 8.
εἰμι ὁ ἐλάχιστος τῶν ἀποστόλων· ὃς οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανὸς καλεῖ- Acts 8. 3. Gal. 1. 13.
σθαι ἀπόστολος, διότι ἐδίωξα τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ· 10 [h] χάριτι δὲ Θεοῦ εἰμὶ ὅ εἰμι. Καὶ ἡ χάρις αὐτοῦ ἡ εἰς ἐμὲ οὐ h Rom. 1. 5. & 15. 18. 2 Cor. 11. 23.
κενὴ ἐγενήθη· ἀλλὰ περισσότερον αὐτῶν πάντων ἐκοπίασα· & 12. 11. 2 Cor. 3. 5, 6 11 —οὐκ ἐγὼ δὲ, ἀλλ᾽ ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σὺν ἐμοί. Εἴτε οὖν Gal. 2. 8. Col. 1. 29.
ἐγὼ, εἴτε ἐκεῖνοι, οὕτω κηρύσσομεν, καὶ οὕτως ἐπιστεύσατε.
12 Εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς κηρύσσεται, ὅτι ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγήγερται, πῶς on the sense, and the nature of the metaphor ἐκτρώματι; 2. on the force of the Article. As to the former, ἔκτρωμα (not a pure Attic word, though found occasionally in good authors, as Hippocrates, Aristotle, Plato, and Aristides) has always elsewhere the sense which Hesychius ascribes to it, ἐκβολὴ γυναικὸς, an abortion. With respect to the latter, many eminent Commentators suppose an allusion to the name given (as Sueton. Aug. c. 35, tells us) by the Romans to supernumerary senators, viz. abortivi. To this, however, it is objected by Bp. Middleton, that thus the comparison would not hold good, since an abortion is brought forth dead, and the Apostle was living, both naturally and spiritually. He would therefore take the word to mean a last-born child; with reference to the common notion of the last-born being the smallest and weakest of the progeny. But for this sense there is no authority; and, indeed, it would involve a most harsh catachresis. We may rather, I conceive, (with Hyperius, Crellius, Schliting, Newcome, and Wahl,) recur to another sense of ἔκτρωμα, which has not, perhaps, been preserved in any author; but which, no doubt, existed, and is preserved in Hesych. and the Glossaria,—namely, ἄωρον γέννημα, a child born before the due time. So the Latin abortivus, though it generally means an abortion, yet in Horat. Sat. i. 3. 46, 'ut abortivus fuit olim Sisyphus' has this very sense. Now such infants are invariably weak and feeble, scarcely deserving the name of children; which is, I conceive, what the Apostle means to say of himself,—calling himself so, as being an Apostle not formed and matured by previous preparation and instruction, but suddenly called to the office by an instantaneous conversion, as the abortivus is suddenly and prematurely cast from the womb, and brought into the world. It is proper, however, to advert to the force of the Article here; though it does not, I think, afford any ground whereon to determine the exact sense intended by the Apostle. According to the first and third of the foregoing interpretations, the Article seems to have no force; unless we suppose, with Bp. Middleton, that it is meant to apply the term particularly to the Apostle. So Luke xviii. 13, ἐμοὶ τῷ ἁμαρτωλῷ. If this be thought unsatisfactory, we may suppose, with Dobree, that the τῷ (which is not found in a few MSS.) came from the margin. Indeed it seems not to have been read by Ignatius, who, in his Epistle to the Romans, similarly calls himself the 'last of the Preachers,' καὶ ἔκτρωμα. Yet it is defended by a similar passage (imitated from the present) of Simeon Stylites in an Epistle to Basil: ἐγὼ (says he) ὁ ταπεινὸς, καὶ εὐτελής· τὸ ἔκτρωμα τῶν μονάχων. To read τῳ (for τινι) with many recent Critics, would introduce an Atticism, such as is no where found in the New Test. nor in the Sept.; nor, indeed, in any Hellenistic writer.

Whichever of the above senses be adopted, it is plain that the Apostle applies the expression from deep humility; the particle ὡσπερεὶ, with which he introduces it, being meant to soften the harshness of the expression, not that of the thing.

10. χάριτι δὲ Θεοῦ εἰμὶ ὅ εἰμι] scil. ἀπόστολος. While, however, thus ascribing whatever he is, or has effected, to the grace of God, (i. e. his gracious aid,) yet, by way of asserting himself to the Church at Corinth, he then adverts to his labours, as greater than those of all the other Apostles, i. e. taken singly, not collectively. Of these see the detail in Gerdes., p. 114, sq. His humility, however, is evinced by his introducing this notice in words implying that they were done by Divine aid,—an aid, he says, which was not fruitless; meaning, by meiosis, was productive of great profit. This is even yet more apparent in the words added, per correctionem, οὐκ ἐγὼ δὲ, ἀλλ᾽ ἡ χάρις, &c., 'It was not I that was the doer, but the grace of God aiding me.' Where, however, we are not to suppose that he represents himself as a mere machine, and God as the only doer. 'He ascribes (as Bp. Beveridge observes) the glory of all he did to the grace of God; yet nevertheless he was the person that did it by that grace.' That the words are by no means subversive of free-will in man, is acknowledged even by St. Augustine, de Gratiâ et libero arbitrio, ch. iii., 'Non ego autem, i. e. non solus, sed gratia Dei mecum. Ac per hoc nec gratia Dei sola, nec ipse solus, sed gratia Dei cum illo.' In short, we have the very doctrine inculcated in Phil. ii. 13, 14, where see Note.

11. Having enumerated singly the effects and testimonies of Christ's resurrection, the Apostle now sums them up in one brief saying, of which the full purport is, 'Whether it be I or they [who] laboured most, [it matters not;] this doctrine [the death and resurrection of Christ] we all preached, and ye professed your belief of it. And having thus attested your full credence, how can ye, consistently, call in question the other doctrine, so closely connected with it, that of the resurrection of man from the dead?'

12. The Apostle now comes more closely home to the point in dispute, and shows the falsity of the conclusion deduced by the false teachers, that there is no resurrection.

— εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς κηρύσσεται, &c.] for εἰ δὲ κηρύσσεται ὅτι Χριστὸς ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγ. Meaning, 'But if it be the doctrine promulgated by us all, that Christ was raised from the dead, how say some,' &c. We have here an argumentum ex absurdo, by a conclusion from the foregoing λέγουσί τινες ἐν ὑμῖν, ὅτι ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστιν; Εἰ 13

δὲ ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστιν, οὐδὲ Χριστὸς ἐγήγερται· εἰ 14
δὲ Χριστὸς οὐκ ἐγήγερται, κενὸν ἄρα τὸ κήρυγμα ἡμῶν, i Acts 2. 24, 32. & 4. 2. κενὴ δὲ καὶ ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν. [i] Εὑρισκόμεθα δὲ καὶ ψευδομάρ- 15
τυρες τοῦ Θεοῦ· ὅτι ἐμαρτυρήσαμεν κατὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅτι ἤγειρε τὸν Χριστόν· ὃν οὐκ ἤγειρεν, εἴπερ ἄρα νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται. Εἰ γὰρ νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται, οὐδὲ Χριστὸς 16 k Acts 5. 31. Rom. 4. 25. ἐγήγερται· [k] εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς οὐκ ἐγήγερται, ματαία ἡ πίστις 17 ὑμῶν· ἔτι ἐστὲ ἐν ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ὑμῶν· ἄρα καὶ οἱ κοι- 18
l 2 Tim. 3. 12. μηθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ ἀπώλοντο. [l] Εἰ ἐν τῇ ζωῇ ταύτῃ ἠλπι- 19 premises; q. d. 'Now Christ really and actually rose from the dead, as has been evinced on irrefragable evidence. How, then, can any deny the possibility of a resurrection? For what has once been, may again be; and, è contrario, v. 13, if a resurrection of the dead were to be supposed to be a vain imagination, not deserving of our belief, our faith in the resurrection of Christ would be destroyed.' In short, the argument is: 'If, as has been proved, Christ rose from the dead, then the resurrection of the dead is not only possible, but actual; for the general proposition, that there is no resurrection, is included in the particular one, that Christ is not risen; i. e. the resurrection of others could only need a continuation of that same exertion of omnipotence which raised Him.

In the words πῶς λέγουσί τινες there is involved a tacit rebuke, not only of the false teachers, but their credulous hearers and warm partisans. Finally, ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστιν is a popular phrase for οὐκ ἀνάστανται οἱ νεκροί.

14. Here we have another argumentum ex absurdo.

— εἰ] 'supposing that.' Κενὸν is by the ancient and earlier modern, and also some recent Expositors, explained useless, as not attaining the desired end. Most Expositors, however, from the time of Grotius and Macknight, assign to it the sense 'false and unfounded.' The former interpretation seems preferable; but both may be included, the latter as dependent on the former. The sense may be thus expressed: 'If Christ had not risen, our testimony of his resurrection to life and glory would have been false, and an imposture (see ver. 25), and without any benefit to ourselves; and your persuasion of the truth of our report would produce no good to yourselves.'

15. Here we have (as Hyperius observes) a proof of the former argument ab absurdo, as to their preaching being vain; for such it would be, if they brought forward falsehood for truth, and especially falsehood of God, the words τοῦ Θεοῦ being emphatic.

15. εὑρισκόμεθα δὲ καὶ ψευδ.] Render, 'Yea, we should [thus] also be made out to be false witnesses concerning God.' Κατὰ is by the best Interpreters explained concerning; a signification of the word very rare, but which the Apostle chose to employ, probably as wishing to include the sense to the prejudice of, which falsification would occasion; inasmuch as it would almost imply a want of power in God to raise the dead; for the Gentile Philosophers denied it. So Pliny, Hist. Nat. l. ii. c. 7, 'Revocare defunctos ne Deus quidem potest.'

16, 17. Here we have (as Gerdesius shows) not a mere repetition of the arguments at vv. 13, 14, but something to serve for further illustration; and the conclusion at ver. 17 completes the proof of the resurrection. For (to use the words of Heydenreich) 'πίστις does not here, as before, denote assent to the testimony of the Apostles concerning the resurrection of Christ, but that faith which the Corinthians had accorded to the whole Christian doctrine; or (if it be thought better to understand τὴν πίστιν objectively) the doctrine itself of the Gospel, which would be without any solid foundation, would be of doubtful and ambiguous faith; nay, would be liable to strong suspicion, were the resurrection of Christ taken away, in which we have the plainest demonstration of Gospel truth, and the most certain confirmation of its divine origin.' 'The Apostle (continues Heydenreich) addresses them by an interchange of persons, speaking first in the second, then in the third, and lastly in the first, per κοίνωσιν.' At ver. 17 he points out a new absurdity arising from the denial of Christ's resurrection,—that they would be under the penalty of unforgiven sin, which is inconsistent with the very elements of the Christian system; q. d. 'Ye are yet liable to the guilt and penalty of your sins [notwithstanding you may have repented of them];' evidently referring to the atonement of Christ: 'for if Christ be not raised, he has made no atonement for sin.' This, as Mr. Scott observes, shows that St. Paul and the primitive church regarded the doctrine of the real atonement of Christ's death as essential to Christianity. Here it is proper to bear in mind, that only the possibility of a resurrection of the dead is what is sought hence to be established, not the fact of an actual resurrection. The truth of that is, as Heydenreich observes, proved in the subsequent verses, by the especial argument, that, according to the Divine decree, all things which had perished by Adam are to be restored by Christ.

18. ἄρα καὶ—ἀπώλοντο.] Here is pointed out another fatal consequence of the denial of the resurrection; q. d. 'It follows, also, that those who have died in [the faith of] Christ (οἱ νεκροὶ ἐν Χριστῷ, Rev. xiv. 13) are perished:' there is an end of them and all their hopes; all their labour, toil, and suffering for Christ's sake are thrown away and perish; they are disappointed of their hope of salvation, and are no better, in a worldly view, than if they had not encountered them.

19. Here (as Crellius and Calvin remark) there κότες ἐσμὲν ἐν Χριστῷ μόνον, ἐλεεινότεροι πάντων ἀνθρώπων 20 ἐσμέν. [m] Νυνὶ δὲ Χριστὸς ἐγήγερται ἐκ νεκρῶν· ἀπαρχὴ

21 τῶν κεκοιμημένων [ἐγένετο]. [n] Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ δι' ἀνθρώπου 22 ὁ θάνατος, καὶ δι' ἀνθρώπου ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν. ὥσπερ γὰρ ἐν τῷ Ἀδὰμ πάντες ἀποθνήσκουσιν, οὕτω καὶ ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ 23 πάντες ζωοποιηθήσονται. [o] Ἕκαστος δὲ ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ τάγματι· ἀπαρχὴ Χριστὸς, ἔπειτα οἱ τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ αὐτοῦ.

m Acts 26. 23. infra v. 23. Col. 1. 18. Rev. 1. 5.
n Gen. 2. 17. & 3. 6. Rom. 5. 12, 18. John 11. 25.
o Supra v. 20. 1 Thess. 4. 15, 16, 17.

is an answer to a tacit objection,—namely, that the Apostles know there will be no resurrection, but preach the doctrine for present advantage. Now this is shown to involve an absurdity; because, by preaching the doctrine in question, they expose themselves to present evil of every kind; and if there is to be no resurrection of the dead, there will be no future state in which they could enjoy any reward. Thus they would act as they do without any motive.

— εἰ ἐν τῇ ζωῇ ταύτῃ, &c.] The μόνον must be construed after ζωῇ. By we is especially meant the Apostles and preachers of the word, though it may be extended to all Christians in that age of persecution. Ἐλεεινότεροι πάντων, 'we are of all men the most to be pitied.' In what respects they would be such, see Calvin, Gerdesius, Abp. Secker, Doddridge, and Heydenreich.

It is well pointed out by Hyperius, that the foregoing arguments ex absurdo, when collected together, form a sorites thus: 'If there is no resurrection of the dead, then neither has Christ risen: so then our preaching is vain, and we are false witnesses. If our preaching is vain, then your faith is vain. If your faith is vain, then you have in no wise through it obtained remission of your sins. If you have not obtained remission of your sins, then those who have died with such a faith in Christ, have perished. But if such have perished, then faith in Christ is entertained in this life only. If, in short, faith is had in Christ in this life only, then are we of all men most miserable; inasmuch as we are, on account of this faith, perpetually suffering afflictions and persecutions.'

20. Having already shown, from the fact of Christ's resurrection, the possibility of our resurrection, the Apostle now applies himself to establish its certainty; and after having taken for granted—as being already fully established—the truth of Christ's resurrection, he proceeds, in the three following verses, to deduce from it some considerations, on which we may ground the most confident reliance of all pious Christians being raised from the dead. These are deduced, 1. from the close consanguinity, as it were, of Christ, as Head of the Covenant, with faithful Christians, his members; insomuch that a close connexion must be supposed between one and the other, however dissimilar may be the mode, v. 20—23, inclusive. The Apostle then, at v. 22, draws a parallel between our relationship to Adam and to Christ; and reasons that the fruits of each (death or life) must naturally arise. At v. 23 he intimates that this connexion of Christ with faithful Christians, as of the head and the members, suggests naturally the order in which this resurrection should take place; and as Christ's resurrection was admitted by the persons he is addressing, to have really taken place, so may that of his faithful servants be confidently expected to follow.

— νυνὶ δὲ, &c.] The full sense is: 'But as things now are, [this is not the case;] Christ hath risen.' Ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκοιμημένων is for ἀπαρχὴ πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, as in Col. i. 18, ἀρχὴ πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν. So also πρῶτος ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν at Acts xxvi. 23. There may also be an allusion to the first-fruits of the corn, which was an earnest and pledge of the ensuing harvest, and indeed a commencement of it. See Hyperius. Jesus Christ was the first [to rise], of those who have died and risen again to die no more. For those raised by Elijah, Elisha, and our Lord, after being raised from the dead, did return to the grave. Ἐγένετο, not found in several MSS. of the Western recension, some Latin Versions, and some Fathers, is cancelled by Griesbach, Tittmann, and Scholz; but without reason; external and internal evidence being in its favour.

21, 22. The Apostle here further proves the resurrection of Christ to be the cause, as well as the pledge, of our resurrection; arguing, that 'since by man (i. e. a human being) sin and death entered into the world; so by Man, by One in human nature, came the resurrection of the dead; as, in consequence of their relation to Adam, all men are born mortal, and at length die; even so, in and by Christ, shall all be made alive.' In other words: 'Our connexion with Adam brought us death; our connexion with Christ, life: by the one we became subject to the dominion of death; by the other, being raised from the dead, we shall be delivered from that dominion: the evils inflicted on us by the former will be entirely done away by the latter.'

23. Here we have, as Heydenr. observes, an answer to a supposed doubt or question, as to the seeming delay, and the tardy period allotted to the awful change in question: q. d. 'a certain order and fixed period of time is appointed of God for this effect: in due order and succession, and by certain intervals, must this take place to all, and not before the time appointed must that resurrection be expected.' The Apostle then proceeds to show what that order will be. It is, indeed, not agreed whether by τάγμα be here meant order of time or of dignity. But the former sense is probably the true one; the meaning being 'each at a time, and in the manner ordained by God;' namely, that Christ should rise first, by himself, long before the rest; then, at his second advent, all true Christians. Οἱ τοῦ Χριστοῦ; as Gal. v. 24, οἱ τ. Χρ. The Apostle says nothing about those who are not Christ's. Those, we know, will be raised too, and, as it appears, last; but with the 'resurrection of damnation.'

[p] Εἶτα τὸ τέλος, ὅταν παραδῷ τὴν βασιλείαν τῷ Θεῷ καὶ 24
Πατρί· ὅταν καταργήσῃ πᾶσαν ἀρχὴν καὶ πᾶσαν ἐξουσίαν καὶ δύναμιν. [q] Δεῖ γὰρ αὐτὸν βασιλεύειν, ἄχρις οὗ ἂν 25
θῇ πάντας τοὺς ἐχθροὺς ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ.
[r] Ἔσχατος ἐχθρὸς καταργεῖται ὁ θάνατος· [s] πάντα γὰρ 26,27 ὑπέταξεν ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ. Ὅταν δὲ εἴπῃ ὅτι πάντα ὑποτέτακται, δῆλον, ὅτι ἐκτὸς τοῦ ὑποτάξαντος αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα. [t] ὅταν δὲ ὑποταγῇ αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα, τότε καὶ 28 p Supra 2. 6.

q Ps. 110. 1. Acts 2. 34. Eph. 1. 22.
r Rev. 20. 14. & 21. 4.
s Ps. 8. 6. & 110. 1. Matt. 11. 27. & 28. 18. Eph. 1. 22. Heb. 2. 8.
t Phil. 3. 20, 21. supra 3. 23. & 11. 3.

24. We have now (as Crellius observes) a sort of digression, extending from v. 24 to v. 28; v. 29 connecting with v. 23, and the intermediate verses being hypoparenthetical. Still there exists a thread of connexion, which has been well traced by Crellius, who supposes what is said at v. 24 to be meant to give a reason for the preceding assertion, and to meet a tacit objection; q. d. ‘Why do you say that those who are Christ’s are to be raised at the advent of Christ? Why not before or after? Ans. It must be at his advent, because immediately afterwards his reign must come to an end. But that cannot be till his enemies are utterly subjected and destroyed,’ &c. &c.

— εἶτα τὸ τέλος.] Supply ἔσται. On the exact sense of τέλος some difference of opinion exists. Heydenreich thinks the expression is to be taken for οἱ ἔσχατοι (as at v. 23 ἀπαρχὴ is equivalent to ὁ πρῶτος), meaning those who shall rise last, i. e. either all the rest except Christ’s faithful servants: or, at the termination of the period of the resurrection. Yet either interpretation is harsh; and there is no reason to reject the one adopted by the ancient and most modern Expositors, by which τέλος is supposed to mean the end of the world, or of the Christian dispensation, or the world of redemption, (the œconomical or mediatorial kingdom of Christ,) or both,—when Christ shall have gained a complete victory over sin and death, wicked angels and wicked men, and shall resign the government of all things to God the Father, adverted to in the words following, ὅταν παραδῷ τὴν βασιλ. τ. Θ.; which Grotius illustrates from the custom of Presidents, sent by the Roman Emperor to govern provinces; who, at their return, used formally to restore their authority into the hands of their sovereign.

— ὅταν καταργήσῃ—δύναμιν.] Some doubt exists as to the persons meant by πᾶσαν ἀρχὴν καὶ πᾶσαν ἐξουσίαν καὶ δύναμιν. Of course, powers adverse to Christ must be intended; but not, as some suppose, the empires and kingdoms of this world, i. e. human power generally, but such powers as yet impede the consummation of the felicity obtained for us by Christ, and are a hindrance to the Divine counsels for the completion of man’s restoration to the favour of God; namely, the kingdom of Satan, ἡ ἐξουσία τοῦ σκότους, Col. i. 13. Eph. vi. 12; also sin, misery, and death. See also v. 26. The powers who act in league with Satan, to further his purposes, are called ἐξουσία and δύναμις, to suggest their systematic opposition to the kingdom of God and Christ (compare 2 Thess. ii. 4); and likewise ἀρχὴ, as being a regularly organized body, in opposition to the ἀρχὴ of Christ.

25. δεῖ γὰρ αὐ. βασιλ.] The δεῖ seems chiefly meant of the necessity of fulfilling the Scriptures, ‘which cannot be broken.’ This is clear from the words of David, Ps. cx. 1, then introduced.

26. ἔσχατος—θάνατος.] I would render (with the sanction of some eminent Commentators), ‘And, last of all, the enemy Death is to be destroyed.’ Now as all our enemies and obstacles are generally encountered in the order of difficulty, this suggests an idea of Death being the most formidable enemy. Thus what is said is equivalent to, ‘He will subject all his enemies, —even, at last, Death, [the greatest.]’ Death is here personified, though elsewhere more usually represented under the name Ἀιδης, or Samäel, or Asmodeus; the meaning, however, being the state of death. The above view of the sense will enable us to explain the next words, πάντα γὰρ ὑπέταξεν ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ; which can only be done by supplying a short clause, taken from the preceding, to which the γὰρ has reference; q. d. ‘I say all, since δεῖ πάντας τοὺς ἐχθροὺς ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ τίθεσθαι, it is predicted of him, that He [i. e. God] hath put all things (by which is necessarily included all persons, all creatures, animate as well as inanimate) under his feet.’ The words of the Psalm (viii. 4) were primarily meant of the first Adam, as being the representative of the human race; but are here, and in Heb. ii. 6, referred, in their secondary and mystical application, to the second Adam, Christ. Indeed, the whole Psalm is referred to the Messiah by our Lord himself, Matt. xxi. 16. Εἴπῃ, sub. ἡ γραφή. At ὅτι ἐκτὸς supply τοῦτό ἐστι. Render, ‘It is plain that [this must be] with the exception of Him who put all things under him.’ This sense of ἐκτὸς occurs in Acts xxvi. 22, sometimes in the Sept., and occasionally in the Classical writers.

28. ὅταν δὲ ὑποταγῇ, &c.] Of this obscure and disputed passage, the meaning seems to be: ‘and when all things shall be subjected to Him (i. e. the Son), then shall the Son also himself declare himself to be subject to Him that had subjected all things to Him;’ meaning, that ‘when all the designs of the Son’s Mediatorial kingdom shall be accomplished, the Son, as Mediator, will become subject to the Father,—i. e. will resign his mediatorial office to the Father, from whom he received it; that God (meaning the Godhead, comprehending Father, Son, and Holy Ghost) may be all in all [to men],’ i. e. reign without the intervention of a Mediator, which will no longer be necessary. That this passage, when properly understood, gives no support to the Arian and Socinian notions of the Son’s nature being inferior to the Father’s, has been proved by Paræus and others in the Critici Sacri, as also by Petav.,

αὐτὸς ὁ Υἱὸς ὑποταγήσεται τῷ ὑποτάξαντι αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα, 29 ἵνα ᾖ ὁ Θεὸς τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν. Ἐπεὶ, τί ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν; εἰ ὅλως νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγεί-

Wolf, Whitby, Doddridge, and especially by Gerdes., Heydenr., and Dr. Pye Smith.

Τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν εἶναι, here and at Col. iii. 11, is a phrase denoting 'to be possessed of complete power,' equivalent to ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων (or ἐπάνω πάντων) in Rom. ix. 5. See also John iii. 31. Eph. iv. 6. and i. 23, also my Note on Thucyd. viii. 95. A similar expression occurs in Clem. Alex. p. 603 (cited by Kypke), Ζεύς τοι τὰ πάντα.

29. ἐπεὶ, τί ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτ. ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν;] Here the Apostle resumes the subject he had broken off at ver. 23. At ἐπεὶ there is an ellipsis of ἄλλως, 'Since [otherwise, if that were not the case, i. e. if there were no resurrection].' Of this idiom an example occurs in Joseph. Bell. i. 19. 4, ἐπεὶ, τί δύναται τοῦ σεισμοῦ μεῖζον; I have pointed accordingly.

On the sense of the obscure words, οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, a considerable diversity of opinion exists. The main points of inquiry are these: 1. Whether βαπτιζόμενοι is to be taken in a literal, or in a metaphorical sense. 2. Whether τῶν νεκρῶν is to be understood literally, or figuratively. 3. What is the force of the ὑπέρ. Now on every one of these questions the great fault of Expositors has been that of devising certain novel, nay, almost unheard of significations; and which, even if they could be admitted, are not agreeable to the context and the scope of the Apostle throughout this whole chapter. As to those interpretations which proceed on taking βαπτιζόμενοι in a metaphorical sense, they seem entitled to little attention; and that which explains it 'overwhelmed with miseries and calamities,' cannot be admitted, for want of the addition of some word or words denoting misery or suffering. There is little doubt that the expression is to be taken in the natural sense. As to the interpretation of Le Clerc, Ellis, Deyling, Doddridge, Newcome, and Scott, who take the ὑπὲρ for ἀντὶ, an allusion being supposed to the case of those who, after the martyrdom of Christians, presented themselves for baptism, to supply the place of the martyrs,—that is destitute of philological proof, and, as involving so very far-fetched an allusion, is not likely to be true. More attention is due to the interpretation of some ancient and many eminent modern Expositors (as Scaliger, Grotius, Wall, Augustin, Heydenreich, and Crellius), by which an allusion is supposed to the practice (in use, as we learn from Tertullian, Epiphanius, and Ambrose, in the first century,) of vicarious baptism; i. e. of baptizing a living person in the place of and for the benefit of one who had died unbaptized; just as, by some, the Eucharist was administered to the dead. But no certain proof has been adduced that the practice was prevalent so early as the time when this passage was written, or at Corinth. Nor is it to be believed that the Apostle would, for the sake of a very precarious argument (for the practice was, doubtless, very rare and secret), countenance so grovelling a superstition,—involving, as Calvin says, 'a profanation of baptism, and drawing it into an abuse quite magical.' Yet surely the interpretation adopted by that able Expositor, 'to be baptized in articulo mortis,' besides being destitute of philological proof, is liable, in some degree, to the same objection. And vain is it to urge, with Heydenreich, that in such a case the Apostle argues ex concessis, and is using an argumentum ad hominem; for no other argument so used by St. Paul would have the same consequences. Although, therefore, the interpretation which refers it to vicarious baptism does indeed fit in with the words as they stand (rather, perhaps, by a sort of coincidence than agreement), it cannot, I think, be admitted; since, besides being liable to the foregoing fatal objection, it is little suitable to the context; the sense thence arising, in conjunction with the argument of the context, being not a little frigid. And as to the interpretation of Gerdesius, 'ut potius (vel ex illorum hominum, qui resurrectionem mortuorum negant, sententiâ) ipse ille baptismus sit baptismus pro talibus qui resurrecturi sint nunquam,' i. e. 'pro mortuis;' that sense, however agreeable to the context, cannot be extracted from the words without great violence. The interpretation most likely to be the true one, is such as shall depend on no remote or far-fetched allusion, shall be agreeable to the context, and be shown, with some probability, to be inherent in the words themselves. Now this, if I mistake not, will apply to the one adopted by Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators, and the generality of Expositors in modern times, including some very eminent names, as Hammond, Burkitt, Wetstein, and Pyle, who explain: 'What will they be doing (i. e. what will they benefit themselves) who are baptized for the sake of, i. e. in hope of, the resurrection of the dead?' q. d. 'They will be no better for it, either in this world or the next;' by an argumentum ex absurdo. The only objection that can be urged to this interpretation is, its supposing the ellipsis of τῆς ἀναστάσεως; but as that forms the grand subject of the whole Chapter, there is surely no great harshness in supposing it left to be understood. How simple and agreeable to the context is this view of the sense, will appear from an examination of the minute and accurate Analysis of Gerdesius. And that it should be the general interpretation, and such as unlettered persons immediately form in their mind, is a proof that it cannot be really, though it may be grammatically, harsh. This interpretation, then, in its simplicity carries upon it the stamp of truth. There is, with reason, supposed to be an allusion to the confession which preceded the rite of baptism, 'I believe in the resurrection of the dead,' and the interrogation which succeeded its answer in the affirmative, 'Wilt thou be baptized in this faith, i. e. in the hope of a resurrection?' There may also be (as the ancient Commentators think) an allusion to the ancient mode of baptism by immersion; which, while typifying a death unto sin and a new birth unto righteousness, had also a reference to the Christian's communion with his Lord, both in death and resurrection from the dead. See Rom. vi. 4, συνετάφημεν αὐτῷ διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσματος εἰς τὸν θάνατον, &c., and Col. ii. 12. Certainly baptism is, if not a type of the resurrection, yet a sign

u 2 Cor. 11. 26. ρονται, τί καὶ βαπτίζονται ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν; [u] τί καὶ ἡμεῖς 30 x Rom. 8. 36. κινδυνεύομεν πᾶσαν ὥραν; [x] Καθ' ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω, νὴ 31 2 Cor. 4. 10. 1 Thess. 2. 19. τὴν ὑμετέραν καύχησιν, ἣν ἔχω ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ y 2 Cor. 1. 8. Is. 22. 13. ἡμῶν. [y] Εἰ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον ἐθηριομάχησα ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, τί 32 μοι τὸ ὄφελος; εἰ νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται, φάγωμεν καὶ z Supra 5. 6. πίωμεν, αὔριον γὰρ ἀποθνήσκομεν. [z] Μὴ πλανᾶσθε· 33 and seal thereof. See Paræus, De Dieu, and especially the elaborate disquisition of Gerdesius. Finally, the reception of Christian baptism and the adoption of the religion was one with the recognition of a resurrection of the dead; therefore, for any persons, professing to be Christians, to disavow that doctrine, was gross inconsistency, and must deprive them of all benefit from that religion.

Instead of the second τῶν νεκρῶν, some MSS., two Versions, and certain Fathers, have τῶν αὐτῶν, which is approved by Mill and Bengel, and edited by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz: but without sufficient reason; for the external evidence is weak; and as to internal, the new reading has every appearance of an alteration, to remove an inelegant repetition. But, in fact, such repetitions as this are often introduced for the sake of emphasis; which is, indeed, here recognised by Calvin.

30. τί καὶ ἡμεῖς, &c.] By ἡμεῖς may be understood 'we Apostles,' meaning especially himself. The sense is, 'Why, too, are we encountering jeopardy every hour?' i. e. upon what other hope than of the resurrection of the dead?

31. καθ' ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω.] A strongly figurative and hyperbolical phrase, expressive of his being continually in danger of his life. So Livy, lib. xxix. 17, 'quotidie capitur urbs nostra, quotidie diripitur.' There is here a climax on the preceding κινδυνεύομεν. Compare Philo, vol. ii. p. 542, καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν, μᾶλλον δὲ ὥραν, προαποθνήσκω.

— νὴ τὴν ὑμετέραν καύχ.] Νὴ is here a particle of solemn protestation. Of the next words, τὴν ὑμετέραν καύχησιν, &c., the sense is, 'by the boasting, or ground of glorying, which I have concerning you,' ὑμετ. being for ὑμῶν, i. e. ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν. So 2 Cor. viii. 8. Thucyd. i. 33, τοὺς Λακ. φόβῳ τῷ ὑμετέρῳ πολεμησείοντας. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 466. 2. By the mention of this the Apostle delicately hints at what is their duty.

32. εἰ κατὰ ἄνθρ. ἐθηριομ. ἐν Ἐφ.] A difference of opinion exists as to the sense of ἐθηριομ., which some take in a literal, others in a metaphorical acceptation. Most Commentators adopt the former view, urging that the air of the passage suggests a reference to some imminent danger. This, they think, is confirmed by the strong language of the Apostle at 2 Cor. i. 8—10, with respect to some extreme peril at Ephesus. 2 Cor. xi. 23. They further urge that Tertullian, Origen, and Cyprian so took the word, and that the fact itself,—considering how frequent was this punishment for alleged treason in that age,—is not improbable. This may readily be admitted; but whether the thing actually happened in the case of St. Paul, may be doubted. That it should not have been recorded by St. Luke, would seem strange, and not to be paralleled by the omission of the story of the penitent thief in three of the Evangelists; though it may be admitted that several important circumstances must have occurred at Ephesus, besides those recorded in Acts xix. As to the air of the context, it suggests, I think, no more than extreme peril of life; for that may well be all that is meant by the expression καθ' ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω: and the language of the passage of 2 Cor. xi. 23. is exactly of the same nature, and amounts to no more. As to Tertullian, Origen, and Cyprian recording a tradition of the Apostle being exposed to wild beasts, the tradition itself might easily arise from no more than taking ἐθηρ. here in a literal sense. That he should have been exposed to wild beasts, involves, indeed, no improbability;—but that such was meant to be asserted in the term under consideration, is more than can be proved. If the expression stood alone, there would be less difficulty in admitting that such might be the sense. But the phrase κατὰ ἄνθρωπον, with which it is associated, alters the case, since that admits of no sense at all suitable to the literal import of ἐθηρ.; whereas the acceptation in which it is elsewhere used by the Apostle, is such as highly favours the metaphorical sense ascribed to ἐθηρ. by some ancient and several eminent modern Commentators (as Beza, Grotius, Raphelius, Pearce, Schoettgen, Doddridge, Newcome, Wakefield, and Rosenmuller), who suppose the Apostle to mean only the imminent peril of life which he ran (as we find by Acts xix.) from the opposition of ferocious adversaries. And when we consider that such a use of θηριομαχέω was (as is proved by philological illustrators) usual in that age, being found in Ignat. Epist. to the Romans, c. 5, there is great reason to think that this interpretation is the true one. Κατὰ ἄνθρωπον may thus be regarded as an elliptical expression for ὥστε κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγειν, or ἵνα κατὰ ἄνθρ. λέγω, Anglicè, 'to employ an usual phrase.' To the examples adduced of this figurative use of θηριομαχεῖν I am enabled to add another from Liban. Epist. 606. 1, ἃ ἐποίουν ἂν περὶ Σωκράτην, εἰ κατὰ Σωκράτην ἐγεγόνειν, ὅτε αὐτῷ τὰ θηρία ἐπέκειτο, συκόφανται τρεῖς. So Euripides, in his Hel. 980, speaks of struggling with hunger as with a beast.

— τί μοι τὸ ὄφελος;] Ὄφελος signifies literally furtherance (from ὀφέλλω, to further), and hence, figuratively, advantage. Τί ὄφελος; with a dative of personal pronoun, is frequent.

— φάγωμεν καὶ πίωμεν, &c.] The words are derived from Is. xxii. 13, Sept. Similar sentiments abound in the heathen writers. See Athen. Deipn. viii. 3. Arrian, Exp. Alex. ii. 5. 3. Herodot. ii. 78.

33. Leaving the argumentum ex absurdo, the Apostle now proceeds to direct exhortation and earnest admonition.

— μὴ πλανᾶσθε.] A form appropriate to warning men against falling into error; with allusion, in the present case, to the sins just men-34 φθείρουσιν ἤθη χρηστὰ ὁμιλίαι κακαί. [a] Ἐκνήψατε δικαίως [a] Rom. 13. 11.

καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε· ἀγνωσίαν γὰρ Θεοῦ τινὲς ἔχουσι· πρὸς supra 6. 5. Eph. 5. 14.
ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν λέγω.
35 [b] Ἀλλ' ἐρεῖ τις· Πῶς ἐγείρονται οἱ νεκροί; ποίῳ δὲ [b] Ezek. 37. 3.
36 σώματι ἔρχονται; [c] Ἄφρον, σὺ ὃ σπείρεις, οὐ ζωοποιεῖται, [c] John 12. 24.
37 ἐὰν μὴ ἀποθάνῃ· καὶ ὃ σπείρεις, οὐ τὸ σῶμα τὸ γενησόμενον σπείρεις, ἀλλὰ γυμνὸν κόκκον, εἰ τύχοι, σίτου ἤ τινος τῶν tioned. So Philemon, p. 360, 'Be not deceived: Death hath his solemn courts.'

— φθείρουσιν ἤθη χρηστὰ ὁμιλ. κακαί.] Κακαὶ, for πρὸς τοὺς κακούς. So Plutarch, de Educ., p. 51. Edw., ἀπείργειν προσήκει τοὺς παῖδας τῆς πρὸς τοὺς πονηροὺς ἀνθρώπους συνουσίας.

These words are by some supposed to be taken from Euripides; by others, from Menander. They occur in both; the latter probably deriving them from the former. This is not, however, a regular quotation (for then the metre would require χρησθ' instead of χρηστά); for the sentiment had probably grown, by frequent use, into a popular saying. The implied censure was, no doubt, meant for certain teachers, who encouraged or permitted close intercourse with the heathens, the same probably who had countenanced attendance at the idol-feasts.

34. The Apostle now presses home his admonition. Ἐκνήφειν properly signifies 'to awake from a deep sleep,' especially that of drunkenness, as Gen. ix. 24, and elsewhere in the Sept., as also in the Classical writers; but it is also used, in a figurative sense, of sobering from the inebriety of error, and returning to a right mind. So 2 Tim. ii. 26, καὶ ἀνανήψωσιν ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Διαβόλου παγίδος. At δικαίως many supply ζήσοντες; but it is better, with others, to take it for ὡς δικαίως δεῖ, 'as it is just and right you should.'

— ἀγνωσίαν γὰρ Θεοῦ τινὲς ἔχουσι.] Meaning persons who, by upholding pernicious errors as to the resurrection, and other fundamental doctrines, show that they know not God aright.

— πρὸς ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν λέγω.] A formula of affectionate expostulation, occurring before at vi. 5.

35. πῶς ἐγείρονται—ἔρχονται;] The Apostle now proceeds to refute two objections (which were probably often urged by cavillers, in the form of puzzling questions,) to the doctrine of the resurrection. 1. How can all the different parts of our bodies, which have been resolved into dust, or apparently annihilated by fire, or have become so mingled with, and converted into, the nature of other animals, nay, of trees, plants, &c., how can these, after having been for so many ages thus dissipated, be at length reunited, and coalesce into one body. 2. If that be possible, with what kind of body are the dead to rise? what sort of body will that be? meaning thereby to civilly deny its possibility. These objections, the Apostle first shows, proceed from folly (see Note on Matt. xxiii. 17, μωροὶ καὶ τυφλοί); and he then introduces a popular illustration of the doctrine, derived from what subsists in nature, as respects plants.

36. Here the Apostle first proves, in a popular way, the possibility of the resurrection, by adverting to a similar process going on in the vegetable world (compare John xii. 24); where the same objection to the possibility might, à priori, be made. Thus he shows that by a parity of reasoning the body which dies may be quickened again; and at ver. 42 asserts that it is so. Of course, ἀποθάνῃ is here to be taken, in a popular sense, for 'as it were dies,' namely, by suffering corruption. There is allusion to that mysterious process (as little to be accounted for as the resurrection of the body) going on in the buried and rotting grain, whereby the germ, or bud, fed by the corruption of the roots, springs up into new life.

— ἄφρον.] The expression must not be too rigidly interpreted; since it may only convey the idea of inconsiderateness, and want of due thought. Of several passages of the Classical writers that might here be adduced, one must suffice; Ælian de Provid. Frag. p. 1052 (Gronov. Ed. of the Var. Hist.): σὺ δὲ λέγεις αὐτοὺς (scil. τοὺς θεοὺς) μὴ ὑμῖν προέχειν, ὦ μωρέ; Similar terms employed by our Lord are probably to be taken with a similar limitation of sense; see the Note on Matt. xxiii. 17, μωροὶ καὶ τυφλοί.

The meaning of the passage is well expressed by Professor Dobree as follows: 'The living body is, like a seed, organized matter united with a vital principle: when the body dies, and the seed is sown, the organized matter is thrown off, and replaced by other matter of different form and properties.'

The comparison is a popular one; it being usual with the Rabbis to compare a buried body with a grain of corn committed to the earth. So Chetaboth, cited by Wetstein: 'R. Chija dixit justos resurrecturos vestitos, idque probavit argumento à minori ad majus à tritico. Ut triticum nudum sepelitur, et multis vestibus ornatum prodit, ita multo magis justi, qui cum vestibus sepeliuntur, vestiti resurgent.'

37, 38. In these verses the Apostle adverts to the other objection involved in the words of ver. 35, ποίῳ δὲ σώματι ἔρχονται; and, continuing the same similitude, he shows that it is not necessary that the bodies of the raised should be precisely, and in all respects, the same as when they died; since in like manner, in the case of grain and plants, the body committed to the earth is not the same, but in many respects different, yet essentially the same. Thus the objection raised from the dissipation of the particles of the body which has died loses its force; since it is not necessary to that general identity that the body raised should be composed of the very same particles, which were indeed inconsistent with what the Apostle subjoins, ἀλλὰ γυμνὸν κόκκον (i. e. the grain apart from the blade and ear, which shall afterwards spring from it); in which expression it seems plainly implied, that the bodies shall λοιπῶν. Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς αὐτῷ δίδωσι σῶμα καθὼς ἠθέλησε, καὶ 38 ἑκάστῳ τῶν σπερμάτων τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα. Οὐ πᾶσα σὰρξ ἡ 39

αὐτὴ σάρξ· ἀλλὰ ἄλλη μὲν [σὰρξ] ἀνθρώπων, ἄλλη δὲ σὰρξ d Gen. 1. 16. κτηνῶν, ἄλλη δὲ ἰχθύων, ἄλλη δὲ πτηνῶν. [d] καὶ σώματα 40 ἐπουράνια, καὶ σώματα ἐπίγεια· ἀλλ' ἑτέρα μὲν ἡ τῶν ἐπου-ρανίων δόξα, ἑτέρα δὲ ἡ τῶν ἐπιγείων. Ἄλλη δόξα ἡλίου, 41 καὶ ἄλλη δόξα σελήνης, καὶ ἄλλη δόξα ἀστέρων· ἀστὴρ γὰρ ἀστέρος διαφέρει ἐν δόξῃ· οὕτω καὶ ἡ ἀνάστασις τῶν 42
e Phil. 3. 21. Matt. 13. 43. Dan. 12. 3. νεκρῶν. σπείρεται ἐν φθορᾷ, ἐγείρεται ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ· [e] σπεί- 43 ρεται ἐν ἀτιμίᾳ, ἐγείρεται ἐν δόξῃ· σπείρεται ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ, 44 ἐγείρεται ἐν δυνάμει· σπείρεται σῶμα ψυχικὸν, ἐγείρεται σῶμα πνευματικόν. Ἔστι σῶμα ψυχικὸν, καὶ ἔστι σῶμα πνευdiffer as the grain and the ear differ, the latter being far more glorious than the former.

38. καθὼς ἠθέλησε.] 'God,' observes Doddridge, 'is said to give it this body as he pleases, because we know not how it is produced; and the Apostle's leading thought is, that it is absurd to argue against a resurrection on a principle which is so palpably false as that must be, which supposes us to understand all the processes of the divine works.' The expression ἴδιον σῶμα seems meant to explain further the σῶμα καθὼς ἠθέλησε, on which the whole sentence seems to turn; q. d. 'God hath ordained that each particular seed should reproduce, not its own body, but one far more glorious, and of a form such as it hath pleased the Almighty to assign to it.'

39—44. In this passage the Apostle, proceeding in his confutation of the objections of his adversaries as to the quality of the bodies to be raised, employs an illustration of what he has been saying, and that by similitude. His main purpose is to inculcate, directly and expressly, the important truth which at vv. 37, 38 he had only intimated, as it were by implication; namely, that the raised body, though in all essential points the same with the body buried, would be very different and far more excellent. Accordingly the argument is this: that, 'as throughout the works of the whole creation, whether earthly or heavenly, animate or inanimate, a great difference subsists between the bodies of one class, as compared with those of another class; and even those of the same class differing widely; such (ver. 42) will be the case here; so will be the difference, at the resurrection, between the bodies which shall arise, as compared with those that were committed to the earth.' In the verses following, the nature of that difference is pointed out, and the reasons on which it is founded are intimated. It might, indeed, seem that the Apostle has enlarged more on the diversity of the various classes of bodies from each other, than was necessary for the purpose of the illustration in question. But it was done for a good reason; for (as Rosenmuller justly suggests) 'the Apostle means to infer from the vast variety of bodies, yet all bodies, the power of the Deity to produce from a mass of corruption a glorious and immortal body.' And surely, as Locke observes, 'it is not more incomprehensible that a glorious immortal body should arise from a mass of corruption, than that all this vast variety of splendid forms should arise from nothing.'

As to the precise nature of the difference between the earthly and the glorified body, on this much has been written, but to little purpose. Indeed, the Apostle's words were not meant to teach us, what perhaps no human language could have made clear. It is sufficient for us to be assured that the bodies of the righteous will be raised in a spiritualized state, and yet be, in a certain sense, the same with those that were buried.

39—44. οὐ πᾶσα σὰρξ, &c.] Σὰρξ is here used for σῶμα, because, as Heydenreich observes, 'corpora animantia viva sunt, sensibilia, animata, ψυχικὰ, non inanimata, ut plantæ et corpora cœlestia; attamen mortalia, non perennia, ut corpora πνευματικὰ, ἄφθαρτα, in resurrectione restituenda.' Δόξα, vv. 40, 41, signifies dignity and excellence. Ἐν φθορᾷ, v. 43, and ἐν ἀτιμίᾳ, v. 44, are adjectival phrases, for the adjectives φθαρτὸς and ἄτιμος. And ψυχικὸς, in v. 44, as being opposed to πνευματικὸς (especially as the expression is used with a reference to the words of Moses respecting the body of Adam, ἐγένετο εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν) must signify animal (literally, that which draws in the breath of life, necessary to the existence of all animal bodies), that which is endued with faculties of sense, and has need of food, drink, and sleep for its support. So the word is used by Diod. Sic. i. 12, αἴτιος τοῦ ψυχικοῦ τοῖς ἀνθρώποις.

The word σὰρξ after μὲν, not found in several of the most ancient MSS., some Versions, and Fathers, Greek and Latin, has been cancelled by Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz; but whether on good grounds, I doubt; for there is nearly as strong external evidence for the omission of the σὰρξ after ἄλλη δέ. And when we consider the great antipathy of the petty Critics of the Alexandrian school to tautology, we cannot fail to see (as the MSS. testify) that, wishing to relieve the passage of what they thought superfluous, (though they could not agree how far to carry this sort of Critical phlebotomy,) some removed one σὰρξ, some the other, and some both.

44. ἔστι σῶμα ψυχικὸν, &c.] These words are meant to throw light on what has been said at vv. 42—44; but, as there seems something awkward, Gerdesius would suppose a confusion in the whole passage; in order to effectually remove

45 ματικόν. [f] Οὕτω καὶ γέγραπται· Ἐγένετο ὁ πρῶτος ἄνθρωπος Ἀδὰμ εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν· ὁ ἔσχατος Ἀδὰμ 46 εἰς πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν. Ἀλλ' οὐ πρῶτον τὸ πνευματικὸν, 47 ἀλλὰ τὸ ψυχικὸν, ἔπειτα τὸ πνευματικόν. [g] Ὁ πρῶτος ἄνθρωπος ἐκ γῆς, χοϊκός· ὁ δεύτερος ἄνθρωπος, [ὁ Κύριος]
48 ἐξ οὐρανοῦ. Οἷος ὁ χοϊκὸς, τοιοῦτοι καὶ οἱ χοϊκοί· καὶ οἷος 49 ὁ ἐπουράνιος, τοιοῦτοι καὶ οἱ ἐπουράνιοι· [h] καὶ καθὼς ἐφο-ρέσαμεν τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ χοϊκοῦ, φορέσομεν καὶ τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ 50 ἐπουρανίου. [i] Τοῦτο δέ φημι, ἀδελφοὶ, ὅτι σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα βασιλείαν Θεοῦ κληρονομῆσαι οὐ δύνανται, οὐδὲ ἡ φθορὰ τὴν 51 ἀφθαρσίαν κληρονομεῖ. [j] Ἰδοὺ, μυστήριον ὑμῖν λέγω· πάνf Gen. 2. 7. Rom. 5. 14. John 5. 21. & 6. 33, 39. Col. 3. 3, 4.

g Gen. 3. 19. John 3. 13, 31.

h Gen. 5. 3 John 3. 31. Rom. 8. 29. 2 Cor. 3. 18. & 4. 11. Phil. 3. 21. 1 John 3. 2.

i Supra 6. 13.

j 1 Thess. 4. 15, 16, 17.

which he recommends a transposition of vv. 45, 46. This, however, will not be necessary, if we suppose, with Photius ap. Œcum. and Heydenr., that the clause ἔστι σῶμα ψυχ.—πνευματικὸν with its illustration in ver. 45 is interposed between vv. 44 and 46 (which verses are closely connected together), to show the meaning intended to be affixed to the words ψυχικὸν and πνευματικόν. In order to complete the sense, we must supply, from the subject-matter, the words 'to every human being so sown in corruption.'

45. οὕτω γέγραπται.] Namely, in Gen. ii. 7; but the quotation terminates at ζῶσαν. Indeed, it is, properly speaking, not a citation, but only an application of the words of Scripture; in which also, for adaptation's sake, πρῶτος and Ἀδὰμ are inserted. To this clause, thus brought forward, the Apostle subjoins an apodosis, in the words ὁ ἔσχατος Ἀδὰμ εἰς πνεῦμα ζωοπ., which are formed on our Lord's words at John v. 36; see also v. 21. vi. 23. By ζῶσαν ψυχὴν is properly meant a living sentient creature; but, in the application made of the passage by the Apostle, it must mean more; namely, a vital principle, intended for immortality, but lost by sin, and only to be restored by the last Adam, the antitype of the first, i. e. Christ, who is elsewhere so called; see Rom. v. 14.

— εἰς πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν.] Meaning, as Dr. Robinson in his Lex. explains, 'a spirit of life,' as raising the bodies of believers from the dead to immortal life.

46. ἀλλ' οὐ πρῶτον τὸ πνευμ., &c.] Supply σῶμά ἐστι. These words are to be referred, not to ver. 45, which immediately precedes, but to the last words of ver. 44, ἔστι σῶμα ψυχικὸν, καὶ ἔστι σῶμα πνευματικὸν, since that might suggest a question why the spiritualized body might not have preceded the animal body. To this the answer is (by a reference to the Divine decree), that the animal must precede, the spiritual follow. The reason for which procedure is suggested in the very nature of the terms themselves, ψυχικὸς and πνευματικὸς, which imply that the latter is far more perfect than the former; since it is agreeable to the usual course of God's operations, both in the physical and moral world, that the more perfect should succeed the less perfect (and not vice versâ), and from the natural to proceed to the supernatural. The Apostle, however, intimates the reason for this procedure more clearly in the verses following.

47. ὁ πρῶτος ἄνθρωπος—οὐρανοῦ.] The first and second man are here opposed to each other, as at ver. 45 the first and last Adam; and as, in the former case, the second Adam is Christ, so here the second man must be so too. The best Expositors are agreed that ἐξ οὐρανοῦ must refer to the heavenly original of Christ; thus making him superhuman and Divine; see Cameron in Poole's Syn., Bp. Bull's Jud. Eccl. Cathol. v. 5, and Dr. Smith's Script. Test. vol. ii. p. 121.

Ὁ Κύριος, not found in almost all the uncial MSS., the Vulg. and Italic Versions, and many Fathers, is cancelled by Griesbach and Tittman. It has, indeed, the appearance of coming from the margin; but there is not sufficient evidence to warrant its being cancelled.

48, 49. The full sense here may be expressed in paraphrase as follows: 'As [was] the earthy [man, Adam], such also are [in origin] those that are earthy (i. e. they live in an animal and corruptible body as he did); and [on the other hand] as is the heavenly [man, CHRIST], so are also they that are [to be] heavenly' (i. e. to have glorious and immortal bodies). And as we have borne, and do bear (for ἐφορ. may signify both), in our bodies the image (or characteristics) of the earthy [man, Adam; namely, in frailty, sin, sorrow, and death]; so shall we [at the resurrection] bear the stamp of the heavenly [man, Christ],' i. e. resembling him in our glorified and immortal frames. The word εἰκὼν is, as Kypke observes, used properly of statues, pictures, &c., formed after an archetype, and consequently representing it exactly.

50. Thus far the Apostle has shown the possibility that God should give us, at the resurrection, bodies very different from our present ones. He now shows the impossibility that those bodies should be, like our present ones, of flesh and blood,—mortal, frail, and continually changing.

— οὐ δύνανται] i. e. 'cannot in the nature of things.' Κληρον. here signifies simply 'possess and enjoy.' The words οὐδὲ ἡ φθορὰ τὴν ἀφθ κλ. are exegetical of the preceding: 'It is not possible, I say, for those fleshly, corruptible, and mortal frames to enjoy a place fitted for incorruptible and immortal beings.'

51—53. Here commences the third part of the discourse, which is more especially intended for those who, while admitting the doctrine of a resurrection of the body, staggered at the manner, time, and other circumstances. The preceding verse seems to have been intended as a connect-k 1 Thess. 4. 16 τες μὲν οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα, πάντες δὲ ἀλλαγησόμεθα, [k] ἐν 52 ἀτόμῳ, ἐν ῥιπῇ ὀφθαλμοῦ, ἐν τῇ ἐσχάτῃ σάλπιγγι· (σαλπίσει γάρ, καὶ οἱ νεκροὶ ἐγερθήσονται ἄφθαρτοι, καὶ ἡμεῖς l 2 Cor. 5. 4. ἀλλαγησόμεθα·) [l] δεῖ γὰρ τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσασθαι 53 ἀφθαρσίαν, καὶ τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσασθαι ἀθανασίαν.

ing link, to unite what is said from vv. 34—50 inclusive, to what is said at vv. 51—57; or (as Calvin understands it), having, 1st, shown that there will be a resurrection of the dead, and, 2dly, pointed out of what kind it will be, the Apostle now enters into a more minute description of the manner [and that for the sake of those who stumbled at that only], which he calls a mystery, because it had been hitherto not unfolded in Scripture, and also for the purpose of drawing greater attention to what he is saying.

51. ἰδοὺ, μυστήριον ὑμῖν λέγω, &c.] Having sufficiently shown how the objections and cavils of the adversaries were to be removed and refuted, and the belief of the faithful fortified, the Apostle now proceeds to communicate, for their information, some new and most important mysteries of the faith, certain verities hitherto quite unknown, and which could be derived from no other source but a Divine revelation,—especially of the transmutation, and, as it were, transfiguration of those faithful servants of Christ who shall be found alive at the last day, and of the incorruptibility and immortality to be communicated; intermixing some intimations as to the manner and the order of events which shall usher in the last great day.

The ἰδοὺ has great force, since it calls their attention to what was both new and momentous,—a matter at once of wonder and of joy. By μυστήριον is here meant a thing hitherto unknown, and not to be known without a Divine revelation. Ἀλλάσσεσθαι is here put for μετασχηματίζεσθαι, Phil. iii. 21, or μεταμορφοῦσθαι, Matt. xvii. 2. Render, 'We shall not indeed all of us die; but we shall (i. e. must) all be changed (i. e. undergo a transmutation, in order to incorruptibility) before we can enter into heaven.' Meaning, 'All must undergo the change necessary to fit them for immortality, both those alive and those dead. The latter, after previous death and corruption, on being again restored to life, shall receive a glorified body; the former without having undergone death and corruption, being alive, be so changed, that the mortal body shall be absorbed by an immortal one (2 Cor. v. 4), and those parts of the body which are incapable of eternal life and heavenly felicity, shall be separated and cast aside; while those which may furnish the materials of a glorified body, shall remain and be preserved, and assume a form and fashion suited to eternity.'

The use of the first person (we) will not prove that the Apostle thought the day of judgment to be so near at hand, that he and his contemporaries might see it, since (as the best Expositors are agreed) it appears to be used per κοίνωσιν; the Apostle here speaking in the person of those alive at the last day, or, at least, meaning thereby to designate such as should be found alive. Gerdesius.

52. The Apostle now indicates the mode of this change, as being most sudden; for ἐν ἀτόμῳ (scil. χρόνῳ) and ἐν ῥιπῇ were common expressions to denote the shortest conceivable time. Ἐν ἐσχάτῃ σάλπιγγι. To discuss, with some, the number of trumpets to be sounded, is, I think, quite irrelevant; though the opinion that there will be seven trumpetings, has some countenance from a passage of Rev. x. 7, where the seventh trumpet is the solemn announcement that the mystery of God is accomplished. We may here suppose an allusion to the custom both of the Jews and Greeks, by which summons to judicature, or other meetings for civil or religious purposes were signified by sound of trumpet; yet I cannot agree with Heydenreich, who would resolve all into metaphor. We cannot surely venture to infer less from the plain words of the Apostle, than that the Almighty will issue his FIAT for the solemn convocation of the dead and living,—if not by sound of a trumpet literally, yet by some notable external sign; but of what nature, we must not presume to pronounce.

— καὶ οἱ νεκροὶ, &c.] In the καὶ there is an implied notion of instantaneous performance. See Ps. xxxiii. 9. cxlviii. 5. Judith xvi. 14. Job v. 20. By ἡμεῖς is meant ἡμεῖς οἱ τότε ζῶντες: the Apostle here, as before, speaking not in his own person, but in that of the persons then alive. Ἀλλαγησόμεθα signifies, 'we shall undergo the change in question, receive incorruptible in the place of corruptible bodies.' How, and in what way, and to what degree, it is not for us to speculate,—except by adverting, by way of comparison, to the change which takes place in the transformation of the caterpillar to a butterfly, which has ever been considered an emblem of the separate existence of the soul.

53. This is certainly not (as has been generally supposed) a mere repetition, for greater effect, of what was said at ver. 50; but as there we have the assertion that this change of corruptible to incorruptible will take place, so here we are told that it must take place. I have thought proper to notice this error, chiefly because it has led to another and far more serious one; namely, that of supposing (as many have done) that there is here, in addition to what was before said, a specification of the manner of the change,—namely, by the corruptible body of those then alive having an incorruptible body (σῶμα αὐγοειδὲς) put over it as a garment; like the doctrine of the Platonic philosophers as to an ὄχημα (so Hierocl. speaks of ὀχήματα πνευματικά), learnedly treated on by Cudworth, Intell. System, iii. 3, 27, p. 1072: a notion which, though it may seem to be somewhat countenanced by 2 Cor. v. 2, 3, rests on no solid foundation, and merely took its rise from the peculiar metaphor here employed, formed on a blending of two images. For the best recent Expositors are, with reason, agreed that ἐνδύσασθαι here and at ver. 54 only signifies, by a figure taken from putting off one garment and putting on another, to assume, receive, as Eph. iv. 24. Col. iii. 10.

54 [m]῞Οταν δὲ τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσηται ἀφθαρσίαν, καὶ τὸ m Isa. 25. 8. Hos. 13. 14 θνητὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσηται ἀθανασίαν, τότε γενήσεται ὁ λόγος Heb. 2. 14.
55 ὁ γεγραμμένος· Κατεπόθη ὁ θάνατος εἰς νῖκος. Ποῦ σου, θάνατε, τὸ κέντρον; ποῦ σου, ᾅδη, τὸ νῖκος; 56 ([n]τὸ δὲ κέντρον τοῦ θανάτου ἡ ἁμαρτία· ἡ δὲ δύναμις τῆς n Rom. 5. 12. & 3. 20. & 7. 5.
57 ἁμαρτίας ὁ νόμος.) [o]Τῷ δὲ Θεῷ χάρις τῷ διδόντι ἡμῖν τὸ o 1 John 5. 5. Rom. 7. 25.
58 νῖκος διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ! ῞Ωστε, ἀδελφοί & 8. 37.
μου ἀγαπητοὶ, ἑδραῖοι γίνεσθε, ἀμετακίνητοι, περισσεύοντες ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ τοῦ Κυρίου πάντοτε, εἰδότες ὅτι ὁ κόπος ὑμῶν οὐκ ἔστι κενὸς ἐν Κυρίῳ.

54. The Apostle now shows the conformity of this doctrine of the resurrection of the dead with the sure word of prophecy.

— γενήσεται] 'shall be [accomplished].' Ὁ λόγος, 'the prophecy,' namely, of Isaiah xxv. 8. The words agree with the version of Theodotion, though both differ from the Septuagint and the Hebrew; agreeing with it, however, in εἰς νῖκος, which is by almost all Commentators taken for εἰς τέλος, i. e. εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα; though Bp. Marsh successfully vindicates our English Translators, who render it 'in victory,' which, indeed, is confirmed by the Peschito Syriac. Instead of seeking for a Hebraism in νῖκος, he rightly, I think, applies it to κατεπόθη, and translates the passage, 'Death is overcome triumphantly;' the Hebrew verb signifying, literally, absorpsit, and, figuratively, vicit.

In the next words the style rises, by a bold personification of ῞Αιδης, to the highest pitch, and the sense is couched in a kind of song of triumph for the victory obtained by Christ over Death and the Grave; whatever of bitterness either might heretofore have had, being then removed by Christ. The passage is from Hos. xiii. 14; and the Apostle's words differ only from the ancient Versions by the transposition of νῖκος and κέντρον, except that for νῖκος the Sept. has δίκη. But I suspect that to be only a gloss on νεῖκος, which reading is found in some of the Fathers, though evidently only an error of the scribes for νῖκος. The Hebrew, indeed, differs too materially to admit of any mode of reconciliation. Yet it differs more in words than sense; so that it was not inapplicable to the Apostle's purpose. The term κέντρον is by some supposed to allude to the dart, which the Jewish writers, and many Classical and modern poets, depict Death as holding. So in Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. 672, it is said of Death,

'Black it stood as Night,
Fierce as ten Furies, terrible as Hell,
And shook a dreadful dart.'

The Greek Commentators, however, and, of the modern ones, Grotius, Crellius, Vorstius, and Krause (more rightly, I think,) suppose an allusion to the sting of serpents or scorpions. So Rev. ix. 10, καὶ ἔχουσιν οὐρὰς ὁμοίας σκορπίοις, καὶ κέντρα ἦν ἐν ταῖς οὐραῖς αὐτῶν. This, indeed, is exceedingly confirmed by the next words; for, as Theophylact remarks, 'the sting of serpents constitutes their strength, and when that is taken away, they cannot hurt, if they would.' Thus the sense of the next words is: 'Now it is sin that gives death its chief power over us, and thus occasions its greatest bitterness.'

56. ἡ δὲ δύναμις τῆς ἁμαρτίας ὁ νόμος.] Render, 'It is the Law which is the strength of sin;' i. e. what causes this power of sin, imparts this power to it. By ὁ νόμος seems to be meant, not the law of Moses (as most Commentators explain), but, as the Greek Commentators, and, of the modern ones, Grotius, Crellius, &c. understand, law of every kind, both natural and revealed. So Rom. v. 13, ἁμαρτία δὲ οὐκ ἐλλογεῖται μὴ ὄντος νόμου. See also Rom. iv. 15, and vii. 9.

57. The Apostle concludes with a thanksgiving to God, the Author of all good, and an exhortation (as in the parallel passage of 1 Thess. iv. 13—18) to be stedfast in the faith of the Gospel, and especially in this important article of the resurrection of the dead. And first with respect to the former, it may be regarded as uttered by the Apostle in a sort of foretaste, through faith, of that period of glory, when he should join with the heavenly choir in singing, Ἡ σωτηρία τῷ Θεῷ ἡμῶν, τῷ καθημένῳ ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου, καὶ τῷ Ἀρνίῳ! Rev. vii. 10. Of this verse the full sense is ably drawn forth in a masterly Sermon of Cudworth (on this text), where he considers this victory as a three-fold victory, obtained over a three-fold enemy; 1. over Sin, as that which aggravates the guilt, and exasperates the power of Sin; 2. over the Law, as that which aggravates the guilt, and exasperates the power of Sin; 3. over Death, the consequence of sin; and shows that the victory over death is expressed by the resurrection of the body to life and immortality; which, as it was meritoriously procured for us by Christ's dying upon the cross, so it will be really effected at last by the same Spirit of Christ which gives the victory over sin here. See Rom. viii. 11.

58. The Apostle now concludes his appeal with a practical corollary on the foregoing ratiocination on the resurrection of the dead, enjoining three duties; 1. firmness in faith; 2. immovableness in hope; 3. proficiency in holiness and good works of every kind. That the expressions ἑδραῖοι and ἀμετακίνητοι have respectively this reference, is plain from Col. i. 23.

They were very properly exhorted to that firmness in the faith, which was justly called for by the authority on which the above revelations were made; that hope, full of immortality, which must result from a firm faith; and lastly, that zealous performance of all good works, which would put to the test the firmness of their faith, and furnish the fairest fruits of its efficacy. In a Acts 11. 29. Rom. 12. 13. 2 Cor. 8. 4. & 9. 1. b Acts 20. 7. Rev. 1. 10.

c 2 Cor. 8. 16, 19.

XVI. [a] ΠΕΡΙ δὲ τῆς λογίας τῆς εἰς τοὺς ἁγίους, ὥσπερ 1 διέταξα ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Γαλατίας, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς ποιήσατε. [b] Κατὰ μίαν σαββάτων ἕκαστος ὑμῶν παρ' ἑαυτῷ 2 τιθέτω, θησαυρίζων ὅ τι ἂν εὐοδῶται· ἵνα μὴ ὅταν ἔλθω, τότε λογίαι γίνωνται. [c] Ὅταν δὲ παραγένωμαι, οὓς ἐὰν 3 δοκιμάσητε, δι' ἐπιστολῶν τούτους πέμψω ἀπενεγκεῖν τὴν χάριν ὑμῶν εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ. ἐὰν δὲ ᾖ ἄξιον τοῦ κἀμὲ 4 ἑδραῖοι there seems to be, not (what Gerdesius imagines) an agonistic, but an architectural metaphor. Thus Simonides, cited by Grotius, calls a good man χερσί τε καὶ ποσὶ καὶ νόῳ τετράγωνον. And so Dr. Young finely expresses the same idea in his noble lines,— ——— 'On reason build resolve,

That column of true majesty in man.'

— περισσεύοντες ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ. τ. Κ.] The exact import of these words mainly turns on that of the expression περισσεύοντες, which has been somewhat variously interpreted. Of the several senses assigned, that of 'excelling ourselves' is, upon the whole, to be preferred. Theophylact well explains, οὐ μόνον αὐτὸ ἐργαζόμενοι, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκ περιουσίας αὐτὸ ποιοῦντες, 'endeavouring continually to make greater progress;' implying both diligence and perseverance. By the expression ἔργον τοῦ Θεοῦ is certainly not meant almsgiving, nor any other special virtue. But as the exhortation is general, and the motives urging it general, so must the sense be so too; i. e. 'doing all that the Lord would have us do as Christians;' including good works of every kind. So Dr. J. Worthington explains it, 'in all obedience and holiness, every good work;' whatever is commanded by God, and consequently is acceptable to Him; as this very phrase τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Θεοῦ is used at John vi. 29.

The last clause, εἰδότες ὅτι ὁ κόπος, &c., which means 'knowing assuredly that your labour is never in vain in the sight of the Lord,' has reference to the preceding words, περισσεύοντες ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ τοῦ Κυρίου πάντοτε, with allusion to that recompense at the resurrection of the just, the hope of which would be necessary to animate them to continually abounding in every good work; for, as Dr. South truly remarks, 'He who takes away the incitements to duty (in the two great mainsprings of action, Hope and Fear) not only impedes the performance of duty, but hinders its very attempt.'

XVI. 1. τῆς λογίας τῆς εἰς τοὺς ἁγ.] i. e. the collection of alms destined for the relief of poor Christians. Such collections for the relief of indigent Jews of Palestine had been not unfrequent among the foreign Jews; and had now, it seems, been introduced among the Gentile Christians. The reason for which was,—that the Christians of Judæa were, by the arts of Jewish persecution, direct and indirect, brought into great distress. The Article shows that it was well known, and perhaps spoken of in the letter of the Corinthians to St. Paul. The word λογία is no where else found in the Scriptural, and very rarely in the Classical writers; and seems to have been confined to the language of common life. It properly signifies a gleaning, and then, as here, a slight gathering.

2. κατὰ μίαν σαββάτων] 'on the first day of the week;' μίαν being used, by Hebraism, for πρώτην, as in Matt. xxviii. 1; and ἡμέραν understood; q. d. 'on the first of the days of the week;' from which it is plain that Sunday was then set apart by Christians for religious purposes. Τιθέτω, for κατατιθ. Παρ' ἑαυτῷ, 'by him.' French, chez lui, 'at home.' Ὅ τι ἂν εὐοδ. Sub. κατὰ, 'according as he has prospered, or prospers.' Thus καθ' ὅ τι is equivalent to καθώς. So Acts xi. 29, καθὼς ηὐπορεῖτό τις. Εὐοδοῦσθαι signifies properly, 'to be set right on one's way,' and metaphorically, 'to prosper.' It is in the Classical writers almost always used of a thing, but in the New Test. (as here and Rom. i. 10. 3 John 2) of a person. The term is meant to suggest the duty; q. d. 'as any one's industry has been prospered by God, so it is his duty to make a proper return, by doing good unto men, according to His will.' And this should be done on the principle of the offerings, under the old Law, of the ἀπαρχαὶ, which were meant as an acknowledgment to the Giver. Here the Apostle had probably in mind a passage of Ecclus. xxxv. 10, 'Give unto the Most High according as he hath enriched thee.'

The collections in question were directed to be made weekly, because every one is more inclined to contribute by little and little, than all at once; and on the Lord's day, because a participation in the offices of religion most effectually opens the heart to charity. The propriety of our common version will be evident, and the difficulties started by many Commentators at ἵνα μὴ—γίνωνται may be removed by supposing that the Apostle only meant that there should be no private and petty gatherings, then first to be made, when he came, but only one συνεισφορὰ formed, comprehending all the sums which had been gradually laid up by each in private.

3. οὓς ἐὰν δοκ., δι' ἐπιστ. τούτους πέμψω.] There has been some doubt as to the construction, and, as depending thereupon, the sense of the words. Now δι' ἐπιστολῶν may be construed either with the preceding or the following words. But the latter construction is preferable. Thus the διὰ will be for ἐν or σὺν, and may be rendered 'charged with.' Οὓς ἐὰν δοκιμάσητε is to be taken as a brief expression ('whom ye may think proper to choose'), of which examples are found in the Classical writers. Τὴν χάριν ὑμῶν is for τὴν ὑμῶν ἐλεημοσύνην.

4. ἐὰν δὲ ᾖ ἄξιον.] Sub. τὸ χρῆμα, or πρᾶγμα. At ἄξιον supply τῆς ἐμῆς διακονίας. Theophylact and Œcumenius have well pointed out that the force of σὺν ἐμοὶ πορεύσονται is, 'they shall have my company,' I will accompany

5 πορεύεσθαι, σὺν ἐμοὶ πορεύσονται. [d] Ἐλεύσομαι δὲ πρὸς d Acts 19.21. 2 Cor. 1. 16.
ὑμᾶς, ὅταν Μακεδονίαν διέλθω· Μακεδονίαν γὰρ διέρχομαι·
6 [e] πρὸς ὑμᾶς δὲ, τυχὸν, παραμενῶ, ἢ καὶ παραχειμάσω, ἵνα e 2 Cor. 1.15. Rom. 15. 24.
7 ὑμεῖς με προπέμψητε οὗ ἐὰν πορεύωμαι. [f] οὐ θέλω γὰρ ὑμᾶς f Acts 18. 21. supra 4. 19. James 4. 15.
ἄρτι ἐν παρόδῳ ἰδεῖν· ἐλπίζω δὲ χρόνον τινὰ ἐπιμεῖναι πρὸς
8 ὑμᾶς, ἐὰν ὁ Κύριος ἐπιτρέπῃ. Ἐπιμενῶ δὲ ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἕως 9 τῆς Πεντηκοστῆς· [g] θύρα γάρ μοι ἀνέῳγε μεγάλη καὶ ἐνερ- g Acts 14. 27.
γὴς, καὶ ἀντικείμενοι πολλοί.
10 [h] Ἐὰν δὲ ἔλθῃ Τιμόθεος, βλέπετε ἵνα ἀφόβως γένηται h Supra 4. 17. 1 Thess. 3. 2.
πρὸς ὑμᾶς· τὸ γὰρ ἔργον Κυρίου ἐργάζεται, ὡς καὶ ἐγώ· 11 [i] μή τις οὖν αὐτὸν ἐξουθενήσῃ. Προπέμψατε δὲ αὐτὸν ἐν i 1 Tim. 4. 12. 3 John 6.
εἰρήνῃ, ἵνα ἔλθῃ πρός με· ἐκδέχομαι γὰρ αὐτὸν μετὰ τῶν 12 ἀδελφῶν. Περὶ δὲ Ἀπολλὼ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ, πολλὰ παρεκάλεσα αὐτὸν, ἵνα ἔλθῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς μετὰ τῶν ἀδελφῶν· καὶ πάντως οὐκ ἦν θέλημα ἵνα νῦν ἔλθῃ, ἐλεύσεται δὲ ὅταν 13 εὐκαιρήσῃ. [k] Γρηγορεῖτε, στήκετε ἐν τῇ πίστει· ἀνδρίζεσθε, k Matt. 24. 42. Eph. 6. 10. Col. 1. 11.
14 κραταιοῦσθε. [l] πάντα ὑμῶν ἐν ἀγάπῃ γινέσθω. l Supra 13.1.

them. Thus the full sense is this: 'If the sum of money collected be considerable enough, or any other occasion require it, I will accompany them.'

It seems that the money was sent by two persons. That this had been the case with the sacred money contributed by the foreign Jews to the temple at Jerusalem, appears from Josephus, Ant. xvi. 6. 7, where he speaks of the persons who were to carry it to Jerusalem ἕνεκα κομιδῆς (for so I would conjecture, instead of the corrupt ἀνακομιδῆς) συμπορευομένους, ('going together,') which implies at least two.

5. The Apostle fixes the time when he shall visit them, viz. on the occasion of his passage through Macedonia. The words ὅταν Μακεδονίαν—διέρχομαι are well rendered by Professor Scholefield, 'When I [shall] have passed through Macedonia; for I am passing through Macedonia;' the former alteration of the common Version being required by the proprietas linguæ; the latter, by the geography of Greece.

6. πρὸς ὑμᾶς δὲ, τυχὸν, παραμενῶ.] 'And I shall [in my way] make some stay with you.' Ἢ καὶ παραχ. 'or even remain for the winter.' Τυχὸν is an adverb formed from the second Aorist participle neuter, with an ellipsis of κατὰ τὸ, occurring in Xen. Anab. v. 9. 20, and other passages of the best writers. Ἵνα has here the eventual sense, denoting simply result. This sending, and, in some degree, accompanying forward the teachers of Christianity, was an established custom in the first ages; and especially when the stay was long, which the Apostle here contemplates. Οὗ ἐὰν πορ., viz. into Judæa, as we find from 2 Cor. i. 16.

7. οὐ ϑέλω—ἰδεῖν.] This is (as Œcumenius says) exegetical of the preceding. The ἄρτι is meant to be emphatical, and is not well rendered now. At least the full sense is, 'now that I have delayed so long.' Ἐν παρόδῳ, equivalent to the French en passant.

8. τῆς Πεντηκοστῆς] i. e. 'the time of Pentecost,' with which even the Gentile converts must have been well acquainted. See Note on Acts xxvii. 9.

9. ϑύρα] i. e. an opportunity for effecting any thing; a sense in which the word was sometimes used by the Classical writers; see Acts xiv. 27. Ἀνέῳγε is for ἀνέῳκται, which some Atticists thought a solecism, but others defended. It only occurs in the later writers. Ἐνεργὴς is well explained by a Glossographer ἑτοίμη πρὸς ἐργασίαν· and may be rendered 'effective.' So Thucydides iii. 17, πλεῖσται δὲ νῆες ἐνεργοὶ ἐγένοντο. In καὶ ἀντικείμ. πολλοὶ the καὶ may be better taken for καίπερ, although, than rendered for. But it would rather seem that the meaning is not fully evolved, but is to be supplied from what precedes; q. d. ['And as there are many adversaries, there is need of my further stay;] for,' &c.

10. ἔλθῃ] 'should come [unto you]' or be come. It appears from iv. 17, that that was doubtful. Βλέπετε—ὑμᾶς. The sense is: 'Take heed that he may be (i. e. abide) with you without molestation;' namely, that of factious opposition. The words τὸ γὰρ ἔργον—ἐγὼ seem meant to anticipate their undervaluing him on the score of his youth and inferior spiritual gifts; and their general sense is, 'He discharges the office of preacher of the Gospel even as I do,' i. e. he is as much a divinely commissioned minister of God as myself.

11. μή τις—ἐξουθενήσῃ.] There was, as Theophylact observes, reason to fear this, since he was young, alone, and had the charge of so wealthy and proud a people.

12. πάντως οὐκ ἦν ϑέλημα, &c.] Supply αὐτῷ. Meaning, 'but it was not fully his inclination to go now.' That αὐτῷ is the true ellipsis, and not, as Commentators suppose, αὐτοῦ, I have shown in the Note on Matt. xviii. 14, where I have pointed out the true nature of the phrase. Here I am supported by the authority of the Arabic and Ethiopic Versions, as also of Estius and Menochius.

m Supra 1. 16. Rom. 16 5. [m] Παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί· οἴδατε τὴν οἰκίαν Στε- 15 φανᾶ, ὅτι ἐστὶν ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀχαΐας, καὶ εἰς διακονίαν τοῖς n Phil. 2. 29. 1 Thess. 5. 12. Heb. 13. 7. ἁγίοις ἔταξαν ἑαυτούς· [n] ἵνα καὶ ὑμεῖς ὑποτάσσησθε τοῖς 16 τοιούτοις, καὶ παντὶ τῷ συνεργοῦντι καὶ κοπιῶντι. Χαίρω 17
δὲ ἐπὶ τῇ παρουσίᾳ Στεφανᾶ καὶ Φουρτουνάτου καὶ Ἀχαϊκοῦ, ὅτι τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα οὗτοι ἀνεπλήρωσαν· ἀνέπαυσαν γὰρ 18
τὸ ἐμὸν πνεῦμα καὶ τὸ ὑμῶν. ἐπιγινώσκετε οὖν τοὺς τοιούo Rom. 16. 5. τους. [o] Ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς αἱ ἐκκλησίαι τῆς Ἀσίας· ἀσπά- 19 ζονται ὑμᾶς ἐν Κυρίῳ πολλὰ Ἀκύλας καὶ Πρίσκιλλα, σὺν p 2 Cor. 13. 12. 1 Pet. 5. 14. τῇ κατ᾽ οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίᾳ· [p] ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ ἀδελφοὶ 20 πάντες. ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ.

13, 14. This concluding counsel is given with reference to all the preceding cautions. They were in the midst of temptations; therefore he bids them 'watch.' They had among them false teachers, and therefore he tells them to 'stand fast in the faith.' They had divers trials to encounter, and therefore he says to them, 'quit you like men; be strong.' There were, moreover, great contentions among them, and therefore he adds, 'Let all things be done with charity.' Simeon, Hor. Homil.

13. γρηγορεῖτε—κραταιοῦσθε.] These words may be understood of Christian watchfulness generally; but, when taken in connexion with what precedes, they must be understood of stedfastness in the faith (στήκετε), watchfulness against the arts of false teachers (γρηγορεῖτε), and a manly firmness in maintaining what they conscientiously believed to be the truth. On στήκ. ἐν τῇ πίστει, see Note on xv. 58. Ἀνδρ. and κρατ. may be agonistical metaphors; but it would rather seem that the Apostle had in mind 1 Sam. iv. 9, κραταιοῦσθε καὶ γίνεσθε εἰς ἄνδρας· i. e. by Hebraism γίνεσθε ἄνδρες; with which we may compare the Homeric ἀνέρες ἐστέ; comp. Eph. vi. 10. Κρατ. is a word not occurring in the Classical writers, although frequent in the LXX., as Ps. xxx. 24, ἀνδρίζεσθε, καὶ κραταιούσθω ἡ καρδία ὑμῶν. It is frequently used of perseverance in opinion, or determination. The literal meaning of κραταιοῦσθαι is, 'to gird up one's loins, or string up one's nerves for any arduous undertaking.' The Apostle has especially in view perseverance in sound doctrine; the not being henceforth tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine; see Note on supra xv. 58, and Eph. iv. 14. The Asyndeton imparts peculiar vigour to the expression.

14. πάντα—ἀγάπῃ γινέσθω.] It is worthy of remark, that exhortations to constancy in doctrine are often, as here, followed up with an admonition to love, and to 'keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.'

15. The construction here is somewhat involved; nor is it to be cleared either by throwing the words, with some, into a parenthesis; or with others, by supposing a transposition. The present order is very natural, and may be best adjusted by supposing an ellipsis of ὅτι, 'forasmuch as,' omitted because of the ὅτι just after.

— εἰς διακ. τοῖς ἁγ. ἔτ. ἑ.] The sense is, 'have devoted themselves to ministering unto the saints.' Similarly it is said, Xen. Mem. ii. 1. 11, οὐδὲ εἰς τὴν δουλείαν ἐμαυτὸν τάττω. The word διακ. cannot have reference to the offices and duties of Deacons; but may be supposed to denote zealously performing the duties of hospitality and general kindness to poor Christians, especially strangers.

16. The ἵνα connects with παρακαλῶ. Ὑποτάσσ. may mean, as many Commentators, ancient and modern, explain, 'show them all due respect and deference.' Though, as there seems to be some reference to the preceding ἔταξαν ἑαυτοὺς (which, by a military metaphor, signifies 'they have ranged or set themselves'), may rather mean 'range yourselves under and co-operate with them in their benevolent designs.'

17. ὅτι τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστ. οὗτοι ἀνεπλ.] The sense of these words is somewhat obscure, probably from the popular mode of expression. The ancient Interpreters explain it, 'They have taken this long journey to act as your representatives.' This, however, seems not a little harsh: and such the Apostle could not mean. I prefer (with Beza, Rosenmuller, Schleusner, and Iaspis) to render, 'they have supplied your absence;' i. e. supplied the deficiency occasioned by your absence (as in Phil. ii. 30), or, to use the words of Doddridge in his paraphrase, 'have given me, by their converse and friendly offices, that consolation, which I might justly have expected from you all, had I enjoyed an opportunity of conversing with you.'

18. ἀνέπαυσαν γὰρ—ὑμῶν.] The sense of these words is mistaken by most of the modern Commentators, though well explained by the ancient ones, who rightly regard them as exegetical of the preceding, τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστ. ἀνεπλ. Ἀνέπαυσαν, 'have solaced;' a use of the word quite Hellenistic. The real sense of the clause seems to be this: 'By thus supplying your absence, they have benefited us both;' which was really the case; for St. Paul gained information of the state of those absent, and they gained, in the counsel afforded to them by the Apostle.

— ἐπιγινώσκετε τ. τ.] i. e. 'acknowledge and notice such with affection and respect.'

19. τῇ κατ᾽ οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλ.] It is strange that some of the best modern Commentators should explain this of all the Christians in their family. The most natural and probable sense is that adopted by the Greek Commentators, and of the modern ones, by Mede, Wells, Pearce, Iaspis, and Slade, 'the congregation that was accustomed to meet, for divine worship, at their house.' And this sense has the advantage of including the other. See more in the Note on Rom. xvi. 5.

21, 22 [q] Ὁ ἀσπασμὸς τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ Παύλου· [r] εἴ τις οὐ φιλεῖ
23 τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν, ἤτω ἀνάθεμα, μαρὰν ἀθά· [s] ἡ 24 χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μεθ' ὑμῶν· ἡ ἀγάπη μου μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. ἀμήν.

[q] 2 Thess. 3. 17.
[r] Eph. 6. 24.
[s] Rom. 16. 20.

[Πρὸς Κορινθίους πρώτη ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Φιλίππων διὰ Στεφανᾶ, καὶ Φουρτουνάτου, καὶ Ἀχαϊκοῦ, καὶ Τιμοθέου.]

20. ἀσπάζονται—φιλ. ἁγ.] On this custom see Note on Rom. xvi. 16. Krause appositely cites Justin Martyr. Apol. i. 85, ἀλλήλους ἀσπαζόμεθα παυσάμενοι τῶν εὐχῶν.

21. ὁ ἀσπασμὸς—Π.] Schoettgen remarks on the ellipsis, which he supplies thus: 'Restat salutatio a me, quæ est adscripta a me ipso, propriâ manu.' He adds, that we may suppose this was written by Paul with his own hand, though he had dictated the rest to some scribe. The Apostle was accustomed to dictate letters, and, at the end, to add a sentence with his own hand to prevent fraud; see Rom. xvi. 23. Gal. vi. 11. 2 Thess. iii. 17. Philem. 19. Χεὶρ is rarely used, as here, for handwriting; insomuch that, were there not an example found in Hyperides, we might suspect this to be a Latinism.

22. ἤτω.] On this form see Win. Gr. § 10. 2. 6. On ἀνάθεμα see Note on xii. 3. Μαρὰν ἀθὰ is a Syro-Chaldee expression, signifying, 'the Lord is to come;' i. e. will come, to take vengeance on the disobedient and vicious. Hence with the words Anathema Maranatha the Jews began their papers of excommunication.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΚΟΡΙΝΘΙΟΥΣ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ.

---

a Phil. 1. 1.

I. [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, διὰ θελή- 1
ματος Θεοῦ, καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφὸς, τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ

This second Epistle was written about a year after the first, and as St. Paul was on his progress through Macedonia (see 1 Cor. xvi. 5) and probably at Philippi, as the subscription attests. This is plain from a consideration of the journeys, and the occurrences which had taken place since his writing the first, on which see Horne's Introduction. From ix. 2—4, it appears to have been transmitted to the Corinthians by Titus and his colleagues, who were on the road from Macedonia to Corinth, to finish the collection of the contributions for the relief of the poor Christians in Judæa. The circumstances which led to the writing of this second Epistle were, 1. the peculiar state of the Church at Corinth; 2. the alacrity of the Corinthians in contributing to the necessities of the poor Christians in Judæa, and their kind treatment of Titus; both of which required acknowledgments from the Apostle. Having heard that his first Epistle had produced much good among the Corinthians, and considerably broken the strength of faction against him, he wrote this, to confirm them in the doctrine he had preached, to vindicate himself against the calumnies of his enemies, and so to pave the way for the third visit to them, which he meditated. The scope of the Epistle cannot, however, be well understood without adverting to the partial failure of success which his former Epistle had experienced, at least from certain persons, for whom, therefore, a second address seemed necessary. Not a few, it would seem, of the Corinthians even yet adhered to their false teacher or teachers, and virtually denied the Apostleship of Paul; founding their rejection of his claims even on his manner of address in his first Epistle. Because, too, he had changed his intention of visiting them (see vv. 15, 16) in his way from Ephesus to Macedonia, they charged him with fickleness and irresolution; also with pride and tyranny, on account of his severity towards the incestuous person; and moreover with general arrogance in his ministry, and a haughtiness of demeanour little suitable to the insignificance of his personal appearance. The chief scope, therefore, of the Epistle is to rebut these charges; wherein he, 1. satisfactorily accounts for his not having come to them as soon as he had proposed; 2. he shows that his sentence against the incestuous person was not harsh or severe, but necessary, and, as it appears by the effects, salutary. Accordingly he authorizes them to absolve him from that sentence, and restore him to communion with the Church: 3. he adverts to his great success in preaching the Gospel, and shows that he dwells not upon it for his own glory, but for that of the Gospel, in preaching which he used all diligence and faithfulness, notwithstanding the sore tribulations it brought upon him, and of which he gives a most affecting detail; 4. he excites them to lead a holy life; and, in order thereto, to avoid all communion with idolaters; 5. he desires them to complete their contributions for the poor saints in Judæa; 6. he enters into a long defence of himself against the charge of timidity and personal insignificance. The former he effectually refutes by the severely objurgatory air of his address to the disaffected; see more in Macknight and Horne's Introduction. The most remarkable circumstance in this Epistle is the confidence of the Apostle in the goodness of his cause, and the support from above to bear him out in it, though under difficulties of the most formidable kind; see Scott, who shows at large that 'a stronger internal testimony, not only to his integrity, but divine inspiration, cannot exist; for had there been any collusion, it is next to impossible but such a conduct must have occasioned a disclosure of it.' On the effects produced by this Epistle, see Horne's Introduction. On the chronological difficulty connected with xii. 14, and xiii. 1, 2, see the Notes there. The genuineness of this Epistle is so manifest, from the strongest internal as well as external evidence that it has never been called in question.

τῇ οὔσῃ ἐν Κορίνθῳ, σὺν τοῖς ἁγίοις πᾶσι τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν 2 ὅλῃ τῇ Ἀχαΐᾳ· [b] χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς b Rom. 1. 7. 1 Cor. 1. 3. Eph. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 2.
ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.
3 [c] Εὐλογητὸς ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ c Eph. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 3.
Χριστοῦ, ὁ Πατὴρ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν καὶ Θεὸς πάσης παρα-4 κλήσεως, [d] ὁ παρακαλῶν ἡμᾶς ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ θλίψει ἡμῶν, d Infra 7. 6.
εἰς τὸ δύνασθαι ἡμᾶς παρακαλεῖν τοὺς ἐν πάσῃ θλίψει, διὰ τῆς παρακλήσεως ἧς παρακαλούμεθα αὐτοὶ ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ· 5 [e] ὅτι καθὼς περισσεύει τὰ παθήματα τοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς ἡμᾶς, e Infra 4. 8—12. Col. 1. 24.
οὕτω διὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ περισσεύει καὶ ἡ παράκλησις ἡμῶν.

1. In this Chapter, after his usual salutation, he (vv. 1—2) blesses God for the consolations under tribulation, and the deliverances in dangers vouchsafed to him, which were intended both for the comfort of others similarly circumstanced, and to himself an earnest of future aid from above. (vv. 3—11.) He rejoices in the testimony of his conscience, and expresses his confidence in their attachment to him, which had induced him to propose again visiting them (12—14), and shows that his deferring this visit did not arise from capricious mutability (vv. 15, 18); and, after adverting to the stability of God's promises, through Christ, assures them that he had postponed his visit from motives of lenity, that the faulty might have time to repent, and that he himself might be spared the pain of using severity, vv. 17—24.

1. Παῦλος ἀπόστολος.] See Note on 1 Cor. i. 1.

— ὁ ἀδελφός.] Not 'a brother,' as Doddridge renders; that not being permitted by the Article, (especially as it is here used, in a very strong sense, for the possessive pronoun,) but either 'our brother,' meaning fellow-Christian, or, what is more apt and suitable to the intent of the Apostle (which was to give consequence to the person whom he had sent in some degree as his legate), 'our brother [minister of the Gospel].' See Estius, Wolf, Locke, and Macknight.

2. χάρις—Χριστοῦ.] See Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3, and Luke xxiv. 36.

3. εὐλογ. ὁ Θεὸς, &c.] Doddridge, Macknight, and Newcome translate, 'praised be the God and Father of,' &c. But there is no sufficient reason to deviate from the common version, 'blessed be God, even the Father,' &c., which is supported by the authority of the ancient Versions and ancient Commentators, and by the most eminent modern Expositors. See the Notes of Calvin and Whitby. We have here an usual form of thanksgiving, occurring in eleven out of the thirteen Epistles of St. Paul. On ὁ Πατὴρ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν, Wetstein remarks that the Jews much used the expressions our Father, our merciful Father, in their prayers. The expression is not, as most recent Commentators regard it, a mere Hebraism, by which substantives in the Genitive are put for adjectives of like signification: a use, indeed, not confined to the Hebrew, being often resorted to as possessing more spirit than the ordinary usage. Thus the sense here conveyed is (as Chrysostom and the ancient Commentators point out), 'that God is the fountain of mercy and the source of comfort.'

4. ὁ παρακαλῶν] for παρηγορῶν or παραμυθῶν, as at Acts xvi. 40. xx. 12, and elsewhere. Thus παρακαλεῖν signifies literally to 'bid any one take courage,' by suggesting to him the reasons for hope and confidence. By ἡμεῖς is meant (as the best Expositors are agreed) the Apostle himself, who, Theodoret thinks, uses the expression δύνασθαι out of modesty. But though the word must not be pressed on, neither must it be thus explained away. For, as Calvin well remarks, 'ut non sibi vivebat Apostolus, sed Ecclesiæ; ita quidquid gratiarum in ipsum conferebat Deus, non sibi soli datum reputabat, sed quo plus ad alios juvandos haberet facultatis.' The terms παρακλήσεως and παρακαλούμεθα must not be confined to any one of the sources of comfort, but be understood generally of all; especially of that spiritual support breathed into his soul by the great Comforter sent from God, and who is GOD. Now that comfort would be imparted to others, both for communicating to them the grounds of it, and for inspiring them with the same spirit of devotedness to the Gospel which filled his own bosom.

5. περισσεύει—εἰς ἡμᾶς.] Literally, 'have occurred to us abundantly.' So Rom. v. 15, ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ — εἰς τοὺς πολλοὺς ἐπερίσσευσε. The τοῦ just after is added on the authority of several of the most ancient MSS., and after the example of the most eminent Editors. In τὰ παθ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ the Genitive may, with most ancient and earlier modern Expositors, be so taken as to denote the sufferings endured by Christ, inasmuch as the sufferings of Christ's members for his sake are styled his sufferings, as being evils inflicted on his members out of enmity to him, and by reason of their mystical union with him, and the sympathy he has with them in their sufferings, as Rom. viii. 17. It is better, however, with others, to interpret 'the sufferings endured for Christ's sake and for his glory:' of which force of the Genitive examples are not rare. So Eph. iii. 1, ἐγὼ Παῦλος ὁ δέσμιος τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ. Thus the sense will be, 'because, in proportion to the sufferings to which the Gospel of Christ abundantly exposes us, so does the same Gospel supply us with abundant consolation [which we may administer to others];' which last words, implied from the preceding verse, form the true vinculum between this and the next verse, on the connexion of which Expositors have been perplexed. The words, then, of ver. 6 are meant to further develope the foregoing sense. Σωτηρίας ὑμῶν, 'for the saving of your souls.' In the f Infra 4. 15, 17. 2 Tim. 2. 10. g Rom. 8. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 11. h Acts 19. 23, &c. 1 Cor. 15. 32.

[f] Εἴτε δὲ θλιβόμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτη- 6 ρίας, τῆς ἐνεργουμένης ἐν ὑπομονῇ τῶν αὐτῶν παθημάτων, ὧν καὶ ἡμεῖς πάσχομεν· (καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς ἡμῶν βεβαία ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν·) εἴτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας· [g] εἰδότες ὅτι ὥσπερ κοινωνοί ἐστε τῶν παθημά- 7 των, οὕτω καὶ τῆς παρακλήσεως. [h] Οὐ γὰρ θέλομεν ὑμᾶς 8 ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοὶ, ὑπὲρ τῆς θλίψεως ἡμῶν τῆς γενομένης ἡμῖν

next words the order varies exceedingly in different Editions and MSS. The textus receptus (derived from the later Editions of Beza and Elzevir) has: εἴτε δὲ θλιβόμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας, τῆς ἐνεργουμένης ἐν ὑπομονῇ τῶν αὐτῶν παθημάτων ὧν καὶ ἡμεῖς πάσχομεν· εἴτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας· καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς ἡμῶν βεβαία ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν. Some ancient MSS., as A., C., and ten others, together with the Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and some Italic Versions have: εἴτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως, τῆς ἐνεργουμένης ἐν ὑπομονῇ τῶν αὐτῶν παθημάτων, ὧν καὶ ἡμεῖς πάσχομεν· (καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς ἡμῶν βεβαία ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν·) εἰδότες ὅτι, &c. But this, though edited by Griesbach, Tittman, and Vater, is founded on slender external evidence, and is by no means strong in internal; for it savours of the alteration of the early Critics. Greatly preferable is the reading of very many other MSS., several Versions and Fathers, also the Edit. Princ., Erasm. 1, Beza 1, and other early Editions: εἴτε δὲ θλιβόμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας, τῆς ἐνεργουμένης ἐν ὑπομονῇ τῶν αὐτῶν παθημάτων, ὧν καὶ ἡμεῖς πάσχομεν· καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς ἡμῶν βεβαία ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν· εἴτε παρακαλούμεθα, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας. This reading was preferred by Calvin and Beza, adopted by Wetstein, and edited by Matthæi and Lachmann: and with reason; for the evidence in its favour is very strong; while that for the common reading is exceedingly weak. The context, too, as Rinck observes, strongly countenances this reading. The transposition of the clause καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς—ὑμῶν to the end of the verse was, no doubt, made by those over-nice Critics, who thought it interrupted the antithesis between εἴτε θλιβ., &c. and εἴτε παρακ. This class of Critics were, however, far less bold than those who, besides making use of the same transposition, introduced other alterations,—partly to prevent tautology, and partly to render the interpretation the easier; though, in fact, it yields a very objectionable sense; for, adopting the transposition of the clause τῆς ἐνεργουμένης—πάσχομεν, it is difficult to see how their consolation could be promoted by their bearing the same sufferings as the Apostle. The sentiment cannot be admitted without great violence to the interpretation. Τῆς ἐνεργουμένης should be referred to both παρακλήσεως and σωτηρίας. The Apostle means to say, that both his affliction and his consolation is calculated to profit them; and, in expressing this sentiment, he interposes the clause τῆς ἐνεργουμένης—πάσχομεν to show how his affliction may profit them: it will, he says, be made efficacious, by their patiently bearing, after his example, the same afflictions that he suffers. To this he subjoins a parenthetical clause, expressive of his hope and trust respecting them, viz. that they will copy his example. Thus it is evident that the transposition of the clause καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς—ὑμῶν, according to either the textus receptus or that of Griesbach, though it makes the passage read better, yet, in the latter case, injures the sense, and, in the former, misrepresents the Apostle's meaning. The Apostle did not intend to show how his consolation might be effectual for their consolation; for that was too plain to need being touched on. See Scott. In fact, the most certain of all Critical canons demands the rejection of both those texts, and the preference to be given to that adopted by Wetstein and Matthæi; for nothing is more evident than that that, in the somewhat harsh and involved nature of the phraseology (highly, however, characteristic of St. Paul), presents a reading from which the others might spring; while the other texts, and the readings which are modifications of them, arose from various attempts to remove the difficulty. The words καὶ σωτηρίας were thrown out partly by those who wished to remove a tautology (though, in fact, tautologies of this kind, where the sense is strengthened, are frequent in St. Paul and the best writers of every language and every age), and partly by those who stumbled, not seeing how the Apostle's consolation could promote not only their consolation, but salvation. 'Ενεργ. is here used as at 2 Cor. iv. 12. Gal. iii. 5, and v. 6. 1 Thess. ii. 13. Rom. vii. 5. Gal. v. 6. See Bp. Bull's Exam. p. 9.

7. εἰδότες.] There is here an anacoluthon, such as is frequent in the best writers, especially Thucyd. and Herodot.; the participle being used for a verb and γάρ. This verse is explanatory of the preceding. They were partakers of his sufferings by sympathy; and of his consolation they could not fail to be likewise partakers, by being like-minded, and as firm in the faith as he was.

8. The γὰρ here has reference to παθημ. in the preceding verse; q. d. 'For of afflictions, I would have you to know, I have had my share.' The ὑπὲρ is for περὶ, which is found in a few MSS. and Fathers, but is plainly a gloss.

On the circumstance here adverted to by the Apostle, the Commentators differ in opinion. Some refer it to the persecutions at Lystra, mentioned in Acts xiv. 19, 20; others, with more probability, to what happened during the commotions at Ephesus mentioned in Acts xix. 26, seq. Καθ' ὑπερβολὴν is for ὑπερβαλλόντως, as Rom. vii. 13. With ἐβαρήθ. I would compare Aristoph. ap. Zonaræ Lex., p. 1785, ἰπούμενος ταῖς συμφοραῖς. Notwithstanding what Rosenmuller and others think, ὥστε ἐξαπορηθῆναι—ζῆν can only mean, 'insomuch that we even despaired of life.' 'Εξαπ. signifies properly 'to ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ, ὅτι καθ᾽ ὑπερβολὴν ἐβαρήθημεν ὑπὲρ δύναμιν, 9 ὥστε ἐξαπορηθῆναι ἡμᾶς καὶ τοῦ ζῇν· [i] ἀλλὰ αὐτοὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς i Jer. 17. 5, 7.

τὸ ἀπόκριμα τοῦ θανάτου ἐσχήκαμεν, ἵνα μὴ πεποιθότες ὦμεν ἐφ᾽ ἑαυτοῖς, ἀλλ᾽ ἐπὶ τῷ Θεῷ τῷ ἐγείροντι τοὺς
10 νεκρούς· [k] ὃς ἐκ τηλικούτου θανάτου ἐῤῥύσατο ἡμᾶς, καὶ k 1 Pet. 2. 9.
11 ῥύεται· εἰς ὃν ἠλπίκαμεν ὅτι καὶ ἔτι ῥύσεται· [l] συνυπουρ- l Rom. 15. 30.
γούντων καὶ ὑμῶν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν τῇ δεήσει, ἵνα ἐκ πολλῶν Phil. 1. 19. infra 4. 15.
προσώπων τὸ εἰς ἡμᾶς χάρισμα διὰ πολλῶν εὐχαριστηθῇ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν.
12 [m] Ἡ γὰρ καύχησις ἡμῶν αὕτη ἐστὶ, τὸ μαρτύριον τῆς m Infra 2. 17.
συνειδήσεως ἡμῶν, ὅτι ἐν ἁπλότητι καὶ εἰλικρινείᾳ Θεοῦ, 1 Cor. 2. 4. 13. infra 4. 2.

stop short in one's progress, from being utterly at a loss to know what course to take.' So iv. 8.

9. ἐν ἑαυτοῖς τὸ ἀπόκριμα τ. θανάτου ἐσχήκαμεν.] This contains a strongly figurative mode of expressing utter despair of life; q. d. the having nought but death before one's eyes. Meaning to say, that he was like one who is lying under condemnation to death; over whom the sword of the Law is continually suspended. So in Joseph. Ant. xvii. 6. 2, death is spoken of as τὸ κατεψηφισμένον, scil. τῶν ἀνθρώπων. Ἀπόκριμα signifies properly a response, and varies its sense according to the occasion. Thus, when used, as here, of judges, it denotes a verdict or sentence. The Article has reference to a clause suppressed; q. d. '[Nay, we had sentence recorded in our minds,] and we had this sentence, in order that we should not trust,' &c. Of the bold figure in ἀπόκριμα ἐσχ. the Commentators adduce no example; and hence the following may be not unacceptable. Thucydides, ii. 53, speaking of the people at Athens during the pestilence, says that 'they set all laws at defiance, from having death continually suspended over them, as a sentence of death already denounced, and which they might continually expect would be carried into execution:' πολὺ δὲ μείζω (scil. τιμωρίαν) τὴν ἤδη κατεψηφισμένην σφῶν ἐπικρεμασθῆναι. And so Philostr. Vit. Apoll. vii. 28, δοκεῖτέ μοι προαποκτιννύντες αὐτοὺς τοῦ καταψηφισθέντος ἂν ὑμῶν, ὡς οἴεσθε, θανάτου.

The next words intimate the purpose or reason why Divine Providence permitted him to be reduced to this state of imminent peril,—namely, that he should learn not to be confident in his own strength. See Calvin and Hyperius.

— πεποιθότες ὦμεν.] Not merely for πεποίθωμεν, but the participle and verb substantive are used to express continuity of action, implying custom. By 'trusting in ourselves,' is meant having regard to our own strength [alone], without reference to Divine aid. Τῷ ἐγείροντι τοὺς νεκροὺς, 'who raiseth the very dead, [and therefore who can preserve the living, in whatsoever peril, or those who are brought near unto death.]' Thus intimating that the deliverance was so great, as to be a kind of resurrection from the dead. 'So (observes Theophylact) we say of persons so wonderfully snatched from the jaws of the grave, that we have seen the resurrection of the dead.'

10. θανάτου] 'deadly peril.' Ἐῤῥύσατο—ῥύσεται. Meaning, 'who formerly delivered, now delivereth, and, we hope and trust, will yet again deliver us.'

— εἰς ὃν ἠλπίκαμεν.] So Herodian vii. 10. 1, εἰς ὃν ἠλπίκεσαν.

11. συνυπουργούντων — δεήσει.] Render, 'you too co-operating in supplication on our behalf,' i. e. on your co-operating, &c.; which is spoken with characteristic modesty. There is not (as some imagine) any transposition of the Article τῇ, for it has no force; this word and προσευχὴ taking the article as being abstract nouns. See Middl. Gr. A. ch. v. § 1, and numerous examples in Schleus. Lex.

— ἵνα ἐκ πολλῶν—ἡμῶν.] These words are, from brevity and perplexity of construction, obscure; but the general sense (similar to that at iv. 15) seems to be this, 'that so the gracious gift [of future deliverance] being bestowed on me, by means of the intercession of many persons, may, by many persons, for me, be acknowledged with thanks;' i. e. may be acknowledged in the thanksgiving also of many for me, i. e. my deliverance; for, as Doddridge observes, nothing is more reasonable than that what is obtained by prayer should be owned in praises. This use of εὐχαριστεῖσθαι (as said of a thing), to be returned thanks for, is very rare.

12. ἡ γὰρ καύχησις, &c.] The connexion seems to be as follows: '[And we trust that God will continue to deliver us, you co-operating with us in prayer;] for our glorying,' &c. Καύχ. signifies a cause for glorying, something on which we may pride ourselves, i. e. towards men; which is implied, and is perhaps suggested, in the words ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ just after. Τὸ μαρτ. Sub. ὃν, 'that which is testified by our own consciences.' On the value of this testimony, and how far we ought to rest on it, see Bp. Sanderson's Second Sermon ad Magistratum, § 9—30. On the former it is finely said by Eurip. Hippol. 431, μόνον δὲ τοῦτο φασ᾽ ἁμιλλᾶσθαι βίῳ ('can compete in value with life'), γνώμην δικαίαν κἀγαθήν.

— ἐν ἁπλότητι καὶ εἰλικρινείᾳ.] The two terms are nearly synonymous; both denoting candour and sincerity. On the former, see Note at Rom. xii. 7, 8; on the latter, Note at 1 Cor. v. 8. The word Θεοῦ may (as most recent Commentators suppose) be meant to raise the quality to the highest pitch. But it is more agreeable to the characteristic modesty of the Apostle to suppose it to have reference to God as the (οὐκ ἐν σοφίᾳ σαρκικῇ, ἀλλ' ἐν χάριτι Θεοῦ) ἀνεστράφημεν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ, περισσοτέρως δὲ πρὸς ὑμᾶς. Οὐ γὰρ ἄλλα 13 γράφομεν ὑμῖν, ἀλλὰ ἢ ἃ ἀναγινώσκετε, ἢ καὶ ἐπιγινώσκετε· n Infra 5. 12. Phil. 2. 16. & 4. 1. 1 Thess. 2. 19, 20. ἐλπίζω δὲ ὅτι καὶ ἕως τέλους ἐπιγνώσεσθε, [n] καθὼς καὶ ἐπέ- 14

γνωτε ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ μέρους· ὅτι καύχημα ὑμῶν ἐσμεν, καθάπερ o Rom. 1. 11. 1 Cor. 16. 5. καὶ ὑμεῖς ἡμῶν, ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ. [o] Καὶ 15 ταύτῃ τῇ πεποιθήσει ἐβουλόμην πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐλθεῖν πρότε-p 1 Cor. 16. 6. ρον, (ἵνα δευτέραν χάριν ἔχητε,) [p] καὶ δι' ὑμῶν διελθεῖν εἰς 16 Μακεδονίαν, καὶ πάλιν ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, q 1 Cor. 16. 5. καὶ ὑφ' ὑμῶν προπεμφθῆναι εἰς τὴν Ἰουδαίαν. [q] Τοῦτο οὖν 17 βουλευόμενος μήτι ἄρα τῇ ἐλαφρίᾳ ἐχρησάμην; ἢ ἃ βου-author thereof by his grace, or to denote something done with reference to him.

— οὐκ ἐν σοφίᾳ σαρκικῇ.] Meaning, in a general way, carnal or secular wisdom, the wisdom of this world. Probably alluding to the arts of the Heathen Sophists and Rhetoricians, and likewise the Christian false teachers. Compare 1 Cor. i. 17, and ii. 1.

— ἐν χάριτι Θεοῦ.] Meaning, 'by the gracious help of God, as shown in the communication of supernatural gifts and miraculous endowments, imparted to the Apostle.' See 1 Cor. xv. 10. Ἀνεστράφημεν, 'we have behaved ourselves.' An expression (like the Latin versari) used with reference to conduct of whatever kind, and signifying se gerere. So Polyb. i. 14, τοὺς ἐν πράγμασι ἀναστραφομένους. Joseph. Ant. xv. 6. 6, ἔλαττον ἢ καλῶς εἶχε ἀναστραφείς.

13. οὐ γὰρ ἄλλα—ἐπιγινώσκετε.] The sense is not very clear; but the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are generally agreed, that there is a reference to the words ἁπλότης and εἰλίκριν. just before. And the real and full sense (not a little mistaken by Expositors) seems to be this: ['I may well say in godly sincerity;] for I write no other things [i. e. doctrines] unto you than what you read, what you even recognise [to be true], and I trust will always continue to acknowledge.' This seems to be a popular manner of speaking, of which the sense is, 'I have no other meaning in what I write, than what is open and legible; agreeably to the obvious purport of the words; I do not write one thing and intend another, express one doctrine and mean another.' For (as Mackn. observes) 'it seems the Faction had affirmed that some passages of Paul's first Epistle were designedly written in ambiguous language, that he might afterwards interpret them as it suited his purpose.' If this interpretation (which is supported by the opinion of almost all the recent Expositors) be thought, as it may, to rest on somewhat precarious proof, and to be little accordant with the words following, we may suppose, with Theophylact, Estius, Beza, Calvin, and Menoch., that the Apostle here means to soften, what might be called arrogance in what he had said; q. d. 'he makes no more boasting in words than what can be proved by deeds; nay, the Corinthians themselves being witnesses; whose own previous knowledge of him would bear testimony to the truth of what they read. Thus ἀναγινώσκετε should be rendered, as it is by Calvin, recognoscitis, 'recognise.' And the word is used thus in Xen. Anab. v. 8. 6, and elsewhere in the Classical writers. There is, too, a kind of climax; for ἐπιγινώσκειν, as Calvin shows, is more significant than ἀναγιν. Thus ἀναγινώσκω has reference to the less favourably disposed; ἐπιγινώσκω, to those who were sincerely and firmly attached to the Apostle. This distinction seems adverted to in the next verse; where, after saying ἐπέγνωτε, he corrects the term by the limitative phrase ἀπὸ μέρους, meaning, 'a part at least of you.'

In ἀλλὰ ἢ there is a pleonasm; since either of the two particles would have been sufficient. Or we may regard this (with Emmerling) as a blending of two modes of expression.

14. ὅτι καύχημα—ἡμῶν.] Meaning: ['You will find and acknowledge I say] that we are your rejoicing, as also you are ours, in the day of the Lord.' Καύχ. ὑμῶν, i. e. 'such as may make you proud of having me as a teacher.' Καθάπερ καὶ ὑμεῖς ἡμῶν, namely, as being proud of such disciples. The proper ellipsis at ὑμεῖς ἡμῶν can only be ἐστέ; but the clause ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ K. 'I. is best referred to the ἐπιγνώσεσθε suspended, by ellipsis, on ὅτι.

15. At ταύτῃ τῇ πεπ. supply ἐπὶ, namely, 'on your being well affected to us.' Πρότερον, i. e. on writing the former Epistle. See 1 Cor. xvi. 5. He means to say, that he had at first intended to have visited them before the Macedonians; and then shows that he did not change his intention without good cause. Δευτ. χάριν. Most modern Commentators explain the χάριν gift, or benefit; but the ancient Commentators, and some modern ones, as Wolf and Schleusner, gratification, for χαράν: meaning, by metonymy, the joy arising from a favour received; which is preferable. The senses, however, merge into each other.

17. μήτι ἄρα τῇ ἐλαφρ. ἐχρ.;] 'did I, forsooth, show inconstancy or fickleness?' viz. by changing his design without good reason, saying and unsaying at pleasure. The interrogation implies a strong negation, οὐδαμῶς. At ἃ sub. κατὰ, quod attinet ad. Κατὰ σάρκα, 'according to carnal views and private passions, interest, ambition, or worldly policy.'

— ἵνα ᾖ παρ' ἐμοὶ — οὒ.] These words are illustrative of the above; but on their exact sense Commentators are not agreed; and no wonder, since the idiom is almost sui generis. Some would read τὸ ναὶ, καὶ τὸ οὒ, found in a few MSS. and Versions. An authority, however, far λεύομαι, κατὰ σάρκα βουλεύομαι, ἵνα ᾖ παρ' ἐμοὶ τὸ ναὶ 18 ναί, καὶ τὸ οὒ οὔ; [r] Πιστὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς, ὅτι ὁ λόγος ἡμῶν [r] Acts 9. 20.

19 ὁ πρὸς ὑμᾶς οὐκ ἐγένετο ναὶ καὶ οὔ· ὁ γὰρ τοῦ Θεοῦ υἱὸς Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, ὁ ἐν ὑμῖν δι' ἡμῶν κηρυχθεὶς, δι' ἐμοῦ καὶ Σιλουανοῦ καὶ Τιμοθέου, οὐκ ἐγένετο ναὶ καὶ οὒ, ἀλλὰ ναὶ 20 ἐν αὐτῷ γέγονεν· ὅσαι γὰρ ἐπαγγελίαι Θεοῦ, ἐν αὐτῷ τὸ ναὶ, καὶ ἐν αὐτῷ τὸ ἀμὴν, τῷ Θεῷ πρὸς δόξαν δι' ἡμῶν.
21 [s] Ὁ δὲ βεβαιῶν ἡμᾶς σὺν ὑμῖν εἰς Χριστὸν, καὶ χρίσας ἡμᾶς, [s] Infra 5. 5. 1 John 2. 20, 27.
22 Θεός· [t] ὁ καὶ σφραγισάμενος ἡμᾶς, καὶ δοὺς τὸν ἀῤῥαβῶνα [t] Eph. 1. 13, 14. & 4. 30.
τοῦ Πνεύματος ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν.
23 [u] Ἐγὼ δὲ μάρτυρα τὸν Θεὸν ἐπικαλοῦμαι ἐπὶ τὴν ἐμὴν [u] Rom. 1. 9. 1 Cor. 4. 21. infra 13. 2, 10.
24 ψυχὴν, ὅτι φειδόμενος ὑμῶν οὐκέτι ἦλθον εἰς Κόρινθον. [x] οὐχ [x] 1 Cor. 3. 5. & 15. 1.
ὅτι κυριεύομεν ὑμῶν τῆς πίστεως, ἀλλὰ συνεργοί ἐσμεν τῆς 1 Pet. 5. 3. Rom. 11. 20.

too slender to warrant any change of reading. Considerable error has arisen from the mistaken notion, that the Apostle here has in view inconstancy; whereas (as the ancient Commentators have shown) the words κατὰ σάρκα βουλ. have reference to various worldly views and carnal dispositions (see iii. 3, 4); and the kind of carnality here adverted to by example, seems to be (as Chrys., Theoph., Œcumen., Theod., and Photius, suppose) a headstrong, self-willed spirit, which will either do things, or not do them, as it pleases, without giving any reasons. The force of the ναὶ and οὒ repeated may be illustrated by the usual expression of such positive persons, ὃ γέγραφα γέγραφα, or ἃ πέπραχα πέπραχα. The phrase ἵνα ᾖ τὸ ναὶ ναὶ refers to any purpose to be effected; the τὸ οὒ οὔ, to what is not to be done; as Theoph. well observes, who also notices the address with which the Apostle turns off what was matter of accusation into a ground of praise. Thus the construction is: ἵνα τὸ ναὶ ᾖ ναὶ, καὶ τὸ οὒ ᾖ οὔ.

18. πιστὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς—οὔ.] This (as Chrys. observes) is meant to anticipate an objection; q.d. 'If what you say be not firm and stable (and you often say ναὶ, and it is found οὒ), may we not fear lest your word (doctrine and preaching) be found such?' viz. ναὶ καὶ οὒ, i. e. unstable and wavering. To which the Apostle answers: 'My purpose to come to you was my own,—wherefore I attained it not; but my doctrine is of God, and what, as such, cannot deceive. Now God is true (πιστὸς, verax), so that, as He is constant, neither is his word to you, which we preach, inconstant and unstable.' With πιστὸς ὁ Θεὸς may be compared Heb. x. 23, πιστὸς ὁ ἐπαγγειλάμενος, and 1 John i. 9, πιστός ἐστι καὶ δίκαιος, ἵνα, &c.; except that, in the present instance, we have rather what is simply a form of obtestation.

19. Ἰησοῦς Χριστός.] Meaning, his doctrine.

20. This is meant to further evince how stedfast and unbending ought to be the preaching of Christ, since in him it is that all the promises of God are made sure and stedfast. (Calvin.)

— ὅσαι γὰρ ἐπαγγελίαι, &c.] Bp. Middleton well renders, 'for, how many soever be the promises of God, in Him (Christ) is the Yea, and in him the Amen;' i. e. 'whatever God hath promised, He will through Christ assuredly fulfil; ναὶ and ἀμὴν being strong and frequent asseverations of the truth;' q. d. (in the words of Newc.) 'For whatever promises God has made, they are confirmed to mankind through him; and the truth of them is and will be conveyed through him; to the glory of God by our preaching.' Τῷ Θεῷ πρὸς δόξαν is, by transposition, for πρὸς δόξαν τῷ Θεῷ.

21. ὁ δὲ βεβαιῶν, &c.] God is here designated as the author both of their original conversion to the Christian faith, and of their confirmation in it. So Abp. Newcome well paraphrases: ['But I do not arrogate any thing to myself when I use the expression by us.] It is God that establishes both me and you with respect to Christ as disciples of Christ.' Ὁ βεβ. εἰς Χρ. may be rendered, 'who makes us firm in the [faith of] Christ.'

22. ὁ σφραγισάμενος ἡμᾶς] 'who hath given us a pledge [of his future acceptance].'

There is here an allusion to Christians in general, as anointed by the Spirit, and marked out as children of God. Compare 1 John ii. 20. Eph. i. 13, 14. and Rev. vii. 3.

— δοὺς τὸν ἀῤῥαβῶνα τοῦ Πν.] 'by giving the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.' Ἀῤῥαβὼν, and the Latin arrhabo, are derived from the Heb. ערבון, 'a pledge of earnest;' i. e. a part of any price first agreed on, and then paid down to ratify the engagement, and as an assurance of receiving the rest. The pledge spoken of consists (as Bp. Middleton observes) of those various gifts of the Spirit, which were an earnest of immortality to the persons on whom they were conferred.

23. ἐπὶ τὴν ἐμὴν ψυχὴν] 'against my soul,' i. e. if I speak not the truth. The sense life, mind, or thought, though supported by one or other of the best Commentators, is too feeble. The solemnity of the asseveration here, and in other parts of this Epistle, was justified by the unworthy imputation (of fickleness, see xiii. 3, and x. 2,) which called it forth.

Φειδόμενος is for ὡς φειδ., i. e. ὥστε φείδεσθαι, 'to spare you the pain of the severe censure, which I must have passed on your irregularities.'

24. οὐχ ὅτι κυριεύομεν — ὑμῶν.] At οὐχ ὅτι supply ἐρῶ. We have here, as Beza and a Infra 13. 10. χαρᾶς ὑμῶν· τῇ γὰρ πίστει ἑστήκατε. II. [a] Ἔκρινα δὲ 1 ἐμαυτῷ τοῦτο, τὸ μὴ πάλιν ἐν λύπῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐλθεῖν.

Εἰ γὰρ ἐγὼ λυπῶ ὑμᾶς, καὶ τίς ἐστιν ὁ εὐφραίνων με, εἰ 2 b Infra 12. Gal. 5. 10 μὴ ὁ λυπούμενος ἐξ ἐμοῦ; [b] Καὶ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν τοῦτο αὐτὸ, 3 ἵνα μὴ ἐλθὼν λύπην ἔχω ἀφ᾽ ὧν ἔδει με χαίρειν· πεποιθὼς ἐπὶ πάντας ὑμᾶς, ὅτι ἡ ἐμὴ χαρὰ πάντων ὑμῶν ἐστιν.
c Infra 7. 8, 9. [c] ἐκ γὰρ πολλῆς θλίψεως καὶ συνοχῆς καρδίας ἔγραψα ὑμῖν 4 διὰ πολλῶν δακρύων· οὐχ ἵνα λυπηθῆτε, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἀγάπην ἵνα γνῶτε ἣν ἔχω περισσοτέρως εἰς ὑμᾶς.
d 1 Cor. 5. 1. [d] Εἰ δέ τις λελύπηκεν, οὐκ ἐμὲ λελύπηκεν, ἀλλ᾽ ἀπὸ 5 e 1 Cor. 5. 4, 5. μέρους (ἵνα μὴ ἐπιβαρῶ,) πάντας ὑμᾶς. [e] Ἱκανὸν τῷ 6
f Gal. 6. 1. τοιούτῳ ἡ ἐπιτιμία αὕτη ἡ ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων· [f] ὥστε τοὐ- 7

Grotius remark, a softening. By κυριεύειν we may understand, with Bp. Middleton, the assumption of an arbitrary power. See Luke xxii. 25. The general sense of the verse is well expressed by him as follows: 'Though I speak of punishment, I would not have you think that we tyrannise over your faith by wanton acts of severity, but rather that we are fellow-workers of your joy; for by your faith alone, that faith which we seek to strengthen in you, can ye attain to salvation.' Compare Rom. xi. 20.

II. In this chapter the Apostle continues his justification of himself, (intermixing a direction as to the course they should now take with the incestuous person,) and contrasts his own conduct with that of the false teachers. And finally, after mentioning his disappointment in not meeting Titus at Troas, blesses God for the success of his ministry. On the train of sentiment in this whole portion, and on the general conduct of the Apostle in the matter adverted to, see the able remarks of Paley in his Horæ Paulinæ.

1. ἔκρινα δὲ ἐμαυτῷ τοῦτο, τὸ μὴ πάλιν, &c.] Instead of the common reading, ἐλθεῖν ἐν λύπῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς, several MSS., some Versions, and the Ed. Princ. have, what I have edited, with Bengel, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittmann, Vater, and Scholz, ἐν λύπῃ πρ. ὑ. ἐ.: a reading which, in its Pauline nerve and vigour, has far more of the character of genuineness. Ἐν λύπῃ must not be confined to Paul, or to the Corinthians, but be extended to both, and the sense is; 'so as to give myself and you pain,' viz. by censuring your irregularities. Compare 1 Cor. iv. 21, ἐν ῥάβδῳ ἔλθω;

2. εἰ γὰρ ἐγὼ λυπῶ—ἐξ ἐμοῦ;] There is here some obscurity, perhaps occasioned by the refined delicacy of the remark; which was, I conceive, meant to be explanatory of ἐν λύπῃ ἐλθεῖν, just before. The καὶ, like the Heb. ו, increases the force of the interrogation, and may be rendered quæso; and in the interrogative τίς is implied, in the answer, οὐδείς. The phrase τίς ἐστιν ὁ εὐφ. is expressed populariter, the sense being, 'And who, then, is there (i. e. would there be) to soothe my sorrows, but the grieved person?' i. e. persons; for the singular is put for the plural, as in collectives. Here that designation might be said, in some degree, to embrace both the sound and the unsound part of the congregation; for the former would so sympathize with the latter, as to afford the Apostle but little cordial consolation; and the latter could not be expected to do it, unless in the event of entire repentance and thorough reformation, which the Apostle would not stay to see put to the proof. And thus his comfort with both of them could be but small.

3. ἔγραψα ὑμῖν τοῦτο αὐτό.] Some Commentators understand this of the present letter; but most of the former one; taking τοῦτο αὐτὸ to refer to the order given to excommunicate the incestuous person, and the general reproof on their moral conduct. At τοῦτο αὐτὸ, sub. ἐπιστόλιον. Ἔδει, 'it was proper and reasonable,' as in Matt. xviii. 33. xxiii. 23. Ἐπὶ πάντας ὑμᾶς, 'respecting you all.' Ὅτι ἡ ἐμὴ—ἐστιν, 'that whatever affords me joy would give pleasure to you all;' i. e. the sound and far greater part of them. Meaning, that 'as their humiliation and grief would be a grief and sorrow to him, so would his joy (for their reformation) be a source of joy to them.'

4. The connexion is well traced by Abp. Newcome as follows: 'I wrote my former epistle, I say, that I might not have occasion of grief; for I am so much interested in your welfare, that I was deeply affected when I wrote it; and its end was not so much to grieve you, as to show my great love towards you.'

— ἐκ πολλῆς θλίψεως καὶ συνοχ. κ.] Meaning, 'out of much affliction, and heartfelt distress;' as Luke xxi. 25. Ἔγραψα, 'I wrote [what I did].'

— οὐχ ἵνα λυπηθῆτε—εἰς ὑμᾶς.] Meaning, 'But if any one (meaning the incestuous person) have occasioned sorrow, he hath not so much grieved me, as in some measure, that I may not be too severe, all of you.' At ἐπιβαρῶ, ver. 5, we must understand τισι. Of this sense of ἐπιβαρεῖν τινι, to bear hard upon, two examples are adduced by Wetstein from Appian.

6. Reasons are now adduced for showing mercy to the penitent offender.

— ἡ ἐπιτιμία.] This word signifies in Philo and other of the later writers, the fine, or other punishment affixed to any offence; and in the earlier Fathers it denotes any Ecclesiastical punishments enjoined by the Canons of the Church. Αὕτη, '[of] itself;' i. e. without any more: of which ellipsis after ἱκανὸς several ναντίον μᾶλλον ὑμᾶς χαρίσασθαι καὶ παρακαλέσαι, μήπως

8 τῇ περισσοτέρᾳ λύπῃ καταποθῇ ὁ τοιοῦτος. Διὸ παρακαλῶ 9 ὑμᾶς κυρῶσαι εἰς αὐτὸν ἀγάπην· [g] εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ ἔγραψα, g Infra 7. 12.
ἵνα γνῶ τὴν δοκιμὴν ὑμῶν, εἰ εἰς πάντα ὑπήκοοί ἐστε.
10 Ὧι δέ τι χαρίζεσθε, καὶ ἐγώ· (καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ εἴ τι κεχάρισμαι, 11 ᾧ κεχάρισμαι, δι' ὑμᾶς·) ἐν προσώπῳ Χριστοῦ, [h] ἵνα μὴ h Luke 22.31. 1 Pet. 5. 8.
πλεονεκτηθῶμεν ὑπὸ τοῦ Σατανᾶ· οὐ γὰρ αὐτοῦ τὰ νοήματα ἀγνοοῦμεν.
12 [i] Ἐλθὼν δὲ εἰς τὴν Τρωάδα εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ i Acts 16. 8. 1 Cor. 16 9.
Χριστοῦ, καὶ θύρας μοι ἀνεῳγμένης ἐν Κυρίῳ, οὐκ ἔσχηκα ἄνεσιν τῷ πνεύματί μου, τῷ μὴ εὑρεῖν με Τίτον τὸν ἀδελ-13 φόν μου. [k] ἀλλὰ ἀποταξάμενος αὐτοῖς, ἐξῆλθον εἰς Μα- k Infra 7. 5, 6.
14 κεδονίαν. [l] Τῷ δὲ Θεῷ χάρις, τῷ πάντοτε θριαμβεύοντι l Rom. 8. 37. Cant. 1. 3.

examples are adduced by Wetstein. Ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων, 'at the hands of the many,' the general body of the Church—the πλῆθος, meaning all except the persons so punished. So 1 Cor. v. 4, συναχθέντων ὑμῶν.

Thus the Essenes sometimes received back a brother who had been expelled from the society, after he had suffered much misery, ἱκανὴν ἐπὶ τοῖς ἁμαρτήμασιν αὐτῶν τὴν βάσανον ἡγούμενοι, says Josephus, Bell. ii. 8, 8.

7. χαρίσασθαι.] Of course implying that he had repented of his sin. Λύπῃ καταποθῇ, 'be overwhelmed by the excess of his sorrow:' a metaphor derived, I conceive, not from the being devoured by a beast, as is generally supposed, but from drowning; compare Ps. cxxiv. 2—4. The destruction here alluded to is that from excess of affliction, or self-destruction from despair.

8. κυρῶσαι εἰς αὐτὸν ἀγάπην.] This is rendered, 'to confirm your love to him.' But the proper import of the word permits, and the context and circumstances of the case rather require the sense, 'to make him assured of your love;' namely, by some public testimony of it; i. e. the annulment of the act of excommunication, in order to confirm that reconciliation.

9. εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ ἔγραψα—ἐστε.] The full sense contained in this briefly worded passage seems to be this: '[Forgive him, I say;] for the chief object I had in writing [that you should punish him is answered; and that] was, that I might know the proof of you (i. e. that I might put you to the test), whether you be obedient in all things.' Compare Phil. ii. 22, τὴν δὲ δοκιμὴν αὐτοῦ γινώσκετε.

10. ᾧ δέ τι χαρίζεσθε, καὶ ἐγώ.] Sub. χαρίζομαι. The sense intended by the Apostle is best expressed by Iaspis as follows: 'in omnibus judiciis, quæ æquitatem et lenitatem animi producunt, nemo liberaliùs vos sequitur, quàm ego.'

— καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ—δι' ὑμᾶς.] The sense seems to be, 'For whatever I have [hereby] forgiven any one (if I myself can be said to have forgiven), I forgave it for your sakes, and to testify my regard for you.' At ᾧ κεχ. sub. κεχάρ., which was suppressed to avoid repetition. The next words, ἐν προσώπῳ Χριστοῦ, are by almost all Commentators joined with the words immediately preceding. And thus a good sense arises; but one, I conceive, not very agreeable to the words following, ἵνα μὴ πλεον. ὑπὸ τοῦ Σατ. I therefore agree with the Bâle Editor, that the words καὶ γάρ—ὑμᾶς are parenthetical; and that ἐν προσώπῳ, &c., belong to καὶ ἐγὼ (χαρίζομαι); see also Mr. Scott. Ἐν προσώπῳ Χρ. signifies, 'acting in the name and in behalf of Christ, as it were in his person;' synonymous with ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰ. Χρ. 1 Cor. v. 4.

11. ἵνα μὴ πλεονεκτηθῶμεν, &c.] These words seem meant to give a reason why he and they should be always disposed to show lenity on repentance; namely, lest, by their excessive severity, Satan might obtain an advantage over them, by tempting the offender either to despair or to apostacy; thus bringing Christianity into evil report, as a harsh religion, and deterring others from embracing it; or, by exciting divisions in the Church, and preventing the success of the Gospel.

12, 13. What is here said is meant to give a further proof of his affectionate concern for them, and his desire to visit them; namely, that after he went to Troas to preach the Gospel, and had good opportunity of success; yet, because he found not Titus there (who was to bring him account of the state of the Corinthian converts), he could not rest, but must go in search of him into Macedonia.

12. καὶ θύρας μοι ἀνεῳγ.] Here καὶ stands for καίπερ. Of ἀλλά, &c., the full sense is, 'But however [effecting what I could without his assistance] I bade adieu to them (i. e. the Trojans), and went into Macedonia.'

14. τῷ δὲ Θεῷ—Χριστῷ.] Render, 'But [be that as it may] thanks be unto God;' i. e. with reference to the happy turn affairs had taken at Corinth, and the good account he had received of the Corinthians from Titus (see vii. 6), the Apostle breaks forth into thanksgivings to God, for the success with which He is pleased to bless his Evangelical labours. Θριαμβ. ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ shows the grounds of the thanksgiving; namely, because 'he maketh us to triumph.' The word properly signifies to triumph over; but here is used (as the best Commentators, ancient and modern, suppose) in a Hiphil or causative sense; as in Herc. Fur. 1596; and in other verbs, as βασιλεύειν, ἐπιστεύδειν, αὐταρκεῖν, κληρονομεῖν, ζῆν, &c. The sense is, 'causeth us to tri-ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, καὶ τὴν ὀσμὴν τῆς γνώσεως αὐτοῦ m 1 Cor. 1. 18. φανεροῦντι δι' ἡμῶν ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ. ([m] Ὅτι Χριστοῦ εὐωδία 15 ἐσμὲν τῷ Θεῷ ἐν τοῖς σωζομένοις καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυn Luke 2. 34. infra 3. 5, 6. μένοις· οἷς μὲν, ὀσμὴ θανάτου εἰς θάνατον, [n] οἷς δὲ, ὀσμὴ 16

o Infra 4. 2. ζωῆς εἰς ζωήν. καὶ πρὸς ταῦτα τίς ἱκανός;) [o] Οὐ γάρ ἐσμεν, 17 ὡς οἱ πολλοὶ, καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ· ἀλλ' ὡς ἐξ εἰλικρινείας, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐκ Θεοῦ, κατενώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, umphantly overcome all difficulties,' to 'go from city to city as triumphing conquerors in the cause of Christ.' But the metaphor is not to be too much pressed on. So also the expressions πάντοτε and ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ are not to be rigidly interpreted, but understood of what, upon the whole, was the case. Indeed, when the Apostle was least successful, there was always some kind of victory obtained over the kingdom of Satan.

14. καὶ τὴν ὀσμὴν—φανεροῦντι, &c.] The sense is, 'And who diffuseth, by us, every where the odour of his Divine knowledge.' There is an allusion to the fragrant odour of flowers and aromatics scattered around conquerors when going in triumph. So Plutarch (cited by Kypke) says the streets were on such occasions θυμιαμάτων πληρεῖς. Some confusion of metaphor exists; but, under a lively allusion to the wide spreading of aromatic odours, it represents the wide diffusion of the Gospel, and its salutiferous influence.

15. Here there is a continuation of the above metaphor, though with some change in the application.

— ὅτι Χριστοῦ εὐωδία—ἀπολλυμένοις.] Τῷ Θεῷ is by many taken as put for εἰς τὸν Θεόν. But it seems better, with others, to interpret, 'by God.' The general sense is, 'We are those through whom God spreads and propagates this odoriferous, beneficial, and salutiferous Gospel of Christ.' Here the Apostle is said to have had in mind similar modes of expression found in the Rabbinical writings. So the Rabbis speak of the Law as a savour of life to Israel, but to the Gentiles a savour of death.

In ἐν τοῖς σωζομένοις and τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις is implied all; the former simply denoting those who believe and embrace the Gospel, and who, by faithfully fulfilling its requisitions, are saved; the latter, those who either disbelieve and reject it, or at least neglect to fulfil its requisitions. The general meaning is, 'We indeed bear the sweet odour of Christ's Gospel to all; but all who participate in it do not experience its salutiferous effects. Yet if some be saved, and others perish, the Gospel retains its own virtue,—its odoriferous and salutiferous properties, though some may disbelieve or abuse it, and perish.'

16. οἷς μὲν, ὀσμὴ, &c.] q. d. We have done our part, whatever be the result; though to the one we are a savour, &c.; q. d. 'to those who perish through unbelief the fragrance of the Gospel, which we diffuse, becomes a deadly savour, ending in their death; but to the saved it becomes a vivifying savour, ending in life eternal. Θανάτου and ζωῆς are Genitives of a substantive in the place of its cognate adjective. The words εἰς θάνατον and εἰς ζωὴν are partly exegetical, but chiefly meant to strengthen the sense.

— καὶ πρὸς ταῦτα τίς ἱκανός;] Meaning, that 'no human being is of himself sufficient for so momentous a business;' implying that our sufficiency is of God. In v. 15, 16, Dr. Paley recognises one of those numerous instances of digression in St. Paul which, he thinks, may be denominated going off at a word. 'It is (he says) a turning aside from the subject upon the occurrence of some particular word; forsaking the train of thought then in hand, and entering upon a parenthetic sentence, in which that word is the prevailing term; see 2 Cor. iii. 1, at the word epistle; 2 Cor. iii. 13, at the word veil; Eph. iv. 8, at the word ascended; v. 12, at the word light.'

17. οὐ γάρ ἐσμεν—τὸν λόγον.] These words are by some thought to refer to those immediately preceding. But the best Commentators are, with reason, agreed, that the reference in the γὰρ is to the words of ver. 14; q. d. '[We are indeed so favoured by God that we are made triumphant, and are permitted to scatter the odours of the Gospel, and we do this with zeal and alacrity;] for we are not as the many,' i. e. very many, &c. The use of the participle and verb substantive for the finite verb denotes custom. Thus it connects with the verb λαλοῦμεν following. The force of the expression καπηλ. τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ will be seen by bearing in mind the proper signification of καπηλεύω. Now this will depend upon that of κάπηλος· which is not derived from κακυνεῖν and πηλὸς (as the Etymologists say), but is connected with the caup-o of the Latin; and both are derived from the Chappen, Koppen, and other cognate words of the Northern languages, denoting to sell by retail. Thus κάπηλος means a retail dealer, or huckster, one who sells at second hand; as is plain from two passages of Plato (which have escaped all the Commentators), p. 531, C., ἔργα ἀλλότρια παραδεχόμενοι, δεύτερον πωλοῦσι πάλιν οἱ κάπηλοι· and p. 609. And so Hesych. explains καπηλεύει by μεταπωλεῖ. Æschylus too, Theb. 541, by a bold figure (formed on the foregoing sense), says, ἐλθὼν δ' ἔοικεν οὐ καπηλεύσειν μάχην, 'he will not fight by retail;' i. e. in a peddling way. In short, the κάπηλοι were petty chapmen (and that chiefly in eatables or drinkables) exactly corresponding to our hucksters. And as provisions are most susceptible of that adulteration, which is so likely to be practised by petty venders, so these κάπηλοι were, from a very early period, accused of this trickery. So Isaiah i. 22, οἱ κάπηλοί σοι μισγοῦσι τὸν οἶνον ὕδατι. The very same metaphor, too, occurs infra iv. 2, μηδὲ δολοῦντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ. Καπηλεύειν, therefore, came to mean 'make a gain of;' and also, as here, to 'corrupt for the purpose of gain.' So Clem. Alex. 60, οὐ καπηλεύεται ἡ ἀλήθεια. Lucian, Herm. 59, ὥσπερ οἱ κάπηλοι κερασάμενοι καὶ δολώσαντες. The sense, then, is, 'corrupting the Gospel, in order to make a gain of it, by repre-

1 ἐν Χριστῷ λαλοῦμεν. III. [a] Ἀρχόμεθα πάλιν ἑαυτοὺς a Infra 5. 12. & 10. 8 συνιστάνειν; ‡ εἰ μὴ χρῄζομεν, ὥς τινες, συστατικῶν ἐπιστο-2 λῶν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἢ ἐξ ὑμῶν συστατικῶν. [b] Ἡ ἐπιστολὴ ἡμῶν b 1 Cor. 9. 2, 3.
ὑμεῖς ἐστε, ἐγγεγραμμένη ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν, γινωσκο- c Exod. 24. 12.
3 μένη καὶ ἀναγινωσκομένη ὑπὸ πάντων ἀνθρώπων· [c] φανερού- & 34. 1. Jer. 31. 33. Ezek. 11. 19.
μενοι ὅτι ἐστὲ ἐπιστολὴ Χριστοῦ διακονηθεῖσα ὑφ' ἡμῶν, & 36. 26. Heb. 8. 10.

senting its doctrines and injunctions as otherwise than they really are.' What these admixtures were, may easily be conceived, though they, no doubt, differed in different teachers; sometimes consisting of Jewish superstitions, and sometimes of philosophical notions, and the dreams of the sophists.

The idea is further unfolded in the words following, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐξ εἰλ., which signify '[as those who speak] with sincerity and integrity;' i. e. opposed to the above impure and dishonest admixture. At ὡς ἐκ Θεοῦ sub. λέγοντες, which arises from the idea of λέγειν suggested by καπηλ. τὸν λόγον. The sense is, 'as persons who speak from God [and not from themselves], κατενώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, as in the presence of God, and with a view to his approbation alone.' Ἐν Χρ. This is usually explained, 'in the name of Christ, as his ambassadors.' But since λαλεῖν ἐν Χριστῷ is opposed to the corrupt mode of operating adverted to in the preceding clause, so it would rather seem to mean, as Beza, Calvin, and Hyperius are agreed, 'secundum Christum,' according to the truth as it is in Jesus, without any such admixture as that alluded to.

III. In this Chapter the Apostle obviates any charge of self-commendation, desiring to ascribe all his success to God, vv. 1—6. And in adverting to the superiority of the Gospel over the Law, vv. 7—11, he especially points out plain speaking (probably to excuse his freedom of animadversion) as most accordant with its nature; and concludes with describing the liberty and progressive holiness which arose from the Gospel, vv. 11—18.

1. ἀρχόμεθα—συνιστάνειν;] This is meant to anticipate an objection, that by thus mentioning his sincerity he was recommending himself. In the interrogation is implied a strong negation, οὐδαμῶς! The next words, εἰ μὴ χρῄζομεν, are to be considered as having reference to something omitted for brevity's sake; q. d. '[Nor have we any occasion so to do, unless we need, &c.]' Thus there will be no reason, with Griesbach and others, to read ἢ μὴ for εἰ μὴ, from a few MSS., Versions, and Fathers. Ἢ μὴ is probably an alteration to remove a difficulty, which, after all, is, as we have seen, but imaginary. It is not impossible, however, that ἢ μὴ may be the true reading; for, from the frequency of εἰ μὴ, and the rarity of ἢ μὴ, the scribes might very well mistake the latter for the former; especially as εἰ and η are so much alike in MSS.

— συστατ. ἐπιστ.] These (called by Arrian, Ep. iii. 2. 1, γράμματα συστ.) were letters of introduction, probably deriving their origin from the tesseræ hospitalitatis of the earlier Greeks. They were much employed among the Greeks and Romans, and also the Jews; from whom, it is probable, was immediately derived the frequent use of them in the primitive church. The τινες alludes to the false teachers, who, it seems, had thus introduced themselves to the Church at Corinth.

2, 3. ἡ ἐπιστ. ἡμῶν ὑμεῖς ἐστε, &c.] As if he had said (observes Theodoret), ἡμεῖς οὐ δεόμεθα γραμμάτων· αὐτὰ γὰρ ἡμῖν τὰ πράγματα μαρτυρεῖ, according to the sense expressed by Theophylact, 'that which letters of introduction and recommendation would have done, this ye yourselves do when seen and heard.' Thus the meaning is, 'Ye are [in fact] our recommendatory epistle, one written by Christ, through our instrumentality; not with ink, but with the Holy Spirit; not on letters of stone, but on the heart:' q. d. your conversion to the Christian faith, by my preaching and miracles, is a sufficient recommendation of me as a true Apostle. Now this conversion, and the reformation therein implied, must (from the extensive communication of Corinth with almost every part of the world) have been known to all, and were in that sense read by all. Moreover (what seems meant by the ἐγγεγρ. ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν), this knowledge was especially imprinted on the mind of the Apostle; and he himself was the means of bearing it about to all parts of the world. Similarly it is said, Josephus, Ant. iv. 8. 12, ἐγγράφων τοὺς νόμους ταῖς ψυχαῖς.

3. φανερούμενοι ὅτι ἐστὲ, &c.] 'Here,' observes Professor Dobree, 'we have a transition from the heart of Paul to the heart of the Corinthians, as at infra v. 13—16 from Moses veiled to the Jews veiled.' Hence arises a comparison of the ministry of Paul, as compared with that of Moses; see Exod. xxxiv. 33. Φανερ. ὅτι ἐστὲ, &c., is for ὅτι φανερῶς ἐστε, 'it being manifest that ye are,' &c. The same metaphor is here continued, but with alteration, and a different application. When it is said that they are even Christ's Epistle, the latter must be understood in a different sense from the former; and the sense may be thus traced: 'Ye bear the commands of Christ on your heart, and transcribe them into your practice.' [So Plato, Phædr., speaks of knowledge as being written on the soul of the learner.] 'This is, as it were, a letter dictated by Christ to me, and by me written on your hearts.' In some sense, too, it might be said that they were thus a letter commendatory of Christ and the Gospel to the heathens. By ἐπιστολὴ Χρ. is meant the Gospel; and to this the term ἐπιστολὴ is very applicable, according to the sense in which it is here used, namely, mandatum. The term, indeed, is applicable to any revelation of God's will to man.

The remainder of the verse is meant further to unfold the sense of ἐπιστολὴ, and to show the superiority of the Gospel over the Law. It is thus illustrated by Theophylact: 'As Moses was the minister of the Law, so are we the ministers of your faith in the Gospel. He cut the stones; we cut the hearts. The Law was written with ink; the Gospel was written upon you by the ἐγγεγραμμένη οὐ μέλανι, ἀλλὰ Πνεύματι Θεοῦ ζῶντος, οὐκ ἐν πλαξὶ λιθίναις, ἀλλὰ ἐν πλαξὶ καρδίας σαρκίναις.

Πεποίθησιν δὲ τοιαύτην ἔχομεν διὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ πρὸς τὸν 4 d Supra 2. 16. Phil. 2. 13. Θεόν· [d] οὐχ ὅτι ἱκανοί ἐσμεν ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν λογίσασθαί τι, 5 e Jer. 31. 31. Hebr. 8. 6, 8. Rom. 7. 6. infra 5. 18. ὡς ἐξ ἑαυτῶν, ἀλλ' ἡ ἱκανότης ἡμῶν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ· [e] ὃς 6 καὶ ἱκάνωσεν ἡμᾶς διακόνους καινῆς διαθήκης, οὐ γράμματος, ἀλλὰ πνεύματος· τὸ γὰρ γράμμα ἀποκτείνει, τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα f Deut. 27. 26. Exod. 34. 29. ζωοποιεῖ. [f] Εἰ δὲ ἡ διακονία τοῦ θανάτου ἐν γράμμασιν 7 ἐντετυπωμένη ἐν λίθοις, ἐγενήθη ἐν δόξῃ, ὥστε μὴ δύνα-σθαι ἀτενίσαι τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἰσραὴλ εἰς τὸ πρόσωπον Μωϋσέως, διὰ τὴν δόξαν τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ τὴν καταργουμένην·

Spirit. As far as the Spirit is superior to ink, and the heart to stone, so far is the new Dispensation superior to the old.' It may be added, that in the Law there was a bare command; in the Gospel the injunction was rendered effectual by the ministry of the Holy Spirit, both in his ordinary and extraordinary operations. The words ἐν πλαξὶ καρδίας σαρκ. are, by transposition, put for ἐν πλαξὶ σαρκ. κ., i. e on fleshly tablets, namely, those of the heart; compare Jer. xvii. 1. The same figure occurs in Æschyl. Prom. 814, ἣν ἐγγράφου σὺ μνήμοσιν δέλτοις φρενῶν, and Theophylact, Sim. p. 125, ταῦτα τοῖς τῆς καρδίας ταμείοις ἐναποτίθεσθε, γραφαῖς ἀτυπώτοις ἀπογραψάμενοι.

4. The connexion is here somewhat uncertain. Many early modern Expositors suppose the words to refer to those immediately preceding. And so Rosenmuller. A harsh sense, however, thus arises. The true view is, I think, that adopted by Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Calvin, who suppose the Apostle here means to deprecate the accusation of boasting of himself. Whatever his superiority might be, it rested, he says, solely on his confidence in God, through Christ, from whom alone he derived his sufficiency to spread the Gospel. The sense, then, may be expressed as follows: 'We, however, have such a cause for trust and confidence [as this superiority implies] in God alone and through Christ.'

5. οὐχ ὅτι.] Supply οὐ λέγω, 'I mean not to say that.' Λογίσασθαι here signifies, excogitare; a sense of the word frequent in the best writers. The meaning is, 'We are of ourselves unable to think out, find out by thinking, or adequately to comprehend, the mysteries and truths of the Gospel, much less to give them the effect by which the Holy Spirit writes and imprints them on the hearts of men; but our sufficiency is from God.' The primary signification of λογίσασθαι is to count up numbers, to compute; whence arise, per translationes, all its other significations, to account, recount, compute, reckon, imagine, think, ratiocinate, conclude; q. d. from balancing the account. Of the two expressions, ὡς ἐξ ἑαυτῶν and ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν, Wolf refers the the former to the will, the latter to the power. It would rather seem that ὡς ἐξ ἑαυτῶν is meant to further explain the sense; the meaning being, what Emmerling expresses, 'ita ut ex me profectum putem.' The words are perhaps to be construed, not with ἱκανοὶ, but with λογίσασθαί τι. So Liban. Or. 44, p. 914, D., ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν αὐτὰ λογιζόμενοι καὶ σκοποῦντες οἱ δικασταὶ, &c.

6. ὃς καὶ ἱκάνωσεν ἡμᾶς.] Sub. εἶναι. The sense is, 'And it is He who fitted us to be ministers,' &c. The words οὐ γράμμ., ἀλλὰ πνεύμ. should be rendered, 'not of letter, but of spirit,' i. e. not of a literal, but a spiritual Covenant. By literal is meant resting on written documents, or Scripture only, like the Law of Moses. It may also denote (in a figurative sense) 'consisting in outward forms and ceremonies.' Thus by τὸ γράμμα is meant 'what is literal,' viz. the Law; and by τὸ πνεῦμα, 'what is spiritual,' (viz. internal and spiritual religion,) the Gospel. See Calvin on Rom. ii. 29. Such (in opposition to the Mystics, who take these words of the literal, and the spiritual interpretation) Bp. Marsh, in his Lect. p. 369, has proved to be the only sense which the context admits. 'The Apostle (says he) is drawing a parallel, which has no concern with interpretation, but is between the Law of Moses and the Gospel of Christ. The former "kills," inasmuch as it denounces death without hope on all who disobey it; nay, sometimes occasioned death, by the multiplicity and difficulty of its ceremonial rites. See Rom. iii. 20, and Gal. ii. 19. On the contrary, the πνεῦμα, the Spiritual System of the Gospel, ζωοποιεῖ, 1st, brings life and immortality to light, and affords the means of salvation; 2dly, it imparts life, a new life, by the Holy Spirit. There is also an allusion to that expiatory sacrifice by which this vivification is effected. The two Dispensations, moreover, are contrasted as to their tendency: that of the Law was punishment; that of the Gospel, reformation rather than punishment,—salvation rather than condemnation.' Though indeed even the Gospel as a letter has no effect but to kill those to whom it is preached; it is only when internally and spiritually received that it giveth life.

7, 8. The Apostle now further evinces this superiority of the Gospel over the Law, by showing, 1. that its glory is greater; inasmuch as the Law had only a corporeal and visible glory,—namely, that in the face of Moses; but the New Dispensation an intellectual and spiritual one. (Theophyl.) We have here an argumentum à minori ad majus; and the full sense of the two verses may be thus expressed: 'If the ministry or office of promulgating a covenant which, in the letter, (when written on tables of stone,) brought nothing but death with it, was glorious, (namely, by the appearance of angels with the

8 πῶς οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἡ διακονία τοῦ Πνεύματος ἔσται ἐν 9 δόξῃ; Εἰ γὰρ ἡ διακονία τῆς κατακρίσεως δόξα, πολλῷ μᾶλλον περισσεύει ἡ διακονία τῆς δικαιοσύνης ἐν δόξῃ.
10 Καὶ γὰρ οὐ[δὲ] δεδόξασται τὸ δεδοξασμένον ἐν τούτῳ τῷ 11 μέρει, ἕνεκεν τῆς ὑπερβαλλούσης δόξης. [g] Εἰ γὰρ τὸ καταρ- g Rom. 1. 17.
γούμενον, διὰ δόξης· πολλῷ μᾶλλον τὸ μένον ἐν δόξῃ.
12 [h] Ἔχοντες οὖν τοιαύτην ἐλπίδα, πολλῇ παῤῥησίᾳ χρώμεθα· h Eph. 6. 19. i Exod. 34. 33, &c.
13 [i] καὶ οὐ, καθάπερ Μωϋσῆς ἐτίθει κάλυμμα ἐπὶ τὸ πρόσωπον Rom. 10. 4. Gal. 3. 25.

cloud of glory,) and so glorious that the children of Israel were not able to look at the face of Moses, because of the shining of his countenance, which glory was soon to vanish; how much more shall not the ministration of the Spiritual, or the Spirit-giving Dispensation (i. e. the Gospel) be glorious?' Ἐν δόξῃ is for ἔνδοξος. On this δόξα, see Note on Luke ii. 9. The words of Exod. xxxiv. 29 suggest the idea of such an irradiation as that which is represented in pictures, encircling the countenance of Christ. With respect to τὴν καταργουμένην, it must not be understood, with some, of fading away with youth, and ceasing with death. The best mode of taking the words is that of the ancients and some eminent moderns; namely, to suppose that τὴν καταργουμένην (introduced to impart force to the argumentation), though it pertains in appearance to τὴν δόξαν, yet, in fact, belongs to γράμματα, meaning the Mosaic economy; and that the Apostle meant to hint that, as that glory was temporary, and would cease at death, so was the Dispensation, of whose Divine origin this was the symbol, meant also to be temporary.

9. εἰ γὰρ ἡ διακονία—ἐν δόξῃ.] The Apostle here (observes Theophylact) 'gives another turn to the same thought.' Indeed, ἡ διακ. τῆς κατακρ. is meant to further illustrate what was said at ver. 7, ἡ διακονία τοῦ θανάτου ἐν γράμμασι. The condemnatory Law and the justificatory Gospel are contrasted; the former as a ministry of condemnation, the latter as one of justification; conferring justification on all who heartily embrace it. Δόξα is for δοξαστός; which use of a substantive for its cognate adjective is also found in the Classical writers.

10, 11. This is not a correction, but a confirmation of the preceding; meaning that the glory of the Law is eclipsed when the Gospel goes forth; as the moon and stars, though diffusing their light over all the earth, yet fade before the beams of the sun, so the Law, glorious as it is in itself, yet in glory is as nothing compared with the greatness of the Gospel. (Calvin.)

10. τὸ δεδοξασμένον.] Supply πρᾶγμα, meaning the Mosaic Dispensation. Οὐ δεδόξασται, 'was not esteemed glorious or excellent.' The δὲ before δεδόξασται, not found in many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, is with some reason cancelled by Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz, and is probably not genuine, but originated merely from the δὲ following. In ἐν τούτῳ τῷ μέρει and ἕνεκεν there is some distinction of sense; ἐν τούτῳ τῷ μέρει signifying 'en cet égard' (as the French say), 'in respect of comparison;' (so Joseph. Ant. xv. 3. 4, ὡς ἐκπλῆξαι τὸ λυπηρὸν, καὶ παραμυθήσασθαι τούτῳ τῷ μέρει.) ἕνεκεν, 'on account of.' Thus ἐν τούτῳ τῷ μέρει contains comparison, and ἕνεκεν, &c. is only exegetical of the preceding. It is, however, proper to bear in mind (as Beza and Scott suggest), 1. that the Law is here not considered simply, but as connected with the ministration of Moses, and as apart and distinct from the Gospel. 2. That the Apostle's principal aim here seems to have been to magnify his office, and to show, from the example of Moses, that the ministry (especially the Apostolical) of the New Testament was honourable in proportion to the supreme glory of that dispensation.

11. The comparison is here continued, in another view, between the Law, as transient, and the Gospel, as permanent; which would naturally give the latter a superiority over the former.

— τὸ καταργ.] Not 'which was done away,' but 'which was to be done away,' as being intended to be only temporary. Τὸ μένον, 'what was to be permanent,' μόνιμον (viz. until the end of the world), and so called, as being the last Dispensation of God, and to be succeeded by no other. Ἐν δόξῃ, sub. ἦν, 'was attended with glory,' both at its delivery, and in its use.

12. ἔχοντες οὖν τ. ἐλπ.] Some eminent Commentators explain, 'having such confidence in the glorious perpetuity of the Gospel ministration.' But this seems too confined a sense. It is better, with Chrysostom, Newcome, and Macknight, to regard it as having reference to all that has been said of the superiority of the Gospel over the Law; q. d. 'Having such an assured hope as this, so grounded on the infinite superiority and pre-eminent advantages of the Gospel over the Law' (and, by implication, of the same superiority of his ministry over that under the Law), 'I use,' &c. And here, observes Calvin, 'longius evehitur Ap. neque enim tantum de Legis naturâ tractat, de perpetua qualitate, sed etiam de abusu.' Of this sense of ἐλπὶς examples occur in i. 7. Phil. i. 20. Tit. i. 2.

— πολλῇ παῤῥησίᾳ χρώμ.] Meaning, either 'we use great freedom and boldness of speech,' or 'we use great plainness of speech, sine verborum involucris et ambagibus.' The former interpretation is better supported by the usus loquendi; but the latter is more agreeable to the words following; for I agree with Emmerling, that what is said at vv. 13—18 was suggested by the idea then in the Apostle's mind, of something kept concealed. And so Dr. Paley (in his Horæ Paulinæ) observes, 'that this allegory of the veil arose entirely out of the occurrence of the word, and drew the Apostle away from the proper subject of his discourse, the dignity of the office in which he was engaged. That subject he resumes at iv. 1, almost in the words he had left it.' The above use of παῤῥησία with λαλεῖν, &c. occurs in Mark viii. 32. John x. 24. xi. 14. xvi. 25, 29.

13. καὶ οὐ.] Subaud. ποιοῦμεν τοῦτο, i. e.

ἑαυτοῦ, πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἀτενίσαι τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἰσραὴλ εἰς τὸ k Isa. 6. 10. Ezek. 12. 2. Matt. 13. 14. Acts 28. 26. Rom. 11. 8. τέλος τοῦ καταργουμένου· ([k]ἀλλ' ἐπωρώθη τὰ νοήματα 14 αὐτῶν· ἄχρι γὰρ τῆς σήμερον τὸ αὐτὸ κάλυμμα ἐπὶ τῇ ἀναγνώσει τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης μένει, μὴ ἀνακαλυπτόμενον, ὅτι ἐν Χριστῷ καταργεῖται. Ἀλλ' ἕως σήμερον, ἡνίκα 15 ἀναγινώσκεται Μωϋσῆς, κάλυμμα ἐπὶ τὴν καρδίαν αὐτῶν l Rom. 11. 23, 26. κεῖται· [l]ἡνίκα δ' ἂν ἐπιστρέψῃ πρὸς Κύριον, περιαιρεῖται 16
m John 4. 24. τὸ κάλυμμα. [m]Ὁ δὲ Κύριος τὸ Πνεῦμά ἐστιν· οὗ δὲ τὸ 17

παρακαλύπτομεν, or κάλυμμα ἐπιτίθεμεν (from the context), 'we do not use a veiled and mysterious form of speaking.' The narrative (Estius observes) contained in Exodus is here converted into an allegory, and the mystery concealed under it is pointed out, or rather the whole is, as Cameron observes, mystical and typical. A carnal people could not bear the splendour of Moses' countenance, a type of the Gospel of Christ; and thus, agreeably to the figure, the Law was veiled until the Spirit should come, who was to take it away. In short, as Grotius and Doddridge point out, even Moses himself was, in this, a type of his own dispensation. 2. It has been well noticed by Calvin, Beza, Vorstius, Sclater, and Emmerling, that πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἀτενίσαι τ. υἱ. Ἰ. is not to be understood of any intention on the part of Moses, as if he spoke obscurely in the Law, that its ultimate import might not be discovered. Moses (as Calvin shows) would doubtless have wished that the true intent should have been known, but that he had a simple duty to perform, to publish the Law; and as he could not regenerate the minds of the people, so also no blame is imputable (or is here imputed) to him, 'quia non debuit plus præstare quam ferebat dispensatio sibi commissa.' In short, the πρὸς is to be taken simply to express eventum rei (namely, the blindness of the Israelites): and this Camer. proves by a reference, 1. to facts; 2. to the antithesis at ver. 14; 3. to the nature of the thing; and, 4. to the propriety of the thing.

The words πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἀτενίσαι—καταργουμένου may be paraphrased thus: 'So that they did not see what was adumbrated under the Law which was to be done away, even the substance—the Gospel of Christ, the end and object, and meant to be the complementum of the Law.' So Rom. x. 4, τέλος νόμου Χριστὸς, εἰς δικαιοσύνην παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι.

14. ἀλλ' ἐπωρώθη τὰ νοήμ. α.] Ἀλλὰ refers to a clause omitted, and the full sense seems to be this: '[Nor has this only been in old time,] but [it has ever since been the case,] that their understanding and perceptions have been, and are, dull and stupid.' This sense of πωρ. is frequent in the New Test. See Mark vi. 52. viii. 17. John xii. 40. It is worthy of remark, that vv. 14, 15, 16, and 17 form a parenthetical portion, of which the matter was suggested by the mention of the blindness of the Israelites in the days of Moses, and is intended to show that their disposition was then very much as it had been in the time of Moses. During these verses the construction is suspended, and then at ver. 17 et seq. it is resumed and completed.

— τὸ αὐτὸ κάλυμμα—μένει, μὴ ἀνακ.] The sense is: 'For, to this day, the same veil as that which Moses used (i. e. the obscurity of the Mosaic law, typified by the veil of Moses' face) still remains, when they read the Old Testament.' The next words, μὴ ἀνακαλυπτόμενον—καταργεῖται, are best taken in the sense 'it not being discovered by them, or become known to them, that it (viz. the darkness of the Old Covenant) is done away by Christ;' i. e. that the true end of the Law is discovered by the Gospel of Christ.

15. Here there is a repetition in plainer and more circumstantial terms, of what was said in the preceding verses.

— ἕως σήμ.] for ἕως τῆς σήμ., scil. ἡμέρας. Κεῖται. The word is often, as here, used of a garment; nearly as we say of a coat, that it sits well.

16. ἡνίκα δ' ἂν ἐπιστ. πρὸς Κύρ.] The use of the singular here, where the plural might have been expected, has occasioned not a little perplexity, and given rise to a difference of opinion as to the reference. Some refer it to Ἰσραὴλ (i. e. people of Israel) at v. 13; others, to Μωϋσῆς in the preceding verse, meaning the Law of Moses, i. e. the Old Testament; others, again, to καρδία in the preceding. The view first mentioned seems to deserve the preference, yet only as involving the least harshness. It would seem that (as Cameron and Capellus point out) the singular is here put for the plural, by a sort of impersonal use, or rather by an ellipsis of τις in a collective sense (for the plural, like the French on); the Active also being used, as a reciprocal, for the Passive. This, I would observe, is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr.

17. ὁ δὲ Κύριος τὸ Πνεῦμά ἐστιν.] Here, as Abp. Newcome suggests, the Apostle takes up the Κύριον of the preceding verse, and enlarges on it, showing the advantages of the Gospel over the Law. The sense may, with Prof. Scholefield, be thus expressed: 'The Lord (of whom I speak, see ver. 16) is the Spirit;' or, as Prof. Dobree well paraphrases, 'When I speak of the Jews turning to the Lord, I mean their turning FROM THE LETTER TO THE SPIRIT.' So Abp. Newcome and Bp. Middleton render: 'The Lord and his doctrine is (i. e. imparts) the spiritual and life-giving religion' (mentioned above, ver. 6). This mode of interpretation is, I would observe, further supported by the opinion of Mr. Simeon, Hor. Homil. App. vi. p. 230. 'The Apostle (says he) is comparing the Law and the Gospel, which, if disjoined, may be considered the one as a mere letter, a ministration of death; the other a Spirit, a ministration of righteousness and life.'

By ἐλευθερία understand 'a dispensation of freedom, and not of bondage to ceremonies.' But we are also to advert to that freedom from condemnation imparted by the Gospel (Rom. viii. 34)

18 πνεῦμα Κυρίου, ἐκεῖ ἐλευθερία.) [n] Ἡμεῖς δὲ πάντες, ἀνακεκα- n 1 Cor. 13. 12. infra 5. 7.
λυμμένῳ προσώπῳ τὴν δόξαν Κυρίου κατοπτριζόμενοι, τὴν αὐτὴν εἰκόνα μεταμορφούμεθα ἀπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν, καθάπερ
1 ἀπὸ Κυρίου Πνεύματος. IV. [a] Διὰ τοῦτο ἔχοντες τὴν δια- a 1 Cor. 7. 25.
2 κονίαν ταύτην, καθὼς ἠλεήθημεν, οὐκ ἐκκακοῦμεν· [b] ἀλλ' b Supra 2. 17.
ἀπειπάμεθα τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς αἰσχύνης, μὴ περιπατοῦντες ἐν 1 Thess. 2. 3, 5. infra 6. 4.
πανουργίᾳ, μηδὲ δολοῦντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ τῇ φανερώσει τῆς ἀληθείας συνιστῶντες ἑαυτοὺς πρὸς πᾶσαν 3 συνείδησιν ἀνθρώπων, ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. [c] Εἰ δὲ καὶ ἔστι c 1 Cor. 1. 18. supra 2. 15.

freedom from the bondage of corrupt passions or slavish principles, imparted by Christ, whereby the believer is enabled to find liberty in willing obedience. See Rom. viii. 1, 2, 14, 17.

18. This verse contains the completion of the contrast between the dispensation of the Law and of the Gospel, in respect to their spiritual efficacy, commenced at ver. 13, but interrupted by the intervention of a passage expressing an idea suggested by the term κάλυμμα. Accordingly, the present passage ought not to have been thought so perplexing, as to occasion that very great diversity of interpretation which here exists; and the sense may be thus expressed in close paraphrase: 'We, on the contrary (δὲ), (meaning Christians,) all of us, with unveiled face (i. e. clearly and plainly) beholding, as in a mirror, the glory of the Lord, as shining forth in the Gospel (and not, like the Jews, seeing the truth veiled in types and shadows, but beholding clearly and distinctly, as if reflected in a mirror, the glorious manifestation of the Lord in the Gospel), we, I say, are transformed into the same image and resemblance as that of the Lord which we behold in the Gospel, and go on from glory to glory, even as we are supported by the Spirit of the Lord, which worketh in us, and produceth this transformation.' See Scott and Holden.

To advert to particulars, τὴν δόξαν—κατοπτ. may signify, 'beholding the clear and resplendent image of his doctrine, and recognising its glory in its saving efficacy on the hearts of men, and thus having our minds enlightened by it;' or, as Dr. Robinson (Lex.) renders, 'beholding the glory of the Lord as reflected and radiant in Christ.' So Plut. de Educ. xx., exhorts parents to be an example to their children, ἵνα πρὸς τὸν τούτων βίον, ὥσπερ κάτοπτρον, ἀποβλέποντες, ἀποτρέπωνται τῶν αἰσχρῶν ἔργων. So also Philo, p. 79, E. (cited by Loesner), μηδὲ κατοπτρισαίμην ἐν ἄλλῳ τινὶ τὴν σὴν ἰδέαν, ἢ ἐν σοὶ τῷ Θεῷ.

At τὴν αὐτὴν εἰκόνα μεταμορφούμεθα ἀπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν (which words allude to the changing of the face of Moses on beholding the Shechinah) there is an ellipsis, not of εἰς, but of κατὰ, which is expressed in a kindred passage of Col. iii. 10, τὸν ἀνακαινούμενον κατ' εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτόν. The words ἀπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν imply that the more we behold this resplendent and glorious light, the more do we reflect back its rays; q. d. 'the more we contemplate the great truths of the Christian religion, the more do our minds become imbued with its spirit; we are enabled, under the influence of Divine grace, to go on from one degree of holiness to another;—until, at length, the view of faith, as in a mirror, shall be changed into immediate and perfect sight, even the glorified vision of God in heaven itself.'

IV. Here the Apostle skilfully resumes the subject of his discourse, dropt at iii. 12,—the dignity of the office he was discharging; from which he had been drawn by the comparison with the ministration of Moses, suggested by the allegory of the veil. In order to this, and as tending to that general purpose of apology which runs through a great part of the Epistle, he compares his own conduct with that of his adversaries, and intimates his superiority over them in the most important characteristics of the ministerial office, —fidelity, sincerity, zeal, and diligence. And, to set in a still higher point of view his merit in the last-mentioned quality, he adverts to the various trials and tribulations, which had broken his strength, and consequently lessened his ability to serve them. To this physical weakness he then opposes, by contrast, the power of the Lord, by which alone he was enabled to persevere, and to faint not under trials.

1. ἠλεήθημεν.] This word is often used of the grace of God, shown in bringing men to salvation, as Rom. ix. 15, seqq. xi. 30. 32. 1 Cor. vii. 25. 1 Pet. ii. 10. On the sense of ἐκκακεῖν, see Note on Luke xviii. 1. The word is properly a military term, signifying 'to give way from cowardice.' So Valcknaer renders, 'non deficimus, sed stamus et permanemus impavidi in eâ statione, in quâ summus Imperator collocavit.'

2. ἀπειπάμεθα] 'we have nothing to do with.' The Aorist is here used for the Present, as denoting what is done at all times alike, and is habitual. See Alt's Gr. N. T. p. 233. Τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς αἰσχ., namely, all such base practices as men, from shame, conceal; (so Herodot. ii. 35, τὰ μὲν αἰσχρὰ, ἀναγκαῖα δὲ, ἐν ἀποκρύφῳ ποιέειν χρεών.) meaning all underhand and foul dealings, especially such as the false teachers, whom the Apostle is supposed to allude to, were chargeable with. Μὴ περιπ. ἐν πανουργίᾳ, 'not adopting a crafty line of conduct.' Δολοῦντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ is synonymous with καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ at ii. 17.

— συνιστῶντες ἑαυτοὺς, &c.] i. e. 'acting so as to recommend ourselves to the unbiassed [good] opinion of men; [referring ourselves] to the judgment of every man's conscience, or natural power of distinguishing between right and wrong;' as infra v. 11. Thus the word is used, by metonymy, of the judgment of the conscience. Ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'as in the presence of God.'

3. The figurative language before adopted is d Isa. 6. 10. John 12. 31, 40, 45. & 14. 9, 30. supra 3. 8, 9, 18. Col. 1. 15. Heb. 1. 3.

e Supra 1. 24.
f Gen. 1. 3. Eph. 5. 8. 1 Pet. 2. 9.

κεκαλυμμένον τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἡμῶν, ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις ἐστὶ κεκαλυμμένον· [d] ἐν οἷς ὁ θεὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου 4 ἐτύφλωσε τὰ νοήματα τῶν ἀπίστων, εἰς τὸ μὴ αὐγάσαι [αὐτοῖς] τὸν φωτισμὸν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τῆς δόξης τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὅς ἐστιν εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ. [e] Οὐ γὰρ ἑαυτοὺς κηρύσ- 5 σομεν, ἀλλὰ Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν Κύριον· ἑαυτοὺς δὲ, δούλους ὑμῶν διὰ Ἰησοῦν. [f] Ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς ὁ εἰπὼν ἐκ σκότους φῶς 6 λάμψαι, ὃς ἔλαμψεν ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν, πρὸς φωτισμὸν τῆς γνώσεως τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν προσώπῳ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

here continued. An objection is supposed, founded on the preceding πᾶσαν; q. d. 'all do not receive the Gospel, even when preached so plainly and strongly as Paul does.' To which the answer is, that the fault is not in the Gospel, nor in any obscurity which attaches to it, but in the blindness and perversity of those who are perishing, are in a lost state, meaning that of unbelief. For that that is the sense of ἀπολλ. is plain from the verse following, and from a comparison with a passage at ii. 15, which is the best comment on this verse.

4. ἐν οἷς ὁ θεὸς, &c.] Put for ὧν ἀπίστων ὁ θεὸς, &c. By τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου is meant the wicked and sensual part of it, mere worldlings; and by the god of it, Satan, (see John xii. 31. xiv. 30), to whom, as being the original author and continual promoter of sin, sinners are, as it were, bound to yield obedience. See Rom. vi. 16, and a passage of Philo-Judæus, cited on John iii. 19. It is, indeed, but natural that worldlings should worship the god of this world. Satan is called, not lord, but god, of this world, because he is worshipped and served in the place of God by the world at large. So Bp. Sanderson (in his 7th Sermon ad Populum) shows that it 'is by doing service to Satan that the men of the world make a god of him; service being a principal part of that honour which belongeth to God.' So Matt. iv. 10, αὐτῷ μόνῳ λατρεύσεις. Εἰς τὸ μὴ αὐγάσαι, &c. The construction and sense is: 'So that the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ (who is the image of God) might not shine unto them,' i. e. that it might not show its true purport, and its real excellence to them; so that they should neither understand the one, nor appreciate the other. The αὐτοῖς after αὐγάσαι is omitted in many MSS. and Fathers, and is cancelled by Griesbach, Tittman, and Vater. Φωτισμὸν, 'splendour and excellence, with reference (remarks Grotius) to the preaching of Christ's miracles, resurrection, and ascension to heaven; and also the founding of a celestial kingdom, and the sending of the Holy Spirit procured by Him.'

— εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Christ is so called, either in respect of his Divine nature, by which he proceeds from the Father, as an image bearing an exact and perfect resemblance to Him; or, in respect of his office of Mediator, of which the principal part is, that he should hold forth the Father to our view. See Note on Heb. i. 3.

5. οὐ γὰρ—Κύριον.] These words, as Theophylact observes, have reference to the preceding, μὴ περιπ. ἐν πανουργίᾳ, μηδὲ δολ. τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ; vv. 3, 4, being in some measure parenthetical; q. d. '[We do not act in a crafty manner, or adulterate the word of God,] because we do not preach ourselves, as do the false teachers.' Ἑαυτοὺς κηρύσσ. is explained by most Commentators to mean seeking our own advantage or credit in preaching: which may be admitted as a secondary sense, and is agreeable to the usus loquendi. So Synes. cited by Wetstein, τὸ κηρύττειν ἑαυτὸν, καὶ πάντα ποιεῖν ὑπὲρ ἐπιδείξεως, οὐ σοφίας, ἀλλὰ σοφιστείας ἐστί. But the primary one intended seems, from the context, to be that propounded by Theophylact, Grotius, and Emmerling, 'We do not speak as principals, as if in a business of our own; we merely act as ambassadors on the part of another, namely, Jesus Christ.' Of the next clause, the full import seems to be this: 'So far indeed are we from regarding ourselves as principals, that we consider ourselves as performing whatever religious service we render to you, on the part of (διὰ) Christ, and as his representatives, and your servants therein.' Compare 1 Cor. iv. 1. This sense of διὰ readily arises from the common one on account of.

6. ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς—ὃς ἔλαμψεν, &c.] The Apostle here returns to the allegorical mode of speaking, alluding again to the shining of Moses' face. The construction, however, is somewhat irregular; and the best mode of tracing it is to suppose an ellipsis of οὗτός ἐστι before ὃς ἔλαμψε. In ὁ εἰπὼν ('who bade') there is an allusion to Gen. i. 3, 'Let there be light: and there was light.' The Apostle, as Iaspis observes, meaning to intimate, Physicè quasi in creando mundo, et moraliter per Christum Deus dixit, Fiat lux! et facta est lux. Ὃς ἔλαμψεν, '[he it is] who hath caused the light to shine.' See Note at Luke i. 78, ἀνατολὴ ἐξ ὕψους, and my Lex. in λάμπω. How this light, which shineth on men by the revelation of God's truth and the illumination of His Spirit, through the ear or the understanding, conveying the light of truth into the heart, may (as in the case of those mentioned supra v. 4) be in many ways excluded and become ineffectual, has been well shown by Dr. Is. Barrow, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 25. The Apostle has reference to the state of ignorance and prejudice to which he had formerly been so wedded; when (in a two-fold sense) the light of heaven broke in upon him. The words πρὸς φωτισμὸν, &c. denote the purpose for which the light was vouchsafed, and πρὸς φωτ. τῆς γν. &c. is put for πρὸς τὸ φωτίζειν ἀνθρώπους ἐν τῇ γν., 'for enlightening men in the knowledge of the glory of God.' Ἐν προσώπῳ Ἰ.

7 [g] Ἔχομεν δὲ τὸν θησαυρὸν τοῦτον ἐν ὀστρακίνοις σκεύ- g Infra 5. 1. 1 Cor. 2. 5 εσιν, ἵνα ἡ ὑπερβολὴ τῆς δυνάμεως ᾖ τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ μὴ ἐξ 2 Cor. 3. 5. & 12. 9.
8 ἡμῶν· ἐν παντὶ θλιβόμενοι, ἀλλ' οὐ στενοχωρούμενοι· ἀπο-9 ρούμενοι, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐξαπορούμενοι· [h] διωκόμενοι, ἀλλ' οὐκ h Heb. 13. 5, 6. Ps. 37. 24.
ἐγκαταλειπόμενοι· καταβαλλόμενοι, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀπολλύμενοι· i Rom. 8. 17. Gal. 6. 17.
10 [i] πάντοτε τὴν νέκρωσιν τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι Phil. 3. 10. 2 Tim. 2. 11, 12.
περιφέροντες, ἵνα καὶ ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι ἡμῶν 1 Pet. 4. 13. supra 1. 5.
11 φανερωθῇ. [k] Ἀεὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες εἰς θάνατον παραδι- k Ps. 44. 22. Rom. 8. 36.
δόμεθα διὰ Ἰησοῦν, ἵνα καὶ ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ φανερωθῇ ἐν 1 Cor. 4. 9. & 15. 31, 49.

Χρ., i. e. as Mr. Scott explains, as seen 'in his person, miracles, character, righteousness, atonement, and mediation;' which being stedfastly beheld, as in a mirror, transformed the soul into the glorious image of God exhibited in it.

7. The Apostle now proceeds (from this verse to chap. v. 10) to advert to a very different subject; namely, his own infirmities of body, and the trials under which he suffered; probably to preclude the idea that these were inconsistent with the possession of those illustrious gifts and that Apostolical dignity which he claimed. In refutation of this, he shows that his heavy trials and tribulations are appointed by God, for his own wise and merciful purposes; that he is amply supported under them by Divine aid (a manifest attestation to the truth of his claim), that the trials are not without profit to them, and not without great benefit to himself both here and hereafter.

— ἔχομεν] for κατέχομεν. Τὸν θησαυρὸν τ., i. e. 'the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ' just spoken of, and the important ministry which related to it. In ἐν ὀστρ. σκεύεσιν there is an allusion to a proverbial saying, of rich treasures being deposited in earthen vessels, i. e. bodies mean in substance, and fragile in form. The term σκεῦος (from σχέω, to hold) has an allusion to the body being the depository of the soul. Ὄστρακον properly signifies a shell (of which material, probably, the primitive vessels were formed); and, 2dly, a vessel, of baked earth. And as that is proverbially brittle, ὀστράκινος denoted weak, fragile, both in a natural and a metaphorical sense; and therefore was very applicable to the human body, both as frail (so Artemid. Onir. i. 52, and vi. 25, cited by Wetstein, tells us that to dream of being an earthen vessel, or to be in an earthen vessel, is a sign of death), and as mean. Indeed, there was an ancient saying, to be traced as far back as Herodotus,—that men are but earthen vessels. There may, however, be an allusion (agreeably to the Platonic doctrine) to the body, as standing in the same relation to the soul, as the shell does to the fish.

— ἡ ὑπερβολὴ τῆς δυνάμεως] i. e. 'the exceeding great power [committed to me as an Apostle].' Or it may refer to the mightiness of the things effected — whether miracles, or the scarcely less preternatural work of conversion effected with such strikingly insufficient means. Ἦι, for φαίνηται, 'might clearly appear to be' of God (comp. Ps. lxiv. 9), and not of us: the same sentiment as at i. 9.

8. ἐν παντὶ θλιβόμενοι, &c.] The full sense is: 'So great is God's powerful aid, that although we be as it were earthen, and beaten about by so many trials and tribulations, we are not broken down or destroyed.' The participles are, by the ellipsis of ἡμεῖς, nominativi pendentes, or are put for finite verbs. Ἐν παντὶ (sub. χρόνῳ, or τόπῳ, or πράγματι) is for πανταχόθεν, as in Thucyd. iii. 37, ἀμφοτέρωθεν θορυβούμενοι. In θλιβ., and the other similar terms employed in this figurative passage (where antithesis and paronomasia are united) the Commentators generally recognise agonistical metaphors. But we may rather, with Theophylact, suppose military ones; the allusion being to an army, so pressed upon and hemmed in, as scarcely to know whither to turn itself; yet not utterly reduced to despair. To which view of the sense θλιβ. and στενοχ. are far more suitable; θλιβ. denoting to be pressed upon or thronged, στενοχ., to be hemmed in; of which see a graphic description in Thucyd. v. 72, 73. The two terms are similarly combined in Arrian, Diss. Epict. i. 25. Ἐξαπορεῖσθαι (where the ἐκ signifies utterly, as in ἐξασθενεῖν) is used in the same sense as at i. 8, ὥστε ἐξαπορηθῆναι ἡμᾶς τοῦ ζῆν, where see Note.

9. ἐγκαταλ.] 'deserted [by God],' as an army by its auxiliaries. Ἀπολλ. This term is alone applicable to soldiers, since the worsted athletæ were not destroyed. And that must determine καταβαλλόμενοι to contain a military allusion; of which it is quite as susceptible as of an agonistical one.

10. πάντοτε—περιφέροντες.] Here and at v. 11, we have a forcible mode of expressing the peril of life to which he was continually exposed; (as 1 Cor. xv. 31, καθ' ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω) together with an indirect comparison of the sufferings endured by himself and the other Apostles, with those endured by the Lord Jesus even unto death. The Genitive τοῦ Κυρίου is (as Grotius remarks) a Genitive of likeness. The sense is, 'bearing about, continually sustaining perils and sufferings, like those of the Lord Jesus.'

Verse 11 is explanatory and illustrative of the preceding; q. d. 'For so it is; we who suffer persecution, are constantly exposed to the peril of death,' &c.

The next words, ἵνα ἡ ζωὴ—φανερωθῇ, suggest a reason why they were permitted to suffer all this; namely, that the faith of Christians in the resurrection of Jesus might be confirmed; i. e. in order that the life of Jesus, ascended into heaven, and consequently his power to save, might be made manifest by their perishable bodies, so wonderfully preserved amidst deadly perils.

l Infra 13. 9. τῇ θνητῇ σαρκὶ ἡμῶν. [l] Ὥστε ὁ μὲν θάνατος ἐν ἡμῖν ἐνερ- 12 m Ps. 116. 10. supra 3. 12. γεῖται, ἡ δὲ ζωὴ ἐν ὑμῖν. [m] Ἔχοντες δὲ τὸ αὐτὸ πνεῦμα 13 τῆς πίστεως, (κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον· Ἐπίστευσα, διὸ ἐλάn Rom. 8. 11. 1 Cor. 6. 14. vide Acts 2. 24. λησα·) καὶ ἡμεῖς πιστεύομεν, διὸ καὶ λαλοῦμεν· [n] εἰδότες ὅτι 14
ὁ ἐγείρας τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν, καὶ ἡμᾶς διὰ Ἰησοῦ ἐγερεῖ, o Supra 1. 6, 11. 2 Tim. 2. 10. infra 9. 11. καὶ παραστήσει σὺν ὑμῖν. [o] Τὰ γὰρ πάντα δι' ὑμᾶς· ἵνα 15
ἡ χάρις πλεονάσασα, διὰ τῶν πλειόνων τὴν εὐχαριστίαν,

12. ὥστε ὁ μὲν θάνατος—ὑμῖν.] Here we have an inference introducing a contrast between their condition and that of their converts. In determining the exact nature of it, much depends upon the import assigned to ἐνεργεῖται, which most Interpreters, ancient and modern, take in an active sense, 'worketh, is efficacious.' Others, however, as Beza, Grotius, Estius, Menochius, and Bp. Bull, assign to it a passive sense, 'is brought about, produced, or takes effect;' which does indeed occur at Rom. vii. 5, and is here preferable, as being, in the present instance and supra i. 6, and Eph. iii. 20, more suitable to the context.

To advert to the sense of the expressions θάνατος and ζωή, these may be taken (as they are by some ancient and modern Expositors) in their proper sense,—to mean that while he is dying for Christ's sake, they are enjoying life. If so, this must be meant as an ironical reproof. Yet the sense thus arising is harsh and jejune. Hence it is better to suppose, with Chrysostom, that the sense is: 'In us the Gospel takes effect by producing trials and tribulations, but in you by life;' i. e. by comparative freedom therefrom; also as being made partakers of the vital efficacy of Christ and his spiritual gifts, and of an assimilation to his resurrection by a life of holiness.

13. The vinculum of the connexion here is ably traced by Theophylact and Theodoret to the use of the term ζωή for salvation, which resting in hope (and what is hoped for is not seen) must be centered in faith.

— κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμ.] i. e. to adopt the words of Scripture. The general sense may be thus expressed: 'But we, having the same Spirit of faith [namely, in the resurrection,] as David had, do adopt his words (Ps. cxvi. 10), and [accordingly] we too having the same faith, speak and act as we do.' Πνεῦμα τῆς πίστεως is not, as many suppose, for πίστιν; but the phrase may be compared with πνεῦμα σοφίας at Eph. i. 17, πνεῦμα υἱοθεσίας and πνεῦμα δουλείας at Rom. viii. 15, πνεῦμα πραότητος, Gal. vi. 1. Thus the sense is, 'a disposition or spirit animated by the same faith as David had.' This St. Paul describes in the words of the Psalmist, as urging him to a similar confession arising from a similar certainty. And no wonder; since firm persuasion naturally tends to produce it in others. So Plato, Symp., says, πέπεισμαι δ' ἐγώ, πεπεισμένος δὲ πειρῶμαι καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους πείθειν.

14. This verse is (as Hyperius observes) confirmatory of what has been said of deliverance by the power of God after the example of Christ; q. d. 'God could raise up Christ; hence he can deliver from perils, and even death.' Compare similar passages at Rom. viii. 11, and 1 Cor. vi. 14. 'In short the Apostle here (as observes Abp. Newcome) explains how the life of Jesus was to be manifested in his body or mortal flesh, vv. 10, 11.'

— εἰδότες.] Denoting full assurance of faith, as 1 Cor. xv. 58.

— διὰ Ἰησοῦ] 'by Jesus,' as the resurrection and the life, John xi. 25. The term παραστήσει is strong and even graphic; alluding to the solemn introduction necessary to admission into the presence of kings. Here, however, the introduction is supposed to be made by the prince himself. A similar turn of expression occurs in Eph. v. 27, ἵνα παραστήσῃ αὐτὴν ἑαυτῷ ἔνδοξον τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. And so Jude v. 24, τῷ δυναμένῳ φυλάξαι ὑμᾶς—καὶ στῆσαι κατενώπιον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἀμώμους. Accordingly the full sense is, 'will admit us into his presence [with acceptance and approbation].' Σὺν ἡμῖν is most happily thrown in, by way of confirming them in the faith; as intimating that the blessings in question would extend likewise to all those who should have the like spirit of faith as they had. See 1 Cor. xv. 51. The Apostle may have also meant to hint, that the prospect of rejoining them in the society of 'just men made perfect' had been to him an encouragement to suffer for their spiritual benefit.

15. τὰ γὰρ πάντα δι' ὑμᾶς.] On the sense here (rendered obscure by the uncertainty of the reference in πάντα), some difference of opinion exists; but, from the context, we may suppose that by πάντα are meant all the trials and tribulations detailed at vv. 8—12. The force of the words will much depend on the connexion, which (as Calvin and Newcome rightly point out) is with the verse immediately preceding. So Newcome renders: '[I say, together with you;] for God hath appointed all things for the sake of the whole body of Christian converts, in order that,' &c. There is here an ellipsis of εἰσι, eveniunt, 'have [by God's providence] happened [to me].' Δι' ὑμᾶς, 'for your sake;' or, 'on your account,' 'for your spiritual good.' So Hyperius explains, 'For by the ministers of the word suffering affliction, and after their affliction being relieved, the result will be both that other believers, seeing the constancy of the saints, will be animated and confirmed in the faith, and be prepared to suffer persecution, and likewise be comforted with the firm persuasion of being themselves delivered out of their troubles.'

The next words, ἵνα ἡ χάρις πλεονάσασα—τοῦ Θεοῦ, advert to the purpose, or result, of those sufferings,—namely, 'in order that the abundant favour of God, displayed in his preservation, might, through the thanksgiving of many persons, redound to the glory of God.' Meaning to intimate, that, under all his afflictions, he shall at least have the comfort of their sympathy, and the benefit of their prayers; agreeably to what he says at the kindred passage, supra i. 11.

16 περισσεύσῃ εἰς τὴν δόξαν τοῦ Θεοῦ. [p] διὸ οὐκ ἐκκακοῦμεν· p Rom. 7. 22. Eph. 3. 16.
ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ ὁ ἔξω ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος διαφθείρεται, ἀλλ' ὁ ἔσω- Col. 3. 10. 1 Pet. 3. 4.
17 θεν ἀνακαινοῦται ἡμέρᾳ καὶ ἡμέρᾳ. [q] Τὸ γὰρ παραυτίκα q Ps. 30. 5 Rom. 8. 18.
ἐλαφρὸν τῆς θλίψεως ἡμῶν καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εἰς ὑπερβολὴν 1 Pet. 1. 6.
18 αἰώνιον βάρος δόξης κατεργάζεται ἡμῖν· [r] μὴ σκοπούντων r Rom. 8. 24 Heb. 11. 1.

— περισσεύσῃ.] From the antithesis here between the two terms πλεονάζειν and περισσεύειν, it is plain that the sense is not simply redound, i. e. conduce; but (by a stronger sense) 'be superabundantly conducive,' exundet, exuberet, late diffluat.

16. διὸ οὐκ ἐκκακοῦμεν, &c.] The course of reasoning is: 'Wherefore, although we suffer evils, and encounter perils of various kinds, yet, knowing the power of God,—and feeling assured that as he hath delivered us now, he will continue to deliver us, and finally raise us up at the last day,—we faint not, nor despair under our sufferings.' Ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρ. denotes the body, as ὁ ἔσωθεν ἄνθ. the mind, or rather soul. See Rom. vii. 22. Διαφθείρεται, 'is impaired [in its strength];' for φθείρεται, which is, indeed, found in many MSS., and also Theophylact and Theodoret, but evidently from emendation; φθείρ. being the more Classical term. Thus in a not dissimilar sentiment in Max. Tyr. Diss. 41. p. 493, it is said, that though the body be diseased, disturbed, and corrupted (φθείρεται), yet if it have but a robust and vigorous soul, all this will be slighted, and made light of.

— ἀνακαινοῦται] 'acquires fresh strength,' namely, the strength of faith and hope. For, as Bp. Sanderson finely remarks, 'the testimony of a good conscience from within, and the light of God's countenance from above, put more true joy into the heart, than any outward thing can sorrow.'

17. τὸ γὰρ παραυτίκα ἐλ., &c.] This is meant, as Theophylact observes, to be explanatory of the preceding, as showing how the inner man acquires fresh strength, even under such trials. There has, however, been some doubt entertained as to the sense of τὸ παραυτίκα—θλίψεως ἡμῶν. As bearing a strong resemblance to the present, I would compare a passage of Thucydides, iii. 56, καὶ ὅταν τὸ παραυτίκα που ἡμῖν ὠφέλιμον καθιστῆται, 'and when, too, our own advantage for the present is consulted.' In both these places παραυτίκα means 'at present;' which, indeed, is the literal sense of the word, it being formed from παρ', at, and αὐτίκα, present. Thus the sense here will be that which the Syriac Translators, and most of the recent Commentators assign, 'our present [comparatively] light affliction.' But the ancients generally, and almost all the earlier moderns, took παραυτίκα (which signifies literally, 'for the present,') to mean momentary; regarding the words as put for ἡ θλίψις ἡμῶν ἡ παρ. καὶ ἐλαφρὰ [οὖσα], 'our affliction, which is but momentary, and therefore light.' And as this interpretation is the most natural, so it may be the true one. Indeed, the sense 'for the present' readily suggests an idea of what is temporary; and is required by the antithetical αἰώνιον. The phrase καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εἰς ὑπ. is highly significant, the repetition having an intensive force (like the Heb. מאד מאד), and may be rendered 'infinitely exceeding.' See a fine passage illustrative of the present in Dr. Is. Barrow's Sermons, vol. i. p. 55, and also Hooker's Eccl. Pol. p. 18. 1st Edit. Βάρος signifies here, as often in the Sept., greatness, or abundance; and αἰώνιον βάρος is for βάρος αἰωνίου δόξης, with which compare a similar construction in 2 Macc. ix. 10, διὰ τὸ τῆς ὀσμῆς ἀφόρητον βάρος, for τὸ τῆς ὀσμῆς ἀφόρητον βάρος, and Soph. Œd. Col. 297, πατρῷον ἄστυ γῆς, for πατρῴας γῆς ἄστυ.

— κατεργάζεται] 'produces, obtains.' So Dionys. Hal. Antiq. lib. v. τοῦτο τὸ ἔργον ἀθάνατον αὐτῷ δόξαν εἰργάσατο.

18. μὴ σκοπούντων, &c.] These words are explanatory of the foregoing, and meant to show how it comes to pass, that the afflictions seem light. Now that is not only because they are temporary, but because we consider them as things of temporary interest only, compared with those of an eternal existence. Σκοπούντων is by the best Interpreters taken as a participle for a verb and particle, 'while we have an eye to, consider, or keep our minds intent upon;' as in Phil. ii. 4. iii. 17, and sometimes in the O. T. and the Classical writers. By βλεπόμενα seem meant all the visible and sensible things of the world, whether pleasurable or painful, elsewhere called τὰ ἐπίγεια and τὰ ἐν κόσμῳ; by the τὰ μὴ βλεπ. the things not corporeally seen, but which are realized by faith. The intent of the Apostle seems to be to show how heavy afflictions may come to seem light; namely, by a due consideration of the glory which will attend the enduring of them as we ought, and also by a due estimate of the value of the things which can be put in balance against the glory that shall be revealed. The difference is, that the glory, though unseen, is real and eternal; whereas the objects of the world are, though seen, unreal,—only a vain show (see Ps. xxxix. 6); and that even their longest duration is temporary, since our life is (as St. James says, iv. 14) but a vapour, as unreal as it is fleeting. So Seneca, Epist. lix. (cited by Capellus) finely observes, 'Omnia ista quæ sensibus serviunt, quæ nos accendunt et irritant, negat Plato ex iis esse quæ verè sunt. Igitur ista imaginaria sunt, &c. Mittamus animum ad illa quæ æterna sunt. Contemnamus omnia quæ adeo pretiosa non sunt, ut an sint omnino dubium sit.' To the same purpose it is excellently remarked by Chrysostom, that the future life, which seems to be ἄδηλος, is yet more manifest than the present, more stable, yea, more permanent: a truth beautifully expressed by Euripides, Hippol. 188—195 (Matthiæ):

> Πᾶς δ' ὀδυνηρὸς βίος ἀνθρώπων,
> Κοὐκ ἔστι πόνων ἀνάπαυσις·
> 'Αλλ' ὅ τι τοῦ ζῆν φίλτερον ἄλλο > Σκότος ἀμπισχὼν κρύπτει νεφέλαις.
> Δυσέρωτες δὴ φαινόμεθ' ὄντες
> Τοῦδ', ὅ τι τοῦτο στίλβει κατὰ γᾶν,
> Δι' ἀπειροσύναν ἄλλου βιότου, > Κοὐκ ἀπόδειξιν τῶν ὑπὸ γαίας.

ἡμῶν τὰ βλεπόμενα, ἀλλὰ τὰ μὴ βλεπόμενα· τὰ γὰρ βλεπό-a Job 4. 19. 2 Pet. 1. 13, 14. μενα πρόσκαιρα· τὰ δὲ μὴ βλεπόμενα αἰώνια. V. [a] Οἴδαμεν 1 γὰρ, ὅτι, ἐὰν ἡ ἐπίγειος ἡμῶν οἰκία τοῦ σκήνους καταλυθῇ, οἰκοδομὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ ἔχομεν, οἰκίαν ἀχειροποίητον, αἰώνιον, ἐν
b Rom. 8. 23. 2 Esdr. 2. 45. τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. [b] Καὶ γὰρ ἐν τούτῳ στενάζομεν, τὸ οἰκητή- 2 c 1 Cor. 15. 53, 54, 55. Rev. 3. 19. & 16. 15. Wisd. 9. 15. ριον ἡμῶν τὸ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ ἐπενδύσασθαι ἐπιποθοῦντες· εἴ 3 γε καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι, οὐ γυμνοὶ εὑρεθησόμεθα. [c] Καὶ γὰρ 4

Finally, another Heathen Philosopher (Proclus) similarly counsels us to withdraw our souls ἀπὸ τῶν φαινομένων ἐπὶ τὰ ἀφανῆ.

V. 1. This is closely connected with the preceding Chapter; not, however, (as has been thought) with the last verse, but with the words διὸ οὐκ ἐκκακοῦμεν, ver. 16; vv. 17, 18, being in some measure, parenthetical. In this portion the Apostle takes occasion, from the mention of the felicity of a future state, to enlarge thereon up to ver. 10, showing the strong supports which the consideration of it afforded him under the most trying circumstances.

— οἴδαμεν] 'we assuredly know;' for the knowledge here meant is that of assured and firm faith. The ἐὰν is by some eminent Expositors interpreted postquam, or quando, as in John xii. 32. But the sense thus arising is feeble compared with the common signification if or though. Ἐὰν καταλυθῇ should be rendered, 'though it be dissolved;' i. e. though it is to be dissolved. The expression καταλυθῇ has peculiar propriety; the term being one employed of the destruction (usually gradual) of substances of every kind, especially buildings, and sometimes that of the human body. So Philostr. Vit. Soph. i. 9 (cited by Schleusner), μὴ καταλυθῆναι τὸ σῶμα ὑπὸ γήρως.

In the expression ἡ ἐπίγειος ἡμῶν οἰκία τοῦ σκήνους some, as Rosenmuller and Wakefield, regard the οἰκία as redundant; σκῆνος, they say, of itself signifying the human body. This is, however, merely evading the difficulty. It is, indeed, true that in the Classical writers σκῆνος has sometimes that sense. So Plato calls the body γήϊνον σκῆνος· and at Wisd. ix. 15 we have τὸ γεῶδες σκῆνος. Compare also Heb. xi. 10. Hence some Commentators (as Michaelis, Schleusner, and Bp. Middleton) take the sense to be, 'our earthly abode of the body.' See Bp. Middleton, who, however, is more successful in showing the incorrectness of our common version, than in establishing the propriety of the one he adopts. It is plain that, as οἰκία must not be considered pleonastic, τοῦ σκήνους must be meant to be exegetical of the ἡ ἐπίγ. ἡμῶν οἰκία. And yet, according to the sense assigned by the Bishop, the explanation would be scarcely necessary. Besides, as that signification is no where else found in St. Paul's writings, nor, indeed, in the Scriptures either of the New Test. or the Old, it ought not to be here introduced. Why should we not translate 'of the tent?' (as a Genitive of explanation, as Grotius says,) which is not liable to Bp. Middleton's censure, and yields an excellent sense, as meant to suggest that the earthly house of the soul, the body, was a mere tent, set up for a temporary purpose, and formed for speedy decay and ruin. There is a reference to πρόσκαιρα and αἰώνιον just before. Render, 'our earthly tent-house.' Here the expression ἐπίγειος is used with reference to ἐν ὀστρακίνοις σκεύεσιν supra iv. 7.

— οἰκοδομὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ, &c.] 'we have supplied at the hands of God,' &c., by a similar ellipsis as at i. 11, ἐκ πολλῶν. Ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, for οὐράνιον, as opposed to ἐπίγειον before.

2. ἐν τούτῳ.] Supply, not (as some do) μέρει or πράγματι, but τῷ σκήνει and ὄντες. See v. 4. Στενάζομεν.] Namely, under the various distresses to which the frailty of that tent-house subjects us.

— τὸ οἰκητήριον—ἐπιποθοῦντες.] Here we have a change of the metaphor by which the body was compared to a habitation, into another, by which it is compared to a garment; both similes in use among the Greek Philosophers,—the former employed by the Pythagoreans,—the latter by the Platonists. We have here the two blended together, which has caused a misapprehension of the sense by some Expositors. Οἰκητήριον is here used, not σκῆνος, because a permanent, and not a temporary building is intended. Τὸ ἐξ οὐρ. Supply διδόμενον, which is expressed in John iii. 27, though ἐξ οὐρ. is generally taken for ἐπουράνιον. On the true import of ἐπενδ., which is simply to put on, see Note on 1 Cor. xv. 53.

3. εἴ γε καὶ ἐνδυσ., οὐ γυμνοὶ εὑρ.] The sense here is disputed and dubious, and the expositions of Commentators in general liable to objection. The interpretation most usually adopted is that of Bos and Wetstein (which has been followed recently by Emmerling and Rinck), who explain, 'If, indeed, it may be so, that we shall be found [when the change takes place] clothed with a body, not having put it off by death.' For the Platonists, Bos shows, used the term γυμνοὶ to denote the dead, and ἐνδυσάμενοι the living. So Max. Tyr. Diss. xiii. p. 240 (Reiske), ἡ μὲν οὖν ἀγαθὴ ψυχὴ, καὶ διαπεπονημένη ἀμελεῖ, καὶ ὡς τάχιστα ἐφίεται γυμνωθῆναι, where several parallel sentiments are adduced by Markland from Porphyry, Philo-Judæus, and other writers. The above interpretation, however, yields a sense not a little frigid, and is on various grounds (which I have stated in Recens. Synop.) wholly untenable. It would rather seem that the meaning intended is: 'Since being so clothed (i. e. having put on this dress) we shall not be found naked,' i. e. destitute of a body, (whatever may become of our earthly one). See 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54.

4. Here we have the same sentiment as that at v. 2, but more plainly expressed. The only doubt as to the sense regards the words ἐφ' ᾧ οὐ θέλομεν ἐκδύσασθαι, ἀλλ' ἐπενδύσασθαι, which the best Expositors interpret, 'For we desire not to put it off, but to be clothed upon it; so that οἱ ὄντες ἐν τῷ σκήνει στενάζομεν, βαρούμενοι, ἐφ᾽ ᾧ οὐ θέλομεν ἐκδύσασθαι, ἀλλ᾽ ἐπενδύσασθαι, ἵνα καταποθῇ τὸ 5 θνητὸν ὑπὸ τῆς ζωῆς. [d] Ὁ δὲ κατεργασάμενος ἡμᾶς εἰς αὐτὸ d Is. 29. 23. supra 1. 22.

τοῦτο, Θεὸς, ὁ καὶ δοὺς ἡμῖν τὸν ἀῤῥαβῶνα τοῦ Πνεύμα- Eph. 1. 13. & 4. 30.
6 τος. [e] Θαῤῥοῦντες οὖν πάντοτε, καὶ εἰδότες, ὅτι ἐνδημοῦντες e Heb. 11. 13.
7 ἐν τῷ σώματι ἐκδημοῦμεν ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου· ([f] διὰ πίστεως f Rom. 8. 24, 25.
8 γὰρ περιπατοῦμεν, οὐ διὰ εἴδους·) [g] θαῤῥοῦμεν δὲ, καὶ 1 Cor. 13. 12. supra 3. 18.
εὐδοκοῦμεν μᾶλλον ἐκδημῆσαι ἐκ τοῦ σώματος, καὶ ἐνδημῆσαι g Phil. i. 23.
9 πρὸς τὸν Κύριον. Διὸ καὶ φιλοτιμούμεθα, εἴτε ἐνδημοῦντες our mortal state may be at once exchanged for the immortal, by an immediate entrance into an eternal state.' This interpretation, however, especially the latter part, is open to many objections, which see in Recens. Synop. The true sense of the passage appears to be as follows: 'For (I repeat) while we are in this tent-house, though groaning under the weight of many afflictions, yet our wish is not so much to put off this body, and thereby be rid of those evils, but rather to be clothed upon with, i. e. put on, a celestial body.' At ἐπενδ. we must repeat, from the preceding context, τὸ οἰκ. τὸ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ. As to the real meaning intended to be conveyed, many eminent Commentators have thought it to be, that the raised bodies of the just will be covered and encircled with another body, which shall be bright, aerial, and resplendent, and shall somehow communicate a principle of immortality to the raised mortal body. And this is supposed to be countenanced by 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54. But see the Note there. It would seem, as Mr. Scott says, that 'the Apostle did not mean to determine any thing concerning the manner, as to external circumstances, in which the body subsists after the resurrection.' The next words, ἵνα καταποθῇ τὸ θνητὸν ὑπὸ τῆς ζωῆς are best explained, with Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Theodoret, 'that thus the mortal principle may be absorbed and annihilated by the vivifying and immortal one.' Compare 1 Cor. xv. 54.

5. ὁ δὲ κατεργασάμενος—Θεός.] Here not a little difference of opinion exists as to the import of κατεργ; though, indeed, the senses assigned by various Expositors, wrought, destined, created, or fitted, do not materially differ. Which of them is to be adopted will depend upon what is understood by τοῦτο. Now from ver. 4 it would seem to mean this change from corruption to incorruption, and from mortality to immortality, the ἀπολύτρωσις τοῦ σώματος of Rom. viii. 23, the deliverance from the bondage of corruption, and restoration to the glorious liberty of the children of God by adoption and grace. Thus the sense of κατεργ. will be wrought, formed, adapted, destined. The words following, which strongly support this interpretation, being meant to show the certainty of the change in question; since God had given them the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit as a pledge of future acceptance, by which they were sealed to the day of redemption (Eph. iv. 30). On the term ἀῤῥαβῶνα see Note supra i. 22.

6. θαῤῥοῦντες οὖν—Κυρίου.] The οὖν has much force, implying (as Hyperius observes) an inference from the preceding; q. d. 'Such being the case, in reliance, therefore, on these gracious aids, which are the pledge of resurrection and glorification, we,' &c. At θαῤῥοῦντες supply ἐσμεν; or take it as a participle for verb finite.

— καὶ εἰδότες ὅτι, &c.] 'especially since we know this,' &c. These words are meant to show the ground of that confidence, and the nature of that courage, which is such as to enable them to meet death itself. 'Ενδημοῦντες is not well rendered, 'while we are at home;' for although the word is susceptible of that sense, it is unsuitable to the context, and at variance with the rest of the New Test., which represents this world as not our home, but our sojourn. On the other hand, the version of Dr. Clarke and Dr. Doddridge, 'while we are sojourning,' though agreeable to the tenor of Scripture, is wholly at variance with the usus loquendi, since the word never had, and never could have had, such a sense. It is best rendered, residing, or living. With respect to ἐκδημεῖν, this term, when followed by ἀπὸ, always denotes separation from.

7. διὰ πίστεως—εἴδους.] This is meant to show how the Apostles could be said to be ἐκδημοῦντες ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου; namely, by faith, considering heaven as their only home, and what seemed to be such, a mere sojourn; q. d. 'for, in our present state we live (i. e. lead our spiritual life) by faith [only] in Christ; not in the sight of Him, as we shall when released from the thraldom of the body.'

8. θαῤῥοῦμεν δὲ—Κύριον.] This is resumptive, and further illustrative of what was said at ver. 6; q. d. 'We are, I say, of good courage, desirous rather to be,' &c. The general sentiment is, that they wish circumstances to be quite reversed. The terms ἐκδ. and ἐνδ. are not well rendered absent and present; still less so by Macknight, from home, and at home. The true sense of ἐκδ. is migrare, to depart. On the other hand, the word ἐνδημῆσαι should be rendered, not to be present with, but (agreeably to the metaphor) to be at home with, implying communion with Him in whose presence is fulness of joy. In the verse following, ἐνδημ. and ἐκδημ. must have the very same sense as in this, and may best be rendered, 'whether we are at home or from home;' i. e. remain in the body or depart from it.

9. He now returns to the main cause of his fidelity and diligence in his Apostolical office, and also the constancy and fortitude with which he encounters perils the most appalling; confirming withal what he said a little before; namely, that whatever he does in this life, his earnest desire is to please God and be with God. (Hyperius.)

h Ps. 62. 12. Jer. 17. 10. & 32. 19. Matt. 25. 32. Rom. 2. 6, 7. & 14. 12. 1 Cor. 22. 12. & 4. 5. Gal. 6. 5. Col. 3. 24, 25. Rev. 2. 23.
i supra 4. 2. Jude 23.
k supra 1. 14. infra 10. 8. & supra 3. 1.
l infra 11. 1. 16. 17. & 12. 6. 11.

εἴτε ἐκδημοῦντες, εὐάρεστοι αὐτῷ εἶναι. [h] Τοὺς γὰρ πάντας 10
ἡμᾶς φανερωθῆναι δεῖ ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ βήματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἵνα κομίσηται ἕκαστος τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, πρὸς ἃ ἔπραξεν, εἴτε ἀγαθὸν, εἴτε κακόν. [i] Εἰδότες οὖν τὸν φόβον τοῦ 11 Κυρίου, ἀνθρώπους πείθομεν· Θεῷ δὲ πεφανερώμεθα. ἐλπίζω δὲ καὶ ἐν ταῖς συνειδήσεσιν ὑμῶν πεφανερῶσθαι. [k] Οὐ γὰρ 12
πάλιν ἑαυτοὺς συνιστάνομεν ὑμῖν, ἀλλὰ ἀφορμὴν διδόντες ὑμῖν καυχήματος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν· ἵνα ἔχητε πρὸς τοὺς ἐν προσώπῳ καυχωμένους, καὶ οὐ καρδίᾳ. [l] Εἴτε γὰρ ἐξέστημεν, 13

9. διὸ καὶ φιλοτ.] Meaning, 'Wherefore [since we have such exalted hopes] we strive to the uttermost,' &c. The metaphor in φιλοτ. is one derived from striving for the mastery in the pursuits of ambition, as calling forth the most strenuous exertions; since the combatants must have learnt (to use the words of the Grecian historian) μὴ φεύγειν τοὺς πόνους, ἢ μηδὲ τὰς τιμὰς διώκειν. See Milton's Lycidas, l. 72.

10. τοὺς γὰρ πάντας ἡμᾶς φαν., &c.] The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. '[And there is need to strive to act, so as to approve ourselves in His sight], for both we and all persons must appear,' &c. Φανερωθῆναι some Commentators, ancient and modern, explain, be made manifest, meaning that 'our inmost soul will be displayed;' see 1 Cor. iv. 5. But though that sense be a good one, and is agreeable to what we read elsewhere in Scripture, it may be doubted whether such is here intended to be directly asserted. The expression is better rendered by others, as Piscator and H. Stephens, comparere, appear; which sense may, indeed, include, by implication, that of manifestos fieri. Φανεροῦσθαι was, I suspect, a forensic term, meaning, to present oneself for trial. So the Pesch. Syr. Version has, 'we must all stand up for trial.' Probably, however, the term was one of common life, since it does not, I believe, occur in the Classical writers.

— τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώμ.] Supply πεπραγμένα, which word is expressed in Ælian, H. A. v. 26, τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος πραττόμενα. Διὰ τοῦ σώμ., for ἐν τῷ σώμ. As κομίσασθαι properly signifies (by the force of the Middle voice) 'to carry off as our own,' so it may very well be applied to the receiving the reward of any action, whether for good or evil.

11. The Apostle now again speaks of himself; and takes occasion, from what he has just been saying, to express what powerful motives he has to fidelity and diligence in his office.

— τὸν φόβον.] The term may, as Commentators say, be used, per metalepsin, for τὸ φοβερὸν, by way of intimating the awful judgment of the Lord. But I am rather inclined to think, with Calvin, that the phrase εἰδέναι τὸν φόβον τοῦ Κυρίου is meant to denote the having a deep and reverential sense of our accountability to the Lord Jesus Christ.

— ἀνθρώπους πείθομεν.] Meaning, 'we use our utmost endeavours to persuade men, by pressing on them these awful considerations, to embrace the Gospel, and obey what it enjoins.'

— Θεῷ δὲ πεφ.] The perplexity found in the interpretation of these words might have been avoided by supplying, from the subject-matter, some such words as οὕτω ποιοῦντες, 'and, in so doing, we are made manifest to God;' implying, 'our fidelity and sincerity are known and approved unto God.' In the words following, ὑμῖν may be supplied from the context; and πεφανερ. is to be taken in the same double sense as above; and συνειδ. as at iv. 2. Render: 'And I trust, too, that we are manifested and approved [to you] in your judgments and consciences.'

12. οὐ γὰρ πάλιν, &c.] This is, as Calvin and Schliting observe, meant to anticipate an objection; 'Why, if your views be so manifest to us, commend yourselves to us?' The answer to which is; 'Not so; for we are not commending ourselves; that is not our purpose.' 'Αλλὰ ἀφορμὴν—ἡμῶν, 'but our intent in so speaking is to afford you matter for glorying in us;' namely, that you have been converted to Christianity by a true Apostle. Accordingly, this verse presents, as Hyperius remarks, the first reason for his so doing, and that à necessario.

— ἵνα ἔχητε.] Supply τι λέγειν, or καυχᾶσθαι. The words τοὺς ἐν προσώπῳ καυχ., καὶ οὐ καρδίᾳ are meant to stigmatize the false teachers, who prided themselves on those external advantages, by which they excited the admiration of the multitude, neglecting the virtues of the heart, and the testimony of a good conscience. Compare supra i. 12, and see Grotius and Macknight.

13. In this verse, as Hyperius shows, we have adduced the second reason for the above procedure, and that ab utili; namely, to set forth the glory of God, and promote their good.

— εἴτε ἐξέστημεν, &c.] We have here (as Calvin remarks, a concessio, or a speaking after the manner of his adversaries, making use, per mimesin, of the term they employed. So that what is here said forms a sort of tacit reply thereto. It remains, however, to decide what is the exact force of the term ἐξέστημεν. Some ancient Expositors, as Hyperius, and also Doddr., understand it to mean that he is transported beyond himself through zeal for God's glory. So Mark iii. 21, ἔλεγον ὅτι ἐξέστη, and Acts xxvi. 24, Μαίνῃ, Παῦλε. This sense, however, is forbidden by the antithetical term σωφρονοῦμεν, which, from the context, can only mean, 'speaking modestly of himself,' as opp. to ἄφρων εἶναι, xi. 16. and thus ἐξέστ. must mean the reverse. And so it is taken by some ancient and all the most eminent modern Interpreters; namely, to denote the exceeding due measure in self-commendation; a sense of the word the more easy to be accounted for, since the phrase ἐξεστηκέναι τοῦ νοῦ or

14 Θεῷ· εἴτε σωφρονοῦμεν, ὑμῖν. ἡ γὰρ ἀγάπη τοῦ Χριστοῦ 15 συνέχει ἡμᾶς· [m] κρίναντας τοῦτο, ὅτι εἰ εἷς ὑπὲρ πάντων m Rom. 5. 15. & 6. 11, 12. & 14. 7. Gal. 2. 20. 1 Thess. 5. 10. 1 Pet. 4. 2.
ἀπέθανεν, ἄρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον. Καὶ ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν, ἵνα οἱ ζῶντες μηκέτι ἑαυτοῖς ζῶσιν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ὑπὲρ 16 αὐτῶν ἀποθανόντι καὶ ἐγερθέντι. [n] Ὥστε ἡμεῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν n Gal. 5. 6. & 6. 15. Col. 3. 11.
οὐδένα οἴδαμεν κατὰ σάρκα. εἰ δὲ καὶ ἐγνώκαμεν κατὰ σάρκα φρενῶν, or ἐμαυτοῦ (which last word is expressed in Æschin. de Falsa Legat. sub init., ἐξέστην δ' ἐμαυτοῦ), was often used to denote being a fool, which frequently carries the adjunct sense of boasting of oneself. So, further on, xi. 1, ἀφροσύνη is used to denote 'folly of boasting;' and at xi. 16, ἄφρων εἶναι signifies, 'to be a fool;' namely, in boasting.

— Θεῷ.] Meaning, 'for the glory of God, [to whom the praise of my good deeds is due,] and not my own glory.' Ὑμῖν, 'for your advantage;' namely, by setting you an example of humility.

14. Here we have, as Hyperius remarks, the third reason for his so doing, and that from a sense of gratitude for what he owes to Christ, as dying for him and all men. So Abp. Newcome well renders, 'for in the whole of my conduct my love to Christ constrains me to regard the furtherance of his Gospel.'

— συνέχει] 'strongly urges,' 'constrains us,' i. e. so to act, συνωθεῖ, as Œcumenius explains.

15. κρίναντας τοῦτο, &c.] The sense is best expressed by a verb and particle, this being meant (as Hyperius says) to explain the reason for the duty in question; namely, to state what we owe to Christ in return for his extreme loving-kindness to us; q. d. If the love of Christ was so great towards us, that he died for us, it is right that we should also greatly love him in return, and no longer live to ourselves only, but rather to him; and therefore with all diligence will we heed his teaching, nay, if needs be, even lay down our lives in his cause.

Εἰ here signifies, 'if [as is the case];' equivalent to since. Εἷς, 'one,' even Christ. Ὑπὲρ πάντων, i. e. as an expiatory sacrifice for the sins of all. It is scarcely necessary to observe how strongly this inculcates the doctrine of Universal Redemption; see 1 Tim. ii. 6. Heb. ii. 9. Indeed, as observes Bp. Bull, in his Exam. Cens., 'unless Christ be understood to have died for all, that foundation on which ministers of the Gospel build exhortations of this kind will be always uncertain, and very often false. Always uncertain, because it cannot be made manifest to men who are the elect: very frequently false; as often, namely, as it is used to the non-elect, who, on this ground of redemption, would not be held bound to live unto Christ, unless it were presupposed that Christ had really redeemed them. Finally, Christ himself could not, in right of his own death (Rom. xiv. 9), claim supreme dominion over all and each, unless he had really died for all and every man.'

— ἄρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον.] Almost all Translators render ἀπέθ. 'were dead.' But to this version several well-founded objections are urged by Professor Scholefield: 1. It involves, he thinks, a strange confusion of ideas. 2. That sense would have been rather expressed by a periphrasis; as νεκρὸς ὤν, Eph. ii. 1. 3. Ἀπέθανον cannot, he thinks, signify 'were dead.' He would therefore render, 'then all died.' But the learned Professor is more successful in showing the common version to be wrong, than in establishing the new one which he proposes. The reasoning he uses would be conclusive in a Classical writer, but is not at all so in a writer like St. Paul, who often sacrifices petty proprieties of language and style to point an antithesis; which is, I apprehend, the case here; for, as Hyperius well observes, it was the Apostle's intent, in the words ἄρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον, to present an amplification of the loving-kindness of Christ, showing the exceeding great value of this one benefit; an amplification, Hyperius observes, which led to the obscurity complained of in this sentence; for without it the sentence would have run simply thus,—that if one died for all, it becomes us, for whom he died, to live in all things to him only, and not to ourselves. The insertion, however, was introduced to amplify the benefit of Christ's death. Hence, I apprehend, the common version may be defended in the sense, 'were in a state of death,' were spiritually dead in trespasses and sins, were in a state of condemnation. Finally, οἱ πάντες should be rendered, 'those all.'

— καὶ ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν.] This seems meant to show the duty of the redeemed to be co-extensive with the purpose of Christ's death; which was not only to deliver man from spiritual death, or perdition, but to restore him to the spiritual life which he had lost in Adam; meaning to intimate that it is but just that the life so preserved should be devoted to the preserver. As in the Civil Law, when any one's life, which had been forfeited, was ransomed and preserved by another, the person so preserved was considered bound to devote all his future life for the benefit of his preserver.

16. The words of this verse are, from the extreme flexibility of the terms, capable of several senses, among which the connexion must determine our choice. Now that is not, I apprehend, as some have maintained, with ver. 12, but with the verse immediately preceding; the ὥστε implying a conclusion from what went before; q. d. 'Such being the case, since we owe every thing to Christ, and ought to be all dead to the present life, we regard no man in respect of any worldly advantage;' alluding probably to the false teachers who prided themselves, and were esteemed by others, on account of some personal, external, and adventitious recommendations, as having known Christ personally, or his relatives, or at least the Apostles in Judæa. See more in Calvin and Hyperius.

Of this sense of εἴδω we have an example at 1 Thess. v. 12, and especially at 1 Cor. ii. 2, οὐ γὰρ ἔκρινα τοῦ εἰδέναι τι ἐν ὑμῖν, εἰ μὴ Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν.

The next words, εἰ δὲ καὶ ἐγνώκαμεν κατὰ σάρκα Χριστὸν, ἀλλὰ νῦν οὐκ ἔτι γινώσκομεν, contain, as Hyperius remarks, a sentiment thrown o Rom. 8. 10. Gal. 6. 15. Rev. 21. 5. Is. 43. 18, 19. p Rom. 5. 10. Col. 1. 20. 1 John 2. 2. & 4. 10.

q Rom. 3. 24, 25. Col. 1. 20.
r Infra 6. 1. Eph. 6. 20. Mal. 2. 7.
s Isa. 53. 6, 9, 12. Rom. 5. 19. & 8. 3. Gal. 3. 13. 1 John 3. 5. 1 Pet 2. 22.

Χριστὸν, ἀλλὰ νῦν οὐκ ἔτι γινώσκομεν. [o] Ὥστε εἴ τις ἐν 17
Χριστῷ, καινὴ κτίσις· τὰ ἀρχαῖα παρῆλθεν, ἰδοὺ γέγονε καινὰ τὰ πάντα. [p] Τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦ καταλ- 18 λάξαντος ἡμᾶς ἑαυτῷ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ δόντος ἡμῖν τὴν διακονίαν τῆς καταλλαγῆς· [q] ὡς ὅτι Θεὸς ἦν ἐν Χριστῷ 19 κόσμον καταλλάσσων ἑαυτῷ, μὴ λογιζόμενος αὐτοῖς τὰ παραπτώματα αὐτῶν, καὶ θέμενος ἐν ἡμῖν τὸν λόγον τῆς καταλλαγῆς. [r] Ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ οὖν πρεσβεύομεν, ὡς τοῦ Θεοῦ 20 παρακαλοῦντος δι' ἡμῶν· δεόμεθα ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, καταλλά-γητε τῷ Θεῷ. [s] τὸν γὰρ μὴ γνόντα ἁμαρτίαν, ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν 21 in per occasionem et obiter, for the purpose of overturning the arrogant claims of the false teachers to superiority on the score of having known Christ personally. St. Paul says that he too had known Christ, although he claims no glory on that account; it being of little consequence whether any one has seen Christ in the flesh or not, so long as he does the duty enjoined on him by Christ: see more in Hyperius. With this may probably be united the sense, which Calvin lays down as the principal one,—that Christ is now to be known, not as he was when in the flesh, but spiritually, and apart from all mundane ideas.

17. ὥστε εἴ τις, &c.] This is resumptive of what was said in the preceding ὥστε ἡμεῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν οὐδένα οἴδαμεν κατὰ σάρκα, and forms the second inference from vv. 14, 15, presenting a general maxim which constitutes, as Scott says, 'the standard of genuine Christianity.' From the brevity, however, with which it is expressed, the passage admits of being variously interpreted. From the nature of the passage, and the scope of the context, it is evident that ἐστι is here to be supplied; i. e. 'If any one be in Christ, he is a new creature;' meaning, he is wholly changed, conformably to the new and spiritual religion of Christ, which requires a renewal of the heart. By the expression being in Christ, I would understand not merely (as many have done) being grafted into the body of Christ by baptism, but being really united to Him in faith, love, and obedience.

The next words, τὰ ἀρχαῖα παρῆλθεν, ἰδοὺ γέγονε καινὰ τὰ πάντα, are probatory, and illustrative of καινὴ κτίσις before, forming, as Calvin says, an 'elogium ad extollendam regenerationem.' The words were probably formed on Isaiah xliii. 18, 19. The newness here spoken of is not to be understood in the limited sense assigned by many modern Commentators. As regarded the Jew, it would include an abandonment of all his former prejudices and narrow views; an undergoing that great change of principles and feelings, which may best be conceived by contrasting together the dispensations of the Law and the Gospel. As it regarded the Gentile, it would denote a still greater change; implying a total abandonment of the errors of Atheism or Polytheism, and an abjuring of those demoralizing principles which were generated by each of them. Finally, as regarded both, it implied a complete abandonment of sin, a renouncing the works of the flesh and the devil, a ceasing to live after the flesh, and a living henceforth after the Spirit; a change so great, that it might well be called καινὴ κτίσις.

18. τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c.] Meaning, it would seem, to intimate the cause of the spiritual renovation effected by the Gospel; and that not by our own natural strength, but by the grace and strength derived from God alone. By τὰ πάντα we must understand all the component parts of the thing in question, namely, spiritual regeneration by the Gospel. The next words advert to the means whereby it was effected; namely, through the reconciliation of man with God by Jesus Christ. The Apostle means to say, that the goodness of God had reconciled the world to himself, through Christ, and entrusted to the Apostles the ministration of this reconciliation.

19. ὡς ὅτι Θεὸς, &c.] This is further illustrative, with amplification, of the preceding subject of reconciliation through Christ. Some obscurity, however, here exists, occasioned partly by the peculiar idiom in ὡς ὅτι (best rendered quippe or nempe quod, literally, that is, namely, that), but chiefly by the harshness of the construction. As to the sense, there is no difficulty, except as regards the words ἐν Χριστῷ, which may be taken either with the preceding (and thus the meaning will be, that God reconciled the world to himself by Christ), or with the following, by which the sense will be, that God was in, i. e. united to, Christ, reconciling, &c. The latter mode is the more simple and natural. According to either view the doctrine of Christ's Divinity is strongly attested.

By κόσμον understand the human race generally, without distinction of nation, religion, &c.

— μὴ λογιζόμενος] 'not imputing;' as Rom. iv. 8, ᾧ οὐ μὴ λογίσηται Κύριος ἁμαρτίαν. So also οὐκ ἐλλογεῖν in Rom. v. 13. θέμενος ἐν ἡμῖν τὸν λ., literally, 'putting into our hands;' i. e. committing to our trust. Τὸν λόγον τῆς κατ., 'the message of reconciliation.' Καταλλαγῆς is a Genitive of explication.

20. The οὖν is very significant, an inference being now drawn from what has been said; q. d. 'In the exercise, then, of this office of reconciliation, we the Apostles are ambassadors on the part of Christ.' The words following, ὡς—ἡμῶν, are exegetical of ὑπὲρ Χρ. πρ., and mean, that, in delivering the message, they act on the part of God, and represent his person; and therefore God may be said by them to persuade, and Christ to entreat, when they address the exhortation, καταλλάγητε τῷ Θεῷ, 'embrace the means of reconciliation afforded to you, through Christ, by God.'

ἁμαρτίαν ἐποίησεν, ἵνα ἡμεῖς γινώμεθα δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ ἐν
1 αὐτῷ. VI. [a] συνεργοῦντες δὲ καὶ παρακαλοῦμεν, μὴ εἰς a 1 Cor. 3. 9. Heb. 12. 15.
2 κενὸν τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ δέξασθαι ὑμᾶς· ([b] λέγει γάρ· b Is. 49. 8.
Καιρῷ δεκτῷ ἐπήκουσά σου, καὶ ἐν ἡμέρᾳ σωτηρίας ἐβοήθησά σοι· ἰδοὺ, νῦν καιρὸς εὐπρόσδεκτος, ἰδοὺ, νῦν
3 ἡμέρα σωτηρίας·) [c] μηδεμίαν ἐν μηδενὶ διδόντες προσκοπὴν, c Rom. 14. 13. 1 Cor. 10. 32.

21. τὸν γὰρ μὴ γνόντα, &c.] The γὰρ has reference to what follows, as suggesting an especial reason why they should hearken to the message of reconciliation; namely, that 'He who sent it has been so benignant and merciful as to make,' &c. Τὸν μὴ γνόντα ἁμαρτίαν; a most significant designation of Christ, denoting 'the perfectly Holy and Righteous;' or, as Theophylact explains, αὐτοδικαιοσύνην, Righteousness itself. In ἁμαρτίαν ἐποίησεν, the ἁμαρτίαν is taken by many eminent Commentators to mean 'a sin-offering,' or a sacrifice by which he expiated our transgressions; and, as that sense is frequent in the Sept., it is likely to be the one meant here. Other Interpreters, however, of not less note, take ἁμαρτίαν for ὡς ἁμαρτάνοντα, abstract for concrete. And thus the meaning will be, that 'though Christ was free from sin, he underwent the punishment of death, which is the consequence of sin: he was accounted as a sinner.' And this is somewhat confirmed by the next clause, of which the sense is, 'that we might be accounted righteous, and justified through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus;' δικαιοσύνη being for δικαιωθέντες (comp. 1 Cor. i. 30), and Θεοῦ for παρὰ Θεοῦ. On either interpretation the doctrine of the Atonement is abundantly evident from this passage; see Abp. Magee, Illustr. No. xx. viii., and Bp. Bull's Exam. Cens. p. 39—43, and Dr. Is. Barrow's Sermons, vol. i. serm. 32.

VI. This Chapter consists of two parts, vv. 1—10 (or 1—13), and v. 11—ult., with the first verse of the following chapter. 1. The Apostle, continuing his vindication of his ministry, shows with what faithfulness, zeal, charity, and patience he has discharged it, amidst all the afflictions and disgraces to which he has been subjected. Then, 2. at vv. 11, 12, he desires, as a return for his ardent affection for them, a similar affection from them, such as should be evinced in abstaining from a certain practice which was contrary to Christian principles, and must be destructive of their happiness here, as well as endanger their salvation hereafter; namely, intermarrying with idolaters or unbelievers. In short, ver. 14—ult. seem to properly connect with the exhortation at ver. 1, 'not to receive the grace of God in vain.' For vv. 3—10 seem to be parenthetical, and meant to strengthen the force of the exhortation, by adverting to the character of those who gave it. After desiring a proper return for such devotedness, the Apostle proceeds to notice the practice in question.

1. συνεργοῦντες δὲ καὶ παρακ.] Render: 'As fellow-workers, too, with [Him, i. e. God or Christ], we also beseech you,' &c. For at συνεργ. must be supplied Θεῷ; though Rosenmuller and Iaspis assign as the sense, joint-workers for the same end,—the conversion of men. The Apostle means thus to represent them not only as ambassadors from God, but as fellow-workers with God or Christ, whose ministry He makes use of in reconciling the world to himself. So at 1 Cor. iii. 9, the Apostles and teachers are called συνεργοὶ Θεοῦ, co-operarii Dei.

— μὴ εἰς κενὸν, &c.] Meaning, 'not so to act, as that the grace of God (i. e. the gracious offer of reconciliation in the Gospel, shall have been made in vain,' by your living unworthy of your holy calling. Of which sense of χάρις an example is adduced by Wetstein from Plutarch. Εἰς κενὸν, for κενῶς, as in a passage of Diod. Sic., cited by Wetstein.

2. This is meant to adduce a reason why the gracious offer should not be rejected, or abused. And there is, as Theodoret remarks, great propriety in the testimony of prophecy being called in to strengthen admonition.

— λέγει γὰρ, &c.] 'for He (i. e. God) saith;' namely, in Isaiah xlix. 8. Here Θεὸς must be supplied (as in Rom. xv. 10) from Θεοῦ in the preceding verse; not ἡ γραφὴ, or προφήτης, as many recent Commentators suppose; for such an ellipsis would be intolerably harsh; whereas the other is regular, and confirmed by the context of the passage of Isaiah; for there God is (as even the best Jewish interpreters admit) represented as saying to the Messiah, that 'he had heard his intercession, in behalf of the Gentiles, in an acceptable or favourable time, and at the day of salvation (that destined for salvation) had resolved to succour him.' This scripture the Apostle in the next words applies; q. d. 'And mind—now is the acceptable time, now is the day of salvation; the time is now come when God will fulfil his promise respecting the salvation of the Gentiles through Christ; and that salvation is now offered by those whose Divine mission is confirmed by signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds; and is regarded as the accepted time, or day of salvation, to all who seek an interest in the Redeemer's kingdom.' With the expression καιρῷ δεκτῷ, which is explained by the one occurring in the next clause, καιρὸς εὐπρόσδεκτος ('well accepted'), is meant the time for acceptance, בעת רצן. So Seneca, Med. 1017, 'Meus dies est; tempore accepto utimur.' This is further explained by the antithetical phrase ἡμέρα σωτηρίας, 'time of (i. e. suitable for) deliverance.'

— ἐπήκουσά σου] 'I have hearkened, or listened, to thee;' as Gen. xvi. 2, and 2 Chron. xiii. 20: the idea of listening being contained in the ἐπὶ, which denotes that the person not only hears, but turns his ear towards the speaker, and thus, as we say, lends an ear; implying a granting of the request. So Lucian, Timon, 34, ἐπάκουσας τῶν εὐχῶν.

3. μηδεμίαν ἐν μηδ. διδόντες προσκ.] This closely connects with παρακαλοῦμεν at ver. 1, 'We beseech you—we, I say, who give no d 1 Cor. 4. 1. supra 4. 2. infra 12. 23.

e Infra 11. 23.

ἵνα μὴ μωμηθῇ ἡ διακονία· [d] ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ συνιστῶντες 4 ἑαυτοὺς ὡς Θεοῦ διάκονοι, ἐν ὑπομονῇ πολλῇ, ἐν θλίψεσιν, ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν στενοχωρίαις, [e] ἐν πληγαῖς, ἐν φυλακαῖς, 5 ἐν ἀκαταστασίαις, ἐν κόποις, ἐν ἀγρυπνίαις, ἐν νηστείαις· ἐν 6 ἁγνότητι, ἐν γνώσει, ἐν μακροθυμίᾳ, ἐν χρηστότητι, ἐν Πνεύ-offence,' &c. For the participle may be resolved into a verb and relative; a view confirmed by Theophylact, Theodoret, the Arabic Version, and some of the most eminent modern Expositors, who are agreed that the Apostle is not speaking (as several Commentators, especially Macknight, suppose) of the Corinthians themselves (as if these were exhortations or precepts of a holy life), but of himself and Timothy; though, indeed, it comes to the same thing; since, as Theophylact points out, ἐν τάξει διηγήσεως συμβουλεύει ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἀφορῶσιν.

The Apostle then proceeds most earnestly to remind them of his most meritorious conduct in the ministry, and his unsparing sacrifices for their spiritual benefit, as an additional reason why they should not receive the grace of God in vain. The sense is, 'laying no stumbling-block' (πρόσκομμα, Rom. xiv. 13) in the way of Christians, by which any one might be shaken in his religious faith, or turned from it, or by which the ministry might incur censure and become less efficient. Πρόσκομμα is by Robinson, Lex., taken as put, by metonymy, for cause of offence or falling; i. e. 'giving no occasion for contemning and rejecting the Gospel.' By ἡ διακονία understand the above ministry of reconciliation, the office of preaching the Gospel, mentioned supra ver. 18. Render, 'our ministry.'

4. συνιστῶντες ἑαυτοὺς] 'manifesting, approving ourselves as;' which figurative sense arises out of the proper one of placing together; here implying the juxta-position of two things for the purpose of showing their comparative size or value. Ὡς Θ. διάκονοι. Supply ὄντες; q. d. 'evincing ourselves to really be persons entrusted with a Divine legation.'

The Apostle then proceeds to state the component parts of this his general Apostolic conduct; and that in a manner the most pathetic and impressive.

— ἐν ὑπομονῇ πολλῇ.] Here, as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, we have a general term placed first, as being intended to be referred to all the particulars which follow in the subsequent enumeration, and denoting, in a general way, a patient endurance of the various afflicting particulars specified in the words following. I have pointed accordingly, with the able Editors of the Clementine Edition of the Latin Vulgate, and the Pesch. Syriac Version. I would render, 'in the exercise of much patient endurance amidst afflictions;' the ἐν denoting the manner in which that patience showed itself.

The particulars following are not to be regarded (as they have been by several recent Commentators) merely as synonymous expressions, forming together a complication of evils in general. They are rather to be considered specially, as meant to be distributed into groups, forming a beautiful gradation. The several evils here enumerated, form, I apprehend, three classes, each composed of three particulars. In the first we have ἐν θλίψεσιν, ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν στενοχωρίαις, 'in afflictions; in necessities; in pinching distresses;' where there seems to be a climax; compare infra xii. 10, and Rom. viii. 35. So Bengel pithily remarks: 'In pressuris complures patent viæ, sed difficiles; in necessitatibus, una difficilis; in στενοχωρίαις, nulla.'

5. As these trials were, more or less, the results of indirect persecution, so the next group, ἐν πληγαῖς, ἐν φυλακαῖς, ἐν ἀκαταστασίαις, represents the effects of direct persecution. Of these the second particular is illustrated by a passage of Clemens Romanus, who mentions St. Paul as ἑπτάκις δέσμα φορέσας. The following ones, ἐν κόποις, ἐν ἀγρυπνίαις, ἐν νηστείαις, form another group; denoting such hardships as did not arise from any persecution, direct or indirect, but solely from his situation and office, and his cares and labours therein, as Apostle of the Gentiles. Ἀκαταστασίαις has been usually interpreted tumults or seditions. But such a sense is here far from suitable: and that of exile, assigned by others (as Casaubon, Schmidius, and Rosenmuller), is not permitted by the usus loquendi. It would rather seem, as Theophylact, Beza, and Schleusner explain, that the term refers to that unsettled and wandering kind of life (occasioned by the being driven by exile from place to place), the misery of which, to the Apostle, appears from his connecting it, at 1 Cor. iv. 11, with endurance of hunger, thirst, and nakedness: πεινῶμεν καὶ διψῶμεν, καὶ γυμνητεύομεν,—καὶ ἀστατοῦμεν, καὶ κοπιῶμεν ἐργαζόμενοι ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσί· which passage, indeed, is the best comment on the present; and hence it appears that κόποις here must be chiefly understood of his labours at his trade (though partly of those in travelling, mostly on foot); and νηστείαις, of that insufficient support which labours so interrupted by his Apostolical duties could alone be expected to supply. Ἀγρυπνίαις seems to refer to the abridgment of his rest by night, to make up for the time expended by day on his evangelical labours.

6. Now follows a statement of the virtues cultivated. Ἁγνότητι, 'by purity and sanctity of life.' Of ἐν γνώσει the sense is uncertain. As the Apostle is generally admitted to be here speaking of the practical virtues, there is much to countenance the opinion of Calvin and many recent Commentators, that γνῶσις denotes a practical knowledge of religion, such as shows itself in actions: a sense, indeed, very suitable to the context, but which involves considerable harshness. As the Apostle here intermixes with practical virtues some particulars which cannot be referred to that head (as ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ and ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ), it may be better to understand γνώσει of the cultivation of Divine knowledge; that wisdom from above, which St. James, iii. 17, associates with purity and the other Christian virtues here specified.

7 ματι ἁγίῳ, ἐν ἀγάπῃ ἀνυποκρίτῳ, [f] ἐν λόγῳ ἀληθείας, ἐν f 1 Cor. 2. 4. infra 10. 4. δυνάμει Θεοῦ, διὰ τῶν ὅπλων τῆς δικαιοσύνης τῶν δεξιῶν Rom. 13. 12. Eph. 6. 11, 13.
8 καὶ ἀριστερῶν· διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀτιμίας, διὰ δυσφημίας καὶ 2 Tim. 4. 7. g Infra 11. 6.
9 εὐφημίας· ὡς πλάνοι, καὶ ἀληθεῖς· [g] ὡς ἀγνοούμενοι, καὶ 1 Cor. 15. 31. Ps. 118. 18.

'Εν μακροθυμίᾳ and ἐν χρηστότητι seem to have reference to the mode of exercising the ministry in question,—namely, by patience and forbearance towards those who oppose themselves, and by a general benignity of disposition, as contrasted with starched austerity. 'Εν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ must be understood at least of the influence of the Holy Spirit. Thus the sense will be, 'by evincing those dispositions produced under the influence and aids of the Holy Spirit.' See Bp. Middleton, Estius, Menoch., and Doddridge. Here it would seem the Apostle intended, in the words ἐν Πνεύμ. ἁγίῳ—ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ, to further illustrate what he had before said at ἐν γνώσει, ἐν μακροθ., ἐν χρηστ.; meaning to intimate, that the knowledge to be cultivated is Divine and inspired knowledge, and therefore emphatically the Word of truth: also that the forbearance and benignity practised is to be genuine undissembled love to man for the sake of God; not like the hypocritical and self-interested love of false teachers. Comp. Rom. xii. 9. 2 Tim. i. 5. 1 Pet. i. 22. 'Εν δυνάμει Θεοῦ, indeed, is variously interpreted. It may (with the ancients and the earlier moderns) be understood of the mighty supernatural gifts enjoyed by the Apostles and others, and thus seem intended to complete the idea before represented by ἐν ἁγίῳ Πνεύμ. But it would rather seem to denote that operation of inspiring influence enjoyed by the Apostles, to which Dr. Henderson (on Inspiration, p. 369,) applies the term invigoration, 'whose energy (he observes) strengthened their mental powers, giving expansion to the understanding, quickness to the perception, vividness to the imagination, vigour to the memory, and solidity to the judgment.' Upon the whole, however, I prefer the interpretation of Hyperius, who takes δυνάμει Θεοῦ to denote 'the power of doing all things with a certain authority and majesty, so that it may be seen that God is with the doer, and his blessing attends all that he takes in hand.' Such, too, is evidently the view adopted by Calvin.

The words following, διὰ τῶν ὅπλων, &c., v. 7, are intended to suggest the means by which the δύναμις Θεοῦ above spoken of was made effectual. Comp. Eph. vi. 10—12. Now these are, in that passage, called the panoply of God, and there the military figure is expanded into an allegory. Here the spiritual arms are not particularized, yet the terms τῶν δεξιῶν καὶ ἀριστ. are very comprehensive, referring to the complete armour and arms, on both sides, with which the ὁπλίτης, or completely-armed soldier, was furnished, who was thus said to be ἀμφιδέξιος. Thus the general sense is: 'We employ no other arms than those of righteousness;' meaning, as Calvin explains, a good conscience and a holy life. A military metaphor is, he observes, here used with allusion to the spiritual contest which the true Christian has to maintain against the world, the flesh, and the Devil; such as is adverted to in the words of our Baptismal Service.

— τῶν δεξιῶν καὶ ἀριστερῶν.] That it should thus be on every side, both right and left, is most needful; since (in the words of Calvin and Hyperius) 'as the attacks of our Spiritual Enemy are on every side,—now this, now that,—so the Christian soldier must be similarly prepared for defence.'

8—10. Here the reference to the circumstances under which they employed the armour of righteousness is converted into a sort of description of the situations in which they did all this; and that by way of contrasting their real character with that which their calumniators ascribed to them, and showing, in some other respects, their real, as compared with their fancied situation; by which, indeed, it might appear that their life was made up of seeming, though not real, contradictions. Διὰ here denotes, not the means, but the manner, and may be rendered through,—i. e. amidst; q. d. 'Such is our conduct, under all circumstances and situations, whether good or evil.'

8. διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀτιμίας, διὰ δυσφημίας καὶ εὐφημίας.] It is well observed by Calvin, 'Hoc non leve experimentum homini examinando: nihil enim durius est homini ingenuo, quam ferre contumeliam.' So Theophylact (after Chrysost.) finely remarks, that δυσφημία is ill to be borne by the generous and virtuous mind, being worse than bodily tortures; these affecting the body only, but those pressing, with their whole weight, on the mind.

— ὡς πλάνοι, καὶ ἀληθεῖς, &c.] Some obscurity here has been occasioned by the irregularity of the construction; to adjust which, we must, after πλάνοι, supply ὄντες, to suit with the participles in the clauses following, where the καὶ is for καίτοι, or ὅμως (as John iii. 11), corresponding to the δὲ at χαίροντες and πλουτίζοντες; q. d. 'our adversaries represent us as impostors, but we are really ambassadors from God.'

Πλάνοι is, no doubt, the term which had been applied to Paul and the other Apostles by their adversaries, the Pagan priests and the Jewish Rabbis; as it had formerly been done by the Scribes and Pharisees to Jesus, Matt. xxvii. 63. And no wonder; since it was the ordinary term to denote an impostor. It is well observed by Chrysostom, that ὡς πλάνοι καὶ ἀληθεῖς refer to the preceding διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀτιμίας, as also ὡς ἀγν. καὶ ἐπιγ. to δυσφ. καὶ εὐφ. By ἀγνοούμενοι is meant obscure persons; lit. whom nobody knows; and by ἐπιγινωσκόμενοι, 'well known as the dispensers of spiritual good.' In ὡς ἀποθνήσκοντες, &c. ver. 9, there is an Oxymoron, the sense being 'near to death, devoted to death by our enemies.' See 1 Cor. xv. 31. Καὶ ἰδοὺ, ζῶμεν, 'and yet, strange to say, we live.' Here Grot. compares the Latin verse, 'Semper casuris similes, nunquamque cadentes.' Παιδευόμενοι is by many eminent Commentators explained punished, or corrected by the magistrates, as in Luke xxiii. 16, 22. But that sense is somewhat frigid, and the word is better interpreted (with all the ancient and most modern Commentators) 'chastened, viz. by the Lord, in his fatherly correction; with allusion, perhaps, to Ps. cxviii. 18, παιδεύων ἐπιγινωσκόμενοι· ὡς ἀποθνήσκοντες, καὶ ἰδοὺ ζῶμεν· ὡς παιδευόμενοι, καὶ μὴ θανατούμενοι· ὡς λυπούμενοι, ἀεὶ δὲ 10 χαίροντες· ὡς πτωχοὶ, πολλοὺς δὲ πλουτίζοντες· ὡς μηδὲν ἔχοντες, καὶ πάντα κατέχοντες.

Τὸ στόμα ἡμῶν ἀνέῳγε πρὸς ὑμᾶς, Κορίνθιοι, ἡ καρ- 11
δία ἡμῶν πεπλάτυνται! [h] οὐ στενοχωρεῖσθε ἐν ἡμῖν, στε- 12 νοχωρεῖσθε δὲ ἐν τοῖς σπλάγχνοις ὑμῶν. [i] τὴν δὲ αὐτὴν 13 ἀντιμισθίαν, (ὡς τέκνοις λέγω,) πλατύνθητε καὶ ὑμεῖς. [k] Μὴ 14 γίνεσθε ἑτεροζυγοῦντες ἀπίστοις· τίς γὰρ μετοχὴ δικαιο-h Infra 7. 2, 3.

i 1 Cor. 4. 14.
k Deut. 7. 2, 3. 1 Cor. 5. 9. Eph. 5. 7, 11. Eccl. 13. 17. 1 Cor. 10. 21.

ἐπαίδευσέ με ὁ Κύριος· τῷ δὲ θανάτῳ οὐ παρέδωκέ με. And so 1 Cor. xi. 32, κρινόμενοι δὲ ὑπὸ Κυρίου, παιδευόμεθα, where see Note. Thus the sense is: 'We are permitted to fall into these tribulations, as chastenings for our good in the end.' See Heb. xii. 6.

The reflection in the words following, ὡς λυπούμενοι, &c. (v. 10) naturally arises out of the preceding; q. d. '[Under these afflictions and corrections] we seem to be suffering grief, and are thought the most unhappy of men; yet, in fact, we are rejoicing in the testimony of a good conscience, and in the consolations of Divine grace.'

10. πλουτίζοντες] 'making [spiritually] rich.' Μηδὲν ἔχοντες; i. e. 'having nothing that we can call our own, no property.' Καὶ πάντα κατέχοντες, i. e. 'and [yet] possessing all things [essential to our real happiness]; and, in the promises of the Gospel, what must infinitely outweigh all that the world can give.'

11—13. The difficulty complained of in these verses has partly arisen from not attending to their scope, and partly from inattention to the nature of the metaphor in πεπλάτυνται and στενοχ. With respect to the former, the Apostle's intent is,—1st, to apologize for language which might seem to savour of egotism, and involve somewhat of reproach to the persons addressed; 2. under the expression of tender affection, to convey a delicate reproof to them for the want of a due return. See Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Theodoret. He tells them, that he has spoken thus frankly, from his strong affection for them, and his desire to promote their spiritual good. It is the warmth of his affection that has caused him to speak out, as he has, and to pour forth all the feelings of his heart so unreservedly. And truly the expressions are very applicable to that impassioned stream of eloquence poured forth in the preceding verses, pleno ore, 'without o'erflowing full!' At ver. 13 he shows how this ardent desire to serve them might by them be made most effectual; namely, by making a due return, and following his example; and as his heart was expanded in affection towards them, so should theirs be to him, by opening their minds to his salutary counsels; which he proceeds to give them in the remaining verses of this Chapter, and in the first of the next.

11. ἡ καρδία ἡμῶν πεπλάτυνται.] In the metaphor here employed we may observe an almost philosophic exactness; the effect of joy, affection, and unreserved confidence being to unloose the tongue (see Ps. xl. 3. cxxvi. 2. Acts ii. 26), and expand the heart, which therefore feels as it were enlarged; while, under the contrary feeling, the tongue seems chained, and the heart tightened and contracted. See more in Hyperius and Schliting.

12. οὐ στενοχωρεῖσθε ἐν ὑμῖν.] Meaning, 'our affection for you is not contracted, but your affection for us is straitened and contracted.' See Chrysostom and Theophylact. The term στενοχωρεῖσθε has here great propriety, since any one who is hated is said to have no place in our affections. Of this metaphor an apt example is adduced by Wetstein from Arrian, Epict. i. 29, σὺ σαυτῷ στενοχωρίαν παρέχεις, σὺ σαυτὸν θλιβεῖς—κάθολον γὰρ ἐκείνου μέμνησο ὅτι ἑαυτοὺς θλίβομεν, ἑαυτοὺς στενοχωροῦμεν. Finally, σπλάγχν. here (as at vii. 15) denotes the tender affections, as being supposed to be seated in the heart; a use which has been thought Hebraistic, though it is of frequent occurrence in the Greek tragedians, especially Euripides and Æschylus.

13. τὴν δὲ αὐτὴν ἀντιμισθ.] Subaud. κατά. The sense is, 'Be ye also thus enlarged in your affections for us, according to (i. e. by making) that equal return of affection which is due to us.' Ὡς τέκνοις λέγω suggests the ground of the claim,—namely, on the score of spiritual paternity. By this pathetic appeal to their hearts, the Apostle endeavours to draw their attention to some serious admonitions which he had to address to them.

14. μὴ γίνεσθε ἑτεροζ. ἀπίστοις.] The difference of opinion, which exists as to the sense of this injunction, has chiefly arisen from inattention to the nature of the metaphor under which it is couched. Now ζύγος denotes the beam of a balance, or steelyard; and σταθμὸς ἑτερόζυγος was applied to a steelyard that pulls one way, when it should draw equal. The sense, however, thence deduced is harsh and unsuitable, and it is better, with most ancient and modern Commentators, to derive the word from ἕτερος and ζυγὸς, a yoke. Thus ἑτεροζυγέω will denote 'to draw on the other side of a yoke with another,' 'to be a yoke-fellow.' And the sense will be: 'Do not maintain any close connexion or intimate society with unbelievers.' So in Lev. xix. 9 the term is used of heterogeneous animals; and at 1 Macc. i. 15 we have ἐζεύχθησαν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν. The Apostle did not intend hereby to forbid all communication with them; which would have been impracticable. See 1 Cor. v. 10, 11. Some, indeed, suppose the chief purpose of this injunction to be to forbid marriage with heathens. But that view does not well suit with what follows, which rather alludes to close society and intimacy. See Theophylact. At the same time, marriage

15 σύνῃ καὶ ἀνομίᾳ; τίς δὲ κοινωνία φωτὶ πρὸς σκότος; τίς δὲ συμφώνησις Χριστῷ πρὸς Βελίαρ; ἢ τίς μερὶς πιστῷ 16 μετὰ ἀπίστου; [l] τίς δὲ συγκατάθεσις ναῷ Θεοῦ μετὰ εἰδώ- l 1 Cor. 3. 16. Eph. 2. 21.
λων; Ὑμεῖς γὰρ ναὸς Θεοῦ ἐστε ζῶντος, καθὼς εἶπεν ὁ Θεός· 1 Pet. 2. 5. Lev. 26. 12. Ezek. 37. 26.
Ὅτι ἐνοικήσω ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἐμπεριπατήσω· καὶ ἔσομαι αὐτῶν Θεὸς, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἔσονταί μοι λαός.
17 [m] Διὸ ἐξέλθετε ἐκ μέσου αὐτῶν καὶ ἀφορίσθητε, m Is. 52. 11. Rev. 18. 4.
(λέγει Κύριος,) καὶ ἀκαθάρτου μὴ ἅπτεσθε· κἀγὼ infra 7. 1.
18 εἰσδέξομαι ὑμᾶς, [n] καὶ ἔσομαι ὑμῖν εἰς πατέρα, n Jer. 31. 1, 9. Rev. 21. 7.

may be thus said to be, à fortiori, virtually forbidden; and considering that the marriage bond was, in the idioms of all languages, represented under the metaphor of a yoke, or pole, to which draught cattle are harnessed together, there can be little doubt that, while he dissuaded from intimate society, he meant also to condemn marriage with heathens.

14—16. The Apostle here adverts to the reason why they should abstain from intimacy with heathens, and that in a popular way; q. d. 'There is not the idem velle atque idem nolle, no affinity of sentiment or feeling: as being opposites, they can no more unite, than things the most dissimilar.' Δικαιοσύνῃ καὶ ἀνομίᾳ are for δικαίοις καὶ ἀνόμοις, just as φωτὶ and σκότῳ denote respectively those enlightened by the Gospel, and those involved in the darkness of heathenism.

15. By Χριστῷ and Βελίαρ the systems of virtue and of vice are, as it were, personified. Βελίαρ is from the Syriac בליער, and that from the Heb. בליעל, wickedness (derived from בלי not, and יעל use, weal, literally signifying that which profits not, but injures), which word occurs in 1 Sam. xxv. 25, and is applied (abstract for concrete) to denote κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Evil Spirit, Satan, as the Peschito Syriac renders it. See Job xxxiv. 18. There is here a slight variation in reading. The Edit. Princ. and the textus receptus have Βελίαλ. The Erasmian, Stephanic, and other early Editions have Βελίαρ, which has been restored by Bengel, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz: and justly; for both external and internal evidence are in its favour; it being found in the majority of the MSS., in many early ecclesiastical writers and Greek Fathers; and, considering its derivation, and that the Vulgate has Belial, it is more likely that Βελίαρ should have been changed to Βελίαλ, than the contrary.

16. τίς δὲ συγκατάθεσις, &c.] Συγκατάθεσις signifies properly a putting together. It should be here rendered, not concord, or agreement, but community, or connexion; q. d. 'What has a temple to do with idols and their worship?'

The words following, ὑμεῖς γὰρ—ζῶντος, are illustrative of the preceding; the image of a temple being transferred to Christians: q. d. 'For ye [Christians] are [each of you] a temple;' as 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. vi. 19. So it is said by Hierocles, in Aur. Carm. p. 24, καὶ ναὸν εἰς ὑποδοχὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ φωτὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ παρασκευάσατε νοῦν. The ὑμεῖς may, however, be understood of the whole Christian Church, considered as a temple; as in Eph. ii. 20, 21. The epithet ζῶντος is applied to JEHOVAH, as denoting a real and existing Being, in opposition to the pretended gods of the heathens, which were but stocks and stones. The words καθὼς εἶπεν ὁ Θεὸς are a formula of application. The Apostle means to argue, that the ancient promises of God, to dwell among his people Israel, and to be their God, were now, by the Gospel covenant, renewed to believers, and belonged peculiarly to them. In this quotation there is some alteration in the words, but no change of sense. Verse 16 is taken from Levit. xxvi. 11, 12; and the alteration is, in fact, no more than a change of the person. Verse 17 is taken from Is. lii. 11, 12, and the general meaning of the prophet is correctly represented; at least according to the mystical sense, which some of the best Jewish Commentators admit. See Bp. Lowth in loc. Λέγει Κύριος is an insertion of the Apostle. Verse 18 is supposed, by Mr. Scott and Dr. Burton, not to be taken exactly from any passage of the Old Test., but to have reference to the general declarations made by Jehovah concerning Israel in various parts of Scripture, namely, Exod. iv. 22, 23, Jer. xxxi. 1—9, Hos. i. 9, 10. But surely the words bear as strong a resemblance to 2 Sam. vii. 14, (to which passage they are usually referred) as those of the preceding verse do to Is. lii. 11, 12. There is no more than the same change of person, for application sake; and the words λέγει Κύριος and παντοκράτωρ are taken from verse 8 of the same chapter, which surely fixes the reference of the foregoing words.

17. Here ἐξέλθετε ἐκ μέσου, ἀφορίσθητε, and ἀκαθάρτου μὴ ἅπτεσθε, form one and the same sentiment, expressed by three enunciations, first, directly, then by implication. The two first, however, are so closely connected, as to form, in fact, but one; q. d. ἐξελθόντες ἀφορ.; and it may be doubted whether μὴ ἅπτ. ἀκαθ. should be taken figuratively, of intercourse with Pagans, or literally, of abstaining from the use of any thing impure, as idol-meats. The latter view is preferable: but the former may be admitted as a secondary sense, for (as Grotius observes) 'the wiser Jews supposed the prohibition, not to touch unclean animals, meant also of abstinence from society with idolaters.' On the term ἀφορ. compare Num. xvi. 45, Sept., and see Note on Acts ii. 40.

— εἰσδέξομαι ὑμᾶς.] Meaning, 'I will receive you into my especial favour.'

18. παντοκράτωρ, for ὁ παντοκράτωρ; a designation of the ALMIGHTY, as the only living and true God, as opposed to false gods. The word is one of frequent occurrence in the Apocalypse, and is sometimes found in the Sept.

καὶ ὑμεῖς ἔσεσθέ μοι εἰς υἱοὺς καὶ θυγατέρας, a Supra 6. 18. λέγει Κύριος παντοκράτωρ. VII. [a] Ταύτας οὖν 1 1 Tim. 4. 1. John 3. 3. ἔχοντες τὰς ἐπαγγελίας, ἀγαπητοί, καθαρίσωμεν ἑαυτοὺς ἀπὸ παντὸς μολυσμοῦ σαρκὸς καὶ πνεύματος, ἐπιτελοῦντες ἁγιωσύνην ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ.
b Acts 20. 33. infra 12. 17. [b] Χωρήσατε ἡμᾶς· οὐδένα ἠδικήσαμεν, οὐδένα ἐφθείραμεν, 2 c Supra 6. 11, 12, 13. οὐδένα ἐπλεονεκτήσαμεν. [c] Οὐ πρὸς κατάκρισιν λέγω· προ- 3 είρηκα γάρ, ὅτι ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν ἐστε, εἰς τὸ συναπο-d Supra 1. 14. θανεῖν καὶ συζῆν. [d] Πολλή μοι παῤῥησία πρὸς ὑμᾶς, πολλή 4
Phil. 2. 17. Col. 1. 24. μοι καύχησις ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν· πεπλήρωμαι τῇ παρακλήσει, ὑπερ-

VII. After having adduced the words of Scripture to inculcate this important truth, and comforted them with the promise therein attached to its observance, the Apostle proceeds to subjoin an earnest exhortation—and that in the way of inference from what has been before said,—as to the privileges of those 'who are accepted in the Beloved.' With respect to the scope of the argument, the Apostle here means to intimate (as Calvin remarks) that 'promises are not only encouragements to serve God, but contain an implied contract on his part.'

1. ἀπὸ παντὸς μολ.] i. e. not only from the defilements of idol-meats, and idolatrous society, but from every sort of defilement. By μολ. σαρκὸς are denoted the pollutions of the sensual appetites, as exhibiting the outward expression of sin by the body, in word or deed; by μολ. πνεύμ. the pollutions of the passions, as shown in the inward workings of sin in the imagination and affections, involving all such thoughts as lead to evil actions, and therefore defile the man. See Calvin, Scott, and especially Robert Hall, in one of the Sermons included in the last volume of his Works.

— ἐπιτελοῦντες ἁγιωσ.] 'striving to bring our holiness εἰς τέλος, by seeking entire conformity to the law of God.' Ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ, i. e. from reverence to His authority and fear of his displeasure; as in Acts ix. 31. Rom. xiii. 7. Eph. v. 21. Thus intimating the great influential principle by which men are led to cultivate such a purity,—namely, 'the fear of the Lord,' by which 'men depart from evil,' Prov. xvi. 6.

2. The Apostle now makes a transition from what is doctrinal, and has reference to Christians in general, to what is personal, and particular to himself; and resumes what he was saying supra vi. 13, in nearly the same words; χωρήσατε ἡμᾶς being (as Calvin says) equivalent to πλατύνθητε. So Theophylact explains it: δέξασθε ἡμᾶς πλατέως, καὶ μὴ στενοχωρεῖσθε ἐν ἡμῖν. Thus the sense is: 'Give us, I say, an enlarged place in your affections.' The next words suggest that there is no reason why they should not do so; since he deserves to hold that place in their affections, not having been guilty of any such conduct as alienates the affections of a people from their minister. Ἠδικ. is a general term, and ἐφθείραμεν and ἐπλεον. are particular ones; the former is usually explained of corrupting any one's religious principles; and the latter, of coveting his property. But I am rather inclined to agree with many of the best Commentators of the last century, that οὐδ. ἐφθ. means, 'we have not wasted your substance,' and οὐδ. ἐπλεον. 'we have not made a gain of, or overreached any of you.' So xii. 17, δι' αὐτοῦ ἐπλεονέκτησα ὑμᾶς; and 18, μή τι ἐπλεονέκτησεν ὑμᾶς Τίτος; This language may be compared with that of the prophet Samuel, 1 Sam. xii. 3, seq.; and, no doubt, there is reference to what was done by the false teachers; who not only received a stipend for their office, but in other ways fleeced their devotees. So xi. 20, ἀνέχεσθε—εἴ τις κατεσθίει, namely, by, as we say, eating them up, by living upon them, and taking from them, if not money, yet money's worth, or otherwise making a gain of them by the many cunning arts of overreaching, in which sense the word occurs in Thucyd. iv. 86.

3. οὐ πρὸς κατάκρισιν λέγω.] Of this briefly worded passage the full sense seems to be: 'I say not this to hint any reproach of unkindness to me; [but I speak merely to show my claim to a large place in your affections [as ye have in mine]; for, as I have before said, ye are in our hearts,' &c. Προείρ. is not to be interpreted of the very words, but of words to that effect.

Ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις, &c., is for ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν [οὕτω] ἐστε, ὥστε [ὑμῖν] συναποθανεῖν καὶ συζῆν [ἡμᾶς]. And ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις εἶναι for ἔχειν ἐν καρδίᾳ. Εἰς τό, for ὥστε. The sentiment is of the same kind as that in Athen. p. 249, (cited by Wetstein,) τούτους δ' οἱ βασιλεῖς ἔχουσι συζῶντας καὶ συναποθνήσκοντας; and that of Horace, Carm. iii. 9. 24, 'Tecum vivere amem, tecum obeam libens.' And so Mark xiv. 31, ἐάν με δέῃ συναποθανεῖν σοι, &c.

4. πολλή — ὑμᾶς.] This is supposed to be meant to soften the harshness of the preceding expostulations; and is interpreted by the generality of Commentators, 'I venture to use this freedom with you, which I know you will take in good part.' That sense, however, involves so much harshness, that it is better, with most recent Commentators, to render παῤῥησία, reliance, or confidence, 'I have great reliance on, or confidence in you,' a signification of the word frequent in the New Test. And this is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syriac Version.

— πεπλήρωμαι — ἡμῶν.] Meaning: '[Insomuch that] I am full of comfort; nay, I superabound with joy,' 'amidst all my tribulation.' This verb ὑπερπερ. occurs also at Rom. v. 20; but no where else. Compare ὑπερπερισσῶς at Mark vii. 37. Of these tribulations the nature and origin are then pointed out.

5 περισσεύομαι τῇ χαρᾷ ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ θλίψει ἡμῶν. [e] Καὶ e Deut. 32. 25.
γὰρ, ἐλθόντων ἡμῶν εἰς Μακεδονίαν, οὐδεμίαν ἔσχηκεν ἄνε- Acts 16. 19, 23.
σιν ἡ σὰρξ ἡμῶν, ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ θλιβόμενοι· ἔξωθεν μάχαι, supra 2. 13.
6 ἔσωθεν φόβοι. [f] Ἀλλ' ὁ παρακαλῶν τοὺς ταπεινοὺς, παρε- f Supra 1. 4. & 2. 13.
7 κάλεσεν ἡμᾶς, ὁ Θεὸς, ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ Τίτου· οὐ μόνον δὲ ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τῇ παρακλήσει ᾗ παρ-εκλήθη ἐφ' ὑμῖν, ἀναγγέλλων ἡμῖν τὴν ὑμῶν ἐπιπόθησιν, τὸν ὑμῶν ὀδυρμὸν, τὸν ὑμῶν ζῆλον ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ· ὥστε με μᾶλ-8 λον χαρῆναι. [g] Ὅτι εἰ καὶ ἐλύπησα ὑμᾶς ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, g Supra 2. 4.
οὐ μεταμέλομαι, εἰ καὶ μετεμελόμην. Βλέπω γὰρ ὅτι ἐπι-9 στολὴ ἐκείνη, εἰ καὶ πρὸς ὥραν, ἐλύπησεν ὑμᾶς. [h] Νῦν χαίρω, h Infra v 11.
οὐχ ὅτι ἐλυπήθητε, ἀλλ' ὅτι ἐλυπήθητε εἰς μετάνοιαν· ἐλυπήθητε γὰρ κατὰ Θεὸν, ἵνα ἐν μηδενὶ ζημιωθῆτε ἐξ ἡμῶν.

5. οὐδεμίαν ἔσχηκεν ἄνεσιν.] The scope of the passage is well pointed out by Calvin as follows: 'Magnitudo tristitiæ argumento est, quantum efficaciæ habuerit consolatio. Ego, inquit, undique premebar, tam intestinis quam externis afflictionibus: non tamen obstitit hoc totum, quo minus gaudium quod mihi contulistis, prævaluerit, adeoque exundaverit.' Ἡ σὰρξ ἡμῶν. The best recent Commentators are of opinion that σὰρξ is here (as often in the New Test.) used for the person; meaning simply, 'We had no rest,' namely, from the persecutions of our unrelenting foes, the Jewish and Heathen zealots. But I would rather (with Beza, Sclater, Calvin, and Scott,) take σὰρξ of the outer man,—i. e. as regarded outward circumstances: though the Apostle, doubtless, suffered both in body and mind from the effects of his extreme anxiety, and was without any support, save that derived from spiritual consolations. The next words are exegetical; of which ἐν παντὶ θλιβ. is a general expression (see supra i. 6. iv. 8), and ἔξωθεν—φόβοι a particular one. The sense is: 'externally (i. e. in our body) we were exposed to opposition and violence, internally (in our mind) to anxieties and fears; namely, for the safety of the Church at Corinth, lest it should be destroyed by heresies and dissensions.' See Gal. v. 15. And as the mind presses on the body, the latter could have no ἄνεσιν, or respite.

6. τοὺς ταπεινοὺς] 'those that are cast down and afflicted.' God is frequently in the Old Test. described as the comforter of those that are in trouble. See Ps. cxlvi. 8.

7. ἐν τῇ παρ.] 'by his coming, or presence,' meaning his society. The next words are obscure, and, in tracing their sense, many eminent Commentators take παρακλ. to denote the narration of the comfort. This, however, is harsh; and it is better to take the sense simply as it stands, and render, 'but also by the comfort and encouragement, with which he was encouraged or comforted with respect to you.' Meaning that 'he rejoiced in what was related, both as it had given such pleasure to Titus, and as it was in itself a matter of rejoicing to himself.' So ver. 13, ἐχάρημεν ἐπὶ τῇ χαρᾷ Τίτου.

Τὴν ὑμῶν ἐπιπ. is best interpreted, not 'your affection for me,' but 'your longing [to see me];' as Rom. xv. 23, ἐπιπ. δὲ ἔχων τοῦ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς. Ὀδυρμ. may be explained 'heartfelt sorrow for what had been displeasing to the Apostle.' Τὸν ὑμῶν ζῆλον ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, 'your attachment towards me,' implying a readiness to perform his injunctions. Ὥστε με μᾶλλον χαρ., 'so that I rejoiced the more;' i. e. in addition to that I felt at his coming, by what I heard of you.

8. εἰ καὶ ἐλύπησα—μετεμ.] The best Commentators are agreed that the sense is, 'Wherefore, if I even did pain your feelings in the Epistle [which I wrote to you], I do not [now] repent; though I did repent, was sorry (see ii. 4); i. e. after I had sent it off, and before I saw Titus; a mode of taking the words which removes all ambiguity. It cannot be hence inferred, that the Apostle had written with undue severity; still less need we stumble at the idea of repenting of what was done under the guidance of the Holy Spirit; for by such a repentance we are only to understand that misgiving, which a good and kind-hearted man feels, not from the consciousness of having done wrong, but from tenderness for the feelings of others, and an apprehension lest his well-meant reproofs may have been too severe. In short, as Calvin and Grotius suggest, μεταμέλεσθαι is to be taken impropriè et populariter, simply for dolorem capere.

— βλέπω γὰρ, &c.] The sense of these words is thus laid down by most recent Commentators: 'For I perceive that the letter grieved you only for a short space.' Such, however, cannot be proved to be, nor is it likely to be, the sense,—which rather seems to be as follows: 'For I perceive that that letter did pain you, though it was but for a season.' Now as οὐ μεταμέλομαι preceding almost implied 'I am glad;' the Apostle, to soften what might seem harsh, and to explain his meaning, added νῦν χαίρω, &c. Εἰ πρὸς ὥραν is meant to suggest, that the pain was temporary, the benefit permanent.

9. νῦν χαίρω, &c.] The sense is, 'Now the satisfaction I speak of is, not that ye were pained, but that ye were [so] pained, as to be brought to repentance and reformation.' The next words are explanatory of the foregoing sentiment. Κατὰ Θεὸν, 'in such a way as God requires,' 'with reference to his will and glory,' i. e. as Rosenmuller explains, 'arising from causes out of i Matt. 26. 75. Prov. 17. 22. [i] Ἡ γὰρ κατὰ Θεὸν λύπη μετάνοιαν εἰς σωτηρίαν ἀμεταμέ- 10 λητον κατεργάζεται· ἡ δὲ τοῦ κόσμου λύπη θάνατον κατ-εργάζεται. Ἰδοὺ γὰρ, αὐτὸ τοῦτο τὸ κατὰ Θεὸν λυπη- 11 θῆναι ὑμᾶς, πόσην κατειργάσατο ὑμῖν σπουδήν! ἀλλὰ ἀπο-λογίαν, ἀλλὰ ἀγανάκτησιν· ἀλλὰ φόβον, ἀλλὰ ἐπιπόθησιν· ἀλλὰ ζῆλον, ἀλλ' ἐκδίκησιν! Ἐν παντὶ συνεστήσατε ἑαυk Supra 2. 4. 1 Cor. 5. 1. τοὺς ἁγνοὺς εἶναι ἐν τῷ πράγματι. [k] Ἄρα εἰ καὶ ἔγραψα 12 ὑμῖν, οὐχ εἵνεκεν τοῦ ἀδικήσαντος, οὐδὲ εἵνεκεν τοῦ ἀδικη-θέντος· ἀλλ' εἵνεκεν τοῦ φανερωθῆναι τὴν σπουδὴν * ἡμῶν l Rom. 15. 32. τὴν ὑπὲρ * ὑμῶν πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. [l] Διὰ τοῦτο 13 παρακεκλήμεθα ἐπὶ τῇ παρακλήσει ὑμῶν· περισσοτέρως δὲ which he would have it arise, and producing effects such as he would approve.' In ἵνα ἐν μηδενὶ ζημ. ἐξ ἡ. the ἵνα may, with the best Commentators, be supposed to denote result. Render: 'So that in no respect were ye aggrieved or injured at our hands.'

10. The Apostle here means to show that, so far from having been injured by him, they have been benefited: and this he does by showing the salutary nature of the λύπη κατὰ Θεὸν, with which he then contrasts that κατ' ἄνθρωπον; the worldly with the religious sorrow. The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. [Ye were in no respect injured,] for, &c.

Μετάνοια here denotes 'such a change of mind as produces reformation in the life;' on which important subject see an elaborate Dissertation in Gataker's Misc. Posth. C. 29 (in which he ably discusses at large all the terms denoting repentance), and especially the second chapter of Bp. Taylor's Tract on the Doctrine of Repentance, in which he considers the nature and definition of true repentance.

Similar to the present is a passage of Hierocles, Aur. Carm. p. 124, Needh., Ἡ δὲ μετάνοια αὕτη φιλοσοφίας ἀρχὴ γίνεται· καὶ τῶν ἀνοήτων ἔργων τε καὶ λόγων φυγὴ, καὶ τῆς ἀμεταμελήτου ζωῆς ἡ πρώτη παρασκευή.

— κατεργάζεται] 'produces;' as Rom. iv. 15. And so Plutarch, vol. ii. p. 476, F., τὰς μὲν γὰρ ἄλλας ἀναιρεῖ λύπας ὁ λόγος, τὴν δὲ μετάνοιαν αὐτὸς ἐργάζεται. With respect to ἀμεταμέλητον, it is not agreed whether we ought to refer it to σωτηρίαν, or to μετάνοιαν. In the former case it will mean certain and unchangeable. Yet this interpretation involves no little harshness, and the sense arising is somewhat jejune. It is therefore better to suppose a slight transposition, and a sort of paronomasia; which, if ἀμετάγνωστον had been written, would have been complete. There is also a meiosis; the sense being, 'never to be regretted, but rather to be rejoiced in:' since no one will ever have cause to repent of godly sorrow for sin, that being necessary to produce reformation, and therefore indispensable to salvation. So Antisthenes, τὴν ἡδονὴν ἀγαθὸν εἶναι φάσκων, προσέθηκε τὴν ἀμεταμέλητον. And so also Max. Tyr. Diss. i. ἡδονὴν ἀμετάγνωστον. By τοῦ κόσμου λύπη is meant a sorrow about worldly objects, which, when separated from the fear of God, tends to death, temporal and spiritual, and will produce the latter, but for the preventing grace of God. As respects the former, it is true physically as well as morally; since anxiety, by repressing the secretions of the liver, deprives the system of that important secretion the bile, which it locks up.

11. ἰδοὺ γὰρ] 'for see, now [in your own case].' Αὐτὸ τοῦτο τὸ, &c. The words may be rendered, with Professor Scholefield, 'this very circumstance of your having sorrowed,' &c. Σπουδὴν (properly denoting bustle) here marks the anxiety and earnestness with which they strove to clear themselves of the charges made, and remove the abuses censured by the Apostle. This general term is then followed up by particular ones, of which Emmerl. observes that some, as ἀπολογ., φόβ., ἐπιπόθ., and ζῆλος, pertain to the Apostle, to whom the Corinthians were anxious to clear themselves (they therefore earnestly desired to appease him, and to testify to him their prompt obedience); the others, ἀγανάκτησιν and ἐκδίκησιν, belong to the incestuous person. The words may, however, refer to others, who had been in a less degree guilty, as those who attended at, or encouraged attendance at, the idol-feasts. Ἐπιπόθ. and ζῆλος are to be taken as at ver. 7. Ἐκδ. should be rendered punishment, as in Rom. xii. 19, and elsewhere. Συνεστ. ἑαυτοὺς, 'ye have approved yourselves,' i. e. (as Chrysostom, Theodoret, Sclater, Doddridge, and Scott explain) as a Church or society, which removes all scruples about the applicability of the term ἁγνούς. Ἐν τῷ πράγματι, 'in the affair, namely, of the incestuous person.'

12. Here the Apostle explains his purpose in writing as he had, which was not for any particular person's sake, neither of the injurer (or offender) nor of the injured; not from any desire to punish the former and procure justice for the latter; but chiefly, that his anxious care for them might be manifest to them in the sight of God.

— ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ] simply for ὄντως, Judice Deo, revera, as Luke i. 6; and that (Schleusner says) 'quia Deus rerum intima visu suo penetrat, nec ejus judicium ullo modo falli potest.'

13. διὰ τοῦτο—ὑμῶν.] The sense seems to be this: 'Wherefore [from the love we bore you] we were comforted in the exhilarating news of you, which Titus brought;' comp. v. 7. By the next words the Apostle means, that his own joy was exceedingly increased at the joy which Titus manifested at his reception among them. The words ὅτι ἀνεπέπαυται—ὑμῶν are illustrative of the term χαρά; comp. 1 Cor. xvi. 18.

μᾶλλον ἐχάρημεν ἐπὶ τῇ χαρᾷ Τίτου· ὅτι ἀναπέπαυται τὸ 14 πνεῦμα αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ πάντων ὑμῶν. ὅτι εἴ τι αὐτῷ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν κεκαύχημαι, οὐ κατῃσχύνθην· ἀλλ' ὡς πάντα ἐν ἀληθείᾳ ἐλαλήσαμεν ὑμῖν, οὕτω καὶ ἡ καύχησις ἡμῶν ἡ ἐπὶ 15 Τίτου ἀλήθεια ἐγενήθη. [m] Καὶ τὰ σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ περισσοτέρως εἰς ὑμᾶς ἐστιν, ἀναμιμνησκομένου τὴν πάντων ὑμῶν 16 ὑπακοὴν, ὡς μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου ἐδέξασθε αὐτόν. [n] Χαίρω ὅτι ἐν παντὶ θαῤῥῶ ἐν ὑμῖν.
1 VIII. [a] ΓΝΩΡΙΖΟΜΕΝ δὲ ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοὶ, τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ τὴν δεδομένην ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Μακεδονίας· 2 ὅτι ἐν πολλῇ δοκιμῇ θλίψεως ἡ περισσεία τῆς χαρᾶς αὐτῶν, καὶ ἡ κατὰ βάθους πτωχεία αὐτῶν ἐπερίσσευσεν εἰς τὸν 3 πλοῦτον τῆς ἁπλότητος αὐτῶν· ὅτι κατὰ δύναμιν, (μαρ-4 τυρῶ,) καὶ ὑπὲρ δύναμιν αὐθαίρετοι· [b] μετὰ πολλῆς παρακλήσεως δεόμενοι ἡμῶν, τὴν χάριν, καὶ τὴν κοινωνίαν τῆς

m Supra 2. 9. Phil. 2. 12.

n 2 Thess. 3. 4. Philem. ver. 21.

a Rom. 15. 26. infra 9. 1—4. Rom. 5. 3. 2 Cor. 7. 4. James 1. 2. Mark 12. 44.

b Acts 11. 29. Rom. 15. 26. 1 Cor. 16. 1. infra 9. 1.

'Αναπαύεσθαι thus signifies 'to be at rest, made happy.'

14. εἴ τι] for ὅ τι, 'whatever.' In οὐ κατῃσχύν. we have the effect for the cause; and there is a meiosis. 'Επὶ Τίτου is by some explained as put for περὶ Τίτου; but by most it is interpreted 'apud Titum,' as the context requires. And this is confirmed by the ancient Versions.

15. μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρ.] 'with deep reverence and respect,' implying an anxiety not to offend him, and a disposition to carefully follow his injunctions.

16. χαίρω—ὑμῖν.] The sense seems to be, 'I rejoice that, from the experience I have had of you, I may in every thing feel confidence in your ready obedience to all my admonitions or suggestions.'

VIII. The mention the Apostle had made of his confidence in the Corinthians gives him an opportunity of again introducing the subject of the collection then making for the relief of the poor Christians at Jerusalem, which occupies this and the following chapter; and also, after informing them of what had been done elsewhere, of exhorting them to follow so good an example. They would thus, he says, testify their firm faith, by imitating their Saviour; they would justify the Apostle's boasting of them; and whatever they bestowed, the Divine blessing would amply compensate; besides that, they would have the prayers and intercessions to God on their behalf, of those whom they had relieved.

1. τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ τὴν δεδ.] There has here been some doubt as to the sense of these words. It is, however, generally agreed, that τὴν χάριν here means (as often in this chapter and elsewhere) gift, or liberality. But on τοῦ Θεοῦ a difference of opinion yet exists. Some (as Hammond, Knatchbull, Pyle, Newcome, and Wakefield) take it as used, by Hebraism, to denote great. That idiom, however, is of very limited application, and cannot have place here. The word must have its usual sense. And we may suppose χάρις so termed, either,—as it is generally understood,—to suggest that it was God, who had by his grace put into their hearts to bestow this charity; or rather we may suppose the alms to be called God's, as being given for his sake, and in a certain sense given to Him, when given to his distressed servants; according to the gracious assurance, Matt. xxv. 40. Prov. xix. 17. Thus we may render, 'the God-alms,' and suppose that the collection was so termed, both to suggest the duty and reward of the giver, and to spare the feelings of the receiver.

2. The Apostle now, in order to enhance the merit of the gift, shows that it was done under the most unfavourable circumstances. 'Εν πολλῇ δοκ. θλίψ. is for ἐν θλίψει πολλῇ, ἥ ἐστι δοκιμὴ, 'in affliction most trying;' or ἣ δοκιμὴν κατεργάζεται. So Rom. v. 4, ἡ ὑπομονὴ δοκιμὴν κατεργάζεται· and supra ii. 9. 'Η περισσεία τῆς χαρᾶς α. is usually rendered 'their abundant joy;' i. e. joy from the doctrines, promises, and consolations of the Gospel. Since, however, this is a sense not very apposite, the recent Commentators take χαρὰ for χάρις, which, however, is quite unauthorized. Why should we not take the word in the sense alacrity, viz. to give. As giving is the subject of the context, there can be no objection to assigning such a sense here, by which all difficulty is removed. Κατὰ βάθους, 'to the very depth thereof;' a phrase for an adjective; and, as βαθὺς is often applied to riches, so it may to poverty. Πλοῦτ. τῆς ἁπλ. is another idiom to denote rich liberality, or free-heartedness; for that is the literal sense of ἁπλ., like simplicitas in Latin. In the same sense the word occurs infra ix. 11. 13. Rom. xii. 8. 'Επερίσσ. εἰς may be rendered 'redounded,' or 'conduced greatly.' Thus the sense may be expressed as follows: 'their abundant alacrity, and [yet] deep poverty have redounded greatly to their rich liberality;' i. e. their great alacrity to give, even amidst deep poverty, has abundantly shown their rich and free-hearted liberality. By a similar paronomasia it is said, Ecclus. xi. 12, πτωχείᾳ περισσεύει.

3. αὐθαίρετοι.] Supply ἦσαν, and διδόναι from δεδομένην before.

4. τὴν χάριν, καὶ τὴν κοιν. τῆς διακ.] In διακονίας τῆς εἰς τοὺς ἁγίους, [δέξασθαι ἡμᾶς·] καὶ οὐ, 5 καθὼς ἠλπίσαμεν· ἀλλ' ἑαυτοὺς ἔδωκαν πρῶτον τῷ Κυρίῳ, c Ver. 17. 2 Cor. 12—18. καὶ ἡμῖν διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ· [c] εἰς τὸ παρακαλέσαι ἡμᾶς Τίτον, 6

ἵνα καθὼς προενήρξατο, οὕτω καὶ ἐπιτελέσῃ εἰς ὑμᾶς καὶ d 1 Cor. 1. 5. infra 9. 8. τὴν χάριν ταύτην. [d] Ἀλλ', ὥσπερ ἐν παντὶ περισσεύετε, 7 (πίστει καὶ λόγῳ καὶ γνώσει, καὶ πάσῃ σπουδῇ, καὶ τῇ ἐξ ὑμῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀγάπῃ,) ἵνα καὶ ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ χάριτι περισe 1 Cor. 7. 6. σεύητε. [e] Οὐ κατ' ἐπιταγὴν λέγω, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς ἑτέρων σπου- 8

the interpretation of this passage much depends upon whether the words δέξασθαι ἡμᾶς after τοὺς ἁγίους be genuine, or not. They are not found in 34 MSS., many Versions, Fathers, and Greek Commentators, were rejected by Mill, Bengel, and Wetstein, and cancelled by Matthæi, Griesbach, and Vater. They are, however, ably defended by Rinck, who has very satisfactorily accounted for their omission, from the carelessness of the scribes. Without the words it is, I think, difficult to make out any tolerable construction; see Note on Acts x. 2. The proper syntax is an accusative of thing with a Genitive of person, suspended on ἀπὸ understood. So Acta Thom. 50, τοῦτο δεόμεθά σου. The Infinitive ought properly to have τὸ, as infra x. 2. Those who expunge the words, suppose χάριν and κοιν. to be governed of ἔδωκαν in the next verse: and δεόμενοι they render, 'entreating us [to permit it].' Thus the construction and sense will be, 'For even above their means, voluntarily, and most earnestly entreating us [to permit it], they gave this charitable collection of theirs, and not merely this, which was what we hoped they would do, but they gave themselves, before every thing else, to the Lord and to us.' Yet thus a great feebleness and jejuneness will attach to the δεόμενοι. It would seem that the words, if not omitted by accident, were originally thrown out, and have been since cancelled, from misconception of the real meaning of the Apostle. This some recent Commentators, as Rosenm., Leun., and Emmerling, (who retain the words) suppose to be, 'enixe precabantur, ut reciperemus in nos negotium eorum coactum distribuendi.' But, as the Bâle Editor justly observes (Pref. p. 7), 'that was a request rather suitable to the elders of the Church at Jerusalem, than to the Macedonians, and was, indeed, what the former had enjoined on Paul.' Indeed, this runs counter to the scope of the Apostle, which is well pointed out by Calvin. Moreover, as the Bâle Editor suggests, 'so extreme was the poverty into which the Macedonians had, from various misfortunes and persecutions fallen, that St. Paul would have a scruple at taking at their hands even so little.' The Macedonians, therefore, had to earnestly entreat him that he would receive from them the alms they had collected. We may suppose the words τὴν κοινωνίαν τῆς διακονίας to be exegetical of τὴν χάριν. And so κοινωνία is used infra ix. 13. Rom. xv. 26. Heb. xiii. 16.

5. καὶ οὐ, καθὼς ἠλπ., &c.] Sub. ἐποίουν and μόνον; both frequent ellipses. The sense may be thus expressed: 'And not only this—which was what we had hoped, or expected they would do—but they gave themselves first to the Lord [to do his will], and [then] to us;' i. e. to observe our directions. Giving themselves to the Lord is a strong expression, to denote the devoting themselves, and whatever they possessed, to his service. Πρῶτον—καὶ is put for πρῶτον μὲν—ἔπειτα δέ. The construction in the second clause is meant to illustrate the difference in the kind of devotion to the Lord, and to Paul. And that is more plainly indicated in the phrase διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, the force of which is best pointed out by Calvin, who, after comparing Exod. xiv. 31 ('The people believed the Lord and Moses his servant'), observes, that 'the words are meant to intimate, that when they were obedient to Paul, they conceived that they were obeying God, since they regarded him as speaking by the mouth of God.'

6. εἰς τὸ] for ὥστε, 'insomuch that.' The complete sense is this: 'The consequence of this unexpected liberality of the Macedonians was this,—that [fearing lest you should be outstripped by them,] I exhorted Titus,' &c. Προενήρξατο, 'had already begun;' i. e. when he delivered the first letter of Paul to the Corinthians, and exhorted them to make a contribution. Εἰς ὑμᾶς, 'apud vos;' for ἐν ὑμῖν. Τὴν χάριν ταύτην, 'this work of liberality,' namely, the collection. See supra v. 1, and Note. The καὶ may be emphatic, and refer to the other good works to which they were excited by Titus. See vii. 13.

7. ἀλλ'.] This particle has here the hortative sense, Now, then; as in Mark ix. 22: a sense the more necessary to be adverted to, since from that alone can we account for the omission of a verbum hortandi before ἵνα περ. At ἐν παντὶ supply χάριτι from what follows, 'all spiritual gifts and graces.' The next words, πίστει καὶ λόγῳ καὶ γνώσει, are meant to exemplify these gifts and graces, of which πίστει must have the same sense as at 1 Cor. xii. 9. Γνώσει seems to be equivalent to the λόγος γνώσεως at 1 Cor. xii. 8. Λόγῳ may have reference to the προφητεία, or power of instructing others, either by preaching, or explaining Divine truths. So Eph. vi. 19, ἵνα μοι δοθείη λόγος—γνωρίσαι τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. Compare John xvii. 20. Acts vi. 2. To the gifts of the Spirit are now subjoined the graces of the Spirit. Πάσῃ σπουδῇ; i. e. earnestness in the discharge of every religious duty, as Rom. xii. 11. Heb. vi. 11. 2 Pet. i. 5. Τῇ ἐξ ὑμῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀγ., 'and in the affection borne by you to us.' Ἐν ἡμῖν is for εἰς ἡμᾶς. At ἵνα περισσ. we may supply ὁρᾶτε; or (as the best recent Commentators propose) may take the ἵνα with a Subjunctive as put for an Imperative. Ταύτῃ τῇ χάριτι, 'this grace,' namely, that of liberality in relieving your Christian brethren.

8. οὐ κατ' ἐπιτ. λέγω.] q. d. 'I do not say

9 δῆς, καὶ τὸ τῆς ὑμετέρας ἀγάπης γνήσιον δοκιμάζων· ([f] γι- f Luke 9. 58. Phil. 2. 6, 7.
νώσκετε γὰρ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὅτι δι' ὑμᾶς ἐπτώχευσε, πλούσιος ὢν, ἵνα ὑμεῖς τῇ ἐκείνου 10 πτωχείᾳ πλουτήσητε·) [g] καὶ γνώμην ἐν τούτῳ δίδωμι. Τοῦτο g 1 Cor. 7. 6, 25. 2 Cor. 9. 2.
γὰρ ὑμῖν συμφέρει, οἵτινες οὐ μόνον τὸ ποιῆσαι, ἀλλὰ καὶ 11 τὸ θέλειν προενήρξασθε ἀπὸ πέρυσι. Νυνὶ δὲ καὶ τὸ ποιῆ-σαι ἐπιτελέσατε· ὅπως, καθάπερ ἡ προθυμία τοῦ θέλειν, οὕτω 12 καὶ τὸ ἐπιτελέσαι ἐκ τοῦ ἔχειν. [h] Εἰ γὰρ ἡ προθυμία πρό- h Prov. 3. 28. Mark 12. 43.
κειται, καθὸ ἐὰν ἔχῃ τις, εὐπρόσδεκτος, οὐ καθὸ οὐκ ἔχει. Luke 21. 3. 1 Pet. 4. 10.

this by way of command, or injunction (see 1 Cor. vii. 6), as if I would dispose of your property authoritatively; [for works of charity should be voluntary;]' but 'because of the alacrity of others,' viz. the Macedonians; q. d. 'lest ye should be outstripped by them.' At ἀλλ' repeat λέγω. The words καὶ τὸ τῆς—δοκιμάζων contain the other reason for enjoining the duty on them; namely, that he might put to the test the genuineness of their love to God and man,—namely, by setting it in comparison with the zeal and liberality of the Macedonians. The construction is: καὶ [οὕτως λέγω, ὡς] δοκιμάζων, i. e. ἵνα δοκιμάσω.

9. This verse is parenthetical, and the argument is the same as at 1 John iv. 19. They are exhorted to give liberally, as bestowing some portion of the riches conferred on them by the Lord of the universe; who, for their sakes, left his own exalted state in the bosom of his Father (see John xvii. 5), and, divesting himself of those glories (compare Phil. ii. 7), assumed the condition of lowliness and poverty, that they might become spiritually rich,—rich in the blessings of his religion, in the means of grace afforded them here, and in the hopes of glory hereafter. It is obvious how irrefragable a proof is here supplied of the pre-existence and divinity of Christ. See Abp. Magee on the Atonement, vol. ii. p. 621, Mr. Rose on Parkhurst, p. 726, and Dr. Pye Smith, Scrip. Test., vol. ii. p. 354, sq. Πλούσιος ὢν is well rendered by the Syriac and Vulgate, 'cum esset dives,' and by almost all our Versions, 'though he was rich;' ὢν being here, as not unfrequently, the participle imperfect.

10. καὶ γνώμην ἐν τούτῳ δίδ.] Put for the more Classical γνώμην ποιοῦμαι. The Apostle means, that he does not issue orders, but merely gives his advice, showing them what is expedient for them. Τοῦτο γὰρ, namely, τὸ σπουδάζειν περισσεύειν ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ χάριτι. The γὰρ refers to v. 7; q. d. '[I bid you abound in this good work,] for,' &c. Συμφέρει denotes 'it is suitable to your profession' or character. So the Schol., ἁρμόζει, συνᾴδει. It was also necessary to their reputation, that what they had begun, they should finish. Such seems to be the sense intended in the words following. In the words themselves, however, there is something perplexing. One would have expected οὐ μόνον τὸ ϑέλειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ποιῆσαι· as, indeed, some Versions arrange the words, and certain Critics would read and explain,—supposing a Hysteron Proteron, or a genus loquendi inversum, where, in the comparison of things unequal, that precedes which naturally would follow. The MSS., however, give no countenance to the former method, nor do the true principles of philology afford any to the latter. Indeed, there is no reason to resort to any such precarious expedient; since we may remove the difficulty by taking ϑέλειν (with all the ancient Commentators and the best modern ones) to denote a willing mind, which God especially approves of; and not the mere deed, which may be done grudgingly. See ix. 7. It would seem that not only is ϑέλειν meant to denote more than ποιῆσαι, but that this is the case, because after ϑέλειν must be repeated ποιῆσαι, from the preceding. Ἀπὸ πέρυσι is an adverbial phrase, in which the πέρυσι is properly a Dative from the obsolete noun περὺς, time past, from πείρω, transeo. Now this, by usage, came to mean the year past. The ἀπὸ answers to our back, or ago (i. e. agone). It was, it seems, about a year since they had begun to make the collection, which they had done of their own accord, and without any suggestion on the part of St. Paul.

11. νυνὶ δὲ καὶ τὸ ποιῆσαι ἐπ.] The sense is: 'But now bring to an end the doing,' or what has been doing: finish what was begun. Ἡ προθ. τοῦ ϑέλ. may be rendered, 'the promptitude of wishing [to do good],' alacrity of wish to do good. Sub. ἦν. I would compare 3 Macc. v. 26, ὑποδεικνύων τὸ πρόθυμον τοῦ βασιλέως ἐν ἑτοίμῳ εἶναι. Τὸ ἐπιτελέσαι, 'the accomplishing [of what ye have begun].' Sub. ᾖ from the subject-matter. Ἐκ τοῦ ἔχειν (sub. ὑμᾶς and τὸν βίον), literally, 'out of the means which ye have.'

12. This verse is exegetical of the preceding. Εἰ γὰρ ἡ προθυμία πρόκ. may be rendered, 'For if this readiness of mind be but forthcoming;' πρόκ. for παράκειται, 'is at hand.' Εὐπρόσδεκτος, scil. τῷ Θεῷ. With the sentiment I would compare Aristot. Eth. x. 8, p. 493, καὶ γὰρ ἀπὸ μετρίων δύναιτο ἄν τις εὖ πράττειν κατὰ τὴν ἀρετήν· which passage may serve to defend the τις against Griesbach and other recent Critics, who are strongly inclined to cancel it, from 14 MSS. and a few Versions and Fathers; though the latter evidence is here inadmissible, and the former very weak, since, in so comparatively small a number of MSS., we might account for the omission from transposition; the word being in some MSS. found before ἔχῃ. But I suspect it was cancelled by certain over-nice Critics, who knew that it was often omitted in the Classical writers. Thus in a kindred passage of Soph. Œd. T. 314, ἄνδρα δ' ὠφελεῖν ἀφ' ὧν ἔχοι τε καὶ δύναιτο, κάλλιστος πόνων, where the ὧν ἔχοι, scil. τις, is explained by the subse-

Οὐ γὰρ, ἵνα ἄλλοις ἄνεσις, ὑμῖν δὲ θλίψις· ἀλλ', ἐξ ἰσοτη- 13
τος, ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ τὸ ὑμῶν περίσσευμα εἰς τὸ ἐκείνων ὑστέρημα· ἵνα καὶ τὸ ἐκείνων περίσσευμα γένηται εἰς τὸ 14
i Exod. 16. 18. ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα, ὅπως γένηται ἰσότης· [i] καθὼς γέγραπται· 15 Ὁ τὸ πολὺ, οὐκ ἐπλεόνασε· καὶ ὁ τὸ ὀλίγον, οὐκ ἠλαττόνησε.

k Ver. 6. [k] Χάρις δὲ τῷ Θεῷ τῷ [δι]δόντι τὴν αὐτὴν σπουδὴν ὑπὲρ 16 ὑμῶν ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ Τίτου· ὅτι τὴν μὲν παράκλησιν ἐδέξατο· 17 σπουδαιότερος δὲ ὑπάρχων, αὐθαίρετος ἐξῆλθε πρὸς ὑμᾶς.
l Infra 12. 18. [l] Συνεπέμψαμεν δὲ μετ' αὐτοῦ τὸν ἀδελφὸν, οὗ ὁ ἔπαινος ἐν 18
m 1 Cor. 16. 3, 4. supra 4. 15. τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ διὰ πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν· ([m] οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλὰ 19
καὶ χειροτονηθεὶς ὑπὸ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν συνέκδημος ἡμῶν, σὺν τῇ χάριτι ταύτῃ τῇ διακονουμένῃ ὑφ' ἡμῶν, πρὸς τὴν αὐτοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου δόξαν καὶ προθυμίαν ὑμῶν·) στελλόμενοι 20 quent words καὶ δύναιτο. On the suppression of the subject of a proposition, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 294. Ἐὰν (for ἂν) ἔχῃ should be rendered, 'may have.'

13. οὐ γὰρ, ἵνα, &c.] There is an ellipsis of τοῦτο βούλομαι, and the γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. '[according to his ability, I say, that all without distinction may bear a part;] for I would not,' &c. The words ἵνα ἄλλοις ἄνεσις are wrongly rendered in most of our English Versions, and the Commentators have quite mistaken their sense. Ἄνεσις, by a metaphor taken from loosening a cord, signifies abatement of pain or of distress. That the latter is the sense here, is plain from the antithetical term θλίψις. So Joseph. Ant. iii. 10. 6, τοῖς ἔργοις ἄνεσιν οὐ διδόασι. Compare 2 Thess. i. 2. The full sense is, 'My meaning is not that they should be relieved by you from distress, so as to occasion distress to yourselves [but that you should give what you can spare].' The words following are illustrative of the foregoing.

— ἀλλά.] Repeat τοῦτο βούλομαι. This and the next verse may be rendered, 'But [my meaning is] that by an equalization, your superfluity, at the present time, may be a supply of their want; so that, in like manner, their superfluity [at another time] may serve to relieve your want; that there may be [as I said] an equalization,' or an equal reciprocity of giving and of receiving good offices between you. The sense contained in 'at another time,' though not expressed, is implied in γένηται.

15. καθὼς γέγρ.] 'agreeably to what is written [of the manner];' q. d. (as Abp. Newcome explains) 'So that there may be a general resemblance to the case of the Israelites in Exod. xvi. 18. And that the rich may, considering his station and circumstances, have no superfluity.' It is well observed by Theodoret, that the Lord intimated this equality by the manner in which the manna was collected: Οὐδὲν γὰρ ὤνησεν ὁ τὸ πλέον συλλέξας· τὸ γὰρ μέτρον ὁ μεγαλόδωρος τῷ δώρῳ συνέζευξε. At τὸ πολὺ and τὸ ὀλίγον supply, not (as is usually done) ἔχων, but συλλεξάμενος, from the preceding συνέλεξαν. The citation varies from the Sept., but faithfully represents the Hebrew.

16. The Apostle now returns to the subject of Titus, which had been dropt at ver. 6; and in order to leave them no excuse, he reminds them of two zealous advocates in the business, who had it much at heart. Adverting first to Titus, he commences with giving thanks to God for having put it into his heart to hearken to his request. Διδόντι ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ is for ἐντιθέντι τῇ καρδ. Σπουδὴ is to be taken as at vv. 7, 8, 'the same earnest care for you [which I feel].' Ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, 'for your welfare and benefit.'

17. τὴν μὲν παράκλ. ἐδέξατο.] Here, correcting himself, he intimates that Titus's promptitude for that service was so great, as not to need solicitation, he readily acceding to his request. In σπουδαιότερος δὲ ὑπ., I apprehend, no comparison is intended; and Abp. Newcome has well rendered, 'being very earnest.' If any be meant, it may be, 'being readier to engage in this service than I to put him upon it.' Of this I have given several examples in a note on Thucyd. ii. 11. 10. There may, indeed, seem some inconsistency between the former and the latter part of the verse; but this merely arises from brevity of expression, and will disappear when the sentiment is fully expressed as follows: 'He truly complied with my exhortation; and [not only that], but being,' &c.

18. τὸν ἀδελφὸν, οὗ, &c.] It is not agreed, nor is it possible to exactly determine, who it is that is here meant. The best-founded opinion is, that St. Luke is intended. Be that as it may, the best Commentators are agreed that the words ἐν τῷ εὐαγγ. do not mean 'for writing the Gospel,' but 'for preaching it;' as Phil. iv. 3. 15. Compare 1 Cor. ix. 14. 18.

19. οὐ μόνον δέ.] Meaning, 'And he not only deserves that praise, but also,' &c. Χειροτ., 'being constituted or appointed,' as Acts xiv. 23. Τῇ χάριτι τ., i. e. the God's gift mentioned at v. 1. At προθυμίαν ὑμῶν, repeat the πρὸς, 'for the manifestation of,' &c. For ὑμῶν, very many MSS., Editions, and Fathers have ἡμῶν, which has been received by Griesbach, Vater, and Scholz.

20. στελλόμενοι τοῦτο.] This depends upon συνεπέμψαμεν at v. 18 (v. 19 being parenthetical); for the sense is, 'We have sent the bro-τοῦτο, μή τις ἡμᾶς μωμήσηται ἐν τῇ ἁδρότητι ταύτῃ τῇ 21 διακονουμένῃ ὑφ' ἡμῶν· [n] προνοούμενοι καλὰ οὐ μόνον ἐνώ- n Rom 12. 17. Phil. 4. 8.

22 πιον Κυρίου, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐνώπιον ἀνθρώπων. Συνεπέμψαμεν 1 Pet. 2. 12.
δὲ αὐτοῖς τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἡμῶν, ὃν ἐδοκιμάσαμεν ἐν πολλοῖς πολλάκις σπουδαῖον ὄντα, νυνὶ δὲ πολὺ σπουδαιότερον 23 πεποιθήσει πολλῇ τῇ εἰς ὑμᾶς. [o] Εἴτε ὑπὲρ Τίτου, κοινωνὸς o Phil. 2. 25.
ἐμὸς καὶ εἰς ὑμᾶς συνεργός· εἴτε ἀδελφοὶ ἡμῶν, ἀπόστολοι 24 ἐκκλησιῶν, δόξα Χριστοῦ. [p] Τὴν οὖν ἔνδειξιν τῆς ἀγάπης p Supra 7. 14.
ὑμῶν, καὶ ἡμῶν καυχήσεως ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, εἰς αὐτοὺς ἐνδείξασθε & 9. 2. a Acts 11. 29.
1 [καὶ] εἰς πρόσωπον τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν. IX. [a] Περὶ μὲν γὰρ Rom. 15. 26. 1 Cor. 16. 1. supra 8. 4.

ther,' &c., we guarding against (i. e. in order to guard against) any blame to us, as to the distribution of your abundant liberality: a rare sense of στελλ., which arises thus. Στέλλεσθαι signifies generally to go off, retire, keep off. Hence, in the middle voice, to keep off from any person or thing, beware of, guard against him or it.

— μή τις ἡμᾶς μωμ.] The sense is, 'Lest any one should have a handle for slander or calumny, as if I appropriated any part of the large sum collected by me to my private use.'

21. προνοούμενοι καλὰ, &c.] For προνοούμενοι, many MSS., Fathers, Versions, and Editions have προνοοῦμεν γὰρ, which is edited by Griesbach and Scholz, but I think injudiciously; the reading manifestly arising from a mere alteration, to remove a grammatical difficulty.

The same sentiment, in nearly the same words, occurs at Rom. xii. 17, where see Note.

22. τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἡμῶν.] Who the person is that is here meant, is uncertain. Ὃν ἐδοκιμ., &c. Meaning, 'whom we have, by much experience, found to be diligent.' It is strange that πεποιθ. should by so many be interpreted 'the great confidence which we have in you;' for surely, according to every principle of correct exegesis, the sense must rather be, 'the great confidence which he hath in you;' the reference in πεποιθήσει and τῇ being evidently to ὃν—σπουδ., the brother. And indeed the sense thus arising is far more suitable and direct to the purpose; the meaning being, as many of the best Expositors are agreed, 'by the reliance which he places on you,' i. e. on your good dispositions in general, and your liberality on the present occasion.

23. εἴτε ὑπὲρ T.] Supply either λέγοι τις, or rather δεῖ εἰπεῖν. Ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλ., 'messengers, or legates of the Churches,' persons sent to despatch their business, according to the primitive sense of the word, as Phil. ii. 25. These are called the δόξα Χρ., by metonymy, as instruments for diffusing the glory of Christ and his Gospel.

24. τὴν οὖν ἔνδειξιν—ἐκκλ.] The best Editors have been long agreed that the καὶ before εἰς πρόσ. is of no authority, and accordingly it has been cancelled by Wetstein, Griesbach, Matthæi, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz. Agreeably to the true construction, we may render, 'Give, therefore, to them, in the presence of the churches, this evident testimony of your love to them, and of [the truth of] our boasting concerning you.' Now whatever they did in this matter might truly be said to be done 'in the presence of the churches;' not only because Titus would proclaim it wherever he went, but because Corinth was in every sense placed in excelso; and, from its perpetual communication with all parts of the civilized world, the tidings would soon spread to all the Gentile churches planted by St. Paul.

IX. In this Chapter the Apostle continues to urge their liberal contribution; and 'to the reasons before deduced, ab honestate, are now subjoined those ab utilitate.' He first assigns his reasons for sending 'the brethren before-hand, to make up the collections, notwithstanding his confidence in them.' Then, after encouraging their cheerful liberality, he, in the full expectation of its fruits, affectionately recommends them to the Divine blessing.

1. περὶ μὲν γὰρ τῆς διακ.] The γὰρ serves to connect this with the last verse of the preceding Chapter; though, indeed, that connexion is not, at first sight, obvious; nay, the Apostle seems to be passing to a new subject. Yet there is no transition, properly speaking; or only, at most, that kind of quasi-transition, when a writer stops short in treating on any subject, in order to again advert to something that has been before said, so as to make that the means of introducing some new topic. In this case, ἀλλὰ γὰρ is not unusual in the Classical writers, and there is always an ellipsis of some words to be supplied from the context or the subject-matter. So here we may paraphrase, with Newcome: '[However, I need say no more, nor insist on the foregoing topics, viii. 24;] for as to the propriety and reasonableness that you should contribute to the wants of the Jewish converts, I have no need to insist on them.' If this be thought too precarious a principle, as depending on the supply of a whole sentence to which it is to be referred, we may suppose that the μὲν corresponds to the δὲ at v. 3: and so the cause denoted in the γὰρ may, after being suspended in vv. 1, 2, be brought out at v. 3. So περὶ δὲ is used at 1 Cor. vii. 1. viii. 1. xii. 1. This is much confirmed by the able statement of the connexion and sense by Calvin as follows: 'I do not tell you that you must minister unto the necessities of the saints, for that were needless; since you well know it, and have practically declared that you would not be wanting to them; but because by my every where boasting of your liberality, I have engaged at once my own credit and yours, this will not suffer me to remain inactive.'

τῆς διακονίας τῆς εἰς τοὺς ἁγίους περισσόν μοι ἐστὶ τὸ
b Supra 8. 10, 19, 24. γράφειν ὑμῖν. [b] οἶδα γὰρ τὴν προθυμίαν ὑμῶν, ἣν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν 2 καυχῶμαι Μακεδόσιν· ὅτι Ἀχαΐα παρεσκεύασται ἀπὸ πέρυσι· c Supra 8. 18, 22. 1 Cor. 16. 2. καὶ ὁ ἐξ ὑμῶν ζῆλος ἠρέθισε τοὺς πλείονας. [c] Ἔπεμψα δὲ 3 τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς, ἵνα μὴ τὸ καύχημα ἡμῶν τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν κενωθῇ ἐν τῷ μέρει τούτῳ· ἵνα, καθὼς ἔλεγον, παρεσκευασμένοι ἦτε· μή πως, ἐὰν ἔλθωσι σὺν ἐμοὶ Μακεδόνες, καὶ 4 εὕρωσιν ὑμᾶς ἀπαρασκευάστους, καταισχυνθῶμεν ἡμεῖς, (ἵνα μὴ λέγωμεν ὑμεῖς,) ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει ταύτῃ [τῆς καυχήσεως].
Ἀναγκαῖον οὖν ἡγησάμην παρακαλέσαι τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς, ἵνα 5 προέλθωσιν εἰς ὑμᾶς, καὶ προκαταρτίσωσι τὴν προκατηγ-d Prov. 11. 18. & 19. 17. & 22. 9. Gal. 6. 8. γελμένην εὐλογίαν ὑμῶν, ταύτην ἑτοίμην εἶναι οὕτως ὡς εὐλογίαν, καὶ μὴ ὥσπερ πλεονεξίαν. [d] Τοῦτο δέ· ὁ σπείρων 6

2. ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν.] This is not, as some say, pleonastic, but λαλῶν, 'when speaking of you,' may be supplied. Καυχῶμαι, prædicere soleo. At ὅτι supply λέγοντες from the subject-matter. By Ἀχαΐα is here denoted that province of the two into which Augustus distributed Greece, consisting of Greece proper; namely, the tract of country to the south of Thessaly, Epirus, and Illyricum; which provinces, together with Macedonia, constituted the other province. Παρεσκεύασται need not, with some, be interpreted of intention only and will, as opposed to deeds; nor, with others, of complete preparation: for it may well denote, 'has been preparing itself;' viz. by contributions for the general collection to be made when St. Paul should go. See 1 Cor. xvi. 2. Thus ἀπὸ πέρυσι will (as at viii. 10) mean, 'for a year back;' i. e. during the whole course of that year.

— ὁ ἐξ ὑμῶν ζῆλος] i. e. 'the zeal evinced on your part;' for the ἐξ is not, as Grotius and Rosenmuller suppose, pleonastic.

3. μὴ—κενωθῇ] i. e., as Theophylact explains, κενὸν ἐλεγχθῇ, (so Hesychius, μάταιον ἀποφανθῇ,) 'should be found vain.' Ἐν τῷ μέρει τ., 'in this respect;' i. e. your readiness to contribute, as iii. 10. Ἵνα παρεσκ. ἦτε, i. e. 'that there may be no collections requiring to be made when I come,' as the Apostle says, 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

4. μή πως, ἐὰν ἔλθ.—Μ.] 'lest, if any Macedonians should accompany me.' He does not say they would accompany him, but it was not unlikely that they should, considering the constant intercourse of Macedonia with this emporium of Greece, and the custom of setting forward the Apostles on their way, and sometimes accompanying them, so as to bring them safe to the next Christian congregation. In ἵνα μὴ λέγ. ὑ μ ε ῖ ς there is a most delicate turn.

— ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει τ. τῆς καυχ.] Meaning, 'on account of this confidence of boasting;' i. e. confident boasting; a sense which ὑπόστασις will very well bear, since it properly denotes a foundation, or support for any thing; and then easily comes to mean any fiducia or πεποίθησις, as resting on hope or persuasion. Τῆς καυχ. is exegetical of ὑποστ. It is, indeed, not found in some MSS. and Versions, is rejected by Mill and Bengel, and has been cancelled by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz.

5. τὴν προκατηγγελμένην.] Meaning, it would seem, not, as our common Version renders, 'whereof ye had notice before;' but rather, 'which had been [so much] spoken of before [by you] and announced [to me and the public].' By most recent Commentators τὴν εὐλογίαν is simply taken to denote a gift. Yet they do not satisfactorily show how such a sense can arise from the primitive signification of the word; i. e. 'an expression of good-will to any one.' Abp. Newcome's solution is the best; namely, that it is so called from a metonymy of the effect for the cause; i. e. because it produces blessing. The true mode, however, of viewing the idiom seems to be, to suppose it used from delicacy. The Apostle often employs such terms to denote alms, as are calculated at once to spare the feelings of the receiver, and remind the giver that he is exercising a duty towards God. Thus we may compare this use of εὐλογία with that of χάρις at viii. 1, and εὐχαριστία elsewhere. Hence it may be rendered 'a thanks-gift;' meaning, a gift bestowed on man in gratitude to God for his goodness. The same principle may be applied to the use of the word at Gen. xxxiii. 11. 2 Kings v. 15, Sept.

At ταύτην ἑτοίμην εἶναι supply ὥστε. The words οὕτως ὡς εὐλογ. καὶ μὴ ὥσπερ πλεονεξίαν, &c., are illustrative of the foregoing sense of εὐλογίαν. The sense is, 'that it may be [as it is] a thanks-gift, and not as it were a grudging alms, wrung from unwilling givers by importunity.' The force of πλεονεξίαν is well illustrated by Theophylact, who observes that 'he who gives alms unwillingly, gives it as if he were overreached, or cheated out of it;' πλεονεκτεῖσθαι as Thucydides says, i. 77, where it is opposed to καταναγκάζεσθαι.

6. τοῦτο δέ.] Sub. φημὶ or γνωστὸν ἔστω. This seems meant to encounter an argument for giving at least sparingly; the answer to which is, [The gift must, indeed, be voluntary, and only in proportion to what can be spared,] yet mind this,—he who soweth sparingly, shall reap sparingly. The Apostle does not prescribe the amount which any one is to give; but merely reminds them that they must expect to reap only in proportion to what they have sown. This metaphorical use of σπείρω, in the sense 'to bestow,' is founded on the language of the Old Test.; see Isaiah xxxii. 20. Hosea x. 12. Prov.

φειδομένως, φειδομένως καὶ θερίσει· καὶ ὁ σπείρων ἐπ' εὐλο-7 γίαις, ἐπ' εὐλογίαις καὶ θερίσει. [e] Ἕκαστος καθὼς προαι- e Exod. 25. 2. & 35. 5.
ρεῖται τῇ καρδίᾳ· μὴ ἐκ λύπης ἢ ἐξ ἀνάγκης· ἱλαρὸν γὰρ Deut. 15. 7. Eccl. 35. 11. Rom. 12. 8.
8 δότην ἀγαπᾷ ὁ Θεός. [f] Δυνατὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς πᾶσαν χάριν f Phil. 4. 19.
περισσεῦσαι εἰς ὑμᾶς· ἵνα ἐν παντὶ πάντοτε πᾶσαν αὐτάρκειαν 9 ἔχοντες, περισσεύητε εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθόν· [g] καθὼς γέγραπ- g Ps. 112. 9.
ται· Ἐσκόρπισεν, ἔδωκε τοῖς πένησιν, ἡ δικαιο-10 σύνη αὐτοῦ μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα. [h] Ὁ δὲ ἐπιχορηγῶν h Isa. 55. 10. Hos. 10. 12.
σπέρμα τῷ σπείροντι καὶ ἄρτον εἰς βρῶσιν, χορηγήσαι καὶ πληθύναι τὸν σπόρον ὑμῶν, καὶ αὐξήσαι τὰ γεννήματα τῆς 11 δικαιοσύνης ὑμῶν· [i] ἐν παντὶ πλουτιζόμενοι εἰς πᾶσαν i Supra 1. 11. & 4. 15.
ἁπλότητα, ἥτις κατεργάζεται δι' ἡμῶν εὐχαριστίαν τῷ Θεῷ.
12 [k] Ὅτι ἡ διακονία τῆς λειτουργίας ταύτης οὐ μόνον ἐστὶ προσ- k Supra 8. 14. & 4. 15.
αναπληροῦσα τὰ ὑστερήματα τῶν ἁγίων, ἀλλὰ καὶ περισ-xi. 18. 25. The sentiment appears, from the parallel passages adduced by Wetstein and others, to have been a proverbial one. Ἐπ' εὐλογίαις is a phrase for an adverb, like ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, 'securely,' in Acts ii. 26; and the plural has an intensive force. Thus the sense is, 'most abundantly.' So Ezek. xxxiv. 26 (Sept.), ὑετὸς εὐλογίας, 'abundant rain;' and Prov. xi. 25, ψυχὴ εὐλογουμένη, 'the liberal person.'

7. καθὼς προαιρεῖται τῇ καρδίᾳ.] Not, 'as he purposeth in his heart;' but, 'as he is disposed (or chooseth) in his heart;' for the Apostle is speaking not so much of determination, or purpose, as of will. Thus in the antithesis we have ἐξ ἀνάγκης. And although the former sense is most frequent in the Classical writers, yet the latter prevails in the Sept., and is found in the later Greek writers. So (besides other examples which might be adduced) Josephus, Ant. xvi. 6, 7, speaking of the collections made among the foreign Jews, and sent to Jerusalem for the use of the Temple, ἀπαρχὰς ἃς ἕκαστος αὐτῶν ἐκ τῆς ἰδίας προαιρέσεως scil. τελῇ.

After τῇ καρδίᾳ supply, from the subject-matter, διδότω. Ἐκ λύπης, grudgingly.

— ἱλαρὸν γὰρ δότην ἀγαπᾷ ὁ Θ.] Compare Ecclus. xxxv. 9. 11. Prov. xxii. 18. Rom. xii. 8. Similarly it is said, Pind. Pyth., κέρδος δὲ φίλτατόν γ', ἑκόντος εἴ Τις ἐκ δόμων φέροι. See also Thucydides, ii. 40, ult.

8. δυνατὸς δὲ—περισσ. εἰς ὑμᾶς·] This (as Chrysostom and Theophylact observe) seems meant to anticipate an objection: 'But if I give, I shall impoverish myself.' To which the answer is, 'God is able to [and, as he sees fit, will] make every sort of beneficence, i. e. the ability to practise it, abound unto you.' So some of the best Commentators, ancient and modern, interpret, taking χάριν for ἐλεημοσύνην. Others, however, understand it of the gifts of God. The accumulation of cognate terms, παντὶ, πάντοτε, and πᾶσαν much strengthens the sense. Π*ερισσεύητε*, 'you may have to spare [to bestow] on every kind of beneficence.'

9. καθὼς γέγρ.] 'Thus the saying of Scripture will be made good.' The citation is from Psalm cxii. 9. Σ*κορπίζω* signifies to scatter, as in sowing, agreeably to the metaphor at ver. 7. Ἡ δικαιοσύνη is for ἐλεημοσύνη. Μ*ένει*, 'endures,' i. e. in its consequences. There is a sort of Oxymoron, similar to that at Prov. xi. 24 (which the Apostle probably had in mind), εἰσὶν, οἳ τὰ ἴδια σπείροντες πλείονα ποιοῦσιν· εἰσὶ δὲ καί, οἳ συνάγοντες ἐλαττονοῦνται.

10. ὁ δὲ ἐπιχορηγῶν—ὑμῶν.] The connexion here is ably traced by Chrysostom and the Greek Commentators. The words ὁ ἐπιχορηγῶν—βρῶσιν are a periphrasis of God (i. e. the Good Being), 'who giveth us all things richly to enjoy.' It is formed on Isaiah lv. 10. So Diod. Sic. ii. 35, χορηγοῦσα τρυφὰς ἀφθόνως.

— χορηγήσαι καὶ πληθύναι] 'may he supply and multiply!' An Hendiadys for 'may he abundantly supply.' Τ*ὸν σπόρον ὑμῶν*, 'the seed you sow;' meaning the money or goods bestowed in alms, and thus sown unto the Lord; so expressing a wish that they may have more seed to thus sow unto the Lord.

— τὰ γεννήματα τῆς δικαιοσύνης ὑ.] An expression borrowed from Hosea x. 12, signifying, 'the effect or produce of your liberality.' Some take the meaning to be, 'may he richly reward your liberality;' while others interpret otherwise. The most correct view of the sense seems to be that of the ancient Commentators and Emmerling, who take γεν. τῆς δικ. to denote 'the benefit arising from their charity;' q. d. 'May their charitable spirit find more scope for doing good;' may their means of doing good be increased!

11. ἐν παντὶ πλουτιζόμενοι—ἁπλότ.] This is exegetical of the preceding καὶ αὐξήσαι—ὑμῶν. The construction is irregular, in tracing which it is best to regard πλουτ. as a nomin. pendens, 'ye abounding,' for Gen. absolute, and that for ἵνα πλουτίζησθε scil. ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

— ἥτις κατεργάζεται—Θεῷ.] The sense is, 'which being ministered by us, produces, through our instrumentality, thanksgiving to God;' namely, both from the indigent Christians, who received the bounty, and from the Apostle who procured and administered it.

12. This verse is explanatory of the foregoing, and may be freely rendered, 'For the ministering of this supply [to the wants of the poor] not only relieves their necessities, but is abundant to the glory of God, by [producing] many thanksgivings'

1 Matt. 5. 16. σεύουσα διὰ πολλῶν εὐχαριστιῶν τῷ Θεῷ, ([l] διὰ τῆς δοκιμῆς 13 τῆς διακονίας ταύτης δοξάζοντες τὸν Θεὸν, ἐπὶ τῇ ὑποταγῇ τῆς ὁμολογίας ὑμῶν εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ
m Supra 8. 1 ἁπλότητι τῆς κοινωνίας εἰς αὐτοὺς καὶ εἰς πάντας,) [m] καὶ αὐτῶν 14 δεήσει ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, ἐπιποθούντων ὑμᾶς, διὰ τὴν ὑπερβάλ-λουσαν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐφ' ὑμῖν. Χάρις δὲ τῷ Θεῷ ἐπὶ 15 τῇ ἀνεκδιηγήτῳ αὐτοῦ δωρεᾷ!

a Ver. 10. 1 Cor. 2. 3. X. [a] ΑΥΤΟΣ δὲ ἐγὼ Παῦλος παρακαλῶ ὑμᾶς διὰ τῆς 1 πρᾳότητος καὶ ἐπιεικείας τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὃς κατὰ πρόσωπον b Infra 13. 2. & 4. 21. μὲν ταπεινὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, ἀπὼν δὲ θαῤῥῶ εἰς ὑμᾶς. [b] Δέομαι δὲ, 2 τὸ μὴ παρὼν θαῤῥῆσαι τῇ πεποιθήσει, ᾗ λογίζομαι τολ-μῆσαι ἐπί τινας τοὺς λογιζομένους ἡμᾶς ὡς κατὰ σάρκα to God; viz. both from the poor thus relieved, and from all true Christians. Comp. supra iv. 5.

13, 14. These verses are further illustrative of the preceding. Δοξ. is a nomin. pendens, like πλουτ. at ver. 11. Emmerling shows that the words of ver. 13 are put for δοξάζοντες τ. Θ. διὰ τῆς διακονίας ταύτης, ὅτι ἁπλότης τῆς κοινωνίας εἰς αὐτοὺς κ. εἰς πάντας δοκιμάζεται τὴν ὑποταγὴν ὑμῶν εἰς τ. εὐαγγ. τ. Χρ. τὸ δι' ἡμῶν ὁμολογούμενον. The force, however, of τῆς ὁμολογ. is disputed. It seems best to regard it as put for τῇ ὁμολογουμένῃ· 'their professed or avowed obedience.' Καὶ ἁπλότητι τῆς κοιν. ε. α. κ. ε. π. may be rendered, 'by the liberality of this your ministering to the necessities both of them, and of all [who are in need].' It is, I think, plain that the whole of this verse is parenthetical; and that the words καὶ αὐτῶν δεήσει, &c., in the next verse, connect with v. 12. To clear the construction we must take δεήσει as put for εἰς δέησιν. For as the Apostle has before said, that this supplying of the necessities of the saints would redound to the praise and glory of God; so here he adverts to another effect which would thence result: 'it will also (he says) tend to [excite] their prayers for you.' Ἐπιποθ. ὑμᾶς is to be referred to αὐτῶν. The expression ἐπιποθ. ὑμᾶς may be best rendered, agreeably to the Syr. Version, 'having a great affection for you,' as in Phil. i. 8. Thus the words following will yield a very suitable sense; where χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ signifies the grace of God in them, as evinced by their obedience to the requisitions of the Gospel in the exercise of this charity.

15. τῇ ἀνεκδ. δωρεᾷ.] This may, with many Commentators, be understood of the gift of the Gospel of Christ, or of Christ himself. But it should rather seem to signify, as other eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, 'the bounty itself of the Corinthians.' And ἀνεκδιηγήτῳ may be supposed to refer to its effects; meaning (by a slight hyperbole) that 'incalculably great benefits will thence result;' a mode of speaking intended to check any self-complacency, which might be engendered by the lofty praise just before assigned to almsgiving; this being represented indirectly as coming from God, whom the Apostle blesses for putting it into their hearts to give so liberally, whereby would redound so much glory to God, and honour to the Gospel of Christ. See Hyperius, Calvin, Beza, and Estius.

X. Now commences the third part and concluding portion of the Epistle, in which the Apostle, resuming his former argument, speaks more directly against the false teachers, and here vindicates himself from their calumnies; threatening to evince his Apostolical authority on the refractory.

In this portion some difference of style may be observed, there being here more of connexion and finish than in the preceding chapters. A yet greater difference exists in the spirit and manner. In the former part of the Epistle all is mild and conciliatory; here severe, objurgatory, and sarcastic. There is, however, no such inconsistency as some have recognised; and therefore we may dispense with the hypothesis by which Emmerling has endeavoured to account for it. In truth, the persons here glanced at are not the same. In the preceding chapters the Apostle merely encounters those who were not well affected to him, or insubordinate; and hence he there only acts on the defensive. Here he seems to have in view the false teachers, and their partizans his enemies, and accordingly he acts on the offensive.

He commences with entreating them, 'by the meekness of Christ,' as pointing to an example, which might justify his previous forbearance, and his delay in punishing those who had offended.

1. αὐτὸς δὲ ἐγὼ Π.] The ancient Commentators notice the dignity inherent in this mode of expression. Render: 'Now I, the same Paul who,' &c. In fact, there seems to be here a blending of two modes of expression, αὐτὸς ὃς, that same person who παρεκαλεῖ, and ἐγὼ Π. παρακ. The sense seems to be, 'by the exercise of, i. e. exercising that mildness, of which we have both the precept and the example in Jesus Christ.' At κατὰ πρόσ. sub. ὢν, 'when personally present.' Θαῤῥῶ εἰς ὑ., 'use bold confidence towards you,' i. e. by letter.

2. The δὲ is resumptive; and δέομαι δὲ may be rendered, 'I entreat you, I say.' The sense is: 'I entreat, I say, that I may not have to be bold when I am present, with that confidence, wherewith I intend to be bold against certain, who regard me as walking after the flesh;' i. e. guided by worldly principles. There seems to be a paronomasia in λογίζομαι and λογιζομένους, which, if introduced into English, may perhaps be best expressed by reckon; as Nehemiah vi. 2. Sept.

3 περιπατοῦντας· ἐν σαρκὶ γὰρ περιπατοῦντες οὐ κατὰ σάρκα 4 στρατευόμεθα· [c] τὰ γὰρ ὅπλα τῆς στρατείας ἡμῶν οὐ c Supra 6. 7 Jer. 1. 10.
σαρκικὰ, ἀλλὰ δυνατὰ τῷ Θεῷ, πρὸς καθαίρεσιν ὀχυρω- Eph. 6. 13. 1 Thess. 5. 8.
5 μάτων· [d] λογισμοὺς καθαιροῦντες, καὶ πᾶν ὕψωμα ἐπαιρό- d 2 Esdr. 14. 34.
μενον κατὰ τῆς γνώσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ αἰχμαλωτίζοντες 1 Cor. 1. 19. & 3. 19. Is. 2. 11, 12 6 πᾶν νόημα εἰς τὴν ὑπακοὴν τοῦ Χριστοῦ, [e] καὶ ἐν ἑτοίμῳ e Infra 13. 2, 10.
ἔχοντες ἐκδικῆσαι πᾶσαν παρακοὴν, ὅταν πληρωθῇ ὑμῶν ἡ ὑπακοή.
7 [f] Τὰ κατὰ πρόσωπον βλέπετε; Εἴ τις πέποιθεν ἑαυτῷ f 1 Cor. 14. 37. & 3. 23. & 9. 1.
Χριστοῦ εἶναι, τοῦτο λογιζέσθω πάλιν ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ, ὅτι

3. ἐν σαρκὶ—στρ.] We may notice the difference between ἐν σαρκὶ and κατὰ σάρκα, and the use of περιπατεῖν in the sense to be or live, as 1 John i. 7. The former imports 'to live in a human body, have a frail human nature;' the latter, 'to live on merely human views.' The sense and the force of the allusion in στρατ. are disputed. The ancient and some modern Commentators suppose an allusion to Paul's office and commission, as Apostle; as 1 Tim. i. 18; while the recent Commentators think the expression has reference to his strong supports therein. The former view is far preferable; but there seems to be also an allusion to the strong contest which the Apostle had to maintain against sin and wickedness, and its upholders, which is admirably illustrated by Bp. Sanderson, in his 3rd Sermon ad Populum, p. 145. The expression σάρξ here, like κατὰ σάρκα at ver. 2, refers to the maxims of human policy; see Note on John viii. 15. So Newcome paraphrases: 'There is no fraud, self-interest, or corrupting of the word of God, imputable to me.' Comp. iv. 2.

4. τὰ γὰρ ὅπλα, &c.] Here the figure is continued, in order to suggest the mighty supports from above, which the Apostle had in the exercise of this warfare; and that in order to establish his Divine commission. The general sense is this: 'Our supports in this struggle [literally campaign] are not merely human [and therefore weak]; but are strong, through and by God, to the pulling down of strong holds.' Τῷ Θεῷ is by many supposed to communicate a superlative force to δυνατός; i. e. 'exceedingly powerful.' But the interpretation above adopted, from the ancient and best modern Commentators, seems to be the best founded. In πρὸς καθ. ὀχυρ. the metaphor is continued, and the purpose of this warfare adverted to, namely, the removal of all impediments, however formidable, to the propagation of the Gospel, which are represented as the strong holds of sin and Satan, whereby he maintained his empire of darkness, idolatry, and vice. See Scott.

5. λογισμοὺς καθ., &c.] This is further explanatory of καθαίρεσιν which precedes. Καθαιροῦντες is a nomin. pendens, and put for ὥστε καθαιρεῖν ἡμᾶς. Λογισμοὺς has reference to the dialectic syllogisms, rhetorical strophæ, and vain sophisms, by which the heathen philosophers assailed the Gospel. In ὕψωμα (said with reference to a proud adversary, under the figure of a lofty tower, or fortress built up by the enemy) there is the same metaphor as in ὀχύρωμα before; though with a more especial reference to the battlements of walls and fortresses. And as λογισμ. is a particular term referring to the heathen philosophers, and partly the false teachers, so ὕψωμα (as appears from the πᾶν) is a general term applicable alike to the heathen philosophers, the false teachers, and the Jewish doctors. That the Apostle should have employed the terms ὀχύρωμα and ὕψωμα, is not surprising; since military metaphors run throughout the whole passage, as στρατευόμεθα, στρατείας, καθαίρεσιν ὀχυρωμάτων, and αἰχμαλωτίζοντες. In like manner Philo (cited by Loesner) calls false wisdom ὀχύρωμα; and, similarly to the ὕψωμα ἐπαιρόμενον κατὰ, &c., he speaks of τὸν ἐπιτειχισμὸν τῶν ἐναντίων δοξῶν καθαιρεῖν. By τῆς γνώσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ is meant κατ' ἐξοχὴν the Gospel. Νόημα should be rendered, not thought, but cogitation, i. e. intellectual ratiocination, as supra ii. 11. The false teachers, it seems, found it more difficult to subject their reason to the obedience of Christ than their actions. Against this the pride of man has ever rebelled. Thus of those who now reject the Gospel, few are indisposed to admit the excellence of its moral precepts; but against any subjection of the reason of men they loudly protest.

Εἰς τὴν ὑπακοὴν τοῦ Χρ. may best be rendered 'into obedience to Christ,' i. e. his Gospel, the γνώσ. τοῦ Θεοῦ. The Genitive is used because ὑπακούειν takes a Genitive, and verbals follow the case of their verbs. Thus it is for εἰς τὸ ὑπακούειν τῷ Χριστῷ.

6. ἐν ἑτοίμῳ ἔχοντες] for ἑτοίμως ἔχ., 'being ready.' Ὅταν πληρ. ὑμῶν ἡ ὑπ. i. e. 'when you are generally and completely brought to the obedience of Christ.' By ὑμῶν ἡ ὑπ. is meant the obedience of the sounder part of them. We are not, however, with many recent Commentators, to suppose that the Apostle waited till the greater and sounder part were reduced to obedience, in order, by their aid, to punish the disobedient; since for the ἐκδίκησις mentioned he needed not their aid. It would seem that he deferred exercising the supernatural power of inflicting judgments, intrusted to him by God, until, by giving time for repentance, he should have brought back as many as possible to obedience, who would help to keep the rest so, and thereby render it the less necessary to resort to severer measures.

7. The Apostle now turns from the deceivers to the deceived. The sense of τὰ κατὰ πρ. βλ.; is, 'Do you form your estimation of things [concerning a Teacher] according to external circumstances?' such as person, manners, learning, or g Supra 7. 14. infra 12. 6. & 13. 10 — καθὼς αὐτὸς Χριστοῦ, οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς [Χριστοῦ]. [g]Ἐάν τε 8 γὰρ καὶ περισσότερόν τι καυχήσωμαι περὶ τῆς ἐξουσίας ἡμῶν, (ἧς ἔδωκεν ὁ Κύριος ἡμῖν εἰς οἰκοδομὴν, καὶ οὐκ εἰς καθαίρεσιν ὑμῶν,) οὐκ αἰσχυνθήσομαι. ἵνα μὴ δόξω ὡσὰν 9 h 1 Cor. 2. 3, 4. supra ver. 1. — ἐκφοβεῖν ὑμᾶς διὰ τῶν ἐπιστολῶν,—([h]ὅτι αἱ μὲν ἐπιστολαί, 10

φησι, βαρεῖαι καὶ ἰσχυραί· ἡ δὲ παρουσία τοῦ σώματος ἀσθενὴς, καὶ ὁ λόγος ἐξουθενημένος·)— τοῦτο λογιζέσθω ὁ 11 τοιοῦτος, ὅτι οἷοί ἐσμεν τῷ λόγῳ δι' ἐπιστολῶν ἀπόντες, τοιοῦτοι καὶ παρόντες τῷ ἔργῳ.
i Supra 3. 1. & 5. 12. — [i]Οὐ γὰρ τολμῶμεν ἐγκρῖναι ἢ συγκρῖναι ἑαυτοὺς τισὶ 12 τῶν ἑαυτοὺς συνιστανόντων· ἀλλὰ αὐτοὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἑαυτοὺς μετροῦντες, καὶ συγκρίνοντες ἑαυτοὺς ἑαυτοῖς, οὐ συνιοῦσιν.

eloquence, wealth, birth, rank, or, lastly, the adventitious advantage of conversion under Christ himself; compare 1 Cor. ix. 1. In τις there seems to be an allusion to the false teachers, and especially one, who took the lead. Πέποιθεν ἑαυτῷ should be rendered 'is confident in himself,' viz. by placing reliance on some personal merit of his own. Χριστοῦ εἶναι, scil. δοῦλος; implying, by the context, one especially approved by Him. Τοῦτο λογιζέσθω π. ἁ. ἑ. may be rendered, 'let him, in turn, consider this with himself,' or, reason thus of himself; meaning, that 'thereby he will find, by all those arguments he concludes himself to be Christ's minister, that he may conclude the same of me also.'

8. ἐάν τε γὰρ καὶ περισσότερόν, &c.] 'Nay, if I should boast somewhat more [than I have done] of my power;' i. e. if I should even make greater claims than I have already done to a divine commission. Meaning to say, that he may justly claim far more than the being a minister of Christ, which was all that the false teachers pretended to. So 1 Cor. xv. 10, περισσότερον αὐτῶν πάντων ἐκοπίασα. Τῆς ἐξουσίας ἡμῶν, 'the authority given to me,' namely, by Jesus Christ personally; the words ἧς ἔδωκεν ὁ Κύριος ἡμῖν referring to that personal commission, which Paul had received from the Lord Jesus, and to the authority committed peculiarly to the Apostles, of inflicting condign punishment by corporeal inflictions on the refractory; see 1 Cor. iv. 21, and Note.

— εἰς οἰκοδομὴν, καὶ οὐκ εἰς κ. ὑ.] The words glance at the false teachers, whose measures tended not εἰς οἰκ., but εἰς καθ., viz. by throwing impediments in the way of salvation, and by the dissemination of heresy and false doctrine. Οὐκ αἰσχυνθήσομαι, i. e. 'I should have no reason to be ashamed,' as if I spoke falsehood; nay, the truth of facts would justify me.

9. ἵνα μὴ δόξω—ἐπιστολῶν.] There is here an air of abruptness and an obscurity, which most Interpreters, ancient and modern, endeavour to remove by supplying some clause introductory of the words. The most probable supplementum is ἀλλ' οὐ καυχήσομαι; q. d. '[if I were, I say, to boast. But this I will not do,] in order that,' &c. Yet, rather than suppose so arbitrary an ellipsis, it is better, with some ancient and several eminent modern Commentators, to regard v. 9 as forming a protasis, to which there is at v. 11 the apodosis; v. 10 being parenthetical.

Ὡσὰν is often, as here, put for ὡσεὶ, as it were; of which many examples might be adduced from Thucydides and others of the best writers. H. Stephens, in his Thes., is of opinion that in such a case we should write ὡσὰν, not ὡς ἄν.

10. αἱ μὲν ἐπιστολαί.] This will not prove that they had previously received more than one; for, as Bp. Middleton remarks, ἐπιστολαὶ might (as is the case in all languages) be used generically, as denoting the character of them, though only one letter had been received. At φησὶ supply τις. This seems to be meant of the person supposed to make the observation, and probably the leading person among the false teachers. Βαρεῖαι καὶ ἰσχ., 'authoritative and severe,' or 'not to be made light of.' Ἡ δὲ παρ. τοῦ σώμ. is for παρὼν δὲ κατὰ τὸ σῶμα, as in Thucyd. vi. 86, πόλει μείζονι τῆς ἡμετέρας παρουσίας.

— ἀσθενὴς] 'mean.' This is supposed to have reference to the very diminutive and crooked form, and various other disadvantages, as to person and manner,—which the evidence of antiquity ascribes to the Apostle. See Note on 1 Cor. ii. 3.

— ὁ λόγος ἐξουθενημένος.] Referring, it is supposed, to his weak voice and indistinct enunciation; probably, too, including elocution altogether, which was, we may suppose, not sufficiently refined for the fastidious critics of Grecism at Corinth.

11. λογιζέσθω] 'let him suppose or know.'

12. οὐ γὰρ τολμῶμεν, &c.] The γὰρ is transitive; q. d. '[But we will say no more;] for,' &c. Οὐ τολμ., 'non sustinemus,' we cannot bring ourselves; as Rom. v. 7, and sometimes in the Classical writers. Ἐγκ. and συγκρῖναι are well explained by Theophylact, συναριθμῆσαι and ἀντιπαραθεῖναι. By τισὶ the Apostle means the false teachers, against whom he directs the pointed sarcasm following.

— ἀλλὰ αὐτοὶ—συνιοῦσιν] i. e. 'While they thus measure themselves by themselves only, and not with the true Apostles, they are not men of understanding' (literally, 'do not put things well together in their mind.' See Note on Luke ii. 47); meaning, that 'they perceive not what they are doing, and the self-delusion into which they are fallen;' which is the greatest mark of folly. This absolute use of συν. is also found in Mark 13 [k] Ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐχὶ εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα καυχησόμεθα· ἀλλὰ κατὰ k 1 Cor. 12. 11.

τὸ μέτρον τοῦ κανόνος, οὗ ἐμέρισεν ἡμῖν ὁ Θεὸς μέτρου, Infra 11. 18. & 12. 5, 6. Eph. 4. 7.
14 ἐφικέσθαι ἄχρι καὶ ὑμῶν· ([l] οὐ γὰρ ὡς μὴ ἐφικνούμενοι εἰς l 1 Cor. 4. 15. & 3. 5, 10. & 9. 1.
ὑμᾶς ὑπερεκτείνομεν ἑαυτούς· ἄχρι γὰρ καὶ ὑμῶν ἐφθάσα-15 μεν ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ·) [m] οὐκ εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα m Rom. 15. 20.
καυχώμενοι ἐν ἀλλοτρίοις κόποις, ἐλπίδα δὲ ἔχοντες, αὐξανομένης τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν, ἐν ὑμῖν μεγαλυνθῆναι κατὰ τὸν 16 κανόνα ἡμῶν, εἰς περισσείαν, εἰς τὰ ὑπερέκεινα ὑμῶν εὐαγ-γελίσασθαι, οὐκ ἐν ἀλλοτρίῳ κανόνι εἰς τὰ ἕτοιμα καυ-17 χήσασθαι. [n] Ὁ δὲ καυχώμενος, ἐν Κυρίῳ καυχάσθω· n Isa. 65. 16. Jer. 9. 23, 24. 1 Cor. 1. 31.
18 [o] οὐ γὰρ ὁ ἑαυτὸν συνιστῶν, ἐκεῖνός ἐστι δόκιμος, ἀλλ' ὃν ὁ o Prov. 27. 2. Rom. 2. 29. 1 Cor. 4. 5.
Κύριος συνίστησιν.
1 XI. [a] ὌΦΕΛΟΝ * ἀνείχεσθέ μου μικρὸν ‡ τῇ ἀφρο- a Supra 5. 13. infra ver. 16. & 12. 6.
2 σύνῃ. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνέχεσθέ μου. [b] Ζηλῶ γὰρ ὑμᾶς Θεοῦ ζήλῳ· b John 3. 29. Col. 1. 28. 1 Cor. 4. 15.

vi. 52. vii. 14. viii. 17, 21. Numerous parallel sentiments are here adduced from ancient writers. It may suffice to advert to the Horatian, ‘Metiri se quemque suo modulo ac pede.’

13. ἡμεῖς δέ.] The ἡμεῖς is emphatical, and meant in opposition to the false teachers. At ἄμετρα supply μέρη. The same metaphor is here continued, and the sense is, ‘I will not boast, or seek glory, in respect to any parts further than the limits God hath assigned to my evangelical labours.’ By κανὼν here is denoted that space or province allotted to a teacher, to which the term diocese was afterwards applied.

— ἐφικέσθαι ἄχρι καὶ ὑμῶν.] Supply ὥστε. The meaning being, ‘and those limits extend so as to reach even unto you. [Of you, therefore, I may be permitted to boast.]’

14. This verse is explanatory of ver. 13, and the expressions ὑπερεκτ. ἑαυτοὺς (with which the Commentators compare ὑπερπηδᾷν τὸν ὅρον) is equivalent to εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα καυχᾶσθαι. A similar use of ὑπερεκτείνειν occurs in Lucian, Eunuch. 2, κεκραγότες καὶ ὑπερεκτεινόμενοι. The sense, then, is, ‘we stretch not ourselves as if our boundaries did not extend so far as to reach to you.’

— ἄχρι γὰρ καὶ ὑμῶν—Χριστοῦ] ‘for I have advanced as far as you also in preaching the Gospel of Christ.’ Φθάν. signifies properly to arrive first; and the right of pre-occupancy is here alluded to.

15. οὐκ εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα καυχ.] The Apostle here resumes the sentiment at ver. 13, in order to engraft another upon it, illustrative thereof: ‘We (alluding to the false teachers) do not boast beyond our limits over other men's labours.’ Comp. Rom. xv. 20. So Joseph. Ant. xiv. 11. 2, κατασκευάζειν εὔνοιαν ἐκ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων πόνων. The Apostle then hints at a result of his labours far more precious than acceptance and honour. We have, he says, a hope αὐξανομένης τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν ἐν ὑμῖν μεγαλυνθῆναι; that, as your faith increases (i. e. as the profession of the Gospel extends further among you), ἐν ὑμῖν μεγαλυνθῆναι, ‘to gain fame and glory by you,’ —namely, as a teacher justly may, by the reputation of his pupils.

16. εἰς τὰ ὑπερέκεινα—εὐαγγ.] Sub. ὥστε, i. e. εἰς τό. The sense seems to be: ‘The result which I hope for, from this abundant success of my labours among you, is εὐαγγελίσασθαι (scil. με) εἰς τὰ ὑπερέκεινα ὑμῶν, ‘that I may spread the Gospel to the parts beyond you.’ Οὐκ ἐν ἀλλοτρίῳ—καυχ. Render, ‘So, however, as not to aim at boasting over that which is already obtained, and in another's bounds.’ Εἰς τὰ ἕτοιμα, for ἐν τοῖς ἑτοίμοις.

17. The Apostle concludes with a most weighty sentiment, by way of inference from the whole; occurring also at 1 Cor. i. 31 (and supposed by some to be derived from Jerem. ix. 23, sq.), but here directed against the false teachers. A close connexion, as Emmerling observes, exists between these words and those of ver. 12, οὐ γὰρ τολμῶμεν ἐγκρῖναι ἢ συγκρῖναι ἑαυτοὺς τισὶ τῶν ἑαυτοὺς συνιστανόντων; the intervening verses being in some measure parenthetical.

18. συνίστησιν] i. e. ‘shows to be approved;’ namely, either by the impartment of spiritual gifts and endowments; or, in a general way, by such a blessing on any minister's evangelical labours, as attests that he is accepted of God.

XI. 1. As v. 17 of the preceding Chapter was intended to deprecate the disgust and displeasure which arises at hearing any one praise himself, so is the present verse thus meant. The words may be rendered, ‘Would that ye could bear with me a little in my folly [of boasting]! Now do even bear with me!’ On ὄφελον, utinam, see Matth. Gr. Gr. Τῇ ἀφρ., ‘folly of boasting;’ i. e. what his opposers called such, though it was not so, but arose from necessity, and was employed solely to rescue his converts from the arts of false teachers.

Here there is some variety of reading. The common text, supported by several MSS., has ἠνείχεσθέ μ. μ. τι τῆς ἀφροσύνης. But the reading which I have adopted (with Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Emmerling,) is supported by almost all the early Editions and Versions, and is as strong in internal evidence as in external authority. Ἀνείχ. is required by the usus loquendi of the New Test., and the article τῇ by the proprietas linguæ; the sense being, ‘my folly.’ The τι arose from the margin.

ἡρμοσάμην γὰρ ὑμᾶς ἑνὶ ἀνδρὶ παρθένον ἁγνὴν παραστῆσαι τῷ Χριστῷ· [c] φοβοῦμαι δὲ μήπως, ὡς ὁ ὄφις Εὔαν ἐξηπά- 3 τησεν ἐν τῇ πανουργίᾳ αὐτοῦ, οὕτω φθαρῇ τὰ νοήματα ὑμῶν ἀπὸ τῆς ἁπλότητος τῆς εἰς τὸν Χριστόν. [d] Εἰ μὲν 4 γὰρ ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἄλλον Ἰησοῦν κηρύσσει ὃν οὐκ ἐκηρύξαμεν, ἢ Πνεῦμα ἕτερον λαμβάνετε ὃ οὐκ ἐλάβετε, ἢ εὐαγγέλιον ἕτερον ὃ οὐκ ἐδέξασθε, καλῶς ‡ ἠνείχεσθε. [e] Λογίζομαι γὰρ 5 μηδὲν ὑστερηκέναι τῶν ὑπερλίαν ἀποστόλων. [f] Εἰ δὲ καὶ 6 ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ, ἀλλ' οὐ τῇ γνώσει· ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ φανε-ρωθέντες ἐν πᾶσιν εἰς ὑμᾶς. [g] Ἢ ἁμαρτίαν ἐποίησα ἐμαυ- 7 c Gen. 3. 4. John 8. 44. Col. 2. 4, 8.

d Gal. 1. 7, 8.
e 1 Cor. 15. 10. infra 12. 11. Gal. 2. 6.
f 1 Cor. 1. 17. & 2. 1, 13. Eph. 3. 4. supra 4. 2. & 5. 11. infra 12. 12.
g Infra 12. 13, 16. 1 Cor. 9. 6, 2.

2. ζηλῶ γάρ, &c.] Meaning, it should seem, 'I entertain the most ardent affection, and feel the most lively concern for you.' The next words, ἡρμοσάμην γὰρ ὑμᾶς ἑνὶ ἀνδρὶ—Χριστῷ, are illustrative of the thing, and the metaphor in ἡρμοσάμην would seem to be adopted suitably to that just after, which represents the Church as the bride of Christ. Thus ἡρμοσάμην is equivalent to ἐμνηστευσάμην; the figure being supposed to be derived from the Jewish saying, that Moses espoused Israel to God on Mount Sinai, and also with allusion to the ἁρμοσταὶ, who negociated marriages for their friends. See also Prov. xix. 14. Krebs, however, has shown that this is contrary to the propriety of language; the middle form ἁρμόζεσθαι being never used of a man's betrothing a woman to another, but only to himself. See Esth. ii. 12, Sept. and Joseph. Ant. xi. 6. 2. Hence it would seem better to reject the nuptial allusion, and suppose, with Krebs and Mr. Mall ap. Parkhurst, a parental image, similar to that by which ἁρμόζειν is applied to a father's betrothing his daughter to some one. See Eurip. Elect. 24. Thus the sense will be, 'I have prepared you [by Christian doctrines and virtues] that I may introduce you as a pure virgin to one man, even Christ.' Παραστῆσαι is a vox solennis de hac re, signifying deducere sponsum ad sponsam.

3. τὰ νοήματα ὑ.] 'habits of thinking.' Φθαρῇ ἀπὸ τῆς ἁπλότ. τῆς εἰς τ. Χρ.: a phrasis prægnans; the full sense being, 'be corrupted and perverted from the simplicity,' &c.; meaning, it would seem, not (as many recent Commentators understand) 'true and sincere love and obedience to Christ,' but, as Theophylact explains, 'simplicity of faith and doctrine as regards Christ and the Gospel,' the simple and unadulterated truth as it is in Jesus. This, it seems, had been more or less corrupted with admixtures of Jewish or heathen superstition.

4. ὁ ἐρχόμενος.] This is by many Commentators supposed to designate the false teacher. But it seems to simply mean 'any one coming to you as a teacher of religion.' Now the Apostle supposes a case which does not exist, and by ἄλλον is meant, by implication, 'another and a better.' Ἰησοῦς here simply means, according to its etymology, Saviour. The sense of the passage may be thus expressed: 'If any one coming to you were to preach another and better Saviour than him whom we preached, or ye were to receive from him other and better spiritual gifts than those which we imparted, or another and better Gospel [than that] which ye had accepted, ye might have been right in bearing with him, and admitting his claims; [but this is not the case,] for I account myself,' &c. The above clause, though not expressed, is necessary to be supplied to complete the sense, and there is an evident allusion to it in the γάρ. Its omission may have arisen from modesty. 'The ground of censure (Photius observes) is this,—that when the false teachers preached only the same Saviour, Spirit, and Gospel as the Apostle, yet they abandoned him, and held with them, though they had not to plead the attraction of novelty and variety.'

In καλῶς ἠνείχ. there is a keen sarcasm. Compare vv. 19, 20. For ἠνείχ., however, many of the best MSS. and the Ed. Princ. have ἀνείχ., which was, with reason, adopted by Wetstein, and edited by Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz.

5. λογίζομαι γάρ, &c.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; '[But you can do no such thing, nor can others;] for I cannot myself,' &c.

— τῶν ὑπερλίαν ἀποστ.] The best Commentators are agreed in supposing Peter, James, and John here meant, who are in Gal. ii. 9 called 'pillars of the Church.' What St. Paul says was probably meant against those followers of Peter or Cephas who (as we find from 1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 4) formed a party at Corinth. Ὑπερλίαν (in which we have adverb for adjective) may be compared with the words ὑπερεῦ and ὑπερπερισσῶς. Indeed compounds with ὑπὲρ are frequent in the Apostle.

6. The Apostle here adverts to one of the principal objections made to his Apostolical pre-eminence by his opponents. Εἰ δὲ καί, 'but though I be even' ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ; on the true sense of which see Notes on Acts iv. 13. 1 Cor. xiv. 16. It may here denote rude and unpolished, and λόγῳ be meant to complete the sense, and to correspond to γνώσει just after. Thus the sense will be, 'My language and address is plain and unpolished.' So the Apostle describes himself at 1 Cor. ii. 1. And similarly Joseph., Ant. ii. 12. 2, calls Moses ἰδιώτης, inasmuch as he had not the gift of eloquence. Also Xenoph. de Venat. xiii. 4, cited by Wetstein, ἐγὼ δὲ ἰδιώτης μέν εἰμι· ἴσως οὖν τοῖς ὀνόμασιν οὐ σεσοφισμένοις λέγω.

— ἀλλ' οὐ] 'yet not.'

— ἀλλ' ἐν παντί, &c.] Meaning, it would seem, 'But I need not enlarge on this point, since I have at all times, and in every way, been fully manifest to you [as having such knowledge].'

τὸν ταπεινῶν ἵνα ὑμεῖς ὑψωθῆτε, ὅτι δωρεὰν τὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ 8 εὐαγγέλιον εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν; [h] Ἄλλας ἐκκλησίας ἐσύλησα, h Acts 20. 33.
λαβὼν ὀψώνιον πρὸς τὴν ὑμῶν διακονίαν· καὶ παρὼν πρὸς infra 12. 13. 1 Thess. 2. 9. 2 Thess. 3. 8.
9 ὑμᾶς καὶ ὑστερηθεὶς, οὐ κατενάρκησα οὐδενός· (τὸ γὰρ Phil. 4. 10, 15.
ὑστέρημά μου προσανεπλήρωσαν οἱ ἀδελφοὶ ἐλθόντες ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας·) καὶ ἐν παντὶ ἀβαρῆ ὑμῖν ἐμαυτὸν ἐτήρησα, 10 καὶ τηρήσω. [i] Ἔστιν ἀλήθεια Χριστοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ, ὅτι ἡ καυ- i Rom. 9 1. 1 Cor. 9. 15.
χησις αὕτη οὐ φραγήσεται εἰς ἐμὲ ἐν τοῖς κλίμασι τῆς 11 Ἀχαΐας! [k] Διατί; ὅτι οὐκ ἀγαπῶ ὑμᾶς; ὁ Θεὸς οἶδεν! k Supra 6. 11. infra 12. 15.
12 [l] Ὃ δὲ ποιῶ, καὶ ποιήσω, ἵνα ἐκκόψω τὴν ἀφορμὴν τῶν θελόν- l 1 Cor. 9. 12.

7. ἢ ἁμαρτίαν—ὑμῖν;] There is here an abruptness of transition, which may be removed by supplying a link in the chain of reasoning, as follows: 'If, then, the matters of objection above adverted to are of no force in showing my unfitness for the Apostolical office, what other ground of complaint have you to allege against me? Have I done wrong in humbling myself?' &c. namely, in abasing himself by labouring with his hands, and exposing himself to all the humiliating circumstances attendant on poverty (see Juvenal, Sat. iii. 153), when he might have claimed the maintenance due to him as an Apostle. Compare also 1 Cor. ix. 7—14. That he had not claimed his right was, some think, alleged by the false teachers as a proof that he did not regard himself as an Apostle. This he answers by giving the true reason for his conduct. There were two other misconstructions of his conduct in this respect: 1. That he would receive nothing from them, because he had no affection for them. This is answered, by saying that he is doing what he does for their spiritual advancement. 2. That this was only a crafty device to catch them. This he notices and replies to at xii. 16. Ἵνα ὑ. ὑψωθῆτε, 'that ye might be exalted in spiritual knowledge and the favour of God.' The words following are explanatory of the preceding; q. d. 'because, or inasmuch as, I have preached to you the Gospel cost free.' The reasons why he did so are stated in vv. 9—12.

8. ἄλλας ἐκκλ. ἐσύλησα.] This is meant to carry the allegation still further; q. d. 'I not only preached the Gospel among you cost free,—but, that I might be enabled to do this, I, in the case of other Churches (as that of Philippi), even abandoned my rule of taking nothing;' thus, as it were, spoiling them; for ἐσύλησα must be taken comparatè. It is probable (as Emmerling supposes) that the expression had been used by his adversaries, with reference to his conduct in receiving money from those Churches. This the Apostle was compelled to do, since his ministerial labours at Corinth had been so great as not to allow him sufficient time to support himself by his trade.

— ὑστερηθεὶς] 'when I was in straits.' Thus in Phil. iv. 12, ὑστερεῖσθαι is opposed to περισσεύειν. Οὐ κατενάρκ. οὐδ., 'I was no encumbrance to you;' literally, 'I did not lie a dead weight upon you;' from κατὰ, down, and ναρκὴ, torpor; so called from a fish (the torpedo, or electric eel), possessing the power of affecting any one with torpor by the touch; see Humboldt's Travels in South America. Κατεν., Jerome says, is a Cilicism for κατεβάρησα. And as he testifies that καταν. was in use in Cilicia, it might be such. But as ἀποναρκάω occurs in Plutarch, so it is probable that both that and καταν. were words of the common Greek dialect. On the thing itself see Phil. iv. 15.

9. ἀβαρῆ] 'unburthensome.' A word of rare occurrence, of which two examples are adduced by Wetstein from later Greek writers: the most apposite of them is an inscription at Berenice: Οὐ μόνον δὲ ἐν τούτοις ἀβαρῆ ἑαυτὸν παρέσχηται, where I conjecture παρέχεται.

— καὶ τηρήσω] q. d. 'I say not this in order that I may henceforth receive of you' (comp. ver. 12, and 1 Cor. ix. 15). Thus meaning to intimate, that he could not so far rely on their good dispositions as to take aught from them. In which view, it is finely remarked by Diotogenes ap. Stobæum, ἀβαρέα δεῖ ἦμεν ποτὶ πάντας ἀνθρώπους· μάλιστα δὲ ποτὶ τοὺς μήονας καὶ καταδεεστέρους ταῖς ψυχαῖς.

10. This the Apostle confirms with a strong asseveration (like that at Rom. ix. 1), bearing affinity to an oath; since it appeals to Christ for the truth of what is said. The sense may be thus expressed: 'The truth of it is (i. e. Let the truth in Christ be thought to be) in me, as I shall do what I protest, when I say this,' &c. The Commentators have failed to discover the true nature of the idiom, because they did not see that ὅτι has here the same force as when in the Sept. it follows a formula jurandi,—such as ζῇ Κύριος, thus corresponding to the Hebr. כִּי. Ἡ καύχ. αὕτη signifies, 'this cause of boasting,' as καύχημα in a kindred passage at 1 Cor. ix. 16. Οὐ φραγ., 'shall not be silenced,' or made void; i. e. by being shown to be groundless. There is an allusion to the use of φράσσω when said of the mouth; as in Rom. iii. 19, ἵνα πᾶν στόμα φραγῇ.

The expression εἰς ἐμὲ ('in my case') is not (as the Commentators imagine) simply put for μου, but is more significant; the expression being, I conceive, emphatic, and meant with allusion to the false teachers, who were, as appears from ver. 20, very burdensome to the Corinthians.

11. διατί;] 'Why is it that I do so?' The answer in the interrogative implies a strong negation, 'No! I take God to witness it is not so!' The Apostle does not tell them what was his reason for so doing, but leaves that to be inferred from what follows.

12. ὃ δὲ ποιῶ, καὶ ποιήσω, &c.] Meaning, των ἀφορμὴν, ἵνα ἐν ᾧ καυχῶνται, εὑρεθῶσι καθὼς καὶ

m Acts 15. 24. ἡμεῖς. [m] Οἱ γὰρ τοιοῦτοι ψευδαπόστολοι, ἐργάται δόλιοι, 13 Gal. 1. 7. Phil. 3. 2. μετασχηματιζόμενοι εἰς ἀποστόλους Χριστοῦ. Καὶ οὐ 14 θαυμαστόν· αὐτὸς γὰρ ὁ Σατανᾶς μετασχηματίζεται εἰς n Phil. 3. 19. ἄγγελον φωτός· [n] οὐ μέγα οὖν, εἰ καὶ οἱ διάκονοι αὐτοῦ 15 μετασχηματίζονται ὡς διάκονοι δικαιοσύνης. ὧν τὸ τέλος o Infra 12. 6, 11. ἔσται κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτῶν. [o] Πάλιν λέγω· μή τις με 16 δόξῃ ἄφρονα εἶναι· εἰ δὲ μή γε, κἂν ὡς ἄφρονα δέξασθέ p Supra 9. 4. με, ἵνα μικρόν τι κἀγὼ καυχήσωμαι. [p] Ὃ λαλῶ, οὐ λαλῶ 17
q Supra 10. 13. κατὰ Κύριον, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐν ἀφροσύνῃ, ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ ὑποinfra 12. 6. Phil. 3. 3, 4. στάσει τῆς καυχήσεως. [q] Ἐπεὶ πολλοὶ καυχῶνται κατὰ τὴν 18
r 1 Cor. 4. 10. σάρκα, κἀγὼ καυχήσομαι. [r] Ἡδέως γὰρ ἀνέχεσθε τῶν ἀφρό- 19

'But what I do I will also continue to do, that I may thereby cut off an occasion (namely, of taking maintenance from you) from those who wish for it, in order that wherein they boast themselves, they may be found to be even as we;' i. e. to really take nothing; compare Gal. v. 13. After ἵνα ἐκκόψω τὴν ἀφορμὴν some eminent Commentators supply εἰς ἐμέ. This, however, is little agreeable to the context. Of the phrase ἀφορμὴν ἐκκόπτειν an example occurs in Hierocles. And so we have præcidere causam in Terence.

13. οἱ γὰρ τοιοῦτοι ψευδ.] scil. εἰσι. The γὰρ has reference to what is implied in the preceding clause, that they are in reality different from what they pretend to be; q. d. '[really, I say, and not pretendingly;] for such are not what they seem, they are false Apostles.' Ἐργάται should be rendered, not workers, but workmen; i. e. ministers. The word is used in this sense at Matt. ix. 37. Phil. iii. 2. 2 Tim. ii. 15. They are called δόλιοι, as pretending to that disinterestedness which they did not possess.

14. καὶ οὐ θαυμαστόν· αὐτὸς γὰρ, &c.] Here we have, as Calvin observes, an argumentum à majori ad minus; q. d. 'If Satan, the worst of all, transform himself, &c., what shall his ministers not do? Satan, we know, did this,' &c. Namely, when he tempted Eve, and probably our Lord in the wilderness: though perhaps not referring to any single instance, but containing a general description of the customary devices of Satan, who assumes an appearance of the purest virtue to bring about his designs.

With the expression οὐ θαυμαστὸν compare Plut. de Educ. § 18, φίλων ἁμαρτήματα φέρομεν· τί θαυμαστὸν εἰ τέκνων;

15. μετασχηματίζονται.] We have here a significatio prægnans, 'are changed and become.' Δικ., 'truth and virtue,' as opposed to deceit, falsehood, and iniquity in general. Τέλος, 'final punishment,' as in Rom. vi. 21.

16. Having stated broadly the true character of his opponents, the Apostle returns to his subject by the formula πάλιν λέγω; which does not import that he is going to say no more than he had said before, but only that he returns to the same subject, which had been interpreted by what was said of the false teachers. The expression, however, which he employs is also, like the former one, of a softening kind, deprecating censure for venturing on self-praise. Thus the sense is, 'Let no one account me a fool, or vain-glorious person, for this self-praise.' Why, the Apostle does not here say; but he adverts to it at ver. 11 of the next Chapter. He is induced to thus boast, since the importance of the occasion demands it of him, and because, as he alleges at xii. 6, he says no more than the truth.

— εἰ δὲ μή γε.] 'But if ye will not [acquit me of this charge].' Κἂν ὡς ἄφ. δέξ. με, 'why, then, even regard me as a vain-glorious person;' i. e. suffer me to be such. The expression δέξ. ὡς ἄφρ. is synonymous with ἀνέχεσθαι ἀφρ. at vv. 1. 19, of which Elsner adduces an example from Plutarch. Κἂν is elliptical for δέχεσθέ με, καὶ ἐὰν δέχησθε ὡς ἄφρ. The next words, ἵνα κἀγὼ μικ. τι καυχ. should be rendered, 'in order that I, too [as well as the false teachers], may boast myself a little.' Thus adroitly opening the way to the mention of his own labours and sufferings.

17. ὃ λαλῶ—καυχήσεως.] Notwithstanding the various attempts which have been made to elicit a satisfactory sense from this passage, the only effectual mode of removing the difficulty is to suppose the Apostle is here speaking not seriously, but (as Sclater, Beza, Vorstius, and Abp. Newcome are agreed) per concessionem. This is confirmed by the ὡς at ὡς ἐν ἀφρ. The sense may be thus expressed: 'Be it so, if you please, that what I am going to speak, I speak not [as I profess to do] according to the Lord (i. e. by inspiration, or suitably to the purposes of his religion), but speak it, as it were, in folly, in the confidence of boasting.' So Bp. Hall paraphrases, 'I am content it should seem as spoken in a certain human, and, as you may construe it, vain and fond manner, and not as for the Lord.'

— ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ ὑποστάσει τ. κ.] This is put for ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει, τουτέστι ἐν τῇ καυχήσει ταύτῃ. On the sense of the expression ὑποστ. καυχ. see Note supra ix. 4.

18. κατὰ τὴν σάρκα] i. e. 'for their external advantages,' as learning, eloquence, birth, rank, &c. See Note on x. 3. The argument here is popular.

19. ἡδέως γὰρ ἀνέχ.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause understood, q. d. '[I may be permitted to do this;] for ye,' &c. Ἀνέχ., &c., 'ye bear patiently with foolish persons, since ye yourselves are wise;' i. e., as Abp. Newcome paraphrases, 20 νων, φρόνιμοι ὄντες. [r] ἀνέχεσθε γὰρ, εἴ τις ὑμᾶς καταδου- r Gal. 2. 4. & 4. 9.

λοῖ, εἴ τις κατεσθίει, εἴ τις λαμβάνει, εἴ τις ἐπαίρεται, 21 εἴ τις ὑμᾶς εἰς πρόσωπον δέρει. [s] Κατὰ ἀτιμίαν λέγω, ὡς s Phil. 3. 4, 5.
ὅτι ἡμεῖς ἠσθενήσαμεν· ἐν ᾧ δ' ἄν τις τολμᾷ, (ἐν ἀφρο-22 σύνῃ λέγω,) τολμῶ κἀγώ. [t] Ἑβραῖοί εἰσι; κἀγώ· Ἰσραηλῖ- t Acts 22. 3. Rom. 11. 1.
23 ταί εἰσι; κἀγώ· σπέρμα Ἀβραάμ εἰσι; κἀγώ· [u] διάκονοι u Supra 6. 4, 5.
Χριστοῦ εἰσι; (παραφρονῶν λαλῶ) ὑπὲρ ἐγώ· ἐν κόποις Acts 9. 16. & 21. 11. 1 Cor. 15.
περισσοτέρως, ἐν πληγαῖς ὑπερβαλλόντως, ἐν φυλακαῖς 10, 31.
24 περισσοτέρως, ἐν θανάτοις πολλάκις· ([x] ὑπὸ Ἰουδαίων πεν- x Deut. 25. 3.
25 τάκις τεσσαράκοντα παρὰ μίαν ἔλαβον, [y] τρὶς ἐῤῥαβδίσθην, y Acts 16. 22. & 14. 19.
ἅπαξ ἐλιθάσθην, τρὶς ἐναυάγησα, νυχθήμερον ἐν τῷ βυθῷ z Acts 9. 23. & 14. 5. & 17. 5.
26 πεποίηκα·) [z] ὁδοιπορίαις πολλάκις· κινδύνοις ποταμῶν, κιν- & 19. 28. & 20. 3.

'for your superior wisdom enables you to bear with the inconsideration of others.'

20. γὰρ] exempli gratiâ. The words following are intended to place the faults of the false teachers in the strongest point of view. They must not, however, be too much pressed on; nor explained with reference to any hypothesis respecting the kind of persons who were then false teachers. The words may be freely rendered, with Abp. Newcome, 'if a man subject you to his imperious will, exact large pay, receive private gifts besides, proudly exalt himself over you, treat you contumeliously in the highest degree.' Καταδ. denotes a domineering spirit, shown, we may suppose, chiefly in the imposition of external forms; see Gal. ii. 4. Εἰς πρόσωπον δέρει is plainly a figurative phrase, to denote insulting by contumelious treatment. Κατεσθίει and λαμβάνει have been variously interpreted. Many eminent Commentators understand the former term of receiving a large stipend; and the latter, of taking private gifts. It would rather seem that λαμβ. is to be taken of receiving a stipend, and κατεσθ. of exacting presents of money or goods, and also living at their tables; see Note supra vii. 2. Perhaps, however, the two expressions are meant to be taken together, as descriptive of the rapacious spirit by which those teachers miserably burthened their devotees, and devoured their substance. Ἀνέχεσθαι here signifies to put up with, as in Josephus, p. 1172. 12 (Huds.), ἁρπαζόμενοι ἀνέχεσθε. See Note on Acts xx. 29.

21. κατὰ ἀτιμ. λέγω—ἠσθεν.] The sense of these words (which is obscure, and has been variously traced) seems to be as follows: 'I speak with reference to the reproaches with which I am assailed, as if I really were the insignificant person I am represented to be; but I am in truth far superior to my opponents, whether in regard to my external qualifications or my ministerial labours.' So ὡς ὅτι is used supra v. 19, and 2 Thess. ii. 2.

— ἐν ᾧ δ' ἄν τις τολμᾷ.] Supply καυχᾶσθαι, to be taken from the preceding καυχήσομαι. Or render, 'wherein any one may be proud of aught.' Similarly Phil. iii. 4. This is softened by the qualifying insertion ἐν ἀφρ. λέγω, which is equivalent to παραφρονῶν λαλῶ at ver. 23.

22. Ἑβραῖοι—Ἰσραηλῖται.] Carpzov and Rosenmuller remark on the distinction here preserved between Hebrews and Israelites; the former being properly a religious, the latter a national designation. Paul's enemies, perhaps, had represented him as a mere Jewish proselyte. So he says in Phil. iii. 5, that he is Ἑβρ. ἐξ Ἑβραίων, i. e. a Hebrew by both parents, and consequently a genuine one. On Ἰσρ. compare Rom. ix. 4.

23. παραφρονῶν λαλῶ.] Here παραφ signifies more than ἀφρ., and should be rendered 'I speak as a very fool;' i. e. an absolute boaster. So Aristoph. Plut. v. 2, uses παραφρονεῖν. Ὑπὲρ, like some other prepositions (see Kypke) is used as an adverb for πλέον. Θανάτοις; meaning extreme perils of death. So Plutarch, Romul. § 24, λοιμὸς θανάτους μὲν αἰφνιδίους ἀνθρώποις ἄνευ νόσων ἐπιφέρων; see supra i. 9, 10. These labours and tribulations are exemplified in the next two verses.

24. τεσσ. παρὰ μίαν.] Those were all that they could inflict; see Deut. xxv. 3. And as the whip was formed of three cords, and every stroke was allowed to count for three stripes, the number of strokes never exceeded thirteen, which made 39 stripes.

25. τρὶς ἐῤῥαβδ.] viz. by the Gentiles; for it was a Roman punishment. One instance only is recorded, that at Philippi, Acts xvi. 22. Ἅπαξ ἐλιθ. viz. at Lystra, Acts xiv. 19.

— τρὶς ἐναυάγ.] None of these shipwrecks are recorded in the Acts; for that at Acts xxvii. took place later, and must have been the fourth. Νυχθήμερον, i. e. about 24 hours. This word is very rare; but some examples are adduced.

— τῷ βυθῷ] 'the sea;' as we say, the deep: a signification occurring in Isaiah xliv. 27, and Ælian, H. An. viii. 8. 7, ἀθέατον νήχεσθαι ἐν βυθῷ. I would compare a similar passage in Lycoph. 753, Πόντου δ' ἄϋπνος ἐνσαρούμενος μυχοῖς. The other senses assigned by some Commentators to βυθῷ, namely, a well, or a prison, are (as Bp. Middleton observes) inconsistent with the Article. There is evidently a reference to some shipwreck not recorded in the Acts of the Apostles.

— πεποίηκα] 'I have passed,' as in Acts xx. 3. And so the Hebr. עשה and Latin facio. On the mode in which this took place, the Commentators variously speculate. One thing is certain, that it cannot be (as some suppose) that Paul δύνοις λῃστῶν· κινδύνοις ἐκ γένους, κινδύνοις ἐξ ἐθνῶν· κινδύνοις ἐν πόλει, κινδύνοις ἐν ἐρημίᾳ, κινδύνοις ἐν θαλάσσῃ, a 2 Thess. 3. 8. supra 6. 5. 1 Cor. 4. 11. κινδύνοις ἐν ψευδαδέλφοις· [a] ἐν κόπῳ καὶ μόχθῳ, ἐν ἀγρυπ- 27

νίαις πολλάκις, ἐν λιμῷ καὶ δίψει, ἐν νηστείαις πολλάκις, ἐν b Acts 20. 18, &c. Rom. 1. 14. ψύχει καὶ γυμνότητι· [b] χωρὶς τῶν παρεκτὸς, ἡ ἐπισύστα- 28 σίς μου ἡ καθʼ ἡμέραν, ἡ μέριμνα πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν.
c 1 Cor. 9. 22. Τίς ἀσθενεῖ, καὶ οὐκ ἀσθενῶ; [c] τίς σκανδαλίζεται, καὶ οὐκ 29 d Infra 12. 5. & 9. 10. ἐγὼ πυροῦμαι; [d] Εἰ καυχᾶσθαι δεῖ, τὰ τῆς ἀσθενείας μου 30 merely passed the time on a rock; for that is inconsistent with ἐν τῷ βυθῷ, which requires some such sense as ἔχοντες (i. e. ὄντες) κυμάτων ἐν ἀγκάλαις in Aristoph. Ran. 704. Now there would be no difficulty in supposing him to have been miraculously supported; but as the Almighty usually works by second causes, it is better to suppose, with Theodoret and others of the best Commentators, that he was supported on some fragment of the wreck, which is very consistent with his being ἐν τῷ βυθῷ.

26. ὁδοιπ. πολλάκις—λῃστῶν.] The Apostle, I conceive, added the second and third terms to exemplify what is expressed in the first. For to the great hardships which he would have to undergo in his long journeyings, were to be added the dangers to which he was thereby exposed, both in crossing, and sometimes making his passage along, broad and deep rivers, in petty boats; and also the perils from robbers; with whom, at that time, even the most thickly inhabited and civilized parts of the world swarmed. The Genit. here is dependent upon ἀπὸ understood. Ἐκ γένους scil. ἐμοῦ (see Acts ix. 23. Gal. i. 14). Their blind bigotry every where persecuted him with unrelenting malice. Ἐν πόλει is to be taken generically for ἐν πόλεσι. It is meant that dangers met him wherever he turned himself, whether in the busy haunts of men, or in the solitudes of the desert, or in the bosom of the mighty deep. Those in the cities would be from the bigots, both Jewish and Gentile; see Acts xvii. 5. xix. 28. By those in the deserts may be understood those from the excessive heat or drought (which sometimes has destroyed great multitudes at once), wild beasts, or from the ambushes of the bigots, or from the attacks of robbers. And as κινδ. ἐν θαλάσσῃ comes immediately after the words denoting the attacks of cutthroats or robbers, we may suppose it to advert to the dangers there of assassins (see Acts xx. 3) or of pirates. By ψευδαδ. are chiefly meant pretended Christians, whether Jews or Gentiles; generally, perhaps, the former, who feigned to be converted, in order to act as spies; but partly Judaizing Christians may be meant. See Gal. ii. 4.

27. ἐν κόπῳ, &c.] To perils of life, and plots against his personal safety, the Apostle now adds those less formidable, but scarcely more tolerable, because continual, inflictions to be endured in the course of his almost perpetual and most wearisome journeyings, and even his more settled sojournings. Compare supra vi. 4, 5.

28. χωρὶς τῶν παρ.] Some eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, take this to mean, 'besides other things, which I have omitted;' while others, scarcely less so (as Calvin, Beza, Erasmus, Piscator, Schleusner, and Schmid), explain, 'things not of the regular routine of my office and labours.' Others, again (as E.V., Wakefield, and Abp. Newcome), understand it of 'the external troubles already mentioned;' q. d. 'besides such external inconveniences as I have recounted.' This Wetstein supports from a passage of an anonymous philosopher; but not successfully, since the expression there is not παρεκτὸς, but ἐκτός. As to the first-mentioned interpretation, it is open to the objection, that there is scarcely any thing that might not be supposed to be included in the foregoing particulars. And, indeed, the sense arising is frigid, and little agreeable to the context; not to say that this signification of παρεκτὸς is destitute of proof. Moreover, it would require the words to be taken, with the preceding, thus: καὶ γυμνότητι, χωρὶς τῶν παρεκτός; which would make it very difficult to assign to the words following any tolerable sense. The second interpretation is, on all accounts, entitled to the preference; it being founded on the usual sense of παρεκτὸς, and enabling us to assign a satisfactory meaning to the words following, ἡ ἐπισύστασις, &c.

There is at ἡ ἐπισ. (which here means 'the concourse of perplexing circumstances') an ellipsis of ἐστι; and ἡ μέριμνα πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλ. is in apposition with, and explanatory of, the preceding; q. d. 'There is that crowd of labours and anxieties which perpetually beset me,—the care of all the Churches.' These various cares, one after another, in concourse, must have pressed heavily on the Apostle, so that to him may be applied the words of the Greek tragedian (Eumen. 129), μέριμναν οὔποτ' ἐκλιπὼν πόνου. By πασῶν ἐκκλ. are meant all the churches he had planted; and, indeed, all the churches among the Gentiles, of which, as Apostle of the Gentiles, he might be said to have the care. See Col. ii. 1.

29. τίς ἀσθενεῖ, &c.] This is, I conceive, meant to illustrate the μέριμνα preceding, and show the interest he took in all the Churches. Ἀσθ. may, with most Commentators, be understood of weakness in the faith, and πυρ., of anxiety to recover a sinning brother. Thus the sense will be: 'Who among my converts is weak in faith, and I am not also weak?' i. e. as compliant to his weakness, as if I myself were weak (see Rom. xii. 15, and 1 Cor. ix. 22); 'who is perverted in his Christian principles, or erring in Christian practice, and I burn not with grief and zeal to recover him?' The expression σκανδαλ. is meant to designate the effect of the preceding ἀσθενεῖ, to which it corresponds. Thus the two terms are united in Rom. xiv. 21.

30. εἰ καυχ. δεῖ, &c.] 'If, then, I must needs boast (see ver. 18), [as I am compelled to do,] I will boast of' τὰ τῆς ἀσθ. (for τὰς ἀσθενείας),

31 καυχήσομαι. [e] Ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ
Χριστοῦ οἶδεν, (ὁ ὢν εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας,) ὅτι οὐ
32 ψεύδομαι. [f] Ἐν Δαμασκῷ ὁ ἐθνάρχης Ἀρέτα τοῦ βασιλέως 33 ἐφρούρει τὴν Δαμασκηνῶν πόλιν, πιάσαι με θέλων· καὶ διὰ θυρίδος ἐν σαργάνῃ ἐχαλάσθην διὰ τοῦ τείχους, καὶ ἐξέ-1 φυγον τὰς χεῖρας αὐτοῦ. XII. Καυχᾶσθαι δὴ οὐ συμφέρει μοι· ἐλεύσομαι γὰρ εἰς ὀπτασίας καὶ ἀποκαλύψεις 2 Κυρίου. [a] Οἶδα ἄνθρωπον ἐν Χριστῷ, πρὸ ἐτῶν δεκατεσσάρων· (εἴτε ἐν σώματι, οὐκ οἶδα· εἴτε ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματος, e Rom. 1. 9. & 9. 1. supra 1. 23. Gal. 1. 20. Phil. 1. 8. 1 Thess. 2. 5.

f Acts 9. 24, 25.
a Acts 9. 3. & 22. 17. 1 Cor. 15. 8.

'my sufferings and tribulations.' See Rom. viii. 26. 2 Cor. xii. 5, et al.

31. ὁ Θεὸς—ὅτι οὐ ψεύδ.] I would not, with some, refer this to what follows; but, with others, to what precedes; namely, the affecting detail of his various sufferings for the Gospel's sake, the truth of which he avers by the present solemn asseveration.

32, 33. This circumstance (which Doddridge thinks took place not when he was first converted, but when he had preached about three years in Arabia) is subjoined to the foregoing, quasi κατ' ἐπίμετρον. It is related in Acts ix. 20—25. With respect to the word σαργάνη, it may be observed that it is derived, not from σάττω, but from the Chald. סרגן, from סרג, to twist. The Gr. etymologist explains σαργάναι by πλέγματα γυργαθώδη; see more in Rec. Syn., from which it appears that it is uncertain whether the word here signifies a large hamper of wicker work, or a large stiff fishing-net of braided cords. Considering the σπυρίδι of St. Luke, the former is most probably what is meant.

But to advert to a seeming discrepancy in the accounts of St. Luke and St. Paul as to the escape in question. In the former it is said that the Apostle was let down διὰ τοῦ τείχους, 'by the wall;' i. e., as Doddridge explains, by the side of it, which seems not to agree with the account of St. Paul; yet there is no discrepancy in the original; for διὰ may mean through the wall; i. e. through an aperture of the wall, a loop-hole, embrasure, or window; see the Note on Acts xx. 9. Such is the sense of διὰ τείχους in St. Luke; but St. Paul makes the thing clearer by using both διὰ τοῦ τείχους, and διὰ θυρίδος.

XII. The Apostle now proceeds to treat of other matters whereof he might boast, but which he kept apart from the former, as things of another and very superior nature; namely, the exalted Supernatural Gifts he enjoyed, and the Revelations from Heaven which had been vouchsafed to him; such as were proper to be mentioned on this occasion, as fully establishing his claim to a high superiority above his opponents and depreciators, the false Apostles. Yet, with the same prudence as elsewhere, St. Paul introduces this fresh cause for boasting with an expression meant to deprecate censure.

1. As to the varr. lect. δὲ for δὴ, and the omission of the γὰρ (approved by Griesbach and Scholz), these (as I have shown in Rec. Syn.) are evidently mere emendations of the ancient Critics of the Alexandrian School; and the real and complete sense is as follows: 'I know, indeed, that it is unbecoming in me to boast; i. e. κατὰ σάρκα (see xi. 18), [but I am compelled to do so, and I have causes enow to justify me,] for, to proceed, as I shall now do, to visions and revelations from the Lord,' &c. Equally remarkable omissions of clauses occur elsewhere in St. Paul's writings. The terms ὀπτ. and ἀποκαλύψεις are not, as some imagine, synonymous. The latter is a stronger term than the former. And Emmerling observes, that the term ὅραμα at Acts xvi. 9 unites the senses included in both these terms. Ὀπτασία, says Abp. Newcome, 'is an appearance presented to the mind of a person sleeping or waking; ἀποκάλυψ. is a suggestion of a truth or fact by the Spirit of God.' Surely, however, the use of ὀπτ. in the New Test. requires the above definition to have 'supernaturally' prefixed to 'presented.' As far as it was presented to any one awake, it might be called a trance; for, though awake, the external senses of the person were bound up; see Slade and Bp. Lowth on Isaiah i. 1. The plural in ὀπτ. is by most recent Commentators supposed to be taken generically; see Win. Gr. § 21. 3, Note 1. But St. Paul had probably many visions.

2. ἄνθρωπον ἐν Χρ.] scil. ὄντα. The best Commentators are agreed that this expression signifies a disciple or servant of Christ (as supra v. 17); the Apostle thus speaking of himself in the third person through modesty, as St. John, in his Gospel, xviii. 15. xix. 35. That the Apostle here means himself, appears from vv. 6, 7.

— πρὸ ἐτῶν δεκ.] On the year meant by the Apostle, the Commentators are not agreed. It will depend on the date assigned to this Epistle, which itself depends on that of the first Epistle.

— εἴτε ἐν—οὐκ οἶδα.] The Commentators explain this to mean, that, during the rapture in question, the Apostle lost all consciousness of any thing around him (as in the case of Peter's trance, Acts x. 9); and that his outward senses were so entirely closed, (the whole perception being by the powers of the mind,) that he could not say whether his soul was then in the body, or removed from it. It is, however, shrewdly remarked by Doddridge, that, 'what the presence of an immaterial soul in a body can be, distinct from the capacity of perceiving by it and acting upon it, we have yet to learn.' But whatever may be the difficulty, it must by no means be removed in the summary way adopted by some recent Commentators; i. e. by supposing the Apostle only to mean, that 'the things were represented in so lively a manner, as to leave it doubtful whether they had not been really seen and heard;

οὐκ οἶδα· ὁ Θεὸς οἶδεν·) ἁρπαγέντα τὸν τοιοῦτον ἕως τρί[b] Luke 23. 43. του οὐρανοῦ. [b] Καὶ οἶδα τὸν τοιοῦτον ἄνθρωπον· (εἴτε ἐν 3 σώματι, εἴτε ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματος, οὐκ οἶδα· ὁ Θεὸς οἶδεν·) ὅτι ἡρπάγη εἰς τὸν παράδεισον, καὶ ἤκουσεν ἄῤῥητα ῥήματα, 4 [c] Supra 11. 30. ἃ οὐκ ἐξὸν ἀνθρώπῳ λαλῆσαι. [c] Ὑπὲρ τοῦ τοιούτου καυχή- 5 σομαι· ὑπὲρ δὲ ἐμαυτοῦ οὐ καυχήσομαι, εἰ μὴ ἐν ταῖς ἀσθε-[d] Supra 10. 8. & 11. 16. νείαις μου. [d] Ἐὰν γὰρ θελήσω καυχήσασθαι, οὐκ ἔσομαι 6 ἄφρων· ἀλήθειαν γὰρ ἐρῶ· φείδομαι δὲ, μή τις εἰς ἐμὲ λογί-σηται ὑπὲρ ὃ βλέπει με, ἢ ἀκούει τι ἐξ ἐμοῦ.
[e] Job 2. 6. [e] Καὶ τῇ ὑπερβολῇ τῶν ἀποκαλύψεων ἵνα μὴ ὑπεραί- 7 ρωμαι, ἐδόθη μοι σκόλοψ τῇ σαρκὶ, ἄγγελος Σατᾶν, ἵνα that he was quasi raptus extra se,' &c. By retaining the natural sense, though confessing the difficulty, we, at least, are enabled (with Whitby) to 'regard this as a proof of St. Paul's belief that the soul may have perception when out of the body, and consequently have an independent existence.'

— ἁρπαγέντα — ἕως τρίτου οὐρ.] This is accommodated to the language of the Jews of that age, who held that there were three heavens: 1. the region of the atmosphere; 2. the sidereal, or place of the stars; 3. the heaven properly so called, the abode of God and the angels. The philological Commentators have failed to remark that this passage of the Apostle was had in view by the author of the Philopatris, in Lucian iii. 537, fin., where it is said of Paul, Γαλιλαῖος ἀναφαλαντίας ἐπίῤῥινος, ἐς τρίτον οὐρανὸν ἀεροβατήσας καὶ τὰ κάλλιστα ἐκμεμαθηκώς. The writer, too, seems to have had in mind Aristoph. Nub. 225, where Socrates says, ἀεροβατῶ καὶ περιφρονῶ τὸν ἥλιον.

4. ἡρπάγη εἰς τὸν παρ.] It is debated whether this rapture, or vision, be the same as the last, or another. Most of the best modern Commentators are of the former opinion; while the ancients and several moderns (as Grotius, Bp. Bull, Whitby, Doddridge, and Rosenmuller) are of the latter; understanding by the παράδ. the place of departed souls. See Note on Luke xxiii. 43. Either may, in a certain sense, be true.

— ἄῤῥητα ῥήματα.] Ἄῤῥητα may signify either what cannot be uttered, or what ought not to be uttered. If the latter sense be the true one, the words following, ἃ οὐκ ἐξὸν, &c. are explanatory of the preceding; and yet ἄῤῥητα, in that sense, required no explanation, since it was the common signification of the word; as, for instance, when applied to the יהוה, or the Tetragrammaton, called the ἄῤῥητον ὄνομα. The former signification deserves the preference, and the sense may be, ineffably, inexpressibly sublime, such as no human intellect could comprehend, much less utter, 'verba (to use the words of Horace,) sacro digna silentio.'

The words following, ἃ οὐκ ἐξὸν ἀνθρώπῳ λαλῆσαι, signify, 'and which [if they were capable of being expressed,] it would not be lawful for me to communicate;' and that (Schoettg. observes) 'because the Apostle had not the authority to declare the mysteries revealed unto him, these having been not so much for the sake of the Church as for himself, for the strengthening of his own faith, and the alleviation of his sufferings.'

5. καυχ.] The sense is, 'I may and will boast.' Ἀσθεν., afflictions, as in xi. 30.

6. The sense is here only to be fully discerned by tracing the connexion with the preceding words. Taking ὑπὲρ ἐμαυτοῦ—μου from what precedes, we may express the full sense as follows: 'As to myself, I will boast of nothing but my weaknesses and afflictions, [though I could boast of far more. Of these I will not speak in my own name, though I might do so;] for if I should choose to boast of them, I should not be foolish (i. e. it would not be foolish boasting), since I should only tell the truth; but I forbear to do it, lest any one should think of me beyond what he seeth me to be, or heareth of me;' namely (as Abp. Newcome expresses it), 'desiring no other opinion of me than what is suggested by my miracles which you have seen, and my inspired doctrines which you have heard.' To have claimed merit for what had not, and could not fall under the observation of men, would have been too much like the false apostles.

7. ἐδόθη μοι σκόλοψ τῇ σ.] This is mentioned, in some measure, to lessen the invidia, which the above disclosure of his high privileges might excite. Ἐδόθη signifies (by a popular idiom) 'was inflicted.' On the subject of this σκόλοψ τῇ σαρκὶ much difference of opinion exists. The best Commentators, however, are, with reason, agreed that the word must be taken in the natural sense,—as denoting some very painful disorder or mortifying infirmity; grievous afflictions being, in all languages, expressed by metaphors taken from the piercing of the flesh by thorns or splinters. Various acute disorders have been supposed to be meant, as the head-ache, the ear-ache, the stone-and-gravel. But it would rather seem that some chronical distemper or infirmity is meant, and probably such as was exceedingly mortifying (by exposing him to the ridicule of the multitude) as well as painful, otherwise the Apostle would scarcely have felt such anxiety to have it removed. No radical or natural infirmity can be meant, since such could not be imputed to the instrumentality of Satan; not to say that to have prayed for the removal of such, might have savoured of presumption. The most probable conjecture (for we can rise no higher) is that of Bps. Bull and Sherlock, Whitby, Benson, Doddridge, Macknight, and Rosenmul., that it was a paralytic and hypochondriac affection

8 με κολαφίζῃ, ἵνα μὴ ὑπεραίρωμαι. Ὑπὲρ τούτου τρὶς τὸν 9 Κύριον παρεκάλεσα, ἵνα ἀποστῇ ἀπ' ἐμοῦ· [f] καὶ εἴρηκέ μοι· f Phil. 4. 13 Col. 1. 11.
"Ἀρκεῖ σοι ἡ χάρις μου· ἡ γὰρ δύναμίς μου ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ τελειοῦται." Ἥδιστα οὖν μᾶλλον καυχήσομαι ἐν ταῖς ἀσθενείαις μου, ἵνα ἐπισκηνώσῃ ἐπ' ἐμὲ ἡ δύναμις τοῦ Χριστοῦ.
10 Διὸ εὐδοκῶ ἐν ἀσθενείαις, ἐν ὕβρεσιν, ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν διωγμοῖς, ἐν στενοχωρίαις ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ· ὅταν γὰρ ἀσθενῶ, 11 τότε δυνατός εἰμι. [g] Γέγονα ἄφρων [καυχώμενος]· ὑμεῖς g Supra 11. 1, 16, 17. 1 Cor. 15. 8, 9, 10.
με ἠναγκάσατε. ἐγὼ γὰρ ὤφειλον ὑφ' ὑμῶν συνίστασθαι· οὐδὲν γὰρ ὑστέρησα τῶν ὑπερλίαν ἀποστόλων, εἰ καὶ οὐδέν

(occasioned by the high excitement of the revelations on his frame), which occasioned a distortion of countenance, and many other distressing effects, which would much tend to impede his usefulness. This disorder might be called ἄγγελος Σατᾶν, as being partly inflicted by Satan. And, indeed, there seems an allusion to the Heb. מלאך, which is properly a past participle of the obsolete verb (at least not occurring in the Old Test.) לאך, to send, like legatus in Latin.

8. παρεκάλεσα] 'I besought.' Of this sense (exceedingly rare) I have noted one (and only one) example, in Joseph. Bell. i. 23. 5, τῆς γνώμης τὸν Θεὸν σύμψηφον—παρακαλῶ γενέσθαι. By τὸν Κύριον is (appears from the next verse) to be understood Christ. See Whitby, Macknight, and Smith's Scrip. Test., vol. ii. p. 229. iii. 251, who rightly notice this as an example of prayer to Christ, and consequently a proof of the Divinity of Christ. In τρὶς, the Commentators remark, we have a certain for an uncertain but large number, to signify oftentimes. So Eurip. Hippol. 46, μηδεὶς μάταιον εἰς τρὶς εὔξασθαι Θεῷ, and Job xxxiii. 29, which I would render, 'so all these things doth God work with man unto three times,' namely, by divinely sent disorders, by nocturnal visions, and by divine messengers. See supra from v. 15. In the Version of Symmachus, for δὶς τρὶς read εἰς τρίς. Our common translation oftentimes is rather an interpretation than a version, and that, I apprehend, an erroneous one. See Rosenmuller in loc.

9. εἴρηκέ μοι.] Namely, either by vision or by the Bath Kol, mentioned in 1 Kings xix. 12. Ἀρκεῖ σοι. We have here, Bengel remarks, benignissima repulsa. Render, 'is sufficient for thy help,' implying a promise of support, as supra ix. 8, 'God is able to make all grace abound to you.' Thus ἡ χάρις μου signifies the gracious support of God, both internally and externally. Τελειοῦται, 'plenius sese exserit,' shows itself most perfectly genuine. Ἐν ἀσθ., i. e. in the weakness of the instruments I employ.

— ἥδιστα οὖν—ἀσθ. μου.] There is some appearance of incongruity between ἥδιστα and καυχ.; ἥδιστα rather requiring ὑποίσομεν, as in 2 Mac. ii. 28, ἡδέως τὴν κακοπάθειαν ὑποίσομεν. This, however, may be removed by supposing in καυχ. a significatio prægnans, thus: 'Most willingly, therefore, will I bear with, nay, rather rejoice in and boast over my infirmities [than be discouraged under them].' Ἵνα ἐπισκηνώσῃ—Χρ., 'that the power of Christ may rest upon me [to strengthen and support me].'

10. εὐδοκῶ.] 'I am well pleased,' 'complaceo mihi.' Ὕβρεσιν, 'contumelies, insults.' In ἀσθενείαις we have a general term, which is then followed by particular ones, added by way of example. See Note on 2 Cor. vi. 4. Ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ belongs to all of these.

— ὅταν γὰρ ἀσθενῶ, τότε δυνατός εἰμι.] We have here a beautiful turn (similar to one in Philo, cited by Wetstein, μὴ ἀναπίπτετε, τὸ ἀσθενὲς ὑμῶν δύναμίς ἐστι); q. d. 'The more I am brought down by tribulation, the more do I experience the supports of Divine strength.' See Phil. iv. 13.

11. γέγονα ἄφρων καυχ.] As the Apostle began this detail of his merits and spiritual endowments with the deprecatory softening ἀνέχεσθέ μου τῆς ἀφρ., &c., and ὡς ἄφρονα δέξασθε, so he ends it with an apology introductory of the reason for it; q. d. 'Ye see, then, that I have made myself a fool in boasting. But ye have compelled me so to do, viz. by rendering it necessary to do justice to myself, and also for your good, by disabusing you of your prejudices.' It is truly observed by Fuller, in his Holy State, that 'self-praising comes most naturally from a man where it comes most violently from him in his own defence. For though modesty binds a man's tongue to the peace in this point, yet, being assaulted in his credit, he may stand upon his guard, and then he doth not so much praise as purge himself.' And Bishop Sanderson, in his Sermon on Job xxix. 14—17, remarks, that 'when men do us manifest wrong, it is not vanity, but charity, to do ourselves right; and whatever appearance of folly or vain boasting there may be in so doing, those are chargeable with all, who compel us thereunto, and not we.'

Καυχώμενος after ἄφρων, not found in many ancient MSS., Versions, and Fathers, is cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz, but defended by Matthæi. It may, however, be suspected of being an interpolation. Comp. xi. 16.

— ἐγὼ γὰρ ὤφειλον ὑφ' ὑμῶν συνίστ.] These words show how the Apostle was compelled to do this; namely, by the want of that commendation from them which was his due, since he was nothing inferior to the chiefest Apostles. His merits and endowments ought to have been summed up by them, and then it would not have been necessary to praise himself.

— εἰ καὶ οὐδέν εἰμι.] Some regard this as spoken sarcastically, and ex opinione pseudapostolorum; 'though I am, it seems, a nobody.' (So Soph. Trach. 1109, κἂν τὸ μηδὲν ὦ, and Aj.

ειμι. [h] Τὰ μὲν σημεῖα τοῦ ἀποστόλου κατειργάσθη ἐν ὑμῖν 12 ἐν πάσῃ ὑπομονῇ, ἐν σημείοις καὶ τέρασι καὶ δυνάμεσι. [i] Τί 13
γάρ ἐστιν ὃ ἡττήθητε ὑπὲρ τὰς λοιπὰς ἐκκλησίας, εἰ μὴ, ὅτι αὐτὸς ἐγὼ οὐ κατενάρκησα ὑμῶν; χαρίσασθέ μοι τὴν ἀδικίαν ταύτην. [k] Ἰδοὺ, τρίτον ἑτοίμως ἔχω ἐλθεῖν πρὸς 14 ὑμᾶς, καὶ οὐ καταναρκήσω ὑμῶν· οὐ γὰρ ζητῶ τὰ ὑμῶν, ἀλλ' ὑμᾶς· οὐ γὰρ ὀφείλει τὰ τέκνα τοῖς γονεῦσι θησαυρίζειν, ἀλλ' οἱ γονεῖς τοῖς τέκνοις. [l] Ἐγὼ δὲ ἥδιστα δαπα- 15 νήσω καὶ ἐκδαπανηθήσομαι ὑπὲρ τῶν ψυχῶν ὑμῶν· εἰ καὶ, περισσοτέρως ὑμᾶς ἀγαπῶν, ἧττον ἀγαπῶμαι. Ἔστω δέ· 16
ἐγὼ οὐ κατεβάρησα ὑμᾶς· ἀλλ', ὑπάρχων πανοῦργος, δόλῳ ὑμᾶς ἔλαβον. [m] Μή τινα ὧν ἀπέσταλκα πρὸς ὑμᾶς, δι' αὐτοῦ 17

h Rom. 15. 19. 1 Cor. 9. 2. supra 6. 4. & 11. 6.
i 1 Cor. 9. 12. supra 11. 7, 9.
k Acts 20. 33. infra 13. 1. 1 Cor. 4. 14, 15. & 10. 33.
l Supra 1. 6. & 6. 12, 13. Col. 1. 24. 2 Tim. 2. 10.
m Supra 7. 2.

767, κἂν ὁ μηδὲν ὤν.) But more natural and probable is the usual view, by which the words are understood as spoken seriously, and as expressive of genuine humility; his own weaknesses being considered apart from the strength of his Lord. Compare 1 Cor. xv. 8—10.

12. τὰ μὲν σημεῖα.] Μὲν, for μέντοι, saltem. Τοῦ ἀπ. is rightly rendered by Wahl, 'of the Apostle;' for the Article is not without its force, but has the hypothetical use. See Bp. Middl., Gr. Art. ch. iii. § 2. So we say, 'he gave proofs of the general, or the hero.' In this view Dr. Henderson (on Insp. p. 263) observes, that 'by the Article a peculiar degree of emphasis is imparted to the word ἀποστόλου; q. d. 'the proofs of a true Apostle.' Κατειργ., 'have been effected,' scil. ὑπ' ἐμοῦ. Here by σημεῖα are denoted documenta, proofs, as in Matt. xvi. 3. Rom. iv. 11. 1 Cor. xiv. 22, and Thucyd. i. 10. Ἐν πάσῃ ὑπομονῇ is taken as supra vi. 4, ἐν παντὶ συνιστῶντες ἑαυτοὺς ὡς Θεοῦ διάκονοι· ἐν ὑπομονῇ πολλῇ; or ἐν ὑπομ. may be taken for ὑπομενόντως, perseveringly, as in Luke viii. 15. Rom. viii. 25. Heb. xii. 1. Here σημ., τέρ., and δυν. are associated, like δυν., τέρ., and σημ. at Acts ii. 22, where see Note. Compare Rom. xv. 19.

13. Having shown that no signs of an Apostle were wanting in him, he inquires whether there be any other deficiency which should leave them inferior to other churches; q. d. '[What have you to complain of?] for in what,' &c. At ὃ supply κατά. Ἡττ. here signifies to be in an inferior condition; of which sense some examples are cited from the Classical writers. Ὑπὲρ is for μᾶλλον ἤ. Αὐτὸς ἐγὼ is, I think, emphatic; q. d. 'I myself have not, whatever others may have.'

— χαρίσασθέ μοι τὴν ἀδ. τ.] 'forgive me this wrong.' Ἀδικία in this sense occurs no where else in the New Test., though occasionally in the Classical writers, and in Joseph. Antiq. xvi. 4. 3, fin., ὡς ἔχειν τῇ ἀδικίᾳ τοῦ δεδωκότος, 'to the injury of him who gave it.' Here we have a most keen sarcasm.

14. This and the next verse may be considered parenthetical; v. 16 being closely connected with v. 13. The scope of the passage is to exclude any misrepresentation of the false teachers,—that he was only urging his past moderation, to pave the way for future demands upon them. Thus the sense is, 'I have not been burdensome to you [heretofore]; and when I come to you again, [as I am now for the third time purposing in mind to do,] I will not be burdensome to you.' So xi. 12, ὃ δὲ ποιῶ καὶ ποιήσω. The best Commentators are agreed that τρίτον is to be referred to ἑτοίμως ἔχω; since it appears from i. 15 that his last visit could only be the second.

After τρίτον is, in many MSS. and some Versions, Fathers, and early Fathers, added τοῦτο, which has been received by Griesbach and Scholz; but, I think, wrongly, since internal evidence is quite against it; for while we may easily account for its insertion, namely, from xiii. 1, we can by no means for its omission; not a single MS. being there without it, though many MSS., Versions, and Fathers have there added ἰδοὺ, manifestly from the present passage: insomuch that no Editor there has admitted it. But τοῦτο is on the very same footing.

—οὐ γὰρ ζητῶ—ὑμᾶς] q. d. 'I seek not your substance, but only desire the salvation of your souls.' In γὰρ ὀφείλει—τέκνοις there is an adagial sentence (perhaps formed on Ezek. xxxiv. 2), expressed populariter, and referring to what is natural, and in the regular order of things.

15. ἐγὼ] 'I for my part.' See Note on 1 Cor. v. 3. Δαπανήσω καὶ ἐκδαπ.; q. d. 'I am ready to spend my time, substance, health, strength,—nay, my very life for your sake.' Ἐκδαπ. signifies 'to be utterly exhausted by labours,' &c. Thus the expression is similar to that at Acts xx. 24, ἀλλ' οὐδενὸς λόγον ποιοῦμαι, οὐδὲ ἔχω τὴν ψυχήν μου τιμίαν ἐμαυτῷ. It is a fine remark of Theodoret and Theophylact, that 'what is here said is at once accusatory and yet conciliatory. He heals the pain he might inflict by charging them with want of affection to him, by intimating his great affection for them.'

16. ἔστω δὲ—ἔλαβον.] The Apostle here speaks in the person of his calumniators, making their words his own. Δόλῳ ὑμᾶς ἔλαβον is supposed by almost all Commentators to mean, 'I took you in, made a gain of you, by artifice and stratagem.' The sense, however, seems simply to be, 'I practised, it seems, upon you a piece of refined artifice, and sought to accomplish my selfish purpose by the instrumentality of another person.'

17. Here τινα—δι' αὐτοῦ is put, by a popular mode of expression, for διὰ τινὰ ἐκείνων, οὓς, &c.

18 ἐπλεονέκτησα ὑμᾶς; [n] Παρεκάλεσα Τίτον, καὶ συναπέστειλα n Supra 8. 6, 16, 18, 22.
τὸν ἀδελφόν. μήτι ἐπλεονέκτησεν ὑμᾶς Τίτος; οὐ τῷ αὐτῷ πνεύματι περιεπατήσαμεν; οὐ τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἴχνεσι;
19 [o] Πάλιν δοκεῖτε ὅτι ὑμῖν ἀπολογούμεθα; κατενώπιον τοῦ o Supra 5. 12. & 11. 31. 1 Cor. 10. 33.
Θεοῦ, ἐν Χριστῷ λαλοῦμεν· τὰ δὲ πάντα, ἀγαπητοὶ, ὑπὲρ 20 τῆς ὑμῶν οἰκοδομῆς. [p] Φοβοῦμαι γὰρ, μήπως ἐλθὼν, οὐχ p 1 Cor. 4. 21.
οἵους θέλω εὕρω ὑμᾶς, κἀγὼ εὑρεθῶ ὑμῖν οἷον οὐ θέλετε· supra 10. 2. infra 13. 2, 10.
μήπως ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, θυμοὶ, ἐριθεῖαι, καταλαλιαὶ, ψιθυρισμοὶ, 21 φυσιώσεις, ἀκαταστασίαι· [q] μὴ πάλιν ἐλθόντα με ταπεινώσῃ q Infra 13. 2.
ὁ Θεός μου πρὸς ὑμᾶς, καὶ πενθήσω πολλοὺς τῶν προημαρ-τηκότων, καὶ μὴ μετανοησάντων ἐπὶ τῇ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ καὶ πορνείᾳ καὶ ἀσελγείᾳ ᾗ ἔπραξαν. a Supra 12. 14.
1 XIII. [a] ΤΡΙΤΟΝ τοῦτο ἔρχομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς· ἐπὶ στό- Num. 35. 30. Deut. 17. 6. & 19. 15.
ματος δύο μαρτύρων καὶ τριῶν σταθήσεται πᾶν Matt. 18. 16. John 8. 17.
2 ῥῆμα. [b] Προείρηκα καὶ προλέγω, (ὡς παρὼν τὸ δεύτερον, b Supra 12. 21. & 1. 23.

18. παρεκάλ. Τίτον, &c.] This has reference to what was said supra viii. 6. 18. The Apostle appeals to facts, which they themselves could not deny; and the interrogation at μήτι ἐπλεον. implies a strong negation. The sentence, arranged according to the regularity of Western composition, would run thus: 'Did Titus, whom I requested to go to you, or the brother whom I sent with him, make a gain of you?' This the Apostle follows up with a sentence in which the consequent is put for the antecedent. He does not say, 'No, they walked in my steps,' but delicately substitutes, 'Have we not walked in the same spirit,—pursued the same disinterested course?' Τὸν ἀδ. should be rendered 'the brother,' i. e. the one whom ye well know. See Note supra viii. 18—21.

19. πάλιν δοκεῖτε—ἀπολ.] This, he says, that the anxiety which he shows to justify himself in all respects may not be ascribed to improper motives,—whether timidity or selfishness. The πάλιν refers to iii. 1. v. 12. Now the Apostle does not reply to this by a strong negation, οὐχὶ, but leaves that to be implied,—by stating, with a solemn protestation, that his views, in acting and writing as he has done, have been solely their edification and spiritual benefit.

Here Scholz reads and points, from several MSS. and some early Editions, κατενώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐν Χριστῷ, λαλοῦμεν τάδε πάντα, ἀγαπητοὶ, &c. But though the sentence thus runs more freely, it has less of the Pauline character.

20. This is meant to further apologize for his refutation of the calumny circulated against himself, and for the language of reprehension above addressed to them. Οἵους ϑέλω, i. e. reformed. In οἷον οὐ ϑέλ. there is, as at x. 2, punishment hinted at, which is more fully expressed at xiii. 2, οὐ φείσομαι. At ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, &c., repeat φοβ. μήπως and ὦσι, 'lest there be found.' The change of construction may be attributed to delicacy; since, if the Apostle had finished the sentence as he had begun it, he must have used, instead of nouns denoting vices, nouns denoting the persons guilty of those vices; q. d. lest, namely, 'I should find you zealots, quarrelsome, backbiters,' &c.; as Rom. i. 30. The terms ἔρεις, ζῆλ., ϑυμ. denote the more violent forms, and καταλαλιαὶ and ψιθ. the milder modifications, of anger and ill-will. Φυσιώσεις denotes a party spirit; and ἀκαταστασ. refers to that confusion which must thence arise. Compare James iii. 16. Ψιθυρισμοὶ is used in the same sense by Plut. Conj. Præc. 40.

21. Here the Apostle hints at something worse, immorality. Πάλιν may be taken either with ἐλθόντα, or with ταπεινώσῃ. But the former seems preferable. Μή με ταπειν. ὁ Θεός μου π. ὑ., 'lest my God should humble me in respect of you;' i. e. lest I should be mortified, and grieved to find, in some of you, so little profit of my labours. Πενθ. πολλ., &c. The sense is '[lest] I may have to bewail many who have not repented, and forsaken their sins.'

XIII. In this Chapter the Apostle proceeds to intimate his purpose to inflict punishments supernaturally on those who persisted in resisting his authority. And after exhorting them to self-examination, and to anticipate his correction by timely reformation, he concludes with exhortations, salutations, and benedictions.

1. τρίτον τοῦτο ἔρχ.] 'I am preparing and intending to come.' See Note supra xii. 14.

—— ἐπὶ στόματος δύο—ῥῆμα.] The purport of these words has been not a little disputed. Many suppose the meaning to be, 'When I come, every matter or complaint respecting impenitent offenders shall be decided according to the rule laid down in the Law (Numb. xxxv. 30. Deut. xvii. 6. xix. 13), and sanctioned by the Gospel (see Matt. xviii. 16), that by the testimony of two or three witnesses,' &c. Some ancient and several modern Commentators, however (as Grotius, Hammond, and Locke), understand by these witnesses the Apostle's admonitions in his two Epistles. The meaning, however, seems to be, as Mr. Scott explains, that 'when at length he shall come, he will proceed against them according to that Lord, or to the rule laid down by Christ for his disciples;' Matth. xviii. 15—18.

καὶ ἀπὼν νῦν,) [γράφω] τοῖς προημαρτηκόσι, καὶ τοῖς λοι-c Matt. 10. 20. 1 Cor. 9. 2. ποῖς πᾶσιν, ὅτι ἐὰν ἔλθω εἰς τὸ πάλιν, οὐ φείσομαι· [c] ἐπεὶ 3 δοκιμὴν ζητεῖτε τοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ λαλοῦντος Χριστοῦ, ὃς εἰς ὑμᾶς d Phil. 2. 7, 8. 1 Pet. 3. 18. οὐκ ἀσθενεῖ, ἀλλὰ δυνατεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν. [d] Καὶ γὰρ εἰ ἐσταυρώθη 4 ἐξ ἀσθενείας, ἀλλὰ ζῇ ἐκ δυνάμεως Θεοῦ· καὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἀσθενοῦμεν ἐν αὐτῷ, ἀλλὰ ζησόμεθα σὺν αὐτῷ ἐκ δυνάμεως e 1 Cor. 11. 28. Θεοῦ εἰς ὑμᾶς. [e] Ἑαυτοὺς πειράζετε εἰ ἐστὲ ἐν τῇ πίστει, 5 ἑαυτοὺς δοκιμάζετε· ἢ οὐκ ἐπιγινώσκετε ἑαυτοὺς, ὅτι Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστιν; εἰ μήτι ἀδόκιμοί ἐστε. Ἐλπίζω δὲ 6
f Supra 6. 9. ὅτι γνώσεσθε ὅτι ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἐσμὲν ἀδόκιμοι. [f] Εὔχομαι δὲ 7 πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, μὴ ποιῆσαι ὑμᾶς κακὸν μηδέν· οὐχ ἵνα ἡμεῖς δόκιμοι φανῶμεν, ἀλλ' ἵνα ὑμεῖς τὸ καλὸν ποιῆτε, ἡμεῖς δὲ ὡς ἀδόκιμοι ὦμεν. οὐ γὰρ δυνάμεθά τι κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας, 8
g Supra 11. 30. & 12. 5, 9, 10. ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀληθείας· [g] χαίρομεν γὰρ ὅταν ἡμεῖς ἀσθε- 9

2. προείρηκα καὶ προλέγω.] Meaning, 'I have just told and warned you, and I now say it beforehand:' in which there is a Chiasmus, well pointed out by Bengel; for this is put for πολλάκις ἔλεγον, νῦν λέγω at Phil. iii. 18, and προλέγω ὑμῖν καθὼς καὶ προεῖπον, Gal. v. 21. With respect to ὡς παρὼν νῦν, the best Commentators are agreed that the sense is, 'as if I were present the second time, though now, as yet, absent.' Τὸ δεύτ. is for εἰς τὸ πάλιν, like εἰς τὸ ἔπειτα. The construction is cleared by the parenthesis. Γράφω is wanting in several MSS. of the Western recension, and is cancelled by Griesbach, Tittman, and Vater; rightly; as we can better account for its insertion than its omission.

3, 4. On the construction, punctuation, and sense of these verses some difference of opinion exists. Many recent Commentators connect ἐπεὶ δοκιμὴν—Χριστοῦ at ver. 3, with ἑαυτοὺς πειρ. at ver. 5, thus making the former contain a protasis, and the latter an apodosis, and throwing the intermediate words into a parenthesis. But though this method yields a good sense, it seems too artificial; nor is the Apostle accustomed so accurately to complete a sentence, interrupted by a somewhat parenthesis. The common mode of pointing and taking the words seems to be more natural, and yields full as good a sense. The import of ver. 3 may be thus expressed: 'Especially since some of you boldly demand a proof of Christ's speaking in me, as his Apostle; though this hath been already confirmed by evidence of the strongest kind, namely, by His mighty power working in and through me in various ways.' By δοκ. is meant, as Newcome observes, 'a proof to be evidenced by the exercise of my authority.' Δυνατεῖ, for δύναμιν ἔχει, viz. in the working of miracles, either to cure, or to inflict disorders, and by the communication of spiritual gifts. This δύναμις, exerted through the instrumentality of Paul, attested his Divine legation as Apostle. Nay, his very success in converting them to the Gospel, so that they had received the Spiritual Gifts, was also another testimony that God worked with Paul. See Whitby.

4. καὶ γὰρ εἰ ἐσταυρώθη, &c.] Meaning, 'For though Jesus was crucified, as if he had been only a weak helpless man, and was despised as unable to 'save himself;' yet he was raised from the dead, and lived in glory, 'by the power of God,' to 'put all enemies under his feet.''

5. ἑαυτοὺς πείρ., &c.] Instead of presumptuously demanding proofs, where none ought to be required, he bids them try and examine themselves; and if they be but in the faith, they will find sufficient evidences of his Divine legation, in the spiritual gifts and general reformation produced through his preaching, as well as to prove Christ to be in them, by His power. But that would prove his own Divine mission.

— ἢ οὐκ ἐπιγ., &c.] The sense seems to be, 'Do ye not know concerning yourselves, and find that Jesus Christ is in you?—unless, indeed, ye be not genuine Christians, but deserving rejection, and therefore destitute of proof that Christ is in you.' It would seem that the Apostle here uses ἀδόκ. in a double sense per paronomasiam. In the latter of the two, the word is used in the next verse.

6. γνώσεσθε—ἀδόκιμοι.] Meaning, it would seem, 'But I trust that ye will find and know that we, at least, are not ἀδόκιμοι; i. e. destitute of the proof of Divine power in us.'

— εὔχομαι δὲ, &c.] The full sense may be expressed as follows: 'However, I pray that ye may do nothing evil, and deserving of punishment; [for it is my wish and purpose] not that our Divine commission be by that means approved; but [rather] that ye may do what is right and good, and that we may thereby be, as it were, without that proof, by not having to exercise the power,' viz. of punishing offenders.

8. οὐ γὰρ δυνάμεθα—ἀληθείας.] As much as to say, '[Ye need fear no injustice or partiality;] for our decisions must be agreeable to the truth which is in Jesus, being preserved from error by the same Being who entrusted us with this mighty power.' Ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀλ. is, as Emmerling observes, for ἀλλ' ὀφείλομεν πάντα ποιεῖν ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀλ.: see 1 Tim. iv. 3. Ἡ ἀλήθ. must here mean true religion, a signification frequent in the New Test.

9. χαίρομεν γὰρ—δυν. ἦτε.] This has referνῶμεν, ὑμεῖς δὲ δυνατοὶ ἦτε· τοῦτο δὲ καὶ εὐχόμεθα, τὴν 10 ὑμῶν κατάρτισιν. [h] Διὰ τοῦτο ταῦτα ἀπὼν γράφω, ἵνα παρ- h 1 Cor. 4. 21. supra 2. 3.

ὼν μὴ ἀποτόμως χρήσωμαι, κατὰ τὴν ἐξουσίαν ἣν ἔδωκέ μοι & 10. 2, 8. & 12. 20, 21.
ὁ Κύριος εἰς οἰκοδομὴν, καὶ οὐκ εἰς καθαίρεσιν.
11 [i] Λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοὶ, χαίρετε, καταρτίζεσθε, παρακαλεῖσθε, i 1 Cor. 1. 10. Rom. 12. 16, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖτε, εἰρηνεύετε! καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τῆς ἀγάπης καὶ 18. & 15. 5. Phil. 2. 2.
12 εἰρήνης ἔσται μεθ' ὑμῶν. [k] Ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν ἁγίῳ 1 Pet. 3. 8. Heb. 12. 14. k Rom. 16.
13 φιλήματι· ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ ἅγιοι πάντες. Ἡ χάρις τοῦ 16. 1 Cor. 16. 20.
Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ ἡ κοι- 1 Thess. 5. 26.
νωνία τοῦ ἁγίου Πνεύματος μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν. 1 Pet. 5. 14.

ence to the preceding ἵνα ὑμεῖς, &c. The sense being, 'Nay, so far are we from wishing to give proof of our power, by having to punish your irregularities, that we rather rejoice when we are [thus] weak (i. e. seem weak, by not having our power shown by the proof) and ye are strong [in faith and good works].'

— τοῦτο δὲ—κατάρτ.] Meaning, 'This [it is that] we not only wish, but even pray for; [namely] your reformation and perfection, that we may have no cause to exercise severity towards you.' Κατάρτισις signifies properly the setting of a broken bone, or the curing of a distorted limb. Here it denotes 'your restoration to a sound and perfect state.'

10. διὰ τοῦτο—χρήσωμαι.] This is, as Theophylact observes, meant to apologize for the objurgatory and minatory language he had employed; namely, as wishing that it would have to be extended no farther than words, and not shown in deeds. The remainder of the verse contains a repetition of what was said at x. 8.

11. καταρτίζεσθε.] Meaning, it would seem, 'strive after reformation and perfection :' the term corresponds to κατάρτισιν at ver. 9. So our Lord says, Matt. v. 48, ἔσεσθε οὖν τέλειοι· by which can only be meant, 'aim at, strive after being perfect.' That God hath His part in this work, as well as man, is clear from Hebr. xiii. 21, καταρτίσαι (scil. ὁ Θεὸς) ὑμᾶς ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ.

— παρακαλ.] 'take comfort ;' or, as some explain, 'comfort each other.' Τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖτε, 'aim at concord in your religious sentiments, avoiding dissensions and factions.'

The Apostle then fortifies his exhortation by proposing a strong motive to the cultivation of this unanimity and concord ; namely, that the God of all love, the author and source of all love, who is himself the giver of peace and all other blessings, will be with them ; namely, for their protection against all who seek to interrupt that peace and disturb concord.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΓΑΛΑΤΑΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

---

a Ver. 11, 12. Acts 9. 6. Tit. 1. 3. Acts 2. 24, 32. & 3. 15. & 4. 10. & 10. 40. & 13. 30, 34. & 17. 31. Rom. 4. 24. & 8. 11. 1 Cor. 6. 14. & 15. 15. 2 Cor. 4. 14. Eph. 1. 20. Col. 2. 12. 1 Thess. 1. 10. Heb. 13. 20.

I. [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος οὐκ ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων οὐδὲ δι' 1 ἀνθρώπου, ἀλλὰ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς τοῦ

THIS was among the earliest of the Epistles of St. Paul, being written about A. D. 52 or 53; nay, some say, 48 or 49. The Galatians had been converted to Christianity six or seven years before, chiefly, if not entirely, by St. Paul; but after his departure, Judaizing teachers had crept in, who maintained the necessity of circumcision and the observance of the precepts of the Mosaic Law; and, in order the more effectually to work their purposes, had undermined his authority, representing that he was no Apostle, having only a deputed commission from the Apostles and elders at Jerusalem; who had always, they said, required or encouraged an adherence to the Mosaic Law. To counteract these errors, St. Paul, in the present Epistle, first proves his Apostleship,—by showing that he had received it directly from God, appealing to the history of his conversion, and his subsequent conduct: secondly, he proceeds to refute the notion of the necessity of an observance of the Jewish Law to salvation; showing not only that those who embrace the Gospel are freed from its observance, but also, that whoever depends on it for acceptance with God, will lose all the benefits to be expected therefrom. Thirdly, he vindicates the doctrine he taught,—of justification by faith without the works of the Law,—and shows the folly of the Galatians in going about to subject themselves to the Law, whereby they would forfeit the benefits of the Covenant of Grace. Fourthly, after giving them various instructions, and exhortations to walk worthy of their high calling, and especially to make a right use of their Christian freedom, he concludes with a brief summary of the topics above discussed, terminating in an Apostolical benediction.

Hence it is plain that the present Epistle relates to the very same subject as that to the Romans,—justification by faith only; though a difference is perceptible in the manner of treating the subject,—arising, Paley thinks, 'from the difference in St. Paul's situation.' In this to those whose Church he had founded, he rests much upon authority; in that to the Romans, where he was not personally known, nor his authority established, he appeals solely to argument. Besides this, there are other points of difference which are well stated by Dr. Macknight, in his preface to this Epistle. The Epistle to the Galatians, he shows, 'was intended to prove, against the Jews or Judaizers, that men are justified by faith, without the works of the Law of Moses; whereas the Epistle to the Romans treats of justification on a more enlarged plan, being meant to prove, both against Jews and Gentiles, that neither the one nor the other can be justified meritoriously by performing works of Law, or any law of works, but that all must be justified gratuitously by faith, through the obedience of Christ. Accordingly the two Epistles supply a complete proof that justification is not to be obtained meritoriously, either by rites and ceremonies (though of Divine appointment) or by works of morality, but that it is entirely a free gift, proceeding alone from the mercy of God in Christ.'

To proceed from the subject and scope to the manner,—here, too, there is a considerable difference between the two Epistles; for while in the Epistle to the Romans, the matter far excels the manner,—and, from extreme brevity, a considerable obscurity prevails throughout; in the present, though there is much of conciseness, and, from a similar boldness of expression and peculiarity of treating a subject, much of difficulty exists,—yet here far more of plan and regularity, and a sort of consummateness is found. In short, to use the words of Winer, in his Prolegomena, 'Nihil facile addiderit quispiam, quod argumentorum incredibilem vim augeat; nihil demserit, quod absonum aut debile; nihil trajecerit, quod alieno loco positum videatur. Bene omnia composita absolutaque sunt, æquabiliter fluunt, et his, qui legant, assensum pæne extorquent.'

I. 1—5. In these verses is contained the inscription and the salutation. In treating of the former, clearness will be imparted to a somewhat involved sentence, by placing the words οὐκ ἀπ'

2 ἐγείραντος αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν, καὶ οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ πάντες ἀδελφοι,
3 ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Γαλατίας· χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ 4 Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, καὶ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, [b] τοῦ b Matt. 20. 28.
δόντος ἑαυτὸν ‡ περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, ὅπως ἐξέληται Rom. 4. 25. infra 2. 20.
ἡμᾶς ἐκ τοῦ ἐνεστῶτος αἰῶνος πονηροῦ, κατὰ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Eph. 5. 2. Tit. 2. 14. Heb. 9. 14.
5 Θεοῦ καὶ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν· ᾧ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν John 15. 19. 1 John 5. 19.
αἰώνων. ἀμήν.
6 [c] Θαυμάζω ὅτι οὕτω ταχέως μετατίθεσθε ἀπὸ τοῦ καλέ- c Infra 5. 8.
7 σαντος ὑμᾶς ἐν χάριτι Χριστοῦ εἰς ἕτερον εὐαγγέλιον. [d] ὃ d Acts 15. 1. 2 Cor. 11. 4. infra 5. 15.

ἀνθρώπων—ἐκ νεκρῶν between marks of parenthesis. The scope of this parenthetical portion is, to show the grounds of St. Paul's claim to Apostleship, which, it seems, had been called in question. Instead, therefore, of merely saying (as in the Epistles to the Corinthians and those to the Colossians and Ephesians), διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, he enters more at large into the thing,—showing what he is not, as well as what he is. In this parenthesis ἀποστελλόμενος must be supplied from the preceding. See Note on 2 Cor. xii. 7, ἄγγελος Σατᾶν. Ἀπ' ἀνθρ. and δι' ἀνθρ. are not, as Koppe and Borger suppose, synonymous. [Ἀπὸ signifies 'on the part of;' and διὰ, 'by the agency or mediation of.'] Thus the sense is, 'not commissioned from men, but from God; not by the agency of man, but by Jesus Christ.' It is plain that ἀνθρώπου points to the Divine origin of Christ. Hence the passage was justly regarded, by Origen and the other Fathers, as one among those which prove the Deity of our Lord.

— διὰ Ἰ. Χρ. καὶ Θεοῦ Π.] i. e. [of Divine appointment.'] So Abp. Newcome well explains, 'by the ministration of Christ, who appeared to me, and ultimately by the act of God.' The reason for adding τοῦ ἐγείρ. αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν was, doubtless, (as Calvin, Koppe, Borger, and Winer point out,) to show the grounds on which Jesus was proved to be the Son of God and supreme Ruler of the Church, especially as on this rested St. Paul's claims to a Divine legation.

2. ἀδελφοί.] This (as I have shown at large in Recens. Synop.) cannot mean, what some modern Commentators (even Borger and Schott) assign as the sense, 'brother Christians;' but (as all the ancients, and almost all the moderns explain) must signify, 'brother ministers.' Compare 1 Cor. i. 1. 1 Thess. i. 3. Phil. iv. 21. Πάντες, on which the other interpretation is chiefly grounded, is often applied to a small number, as three or four. Ταῖς ἐκκλ., meaning, 'all of them contained in the province.'

3. χάρις ὑμῖν, &c.] See Note on Rom. i. 7.

4. τοῦ δόντος ἑαυτὸν περὶ τῶν ἁμ. ἡ.] Meaning, 'who gave himself up to death, as an expiation for our sins,' i. e. as an expiatory sacrifice for them. A circumstance, as Chrysostom observes, introduced by way of setting forth the vast superiority of the Gospel over the Law, in respect to this expiation for sin. Compare 1 Tim. ii. 6. Tit. ii. 14. 1 Macc. vi. 44.

Here, for ὑπὲρ, I have, with Matthæi and Scholz, edited, from many of the best MSS. and some Fathers and early Editions, περί; not, however, so much from external authority, as from internal evidence; ὑπὲρ being manifestly a gloss on περί.

— ὅπως ἐξέληται—πονηροῦ] 'in order that he might [thereby] deliver us from this present evil world;' i. e. from conformity to its corrupt manners, and the condemnation consequent thereon. Ἐξαιρεῖσθαι signifies to rescue any one from evil, and, by implication, bring him to good. By τοῦ ἐνεστ. αἰῶνος we are to understand the present state of things in the world (marked by sin and misery), this present world, as compared with the future and heavenly one, where sin and sorrow shall be done away. See also Rom. xii. 2. In the same sense we, in the Lord's prayer, entreat to 'be delivered from evil.'

— κατὰ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Π. ἡ.] 'agreeably to the will of God, even our Father,' i. e. as the efficient cause of our salvation. See 2 Cor. i. 3. Col. iii. 17. A formula frequent in St. Paul's writings, in which there is much significancy.

5. ἡ δόξα.] This is rendered by Wakefield, 'the glory of his deliverance and salvation.' The common version, however, is defended by Acts vii. 2, ὁ Θεὸς τῆς δόξης, from which it seems that δόξα is one of those nouns, which, when used in their most abstract sense, take the Article. See Bp. Middl. Gr. Art. ch. v. § i. Besides, as Winer and Schott have seen, the Article is always used when the subject of the discourse is God. So it is found in a similar doxology at Rom. xi. 36. xvi. 27. Eph. iii. 21. Phil. iv. 20. 2 Tim. iv. 18. 1 Pet. iv. 11.

6. The Apostle now passes at once to an attack on the gross errors in doctrine into which the Galatians had fallen,—errors so serious and fundamental, that they might be said to form another Gospel. Accordingly he commences his subject in the language of astonishment at their conduct; and with reason, because they had the fullest means of being better informed. Μετατίθεσθαι signifies, in the Middle voice, properly, 'to change one's place;' and figuratively, 'to change one's side, and go over to another.' Thus we may render, 'that ye are gone over, or are going over from him.' Τοῦ καλ. may, with several Commentators, be referred to Christ; though, as the office of calling is elsewhere ascribed to God, the ancient and most modern Expositors are right in so applying it here; but, in fact, there is a breviloquentia (as at ἐν ἁγιασμῷ in 1 Thess. iv. 7), of which the full sense is, 'who hath called you, that you should be and continue in the state of grace by Christ.'

Ἐν χάριτι is by most modern Commentators taken for εἰς χάριν. But the ancient and some οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο· εἰ μή τινές εἰσιν οἱ ταράσσοντες ὑμᾶς, καὶ [e 1 Cor. 16. 22.] θέλοντες μεταστρέψαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ. [e] Ἀλλὰ 8 καὶ ἐὰν ἡμεῖς, ἢ ἄγγελος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ εὐαγγελίζηται ὑμῖν [f Rev. 22. 18.] παρ' ὃ εὐηγγελισάμεθα ὑμῖν, ἀνάθεμα ἔστω. [f] ὡς προειρή- 9 καμεν, καὶ ἄρτι πάλιν λέγω· εἴ τις ὑμᾶς εὐαγγελίζεται παρ' [g 1 Thess. 2. 4. James 4. 4.] ὃ παρελάβετε, ἀνάθεμα ἔστω. [g] Ἄρτι γὰρ ἀνθρώπους πείθω, 10 ἢ τὸν Θεόν; ἢ ζητῶ ἀνθρώποις ἀρέσκειν; εἰ γὰρ ἔτι ἀνθρώποις ἤρεσκον, Χριστοῦ δοῦλος οὐκ ἂν ἤμην.

eminent modern Expositors, as Koppe and Winer, render, 'by or through the grace of Christ,' i. e. unto salvation; as Rom. v. 15. 2 Cor. i. 12. 2 Thess. ii. 16: which latter mode is preferable. Εἰς ἕτ. εὐαγγ., i. e. 'as it were another,' being so corrupted by admixture with Judaism.

7. ὃ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο· εἰ μὴ, &c.] There is some difficulty in tracing the construction, and consequently in ascertaining the exact sense of the words. The ancient and most modern Commentators, supposing ὃ to refer to εὐαγγ., take εἰ μὴ as put for ἀλλὰ, attamen; the sense being either, 'Which, however, is not another Gospel, but there are some,' &c.; or, 'Which, however, is not another Gospel, not worthy of that name, nor indeed the Gospel at all; but, notwithstanding, there are some,' &c. Others, however, as Grotius, Calvin, Crellius, Locke, Bornemann, and Winer, regard ὃ as referring to the whole matter in question (πρᾶγμα), and suppose that the Apostle is giving a reason for their defection, and excusing it by throwing the blame on others.

This latter mode of taking the passage, however, would suppose the Apostle to have expressed his meaning very imperfectly; for, as Prof. Schott observes, he ought thus to have written ὃ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο, ἢ ὅτι τινές. And indeed there would be something not a little far-fetched in the sentiment. As to the former interpretation, it is rejected by Prof. Schott, on the ground that εἰ μὴ is no where put for ἀλλὰ, nor used in any other sense than nisi. That it is so used, seems decided by 1 Cor. vii. 17, and Rom. xiv. 14. How the idiom arises, has been before explained; yet it does not follow, because it may be so taken, where requisite, that it should be so taken here. Understanding ὃ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο in the first-mentioned sense (which is the most natural, and agreeable to the context), I should prefer, with Abp. Newcome and Schott, to regard it as a parenthetical clause, corrective of the foregoing assertion; q. d. 'the Gospel is not sometimes one thing, and sometimes another, but always the same.' (Heb. xiii. 8.) Thus εἰ μὴ will, as Schott remarks, refer to ϑαυμάζω; and though the correct use of the moods and tenses would require ϑαυμάζοιμι, ὅτι, &c., εἰ μή τινες ἦσαν οἱ, &c., yet the Apostle probably preferred the use of the Indicative and the Present, because it was more suited to his purpose (that of reprehension), and the certainty of his persuasion as to their lapsed state.

— ταράσσ. ὑμᾶς, &c.] Ταράσσειν is here used, as at Acts xv. 24, in the sense 'to perturb the mind, and pervert the understanding,' by throwing in perplexing doubts. Μεταστρέψαι has here its primitive sense; i. e. 'to change the nature of any thing, by the introduction of something else with which it will not amalgamate;' alluding to the mixture of the Law of Moses with the Gospel. So Aristotle, cited by Wetstein, τὰ τοῦ Ξεν. μεταστρ.

8. ἀλλὰ] quinimo; as in Luke xii. 7, and sometimes in the Classical writers. In ἢ ἄγγ. ἐξ οὐρ. we have supposed, what is next to an impossibility, for illustration's sake. Chrysostom has shown that the words have reference to the other Apostles, especially Peter and James, whose authority was, no doubt, often pleaded (though falsely) for retaining the rites of the Mosaic Law. Παρ' ὃ, 'contrary to what.' So Rom. xii. 3. xvi. 17. Acts xviii. 13.

— ἀνάθεμα ἔστω.] Ἀνάθεμα does not properly differ from ἀνάθημα, being indeed only a later form. The earlier and purer writers used ἀνάθημα, and almost always in a good sense, to denote any thing set apart, or consecrated. The new form, too, was sometimes used in a good sense, though generally in a bad one, to denote any thing devoted to curses; literally, 'separated from use.' See more in the Note on 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

9. Here there is a repetition, arising from earnestness, and used in order to show his settled judgment. Παρελάβετε, 'received or learnt [of us].' See Phil. iv. 9.

10. ἄρτι γὰρ—Θεόν;] There is here an abruptness of transition, and a brevity, which has occasioned some obscurity, and led to variety of interpretation. But the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are in general agreed in regarding the passage either as an apology for the foregoing language, which might be thought to savour of vanity, or as an appeal to themselves, whether what the false teachers affirmed of him (namely, that he suited his doctrine to the humours of men), was not a mere calumny. Both senses may be admitted; the latter as implied in the former. Ἄρτι refers to the whole time which had passed since his conversion to Christianity; q. d. 'now that I have so long preached the Gospel, and suffered so much for its sake.' Πείθω is, by a frequent idiom, to be taken either of endeavour, meaning, 'am I now endeavouring to sway the assent of men to my own private notions?' or, rather, of purpose and intention. So, just after, ἀρέσκειν ζητῶ; The interrogation involves a strong negation.

— εἰ γὰρ ἔτι—ἤμην] 'For if I were yet, or still, pleasing men, I should not be a servant of God.' The γὰρ refers to the negation implied in the preceding interrogation; q. d. 'No; for,' &c.

11. The connexion here has been thought doubtful; nay, some are of opinion that there is none, but that a new subject is commenced, 11 [h] Γνωρίζω δὲ ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοὶ, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τὸ εὐαγγε- h 1 Cor. 15. 1, 3. supra ver. 1.

12 λισθὲν ὑπ᾽ ἐμοῦ, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστι κατὰ ἄνθρωπον· [i] οὐδὲ γὰρ i Eph. 3. 3.
ἐγὼ παρὰ ἀνθρώπου παρέλαβον αὐτὸ, οὔτε ἐδιδάχθην· ἀλλὰ 13 δι᾽ ἀποκαλύψεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. [k] Ἠκούσατε γὰρ τὴν ἐμὴν k Acts 8. 3. & 9. 1. & 22. 4. ἀναστροφὴν ποτὲ ἐν τῷ Ἰουδαϊσμῷ, ὅτι καθ᾽ ὑπερβολὴν & 26. 9. Phil. 3. 6.
14 ἐδίωκον τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἐπόρθουν αὐτήν· καὶ 1 Tim. 1. 13.
προέκοπτον ἐν τῷ Ἰουδαϊσμῷ ὑπὲρ πολλοὺς συνηλικιώτας ἐν τῷ γένει μου, περισσοτέρως ζηλωτὴς ὑπάρχων τῶν πατρι- l Acts 9. 15. & 13. 2.
15 κῶν μου παραδόσεων. [l] Ὅτε δὲ εὐδόκησεν [ὁ Θεὸς,] ὁ Rom. 1. 1. Jer. 1. 5. ἀφορίσας με ἐκ κοιλίας μητρός μου καὶ καλέσας διὰ τῆς m Matt. 16. 17. 2 Cor. 4 6.
16 χάριτος αὐτοῦ, [m] ἀποκαλύψαι τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ, ἵνα infra 2. 8. Eph. 3. 8.

namely, the proof of his Apostleship. I am, however, induced to think, with Schott, that it is connected with the preceding verse, and also with ver. 7; what is there said being here more fully treated of, and what is written up to this verse serving to pave the way for introducing the grand subject, which is treated on at ch. i. & ii.,—his Apostolical dignity and authority.

— γνωρίζω δὲ, &c.] The δὲ should be rendered autem, now. The idiom by which there is a transposition of ὅτι is frequent, and may here, Schott thinks, have been made use of, in order to place a highly important topic in the most prominent point of view.

Γνωρίζω seems here to signify commonefacio, as in a kindred passage at 1 Cor. xv. 1, or significo. Κατὰ ἄνθρ. is for ἀνθρώπινον, meaning, 'is not of human origin, nor composed of human precepts received from men, or taught by men.' So Plutarch, cited by Borger: ἐκεῖνο δὲ οὐκ ἔστι καθ' Ἡσίοδον, οὐδὲ ἀνθρωπίνης ἔργον σοφίας, ἀλλὰ Θεοῦ.

12. δι' ἀποκαλ.] scil. παρέλαβον καὶ ἐδιδάχθην; meaning (as Markland shows) that he had derived it immediately from Jesus Christ himself, and therefore had no need of instruction from the other Apostles. There is also, no doubt, a reference to the mysterious nature of certain things revealed,—namely, the peculiar doctrines of the Gospel. The chief of these revelations are supposed to have been communicated to St. Paul when in Arabia.

13. The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. '[It is scarcely necessary to show this by reference to the well-known events of my early life;] for ye have heard,' &c. Or the γὰρ may be exegetical; what is subjoined being meant as a proof of the foregoing assertion, from a brief narrative of Saul's course of life previous to his conversion, and of the circumstances which attended it. Ἀναστροφὴ here is synonymous with βίωσις at Acts xxvi. 4, and signifies manner of life, character, and conduct; as often in the Old and New Testaments, and sometimes in the later Classical writers. The ποτὲ is for προτέραν, which occurs in Ephes. iv. 22. 'The argument,' Rosenmuller observes, 'is, that from his former life, it is plain that he must have received his doctrine by Divine revelation. For since he was such a persecutor of the Christian religion, how could he have been so suddenly changed, had not a Divine revelation influenced him?'

— καθ' ὑπερβ.] for σφόδρα, or rather it is a stronger term. The expression τὴν ἐκκλ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is employed to set in a strong point of view the criminality of his conduct, and also that of the Jewish persecutors of that time. Ἐπόρθουν is a more forcible term than ἐδίωκον, and should be rendered, 'laid it waste,' namely, by dragging its professors to execution. See Acts ix. 21.

14. προέκοπτον ἐν τῷ Ἰουδ.] 'made proficiency in a knowledge of the rites and forms of the Jewish religion;' see Note on Rom. xiv. 11. Πολλοὺς συνηλ., 'many of my age,' and, by implication, fellow-students. Ἐν τῷ γένει μου, 'among those of my own nation.' Verbals, like ζηλ., have the force of adjectives, taking their regimen, whatever that be, and consequently admit an adverb. Ζηλωτὴς νόμου and νόμων is an expression frequently occurring in the Apocrypha. Here Wetstein aptly compares Josephus, Ant. xii. 6. 2, εἴ τις ζηλωτής ἐστι τῶν πατρίων ἐθῶν, καὶ τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ θρησκείας, ἑπέσθω μοι. The τῶν πατρ. παραδ. serves to show what was especially meant by Ἰουδαϊσμῷ. The expression is one well adapted to denote the Judaism of the Pharisees, as a religion handed down from their fathers, and containing, together with what was of Divine institution, much of human tradition merely, and what pretended to no more than human authority, namely, that of their forefathers. Comp. Matt. xv. 2. Mark vii. 3. Acts xxvi. 4. Πατρ. here, like the πατρ. in the above passage of Josephus, is for πατροπαράδοτος.

15. ὁ ἀφορ. με.] Meaning, it would seem, 'who separated [and, by implication, destined] me to preach the Gospel;' see Acts xiii. 2. xxii. 14. sq. Rom. i. 1. Ὁ Θεὸς is wanting in four MSS., the Syr. Version, and some Fathers, and is by Griesbach and Schott thought to be probably an interpolation; but it is more likely that it was accidentally omitted because of the ὁ—ὁ.

Ἀφορ. must be referred (with the best Commentators, ancient and modern) to the foreknowledge of God. At any rate the term cannot, as Dr. Hammond shows, with any good reason be understood of any irrespective decree of the Apostle's person to heaven and bliss. On the expression καλ. see Theophylact in Rec. Syn.

16. ἀποκαλύψαι—ἐν ἐμοί.] Some explain '[was pleased] to propagate the religion of His Son by me.' An interpretation, however, liable to not a few objections. And to sink the meaning of ἐν ἐμοὶ (with Koppe, Calvin, and Borger) would be uncritical. The ancient Commentators, and of the moderns, Winer, Schott, and Scott, εὐαγγελίζωμαι αὐτὸν ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν· εὐθέως οὐ προσανεθέ-μην σαρκὶ καὶ αἵματι, οὐδὲ ἀνῆλθον εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα πρὸς 17 τοὺς πρὸ ἐμοῦ ἀποστόλους, ἀλλ' ἀπῆλθον εἰς Ἀραβίαν, καὶ πάλιν ὑπέστρεψα εἰς Δαμασκόν. [n] Ἔπειτα μετὰ ἔτη τρία 18 ἀνῆλθον εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα ἱστορῆσαι Πέτρον, καὶ ἐπέμεινα πρὸς αὐτὸν ἡμέρας δεκαπέντε· [o] ἕτερον δὲ τῶν ἀποστόλων οὐκ 19 εἶδον, εἰ μὴ Ἰάκωβον τὸν ἀδελφὸν τοῦ Κυρίου. [p] Ἃ δὲ γράφω 20 n Acts 9. 26.

o Mark 6. 3.
p Rom. 1. 9. & 9. 1. 2 Cor. 1. 23. & 11. 31. 1 Thess. 2. 5. 1 Tim. 5. 21. 2 Tim. 4. 1.

seem right in regarding this as a strong expression, for 'in my mind and heart.' Ἀποκ. has reference to what was said at ver. 12; and, indeed, vv. 13, 14, are, in some measure, parenthetical. The words following state the purpose of this revelation,—that he should propagate the religion of His Son to the Gentiles, not confining it to Jews,—and consequently rejecting Judaism, as a religion for the world at large.

Εὐθέως (as Koppe and Winer remark) properly belongs to ἀπῆλθον in the next verse; though, in consequence of the long clause interposed, a change of construction is introduced by ἀλλά. Προσανατίθεσθαι signifies properly 'to commit any thing to another,' and especially to deposit any secret, or communicate any information to another, lay one's case open to him, to refer it to him, confer with, and consult him upon any matter. So Diod. Sic. xvii. 116, cited by Wetstein, τοῖς μάντεσι προσαναθέμενος περὶ τοῦ σημείου. Σαρκὶ καὶ αἵμ. may mean 'any man' (by a tacit opposition to God and Christ before named), not even the Apostles, who are just after particularly mentioned: though some (as Koppe, Schulz, and others) take it to signify, 'in consilium non adhibui sensus et affectus humanos.' Both senses may be included; q. d. 'I neither consulted with men, nor conferred with the dictates of my own mind and feelings;' or rather, 'of my own, or any human, reason.' A view of the sense supported by the authority of Œcumenius and Hyperius, of whom the latter observes, 'per carnem et sanguinem generaliter homines et humana ratio intelligitur.' So Matt. xvi. 17, σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα οὐκ ἀπεκάλυψέ σοι, ἀλλ' ὁ Πατήρ μου ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. By τοὺς πρὸ ἐμοῦ ἀποστ. it is intimated that, at the time of the revelation in question, he received such information, as placed him on a footing with the Apostles,—even those who had been invested with that office by Christ himself; nay, even above them, since he had received his illumination in a more extraordinary manner than they had.

17—19. On the circumstances here adverted to, see Acts ix. 25—28, and Notes, and especially the Note in Recens. Synop. on the present passage. The discrepancies, which occur in the two accounts, may, in a great measure, be attributed to the difference of the circumstances in which the general historian is placed, as compared with those of the writer of a personal narrative. The former necessarily speaks in general terms; the latter descends to particularities of time, place, and persons; see Paley. As to the journey into Arabia not being mentioned by St. Luke, it may very well be accounted for on that principle; see Recens. Synop. So little, indeed, is here said, that to exactly adjust the chronology of the Apostle's life is next to impossible. As to the reconcilement of the diversity, which seems to subsist between the Apostles, in order to settle the chronology, no method that I have yet seen can well be thought quite satisfactory. I may, therefore, be permitted to suggest, that there seems to be nothing in the words of St. Paul to lead us to suppose that his stay in Arabia was otherwise than short; nor need we suppose that the journey was a very long one. It was probably taken, in a great measure, for the purpose of restoring his health; since it is said at Acts ix. 19 that he ἐνίσχυσεν, which implies that he was then only in a state of convalescence. And at this very period (when, according to the words of St. Luke, we find he had remained at Damascus some days) I would fix the first journey into Arabia, which, as having occupied but a very short time, and affording no circumstances of moment, St. Luke omits, continuing his narration with εὐθέως ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς ἐκήρυσσε. And surely the propriety of the term εὐθέως will scarcely be affected by this short interposed journey. Certain it is, that the words καὶ εὐθέως—Χριστὸς must refer to another narrative. For I cannot acquiesce in the opinion of Kuinoel, that with the ἱκαναὶ ἡμέραι may be numbered the ἡμέραι τινὲς mentioned at ver. 19. The state of the Apostle's health would not admit of his immediately resuming his evangelical labours at Damascus; and that, as we see, is not at variance with St. Paul's account. Finally, I would understand the words of St. Luke, ὡς δὲ ἐπληροῦντο ἡμέραι ἱκαναί, of the whole time of St. Paul's second sojourn at Damascus; which, by his own account here, must have extended to not much less than three years. Or we may suppose the narrative of what took place in his second stay at Damascus, to commence at ver. 22, Σαῦλος δέ, &c. And though that may seem scarcely warranted by the words, yet it must be remembered, that the expression ἡμέραι, by an Hebraism, has often only the general signification of time, and that ἱκανὸς is a term of extensive application, and is often used of a somewhat long period. Upon the whole, there can be little difficulty in understanding St. Luke's words of as considerable a time as St. Paul's require.

18. ἱστορῆσαι Πέτρον.] Ἱστορεῖν signifies either 'to ascertain any thing by inquiry, or any person by personal examination;' but sometimes, as here, 'to visit for the purpose of becoming acquainted with any one by personal communication.' So Josephus, Bell. vi. 1. 8, ὃν (scil. Julianum) ἱστόρησα, 'whom when I came to know and be with.' See Acts ix. 26, 27.

19. Ἰάκωβον.] To which of the three Jameses this is to be referred, Commentators are not agreed; see Recens. Synop. The most probable opinion seems to be that of most Commentators, ancient and modern, that this James was not brother, but cousin or kinsman, of our Lord, and 21 ὑμῖν, ἰδοὺ, ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅτι οὐ ψεύδομαι. [q] Ἔπειτα q Acts 9. 30.

22 ἦλθον εἰς τὰ κλίματα τῆς Συρίας καὶ τῆς Κιλικίας· ἤμην δὲ ἀγνοούμενος τῷ προσώπῳ ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Ἰουδαίας 23 ταῖς ἐν Χριστῷ· μόνον δὲ ἀκούοντες ἦσαν, ὅτι ὁ διώκων ἡμᾶς ποτὲ, νῦν εὐαγγελίζεται τὴν πίστιν ἥν ποτε ἐπόρθει· 24, 1 καὶ ἐδόξαζον ἐν ἐμοὶ τὸν Θεόν. II. [a] Ἔπειτα διὰ δεκα- a Acts 15. 2.
τεσσάρων ἐτῶν πάλιν ἀνέβην εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα μετὰ Βαρνάβα, 2 συμπαραλαβὼν καὶ Τίτον. [b] Ἀνέβην δὲ κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν, b Acts 19. 21. Phil. 2. 16.
καὶ ἀνεθέμην αὐτοῖς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ὃ κηρύσσω ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσι, κατ' ἰδίαν δὲ τοῖς δοκοῦσι, μήπως εἰς κενὸν τρέχω, ἢ 3 ἔδραμον. [c] Ἀλλ' οὐδὲ Τίτος ὁ σὺν ἐμοὶ, Ἕλλην ὢν, ἠναγ- c Acts 16. 3. 1 Cor. 9. 21.

a son of Alpheus; an opinion maintained formerly by Winer, who, however, is now not disinclined to think that ἀδελφ. should here be taken in its usual sense brother. And this, he supposes, was James the Bishop of Jerusalem.

20. Here we have a solemn asseveration, by oath, of the truth of what had been said, similar to those at Rom. ix. 1. 2 Cor. xi. 31. Ἰδοὺ, 'mind!' Before ὅτι supply ὄμνυμι. The argument, as Whitby observes, is this: 'Having, therefore, preached the Gospel so long before I saw them, and staying so little while with them, and going then only to see, not to learn of them, it cannot be conceived I should receive my instructions how to preach the Gospel from them.'

21. Συρίας.] By Syria is here to be understood (as appears from Acts ix. 30) that part of Syria called Phœnice. (Winer.)

22. Ἰουδαίας.] Meaning 'the country of Judæa,' as opposed to its capital, Jerusalem.

23. ἀκούοντες ἦσαν.] The Commentators usually consider this as standing for ἤκουον. But there is rather a reference to the thing as customary. Instead of ἀκούοντες, grammatical propriety would have required ἀκούουσαι. But here we have a construction πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον, frequent in the best writers. It is chiefly adopted where (as here) there would be an incongruity in the use of the feminine; the nature of the subject requiring the dignity of the masculine gender.

24. ἐν ἐμοὶ] 'on my account,' for the mercy of God is shown in my conversion.

II. The Apostle here continues the proof of his Divine commission, vv. 1—10; and then, in illustration of the nature and extent of it, recounts (vv. 11—14) his expostulation with even St. Peter. This enables him to introduce the argument of justification by faith, the principal subject he meant to treat of in this Epistle.

1. διὰ δεκατεσσάρων ἐτῶν] 'after the lapse or intervention of 14 years.' This use of διὰ for διαγενομένων occurs also in Mark ii. 1, and Acts xxiv. 17. On the chronological difficulty involved in the words, see Recens. Synop., Paley, Borger, Winer, and Schott. For δεκατ. they read τεσσάρων; rightly, I think. The interpretation of πάλιν depends upon the view adopted of the preceding.

2. ἀνέβην κατὰ ἀποκάλ.] Koppe and Borger show that this account is not inconsistent with that at Acts xv. 2; for though he went up, as appointed by the Antiochians, yet his determination to comply with their request (which he had many reasons to decline) might be, and, it appears, was from a Divine order.

— ἀνεθέμην αὐτοῖς τὸ εὐ.] 'I set forth, or laid before them the Gospel;' by which seems to be meant the setting forth those prominent points, as to the disuse of the rites of the Mosaic law, the free admission of the Gentiles without binding them thereto, and perhaps some of the mysterious doctrines of the Gospel, which seem to have been especially treated on by St. Paul; on all which accounts he might well style it his Gospel. At τοῖς δοκοῦσι we may supply εἶναί τι, which is expressed at ver. 6. In the Classical writers, indeed, the word is generally omitted. So Porphyry, cited by De Rhoer, opposes τὰ πλήθη to τοῖς δοκοῦσι. The expression is well explained by Theodoret, ἔνσημοι, 'persons of' mark, the Apostles and Presbyters; see ver. 9. This was done 'privately,' because (as Abp. Newcome observes) 'many could not bear the doctrine, that the Gentiles had a right to admission into the Christian Church, and that all converts were exempted from Jewish observances.'

— μήπως—ἔδραμον.] Meaning, as most modern Commentators suppose, 'lest, by not making this communication, I might be misrepresented by my calumniators, and misunderstood by the Apostles;' through whose discountenance the good effects, both past and future, of his labours would be diminished. Far more natural, however, is the sense assigned by Chrysostom, Theophylact, Œcumenius, Hyper., Cameron, and Borger, 'lest I should be really thought to labour, or have laboured in vain;' i. e. erroneously, and under mistake; which was what his calumniators pretended.

In τρέχω we may observe an agonistic metaphor, for μοχθέω, which occurs in the well-known adage, Ἀνὴρ ἄβουλος εἰς κενὸν μοχθεῖ.

3. ἀλλ' οὐδὲ Τ., &c.] The connexion is well laid down by Winer as follows: 'But so far were they from setting me right, that they did not even order Titus, though a Greek, to be circumcised:' an irrefragable proof that they did not believe in the necessity of circumcision, but thought with Paul on that subject. Ἀναγκάζεσθαι is often used, as here, of the moral compulsion of strong persuasion or urgent remonstrance.

κάσθη περιτμηθῆναι. [d] Διὰ δὲ τοὺς παρεισάκτους ψευδα- 4 δέλφους, οἵτινες παρεισῆλθον κατασκοπῆσαι τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἡμῶν ἣν ἔχομεν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ἵνα ἡμᾶς καταδουλώσωνται . . . οἷς οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν εἴξαμεν τῇ ὑποταγῇ, ἵνα ἡ 5 ἀλήθεια τοῦ εὐαγγελίου διαμείνῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς. [e] Ἀπὸ δὲ 6 τῶν δοκούντων εἶναί τι, ὁποῖοί ποτε ἦσαν, οὐδέν μοι διαφέρει· πρόσωπον Θεὸς ἀνθρώπου οὐ λαμβάνει· ἐμοὶ γὰρ οἱ δοκοῦντες οὐδὲν προσανέθεντο· [f] ἀλλὰ τοὐναντίον, ἰδόντες 7 d Acts 15. 24.

e Deut. 10. 17. 2 Chron. 19. 7. Job. 34. 19. Wisd. 6. 7. Acts 10. 34. Rom. 2. 11. Eph. 6. 9. Col. 3. 25. 1 Pet. 1. 17.
f Acts 13. 46. Rom. 11. 13. 1 Tim. 2. 7. 2 Tim. 1. 11.

4, 5. διὰ δὲ τοὺς παρεισάκτους, &c.] A certain difficulty here presents itself, arising from imperfect construction; nay, the sentiment itself has been objected to, on the ground that if Titus remained uncircumcised on account of the false brethren, it may be inferred, that if there had been no false brethren, he would have been circumcised, which runs counter to the Apostle's argument. To remove this difficulty, several of the more recent Commentators maintain the sense to be, that Titus was actually circumcised. They would lay a strong emphasis on the foregoing expression at ver. 3, ἠναγκάσθη (as denoting that the circumcision, though not compelled, was judged expedient), and removing the words οἷς οὐδὲ here (though without any evidence, external or internal), suppose the meaning to be, 'We consented for a short time, thus more effectually consulting the permanent interests of the Gospel.' But to this violent method of removing the difficulty it will not be necessary to have recourse, if, as we very well may, we connect διὰ δὲ τοὺς παρεισάκτους not with the words preceding, but with those following. Some verb, indeed, will then seem wanting; and accordingly Rosenmuller, Borger, and Iaspis would repeat ἀνέβην or ἀνεθέμην: a mode, however, which involves something far too arbitrary and factitious to be safely admitted; and the same may be said of that adopted by Winer, who would interpret διὰ δὲ, 'quod autem pertinet ad,' and take οἷς for τούτοις. It would rather seem that there is an anacoluthon, occasioned by the introduction of the parenthetical clause οἵτινες—καταδουλ.; or rather, that thereby not only the thread of the construction is abandoned, but some word or phrase, which the Apostle would otherwise have used, is altogether lost, though easy to be supplied from the context; namely, οὕτως ἐποίουν, with reference to his whole conduct on that occasion, both in going up to Jerusalem, and in the measures he adopted when there. I have pointed accordingly.

To consider the passage in detail;—παρεισάκτους signifies, 'who had been introduced,' or 'had insinuated themselves into the society;' by a use of παρὰ also found in παραδύω, παρεισέρχομαι, &c. 'The persons in question are,' observes Chandler, 'called false brethren as being artful and designing men, who meant to ensnare the Apostle, and take some advantage, from his doctrine or conduct, to the prejudice of Christian liberty.' By ἡμᾶς is meant not only Paul and Titus, but the congregation at large in Antioch. Καταδουλώσωνται. Literally, 'that they might make us their slaves;' for καταδουλ., in the Middle voice, signifies 'to make any one a slave to oneself;' and hence corresponds to the Hebr. העביד in Exod. i. 14. and vi. 5. The reading καταδουλώσουσιν, found in several of the ancient MSS., is plainly an emendation, proceeding from some who did not well discern the strong force of the Middle verb. In οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν we have a popular form of expression, meaning 'not for an instant,' i. e. not at all. Τῇ ὑποταγῇ, for πρὸς ὑποταγὴν, i. e. ὥστε ὑποτάσσεσθαι, which is a much stronger term than εἴκειν. This 'not yielding to them' is to be understood of the matter in dispute, the necessity of the law to salvation. The Apostle, it seems, was inclined to yield, as far as was allowable, in tenderness to weak consciences; but was resolved not to abandon the momentous matter in dispute. This firmness was adopted ἵνα ἡ ἀλήθεια—ὑμᾶς: i. e. 'that the pure and unadulterated Gospel might remain with the Gentiles, and not be perverted or destroyed by Judaizing teachers.' By ὑμᾶς we are to understand not the Galatians only, but the Gentile Christians in general; q. d. 'you Gentiles.'

6. In this verse again there is an anacoluthon; the Apostle intending to write ἀπὸ τῶν δοκούντων—οὐδέν μοι προσανετέθη, οὐδὲν προσελαβόμην; though, by reason of a somewhat long parenthesis, he drops the thread of the construction, and thus changes the Genitive into a Nominative, as it were resuming what was said before the parenthesis; the γὰρ being resumptive.

— τῶν δοκούντων εἶναί τι.] Render, 'those who were of repute,' or thought to be of consequence. So Josephus, Antiq. xix. 6. 3, οἱ δοκοῦντες ἐξέχειν, and Bell. i. 5. 3, οἱ δοκοῦντες προέχειν. Philo, Vit. ii. p. 537. 20, δόξας τὶς εἶναι κατ' ἀρχὰς, οὐκέτ' ὁμοίως αὖθις ἐσπουδάζετο. Herodian vi. 1, τοὺς δοκοῦντας, καὶ ἡλικίᾳ σεμνοτάτους.

— ὁποῖοί ποτε] qualescunque. Meaning to say, that 'let their dignity or reputation be as great as it might, it was not so great as to render it necessary for him to be taught by them.'

— οὐδέν μοι διαφέρει.] Meaning, 'it does not affect my authority as an Apostle.' So Ælian, Var. Hist. i. 25, ἐμοὶ οὐδὲν διαφέρει. On the expression πρόσωπον ἀνθρώπου οὐ λαμβάνει, see Note at Acts x. 34.

— οἱ δοκοῦντες οὐδὲν προσανέθεντο.] We have here a paronomasia; q. d. 'those who were thought something [great], added nothing to me;' i. e. to my knowledge of the Gospel. This (as Calvin and Hyperius show) is brought in not from any vain-glorious spirit, but by way of asserting the weightiness of his doctrinal authority; the words furnishing another argument that the doctrine he had taught was consummate and in no respect deficient; implying, perhaps, 'made no alteration in the Gospel I had taught.'

ὅτι πεπίστευμαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς ἀκροβυστίας, καθὼς 8 Πέτρος τῆς περιτομῆς· ([g] ὁ γὰρ ἐνεργήσας Πέτρῳ εἰς ἀποστολὴν τῆς περιτομῆς, ἐνήργησε καὶ ἐμοὶ εἰς τὰ ἔθνη·)
9 καὶ γνόντες τὴν χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι, Ἰάκωβος καὶ Κηφᾶς καὶ Ἰωάννης, οἱ δοκοῦντες στύλοι εἶναι, δεξιὰς ἔδωκαν ἐμοὶ καὶ Βαρνάβᾳ κοινωνίας· ἵνα ἡμεῖς εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, 10 αὐτοὶ δὲ εἰς τὴν περιτομήν. [h] μόνον τῶν πτωχῶν ἵνα μνη-g Acts 9. 15. & 13. 2. & 22. 21. supra 1. 16. Eph. 3. 8.

h Acts 24. 17. Rom. 15. 25. 1 Cor. 16. 1. 2 Cor. 8. 1. & 9. 1.

7. ἀλλὰ τοὐν.] Meaning, 'nay, so far from teaching me any thing, or supposing that they had any thing to teach me, they acknowledged my Divine commission, and, seeing that I was instructed, &c., they gave the right hand of fellowship [as Apostles] to me and Barnabas.' At πεπίστ. supply ὑπὸ Θεοῦ; for a divine communication is implied. See 1 Cor. ix. 17. Rom. iii. 2, and Notes. Τὸ εὐαγγ. τῆς ἀκροβυστίας signifies the preaching of the Gospel to the uncircumcised. The nouns ἀκροβυστία and περιτομὴ are frequently, as here, put for the participles οἱ περιτετμημένοι, &c. St. Peter was chiefly, but not entirely, occupied with the Jews; and St. Paul chiefly, but not wholly, with the Gentiles: the former had for his assistants principally James and John; the latter, Barnabas, himself divinely appointed to this office, whom the Greeks have, therefore, not ill styled the fourteenth Apostle.

8. This verse is parenthetical, and the γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[And this is very true;] for he who,' &c. Ἐνεργεῖν properly signifies, 'to work an effect in, or on, any thing or person;' and, as Winer observes, is often used 'de efficaciâ Dei, quæ ad rem Christianam pertinet,' as iii. 11. Eph. i. 11. Phil. ii. 13. 1 Cor. xii. 6. He aptly compares a similar construction in Prov. xxxi. (xxix.) 12, γυνὴ ἐνεργεῖ τῷ ἀνδρὶ εἰς ἀγαθόν. The ἐν has reference to the immediate and extraordinary mode in which each of the two Apostles was appointed to his peculiar charge. Εἰς ἀπ. τῆς περ. is for εἰς τὸ ἀπόστολον αὐτὸν εἶναι τοῖς περιτετμημένοις; and εἰς τὰ ἔθνη is for εἰς ἀποστολὴν τῶν ἐθνῶν.

9. γνόντες.] This, and ἰδόντες at ver. 7, are in apposition with the Nominative cases to the verb ἔδωκαν, which are Ἰάκωβος, καὶ Κηφᾶς, καὶ Ἰωάννης. Τὴν χάριν, scil. τῆς ἀποστολῆς, as χάριν καὶ ἀποστολὴν in Rom. i. 5. Χάρις may have reference to the supernatural χαρίσματα necessary to the discharge of the office; or we may, with Borger, render, 'the favour bestowed upon me in conferring the Apostleship.'

— οἱ δοκοῦντες στύλοι εἶναι is incorrectly rendered, 'who seemed or appeared,' &c.; for there is nothing of doubt meant, though, to take δοκ. (as many do) for οἱ ὄντες, is too arbitrary. The full sense intended is, 'those who were justly reputed to be.' In στύλοι εἶναι, scil. ἐκκλησίας, or τῆς πίστεως, there is an architectural metaphor, wherein the Christian society is compared to an edifice, such as the Temple at Jerusalem, of which the main pillars are the Apostles. See 1 Cor. iii. 16. 1 Tim. iii. 15. Eph. ii. 21, 22. 1 Pet. ii. 5. So Maimon. cited by Wetstein calls the Prophets 'columnæ generis humani in rectâ fide.' Eurip. ap. Wetstein calls male offspring στύλοι οἴκων; and Philo, cited by Borger, says that good men κίονες εἰσὶ, δῆμον ὅλον ὑπερείδοντες.

— δεξιὰς ἔδωκαν—κοινωνίας.] Indicating not merely (as Rosenmuller and Koppe imagine) friendship, and consent in doctrine, but chiefly, acknowledgment of his Apostleship in common with themselves; which it seems to have been a principal purpose of St. Paul to bring them to acknowledge. The giving the right hand is to be regarded as a symbolical action, denoting union, whether of fellowship in any office, or of compact as to any matter. So Virgil, Æn. vii. 266, 'Pars mihi pacis erit dextram tetigisse tyranni.' Here, it would seem, both fellowship (implying parity in office and dignity) and compact are meant; the former principally, the latter secondarily. And, indeed, such seems adverted to in ἵνα, &c. following. The full sense, then, is: 'They formally acknowledged us as fellow-Apostles, and it was agreed that the Gospel should be preached by us in common, so that we should go to the Gentiles, and they to the circumcision.' The phrase δεξιὰν δοῦναι is found both in the New Test. and Sept., and also in the Classical writers. At ἡμεῖς and αὐτοὶ supply εὐαγγελιζώμεθα and εὐαγγελίζωνται, from τὸ εὐαγγέλιον at v. 7.

After ἡμεῖς several ancient MSS. and some Versions and Fathers have μὲν, which has been admitted by Griesbach, Matthæi, Tittman, Schott, and Scholz, but injudiciously; since internal evidence is quite against it. It was, I doubt not, inserted by the Alexandrian critics, in order to make the correspondence with the following clause αὐτοὶ δὲ, &c. more direct.

10. μόνον τῶν πτωχῶν ἵνα μνημ.] Supply αἰτοῦντες or παρακαλοῦντες: an ellipsis, frequent after μόνον or πλὴν, and before ἵνα; as 2 Cor. viii. 7. Eph. v. 33. Compare v. 13. 1 Cor. vii. 39. The complete sense is: '[They did not wish to impede or circumscribe our liberty of action as Apostles, by any rules or directions of theirs, but] they only desired that we would be mindful of the poor.' In μνημ. (as in זכר, Ps. viii. 4. and Luke xxiii. 42) there is, as often, an ellipsis of some verb of relieving or helping, from delicacy omitted. By τῶν πτ. must be understood, not the poor generally (for as almsgiving held a very high place in the Jewish as well as Christian religion, that would have been needless to urge on St. Paul), but those of Judæa in particular. See Recens. Synop., where is pointed out the reason for this injunction, and the expediency, and even justice, of the relief of the poor Christians in Judæa by the Gentiles.

— ὃ καὶ ἐσπούδασα—ποιῆσαι.] Koppe and other Commentators here recognise a pleonasm in αὐτὸ τοῦτο, which they compare with a similar use of the Hebrew demonstrative זה after the relative אשר. While others (as Winer, Borneμονεύωμεν· ὃ καὶ ἐσπούδασα αὐτὸ τοῦτο ποιῆσαι. Ὅτε δὲ 11

ἦλθε Πέτρος εἰς Ἀντιόχειαν, κατὰ πρόσωπον αὐτῷ ἀντ-έστην, ὅτι κατεγνωσμένος ἦν. πρὸ τοῦ γὰρ ἐλθεῖν τινὰς 12
ἀπὸ Ἰακώβου, μετὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν συνήσθιεν· ὅτε δὲ ἦλθον, ὑπέστελλε καὶ ἀφώριζεν ἑαυτὸν, φοβούμενος τοὺς ἐκ περι-τομῆς. καὶ συνυπεκρίθησαν αὐτῷ καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ Ἰουδαῖοι· 13
i Acts 10.28. ὥστε καὶ Βαρνάβας συναπήχθη αὐτῶν τῇ ὑποκρίσει. [i] Ἀλλ' 14
ὅτε εἶδον, ὅτι οὐκ ὀρθοποδοῦσι πρὸς τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, εἶπον τῷ Πέτρῳ ἔμπροσθεν πάντων· "Εἰ σὺ, Ἰουδαῖος ὑπάρχων, ἐθνικῶς ζῇς καὶ οὐκ Ἰουδαϊκῶς, ‡ τί τὰ mann, and Schott) suppose an anacoluthon; the ὃ being suspended on ποιῆσαι, and the αὐτὸ brought in, κατ' ἐπανόρθωσιν, to explain the pronoun relative. There may, however, be no more than a blending of two constructions (viz. ὃ ποιῆσαι ἐσπ. and καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐσπ. ποιῆσαι), which has usually an intensive force. Render, 'Which very thing I was of myself even desirous to do.'

11. ὅτε δὲ ἦλθε Π. εἰς Ἀ.] On the time of this visit (not mentioned in the Acts) the learned are not agreed. It was, no doubt, after Paul's return from Jerusalem to Antioch; and it is, with most probability, supposed by Koppe to have taken place a short time after that period, and been made for the purpose of personally inspecting the state of the Antiochian Church, and, by his authority and influence, composing the yet remaining differences in it. Κατὰ πρόσωπον has the same sense as ἔμπροσθεν πάντων at v. 14. The phrase ἀνθίστημι κατὰ πρόσ. occurs also at 2 Chron. xiii. 7, 8, and Deut. vii. 24. Ἀντέστη seems to carry with it the double sense of withstanding and confuting.

— ὅτι κατεγνωσμένος ἦν.] Render, 'because he deserved to be condemned,' i. e. severely censured; participle for adjective, as ψηλαφωμένῳ at Hebr. xii. 18. His conduct (as Chandler observes) was highly reprehensible, because it was against knowledge, and tended to the subversion of Christian simplicity.

12. ἐλθεῖν τινὰς ἀπὸ Ἰ.] The persons were, no doubt, Jewish converts and Judaizers. The words do not necessarily imply that they were sent by James, though we cannot infer less than that they had his consent for their journey; and probably they had some letters from him to Peter and to Paul. They seem to have been some of the persons characterized at v. 4. By ἐθνῶν the best Expositors understand, not Pagans, but Gentile Christians. Συνήσθ. must here chiefly denote eating with; though it may include the sense of associating with. The determination of the dispute on the lawfulness of the former required a speech from St. James, and a decretory Epistle from the Apostles. Acts xv.

— ὑπέστελλε.] Here there is no occasion to supply ἑαυτὸν, since ἑαυτὸν just after seems to be meant for both ὑπ. and ἀφ.; the latter of which terms is the stronger. Τοὺς ἐκ περιτ. Meaning the Jews, or the Jewish converts, as Acts x. 45.

13. συνυπεκρίθ.] Lit., 'dissembled with him,' 'practised the same dissimulation with him.' The word is properly an histrionic term, and occurs only in the later writers. Two examples of it are adduced by Wetstein from Plutarch and Polybius, yet not as followed by a pronoun in the dative. Of this, however, I have noted an instance in Joseph. Bell. i. 29. 1, αἷς συνυπεκρίνατο Ἀντ.

— ὥστε καὶ Βαρνάβας συναπήχθη, &c.] These words show the effect of this conduct of Peter. In συναπήχθη we have a metaphor taken from any one's being hurried away along with a crowd, as it were by a torrent. The same expression occurs at 2 Pet. iii. 17, ἵνα μὴ τῇ τῶν ἀθέσμων πλάνῃ συναπαχθέντες.

14. οὐκ ὀρθοποδοῦσι πρὸς, &c.] Ὀρθοποδεῖν signifies properly 'to direct one's footsteps aright;' but is here used figuratively to denote that they did not act uprightly, and agreeably to the true spirit of the Gospel, which forbids disingenuousness; namely, by thus compromising the truth contained in it.

— ἐθνικῶς ζῇς] 'livest like the Gentiles,' i. e. in non-observance of the Mosaic Law. Ἰουδαΐζειν is for Ἰουδαϊκῶς ζῆν, 'to observe the Jewish Law.' Ἀναγκ. denotes the moral compulsion of strong influence; for Peter seemed to employ his influence, at least by example, to induce the Gentile converts to submit to circumcision, and put themselves under the Jewish Law. The Apostle's argument (observes Dr. Chandler) is as follows: 'If we who are Jews, and born under the Law, have nevertheless believed in Christ for justification, then it is evident that we think justification is not to be obtained by the Law of Moses, but by believing in Christ. But we have believed in Christ for justification: therefore we think justification is not to be obtained by the Law of Moses, but by believing in Christ.' Again, 'If we, who are Jews, believe that justification cannot be had by the Law of Moses, but by faith in Christ, then we are to be blamed to compel the Gentiles to conform to the Law of Moses for justification. But we believe that justification cannot be had, &c.: therefore we are to be blamed for compelling,' &c.

For τί several MSS. and some Versions and Latin Fathers have πῶς, which is edited by Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, Winer, Schott, and Scholz; but perhaps on insufficient grounds. Versions are, in such a case, no good evidence; and the MSS. in question are not many in number, and being of the Western recension, might be corrupted from the Vulgate 'quomodo.' It is true that πῶς is the most difficult reading; and

15 ἔθνη ἀναγκάζεις Ἰουδαΐζειν; ἡμεῖς, φύσει Ἰουδαῖοι καὶ οὐκ 16 ἐξ ἐθνῶν ἁμαρτωλοί· [k] εἰδότες ὅτι οὐ δικαιοῦται ἄνθρωπος k Ps. 143. 2. Rom. 1. 17.
ἐξ ἔργων νόμου, ἐὰν μὴ διὰ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· καὶ & 3. 20, 28. & 8. 3. infra 3. 11.
ἡμεῖς εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν ἐπιστεύσαμεν, ἵνα δικαιωθῶμεν ἐκ πίστεως Χριστοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων νόμου· διότι οὐ δικαι-17 ωθήσεται ἐξ ἔργων νόμου πᾶσα σάρξ. Εἰ δὲ ζητοῦντες δικαιωθῆναι ἐν Χριστῷ, εὑρέθημεν καὶ αὐτοὶ ἁμαρτωλοί,— as it is very unusual in this expostulatory sense, τί might seem to be a gloss; yet had πῶς been originally written, it is impossible to suppose it should have been so generally altered to τί.

15. It is not agreed, among Editors and Commentators, whether the Apostle's address to Peter terminates at v. 14, or is carried forward; and if so, where it terminates. Many think it is continued to the end of the chapter; while some suppose it to terminate at v. 17; others, at v. 16; others, again, at νόμου in v. 16; and others, at v. 14. Weighty reasons are alleged in support of almost all the above opinions, especially the first and last. The question is, I apprehend, one that cannot be brought to any absolute decision. For, as observes Schott, 'in ipsâ quidem serie et indole sententiarum hujus sectionis, nihil apparet, quo alterutrum certo comprobetur.' The scope will, in either case, be precisely the same; namely, to maintain the doctrine that a man is not justified by the works of the Law, but by the faith of Christ. In the one, it will be part of the address from Paul to Peter; in the other, it will be a general statement of the reasons on which Paul acted in thus addressing Peter. But it would seem, that if we suppose the address to extend beyond v. 14, (and the nature of the construction obliges us to do so; for otherwise, as Winer observes, the Apostle would certainly have added some word, to indicate that he was addressing the Galatians, as ἡμεῖς οὖν ἀδελφοί, &c.) we cannot suppose it to terminate at least until v. 17. Though, whether it terminates there, or at the end of the chapter, I would not positively affirm. In the former case, vv. 18—21 may be regarded as meant to be a further illustration of what the Apostle then said on the subject of justification by faith alone. And thus there will be, as Est. remarks, 'latens recessus à Petro, et ingressus ad materiam principalem,' i. e. a paving the way to the direct address to the Galatians, at iii. 1; a view, it may be observed, confirmed by the transition from the use of the plural to the singular number. Upon the whole, while, on the one hand, it would seem most simple and natural to suppose, with almost all the ancient and most modern Expositors, that at v. 15, seqq. the speech of Paul is concluded; so, on the other hand, it is more suitable to the manner of the Apostle to suppose that 18—21 contain a transition, as above.

— ἡμεῖς, φύσει, &c.] Ἡμεῖς ought to be construed with εἰδότες a little further on; the two words forming nominatives absolute, put for a verb and particle. For want of perceiving this (which, indeed, seems to have escaped the Commentators), the ancient Critics subjoined δὲ, which has been injudiciously received, from a comparatively few MSS., by Griesbach, Tittman, Schott, and Scholz. At Ἰουδαῖοι supply ὄντες; this corresponding to Ἰουδαῖος ὑπάρχων in the preceding verse. Render: 'since we, who are Jews by nature or birth;' a sense of φύσει sometimes found in the Classical writers. So Plato, 245, D. φύσει μὲν βάρβαροι ὄντες, νόμῳ δὲ Ἕλληνες. In ἐξ ἐθνῶν ἁμαρτωλοὶ we have a periphrasis for ἐθνικοὶ ἁμαρτωλοί; this being a customary appellation of the Gentiles (as οἱ ἅγιοι of the Christians) with reference chiefly to the idolatry and gross immorality closely connected with their very religion.

16. On the doctrine here inculcated see Rom. iii. 20, 28, and Notes, and compare infra iii. 17—19. Ἐὰν μὴ, for ἀλλά.

— καὶ ἡμεῖς] 'Even we, I say, notwithstanding our Jewish privileges;' q. d. 'much more should the Gentiles, so far below us in that respect.' In the next clause we have (as Estius observes) by means of διότι, connected with the preceding, not (as some suppose) an inference from the foregoing, but a further inculcation of the same position; which is thus considered as confessedly true.

— οὐ πᾶσα σάρξ.] Meaning, 'no human being.' A form of expression quite Hebraic. See Note on Matt. xii. 25. The reason for this inability in the Law will appear from what is said in various parts of the Epistle to the Romans.

17. The Apostle now proceeds to confirm the foregoing position. Previously, however, to adducing any direct argument in proof of it, he preoccupies a scruple, or doubt, as if the doctrine might seem to give a license to sin. An objection to which the Apostle answers, first, by a solemn disavowal; and then propounds two solutions of the difficulty; 1. (v. 18) indirect, and deduced from the nature of contraries; it being absurd and impossible that Christ, who is confessedly the author of righteousness, should be the author of sin;—2. (v. 19) direct; in which the objection is more fully done away, by an argument deduced from the condition of the unregenerate, who are thereby spiritually dead. (Hyperius.)

— ζητοῦντες δικαιωθῆναι ἐν Χρ.] Meaning, (as the best Commentators are agreed,) 'while we seek to attain justification from Christ, resting all our hopes of it on him.' Εἰ εὑρέθημεν καὶ αὐτοὶ ἁμαρτωλοί, 'if we be found sinners;' i. e. 'if it be discovered that we are sinners;' which we must be, if we undertake to perform the whole of the Jewish Law. Meaning, 'if we are found to be still in our sins,' i. e. unjustified; namely, by clinging to the Law, and having recourse to it for expiation.

After this, regularity would have required ἄρα Χρ. ἁμαρτίας διάκονος, 'then it will follow that Christ is the author of sin' (i. e. of a dispensation which leaves men under the guilt and punishment of sin); a sort of reductio ad absurdum: and such is edited by Borger, Vater, and Winer;

l Rom. 6. 11, 14. & 7. 4, 6 & 8. 2. & 14. 7, &c. 2 Cor. 5. 15. 1 Thess. 5. 10.
m Rom. 6. 6. supra 1. 4. infra 5. 24. & 6. 14. Eph. 5. 2. Tit. 2. 14.

ἆρα Χριστὸς ἁμαρτίας διάκονος; μὴ γένοιτο! Εἰ γὰρ ἃ 18 κατέλυσα, ταῦτα πάλιν οἰκοδομῶ, παραβάτην ἐμαυτὸν συν-ίστημι. [l] ἐγὼ γὰρ διὰ νόμου νόμῳ ἀπέθανον, ἵνα Θεῷ 19 ζήσω. [m] Χριστῷ συνεσταύρωμαι· ζῶ δὲ οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ, ζῇ 20 δὲ ἐν ἐμοὶ Χριστός· ὃ δὲ νῦν ζῶ ἐν σαρκὶ, ἐν πίστει ζῶ τῇ τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦ ἀγαπήσαντός με καὶ παραδόντος

but as μὴ γένοιτο follows, which is, every where else in St. Paul's writings, preceded by an interrogation that cannot be admitted; and it is better to suppose, with Schott, that the Apostle stops short in the conclusion which he was going to draw, and changes it into the more spirited form of an interrogation, employing ἆρα, 'nonne?' not ἄρα, which enabled him to subjoin the strongest exception to such a conclusion, by μὴ γένοιτο!

18. εἰ γὰρ ἃ κατέλυσα, &c.] The first person singular is here used through delicacy, though the first person plural would be more suitable; a general assertion being intended. In κατέλ. and οἰκοδ. we have an architectural metaphor, taken from unwise builders, who pull down and build up again without due consideration, and thereby betray their own folly. By οἰκοδομῶ is meant, 'I observe, or countenance its observance, as necessary to justification;' and by κατέλυσα, 'I pronounce ineffectual for justification.' Παραβάτην ἐμαυτὸν συνίστημι, 'I set forth or declare myself a transgressor [of the Law];' i. e. (as Whitby explains) by not trusting in it for justification; or (as Newcome) 'by resting my acceptance with God on a Law which places me in the class of transgressors.' A sense of συνίστημι occurring also at Rom. iii. 5. v. 8. 2 Cor. vi. 4, and sometimes in the later Classical writers. 'The argument (observes Chandler) is this: "If I make the Law necessary to justification, after having renounced it for faith in Christ, as unable to justify me, then I am a transgressor of the Law for having thus renounced it. But to separate from the uncircumcised Christians, and compelling them by my example to be circumcised, is making the Law necessary to justification; though, as a Christian, I have renounced it for faith in Christ. Therefore I am a transgressor of it for having renounced it."'

19. ἐγὼ γὰρ διὰ νόμου—ζήσω.] On the force of ἐγὼ, see Note at 1 Cor. v. 3. On the sense of the remaining words, no little difference of opinion exists. That by νόμῳ is meant the law of Moses, is generally admitted; but on the purport of νόμου the Expositors are not agreed. Some ancient and modern ones take it to mean 'the Christian religion,' called infra vi. 2, ὁ νόμος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, and Rom. iii. 28, νόμος πίστεως, and ix. 31, νόμος δικαιοσύνης. This makes, indeed, a good sense in itself, yet one by no means suitable to the context; and it would indispensably require the Article, and also some substantive added. There can be little doubt that both νόμῳ and νόμου refer to one and the same thing; by which we obtain a weightier sentiment, namely, 'I, for my part, by the very Law itself (i. e. by the tenour of the Law, which condemned imperfect obedience, and, from its extreme strictness, left no hope of perfect obedience), am dead to the Law, i. e. am freed from the obligation to obey it, for justification.' See Calvin, Beza, Chandler, Winer, and Schott.

It is strange that Bp. Middleton (after Macknight) should so strenuously contend for νόμῳ and νόμου being rendered 'law,' (i. e. law of every kind) merely because there is no Article. For as the Mosaic Law is, in a great measure, the subject of the whole context, the Article might very well be omitted as unnecessary; and consistency requires the same thing to be meant throughout, as the Apostle is arguing in continuity. Besides, to see how inadmissible is the learned Prelate's interpretation, we have only to consider the extreme violence which it compels us to put on the phrase διὰ νόμου, in explaining it, as he does, 'by the imperfection belonging to law,' or (as Macknight) 'through breaking the law,'—both manifest glosses.

The words following, ἵνα Θεῷ ζήσω, are added by way of intimating that 'his purpose in dying to the Law, was not to lead a more lawless and careless life, but to live unto God; to serve, honour, and obey him with the zeal and cheerfulness of one justified by Him through faith in Christ.'

20. In this verse the Apostle more fully developes the sentiment of the preceding one.

— Χριστῷ συνεσταύρωμαι, &c.] i. e. 'omnis vita, quam ego antehac tanquam Judæus egi, adeoque omnia studia et officia, quibus ista vita regebatur (τὸ ζῆν τῷ νόμῳ, τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, τῇ σαρκὶ) nulla amplius sunt: novam nunc, ut homo Christianus, ingressus sum vitam (τὸ ζῆν τῷ Θεῷ, τῷ Χριστῷ, τῇ πίστει).' (Winer.) Such, too, is the view of the sense adopted by Chrysostom, Theophylact, Œcumenius, and, of the moderns, by Est., who, closely following them, well explains, 'per baptismum, qui symbolum est mortis et sepulturæ Christi; Christo commortuus sum et consepultus sum.'

— ζῶ δὲ—Χριστός.] This is usually explained, 'Nevertheless, I live; [or rather] not I live, but Christ liveth in me.' If this view be correct, there is in οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ a sort of epanorthosis, as at 1 Cor. xv. 10, ἐκοπίασα, οὐκ ἐγὼ δὲ, ἀλλ' ἡ χάρις. Yet here it may be observed we have not οὐκ, but οὐκ ἔτι; and such a use of δὲ were somewhat strained. Moreover, the sense thus arising is unsuitable to the words immediately preceding; for in what sense St. Paul could, in this context, say he lived, it is difficult to see. Hence it is better, with several eminent Translators and Expositors, to interpret, 'Vivo autem non amplius ego.' So the Pesch. Syr. renders it, 'deinceps nequaquam ego vivo.' By Christ's living in him is meant living in him by the power of his Spirit and grace, thus communicating a divine life to his soul. There is an allusion to that transformation to the image of God and Christ which is implied in regeneration. Compare Rom. xii. 2. Col. iii. 10.

The next words are exegetical of the preceding clause; the purport of them being, as Hyperius observes, 'to explain in what consisted that life

21 ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ. [n] Οὐκ ἀθετῶ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ· εἰ n Heb. 7. 11.
γὰρ διὰ νόμου δικαιοσύνη, ἄρα Χριστὸς δωρεὰν ἀπέθανεν."
1 III. [a] Ὦ ἈΝΟΗΤΟΙ Γαλάται! τίς ὑμᾶς ἐβάσκανε, a Infra 5. 7.
[τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι]; οἷς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς Ἰησοῦς Χρι- b Acts 2. 38. & 8. 15.
2 στὸς προεγράφη ἐν ὑμῖν ἐσταυρωμένος. [b] Τοῦτο μόνον θέλω & 15. 8. Eph. 1. 13.

which we are to live unto God, namely, faith in the Son of God.' Meaning, 'The life which I now live in the flesh I lead not on carnal principles, but subserviently to faith in the Son of God, depending solely upon Him, and the atonement made by the sacrifice of himself for me unto salvation, and abandoning all legal justification.' In τοῦ ἀγαπήσαντός με—ἐμοῦ there is an Hendiadys for, 'who so loved me as to yield himself up to death for me.'

21. οὐκ ἀθετῶ τὴν χ. τ. Θ., &c.] The sense of the passage is, from brevity, somewhat obscure; and it may best be represented in a paraphrase, as follows: 'By thus arguing, I do not frustrate the grace of God in the Gospel [which I should do, if I were to aim at obtaining justification by the Law]; for if justification in the sight of God, so as to be admitted into covenant with him, and consequently to become heirs of future glory (ver. 5), can arise from observing the Law, then there was another way to the divine favour on earth and in heaven than by the death of Christ; then the old covenant of the Law superseded the necessity of the new covenant by Christ.' Δωρεὰν, 'causelessly, or ineffectually:' so corresponding to חנם in Job i. 9, and Ezek. vi. 10, though the word is sometimes rendered μάτην.

III. Having previously vindicated his Apostleship, and briefly stated his doctrine of the method of justification by faith, the Apostle now proceeds to speak more authoritatively, and comes closer home to that important point, entering more fully into the subject of the abrogation of the Law. He argues, 1, with reference to the case of the Galatians; 2, from that of Abraham, showing the Law to have been only preparatory to the Gospel. And in order further to excite the attention of those whom he is addressing, he apostrophises them, employing an epithet (ἀνόητοι), which need not be pressed upon, even could it be proved that the Galatians were a stupid people; for insult we cannot imagine to have been intended by the Apostle; see Note on Acts xvii. 22. In short, we may suppose them to be called ἀνόητοι simply with reference to the levity and inconstancy whereby they had deserted the doctrines of the Apostle, which they had professed and engaged to follow, being so foolish as to suffer themselves to be deceived by the arts of false teachers. Agreeably to the description given of them by Themistius, Orat. xxiii., who ascribes to them the same characteristics as those of their ancestors, the Galli (and transmitted to their posterity, the modern French), namely, a quickness of apprehension, but united with levity and inconstancy; with which they are charged by Strabo, l. iv. p. 299. Nay, Callimachus, H. Del. 184, applied nearly the same epithet to them, as being ἄφρονι φύλῳ.

1. τίς ὑμᾶς ἐβάσκανε;] This is usually rendered, 'Who has bewitched you?' incantavit? Preferable, however, is the version of the Vulg., Pesch. Syr., and Calvin, fascinavit? since, from the words following, οἷς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς, there seems an allusion rather to the sleight of jugglers than to witchcraft. Such, too, is, I find, the view adopted by Macknight, and long before by Hyperius, who remarks, that the term is used properly to denote 'those who so impose on the senses of men, and especially the sight, that a thing appears in another form to what it really bears.' Thus, by a metaphor taken from the gross delusion produced on the vision by fascination, the term is used figuratively of that gross deceit practised on the understanding, by which that seems to be true, which is really false. Ἐβάσκανε is an Hellenistic form for the purer Greek ἐβάσκηνε, which is, indeed, found in some of the more recent MSS. and the Ed. Princ. and Erasmus; but is manifestly a correction. Τῇ ἀλ. μὴ πείθ. is dependent on ὥστε understood. By μὴ πείθ. τῇ ἀλ. is meant, as Grotius observes, not retaining the true doctrine once delivered to them, namely, justification through Christ alone. This clause is, indeed, not found in several ancient MSS. of the Western recension, some Versions, and many Fathers, and has been rejected by most Critics, and cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz, as introduced from v. 7. Yet that it should have been thus introduced is not very probable, the words being not absolutely necessary to complete the sense. It may rather be supposed that they were thrown out by those Alexandrian critics who wished to make the allusion, above pointed out, more distinct, and also to remove a certain harshness in the construction. Little studious, however, as to such matters, the Apostle chose to insert both clauses, in order to show in what sense he intended βασκάνειν to be here taken, and to confirm and illustrate what went before; for, as Hyperius well observes, 'fascinatio impedit, ut nequaquam res vera perspicitur, sed aliquid supposititium, aut superinducta imago seu ficta similitudo, falsa species.' Thus to remove the words would be to take away the chief force and point of the reproof.

— οἷς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς—ἐστ.] In προγράφειν we have a pictorial term, used with reference to paintings publicly (προ) exhibited. Here, however, it is used metaphorically; and the best Expositors are agreed that the sense of the clause is, 'You, to whom the great doctrine of the crucifixion of Christ [and the atonement by his blood, and not the rites of the Mosaic law] has been so plainly set forth [and fully expounded both in its causes and effects]:' which had been done partly by preaching (see 1 Cor. i. 23, and ii. 2) and partly by the lively representation of Christ crucified, in the Eucharist.

2. Having thus rebuked them, the Apostle proceeds to argue with them. (Chandler.)

— τοῦτο μόνον θέλω μαθεῖν, &c.] From the examples adduced by Wetstein this appears to have been a common formula, resorted to for the purpose of bringing an argument to a speedy μαθεῖν ἀφ' ὑμῶν· ἐξ ἔργων νόμου τὸ Πνεῦμα ἐλάβετε, ἢ ἐξ ἀκοῆς πίστεως; Οὕτως ἀνόητοί ἐστε; ἐναρξάμενοι πνεύματι, 3 c 2 John 8. νῦν σαρκὶ ἐπιτελεῖσθε; c τοσαῦτα ἐπάθετε εἰκῆ; εἴ γε καὶ 4 εἰκῆ. Ὁ οὖν ἐπιχορηγῶν ὑμῖν τὸ Πνεῦμα, καὶ ἐνεργῶν 5 δυνάμεις ἐν ὑμῖν, ἐξ ἔργων νόμου ἢ ἐξ ἀκοῆς πίστεως;

decision, by demanding an answer to one principal question, such as should, of itself, be sufficient to determine the whole matter at issue. The interrogation here has great spirit; and the Apostle's argument may be stated, in the words of Dr. Chandler, as follows: 'Those who are justified by faith in Christ need not conform to the law of Moses for justification; but Christians are justified by faith. Therefore, &c. That Christians are justified by faith is thus proved. Those who have received by faith that spirit from God, which is the great evidence of their justification, are justified by faith; but Christians have received. Therefore, &c.'

The argument is, as Hyperius remarks, 'one ex signo, i. e. from experience of the manifest effect of faith.' By τὸ Πνεῦμα must, as the best Expositors are agreed, be understood, not so much the ordinary gifts of the Spirit, as the extraordinary and supernatural ones by the laying on of hands (compare Acts x. 44, ἐπέπεσε τὸ Πνεῦμα, &c.), whereby the gift of tongues was communicated. 'It was (says Hyperius) expedient that, by such external signs the doctrine of the Gospel should be confirmed and propagated as widely as possible. Accordingly those gifts of the Spirit were communicated, as the full evidence that those who received them were the people of God.'

The full import of the words, which imply more than they express, is well stated by Chandler as follows: 'Did ye receive that Spirit, which was the fullest evidence of your being justified, accepted, and received as the children and people of God, by conformity to the law of Moses, or by embracing the doctrine of the Gospel? If by embracing the doctrine of the Gospel, then you became justified by embracing that doctrine, and consequently need not conform to the law of Moses, in order to obtain justification.'

— ἀκοῆς πίστεως.] 'Ακοῆς is by many said to stand for ὑπακοῆς. But it rather denotes the hearing, or being instructed in (as Rom. x. 17); and πίστις here signifies 'the Gospel, as opposed to the Law.' So in 1 Thess. ii. 13, λόγον ἀκοῆς is equivalent to τὸν λόγον τὸν ἀκουόμενον. Ἔργων is prefixed to νόμου, as in a kindred passage of Rom. ix. 32, in order to hint at the nature of the Law, as one of works; and ἀκοῆς to πίστ., because, as the Apostle says, Rom. x. 17, 'faith cometh by hearing [the word of God preached].'

3. ἐναρξάμενοι—ἐπιτελεῖσθε;] 'After having begun in the Spirit, do ye finish with the flesh?' i. e. having begun with a spiritual religion (one whose truth was attested by the Holy Spirit), are ye finishing with a carnal and ceremonial one? do ye take up with those external ordinances of the Law, which were mere forms, and only typical of the internal and spiritual gifts of the Gospel? There is great δεινότης in this way of putting the thing, in which we have, as Hyperius observes, an argumentum ex absurdo per collationem; and the infinite inferiority of the flesh to the Spirit is taken for granted. Compare John vi. 63.

4. τοσαῦτα ἐπάθετε εἰκῆ;] We have here another argument, the exact force of which depends upon the sense assigned to ἐπάθετε, which is a term used not only of evil but of good, in which latter acceptation almost all the more recent Commentators have taken the word, understanding it of the favours and benefits before mentioned; i. e. 'Have ye experienced so many spiritual benefits, tokens of Divine favour, to no purpose?' A sense, indeed, agreeable to the context; yet not required by it. Crellius, Bos, and Wolf have ably maintained the interpretation adopted by the ancient and earlier modern Expositors, 'have ye suffered so many evils' (i. e. persecutions), which yields an equally apt and a much stronger sense; for, as Hyperius remarks, we usually value that which has been acquired by great danger. And it is an excellent way to move men's affections, to set before them the difficulty, labour, and toils already endured in order to the attainment of some desired object. We do not readily commit an act by which all our previous labour will seem expended in vain. Against the other interpretation a most serious objection lies, that, although some few instances have been adduced from the Classical writers of πάσχω used, without the addition of εὖ or such like, in a good sense, yet not one has been produced from either the New Test. or the Sept. Whereas examples of πάσχειν in a bad sense, without any addition, are common in both the Scriptural and Classical writers; not to mention that thus the expressions εἴ γε and εἰκῆ (scil. πεπ.) have more point and significancy.

Here, then, the Apostle diversifies the argument, first, by asking whether, after possessing such high and distinguished spiritual graces and solid benefits, they will take up with mere external rites, only typical of them; q. d. 'Shall the benefits ye have received by the Gospel be changed into empty ceremonies?'

— εἴ γε καὶ εἰκῆ.] This has certainly not, what many have imagined, the force of amplification (as if involving a sort of threat), but rather (as the best Expositors, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Œcumenius, Calvin, Hyperius, Estius, Crellius, and others, are agreed) of mitigation or correction; q. d. 'If, indeed, it should be proved by the event that they have been suffered in vain,' which I will not suppose. Thus he expresses a hope in them, that they would see their errors and amend them.

5. Here we have, as Hyperius observes, a third hortatory reason, deduced from the purpose and good pleasure of God to give the Spirit; nearly the same argument as at ver. 12, here repeated for greater emphasis.

— οὖν.] The particle is here resumptive, and may be rendered Now. 'Επιχορηγῶν is by most recent Commentators considered as a participle put for a finite verb, by an ellipsis of ἦν.

6 [d] Καθὼς Ἀβραὰμ ἐπίστευσε τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς d Gen. 15. 6. Rom. 4. 3.
7 δικαιοσύνην. [e] Γινώσκετε ἄρα, ὅτι οἱ ἐκ πίστεως, οὗτοί εἰσιν James 2. 23. e Rom. 4. 11, 8 υἱοὶ Ἀβραάμ. [f] Προϊδοῦσα δὲ ἡ γραφὴ, ὅτι ἐκ πίστεως 12, 16. f Gen. 12. 3. & 18. 18.
δικαιοῖ τὰ ἔθνη ὁ Θεὸς, προευηγγελίσατο τῷ Ἀβραάμ· Ὅτι & 22. 18. & 26. 4.
9 * ἐνευλογηθήσονται ἐν σοὶ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη. Ὥστε οἱ Acts 3. 25.
10 ἐκ πίστεως εὐλογοῦνται σὺν τῷ πιστῷ Ἀβραάμ. [g] Ὅσοι g Deut. 27. 26.
γὰρ ἐξ ἔργων νόμου εἰσὶν, ὑπὸ κατάραν εἰσί· γέγραπται γάρ· Ἐπικατάρατος πᾶς ὃς οὐκ ἐμμένει ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς γεγραμμένοις ἐν τῷ βιβλίῳ τοῦ νόμου, τοῦ

But it seems better to regard the sentence, with the ancients and most moderns, as highly elliptical; something in the latter member ἐξ ἔργων —πίστεως being to be supplied from the former one,—namely, ἐπεχορήγησε from ἐπιχορηγῶν, and ἐνήργησε from ἐνεργῶν. The full sense is well expressed by Schott as follows: 'Does he who ministereth to you the Spirit, and giveth you the power of performing mighty deeds, [ordain all this to pertain to you] by works accommodated to the Law of Moses, or by the hearing of that doctrine which requires faith [in Christ]?'

6—9. The Apostle here (as in Rom. iv. 1, seqq.) supports the doctrine of justification by faith, by a reference to the example of Abraham, the Father of the faithful, and illustrious for the many signal proofs he gave of faith in God. See the Note on the passage of Romans.

6. καθὼς Ἀβραὰμ, &c.] Καθὼς may have here its usual illustrative and comparative force, quemadmodum. It also involves an οὕτως, with reference to the thing compared; q. d. 'Even as Abraham had faith in God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness; so it is in your case.' You must have entire confidence in God; wherein the correspondence of the two cases especially consists.

7. γινώσκετε] 'know ye,' i. e. 'I would have you to know, be assured of this.' A form also occurring at Matt. xxiv. 43. Luke x. 11. xii. 39, and sometimes in the Sept.

— οἱ ἐκ πίστεως.] This is supposed to be a phrase like οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς for οἱ περιτετμημένοι, and equivalent to οἱ πιστεύοντες. It seems, however, to be a stronger expression; meaning, 'those who rest on faith,'—genuine faith, as Abraham's was, and rest on that only, as he did, and seek to be justified alone by it; they are alone the true [spiritual] children of Abraham. On the force of υἱοὶ see Note on Romans iv. 1, and Rom. ix. 7.

8. Having taught, in a general way, that men are justified by faith, in like manner as was Abraham, the Apostle now, descending to particulars, shows that the Gentiles as well as Jews are included; that no one might imagine, that the justification by faith, which Abraham obtained, and which was promised to his seed, did not pertain also to the Gentiles. (Crellius.) In the same manner, too, the passage is explained by Calvin.

By ἡ γραφὴ we are to understand, per prosopopœiam, the Holy Spirit, who inspired the words; as Rom. iv. 3. John vii. 38. Προϊδοῦσα, 'having foreseen and foreknown.' Δικαιοῖ, 'is to justify;' i. e. would justify: a not uncommon sense of the present tense. Προευηγγ. τῷ Ἀ. The sense is, 'announced before [the giving of the Law, nay, even before the birth of Isaac] the glad tidings.' Προευαγγ. is a very rare term; but it is found in Philo.

— ἐνευλογηθήσονται — ἔθνη.] The citation is founded neither on the Hebrew nor the Sept.; and indeed seems formed from two different passages, ἐνευλογ. ἐν σοὶ from Gen. xii. 3, and πάντα τὰ ἔθνη from Gen. xxii. 18, where τῆς γῆς is added. Instead of εὐλ., ἐνευλογ. is rightly edited by Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz, from many MSS. and all the early Editions. Ἐν σοὶ, בְּךָ; i. e. as Newcome explains, by the birth of Christ among thy descendants.

9. ὥστε οἱ ἐκ πίστεως—Ἀβρ.] The Apostle here simply repeats the general conclusion at v. 7. Render: 'So then those [only] who have a like genuine faith with believing Abraham are to be blessed [with him];' namely, by having their faith counted for righteousness. It is well pointed out by Calvin and Hyperius, that πιστῷ is highly emphatic; for, as he observes, 'nulla personæ qualitas in rationem hic venit, nisi fides.' In short, (to use the words of Bishop Warburton, Works, vol. vi. p. 14,) 'the Apostle is here convincing the Galatians, that the Gospel of Christ is founded on the same principle with that which justified Abraham,—namely, Faith.'

10—14. Here the Apostle urges other arguments in proof of the doctrine of justification by faith; the one at ver. 10, taken from the constitution of the law itself, being, as Hyperius observes, an argument ab effectu legis plane contrario; or, as Calvin terms it, de repugnantibus. It is shown that those who sought to be justified by their observance of the law, so far from obtaining the blessedness of Abraham, abode under the curse of the law, and were liable to Divine punishment. The argument, when expressed in logical form, is (as Borger states it) this, 'Those who trust to the Law for salvation must completely observe it; for vengeance is denounced against the transgressors of it.' But all have transgressed it; therefore all are liable to its punishment.

10. ὅσοι ἐξ ἔργων νόμου εἰ.] This must, from the force of the context, mean, 'those who depend on the works of the law for salvation.' Alluding to the opposite, vv. 7. 9, οἱ ἐκ πίστεως. Ὑπὸ κατάραν ε., 'are under curse,' namely, that of the broken law; are ἐπικατάρατοι, as in the passage of the Old Test. then quoted, to show the reason of the thing. The citation does not h Hab. 2. 4. Rom. 1. 17. & 3. 20. supra 2. 16. Heb. 10. 38.

i Deut. 21. 23. Rom. 8. 3. 2 Cor. 5. 21.

j Heb. 9. 17.

ποιῆσαι αὐτά. [h] Ὅτι δὲ ἐν νόμῳ οὐδεὶς δικαιοῦται παρὰ 11
τῷ Θεῷ, δῆλον· ὅτι ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται. Ὁ 12
δὲ νόμος οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ πίστεως· ἀλλ' ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ [ἄνθρωπος] ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς. [i] Χριστὸς ἡμᾶς ἐξηγό- 13 ρασεν ἐκ τῆς κατάρας τοῦ νόμου, γενόμενος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν κατάρα· (γέγραπται γάρ· Ἐπικατάρατος πᾶς ὁ κρε-μάμενος ἐπὶ ξύλου·) ἵνα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη ἡ εὐλογία τοῦ 14
Ἀβραὰμ γένηται ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ἵνα τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν τοῦ Πνεύματος λάβωμεν διὰ τῆς πίστεως. [j] Ἀδελφοὶ, (κατὰ 15 ἄνθρωπον λέγω) ὅμως ἀνθρώπου κεκυρωμένην διαθήκην οὐδεὶς quite correspond with either the Hebrew or the Sept.; but the sense is the same. Ἐμμένειν is used, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, with a Dative of some noun expressing, or implying, engagement, or obligation, and may be rendered, 'to abide by an engagement, continue in its observance.' Τοῦ ποιῆσαι is equivalent to εἰς τὸ, or ὥστε π.

11. Here is adduced another argument (and that from the nature of contraries) to prove that no man is justified by the law. 'Having shown (says Theophylact) that the law maketh accursed, but faith blesseth, the Apostle now shows also that faith alone justifieth, and not the Law; and he brings in the words of the Prophet Habakkuk to attest the truth of what he is saying.' The argument being (as Bp. Warburton states it, Works, vol. v. p. 400) this: 'That no one can obtain eternal life by virtue of the Law is evident from one of your own Prophets [Hab.], who expressly holds, that the just shall live by faith. Now, by the Law no rewards are promised to faith, but to works only.'

— ὅτι δὲ ἐν νόμῳ—δῆλον.] The δὲ may be rendered autem, or porro. Ἐν νόμῳ, 'by the observance of the law as a condition.' Δικ. is nearly equivalent to εὐλογεῖσθαι at ver. 9. Δῆλον, scil. ἐστι; namely, from the tenour of the Christian covenant.

— ὅτι ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ π. ζ.] At ὅτι supply γέγραπται. The passage is also cited at Rom. i. 17, and Hebr. x. 38. Some, as Macknight and Knapp, would construe, ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσ. But it is well observed by Bp. Middleton, that 'that would require ὁ δίκ. ὁ ἐκ π., or else ὁ ἐκ πίστεως δίκ., and would then yield a weak and inappropriate sense. Whereas to affirm that the good man, he whose obedience, though imperfect, is sincere, shall reap life everlasting from faith (as opposed to a law of works) and from faith alone, is a most important declaration; and it agrees exactly with the context.'

12. ὁ δὲ νόμος οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ πίστεως.] Render, 'But (autem) the law is not of faith;' i. e. depends not on faith, has nothing to do with it. In οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως (where the πίστεως is emphatic) is implied ἀλλ' ἐξ ἔργων; though that is suggested in the ἀλλὰ following, which belongs, I conceive, both to the clauses omitted, and to the one to which it is affixed, where it may be rendered imo.

On the logical argument in this and the foregoing verse see Hyperius and Chandler.

Ἄνθρωπος after αὐτὰ, not found in several MSS. of the Western recension, and several Versions and Fathers, is probably from the margin, being introduced either from the Sept. or from Rom. x. 5.

13. Here we have a further argument, derived from the intent and object of Christ's death.

— Χριστὸς ἡμᾶς ἐξηγόρασεν, &c.] q. d. 'we are justified by faith, and not by the works of the law, because Christ hath redeemed us;' literally, 'hath bought us off from the curse of the law;' there being an allusion to the price paid. Ἐξαγοράζειν, as used of a person, often signifies, 'to liberate a captive by the payment of his ransom;' where the ἐξ denotes the liberation. It is not agreed whether ἡμᾶς has reference to the Jews only, and by 'the law' be meant the law of Moses; or to both the Jews and the Gentiles, and by the law, the law of nature as well as the law of Moses is to be understood. The latter opinion is ably maintained by Grotius, Whitby, and Macknight, and is, on various accounts, preferable. Γενόμενος, 'by becoming.' Κατάρα, for κατάρατος (abstract for concrete), 'obnoxious to punishment.' The general sense of the passage is thus traced by Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iv.: 'Christ hath redeemed us from that general curse, which lay upon all men for the breach of any part of the law, by taking upon himself that particular curse laid only upon them who underwent a certain punishment of the law to which was affixed a crime.' Deut. xxi. 23.

14. ἵνα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, &c.] Meaning, 'with the intent that the blessing [promised to the posterity] of Abraham, [of justification by faith] might come, by (or through) Jesus Christ, unto the Gentiles [also].' Ἵνα τὴν—πίστεως. Render, 'that so we (both Jews and Gentiles) might receive the promise of the Spirit (i. e. the promised Spirit) through faith;' i. e. (as Abp. Newcome explains) on the sole condition of faith; see Rom. iv. 9. 16. It is to be borne in mind, that the gift of the Spirit was all along foretold by the Prophets as a part of the covenanted blessing.

15—18. Here the Apostle further illustrates the argument from THE NATURE of the Abrahamic covenant, which, he means to say, was in no respect made void; the law subsequently promulgated having by no means taken away its force. This is illustrated by an example taken from human affairs, or what is the usual practice of men; for such is the force of the formula κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγω, so used also at Rom. iii. 5. vi. 19, and often in the Rabbinical writers.

16 ἀθετεῖ ἢ ἐπιδιατάσσεται. [k] Τῷ δὲ Ἀβραὰμ ἐῤῥήθησαν αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι, καὶ τῷ σπέρματι αὐτοῦ· οὐ λέγει· καὶ τοῖς σπέρμασιν, ὡς ἐπὶ πολλῶν, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐφ' ἑνός· καὶ 17 τῷ σπέρματί σου, ὅς ἐστι Χριστός. [l] Τοῦτο δὲ λέγω· διαθήκην προκεκυρωμένην ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς Χριστὸν, ὁ μετὰ ἔτη τετρακόσια καὶ τριάκοντα γεγονὼς νόμος οὐκ ἀκυροῖ, 18 εἰς τὸ καταργῆσαι τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν. [m] Εἰ γὰρ ἐκ νόμου ἡ κληρονομία, οὐκέτι ἐξ ἐπαγγελίας· τῷ δὲ Ἀβραὰμ δι' ἐπαγ-k Gen. 12. 7. & 15. 5. & 17. 7. & 22. 18. supra v. 8.

l Gen. 15. 13, 16. Exod. 12. 40, 41. Acts 7. 6.
m Rom. 4. 13, 14. & 8. 17.

15. ὅμως ἀνθρώπου.] Commentators need not, as they have done, have stumbled at the ὅμως, or proposed to read ὁμῶς; see Note on 1 Cor. xiv. 7. The word is rightly rendered by Borger, Winer, and Schott, quamvis, and in our common version though, a signification often found in the Classical writers. In such cases, the difficulty arises from two clauses being blended together; and accordingly the true force of the word will best appear by dividing them. Thus here: 'No one disannuls or alters a covenant, though it be but a man's covenant.' Ἀθετεῖ, for ἀκυροῖ at ver. 17. Ἐπιδιατάσσεται is rightly explained by Schleusner and Borger, 'adds new and contrary conditions or stipulations.' So Josephus, Bell. ii. 3, uses ἐπιδιαθήκη. Here διαθήκη is by some explained fœdus; by others, testamentum. The former interpretation is preferable. But Winer seems to best express the sense by the general term dispositionem, which will include both. Κεκυρ., 'when established by attestation.'

16. τῷ δὲ Ἀβρ.] The example is now applied to the promise or covenant of God with Abraham. The plural in ἐπαγγ. may refer to the repetition of the original engagement. To the Apostle's interpretation of τῷ σπέρματι, and to the mode of taking σπέρμασι, adopted by him, several recent Commentators have presumed to take exception; maintaining that σπέρμα in the promise to Abraham is not meant, as Paul takes it, of the Messiah, but of Christians in general. But the former view is ably vindicated by Beza, Whitby, and especially Koppe, Borger, and Schott, who have shown that the interpretation is found in the Rabbinical writers, and that the mode of argumentation here adopted is quite Jewish, and therefore suitable to the occasion; and, moreover, that this does not at all affect the general argument,—since the Apostle only asks this postulate, that the promises made to Abraham had all of them a reference to the Messiah. As to the assertion made by recent Commentators, that זרע and σπέρμα were never used in the plural, except to denote the seeds of vegetables, it is quite untenable. The use of the Old Test. will not prove that זרע was never used to denote sons, or families. And as to σπέρμα, it is used elsewhere in the plural for sons, in Soph. Œd. C. 599, and occasionally elsewhere in the sense races or families. Ὃς has reference to σπέρματι, with which it agrees in sense.

17. We have here a continuation of the argument à similitudine de testamento sive fœdere commenced at ver. 15, but interrupted by some parenthetical matter at ver. 16, and now resumed and concluded.

— τοῦτο δὲ λέγω.] 'I mean by that example to show.' A form also occurring at 1 Cor. i. 12, and elsewhere, which has usually a resumptive and continuative force. By the προ in προκεκυρωμένην we are to understand, 'before the existence of the Mosaic law.' Εἰς Χριστὸν, 'with respect to Christ and his salvation.' As to the chronological question connected with the number 430, it is of no consequence to the Apostle's argument; but it is, I think, sufficiently settled by supposing (with most Expositors) that the Apostle is computing not from the ratification, but from the original making of the promise, mentioned at Gen. xii. 3.

— οὐκ ἀκυροῖ] literally, 'does not annul,' i. e. cannot. Εἰς τὸ, for ὥστε. Καταργεῖν is thought by some a Cilicism. But it may be rather regarded as a provincialism in general.

18. The Apostle having shown that the great promise, 'In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed,' referred to the Messiah, and, by consequence, that his promise could not be annulled by the law of Moses, which was given four hundred and thirty years after it, draws the proper inference at ver. 18, to which all his reasoning tended,—namely, that justification, righteousness, and acceptance with God, could not be by the observation of the law of Moses. (Chandler.) See also the statement of the sense as laid down by the same Commentator, which is supported by the elaborate discussion of the logic of the passage by Hyperius.

— ἡ κληρονομία.] Meaning the blessing mentioned at ver. 14, 'salvation secured, as by inheritance, on Abraham, and believers in general.' At ἐκ νόμου supply ἐστὶ, 'does not come by the observance of the law [or by our own works and merits].'

— οὐκέτι ἐξ ἐπαγγ., &c.] i. e. 'is not obtained by the promise of God to Abraham, that it should come through Jesus Christ.' 'The reason (says Abp. Newcome) is, because obedience to law makes reward a matter of debt; whereas, in fact, the inheritance, or Abraham's reward, was a free gift by promise.' The sense of the verse is admirably illustrated by Bp. Bull in his Harm. Apost. p. 46. He shows why the Apostle here places the law in opposition to the promise, and points out the real scope, which (as Beza saw) was to tacitly meet an objection on the part of the Jews, as to what had been said in the verse preceding; q. d. 'the law and the promise cannot stand together, nempe ut hæreditas ex Lege simul et promissione detur; cùm justitia Legis (loquitur κατὰ ἄνθρωπον, ver. 15) meritum inducat et gratiam excludat, adeoque gratuitæ promissioni repugnet, nempe si Lex justificandi causâ data fuisset.' Κεχάρ. is used, and not ἐδίδου, either to suggest the gracious kindness of God, or that it was made gratis, and without merit, or both senses; the latter as suspended on the former. See Bp.

n Deut. 5. 5. John 1. 17. Acts 7. 38, 53. Rom. 4. 15. & 5. 20. & 7. 8.

γελίας κεχάρισται ὁ Θεός. [n] Τί οὖν ὁ νόμος; Τῶν παρα- 19 βάσεων χάριν ‡ [προσ]ετέθη, (ἄχρις οὗ ἔλθῃ τὸ σπέρμα ᾧ ἐπήγγελται,) διαταγεὶς δι' ἀγγέλων ἐν χειρὶ μεσίτου. Ὁ δὲ 20 μεσίτης ἑνὸς οὐκ ἔστιν· ὁ δὲ Θεὸς εἷς ἐστιν. Ὁ οὖν νόμος 21

Bull, ubi supra. Δι' ἐπαγγ., 'by virtue of a positive promise or engagement.'

19. Here an objection is anticipated, and the answer given. Τί οὖν ὁ νόμος; 'What purpose, then, did the law answer? and why promulgated, if justification be not of works, but of faith?' The answer is, τῶν παραβ. χάριν προσετέθη, where, by the brief, and consequently obscure, expression, παραβάσεων χάριν, the best Expositors understand, 'that they might be convicted of sin in committing those vices (the heinous nature of sin being by the law set in the strongest point of view, and the power of conscience roused; see Rom. iii. 20); and that thus they might be taught to seek after a more effectual method of obtaining pardon.' On this subject, however, Hyperius has treated with his usual ability, observing, that 'brief as the expression is, it is sufficient for the purpose, since we have here glanced at the force of all law and its twofold end; for law is given on account of transgressions; i. e. both to the knowing or recognising, and to the restraining of them; since to thus know transgression is the spiritual end of law, whereby it informs the inner man; to which St. Paul alludes at Rom. iv. 15, "where there is no law there is no transgression," and ver. 20, "the law was given to make sin abound" (i. e. that sin might appear to be sin), and vii. 7, "I had not known sin but by the law." On the other hand, to restrain transgression is the political end of the law, whereby it reduces to order the outward man. And both these ends may be supposed to be had in view in the present instance.' Such, too, was the view adopted by Dr. Chandler, who remarks, that 'the law was given upon account of transgressions, not only as given to discover to the Jews what things were offensive to God, and would render them guilty in his sight, and thereby designed to settle the boundaries between moral good and evil, virtue and vice; but also, 2dly, [to restrain transgression,] as it ordained the severest punishments against all offenders;' see Rom. iv. 15. vii. 8—10, and compare 1 Cor. xv. 56. So that the law of Moses was given upon account of transgressions, as the great design of it was to point out to the Jews what things were offensive to God, and to preserve them from the commission of those sins, by annexing the severest punishments to those who committed them.

— ἄχρις οὗ ἔλθῃ, &c.] Supply ὥστε διαμένειν. These words seem meant to suggest, that the Law was only intended to be temporary, and preparatory to the Gospel, (as in many respects shadowing it forth, and showing its necessity,) which was to be ushered in when the Seed (i. e. the Messiah, see supra v. 16,) should come, unto whom both Jews and Gentiles, being engrafted by faith, would become the spiritual seed of Abraham. Instead of προσετέθη, 5 MSS. of the Western recension, the Vulgate, and other Latin Versions, and some Fathers, chiefly Latin, have ἐτέθη, which is edited by Griesbach, Knapp, and Winer. But the authority adduced is far too weak; and the reading is plainly an alteration of those who did not perceive the force of προσ., which (as is well pointed out by Bp. Warburton, Works, vol. v. p. 5) is this: 'it was superadded to the Abrahamic covenant, and introduced between that and the Christian dispensation.' So Rom. v. 20, νόμος παρεισῆλθε, where see Note. Some, however, of the correctors and critics, above alluded to, seem to have rejected the προσ., as thinking that προστίθημι is no where else used of a law. That, however, would be no good reason for cancelling it. But, in fact, the phrase προστιθέναι νόμον occurs at least twice, as far as my own knowledge extends, namely, Herodot. ii. 136, and Thucyd. ii. 35. 'Επήγγελται may be taken impersonally, or ἐπαγγελίας be supplied from ἐπαγγελίας just before. The words διαταγεὶς δι' ἀγγέλων are closely connected with προσετέθη. Render, 'promulgated by or through the intervention of the angels;' the meaning of which will appear from the Note on Acts vii. 53. 'Εν χ. μεσίτου, 'by the intervention of a mediator; namely, Moses.' For it has been fully shown by Schoettgen in loc. that סרסור, the Mediator, was the common appellation given to Moses in the Rabbinical writers; by whom the Law is often said to have been given 'by his hand as mediator.'

20. ὁ δὲ μεσίτης—εἷς ἐστιν.] This is confessedly one of the most obscure passages in the New Test., and perhaps, above all others, 'vexatus ab interpretibus,' if it be true, as Winer affirms, that there are no less than 250 modes of explanation, most of which are stated and reviewed by Koppe, Borger, Keil, Bonitz, Weigand, and Schott. In a work of this nature it is impracticable to do more than advert to the grounds on which any proposed interpretation deserving of notice may be founded, and to point out that which has the greatest semblance of truth. Previously to doing this, I would call the attention of the reader to seven rules of interpretation, which are laid down by Prof. Schott, and which may serve as a clue to guide him through the labyrinth of jarring interpretations; and by showing what is not the true one, may direct him to that which is such.

'1. The words ὁ δὲ μεσίτης here express the universal notion of any mediator, as the expressions at John x. 11, ὁ ποιμὴν ὁ καλός; and Rom. i. 17, ὁ δὲ δίκαιος [on which use of the Article, whereby it is subservient to hypothesis, see Bp. Middleton, ch. iii. § 2, and Winer's Gr. Gr. p. 91, Ed. 3]; and therefore do not suggest the idea of any one in particular; certainly not Christ, but rather Moses. For although what is said merely concerns any mediator, yet the Apostle doubtless meant what is here affirmed to be applied to what had been just said of the Mosaic Law promulgated by a mediator. 2. That connexion of the words which, at the first glance, spontaneously presents itself, namely, ὁ μεσίτης (subject) ἑνὸς οὐκ ἔστιν (predicate), is to be adhered to by expositors, and not to be changed for any other, when there is no urgent necessity. 3. The Genitive ἑνὸς must necessarily be referred to the Genitive κατὰ τῶν ἐπαγγελιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ; Μὴ γένοιτο! εἰ γὰρ ἐδόθη νόμος ὁ δυνάμενος ζωοποιῆσαι, ὄντως ἂν ἐκ νόμου ἦν of some substantive to be supplied in thought [as μέρους, πράγματος, or such like]. Care, however, must be taken not to supply what neither the nature and disposition of the thing spoken of, nor the series orationis, may seem to spontaneously bring in. 4. The connexion of each member of the sentence, and the nature of the Apostle's style of argumentation, requires that in each member of the sentence the signification of εἷς should be the same. 5. The one member, in like manner as the other, either contains an universal sentiment to be transferred to the present case, or contains an enunciation pertaining to certain times. 6. Even if it should be granted that the former contains an universal sentiment, which, agreeably to the meaning of the Apostle, ought to be transferred to the question concerning the Law of Moses, yet the Apostle is by no means to be supposed to have said in the latter member what was only to be applied to the question as to the promise given to Abraham. Nay, by the words ὁ δὲ Θεὸς εἷς ἐστιν he must have meant to affirm something universal; which either, in like manner as the former enunciation, ought to be transferred to the Mosaic Law only; or must be transferred at once to the Law and the promise. Otherwise, the argumentation which is intimated at ver. 20 would be neither perspicuous nor coherent. 7. The first words of the verse following (21), ὁ οὖν νόμος κατὰ τῶν ἐπαγγελιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ; (an interrogation succeeded by a form of serious denial, μὴ γένοιτο!) certainly require that the whole of ver. 20 should be supposed to contain a primary sentiment, of that kind which gave occasion to the interrogation proposed and refuted in the subsequent verse. Moreover, the negation μὴ γένοιτο! so takes up the interrogation before propounded, that it is plain that this interrogation has by no means the force of denial, but is a mere doubt, proceeding from some one who, using such a kind of argument as is contained in ver. 20, would be justified in collecting that the promise given to Abraham might be taken away by the Law subsequently given.'

Having applied the searching test of the above rules to almost all the expositions which have any claim to attention, the learned Professor concludes with rejecting them all as unfounded. To those my limits forbid me to advert, except to notice that one which seems to be least objectionable, and was adopted by Paræus, Crellius, Capell., Locke, Whitby, Chandler, Noesselt, and A. Clarke, and which may be expressed in the following paraphrase: 'Now a mediator is not [cannot in the nature of things be] a mediator of one [party only in any covenant], but of two [at least]. But God, who gave the promises to Abraham, is one party only [belonging to the Abrahamic covenant]; q. d. the other party (consisting of believers of all nations, Gentiles as well as Israelites) was not concerned in the promulgation of the Law; and therefore the original covenant, not having been dissolved by both the contracting parties, remains in full force.' 'The words of the latter member (says Chandler) are in opposition to what went before, and are meant to point out the different reasons of God's giving the promise to Abraham, and the law to the Jews,—from the totally different manner of their delivery. The law was given because of transgression, as appears by its being delivered in a terrific manner by the ministry of angels and the hands of a Mediator. But God, who gave the inheritance to Abraham by promise, is one, the only party concerned in the delivery of it; He gave it himself, without the ministry of angels or Mediator, and, by consequence, not upon account of transgression, but as a token of friendship, and as the reward of Abraham's faith.' Yet even this interpretation will, I apprehend, not quite stand the test above adverted to. Upon the whole, the most satisfactory view of the sense seems to be that propounded by the very learned Framer of the above rules, in the following Note: "The intent of the Apostle is, I conceive, to affirm the paramount authority and dignity of the Sinaitical Dispensation above any human covenant, from a consideration of the nature, not indeed of the Lawgiver, Moses, but of God, the Author of the Law. And though the expression εἷς, viewed by itself alone, would not signify any thing or person unchangeable, yet this idea of one who is all-consistent, and who ever remains the same, may very well, in a context like the present, be united with the proper and usual signification of the word; compare Rom. iii. 30. Philipp. i. 27. So also in vv. 15. 17, seqq., mention had been made of the alteration or abrogation of a Dispensation or Covenant. These things considered, there is surely no objection to assigning to the word εἷς in both members of ver. 20, the sense of immutability or perfect consistency, [in which case εἷς will stand for ὁ αὐτὸς, 'one and the same.' So Thucyd. iii. 38, ἐγὼ αὐτός εἰμι τῇ γνώμῃ. Ed.] With respect to the expression εἶναί τινος, it is here, I conceive, used in the same signification as at 1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 4, à partibus alicujus stare, ei addictus esse, 'to be of any one's party.' Thus the sense will be, 'A mediator indeed belongs not to one person or party only [and that unchangeable];' q. d. 'in human concerns, where a mediator is wanting, there are of course two parties, between whom a mediator may act, whether the transaction be between two persons only, or there be a large number of persons constituting either or both parties. Hence, from the Sinaitical Law being promulgated ἐν χειρὶ μεσίτου (ver. 19), it does not follow that it is of perpetual authority. And yet God is one,—he remains ever a God unchangeable; the covenant of the Sinaitical Dispensation was not of human but Divine authority; nor did it depend on the will of man, but of God, who is unchangeable.'"

In this last mode of explication, then, I must, upon the whole, acquiesce, as the least objectionable of the many that have been proposed. Yet it is almost impossible to prove any interpretation to be the true one, from the want of sufficient data whereon to judge, the words themselves being so very few, and consequently obscure. The sentiment, indeed, is not expressed with sufficient clearness to enable any one to fix it with certainty; and that, doubtless, for the reason suggested by Hyperius, that the Apostle did not think it necessary to more fully develope the sentiment, because, we may suppose, it was

o Rom. 3. 9. & 11. 32. ἡ δικαιοσύνη. [o] Ἀλλὰ συνέκλεισεν ἡ γραφὴ τὰ πάντα ὑπὸ 22 ἁμαρτίαν, ἵνα ἡ ἐπαγγελία ἐκ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ δοθῇ τοῖς πιστεύουσι. Πρὸ τοῦ δὲ ἐλθεῖν τὴν πίστιν, ὑπὸ νόμον 23 ἐφρουρούμεθα συγκεκλεισμένοι εἰς τὴν μέλλουσαν πίστιν ἀποp Matt. 5. 17. καλυφθῆναι. [p] Ὥστε ὁ νόμος παιδαγωγὸς ἡμῶν γέγονεν εἰς 24
Rom. 10. 4. Χριστόν, ἵνα ἐκ πίστεως δικαιωθῶμεν· ἐλθούσης δὲ τῆς 25 one which the Galatians had often before heard; and hence it was sufficient for him to recal it to their memory by a single word.

21. A doubt is now proposed, arising from what the Apostle had said at ver. 20 respecting the authority of the Sinaitical law, as evinced from the nature of God;—namely, whether the Sinaitical law, being of Divine authority and command, was meant to so limit (or change) the promise given to Abraham, that that should no longer be a promise, of which the fulfilment belonged only to the free grace of God. This doubt (or rather objection) the Apostle removes, by giving them to understand, that although each Dispensation of God (the law and the promise) is different in its own nature and efficacy from the other, yet there is no such inconsistency between them, as that the law should take away the promise; nay, that each coheres with the other, by a connexion divinely ordained, whereby the law served to pave the way for the Christian Dispensation; finally, that the law does not interfere with the promise, but tends to confirm it. (Schott.) The removal of the above objection is, as Hyperius shows, in the present verse indirect; in the next, direct.

— εἰ γὰρ ἐδόθη, &c.] 'if there had been given,' &c. Implying, as Winer shows, at the end of the sentence some clause expressing that such was not the case; see Note on Rom. vii. 9, 10, and compare infra iii. 23. This, then, is as much as to assert that the law of Moses could not give life: and yet at Rom. vii. 10, St. Paul says that 'the commandment was ordained to life.' Here, however, as Chandler shows, no real contrariety exists; for though the law of Moses proved in its effects, through the wickedness of the Jews, a law of condemnation, and so could not give life, yet the original design of it was to prevent the transgressions of the Jews, and secure to them the Divine favour in all temporal blessings. And yet it could not give life, because it pronounced, 'Cursed is he that continueth not in all things written in the law to do them.'

22. Here we have, as Hyperius observes, 'the second and direct answer to the foregoing objection, and that deduced from the proper office and end of the law. The law is not opposed to the promise, since it excludes not from the benefit of the promise, nay, it rather leads men to joyfully embrace the promises.'

— συνέκλεισεν.] Many interpret, 'hath included.' A sense, however, too feeble. It is better, with Borger and Winer, to explain, 'has shown or declared all to be subject to the dominion of sin,' brought them under it. So Hyperius: 'Scriptura enim, vel lex scripta, declarat hominibus, quod sint rei.' The full sense, then, is: 'Nay [so far from that], the Scriptures declare all men [of all nations, both Jews and Gentiles] to be sinners brought under condemnation, and therefore amenable to wrath and punishment.' Similarly, at Rom. vii. 23, sin is compared to a tyrant, who holds men captive, and to whose dominion all are subject. So Demosthenes has κατακλείειν τῷ νόμῳ: see more in the Note on Rom. xi. 32. Τὰ πάντα alludes to the ἔθνη, which will serve to account for the neuter gender being used.

— ἵνα ἡ ἐπαγγελία ἐκ πίστ., &c.] Ἐκ πίστεως is for ἡ ἐκ πίστ. οὖσα. The clause may be rendered, 'in order that the promised blessing, which depends on faith in Jesus Christ, might be given to them that believe in him.' Comp. Rom. iii. 22.

23. This verse forms the second part of the above confutation, wherein the Apostle teaches that believers in Christ are freed from the law. (Hyperius.) Two similitudes are here made use of; one to a prison, the other to a pædagogus.

— πρὸ τοῦ ἐλθεῖν τὴν πίστιν] 'before the faith (i. e. the dispensation which requires faith in Christ as indispensable, meaning the Gospel covenant) was introduced;' see Rom. iii. 27. xi. 6. The words following, ἐφρουρούμεθα συγκεκλεισμένοι, &c., are illustrative of the metaphor in the preceding συνέκλεισεν, the comparison being to persons shut up in a place from which they cannot get out. The sense is well expressed by Winer, 'lege obstricti custodiebamur, asservabamur in.' So 1 Pet. i. 5, τοὺς ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ φρουρουμένους εἰς σωτηρίαν.

— εἰς τὴν μέλλουσαν πίστιν ἀποκ.] Meaning, 'until the promulgation of the faith, which was afterwards to be revealed.'

24. ὥστε ὁ νόμος παιδαγωγὸς, &c.] Here we have, as Hyperius observes, an argument deduced from analogy. And as the law was before compared to a jailer, so it is here likened to a παιδαγωγὸς, by which term is not to be understood a schoolmaster (for that would have been διδάσκαλος), but the pædagogus or person (usually a freedman or slave) who conducted children to and from school, attended them out of school hours, formed their manners, superintended their moral conduct, and in various respects prepared them for the διδάσκαλος; see Chrysostom, cited by Borger; and Plutarch, de Educ. § 13. In short, the leading idea here intended, is that of bringing unto, and preparing for, as the Law did in respect of the Gospel, namely, by its doctrines, moral precepts, types, and prophecies, all leading men to the Gospel, by showing the imperfection of the Law, and the impracticability of performing any law of works; see Note on Matt. v. 17; hinting also at the restraint and discipline under which boys were held till they reached manhood, and at the necessarily incomplete knowledge until then communicated to them; intimating that those under the law were νήπιοι as compared to the τέλειοι of the Gospel.

26 πίστεως, οὐκέτι ὑπὸ παιδαγωγόν ἐσμεν. [q] Πάντες γὰρ υἱοὶ q John 1. 12. Rom. 8. 15.
27 Θεοῦ ἐστε διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· [r] ὅσοι γὰρ infra 4. 5. r Rom. 6. 3.
28 εἰς Χριστὸν ἐβαπτίσθητε, Χριστὸν ἐνεδύσασθε. [s] Οὐκ ἔνι & 13. 14. s John 17. 21.
Ἰουδαῖος οὐδὲ Ἕλλην· οὐκ ἔνι δοῦλος οὐδὲ ἐλεύθερος· οὐκ Rom. 10. 12. 1 Cor. 12. 13.
ἔνι ἄρσεν καὶ θῆλυ· πάντες γὰρ ὑμεῖς εἷς ἐστε ἐν Χριστῷ Eph. 2. 14, 15.
29 Ἰησοῦ. [t] Εἰ δὲ ὑμεῖς Χριστοῦ, ἄρα τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ σπέρμα ἐστὲ, Col. 3. 11. t Gen. 21. 12. Rom. 9. 7.
1 καὶ κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν κληρονόμοι. IV. Λέγω δὲ, ἐφ' ὅσον Heb. 11. 18.
χρόνον ὁ κληρονόμος νήπιός ἐστιν, οὐδὲν διαφέρει δούλου,
2 κύριος πάντων ὤν· ἀλλὰ ὑπὸ ἐπιτρόπους ἐστὶ καὶ οἰκονόμους, 3 ἄχρι τῆς προθεσμίας τοῦ πατρός. [u] οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς, ὅτε u Col. 2. 20.
ἦμεν νήπιοι, ὑπὸ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου ἦμεν δεδουλωμένοι.

25. οὐκέτι ὑπὸ παιδ.] i. e. 'because it is no longer necessary to us, and therefore no longer obligatory upon us;' as in the case of boys when grown up. The better covenant being established, the introductory one, of course, ceases.

26. There is here, as Hyperius and Calvin remark, a second argument to prove the unsuitableness of their being perpetually bound to the law; namely, that they are sons of God, and consequently free.

— πάντες.] Meaning, 'all of every nation,' both Jews and Gentiles. Υἱοί ἐστε, i. e. 'are admitted to a sort of sonship by adoption,' with the adjunct notion of liberty from slavish and unnecessary restraint.

27. ὅσοι γὰρ εἰς Χριστὸν, &c.] Meaning, 'I say sons, and sons of God; for as many of you as, having received baptism, profess the Christian religion [whether circumcised or uncircumcised] are united with Christ by the closest bond.' See Bp. Beveridge in D'Oyly and Mant's Fam. Bibl.

On the phrase ἐνδύσασθαι Χρ. see Note on Rom. xiii. 14. With reference to the present passage, it is said by Greg. Naz., Χριστὸν ἐνδέδυμαι, Χριστὸν μεταπεποίημαι διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσματος.

28. Here we have, not, what Borger imagines, a mere repetition of what was said at ver. 26, but a further developement of the idea, and that (as Hyperius shows) by pre-occupying the objections of the Judaizers.

— οὐκ ἔνι Ἰουδαῖος, &c.] Meaning, 'there is under the Gospel no discrimination in privileges; no distinction of nation, none of condition nor sex,—but ye are all one family, by the religion of Christ Jesus—all alike entitled to the same benefits, those of sincere believers.' See Note on Rom. ix. 7, 8.

29. εἰ ὑμεῖς Χρ.] scil. υἱοί. Τοῦ Ἀ. σπέρμα, i. e. the true spiritual seed. Καὶ κατ' ἐπαγγ. κληρ., 'and heirs by Divine promise [of the blessings attached thereto],' without any need of legal performances.

IV. In continuation of the argument in the foregoing chapter, the Apostle now proceeds to show the superior excellence and freedom of the state of believers under the Gospel, as compared with that in which they were placed under the law. And, after reproving the Galatians for not adhering firmly to the latter, he illustrates the difference between the two dispensations, by tracing them as figuratively represented in the two branches of Abraham's posterity, Sarah's and Hagar's. He commences, however, with glancing at an objection, prominently brought forward at Rom. iii. 1; q. d. 'If this be the case, what advantage hath the Jew, or what profit is there in circumcision?' This the Apostle overrules by arguing, that supposing them to be the heirs of Abraham, yet this will not at all invalidate his account of their condition under the law. And this he illustrates by a familiar and popular example suggested by the sonship, or inheritance, just before mentioned.

1. λέγω δέ.] On this formula see Note supra iii. 17. Here it serves to introduce a continuation of the argument, and an illustration of the reasoning in the preceding chapter; wherein first the state of God's Church under the law is compared to that of a minor, whose father is dead, and who, though he be, by legal right, the owner of the whole inheritance, yet, while in his non-age, is in a situation little differing, in respect of restraint, from that of a servant; and so continues, until the period appointed by his father for putting him into possession of his inheritance.

— νήπιός ἐστιν] 'is a minor.' So the word is used in the Classical as well as Scriptural writers.

2. ἐπιτρόπους καὶ οἰκονόμους.] I would render, not, 'tutors and governors,' but 'guardians and managers.' From the minor's being said to be under them, it is not necessary to infer (as many recent Commentators have done) that such οἰκονόμοι were care-takers of the minor, as well as stewards; for of that no sufficient proof is adduced. Ὑπὸ may merely refer to his having no control over their management.

— τῆς προθεσμίας.] Supply ἡμέρας, 'the period previously fixed.' Τοῦ πατρὸς is for ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς, which is more easily accounted for, since προθ. being, in some measure, an adjective, may stand for a participle, and thus take a genitive.

3. ἡμεῖς.] Meaning, both Jewish and Gentile Christians. Νήπιοι, i. e. children in the knowledge of God, unable to attain that accurate and complete knowledge of Divine things, which pertains to ἄνδρες τέλειοι spoken of at Eph. iv. 14.

— στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου.] Στοιχεῖα denotes figuratively, 'the elements, or rudiments, of any branch of knowledge;' consequently implying that which is superficial, and only suited to the less informed; not intended to be permanent, but to give way to the more complete knowledge of a further advanced period of study; see Col. ii. 8.

[v] ῞Οτε δὲ ἦλθε τὸ πλήρωμα τοι χρόνου, ἐξαπέστειλεν ὁ Θεὸς 4 τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ, γενόμενον ἐκ γυναικὸς, γενόμενον ὑπὸ νόμον· [w] ἵνα τοὺς ὑπὸ νόμον ἐξαγοράσῃ, ἵνα τὴν υἱοθεσίαν ἀπολά- 5 βωμεν. [x] ῞Οτι δέ ἐστε υἱοὶ, ἐξαπέστειλεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸ Πνεῦμα 6 τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ εἰς τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, κρᾶζον· Ἀββᾶ, ὁ πατήρ! [y] ῞Ωστε οὐκέτι εἶ δοῦλος, ἀλλ' υἱός· εἰ δὲ υἱὸς, καὶ 7 κληρονόμος Θεοῦ διὰ Χριστοῦ. [z] Ἀλλὰ τότε μὲν, οὐκ εἰδότες 8

v Gen. 49. 10. Dan. 9. 24. Eph. 1. 10.
w John 1. 12. supra 3. 26.
x Rom. 8. 15.
y Rom. 8. 16, 17.
z 1 Cor. 8. 4. & 12. 2. Eph. 2. 11, 12.

Here it designates, in conjunction with the qualifying term τοῦ κόσμου, that state of religious knowledge which subsisted both among Jews and heathens before Christ, and which was, from its external and ceremonial character, suited indeed to the capacities of the recipients, but was only calculated to last for a time. The Apostle means to suggest the inference, that, however useful might be the law of Moses, or the law of nature (each as introductory dispensations, more or less perfect), the obligation to both must cease when the more perfect religion of the Gospel was promulgated, by which they were alike superseded. On the force of δεδουλ., see Note at iii. 26.

4, 5. Here is carried forward the illustration drawn from the ἐπιτρ. and οἰκον., q. d. 'For as the son is, for a time, subject to the governance of masters, but when the προθεσμία is accomplished, becomes his own master; so we, so long attached τοῖς στοιχείοις τοῦ κόσμου, are liberated from them, by the Son of God being sent into the world for the purpose of delivering us.' (Borger.)

4. πλήρ. τοῦ χρόνου.] The phrase occurs also in Gen. xxv. 24. xxix. 21, and denotes the end of an appointed time. So τὸ πλήρ. τῶν καιρῶν, Eph. i. 10. Thus ὅτε τὸ πλήρ. τ. χρ. ἦλθε is equivalent to ὅτε ἐπληροῦτο ὁ χρόνος. The expression occurs in the Classical as well as the Scriptural writers. It here denotes the time appointed by the Father for delivering all nations from the bondage mentioned at ver. 3.

— ἐξαπέστειλε τὸν Υἱὸν, &c.] Ἐξαπ. is not, as Borger supposes, synonymous with ἀπέστ., but is a more significant expression; especially where (as here and at Exod. iii. 10. 13, and Acts xxii. 21) it is used of legates sent forth with a Divine commission. Here, however, there may be an allusion to the Son being, as it is said at John i. 18, εἰς τὸν κόλπον τοῦ Πατρός. This had, I find, occurred to Semler, who remarks how irreconcileable this is with the opinion, that Christ had no existence before he was born of a woman.

— γενόμενον] 'born;' a signification found in Rom. i. 3, and sometimes in the Classical writers. Γενόμενος ἐκ γυν. is a Hebrew phrase formed on ילוד אשה in Job xiv. 1, and elsewhere. It here intimates that Christ was endued with the whole of the human nature; see Phil. ii. 7. Ὑπὸ νόμον some render 'subjectum legi;' others, 'sub lege;' i. e. for Ἰουδαῖον. Both senses, however, may be included; the latter primarily, the former secondarily. At τοὺς ὑπὸ νόμον, ver. 5, supply ὄντας, or δεδουλωμένους, from the preceding, 'under the dominion and condemnation of the law,' whether of Moses or of nature. See Rom. iii. 20.

5. ἵνα τοὺς ὑπὸ νόμον ἐξαγ.] These words state the purpose for which Christ was sent; namely, to buy off and liberate those who were under the condemnation of the law, and restore them to perfect freedom; see Note supra iii. 13. The ἵνα following denotes the end or effect of what Christ did. On the phrase τὴν υἱοθεσίαν ἀπολαμβάνειν, see Note at iii. 26, and Rom. viii. 15. 23.

6. ὅτι δέ ἐστε υἱοί.] Wakefield and Borger explain, 'And to show that ye are sons.' An ellipsis, however, too harsh. It is true that the Apostle seems to mean to assert their having received the Spirit as an evidence of their sonship. But that may be implied as follows: 'And because ye are sons, God has [in token thereof] sent,' &c. So Calvin remarks: 'Prius adoptatum esse a Deo, quam habere a Spiritu Dei testimonium adoptionis; sed effectus signum est causæ.' 'The same argument (observes Mr. Locke) from their having the Spirit, St. Paul uses to the Romans, Rom. viii. 16. And on reading 2 Cor. v. 5, and Eph. i. 11—14, it will be found that the Spirit is looked upon as the seal and assurance of the inheritance of life to those who have received the adoption of sons.' This will sufficiently defend the usual interpretation of τὸ Πνεῦμα against those recent Commentators, who lower it to 'animus Christianus.' Here the best ancient and modern Expositors alike recognise the express mention of the three Persons of the Trinity, with the due distinction. 'The Son (as Bp. Pearson observes) is distinguished from the Father, as first sent by Him; and the Spirit of the Son is distinguished both from the Father, and from the Son, as sent by the Father, after He had sent the Son. And this our Saviour hath taught us several times, John xiv. 26. xv. 26. Hence we conclude that the Holy Ghost, although He be truly and properly God, is neither God the Father, nor God the Son.'

Κρᾶζον here signifies 'teaching and enabling us to cry out [in prayer]' with filial confidence, Ἀββᾶ! addressing God as a Father; see Rom. viii. 15. Perhaps there is an allusion to the distinction between Slaves and Sons, or others of the family,—that the former were not allowed to use the title of Abba in addressing the master of the family, while the latter enjoyed that privilege. Why the Chaldee term Ἀββᾶ should have been used as well as the Greek, Expositors are not agreed. The opinion of Winer seems most probable,—that the Chaldee term was used, because the Jewish prayers ordinarily commenced with Ἀββᾶ; and that the Greek was meant for those who did not understand the Chaldee term.

7. Here we have the conclusion; see ver. 1. Compare Rom. viii. 17. iii. 29, where see the Notes. Εἶ is supposed to be for ἔστε. But it would rather seem that the singular is adopted to make the application, by its individuality, 9 Θεὸν, ἐδουλεύσατε τοῖς μὴ φύσει οὖσι θεοῖς· [a] νῦν δὲ, γνόν- a 1 Cor. 8. 3. & 13. 12.

τες Θεὸν, μᾶλλον δὲ γνωσθέντες ὑπὸ Θεοῦ, πῶς ἐπιστρέφετε Col. 2. 20.
πάλιν ἐπὶ τὰ ἀσθενῆ καὶ πτωχὰ στοιχεῖα, οἷς πάλιν ἄνωθεν 10 δουλεύειν θέλετε; [b] Ἡμέρας παρατηρεῖσθε καὶ μῆνας καὶ b Rom. 14. 5. Col. 2. 16.

more forcible. There is a similar transposition in Rom. xii. 19, 20. 1 Cor. iv. 6, sq. In the ὥστε it is implied that the person in question has received the Holy Spirit given through the Son, to seal believers as the children of God. Κληρ. Θ. Meaning, partaker of the blessings bestowed by God on men through Christ, viz. justification and redemption, which are very often denominated an inheritance, to denote certainty of possession.

8—10. Considering the exalted nature of this condition, as sons of God, obtained for them by Christ, how highly, the Apostle now shows, is to be reprobated the temerity of those who again drew back to the former servile state; with reference chiefly to that part of the Galatian congregation which had formerly been Pagan. (Schott.)

There is here (as is indicated by the ἀλλὰ) a conversio sermonis; the Gentile Christians being especially addressed. In vv. 8, 9, we have a fine contrast drawn between the pristine state of the persons in question (when involved in gross idolatry, through ignorance of the nature of God), and their present condition, when knowing and being known of God. This is done to place in a strong point of view their folly in wishing to return to their former state of servitude to the law.

8. ἀλλά.] Of this particle no satisfactory account is given by the Commentators. It seems to belong to ἐδουλεύσατε taken a second time; the full sense being, 'Ye did, indeed, then worship those who were no gods; but however ye did it through ignorance of God, which ye have not now to plead.' By τότε we are to understand the time when they were ὑπὸ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου δεδουλ. ver. 3.

— τοῖς μὴ φύσει οὖσι θεοῖς.] Most modern Commentators (understanding φύσει as opposed to νόμῳ, or θέσει, or δόξα) explain it to mean, 'those who are not gods by nature, but only such in the opinion of men;' so answering to the οἱ λεγόμενοι θεοὶ of 1 Cor. viii. 5. This view, however, scarcely reaches far enough. It would rather seem, according to the opinion of the ancient and some eminent modern Expositors, as Wolf and Elsner, that the expression has reference to the nature and essence of the only true God, as opposed to factitious deities, or imaginary beings having no real existence. So Hierocles, in Aur. Carm. p. 170 (cited by Elsner), says of Pythagoras: ὃς οὐκ ἦν τῶν ἀθανάτων θεῶν, οὐδὲ τῶν φύσει ἡρώων, ἀλλ' ἄνθρωπος ὁμοιώσει θεοῦ κοσμηθεὶς, and p. 228, οὐ φύσει ἀθάνατος θεός. The sense first-mentioned may, indeed, be included. So Calvin well annotates: 'Naturam hic posuit pro re ipsa, vel pro substantia. Nam quicquid de Deo imaginantur homines, figmentum est ac nihil: itaque dii sunt opinione omnia idola, re ipsa nihil.' And Hyperius: 'Unus, summus, Deus est natura Deus, cujus proprium est, servare, beare, juvare, velle et posse, id quod nullis creaturis potest tribui. Itaque nulli sunt alii dii natura, sed solum stulta persuasione hominum.'

The reading of several of the most ancient MSS., and some Fathers and early Editions, τοῖς φύσει μὴ οὖσι, is, it is clear, only an emendation of those who, by this change of position, sought to avoid a seeming acknowledgment of them as gods in some sense. But no change is necessary, since the words may be so construed: and they cannot be better rendered than they are in our common Version, 'which by nature are no gods.' So Deut. xxxii. 21, αὐτοὶ παρεζήλωσάν με ἐπ' οὐ θεῷ, i. e. τῷ φύσει μὴ ὄντι θεῷ. Had Abp. Newcome seen this, he would not have altered 'no-gods' into 'not gods.' Nor would Dr. Macknight have here translated as he did, 'those who are not gods by nature;' which is making the words seem to admit that they were gods in some sense.

The μὲν of this verse, and the δὲ of the next, are intended to more forcibly contrast their former with their present state.

9. μᾶλλον δὲ] 'or rather.' A formula corrigendi, occurring also at Rom. viii. 34, and frequently in the Classical writers. For we have here, as Hyperius remarks, 'amplificatio cognitionis rerum spiritualium quam Galatæ assecuti fuerant, per correctionem interposita.' Γνωσθέντες is best explained by Grotius, Luther, and others, 'acknowledged by God as his sons, and approved to be such by the Spiritual gifts imparted to them.' See supra iii. 5. 1 Cor. viii. 3. 2 Tim. ii. 19. Wisd. iv. 1.

— πῶς ἐπιστρέφ.; &c.] 'how is it that ye are turning back?' &c. The Apostle expresses his wonder that they, who have been set free from the bondage of atheism, or polytheism, should return to bondage; even to a dispensation, which, however of Divine institution, was not of sufficient efficacy to procure them salvation; for that is all that is meant by the terms ἀσθενῆ and πτωχὰ, of which the latter is a further illustration, under another metaphor, of the idea contained in the former; see Grotius, Crellius, Doddridge, and Theophylact. How the law of Moses was weak, appears from Hebr. vii. 18, 19. x. 1; and how the law of nature was such, appears from the Epistle to the Romans, passim. For that the Apostle has both in view there is little doubt, and such is the opinion of the best Expositors. In πάλιν ἄνωθεν I would not, with Koppe and others, recognise a pleonasm for the simple πάλιν; though the forms πάλιν ἐκ δευτέρου and πάλιν αὖ might seem to countenance it. There is no necessity here to resort to any such principle; for the context very well admits of the full sense, namely, 'again, as at the first;' as though ye had never been Christians. So Hyperius, after ably pointing out the emphatical nature of all these several terms, adds, 'Facit enim ad vehementiam ἀναδίπλωσις illa iterum, ab integro.'

10. Here the Apostle illustrates by examples this δουλεύειν στοιχείοις πτωχοῖς.

καιροὺς καὶ ἐνιαυτούς· φοβοῦμαι ὑμᾶς, μήπως εἰκῆ κεκο- 11
πίακα εἰς ὑμᾶς.

c 2 Cor. 2. 5.
d 1 Cor. 2. 3. 2 Cor. 11. 30.

[c] Γίνεσθε ὡς ἐγὼ, ὅτι κἀγὼ ὡς ὑμεῖς, ἀδελφοὶ, δέομαι 12 ὑμῶν! οὐδέν με ἠδικήσατε. [d] Οἴδατε δὲ ὅτι δι' ἀσθένειαν τῆς 13

— ἡμέρας—ἐνιαυτούς.] We may render, 'So then ye observe days and months, and times and years!' Or if, with the Arabic Version, Wakefield, Buttmann, Chandler, and Scholz, we take the sentence interrogatively (by which, Chandler observes, the reproof is stronger, and the expression more tender), 'Do ye then observe?' &c. But the declarative mode has more of dignity, and perhaps propriety; since, as Hyperius remarks, the Apostle thus explains what he meant by the term elements; and, by one particular kind of legal observances, means various others to be understood. Such, too, is the view taken by Calvin.

Ἡμέρας refers to the Sabbaths; μῆνας to the novilunial festivals; and ἐν. to the Sabbatical and Jubilee years, Passover, &c. By καιροὺς are supposed to be designated the stated festivals. Παρατηρεῖν here signifies 'to superstitiously observe, by scrupulously distinguishing certain days from other days.' In illustration of which, Wetstein compares Jamblich. viii. 4 (speaking of the Egyptians), μήτε ἄλλο τι προσλαμβάνοντες, ἢ μόνον καιροῦ παρατήρησιν.

11. In φοβοῦμαι, &c., Borger and Winer think there is a kind of attraction; ὑμᾶς, which belongs to the clause following, being thrown back to the preceding one. Thus, by a very common Grecism, it will mean, 'I am afraid I have bestowed on you labour in vain.' Here, however, it is better not to resort to any such idiom, since that would somewhat lower the sense, which is far stronger according to the usual manner of rendering. The Apostle first expresses that he is in fear of them, and then subjoins the nature and extent of that fear. As Chandler observes, he does not wholly give them up as lost, though he expresses great concern for their danger. This will especially appear, if we attend to the strict propriety of the idiom here; for the force of μήπως with the Indicative is (as Winer observes) to show that the writer or speaker supposes the thing feared to have already taken place. So Thucyd. iii. 53, νῦν δὲ φοβούμεθα, μὴ ἀμφοτέρων ἅμα ἡμαρτήκαμεν. Here, however, it is sufficient to understand extreme fear of a thing, as almost sure to take place. 'The language is (observes Theodoret) that of a parent, who remembers the pains he has taken with his children, but does not see the fruit.'

12—16. Having thus justly reproved the inconstancy of the Galatians, the Apostle now subjoins an exhortation, in which he most affectionately adjures them to return to the right path, and imitate his example; reminding them of the time past, when they had most reverently and thankfully received the doctrine he preached to them. (Schott.)

12. γίνεσθε ὡς ἐγὼ, &c.] The exact import of these words has been somewhat disputed. Several Commentators (as Beza, Grotius, Calvin, Hyperius, Morus, Wolf, and Whitby) take it to be, 'love me with the same affection as I do you.' While the ancient Interpreters in general, and, of modern ones, Hammond, Doddridge, West, Rosenmuller, Semler, Koppe, Iaspis, Schleusner, Scott, Winer, and Schott, at κἀγὼ ὡς ὑμεῖς supplying ἐγενόμην, assign this sense: 'Follow my example, in renouncing the law for the Gospel. I was once as zealous for the law as you now are; but now I live as do the Gentiles, and not as do the Jews. Do you, who are not Jews, but Gentiles, live in like manner, as men released from the law.' Yet this requires no little violence to be done to the words. And, although this supplying of ἐγενόμην may seem unobjectionable as to the principle, that of supplying from a preceding verb in another tense or even mood of that verb, yet here it involves considerable harshness; and the sense thus arising is frigid and unsuitable to the context, the character of which is that of the deepest pathos. For, as Beza well remarks, 'in hac re noluit dicere Paulus se illorum similem esse, sed prorsus dissimilem:' and he truly observes, that such a sentiment as the above is quite foreign to the scope of the Apostle. Considering, then, the nature of the context, especially vv. 15, 16, it cannot be doubted that some sentiment of deep affection is meant to be expressed in this very brief and therefore obscure address, wherein the entreaty it contains is evidently that of one desiring continuance and reciprocity of affection on the part of another; comp. 2 Chron. xviii. 15. And taken in conjunction with ver. 16, we may regard the whole as an assurance that his love for them was unaltered, and an entreaty that theirs to him may be what it formerly was, and his now is. Beza well compares the Latin idiom, by which an intimate friend is called alter ego, or alter idem. So Cicero, in writing to Atticus says, 'Deinde te, quasi me alterum quæro,' where the quæro, like the ὡς, is (as Beza says) intended to soften the harshness of a bold expression. I cannot omit to mention that the transposition of the phrase of entreaty, δέομαι ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί, from the first part of the sentence, which is its usual place, to the last, strongly marks the pathos, in promoting which the hyperbaton has great force, a figure excellently treated of by Longinus, de Sublim. sect. xxii., where he says, that the hyperbaton is οἱονεὶ χαρακτὴρ ἐναγωνίου πάθους ἀληθέστατος. For, he adds, 'as those who are angry, indignant, or jealous, or suffering under any other strong affection, easily run into hyperbaton, so, in the best writers, excited feeling carries them to what are nature's works; for then is art perfect when it seems to be nature.' He then quotes as an example a passage of Herodot. vi. 11, ἐπὶ ξυροῦ γὰρ ἀκμῆς ἔχεται ἡμῖν τὰ πράγματα, ἄνδρες Ἴωνες, where ἄνδρες Ἴ. ought to have come in at the beginning of the sentence. The omission there of the words to which γὰρ refers (supplied by Longinus thus, νῦν καιρός ἐστιν ὑμῖν πόνους ἐπιδέχεσθαι), is to be traced to the same cause as in very many passages of St. Paul and of Thucydides.

— οὐδέν με ἠδικήσατε.] q. d. 'I have no grievous injuries to complain of at your hands, and therefore, in speaking so plainly as I must do, I am not actuated by any feeling of resentment.'

14 σαρκὸς εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν τὸ πρότερον· [e] καὶ τὸν πει- e Mal. 2. 7.
ρασμόν μου τὸν ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου οὐκ ἐξουθενήσατε οὐδὲ ἐξεπτύσατε· ἀλλ᾽ ὡς ἄγγελον Θεοῦ ἐδέξασθέ με, ὡς Χρι-15 στὸν Ἰησοῦν. Τίς οὖν ἦν ὁ μακαρισμὸς ὑμῶν; μαρτυρῶ γὰρ ὑμῖν ὅτι, εἰ δυνατὸν, τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ὑμῶν ἐξορύξαντες 16 ἂν ἐδώκατέ μοι. Ὥστε ἐχθρὸς ὑμῶν γέγονα ἀληθεύων ὑμῖν;
17 [f] Ζηλοῦσιν ὑμᾶς, οὐ καλῶς· ἀλλὰ ἐκκλεῖσαι ὑμᾶς θέλουσιν, f 2 Cor. 11 2.

We have here, as Calvin, Crellius, and Hyperius point out, a pre-occupation of an objection. And the connexion of these with the following words may be thus traced: 'I harbour no resentment against you, but rather affection for you, from a remembrance of past kindness received from you; for when I was labouring under much bodily infirmity, ye did not despise me [on that account], but,' &c. Δι' ἀσθ. τῆς σαρ., 'under weakness of body,' for ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ. The exact import of this expression ἀσθένεια τῆς σαρκὸς has been not a little disputed. But the interpretation generally adopted seems the best; by which it is understood of great infirmity and sickness of body, even such as to make his personal appearance mean and contemptible to the multitude. This is in the next verse called πειρασμὸς ἐν τῇ σαρκί.

14. τὸν πειρ. μου τὸν ἐν τῇ σ.] Most Expositors, ancient and modern, take this expression to refer to the persecutions and afflictions which Paul underwent. But to that interpretation insuperable objections have been urged by Whitby, Doddridge, Macknight, Scott, and Borger, with whom, and also Newcome and Iaspis, I would understand it to denote the same with the corporeal trial called 'the thorn in the flesh' at 2 Cor. xii. 7. Compare 2 Cor. x. 10. Πειρ. μου—ἐξουθ. οὐδὲ ἐξεπτ. means, by a common hypallage, 'to set at nought and scorn me on account of my trial.' Ἐξεπτ. is a stronger term than ἐξουθ. So Æschin. p. 31, δυσχεραίνει καὶ καταπτύει δωροδοκίας. The words ὡς ἄγγελον Θεοῦ ἐδέξ. do not (as most recent Commentators suppose) denote merely great personal respect; but also, and perhaps chiefly, such an obedient admission of the Apostle's doctrines, as if they were promulgated by an angel of God,—nay, even Jesus Christ himself in person, and not by deputy.

15. τίς—ὑμῶν;] Œcumenius, Locke, Wolf, Doddridge, Koppe, Borger, Iaspis, Winer, and Schleusner, rightly regard this as not meant to be interrogatory, but exclamatory; i. e. 'How great was your felicitation,' or mutual congratulation of yourselves! how happy did you think yourselves and others [in having such a teacher]! In τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ὑμῶν ἐξορύξ. ἂν ἐδώκατέ there is a proverbial and hyperbolical expression, frequent in the Classical writers, denoting the strongest affection. Indeed the eye is, both in the Scriptural and the Classical writers, taken to denote what is dearest to us.

16. The Apostle now deprecates any offence being taken at his free-spoken expostulations, and hints that such would be unjust; q. d. 'Faithful admonition is the part of a friend, not an enemy.' Compare 2 Thess. iii. 15. The only difficulty here is respecting ὥστε, which the best modern Expositors render ergone? as if it were written ἆρ' οὖν ἐχθρὸς ὑμῶν γέγονα; But of such a sense not the slightest evidence has ever been adduced. For as to passages where ὥστε means therefore, at the beginning of sentences not interrogatory, but declarative, they are not to the purpose. And that the sentence is interrogative is plain. It would be preferable to render, with the Syr. Vers., Piscator, and others, numquid? Yet this interrogation is only inherent in the context, and cannot be extracted from the word itself. Upon the whole, it would seem that the particle has neither the force of conclusion, nor of interrogation, but rather of mitigation, or softening. For it seems to be used, as occasionally in the Classical writers, for ἅτε or ὥσπερ, as it were; q. d. 'Am I become, as it were, your enemy, by speaking to you the truth?' The force of the Asyndeton, in such an appeal as this, it is needless to point out to any person of taste.

With respect to the words ἐχθ. ὑμῶν, Expositors are not agreed whether the sense be vobis invisus, 'the object of your hatred;' or, vobis infestus, 'one who hates you.' The former seems preferable; but both senses may be included. Ἀληθεύων ὑμῖν, 'by speaking to you the truth;' for, as says Terence, 'Obsequium amicos, veritas odium parit.'

17. There is an obscurity in this and the next verse, partly occasioned by extreme brevity, arising out of that delicacy of the Apostle, on a subject so personal to himself, which made him rather intimate his meaning than speak it fully out; and partly from that union of point and antithesis which sometimes tends to darken the sense. The persons here spoken of are the false teachers, who endeavoured to draw the Galatians to the observance of the Mosaic law in addition to that of Christianity.

— ζηλοῦσιν ὑμᾶς.] Some take this to mean, 'imitate your zeal for the Gospel.' But it is best interpreted by others, ambiunt, expetunt. Οὐ καλῶς, i. e. 'not with a good or commendable intent,' or on proper principles; meaning (as I would understand it), not from a real desire to promote your salvation, but from selfish motives and party feelings. An explanation strongly confirmed by the next words, which seem intended to be illustrative; and, viewed in that light, they need not have so perplexed the Expositors. The embarrassment, indeed, partly arose from the reading ἡμᾶς, introduced, on conjecture, by Beza, and transmitted into the Elzevir Edition and the textus receptus. Though for this reading there is not any direct evidence; MSS., Versions, and Fathers, all uniting in ὑμᾶς, which was, with great judgment, retained by the authors of our common version; and has been very properly restored by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, Winer, and Scholz. It was, in fact, discarded by Beza, merely from his ἵνα αὐτοὺς ζηλοῦτε. [l] Καλὸν δὲ [τὸ] ζηλοῦσθαι ἐν καλῷ, 18 πάντοτε, καὶ μὴ μόνον ἐν τῷ παρεῖναί με πρὸς ὑμᾶς·—

g 1 Cor. 4. 15. [g] τεκνία μου, οὓς πάλιν ὠδίνω, ἄχρις οὗ μορφωθῇ Χριστὸς ἐν 19 Philem. 10. James 1. 18. ὑμῖν!—ἤθελον δὲ παρεῖναι πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἄρτι, καὶ ἀλλάξαι τὴν 20 φωνήν μου, ὅτι ἀποροῦμαι ἐν ὑμῖν.

Λέγετέ μοι, οἱ ὑπὸ νόμον θέλοντες εἶναι· τὸν νόμον οὐκ 21
h Gen. 16. 15. & 21. 1, 2. ἀκούετε; [h] Γέγραπται γὰρ, ὅτι Ἀβραὰμ δύο υἱοὺς ἔσχεν· 22 not perceiving the sense of ἐκκλεῖσαι ὑμᾶς θέλ. just after, which is not, as many interpret, 'they desire to exclude you from the Church and salvation;' but rather (as Wahl, Bretschn., and Winer explain), 'they wish to separate you' from following me, or from connexion with me, or (as Schott explains) from all others (i. e. 'who have abandoned the Mosaic law), in order to, as it were, monopolize you to themselves.' The words ἵνα αὐτοὺς ζηλ. plainly mean, by the force of the antithesis, 'that you may attach yourselves to them and their party.'

18. καλὸν δὲ, &c.] A sentiment suggested by οὐ καλῶς just before. The difficulty complained of will vanish, if the words be considered as formed of two sentences blended into one. Thus the full sense will be: 'Zeal and attachment in a good cause is laudable; but it should be felt and shown always, and not merely when I am with you [but when, as now, absent from you.]' Real love (he means to say) exists in absence as well as presence.

19. τεκνία μου—ὑμῖν!] These words are by most recent Editors and Commentators (as Semler, Newcome, Borger, Vater, Winer, and Schott) closely connected with the preceding, a comma being placed after ὑμᾶς; and τεκνία being considered as in the Accusative, and in apposition with ὑμᾶς; while the ancient and most modern Commentators suppose them to commence a new period; i. e. (to use the words of Crellius) 'quasi amore erga Galatos, et summo solutus eorum studio, animi dolore abreptus, ita eos alloquitur;' τεκνία being thus regarded as a Vocative. Of the former mode I would say that it seems to weaken the pathos of the expression, and, considering the nature of the preceding sentence, the propriety of an Accusative may be questioned; while, on the other hand, the Vocative τεκνία is very suitable to ἤθελον. Yet the δὲ (found in every MS.) joined with ἤθελον seems to reject the τεκνία. Upon the whole, it seems best to regard the clause τεκνία—ὑμῖν as a parenthetical exclamation (called forth by the recollection of the endeavour made to draw away their affections from him, ver. 17) and left unfinished, from pathos; see Note supra ver. 12. The metaphor in ὠδίνω is one frequent in St. Paul, and scarcely less so in the Rabbinical writers, the term referring to the whole process of gestation and formation in the womb, to which the words following, ἄχρις οὗ μορφ. Χρ. ἐν ὑμῖν, are skilfully accommodated; there being, as Piscator and Calvin observe, a metaphor derived from an imperfect fœtus: see Theodoret. The sense, when divested of the metaphor, is, 'The same anxiety, my dear children, which I formerly felt in converting you, I again feel [and shall feel] till the Christian doctrine and disposition be thoroughly formed in your minds;' literally, until the very image of Christ be impressed on your hearts. The diminutive in τεκνία is one of affection; see Note on 1 John v. 21.

20. ἤθελον δὲ παρεῖναι.] Render, with Macknight and Newcome, 'Now I could wish' (see Acts xxv. 22, and Note on Rom. ix. 3). This was, doubtless, suggested by what had been said at ver. 18; and δὲ has the force of resumption; i. e. 'I could wish, I say, to be present with you.'

The sense of the words following, καὶ ἀλλάξαι τὴν φωνήν μου, is not very clear. Some take them to mean, 'change my tone [to praise instead of censure, which I cannot do], for I am in doubt about you;' while others suppose it to mean, 'to alter and vary my tone,' namely, 'by accommodating my addresses, either for reproof or condemnation, according to circumstances; for while absent I am quite at a loss with respect to you, what to think of you (see John xiii. 22), whether you have been truly converted or not, and how to adapt my language to your real degree of merit or demerit;' see 1 Cor. iv. 21. The former interpretation is most agreeable to what precedes; the latter, to what follows. And perhaps, considering how pregnant in meaning every portion of St. Paul's writings is, we shall not be wrong in supposing that both these senses might be intended.

21. The Apostle now turns to the Judaizers, and, resuming the refutation of their error, which formed the principal purpose of his Epistle, he proceeds to prove, by an allegorical interpretation of a passage of the Old Test. respecting the two sons of Abraham, that Christians, whom he compares to Isaac (not Ishmael, whom he likens to the Jews in bondage to the law), are liberated from the dominion of the law; and that the law has not any power to obtain justification; q. d. 'the former inherit by promise, the latter are in bondage.' In λέγετέ μοι there is not a mere Epanalepsis, or ἀνακοίνωσις, as some Commentators suppose; but rather a formula of affectionate, yet authoritative, remonstrance, as εἰπὲ in Luke vii. 42, and δεῦτε in Isaiah i. 18. Ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον εἶναι is an expression often used by St. Paul, as here, of being subject to the ceremonial law.

— τὸν νόμον οὐκ ἀκ.;] The sense seems to be, 'Do ye not hear and know what is written in the law, and what ye have heard read continually in your ears?' see Rom. ii. 13. Some recent Commentators, however, explain, 'Do not you attend to, nor understand the law [you profess to receive]?' Perhaps the latter sense may be admitted in conjunction with the former. As the error of the persons in question arose from a misapprehension of the scope and true intent of the Law, the Apostle now endeavours to remove their mistake by a reference to the Law, as found in Scripture, for the purpose of illustration.

23 ἕνα ἐκ τῆς παιδίσκης, καὶ ἕνα ἐκ τῆς ἐλευθέρας· ¹ ἀλλ' ὁ ¹ John 8. 39. Rom. 9. 7, 8.
μὲν ἐκ τῆς παιδίσκης, κατὰ σάρκα γεγένηται· ὁ δὲ ἐκ τῆς 24 ἐλευθέρας, διὰ τῆς ἐπαγγελίας. Ἅτινά ἐστιν ἀλληγορούμενα· αὗται γάρ εἰσιν [αἱ] δύο διαθῆκαι· μία μὲν ἀπὸ ὄρους

22. γέγραπται γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ may be rendered scilicet, or exempli gratiâ; q. d. 'The History of Abraham will illustrate what I mean to say, since it contains an apt emblem of the two covenants' between which you are hesitating.

23. κατὰ σάρκα] 'after the regular course of nature.' In the antithetical words διὰ τῆς ἐπαγγ. something is left to be supplied, and the full sense is: '[out of the common course of nature, and] by virtue of the promise made to Abraham.'

24. ἅτινά ἐστιν ἀλληγορούμενα.] Of these words (not a little disputed) the ancient Expositors in general, and most of the earlier modern ones, take the sense to be, 'quæ sunt per allegoriam dicta,' or 'quæ per allegoriam dicuntur;' meaning, as Koppe expresses it, 'that when these things concerning Sarah and Hagar were written by Moses, God intended the religion of Christ, and the accession thereto of the Jews and Heathens, to be obscurely prefigured.' Or, in other words, that 'the events referred to were so ordered by Providence as to be an apt representation of the different conditions of Jews and Christians, and that the literal history contains a spiritual and mystical meaning.' But some eminent modern Translators and Expositors, and almost all the recent ones, take the sense in general to be, 'quæ sunt allegorizata;' an interpretation ably maintained by Chandler, Sykes, Doddridge, Pearce, and especially Koppe, Dr. A. Clarke, Borger, and Bp. Marsh, Lect. p. 355, seqq. They differ, however, in their modes of rendering; some translating 'these things have been allegorized;' viz. by Isaiah liv. 1; others, 'may be allegorized;' others again, 'are to be allegorized.' Thus, Koppe observes, 'it is supposed, that the narration in question was merely historical, but seemed to the Apostle worthy of being accommodated to the case of Christians, which bore some resemblance thereto.' One thing is certain, that our common Version, retained by Macknight, 'are an allegory,' does not properly represent the sense. 'It is one thing (observes Bp. Marsh) to say that a history is allegorized; it is another thing to say that it is allegory itself. If we only allegorize an historical narrative, we do not of necessity convert it into allegory.' Be that as it may, it has (I think) been fully shown by Koppe, Borger, and Bp. Marsh, that the interpretation first mentioned is untenable. The second must therefore be adopted. It, however, contains two or three modifications, between which we may hesitate. The version 'are to be allegorized,' can, I think, no more be defended than our common one; and to say 'are allegorized,' meaning by others, would be forced and frigid. I should prefer to render, with Abp. Newcome, 'are here allegorized [by me],' or, 'are [and may be thus] allegorized;' i. e. accommodated to the case of the Law and the Gospel. In this sense, ἀλληγορεῖν is often used by Philo. The author of the Life of Homer, too, speaking of the marriage of Jupiter and Juno in that poet, says, δοκεῖ ταῦτα ἀλληγορεῖσθαι ('are to be understood allegorically'), ὅτι Ἥρα μὲν νοεῖται ὁ ἀὴρ, Ζεὺς δὲ ὁ αἰθήρ. But after all, the coincidence of circumstances in the two cases is so exact, and the manner of the Apostle's words is such, as to convey far more than the sense of accommodation. So that we cannot, I think, suppose the Apostle meant to express less than what Winer assigns as the sense, 'quæ habent hunc sensum sublimiorem.' So Schott: 'Hæc (de utroque Abrahami filio narrata) aliud verbis dicunt, aliud innuunt, sed sensum habent sublimiorem.' It is meant that they may be considered as emblematical and typical, namely, by the correspondence of type and antitype: a view of the sense supported by Chrysostom and Theophylact. So Bp. Marsh also well observes, that 'when St. Paul allegorized the history of the two sons of Abraham, and compared them with the two covenants, he did nothing more than represent the first as types, the latter as their antitypes. But though he treated that portion of the Mosaic history in the same manner as we treat an allegory, he did not thereby convert it into allegory.' And after censuring Macknight for confounding the terms allegory and type, the learned Prelate continues: 'An allegory is a fictitious narrative; a type is something real. An allegory is a picture of the imagination; a type is an historic fact. It is true, that typical interpretation may in one sense be considered as a species of allegorical interpretation; that they are so far alike, as being equally an interpretation of things; that they are equally founded on resemblance; that the type corresponds to its antitype, as the immediate representation in an allegory corresponds to its ultimate representation. Yet the quality of the things compared, as well as the purport of the comparison, is very different in the two cases.' This is very true; but it does not thence follow that the literal and proper sense of the two terms in Greek, Latin, and English, may not have been occasionally so confounded, as that allegory may have been used for type. Thus Calvin remarks that ἀλληγ. is here used catachresticè. And it is plain that the Syriac Translator, in rendering 'these events are allegories of the two covenants,' must have meant types. Nay, J. Capell., Gomar, and others, render, 'sunt typica, vel figurata.' Finally, when Crellius translates 'quæ sunt allegorica,' he, as is clear from the words following, takes allegorica in the sense typica. With the excess to which it has been shown the Jews carried their allegorical interpretation of the Old Test., we are here not concerned. And be it observed (with Chandler and Doddridge), that this portion is here introduced, not as a direct argument, but as an illustration of the subject. Or, to speak yet more exactly (with Schott), the Apostle only meant to bring forward a secondary argument, for the use of those who were convinced by the preceding argumentation, that bondage was inherent in the Mosaic law.

— αὗται] these, i. e. these persons, Sarah and Hagar. Εἰσιν, 'signify,' 'represent,' (as Matt. xiii. 38. Eph. iv. 9, and often in the New Test.)

Σινᾶ, εἰς δουλείαν γεννῶσα, ἥτις ἐστὶν Ἄγαρ· (τὸ γὰρ 25
Ἄγαρ Σινᾶ ὄρος ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ, συστοιχεῖ δὲ τῇ νῦν j Heb. 12 22. Rev. 3. 12. & 21. 2, 10, &c. Ἱερουσαλὴμ, δουλεύει δὲ μετὰ τῶν τέκνων αὐτῆς·) [j] ἡ δὲ 26 ἄνω Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐλευθέρα ἐστὶν, ἥτις ἐστὶ μήτηρ [πάντων] k Isa. 54. 1. ἡμῶν. [k] γέγραπται γάρ· Εὐφράνθητι, στεῖρα ἡ οὐ 27 τίκτουσα· ῥῆξον καὶ βόησον, ἡ οὐκ ὠδίνουσα· ὅτι πολλὰ τὰ τέκνα τῆς ἐρήμου μᾶλλον ἢ τῆς ἐχούσης l Rom. 9. 7, 8. τὸν ἄνδρα· [l] ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἀδελφοὶ, κατὰ Ἰσαὰκ, ἐπαγγελίας 28
m Gen. 21. 9. τέκνα ἐσμέν. [m] Ἀλλ', ὥσπερ τότε ὁ κατὰ σάρκα γεννηθεὶς 29 were emblems of the covenants, the Mosaic and Christian. Αἱ, not found in the early Editions, nor in the best MSS., has been with reason rejected by every Editor of eminence from Mill. Ἀπὸ ὄρους Σ., 'that which came from Mount Sinai [brought by Moses].' Γεννῶσα scil. τεκνία. The literal sense is, 'a covenant which brings forth [children] unto bondage [to the law and to sin];' the verbal being, according to the Hebrew idiom, included in the verb. Γενν., however, is only used suitably to the metaphor, by which the covenant is considered under the image of a mother bringing forth children.

25. τὸ γὰρ Ἄγαρ—Ἀραβίᾳ.] The difficulty, which the earlier modern Commentators found in these words, and in consequence of which Bentley, Kuster, and Valcknaer, proposed to cancel them, as a gloss, is much lessened by throwing them, with Capell. and Wolf, into a parenthesis. To advert to a great source of perplexity; the most eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed, that τὸ Ἄγαρ signifies 'this word Agar.' Thus we may render: 'Now this word Agar is [the name given to] Mount Sinai in Arabia.' That this was an appellation of Sinai among the people of the surrounding country, we have the testimony of Chrysostom and the ancient Commentators, which is also confirmed by the accounts of modern travellers. And it might well have it, since הגר in Arabic signifies a rock, or rocky mountain; and as Sinai is remarkably such, it might be κατ' ἐξοχὴν called τὸ Ἄγαρ.

— συστοιχεῖ δὲ] scil. (ἡ Ἄγαρ) 'corresponds to Jerusalem.' Τῇ νῦν, 'which now is,' i. e. in its present state, 'antequam solemniter instauretur regnum Messianum.' See Winer.

26. ἡ δὲ ἄνω Ἱερ.] Meaning, figuratively, the Christian Church, the Gospel Dispensation, in that new and perfect state, which it will assume at the coming of the Messiah.

Ἐλευθέρα, free; viz., from spiritual bondage. Μήτηρ πάντων ἡμῶν; i. e. of all true believers. Πάντων, however, is wanting in several MSS., Versions, and Fathers, and is rejected by Mill and Bengel, and cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz. It may be an interpolation; but the Apostle (as Winer observes) is accustomed to join πάντες with ἡμεῖς or ὑμεῖς; as Gal. iii. 28. 2 Cor. ii. 3. vii. 15. Phil. i. 4. Though as that is not very agreeable to the usage of the Classical writers, it might therefore be removed by the early Critics.

27. εὐφράνθητι—ἄνδρα.] This is quoted exactly from the Sept. Version of Isaiah liv. 1, which, in its literal sense, represents the Jewish state, though then labouring under great distress, as to be hereafter restored to its pristine glory. But it is, we find by the Apostle's application, to be referred, at least in a sublimer sense, to the Christian Jerusalem, the Church. With respect to the correspondence, the expression στεῖρα ἡ οὐ τίκτ. is to be understood of the Christian Church, in a great measure composed of Gentiles; and τῆς ἐχούσης τὸν ἄνδρα, of the Jewish Church. Στεῖρα is brought in with reference to the barrenness of the antitype Sarah. At ῥῆξον sub. φωνήν.

— πολλὰ—ἄνδρα.] Render, 'many more are the children of the deserted and neglected, than of her who had a husband.' In ἐχ. τὸν ἄνδρα there is an allusion to the fecundity which may be expected to result from the circumstances described. Ἐρήμου has reference to the desertion of Sarah by Abraham, to cohabit with Hagar, who is therefore meant by τῆς ἐχ. ἄνδρα. 'The Gentile world (says Dr. Chandler) is here represented as a forsaken unmarried woman, [rather as a neglected unmarried, or a forsaken married woman. Ed.] because the Gentiles were not constituted the Church of God, nor taken into a special covenant with him, but were generally abandoned to idolatry and vice. And she is ordered to shout for joy for that happy alteration which God intended to make in her circumstances, by espousing her to himself, and giving her at length a more numerous posterity than the married wife, viz. than the Church of the Jews could ever boast of, who are represented as betrothed to God, because they were under his peculiar protection, and brought into a special covenant with him.'

28. Here the Apostle adverts to the promise itself of offspring held out to the heavenly Jerusalem; i. e. the Christian Church; q. d. 'If you would know who it is that are meant by the prophet, it is we Christians; we are the ἐπαγγελίας τέκνα (for τὰ τέκνα τὰ ἐπηγγελμένα), children divinely promised, not κατὰ σάρκα, like the Jews,' Rom. ix. 8; see also supra iii. 14. Κατὰ Ἰσ., 'after the similitude or example of Isaac.' So κατὰ is used in Eph. iv. 24, and often.

29. Here the Apostle, adhering to the same similitude, adds, that as Ishmael vexed Isaac, so do the Jews persecute the Christians. (Borger.) It was not, however, done merely to trace another point of coincidence, but to suggest that Christians are not to be surprised at similar persecution, from a similar cause,—envy; but many comfort themselves with reflecting, that the persecution of Ishmael did not prevent Isaac from being the freeborn son of Abraham, and the persecutor's supe-

30 ἐδίωκε τὸν κατὰ πνεῦμα, οὕτω καὶ νῦν. [n] Ἀλλὰ τί λέγει ἡ [n Gen. 21. 10, 12] γραφή; Ἔκβαλε τὴν παιδίσκην καὶ τὸν υἱὸν αὐτῆς, οὐ γὰρ μὴ κληρονομήσῃ ὁ υἱὸς τῆς παιδίσκης μετὰ 31 τοῦ υἱοῦ τῆς ἐλευθέρας. Ἄρα, ἀδελφοὶ, οὐκ ἐσμὲν παι-
1 δίσκης τέκνα, ἀλλὰ τῆς ἐλευθέρας. V. [a] Τῇ ἐλευθερίᾳ [a Acts 15. 10. 1 Pet 2. 16.]
[οὖν], ᾗ Χριστὸς ἡμᾶς ἠλευθέρωσε, στήκετε, καὶ μὴ πάλιν
2 ζυγῷ δουλείας ἐνέχεσθε. Ἴδε, ἐγὼ Παῦλος λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι, 3 ἐὰν περιτέμνησθε, Χριστὸς ὑμᾶς οὐδὲν ὠφελήσει. μαρτύρομαι rior. 'As (observes Chandler) being born after the flesh, and after the Spirit, are here opposed; the being born after the Spirit must mean, Isaac's being born in a peculiar manner, by the extraordinary influence of the Spirit and power of God.' Διώκω will here denote injurious treatment of every kind, both in deeds and words. And although the Mosaic history records only one instance of insulting treatment,—namely, on Ishmael mocking Sarah, when she weaned Isaac (see Gen. xxi. 9, 10); yet when we consider the disappointment which both Hagar and Ishmael must have felt on the birth of Isaac, it was not unnatural for them to feel ill-will, and show it on every occasion to the real heir of the promise. And many such are recorded, from tradition, in the Rabbinical writers.

30. ἀλλὰ τί λέγει ἡ γραφή; Ἔκβ.] This is meant to indicate that the consequence of unbelief and disobedience, in the case of the Jewish Church, will be correspondent to that in the case of the antitype Hagar; viz. the being cast out from the presence and favour of God, and excluded from salvation.

31. ἄρα, ἀδελφοὶ, &c.] The Apostle here, through delicacy, does not fully express, but only hints at the conclusion to be made, simply expressing what may serve to suggest it; q. d. 'We believers, then, whether Jews or Gentiles, are not in the state I have represented by Hagar, but in that which I have represented by Sarah; consequently, we are not under bondage to sin and death, but are free from them by Christ, being alone heirs of the promises.'

V. Having set forth their Christian liberty, the Apostle subjoins, by way of inference, that they should stedfastly continue in, and maintain, the exercise of that liberty from the yoke of the law, which Christ had bestowed on them.

1. There is here an inference from the preceding; and, therefore, this verse ought not to have commenced a new chapter. Στήκ. ἐν is equivalent to the Classical ἐμμένειν. Ἐνέχεσθε is generally explained by κρατεῖσθε. The word is used properly of being held by ropes, nets, &c.; but is often metaphorically employed; as ἐνέχεσθαι ἐν νόμοις, 'to be held in obedience to the laws.' The ἐν may have reference to the insertion of the neck in a noose or yoke. And thus the sense will be, 'do not again thrust your neck into the yoke of bondage [to the law].' See 2 Cor. xi. 4.

Here there are two remarkable varr. lectt., but manifestly inferior to the common one. The origin of both readings (one of which is with singular rashness edited by Griesbach) has been evinced by Rinck to have been mere error, or the emendandi audacia of the early Biblical Critics, some of whom appear to have been displeased with the position of the οὖν, and changed it, though (as in many other cases) for the worse. From this change of position Griesbach irrationally concluded that it ought to have place no where! and he cut it out (as Scholz has done after him), though without any authority, and notwithstanding that the sentence is thus deprived of what shows its scope.

2. ἐγὼ Π. λέγω, &c.] This mention of his name may be meant (as at Eph. iii. 1, and 2 Cor. x. 1) to give weight and authority to what is about to be said. But it seems also intended to contrast his doctrine with that of the false teachers; nay, as some think, what he really teaches with what he is by certain persons represented as teaching. The ἴδε, mind! hints at the great importance of what he is going to say, which forms the first among the several reasons adduced why he wishes them to stand fast in their Christian liberty, and that from the great detriment with which its loss would be attended.

— ἐὰν περιτέμ.] i. e. 'if ye undertake the ritual law,'—namely, as necessary to justification, expecting to be justified thereby. For the words, as Chandler shows, have reference not to the Jews, who submitted to the rite as a national constitution (or mode of entering into covenant with God), but to the Gentiles becoming circumcised.

— Χριστὸς ὑμᾶς οὐδὲν ὠφ.] Between what is said here and that at Acts xvi. 3, and 1 Cor. ix. 20, no real inconsistency exists; for though the Apostle does say that circumcision would exclude a man from the benefit of Christ, it is not at variance with his position at iii. 28, and vi. 15, that circumcision is a thing indifferent; since, though of itself it could do neither harm nor good, yet when considered in conjunction with all the other rites of the law which it drew after it, and accompanied with a trust in it as necessary to justification, it could not but do harm,—nay, exclude from salvation by grace, since the two modes of salvation in the law and the Gospel are inconsistent with each other. See more in Chrysostom, Theophylact, Whitby, and Chandler.

3. μαρτύρομαι δὲ πάλιν.] 'And moreover, I solemnly declare;' a use of μαρτύρομαι similar to that at Acts xx. 26. The expression πάλιν does not imply repetition, but is here, as often, a continuative particle, connecting circumstances which relate to the same subject. Indeed, the present verse forms, as Hyperius shows, a second reason for the foregoing position; or, as Calvin says, contains a proof thereof deduced ex loco repugnantium. It may, however, suffice to say, that the verse is meant to further confirm the former δὲ πάλιν παντὶ ἀνθρώπῳ περιτεμνομένῳ, ὅτι ὀφειλέτης ἐστὶν ὅλον τὸν * νόμον ποιῆσαι. Κατηργήθητε ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ 4 οἵτινες ἐν νόμῳ δικαιοῦσθε· τῆς χάριτος ἐξεπέσατε. [b] Ἡμεῖς 5 γὰρ Πνεύματι ἐκ πίστεως ἐλπίδα δικαιοσύνης ἀπεκδεχόμεθα.

[c] Ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ οὔτε περιτομή τι ἰσχύει, οὔτε ἀκρο- 6 βυστία, ἀλλὰ πίστις δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργουμένη. [d] Ἐτρέχετε 7 καλῶς· τίς ὑμᾶς * ἐνέκοψε τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι; [e] Ἡ 8

b 2 Tim. 4. 8.
c Supra 6. 15. Matt. 12. 50. 1 Cor. 7. 19. Col. 3. 11.
d 1 Cor. 9. 24. supra 3. 1.
e Supra 1. 6.

one, and to intimate the reason for what might seem a harsh restriction.

— ὀφειλέτης ἐστί.] Meaning, figuratively, 'are morally bound to the performance of.' So the expression is used at Rom. viii. 12, where see Note. By this it is intimated that circumcision, like baptism, binds the person who undergoes it to the other rites of the religion undertaken; and that thus the undergoing circumcision is a virtual abandonment of Christianity.

4—6. Here the Apostle shows why circumcision, with the expectation of being justified, must exclude from Christ. Κατηργ. ἀπὸ τ. Χ. Meaning, 'are separated from Christ.' The ἀπὸ is here used after κατηργ. agreeably to common usage after verbs of loosing and separating. The primary idea, however, is not altogether lost, but is alluded to in the grace heretofore given having lost its effect by becoming useless, and thus having been given in vain. So Rom. vii. 2. 6, καταργ. ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου. Δικαιοῦσθε means (as Œcumenius observes) δικαιοῦσθαι ζητεῖτε. The next words τῆς χάριτος ἐξεπ. are exegetical of κατηργ.; q. d. 'ye have fallen from, and have forfeited the hope of salvation by, grace in the Gospel;' see Chandler. So 2 Pet. iii. 17, ἵνα μὴ ἐκπέσητε τοῦ ἰδίου στηριγμοῦ.

5. In this verse we have, as Calvin and Hyperius show, a pre-occupation of an objection: 'What, then, is there no use in circumcision?' The Apostle shows that those are aiming at an absurdity who think that both religions may be conjoined, and wish to be accounted Christians, even though they seek to attain justification by an obedience to the law. This he does by tacitly contrasting the carnal with the spiritual faith. In short, his great object is, as Hyperius observes, that 'of more fully explaining what he had said on justification by grace;' and, as Chandler says, 'is meant to give a reason why those who expected justification from the law of Moses were fallen from Christ.' 'Having (observes Chrysostom) shown the shipwreck of faith and salvation they cannot but sustain by Judaizing, he now points out to them the port of grace, and teaches them the ready and safe course by which salvation may be attained.'

— ἡμεῖς γὰρ Πνεύματι, &c.] On the sense of Πνεύματι some difference of opinion exists. The ancient and earlier modern Commentators understand it of the influence of the Holy Spirit. While certain later ones interpret, 'by the internal feelings;' a sense, however, far too vague. One would prefer the explanation of Wolfe, Koppe, and Borger: 'the doctrine of the Gospel, which is spiritual, as opposed to the carnality of the law.' There is, however, no sufficient reason to abandon the ancient and common interpretation.

In ἐλπίδα ἀπεκδ. we have not a mere pleonasm, but rather a very strong mode of expression, to denote 'anxious longing after, full expectation of any thing.' For ἀπεκδέχομαι, like ἀποκαραδοκέω, signifies properly to thrust forward the head and neck, as in anxious expectation of hearing or seeing something; see Rom. viii. 19. 1 Cor. i. 7, and compare Deut. xxviii. 32. The full sense may be thus expressed: 'We look anxiously forward to the hope of justification by faith;' i. e. 'we embrace it in confident expectation, relying upon it as an absolute verity.'

6. ἐν γὰρ Χρ.] q. d. 'I say in faith, and faith only; for,' &c. Here we have, as Hyperius shows, a reason why they should confidently expect justification by the Spirit, and that deduced from the exalted nature of faith. To preclude, however, the supposition, that a bare faith was meant, the Apostle cautiously subjoins the limitation δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργ., meaning, what shows itself, exerts its efficacy in action, as opposed to mere speculation; what is operative, as opposed to what produces no fruits; see 1 Thess. ii. 13. The term ἀγάπη has here a signification quite as extensive as at 1 Cor. xiii. 1, and may be understood both of love to man, as shown in Christian charity or universal benevolence (comp. 2 Pet. i. 5. 7, and so Matt. xxiv. 12, ψυγήσεται ἡ ἀγάπη), and love to God, namely, as the principle of action, implying universal obedience to God's commandments.

7. Having opened out the true nature of the Christian religion, and shown that it cannot stand with the Law, the Apostle takes occasion to express his wonder that the Galatians should in any degree have deserted it; and inveighs against the false teachers, by whose evil persuasions the Galatians had been induced to swerve from the right course of Evangelical liberty; to which, however, he expresses a hope that they will return. The scope of the passage is ably traced by Hyperius and Calvin, who show that few and brief as are the arguments employed to bring back the erring Galatians, they are most judiciously selected, as being those highly calculated to work upon them, and fully effect the purpose in view. He first proceeds upon a comparison of their former state with their present one; and that (as Calvin observes) in order that, by the sense of shame, they may be induced to return to the way from which they had departed.

— ἐτρέχετε καλῶς] 'ye were running well;' i. e. going on prosperously in your Christian course. An agonistic metaphor (see Note on ver. 22, and 1 Cor. ix. 24), suggested by the term ἐξεπέσατε at ver. 4, and meant to suggest the necessity of continued zeal and energy.

— ἐνέκοψε.] The common reading here is ἀνέκοψε, 'hath checked you in your course,' 'hindered you;' i. e. 'hath retarded, hindered.' Now this reading is well sustained by examples, and might be admitted; but, as all the best MSS.,

9 πεισμονὴ οὐκ ἐκ τοῦ καλοῦντος ὑμᾶς. [f] μικρὰ ζύμη ὅλον τὸ f 1 Cor. 5. 6.
10 φύραμα ζυμοῖ. [g] Ἐγὼ πέποιθα εἰς ὑμᾶς ἐν Κυρίῳ, ὅτι οὐδὲν g 2 Cor. 2. 3. & 8. 22.
ἄλλο φρονήσετε· ὁ δὲ ταράσσων ὑμᾶς βαστάσει τὸ κρίμα, supra 1. 7.
11 ὅστις ἂν ᾖ. [h] Ἐγὼ δέ, ἀδελφοί, εἰ περιτομὴν ἔτι κηρύσσω, h 1 Cor. 1. 23.

all the early Editions, except the Erasmian and Stephanic ones, and many Versions and Fathers, have ἐνέκοψε, which yields quite as good a sense, and one more agreeable to the foregoing metaphor, it is preferable, and has been, with reason, adopted by Bengel, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, Schott, and Scholz. Ἐγκόπτω signifies 'to cut off any one course, by digging trenches in his way, and thus stopping his progress;' and here alludes to any one going across the race-course, so as to stop, or obstruct, the progress of any one who is running.

Τίς is not simply interrogative, but implies grief and indignation, as at iii. 1, τίς ὑμᾶς ἐβάσκανε;

At πείθεσθαι supply ὥστε or ἕνεκα τοῦ. The μὴ is used with πείθ., according to that Greek idiom, by which verbs containing or implying denial admit μὴ to be added to the Infinitive following; and of which I have, in various Notes on Thucydides, shown the true nature, and proved that there is no pleonasm. By τῇ ἀληθείᾳ is meant the true religion, as it is in Jesus, the true doctrine of Christ, as contradistinguished from the doctrines of deceivers, which, it is intimated, are falsehood.

8. ἡ πεισμονή.] On the force of this term some difference of opinion exists. By the ancient and most modern Expositors it is explained, 'this facility of belief, credulity (εὐπείθεια), whereby ye take up the notion of the necessity of mixing Judaism with Christianity.' Others, however, understand by it, 'power or skill of persuasion;' of course referring it to the false teachers. Either of the above interpretations will yield a good sense; but the former is the more natural, and agreeable to the context, and to the paronomasia subsisting between πείθεσθαι and πεισμονή. The word πεισμονὴ is so rare, that it has only been found elsewhere in Eustathius and Hesychius.

— τοῦ καλοῦντος ὑ.] By this expression most Expositors, especially the earlier ones, understand either God or Christ. While others (as Locke, Doddridge, Chandler, Newcome, and Macknight) interpret it of Paul himself; which latter view would seem preferable, and, besides yielding a more apposite sense, is confirmed by supra i. 6, θαυμάζω ὅτι οὕτω ταχέως μετατίθεσθε ἀπὸ τοῦ καλέσαντος ὑμᾶς ἐν χάριτι Χριστοῦ εἰς ἕτερον εὐαγγέλιον. The Apostle means to say, that 'he had called them to liberty from the law, and therefore could not be supposed to preach up circumcision,' ver. 13.

9. Here we have, as Hyperius observes, a second argument, and that from the danger of the course in question. This is enforced by a proverbial saying, also occurring at 1 Cor. v. 6, where see Note. With respect to the application here, many refer it to the false teachers; q. d. 'a few false teachers may corrupt the whole congregation;' see 2 Tim. ii. 17. While others refer it to the false doctrine which maintained the necessity of circumcision, and such a partial observance of the law as those Judaizers might then be content to enjoin. This is preferable; for the Apostle means, that 'the yielding on those points would entirely corrupt their Christian principles.' So that the sentiment is parallel to that at ver. 3.

10. ἐγὼ πέποιθα—Κυρίῳ.] This is intended to soften the harshness of the preceding expressions, by an assurance of some remaining confidence in them; for we have here (as Hyperius remarks) 'an argumentum à spe, sive à bona expectatione, quam de ipsis concipit.' The ἐγὼ is emphatic: 'I, for my part,' &c. Πέποιθα—Κυρίῳ may mean, either 'I have confidence in you, through the goodness and assistance of the Lord;' or rather, 'I trust in the Lord concerning you.' Perhaps, however, both senses are intended: q. d. 'I trust in the Lord [relying on his help], and I place confidence in you.'

— οὐδὲν ἄλλο φρον.] Here there is something left to be supplied; probably, as often, from modesty. It is not agreed among Expositors, whether the words mean, 'that you will be of the same opinion as myself,' namely, on the subject of this Epistle; or, 'that you will entertain no principles contrary to the doctrine I taught you.' The former is preferable, especially as the latter sense merges into the former.

— ὁ δὲ ταράσσων ὑ.] 'However, he that troubleth you;' or rather, 'perplexes and unsettles you;' as if that was all he could do,—not teach them. So Galen, cited by Wetstein; ταράττοντες μόνον τοὺς μανθάνοντας, διδάσκοντες δὲ οὐδέν. The use of the singular will not prove that there was no more than one false teacher; since it may be used collectively. Yet the Apostle seems to glance at one, the principal of them; and by ὅστις ἂν ᾖ we may infer, that he was a person of some consequence. Βαστ. τὸ κρ. many render, 'shall, or will, bear (i. e. receive) the punishment [suitable to his offence],' whether excommunication, or the infliction of bodily disease. See Matt. xxiii. 13. Rom. xiii. 2.

11. ἐγὼ δὲ—ἔτι κηρ.] The Apostle here glances at one of the grossest calumnies respecting him, disseminated by the ὁ ταράσσων and his partizans; namely, that he had, on some occasions, and when it suited his interest, preached the necessity of circumcision, or, at least, had allowed it to some other Churches;—while to the Galatians he interdicted it. Ἔτι, 'even yet;' i. e. after having become a Christian, and Apostle of the Gentiles. 'If I yet, as they say, preach [the necessity of] circumcision [to justification],' τί ἔτι διώκ.; 'how is it that I am yet persecuted?' viz., by the Jews and Judaizers. A sense of τί occurring in Luke i. 62, and elsewhere, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers. The Apostle means to argue, that his being yet under such furious persecution from the Jews was a decided proof that he did not preach circumcision and the law. If that be the case, (ἄρα) then κατήργ. τὸ σκάνδαλον τ. σ., 'the chief matter at which offence is taken [by the persons in question, Jews and Judaizers] (namely, that salvation was only to be obtained by believing in the Messiahship of one who was crucified) is done away;' q. d. 'then τί ἔτι διώκομαι; ἄρα κατήργηται τὸ σκάνδαλον τοῦ σταυροῦ.

i 1 Cor. 5. 13, 9. & 9. 19. [i] Ὄφελον καὶ ἀποκόψονται οἱ ἀναστατοῦντες ὑμᾶς. 12 k Infra 6. 2. 1 Pet. 2. 16. 2 Pet. 2. 19. Jude 4. [k] Ὑμεῖς γὰρ ἐπ' ἐλευθερίᾳ ἐκλήθητε, ἀδελφοί· μόνον μὴ 13
τὴν ἐλευθερίαν εἰς ἀφορμὴν τῇ σαρκί· ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης persecution would have ceased, [but it has not].' By σταυροῦ is meant the doctrine of the sacrifice of Christ on the cross, and the necessity of that sacrifice for the salvation of men. And as by this death not only eternal salvation was procured, but deliverance from the burdensome ceremonies of the Mosaic law was effected,—it is no wonder that such a doctrine should have been a stumbling-block to the Jews. See Chrysostom and Theophylact.

12. ὄφελον καὶ ἀποκόψ. οἱ ἀναστατ. ὑ.] These words have given rise to no little discussion among Commentators. The ancient ones almost universally, and many of the most eminent moderns, recognise a sarcastic paronomasia between περιτέμνεσθαι and ἀποκόψασθαι: q. d. 'I would that they, who are so fond of circumcising, would not only circumcise, but even cut off the parts usually circumcised.' But although this action is supposed to be voluntarily performed (and therefore the view in question is not liable to the objection of Doddridge, that 'it were inconsistent with the Apostolic character to wish any bodily evil were inflicted by human violence'), yet I am inclined to agree with Erasmus, Crellius, Le Clerc, Elsner, Whitby, and others, that this sentiment has too much of bitterness and levity (not to say indecorum) to be supposed likely to have come from St. Paul (even with all the allowance which Koppe, Borger, and Schott justly claim for the change of manners, and difference of ideas between ages so distant as St. Paul's and our own); especially as we find no approach to any thing like a coarse joke elsewhere in his writings, though penned under equally great 'commotion of mind.' For in the passage of Phil. iii. 2, we have only a paronomasia between κατατομὴν and περιτομ. Of the other interpretations proposed, only two seem to merit attention; 1. that of Elsner, Koppe, Newcome, and others, who take the sense to be, 'may they be cut off by some disease, or even suffer perdition from God!' But that yields a sentiment even less suitable to the character of the Apostle, and, as Schott remarks, had this been the sense, the Apostle would have used another expression, and not ἀποκ.; see 1 Cor. xvi. 22. v. 5. 2ndly, That of Piscator, Menoch., Par., Estius, Crellius, Hyperius, Whitby, Chandler, Doddridge, Jortin, Dresig., Michael., Iaspis, and others, who assign the following sense: 'I would that they were even cut off from your society by excommunication, or would cut themselves off, by leaving it; and thus were prevented from giving you any further trouble;' which has much semblance of truth; for the ellipsis of ἀφ' ὑμῶν is very mild, and like that at iv. 17. 30. And the use of the future middle for future passive is by no means uncommon. The construction with a future Indicative for Infinitive is indeed rare; but examples are adduced from Arrian and Aristænetus. Finally, the uncommonness of the word in this sense may be sufficiently tolerated from the paronomasia; see Note supra v. 8. With respect to the allusion, it is certainly not (as Dr. Burton supposes) to ἐνέκοψε at ver. 7, but rather to the thing in question, περιτομὴ, which at Phil. iii. 2, the Apostle contemptuously calls κατατομή. This last interpretation is confirmed by the Apostle having alluded to excommunication at i. 8, 9, and by a similar passage of 1 Cor. v. 6, 7, adduced by Whitby and Chandler, where having said, as here, 'a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump,' he adds, 'Purge out therefore the old leaven, and put away from you the wicked person.' The Apostle wishes that they would do it, rather than feels disposed himself to order it to be done (as in 1 Cor. v. 1—5. ix. 13), because (as observes Scott) 'the infection had spread so wide in the churches of Galatia, the persons to be censured possessed so great influence, and so very many were concerned in some degree, that there was little prospect, except by the intervention of miracles, that such a command would be obeyed.' Besides, the Apostle could not well command the Corinthians to excommunicate the false teachers,—their conduct not being of the scandalous nature of that of the incestuous person.

Corresponding to ἀναστατοῦντες here is ἀναστατώσαντες τὴν οἰκουμένην at Acts xvii. 6.

13. 'In the remaining part of the chapter the Apostle proceeds to guard them against the abuses of Christian liberty, and particularly against that censorious, uncharitable, and unchristian spirit which many of the Gentile converts seemed to have indulged, who, not contented to enjoy their own liberty and freedom from the ceremonial law of Moses, were too ready to judge and despise the Jewish converts, because of their subjection to, and zeal for, it; whilst the Jews, on the other hand, were as ready to condemn the Gentile converts for not conforming to the law of Moses.' (Chandler.)

— ὑμεῖς γὰρ, &c.] The recent Commentators in general suppose here a connexion with the words preceding. Yet the γὰρ would thus require too much to be supplied; and it may rather refer to the words πέποιθα εἰς ὑμᾶς—ὅτι οὐδὲν ἄλλο φρονήσετε: the intermediate ones being, in some measure, parenthetical; q. d. '[Do so then,] for,' &c.

— ἐπ' ἐλευθ.] The ἐπὶ is rendered by Rosenmuller, Borger, and Schott, 'hac lege et conditione, ut libertatem usurparetis.' So Thucydides, vii. 82, εἴ τις βούλεται ἐπ' ἐλευθερίᾳ ὡς σφᾶς ἀπιέναι. But the sense rather seems to be, 'to the intent that ye should be free [from the law of Moses].' So 1 Thess. iv. 7, οὐκ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς ἐπὶ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ.

On the mention of Christian liberty, the Apostle admonishes them as to its right use; warning them against a carnal, and urging them to a spiritual, life, and contrasting the one with the other.

— μόνον μὴ, &c.] Here there is an ellipsis of τρέψητε: of which two examples have been adduced from Arrian. 'Αφορμὴν, 'an occasion or handle.' So Demosth., Olynth. I., ἀφορμὴ τοῦ κακῶς φρονεῖν. The word is generally used of 14 δουλεύετε ἀλλήλοις. [l] ὁ γὰρ πᾶς νόμος ἐν ἑνὶ λόγῳ πληροῦται, ἐν τῷ· Ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς 15 ἑαυτόν. Εἰ δὲ ἀλλήλους δάκνετε καὶ κατεσθίετε, βλέπετε μὴ ὑπὸ ἀλλήλων ἀναλωθῆτε.

16 [m] Λέγω δέ· πνεύματι περιπατεῖτε, καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν σαρκὸς 17 οὐ μὴ τελέσητε. [n] ἡ γὰρ σὰρξ ἐπιθυμεῖ κατὰ τοῦ πνεύ-ματος, τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα κατὰ τῆς σαρκός· ταῦτα δὲ ἀντίκειται 18 ἀλλήλοις, ἵνα μὴ ἃ ἂν θέλητε, ταῦτα ποιῆτε. [o] εἰ δὲ πνεύl Lev. 19. 18 Matt. 7. 12. & 22. 39. Rom. 13. 9. James 2. 8.

m Rom. 6. 12. & 8. 1, 4, 12. & 13. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 11. n Rom. 7. 15, &c. o Rom. 6. 14. & 8. 2.

what is bad in itself, or may become cause of abuse. Τῇ σαρκὶ, for εἰς τὴν σάρκα, subserviently to its lusts. Compare 1 Pet. ii. 16.

— διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης δουλ. ἀλλ.] The expression δουλεύειν δι' ἀγ. is not (as Koppe regards it) merely put for ἀγαπᾷν, but is a more significant one, to denote inservire commodis mutuis; meaning Christian charity in its widest extent; and especially in the being mutually indulgent to each other in such matters as were disputed between the Judaizers and the Gentile converts. Δουλεύετε marks, as Chrysostom observes, the extreme of love. And here we may remark, that though the Apostle takes away the yoke of the law, he lays upon them another, which, though light to affection, is yet stronger than the other. Finally, in this admonition the Apostle doubtless glances at the φιλαρχία of the deceivers, and the disputes and enmities of the rest.

14. The discourse is now, with much address, turned from doctrinal to practical subjects, with reference to a most important moral maxim, the primary precept of the law, called by James ii. 8, νόμος βασιλικός.

— ὁ γὰρ πᾶς νόμος—πληρ.] Meaning the whole law, whether Jewish or Christian, as it respects our fellow-creatures. Πληρ. here is equivalent to ἀνακεφαλαιοῦται ('is comprehended') in a similar passage of Rom. xiii. 9 (where see Note); meaning, 'it may be reduced to this maxim.'

— ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς ἑ.] The ὡς, as Koppe observes, refers to the kind, not the degree of love. We are to love others (τὸν πλησίον being for ἕτερον) in the same manner as we love ourselves; and so may justly be required to do unto others as we would that they should do unto us, Matt. vii. 12. To love them to the same degree were (from the principle of self-love wisely implanted in us by the Creator) impossible, and therefore could not have been enjoined. In short, the love here meant, is no other than that described by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xiii.

15. Here the Apostle urges the practice of this duty from human motives; i. e. with reference to the evils which would result to society from the breach of it.

— εἰ δὲ ἀλλήλους δάκνετε, &c.] The εἰ contains an admission that the thing was too common; importing, 'If, as is very much the case.' In δάκν. and κατεσθ. (of which the latter is the stronger term, and denotes the result of the former,) we have a metaphor, taken from wild beasts, finely expressive of backbiting, disputes, and bitter quarrels. To the Classical passages cited by the Philological Commentators, I would add Philodem. ap. Brunck. Analect. 11. 88, γιγνώσκω φιλεῖν πάνυ τὸν φιλέοντα, καὶ τόν με δακόντα δακεῖν.

Of βλέπετε—ἀναλ. the full sense is, 'Take care lest ye be made instruments of mutual destruction as individuals, and of total ruin as a society.'

16. This verse contains the sum of St. Paul's injunctions to the Galatians; and the verses following are explanatory and illustrative of it. The Apostle now points out a remedy for the above unfortunate corruptions in Faith and violations of Christian charity, which had removed them, as it were, to another Gospel, as far as concerned true spirituality. The passage is well paraphrased by Bp. Sanderson, in his Sermon on vv. 22, 23, thus: 'You talk much of the Spirit, but you make it little appear in the fruit of your lives that you are led by the Spirit. The Spirit and the flesh lust contrary things. If you were as careful to walk in the Spirit as you are to boast of it, you would not be so forward as you are, by cherishing unbrotherly contentions, and in sundry other ways, to fulfil the lusts of the flesh.'

— λέγω δέ.] A formula of earnest exhortation. Περιπ., 'live,' 'act;' referring to the habitual manner of life. Πνεύματι, 'by the Spirit,' i. e. conformably to its guidance; see Rom. viii. 4. By πνεῦμα most of the older Commentators understand the Holy Spirit. But the absence of the Article surely forbids that view. From the words following, and from the opposition between σὰρξ and πνεῦμα at vv. 17, 18, it is plain that the sense must be, what some ancient and many eminent modern Expositors suppose, the spiritual part of man, or the spiritual principle in man, their reason and conscience, enlightened by the Gospel, and sustained by the Holy Spirit.

— καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν—τελέσ.] 'And thus ye will by no means fulfil any longer the lusts of the flesh.' The phrase τελεῖν ἐπιθυμίαν is cited from Ach. Tat. p. 91, Salm.

17. ἡ γὰρ σὰρξ, &c.] The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. '[And need have ye to strive to walk after the Spirit,] for the flesh,' &c. To evince this need, the Apostle then illustrates the subject by pointing to the two contrary principles striving for the mastery in man, and especially by tracing those principles in their contrary effects. By πνεῦμα is here denoted the spiritual principle in man; by σὰρξ the animal principle of man's nature, which impels him to gratify his sensual appetites and carnal passions. These principles, it is said, ἀντίκειται ἀλλ., 'are mutually opposite to each other.' Similarly, Porphyr. de Abst. i. 56, τοῖς νόμοις τοῦ σώματος ἕπεσθαι, βιαίοις οὖσι καὶ ἀντικειμένοις τοῖς τοῦ νοῦ νόμοις.

p 1 Cor. 3. 3. & 6. 9. Eph. 5. 3, 5. Col. 3. 5. James 3. 14.

ματι ἄγεσθε, οὐκ ἐστὲ ὑπὸ νόμον. ᵖ Φανερὰ δέ ἐστι τὰ ἔργα 19 τῆς σαρκός· ἅτινά ἐστι [μοιχεία,] πορνεία, ἀκαθαρσία, ἀσέλ-γεια· εἰδωλολατρεία, φαρμακεία· ἔχθραι, ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, θυμοί, 20

— ἵνα μὴ ἃ ἂν θέλ., τ. π.] Some explain, 'So that ye cannot do the things that ye would;' understanding this, however, not of what is always, but often the case. Others, 'so that ye do not the things that ye would;' meaning, that 'they act sometimes by one of these principles, and sometimes by the other; in either of which cases they do not what they would, or what that principle, which they oppose, would lead them to do.' Compare Rom. vii. 18.

18. εἰ δὲ πνεύμ. ἄγ.] q. d. 'It is thus that you make a right use of your liberty, and declare yourselves to be free from the law, if you do those things to which you are led by the Spirit.' (Hyperius.) See Note on ver. 16. By νόμον the Apostle must chiefly have meant the law of Moses; but the same applies also to the law of nature, which likewise requires what man cannot perform. And that the Apostle had this also in mind, would appear from ver. 23, κατὰ τῶν τ. οὐκ ἔστι νόμος. From the enumeration of the works of the flesh just after subjoined, it would seem that the Apostle, by these words οὐκ ἐστὲ ὑπὸ νόμον, meant to intimate, that they were not thereby at all freed from the obligation of the moral law, which forms the essence of every law, especially the law of nature; indeed, that those who perform the works of the flesh are, as it were, outlaws. Also that those only who obey the spiritual principle in man can subdue the lusts of the flesh.

19. That they may the better be able to discern whether they were indeed spiritual, or as yet but carnal, the Apostle proceeds to describe the flesh and the Spirit by their different effects. Accordingly he, at vv. 19—21, gives a catalogue, containing seventeen particulars, of the works of the flesh; and then, at vv. 22, 23, another, of the works of the Spirit; wherein we may observe three things; 1. the general description of spiritual graces, under the name 'the fruits of the Spirit;' 2. the particular species contained therein; 3. a special privilege belonging to all those particulars, namely, exemption from the law. In this general description there are four differences observable; 1. the effects of the former sort of works proceed originally from the flesh; these, from the Spirit: 2. those are rather styled works; these, fruits: 3. those are set forth as many and apart; these, as many, but united into one (fruit): 4. those are expressly said to be manifest; of these no such thing is mentioned. (Bp. Sanderson.)

With this enumeration of vices and sins compare other similar ones in Matt. xv. 19. Mark vii. 21. Rom. i. 29. 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. 2 Cor. xii. 20. Eph. v. 3—5. James iii. 14. See Notes. The order, indeed, of the vices varies; but reasons may usually be given for each particular distribution. St. Paul, we may observe, generally digests them into regular order, and throws them into groups. At the same time, it is plain from the concluding words, καὶ τὰ ὅμοια τούτοις, that the list was not meant to be complete; which was, indeed, unnecessary, they being, as the Apostle says, manifest; viz. (as Mr. Scott adds) 'to every one who considered the conduct of unconverted men, and the state of the world in general.' Bp. Sanderson, however, regards the term as very significant, and indicating one of the four points of difference in the works of the flesh and those of the Spirit. For which difference he assigns two reasons; 1. the commonness and frequency in the world of the works of the flesh which meet us on every side, but the comparative rarity of the works of the Spirit; 2. the term manifest is, he thinks, applied to the works of the flesh, with regard to the easiness of our discerning them, as compared with the extreme difficulty of discerning the contrary.

— τὰ ἔργα τῆς σαρκός.] The term ἔργα must here be taken with some latitude; some of the particulars here specified being, as Whitby remarks, errors of the mind; others, evil dispositions of the heart. Σὰρξ denotes, as Theodoret explains, τὸ σαρκικὸν φρόνημα, our corrupt nature, the τῆς ψυχῆς τὴν ἐπὶ τὰ χείρω ῥοπὴν, extending, as Doddridge says, to the powers of the mind as well as the appetites of the body, and opposed to the new nature communicated by the renewing of the Holy Spirit. See Tit. i. 15.

Of the groups into which the vices now specified seem thrown, there are four; 1. those of lust, μοιχ., πορ., ἀκαθ., ἀσέλγ.; 2. those of superstition, or impiety, εἰδωλ. and φαρμ. 3. those of anger, discord, enmity, reviling, and contention, ἔχθρ., ἔρ., ζῆλοι, θυμ., ἐριθ., διχοστ., αἱρ., φθόν., φόνοι; 4. those of drunkenness and debauchery, μέθ., κῶμοι. As to the first group, the terms μοιχ. and πορν. are often coupled, both in the Old and New Testament. Μοιχ. is, indeed, wanting in six MSS., some Versions and Fathers, and has been cancelled by Griesb. and others; but rashly; since the external evidence for this omission is very insufficient, and the internal not strong. The omission arose, I suspect, from homœoteleuton in MSS. which had πορν., μοιχ. The recently collated MSS. have almost all of them the common reading. By ἀκαθ. and ἀσέλγ. are denoted the unnatural lusts adverted to in Rom. i. 26—28.

20. εἰδωλ., φαρμ.] I cannot agree with Koppe, Borger, and Winer, that εἰδ. is placed after fornication as being spiritual fornication. It has, I conceive, no connexion with the preceding, but is coupled with φαρμ., as bearing an affinity thereto. Notwithstanding what some recent Commentators say, εἰδ. must be taken in the usual signification of the word; being rightly numbered among the works of the flesh, since it originates in a grovelling and sensual mind, which cannot worship God in spirit, nor have any conception of his perfect holiness; but brings Him down to the senses, and represents Him to corporeal eyes by images.

Φαρμακεία is by many of the most eminent Commentators supposed to mean poisoning, a crime dreadfully prevalent in the then corrupt state of society, both among the Heathens and the Jews. This, however, cannot, I think, be admitted as the true sense; not, indeed, for the reason assigned by Slade and Scott, 'because it is included in φόνος' (for, as I shall show, homicide rather than murder is meant there), but because the vices and evil dispositions contained in this 21 ἐριθεῖαι, διχοστασίαι, αἱρέσεις, [q] φθόνοι, φόνοι· μέθαι, κῶμοι, [q] Rev. 22. 15.

καὶ τὰ ὅμοια τούτοις· ἃ προλέγω ὑμῖν, καθὼς καὶ προεῖπον, ὅτι οἱ τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσσοντες βασιλείαν Θεοῦ οὐ κλη-22 ρονομήσουσιν. [r] Ὁ δὲ καρπὸς τοῦ Πνεύματός ἐστιν ἀγάπη, [r] Eph. 5. 9. Col. 3. 12.
χαρά, εἰρήνη, μακροθυμία, χρηστότης, ἀγαθωσύνη, πίστις, enumeration are, as Chrysostom and Theophylact have pointed out, such as our corrupt nature is prone to. Now it cannot be meant, that man is by nature prone to poisoning. In fact, the works in question are, almost all of them, such as were by the Heathens regarded as but slight delinquencies, and scarcely any of them punishable by law. It was, therefore, not unnatural for the Christian converts to treat them in general as venial offences, not inconsistent with their salvation. To remove this misconception, the Apostle solemnly assures them that they will (i. e. if persisted in, and unrepented of) exclude from the kingdom of heaven. On the contrary, to the enumeration of vices which closes the first chapter of Romans, is subjoined not the present declaration, but that 'the perpetrators of such things are deservedly adjudged to spiritual death.' Moreover, the above-mentioned sense of φαρμ. is inconsistent with the word following; and the true interpretation seems to be that adopted by the ancient Expositors in general, and most modern ones; i.e. sorcery of every kind, including charms, divinations, incantations, fortune-telling, and attempted intercourse with evil spirits, whether real or pretended; together with other arts, employed sometimes by the heathen priests for the support of their superstition, but oftener by impostors, similar to our conjurors, for the purpose of gain. In all such cases there can be no doubt that there was a mixture of sorcery and legerdemain; of which the former, in all its branches, was closely connected with the making up of powerful medicaments, to produce deception of the senses, and otherwise effect what might be in vain attempted by incantations or such like. How feasible this was, as well as other illusions, by methods now familiar to all who are versed in natural philosophy (i.e. by phantasmagoria), is fully proved by Dr. Hibbert on Apparitions. Nor was this all; for such impostors also eked out the force of charms, spells, and medicaments, by the use of actual poisons, as in the case of Sir T. Overbury in modern times. Not to say that idolatry is in Scripture frequently mentioned in conjunction with sorcery; see Deut. xviii. 9, 10. Finally, it would seem that the Apostle has in view not so much the persons who practised the arts of sorcery or divination, but rather those who resorted to them. This would exclude from salvation, as being inconsistent with any true dependence on God, and in fact (as Mr. Scott says) 'worshipping the Devil,' since in 1 Cor. x. 20, the gods of the heathens are by implication called devils, i. e. when real, and not mere stocks and stones.

The terms of the next class are such as we find frequently united both in the New Test. (as Phil. i. 15. 2 Cor. xii. 20) and the Classical writers; the plural being used for greater force. It would seem that the terms ἔχθραι, ἔρεις, ζῆλοι, θυμοί, are meant of private enmities, bickerings, emulations, and angry disputes; and ἐριθεῖαι, διχοστασίαι, αἱρέσεις, and φθόνοι, of public and party strife, and its results in uncharitable divisions or separations, and sectarism in general. Of which last it is pithily remarked by a writer in Bp. Taylor's Works, vol. viii. p. 394, 'Plerumque schisma in heresin eructat.' On these various particulars see Whitby, Chandler, Doddridge, Newcome, and Macknight. By φθόνοι may be designated the temper which, as the Poet says, 'inly pines' at the happiness of others: or it may be meant to be conjoined with the preceding. So Soph. Œd. Col. 1228 (cited by Wetstein), φόνοι, στάσεις, ἔρεις, μάχαι, καὶ φθόνος. Several eminent Editors and Commentators would cancel the φόνοι, on the authority of some six MSS. and a few Latin Fathers. This, however, is very uncritical, since it appears to have been omitted by the scribes from homœoteleuton, and by the ancient Critics from the same vain notion that induced their modern brethren to cancel it; thinking it strange that murder should be inserted in the list, as being punishable rather by the civil magistrate. But, not to say that adultery was also punishable by the civil magistrate, and yet is found in the list (compare also Eph. iv. 28. 1 Cor. v. 11. vi. 10. Rom. ii. 22, seq.); that objection may be fully removed by supposing that the Apostle here does not mean murder, but homicide; which was among the ancients often committed in the excitement of anger and strife. This is confirmed by Rom. i. 29.

The last group is μέθαι, κῶμοι, joined also in Rom. xiii. 13, and often in the Classical writers. By the latter are denoted those nocturnal revellings, usually attendant on an evening of debauchery, consisting of licentious singing, dancing, and parading the streets with drunken riotings.

21. ἃ προλέγω ὑμῖν, καθὼς, &c.] Render, 'concerning which I [now] forewarn you, even as I told you heretofore, that they who practise (i. e. habitually commit) such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.'

22. καρπὸς τοῦ Πνεύμ.] The best modern Commentators take καρπ. as put for ἔργα, to correspond to the ἔργα τῆς σαρκὸς before; referring to Matt. vii. 16, and Eph. v. 9. But it would seem that the Apostle here studiously avoided the term works; and the reason why he says fruits is excellently pointed out by Chrysostom and Theophylact, as follows: 'Evil works come from ourselves alone; therefore they are called the works of the flesh: but virtuous ones require not our own exertions alone, but the aid of Divine grace; therefore the Apostle calls them the fruits of the Spirit; the seed (namely, the intention) being from ourselves, but the fruit resting with God.'

Very similar to the above is the explanation given by Bp. Sanderson, ubi supra. The term fruit, he thinks, is used in preference to works, or effects, with reference to the rewards of righteousness. In the service of sin the toil is so great that, in comparison thereof, the benefit is as s 1 Tim. 1. 9. πρᾳότης, ἐγκράτεια· [s] κατὰ τῶν τοιούτων οὐκ ἔστι νόμος. 23

U 2

t Rom. 6. 6. & 13. 14. supra 2. 20. [t] οἱ δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, τὴν σάρκα ἐσταύρωσαν σὺν τοῖς παθή- 24 u Rom. 8. 5. μασι καὶ ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις. [u] Εἰ ζῶμεν πνεύματι, πνεύματι 25 x Phil. 2. 3. καὶ στοιχῶμεν. [x] Μὴ γινώμεθα κενόδοξοι, ἀλλήλους προ- 26

nothing; in the service of God the benefit is so great that, in comparison thereof, the labour is as nothing. Where the flesh rules all, the work exceeds the fruit; and therefore, without even mentioning the fruit, they are called the works of the flesh. But where the Spirit of God rules, the fruit exceeds the work; and therefore, without even mentioning the work, it is called the fruit of the Spirit. And so in other passages; as, for instance, in Ephes. v., speaking of the duties of holiness as here, he, without any mention of work, calls them by the name of fruit (ver. 9). But at ver. 11, speaking of sinful actions, he not only calls them works (as here), but pronounces them fruitless. Why the works of the flesh are spoken of in the plural, but those of the Spirit in the singular (fruit), is ably discussed and satisfactorily pointed out by the same eminent writer, Serm. p. 598, § 37.

— ἀγάπη, χαρὰ, &c.] Ἀγάπη is placed first, as being the germ of all virtues, and a general virtue comprehending many particular ones; being the love of God, and of man, for God's sake. 'Love (says Bp. Sanderson) is so comprehensive a grace, that it includes all the rest, and so is the fulfilling of the whole law (Rom. xiii. 10). There is a thread of love which runs through all the particular duties and offices of a Christian's life, and strings them, like so many rich pearls, in one chain.' With the present enumeration of graces compare a similar one at 1 Tim. vi. 11.

By χαρὰ many eminent Expositors understand, 'a rejoicing in the happiness of others,' as opposed to envy and malevolence (see ver. 21), which are works of the flesh. But it would rather seem to mean, what the Apostle more fully expresses elsewhere, Rom. xiv. 17, by χαρὰ ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, 'joy in the Holy Ghost,' and 1 Thess. i. 6, χαρὰ Πνεύματος ἁγίου; and what St. Peter (1 Epist. i. 8) calls a 'joy unspeakable and full of glory.' Thus forming, with the peace just afterwards spoken of, two of the several particulars enumerated in the above passage of Rom. xiv. 17, 'the kingdom of heaven is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.'

Again, by εἰρήνη, thus closely associated with χαρὰ, I would understand, not merely (as some have explained) a peaceable temper of mind, as opposed to ἔρεις, θυμοὶ, διχοστασίαι, αἱρέσεις; but that peace (elsewhere called by the Apostle, Phil. iv. 7, 'the peace of God') which naturally evinces itself in a peaceable spirit (see James iii. 17); that peace within which it has been well said is peace with all men. So Hyperius explains: 'Pax, et illa quæ nobis cum Deo est in conscientia, et illa quæ cum fratribus esse debet foris.'

By χρηστ. is denoted benignity, affability; by ἀγαθ. that kind-heartedness which delights in doing good. Πίστις is variously interpreted. It may denote (as most recent Commentators suppose) fidelity and integrity, which is not an unfrequent sense of the word. From the context, however, it would seem to mean that modification of fidelity which consists in sincerity, and does not, in the words of Homer, 'think one thing, and another say.' Finally, ἐγκράτειά denotes, in a general way, the governance of the appetites and passions.

23. κατὰ τῶν τοιούτων, &c.] Meaning, 'Against such dispositions as those above-mentioned, no law, whether the law of Moses, or that of nature, is directed; and to these neither can have reference, being not promulged against virtue, but vice.' For the law was not made for the righteous, but for sinners, &c., 1 Tim. i. 9. See Bp. Bull's Exam. p. 82. Col. 2.

24. After having enumerated the various effects both of the flesh and the spirit, the Apostle now proceeds to show that Christians may, and ought, to avoid the works of the flesh, and follow the works of the spirit. To which he afterwards subjoins an exhortation to shun those works of the flesh to which the Galatians were especially prone, namely, strifes and contentions, and the vices from which they spring; and thus he, as it were, returns to the beginning of his whole exhortation. (Crellius.)

— οἱ δὲ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, &c.] Here is tacitly encountered an objection; q. d. 'How can we, encompassed with the frailties of the flesh, forsake the works thereof, and follow the motions of the spirit.' To which the answer is, that we can, and must, otherwise we are not Christ's, and are not to expect to inherit the kingdom of heaven. (Crellius.) This, then, is the test whether men really belong to Christ or not; q. d. 'They that truly belong to Christ make proof of it by mortifying the corrupt inclinations of the carnal principle in their hearts.' See supra v. 16. (Bp. Hall.)

— τοῖς παθήμασι καὶ ταῖς ἐπιθυμ.] The two expressions are nearly synonymous, signifying, by Hendiadys, 'lustful passions.' See Rom. viii. 13.

25. εἰ ζῶμεν πνεύματι, &c.] The connexion here would seem to be with the verse preceding. Now as there St. Paul says, 'they only are really Christ's who thus crucify the flesh [whether they profess to have the Spirit or not],' so here he means to say, 'If, then, we profess to be living by the Spirit, we must show it by acting conformably thereto, evincing the fruits of the Spirit.' On the term στοιχ. see Rom. iv. 12. Phil. iii. 16, and Notes.

26. μὴ γινώμεθα κενόδοξοι, &c.] Meaning, 'And as a proof that we are living by it, let us abstain from a vain-glorious spirit.' Thus cautioning them against that pride and conceit to which he knew they were too prone, and whence arose envyings, detractions, and contentions; though here he chiefly refers to their conduct in spiritual matters and religious communications.

The term προκαλεῖσθαι signifies, 'to call forth any one to a trial of skill or courage,' and may here allude to the competition of those who exhibited their spiritual gifts. Hence the injunction following is closely connected with what is here said.

1 καλούμενοι, ἀλλήλοις φθονοῦντες. VI. Ἀδελφοὶ, ἐὰν καὶ προληφθῇ ἄνθρωπος ἔν τινι παραπτώματι, ὑμεῖς οἱ πνευματικοὶ καταρτίζετε τὸν τοιοῦτον ἐν πνεύματι πρᾳότητος· σκο-2 πῶν σεαυτὸν, μὴ καὶ σὺ πειρασθῇς. [a] Ἀλλήλων τὰ βάρη βαστάζετε, καὶ οὕτως ἀναπληρώσατε τὸν νόμον τοῦ Χρι-3 στοῦ. [b] Εἰ γὰρ δοκεῖ τις εἶναί τι, μηδὲν ὢν, ἑαυτὸν φρεν-4 απατᾷ· [c] τὸ δὲ ἔργον ἑαυτοῦ δοκιμαζέτω ἕκαστος, καὶ τότε εἰς ἑαυτὸν μόνον τὸ καύχημα ἕξει, καὶ οὐκ εἰς τὸν ἕτερον· 5, 6 [d] ἕκαστος γὰρ τὸ ἴδιον φορτίον βαστάσει. [e] Κοινωνείτω δὲ ὁ κατηχούμενος τὸν λόγον τῷ κατηχοῦντι ἐν πᾶσιν ἀγα-7 θοῖς. Μὴ πλανᾶσθε· Θεὸς οὐ μυκτηρίζεται. Ὃ γὰρ ἐὰν a 1 Thess. 5. 14. 1 John 4. 21.

b 1 Cor. 8. 2.
c 1 Cor. 11. 28. 2 Cor. 13. 5.
d Ps. 62. 12. Jer. 17. 10. & 32. 19. Matt. 16. 27. Rom. 2. 6. & 14. 12. 1 Cor. 3. 8. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Rev. 2. 23. & 22. 12.
e 1 Cor 9. 7, 11, 14.

VI. Contemplating the probability that there would, notwithstanding, be breaches of the foregoing rules, the Apostle subjoins an admonition to certain persons who, however spiritually-minded, had not yet mortified the desire of vain-glory, but indulged their vanity by censoriousness and spiritual pride.

1. ἐὰν καὶ προληφθῇ, &c.] 'If any person be overtaken in and surprised into a fault,' do you, οἱ πνευματικοὶ (i. e. who possess the spiritual gifts mentioned at iii. 5, and are, consequently, advanced in Christian knowledge), and who are (agreeably to the above admonition) walking by the Spirit. Καταρτίζ. is for διορθοῦσθε or ἐπανορθοῦσθε; meaning, 'restore him to a right sense of duty,' and thereby to a right conduct. On the nature of the term I have already treated at 1 Cor. i. 10, and elsewhere. The metaphor is derived from setting right a dislocated limb, there being an allusion to the erring member of Christ's body, the Church. Now this is directed to be done ἐν πνεύμ. πρᾳότ., which evidently signifies 'with a spirit and temper of mildness.'

— σκοπῶν σεαυτὸν, &c.] Meaning, 'each of you considering thyself, lest thou also be [so] tempted [as to fall in like manner].' Compare 1 Cor. x. 12, 13. Similarly it is said, Pliny, Epist. viii. 22 (cited by Wetstein), 'Eos etiam qui non indigent clementiâ, nihil magis quam lenitas decet. Atque ego optimum et emendatissimum existimo, qui ceteris ita ignoscit, tanquam ipse quotidie peccet, ita peccatis abstinet, tanquam nemini ignoscat.'

2. ἀλλήλων τὰ βάρη βαστ.] Meaning, 'Charitably bear with each other's infirmities and faults;' called βάρη as being burdensome not only to the person himself (see Ps. xxxviii. 4), but to others his followers. Comp. Rom. xv. 1, and Note; 1 Thess. v. 14, and infra v. 6.

— καὶ οὕτως ἀναπλ., &c.] The full sense is, 'And thus fulfil [as ye will do] the precept of Christ, which enjoins us to love one another' (as in John xiii. 34. xv. 12); thus also following his example. So Ignatius (cited by Borger), πάντας βάσταζε, ὡς καί σε ὁ Κύριος· πάντων ἀνέχου ἐν ἀγάπῃ.

3. εἰ γὰρ δοκεῖ, &c.] The argument (as suggested by γὰρ) is, that 'this self-conceit is useless; for it does not really make a man the greater: he only deceives himself [not others, much less God].' At εἶναί τι supply μέγα. The expression often occurs, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers. Μηδὲν ὤν. A popular form of expression to denote 'nothing comparable to what he thinks himself, or claims to be thought,' and, in one sense, nothing at all, as not having learnt to discharge the fundamental duties of humility and charity. Φρεναπ. is a word only found in St. Paul's writings, and probably provincial. The sense is that of ἀπατῶν καρδίαν αὑτοῦ in a kindred passage of James i. 26.

4, 5. To prevent so fatal a mistake, and effectually dissipate the delusion, the Apostle bids them, instead of censuring the failings of others, to examine and try their own actions by the test of God's laws. The words καὶ τότε εἰς ἑαυτὸν —τὸν ἕτερον are variously interpreted, and, indeed, admit of more than one sense. Many eminent Expositors take it to be, 'let him keep his boasting to himself alone, and not extend it to others.' But the common interpretation, with some modification, is more natural and agreeable to the words following, i. e. 'Thus he will have matter of glorying, or rejoicing, in reference to himself, and not to others;' i. e. by comparing himself with others.

5. ἕκαστος—βαστάσει.] These words admit of two senses, corresponding to the two interpretations of the latter part of the preceding verse. By the one they will import, 'Every one will find frailties enow of his own to wrestle with;' by the other, 'Every man will bear his own burden;' i. e. his own burden alone, not another's; and give his account thereof at the last day. Consequently, we are not to busy ourselves about the burdens of others, nor are we to endeavour to lighten our own by making that of our neighbour heavier; but to mind solely our own business. Φορτ. βαστ. is for αἰτίαν ἔχειν, as in Thucyd. iv. 114.

6. κοιν.] 'let him give part of his wealth;' see Note on Rom. xii. 13. Τῷ κατ. τ. λ., 'to him who instructs him in the Gospel.' Ἐν πᾶσιν ἀγ., is for πάντων ἀγαθῶν, which is the usual syntax; see Note on Rom. xv. 27, and compare the phrase τρέφειν ἐν πᾶσιν ἀγαθοῖς, on which see Mitchell on Aristoph. Acharn. 936, and 2 Tim. i. 18. The meaning of the expression is, 'all things necessary to the attainment of the purpose in view, the dissemination of pure and undefiled religion.' Κατηχ. is a term properly applicable only to instruction vivâ voce and elementary; but it is also used of religious instruction generally. See 1 Cor. xiv. 19. Acts xviii. 25.

7. μὴ πλανᾶσθε.] A formula generally intro-f 2 Cor. 9. 6. σπείρῃ ἄνθρωπος, τοῦτο καὶ θερίσει· [f] ὅτι ὁ σπείρων εἰς 8 τὴν σάρκα ἑαυτοῦ, ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς θερίσει φθοράν· ὁ δὲ σπείρων εἰς τὸ πνεῦμα, ἐκ τοῦ πνεύματος θερίσει ζωὴν αἰώνιον.

g 2 Thess. 3. 13. [g] Τὸ δὲ καλὸν ποιοῦντες μὴ ἐκκακῶμεν· καιρῷ γὰρ ἰδίῳ 9
h Eph. 2. 19. 1 Tim. 5. 8. θερίσομεν, μὴ ἐκλυόμενοι. [h] Ἄρα οὖν, ὡς καιρὸν ἔχομεν, 10 ἐργαζώμεθα τὸ ἀγαθὸν πρὸς πάντας, μάλιστα δὲ πρὸς τοὺς οἰκείους τῆς πίστεως.
Ἴδετε πηλίκοις ὑμῖν γράμμασιν ἔγραψα τῇ ἐμῇ χειρί. 11

ductory to some weighty admonition on a subject which the person addressed would be likely to neglect. Θεὸς οὐ μυκτ. Meaning, 'is not to be mocked or offended [with impunity].' Both expressions seem to refer to the various subterfuges by which men seek to evade this duty; q. d. 'Deceive not yourselves, nor hope to escape the punishment of God, who will not suffer himself to be insulted with impunity.' The words following contain properly a general sentiment, which, however, is here meant first to be applied to the preceding subject; i. e. the support of the teachers (as at 2 Cor. ix. 6); and then, in the next verses, to have a much wider application. There is also a metaphor, wherein the flesh and the spirit are compared to fields, in which the seed of each is sown, and yields crops according to its nature; q. d. 'he who neglects the duty in question, and charity to the poor, aiming only at his own gratification, and seeking only his own interest, will reap the fruits of such a selfish and sensual life, in corruption both temporal and spiritual,—namely, perdition; but he who soweth to the spirit (i. e. what is spiritual generally), by living according to it (see Note on vv. 16—25), shall reap [not only the present fruits, in inward consolation, but] everlasting life.' Similarly it is said in Aristoph. ap. Aristot. Rhet. iii. 3. 18, σὺ δὲ ταῦτα αἰσχρῶς μὲν ἔσπειρας, κακῶς δὲ ἐθέρισας, and Æschyl. Agam. 485, αὐτὸς φρενῶν καρποῖτο τὴν ἁμαρτίαν. The Apostle had here probably in view a passage of Job iv. 8, οἱ δὲ σπείροντες αὐτὰ (scil. τὰ ἄτοπα) ὀδύνας θεριοῦσιν ἑαυτοῖς. Compare also Hos. x. 13, and Prov. i. 31.

9. τὸ δὲ καλὸν, &c.] The Apostle here shows that what he has said is meant to be applied particularly to works of piety and benevolence, such as the support of the teachers of the Gospel, and the relief of the poor. The same agricultural metaphor is continued. Ἐκκακεῖν signifies, 'to give up, from being tired out,' as in the more complete phrase ἐκλύεσθαι ταῖς ψυχαῖς in Heb. xii. 3. Ἐκλύεσθαι signifies 'to be wearied out,' and is often used, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, as applied to harvest-work. It refers to that tiring out of charity, which the frequent calls on its benevolence and the ungrateful returns it might meet with, would be likely to produce. With this elegant use of μὴ ἐκκακεῖν and ἐκλύεσθαι as applied to benevolence, I would compare a similar one of the kindred term κάμνειν in Eurip. Beller. frag. 28. 2, ξένοις τ' ἐπηρκεῖς, οὐδὲ ἔκαμνες εἰς φίλους, and Athen. 276. C., οὐκ ἂν ἐκοπίασε τὰ αὐτὰ παρασκευάζουσα. See also 1 Cor. xv. 58. 2 Thess. iii. 13.

10. ἄρα—πίστεως.] Ἄρα here is used like ὥστε at 2 Cor. v. 16. Render, 'Having, therefore, these strong motives to sow unto the Spirit, by making pious and charitable contributions, let us do good,' &c. It seems to have been the especial care of the Apostle, in this concluding admonition, to show that the duty was to be performed, not only towards the ministry, but towards Christians in general, and not towards Christians only, but towards all their fellow-creatures. Ὡς καιρὸν ἔχ., 'whilst we have opportunity in this life, and as occasions present themselves.' Ἐργαζ. is a more significant term than ποιεῖν, and implies diligence; in a word, 'labour of love.' Οἰκεῖος signifies, 'one who belongs to any family,' who is connected with it, either by consanguinity or affinity; and also, in the later writers, 'one who is closely connected with another, as an acquaintance.'

This admonition was not given in vain. So even Julian bears this testimony of Christians: τρέφουσιν οἱ δυσσεβεῖς Γαλιλαῖοι πρὸς τοῖς ἑαυτῶν καὶ τοὺς ἡμετέρους. It may be observed, that though the Apostate has mentioned the Christians by his usual opprobrious term οἱ δυσσεβεῖς, yet he was not ashamed to steal from their Scriptures, and appropriate one of their most sublime precepts. Thus in pp. 290, 291 of his Works, edit. Spanh., he says: κοινωνητέον—ἅπασιν ἀνθρώποις, ἀλλὰ τοῖς μὲν ἐπιεικέσιν ἐλευθεριώτερον.

11. πηλίκοις ὑμῖν γράμμ. ἔγρ.] These words have not a little perplexed Expositors; some of whom take the sense to be, 'See with what great kind of letters' (i. e. how mis-shapen), &c.; a sense, however, somewhat jejune, and which does not well comport with Apostolic gravity, or the reserve manifest through the whole Epistle. The difficulty may be removed by taking πηλ. (with the best Expositors) to denote 'how long,' instead of the customary sense of the word, 'how great;' γράμμ. being used, like the Latin epistolæ, for a letter, as in Acts xxviii. 21. It is well observed by Winer, that the letter is called long, considering that it was written, as he adds, with his own hand. So speaking, it would seem the Apostle meant both to attest its genuineness, and to point to that circumstance as indicating his affection for them, and anxiety for their welfare and salvation. That St. Paul generally dictated his letters to a scribe is well known. Indeed, it was among the ancients so usual to do this, that, when the correspondent wrote with his own hand, it was deemed something worthy of being noticed. So, at the conclusion of an epistle from Callirrhoë to Dionysius, as cited by Borger, we have, ταῦτά σοι ἔγραψα τῇ ἐμῇ χειρί· ἔρρωσο.

12 [i] Ὅσοι θέλουσιν εὐπροσωπῆσαι ἐν σαρκὶ, οὗτοι ἀναγκάζουσιν i Phil. 3. 18.
ὑμᾶς περιτέμνεσθαι· μόνον, ἵνα μὴ τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Χριστοῦ 13 διώκωνται. οὐδὲ γὰρ οἱ ‡ περιτεμνόμενοι αὐτοὶ νόμον φυλάσσουσιν· ἀλλὰ θέλουσιν ὑμᾶς περιτέμνεσθαι, ἵνα ἐν τῇ 14 ὑμετέρᾳ σαρκὶ καυχήσωνται. [k] Ἐμοὶ δὲ μὴ γένοιτο καυχᾶ- k Rom. 6. 6. supra 2. 20.
σθαι, εἰ μὴ ἐν τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· 15 δι' οὗ ἐμοὶ κόσμος ἐσταύρωται, κἀγὼ τῷ κόσμῳ. [l] Ἐν γὰρ l 1 Cor. 7. 19. supra 5. 6. Col. 3. 11.
Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ οὔτε περιτομή τι * ἐστὶν οὔτε ἀκροβυστία, m Ps. 125. 5. Rom. 2. 29. & 4. 12. supra 3. 29.
16 ἀλλὰ καινὴ κτίσις. [m] Καὶ ὅσοι τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ στοι-

12. ὅσοι θέλουσιν, &c.] q. d. 'It is not I who urge you to the observance of the Mosaic Law, but those who court the gale of popular applause,—they instigate you to it.' Εὐπροσωπ. is by many explained, 'endeavour to please others.' That sense, however, cannot fairly be extracted from the word; which may be best interpreted, 'to make a fair appearance of piety, commend themselves as very religious.' So Chrys. explains it by εὐδοκιμεῖν. The word is not found in the Classical writers, though φαινοπροσωπεῖν there occurs. Ἀναγκάζειν must here, as elsewhere, be understood of the moral compulsion of earnest persuasion.

— τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Many recent Commentators interpret this, 'persecutions such as Christ suffered.' But it is far better, with the ancient and most modern Expositors, from Piscator to Borger, to understand, 'the doctrine of the cross,' Christianity being so called by opposition to the Law; and since the death of Christ abrogated the Mosaic Law, and the doctrine of the atonement thereby made for the sins of men effectually excluded the use of circumcision. See Note at ver. 11, and the able Note of Doddridge.

13. οἱ περιτεμν.] Some refer this to the persons who had thus submitted to undergo circumcision; while others, with more propriety, refer it to the Judaizers. For περιτεμν. many ancient and excellent MSS. of all recensions, and several Fathers and early Editions, have περιτετμημένοι, which is approved by Matthæi, and edited by Scholz. I have, however, not ventured to receive it; since the reading seems to me to have arisen from a gloss, though one which strongly confirms the interpretation above adopted, as showing its high antiquity.

The persons in question did not, indeed, intend to impose on them the whole law; but, maintaining the use of circumcision, as well as baptism, by the Gentiles, intended (it would seem) to place their votaries in a sort of midway between proselytes of the gate and proselytes of righteousness, and so to effectually secure the honour of the Law by engrafting the Gospel thereupon. Their motive in so doing was to keep fair with the Jews, and to have to boast of their influence in procuring the reception of the rite of circumcision; for that is, as Borger and Winer have shown, the import of the words ἵνα ἐν τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ σαρκὶ καυχήσωνται, where the term περιτετμημένη is to be supplied from περιτέμνεσθαι preceding; 'your circumcised flesh' being equivalent to 'your being circumcised.'

14. Here ἐμοὶ is emphatical, there being implied a comparison with the Judaizers. Moreover, ἐμοὶ is for εἰς ἐμὲ, 'quod attinet ad me,' 'for my part.' The general meaning is this: 'But, for my part, I leave them to glory in a fleshly ordinance. God forbid that I should feel proud of the inculcation of any doctrine, except the plain unmixed one of justification, not by my own merits, but by the atonement of a crucified Redeemer.'

— δι' οὗ ἐμοὶ κόσμος, &c.] 'by which,' scil. σταυροῦ, 'doctrine of the cross.' Ἐσταύρωται. Meaning, 'is crucified and dead;' i. e. is as nothing to me. By κόσμος we must understand the things of the world; namely, its riches, honours, and pleasures. So it is said, Acts xvii. 24, ὁ κόσμος καὶ τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ. Bp. Middleton, indeed, stumbling at the omission of the Article, and having remarked that whenever in the New Test. κόσμος, the world, occurs in its common acceptation, it has the Article, except here and in 2 Cor. v. 19 (of course, not reckoning passages like Rom. ii. 12. 15, where the omission may be accounted for by his canons), thinks that, in both these passages, the word has somewhat of the nature of a proper name, and can therefore dispense with the Article. He instances Plutarch, p. 470, ὁ δὲ Ζεὺς καὶ Κόσμος, 'Jupiter and World.' And he might have added Shakspeare, 'O World, thy slippery turns!' Since, however, it seems impossible to adopt that view of κόσμος at 2 Cor. v. 19, both on account of its harshness,—I had almost said jejuneness,—and because αὐτοῖς and αὐτῶν immediately follow; so it would seem unsafe to adopt it here, which is also forbidden by the τῷ with κόσμῳ just after; for though the Article is not found there in seven or eight MSS., yet it has never been cancelled by any Editor. Indeed, it was more likely to be omitted (on account of the omission before) than inserted.

15. ἐστίν.] This reading (found in all the most ancient MSS., as also many Versions and Fathers) was approved by Mill and Bengel, and has been edited by Griesbach, Koppe, Tittman, Vater, Winer, and Scholz; rightly, I think; since the common reading ἰσχύει is plainly a gloss, probably from v. 6. Indeed, the word, as Rinck says, would involve a petitio principii; whereas, with ἐστὶν the γὰρ has its force, denoting the reason why he did not boast of circumcision, as did his adversaries; 'for circumcision is nothing.' Ἀλλὰ καινὴ κτίσις. The full sense is: 'But the being a new creature, moral regeneration, is every thing, all in all, the substance of the Gospel.' See Note on 2 Cor. v. 17.

16. τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ στοιχ.] On the force of στοιχ. see Note supra v. 25, and on καν. see Note on 2 Cor. x. 13. By 'this rule,' the Apostle means the doctrine just mentioned, of χήσουσιν, εἰρήνη ἐπ' αὐτοὺς καὶ ἔλεος, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰσραὴλ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

n 2 Cor. 4. 10.

[n] Τοῦ λοιποῦ, κόπους μοι μηδεὶς παρεχέτω· ἐγὼ γὰρ τὰ 17 στίγματα τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματί μου βαστάζω.
Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύ- 18
ματος ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Γαλάτας ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης.

salvation by grace, and the necessity of moral regeneration. By τὸν Ἰσρ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is meant the true spiritual Israel. See Note on Rom. ix. 6. In εἰρήνη ἐπ' αὐτοὺς we have not an assertory, but a precatory form, nearly allied to that of benediction, by bidding adieu. The Epistle probably was meant to terminate here, just as the Epistle to the Ephesians concludes with εἰρήνη τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, and v. 17 was added afterwards.

17. τοῦ λοιποῦ, for λοιπὸν at 2 Cor. xiii. 11, 1 Thess. iv. 1, henceforward. Κόπους παρ. is for the more Classical πράγματα παρ. The sense seems to be, 'let me have no more trouble, by either my doctrine, or my sincerity and integrity being questioned; for [of the latter] I bear strong attestation in the στίγματα or wounds of former scourgings, beatings, and stonings, of the Jews and others, for the sake of Christ and his Gospel.' Βαστάζω is here used for περιφέρω, and only means that 'this is, wherever he goes, an evidence of his sincerity.'

18. μετὰ τοῦ πν. ὑ.] Meaning, as it is said at Phil. iv. 7, 'your hearts and minds.'

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΕΦΕΣΙΟΥΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

---

1 I. [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ διὰ θελή- a Rom. 1. 7. 1 Cor. 1. 2.
ματος Θεοῦ, τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσιν [ἐν Ἐφέσῳ] καὶ πιστοῖς ἐν 2 Cor. 1. 1.
2 Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· [b] χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς b Gal. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 2.
ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

THIS has been pronounced the richest and noblest of the Epistles; and certainly, in fulness of matter, depth of doctrine, sublimity of metaphor, animated fervour of style (occasionally rising to what has been called rapture), and Apostolic earnestness of exhortation, it so interests the heart, that if the reader have a spark of regard for the Gospel, it will blow it into a flame. 'In this (says Mr. Coleridge) the divinest composition of man, we have contained every doctrine of Christianity;—first, those doctrines peculiar to Christianity, and then those precepts common to it with natural religion. As to the Epistle to the Colossians, it is the overflowing, as it were, of St. Paul's mind upon the same subject.' The reason for its peculiar character of pious exaltation and affectionate admonition seems to be that assigned by Mr. Scott,—namely, that 'the Apostle's heart was much enlarged in writing to those whom he had no occasion to rebuke, and with whom he was not under the necessity of engaging in controversy; so that entire confidence of affection took place of the caution, reserve, or sharpness which were requisite in the three preceding Epistles.' Accordingly, none of the reproofs there so frequent are found in the present; which was written, it would seem, to confirm the Ephesian and other Asiatic churches in the true faith and practice of the Gospel; of which the Apostle first (i. 1, 2.) shows the great end,—that it was meant for all mankind, and that he himself was appointed the preacher of it to the Gentiles. Then, after expatiating on the love of God, the dignity of Christ, and the excellence of the Gospel, he warns his converts against the evil practices in which they had formerly lived, and which, as Christians, they had renounced; and while he guards them against errors, he establishes them in the great truths of the Gospel, fortifies their minds to contend for, and persevere in the faith of Christ, and animates them in their Christian warfare. Finally, he earnestly exhorts them to a zealous discharge of the relative duties, and all others becoming their Christian profession. The Epistle is universally admitted to be from St. Paul (for which, indeed, there is the strongest evidence, external and internal); and, as appears from various allusions, was written during his imprisonment at Rome. Commentators, however, are neither agreed on the date (varying from A.D. 57 or 58 to 62), nor even on the Church to which it was addressed. Some think it was meant for the Christians at Laodicea, and, indeed, is the Epistle to the Laodiceans referred to by the Apostle in Col. iv. 16; while others, to reconcile conflicting testimonies, suppose it to have been a circular letter, intended for all the churches of Asia Minor. Be that as it may, there is not a shadow of external proof that it was not addressed to the Ephesians (see the Notes of Bp. Middleton and Rinck), though doubtless intended for the use also of the other churches of Asia Minor. As to the alleged internal evidence, that it was not written to the Ephesians, it is quite inconclusive, being merely founded on a misconception of certain words and expressions that occur in the Epistle; and which, when properly interpreted, rather confirm the common opinion, supported by all the MSS., and the almost unvaried evidence of antiquity, that it was written to the Ephesians. As to the difficulty occasioned by the seeming mention of an Epistle to the Laodiceans, it admits of an easy solution. The Apostle is, with much probability, supposed to have directed the Ephesians, through Tychicus, the bearer of the Epistle, to send a copy of it to the Laodiceans, which should also be afterwards transmitted to the Colossians. For a brief summary of the contents, the reader is referred to Horne's Introd., vol. ii. p. 396.

I. 1. διὰ θελ. Θεοῦ.] See 1 Cor. i. 1. 2 Cor. i. 1. Gal. i. 1, and Notes. Τοῖς ἁγίοις. See Note on Rom. i. 7. Καὶ πιστοῖς. This term seems to be exegetical of the preceding; q. d. 'even to all true believers in Jesus Christ.'

c 2 Cor. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 3. d Rom. 8. 29, 30. infra 5. 27. Col. 1. 22. 2 Thess. 2. 13. 2 Tim. 1. 9. 1 Pet. 1. 1, 2 e Rom. 8. 15, 29, 30. Gal. 4. 5.

[c] Εὐλογητὸς ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησου 3 Χριστοῦ, ὁ εὐλογήσας ἡμᾶς ἐν πάσῃ εὐλογίᾳ πνευματικῇ ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις ἐν Χριστῷ· [d] καθὼς ἐξελέξατο ἡμᾶς ἐν 4 αὐτῷ πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἁγίους καὶ ἀμώ-μους κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ ἐν ἀγάπῃ· [e] προορίσας ἡμᾶς εἰς 5 υἱοθεσίαν διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς αὐτὸν, κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν

3. 'The twelve verses, from 3—14 inclusive, properly speaking, form but one sentence. The Apostle's mind, indeed, was so full of his subject, that he was not very exact about his style. Reflecting on the great things which God had done for him, and by him, especially among the Gentiles, the Apostle breaks out into rapturous thanksgivings unto God on that account.' (Scott.)

— εὐλογ. ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ, &c.] The sense of these words is the same as that of the similar ones at Rom. xv. 6, where see Note. As to the accumulation of cognate terms in εὐλογητὸς, εὐλογήσας, and εὐλογία, it may be observed, that in composition such was by the ancients, especially the early writers, rather sought after as a beauty, than avoided as a blemish.

— ὁ εὐλογήσας—πνευμ.] 'who hath blessed us with (i. e. hath liberally bestowed upon us) every spiritual blessing.' The Commentators in general are not agreed whether this is to be understood of the supernatural gifts of the Holy Spirit, or His sanctifying graces, of course including all the ordinary, though invaluable, blessings of salvation; whatever may conduce to the consolation of our souls here, or prepare them for glory hereafter. It would seem best (with Chrysostom, Whitby, and Chandler) to unite both those senses.

On the force of the expression following, ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, no little difference of opinion exists. Some earlier modern Expositors (as Beza, Piscator, and Grotius, and, of the later ones, Wolf, Chandler, Wakefield, Koppe, Schleusner, and Wahl,) supposing an ellipsis of τόποις, interpret, 'in heavenly places,' i. e. not only on earth, but in heaven. Others, consisting of the ancient and most modern Expositors (as Vorstius, Casaubon, Crellius, Hyperius, Schliting, Whitby, Schoettgen, Doddridge, Rosenmuller, Jaspis, and Bretschneider), supplying the ellipsis by πράγμασι, interpret, 'in heavenly things;' understanding by heavenly things, things relating to heaven, and tending to fit us for it. Of these two modes of taking the words, the latter is, on various accounts, to be preferred. The former involves an ellipsis most harsh, and involves a sense by no means so suitable as the other; for, as Hyperius observes, 'de iis rebus mox sermonem universum instituit, in quibus omnis benedictio nostra spiritualis, ad res cœlestes pertinens, et per Christum allata consistit.'

4. The Apostle now adverts to the nature of these spiritual and heavenly thtngs.

— καθὼς ἐξελέξατο, &c.] Καθὼς has here, it would seem, the sense siquidem, inasmuch as (also found at John xvii. 2. Rom. i. 28. 1 Cor. i. 6), with a reference to εὐλογητὸς, &c.; the words ὁ εὐλογ.—Χριστῷ being in some degree parenthetical. Ἐξελ. ἡμᾶς ἐν α., 'hath selected us, or shown us marks of peculiar favour by and through him;' i. e. Christ; as 1 Cor. i. 27, 28. (where see Note) and James ii. 5. Πρὸ κατ. κόσμ., i. e. from all eternity. See Note on Matt. xiii. 35. At εἶναι ἡμᾶς supply εἰς τὸ, 'to the end that.' In ἁγίους καὶ ἀμώμους the former term seems to regard the offices of piety, the latter the duties of morality. Κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ suggests the idea of truth and reality.

The words ἐν ἀγάπῃ have been variously construed. In several MSS. and Fathers, and the Greek Commentators, they are taken (as they have also been by some moderns, as Koppe, Griesbach, and Scholz) with προορίσας in the next verse. I have, however, preferred, with Tittman, Gratz, and the Bâle Editor, to retain the common punctuation (supported by the Pesch. Syr. Version), because the words more naturally connect with the preceding than the following context, as may be imagined from the circumstance, that v. 5 is exegetical of v. 4, and therefore it was likely that as the portion to be explained commenced with the principal word ἐξελέξατο, so the explanatory one would with προορίσας. To advert to the import of the words, we may, with some, who refer them to ἐξελέξατο, interpret, 'out of his love to us.' Yet that would rather require ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ. And it is more natural, with others (as Piscator, Erasmus, Beza, Crellius, Schliting, Doddridge, and Chandler), to connect them with ἀμώμους, and render, 'by, or in, the exercise of Christian charity;' intimating (as Calvin observes) that the perfection of the faithful is seated in charity or love. Not because God requires such charity alone, but because it is the proof of fear of God, and of obedience to the whole Law.' Thus by ἀγάπη is here meant such a love to man as arises from a love and fear of God.

5. The election of the foregoing verse is here further represented by predestination to sonship.

— προορίσας ἡμᾶς εἰς υἱοθεσίαν.] This is, Koppe says, for προορίσας εἰσποιήσασθαι ἡμᾶς τέκνα αὐτοῦ; but it is rather for προορ. υἱοθετεῖν ἡμᾶς αὐτῷ, and that for εἰς αὐτόν. This υἱοθεσία had formerly appertained to the Jews only (Rom. ix. 4. comp. v. 8), but was now extended, through Christ, to all believers, as denoting that relation in which Christians especially stand to God. Thus the sense is: 'And this election consists in having from eternity decreed for us the privilege of being his sons.'

— κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τ. θελ.] 'according to his own mere good pleasure:' a very strong expression; on the full force of which, see Hyperius, Calvin, Grot., and Vorst. Suffice it here to say, that St. Paul meant thereby to effectually exclude all claims of human merit. The best Commentators, ancient and modern, are, however, agreed that the election and predestination here spoken of solely relate to God's eternal purpose of bestowing the privilege of adoption (on which see Note on Rom. viii. 15) upon the Ephesians and other sincere believers in Christ. This is con-

6 τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ, [f] εἰς ἔπαινον δόξης τῆς χάριτος
7 αὐτοῦ, ἐν ᾗ ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ Ἠγαπημένῳ· [g] ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ, τὴν ἄφεσιν τῶν παραπτωμάτων, κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ·
8 ἧς ἐπερίσσευσεν εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ φρονήσει, [h] γνω-
9 ρίσας ἡμῖν τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὴν 10 εὐδοκίαν αὐτοῦ, ἣν προέθετο ἐν αὐτῷ, [i] εἰς οἰκονομίαν τοῦ πληρώματος τῶν καιρῶν, ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι τὰ πάντα ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, τά [τε] ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς· 11 [k] ἐν αὐτῷ, ἐν ᾧ καὶ ἐκληρώθημεν, προορισθέντες κατὰ πρό-f Matt. 3. 17. & 17. 5. Col. 1. 13.

g Acts 20. 28. Rom. 2. 4. & 9. 23. infra 2. 7. & 3. 8, 16. Col. 1. 14. Phil. 4. 19. 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. Heb. 9. 12.
h Rom. 16. 25. infr. 3. 9. Col. 1. 26. 2 Tim. 1. 9. Tit. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 20.
i Gen. 49. 10. Dan. 9. 24. Gal. 4. 4. Col. 1. 19, 20.
k Acts 26. 18. Rom. 8. 17. Col. 1. 12.

firmatory of what was said at v. 3, of spiritual blessings of the highest kind having been imparted to them. Indeed, even candid Calvinistic Commentators admit that the Apostle has here no reference to the personal election of individuals, but to the election of whole communities and nations,—even all the Gentiles, whom God was pleased to admit to the benefits of the Gospel.

6. Having assured them of God's eternal purpose to call them to the knowledge of the Gospel and the privileges of the church of God, he proceeds to show them how great an instance this was of the mercy and goodness of God. (Chandl.)

— εἰς ἔπαινον—αὐτοῦ.] The sense is : 'to the praise of his glorious grace ;' i. e. that his glorious grace might be worthily admired and adored.

— ἐχαρίτωσεν] 'hath favoured us with his grace,' richly imparted his grace to us. So Test. xii. Patr., p. 698, ἐν φυλακῇ ἤμην, καὶ ὁ Σωτὴρ ἐχαρίτωσέ με ἐν δεσμοῖς, καὶ ἔλυσέ με. See Luke i. 28, and Note. Ἐν τῷ Ἠγαπ., 'by or through the Beloved One :' a title of our Lord, like ὁ Χριστὸς (as in Luke ii. 26, πρὶν ἢ ἴδῃ τὸν Χριστὸν Κυρίου), or what Aquila substitutes for it in the Old Test., ὁ Ἠλειμμένος. It appears, then, to have been not a mere appellation, but (like Χριστὸς) to have denoted office or dignity, with allusion to the words of the voice from heaven, Matt. iii. 17, 'This is my beloved Son.' Thus it may be compared with ὁ μονογενὴς of John i. 14, 18. iii. 18. 1 John iv. 9, where the full sense is, 'only and most dearly beloved.' So the Hebr. יחיד, which properly denotes only, as said of a child, is by the LXX. rendered ἀγαπώμενος at Ps. xxii. 20, and xxxv. 17, and at Prov. iv. 3, it is rendered ἀγαπώμενος by the LXX., but μονογενὴς by the other Greek Translators. Both ideas, however, seem intended ; and the term is not ill rendered in our common version 'only beloved.'

7. ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν—αἵματος.] Render, 'through whom we possess (i. e. to whom we owe) the redemption [procured] by his blood.' So Rom. iii. 24, διὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως τῆς ἐν Χρ. Ἰ. (where see Note), and also Heb. xi. 35, οὐ προσδεξάμενος τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν. Τὴν ἄφεσιν τ. παραπ., 'the forgiveness of our sins.' Παράπ. properly denotes a slip, or slight transgression, but is also used, especially in the New Test., of sins of every kind.

8. ἧς] for ᾗ (by a common Grecism, in which the relative is attracted by the antecedent), if, at least, we take ἐπερίσσ., with many modern Expositors, in a neuter sense, 'in which he hath renewed his abundant goodness to us ;' but if, with the ancient and some modern ones, in an active one, 'to make to abound,' (as in 2 Cor. iv. 15. ix. 8,) the ἧς will be for ἣν, meaning, 'which he has bountifully bestowed upon us.' Ἐν π. σοφ. καὶ φρον. may, with some, be construed with γνωρίσας which follows, but better with ἐπερίσσ. which precedes. If the words be referred to God, the sense will be, 'in the exercise of the deepest wisdom [of plan] and prudence [of execution].' If to the Ephesians, it will be, 'in imparting to us the wisdom and prudence necessary to understand the Gospel.' Either method is agreeable to the context, but the latter seems preferable, both on account of the parallel passage of Colossians i. 9, and because the words seem meant to further explain this sense.

9. γνωρίσας] 'by having made known to us [in the Gospel].' Τὸ μυστ. τοῦ θελ. α., 'his will or purpose long hidden in the mind of God ;' namely, for the salvation of all men, Gentiles as well as Jews. Compare Rom. xi. 25, and Note, and on μυστ. see Note on Rom. xvi. 25.

10. εἰς οἰκονομίαν—ἐν τῷ Χρ.] The obscurity which has here been found may be effectually removed by taking the εἰς to denote purpose. Render, '[And this was done] for the purpose of displaying the plan of (or respecting) the fulness of time ;' i. e. the plan to be put in execution at the fulness of time ; namely, that of bringing all things together in Christ at the fulness of time. Of this sense of οἰκονομία the Commentators adduce examples from Polybius and Ignatius. On the expression πλήρωμα τῶν καιρῶν, see Note on Gal. iv. 4. Ἀνακεφ. is in apposition with οἰκον.; and the sense is, 'namely, that of bringing together into one body, and uniting all beings under one head, CHRIST.' See Col. i. 20. Τὰ πάντα is for τοὺς πάντας ; i. e. (by a common idiom) all intelligent beings, meaning both Jews and Gentiles. By τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς are denoted the angels, elsewhere called God's family in heaven, from which his family on earth had been long dissevered, but was now to be united with it into one society. Compare Col. i. 16, and see Chrysostom and Doddridge.

11. ἐν ᾧ καὶ ἐκληρ.] There is here, I conceive, a resumption of the construction at ver. 7, ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν, &c.; vv. 10 and 11 being, in some degree, parenthetical. The epanalepsis may be thus expressed : 'By him (I say) through whom also we θεσιν τοῦ τὰ πάντα ἐνεργοῦντος κατὰ τὴν βουλὴν τοῦ θελή-ματος αὐτοῦ, εἰς τὸ εἶναι ἡμᾶς εἰς ἔπαινον [τῆς] δόξης 12 αὐτοῦ, τοὺς προηλπικότας ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ· [l] ἐν ᾧ καὶ ὑμεῖς, 13 (ἀκούσαντες τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς σωτηρίας ὑμῶν,) ἐν ᾧ καὶ πιστεύσαντες ἐσφραγίσθητε τῷ Πνεύματι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῷ ἁγίῳ, [m] ὅς ἐστιν ἀῤῥαβὼν τῆς 14 κληρονομίας ἡμῶν, εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποιήσεως, εἰς ἔπαινον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ.

[n] Διὰ τοῦτο κἀγὼ, ἀκούσας τὴν καθ' ὑμᾶς πίστιν ἐν τῷ 15
Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ τὴν ἀγάπην τὴν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους, [o] οὐ παύομαι εὐχαριστῶν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, μνείαν ὑμῶν ποιούμε- 16

l Rom. 8. 15, 16. 2 Cor. 1. 22. & 5. 5. infra 4. 30.
m Exod. 19. 5. Deut. 7. 6. & 14. 2. & 26. 18. Rom. 8. 23.
n Phil. 1. 3. Col. 1. 3, 4.
o Rom. 1. 9. Phil. 1. 3, 4. 1 Thess. 1. 2. 2 Thess. 1. 3.

have allotted to us this possession.' By we are meant the believing Jews. In προορ. κ. πρόθ., and also in κατὰ τ. βουλὴν τ. θελ. there is no pleonasm, but a stronger mode of expression; and the sense of the passage may be represented as follows: 'Having been predestinated [by this adoption of sons] by the deliberate counsel of him who accomplishes all his purposes and plans according to his own unfettered will and pleasure.' We have here a description of the omnipotence of the Deity.

12. εἰς τὸ εἶναι—Χριστῷ.] Render, 'In order that we, who first hoped and trusted in Christ, should be to the praise of his glory,' i. e. an occasion for his praise and glorification. Locke and many recent Commentators understand ἡμεῖς of the Gentiles; but though a plausible case is made out, the προ must thus be sunk, or have assigned to it a frigid sense. Hence it is better to suppose (with the ancient and most modern Expositors) that it refers to the Jewish Christians. The προ may mean, as Chandler and Macknight explain, 'before he came into the world;' or rather, as others (Chrysostom, Theophylact, Koppe, and Wahl), 'already and before the Gentiles,' which is most agreeable to the context.

The article τῆς before δόξης, not found in several MSS. of all recensions, some Fathers, and the Edit. Princ., has been cancelled by Matthæi and Scholz. Certainly internal evidence is quite against it.

13. ἐν ᾧ καὶ—τῷ ἁγίῳ.] There is here a seeming irregularity, which several Commentators seek to remove,. by supplying something after ὑμεῖς· either ἠλπίκατε from προηλπ., or ἐκληρώθη from ἐκληρώθημεν at ver. 11. This, however, is harsh, and it is better to suppose a parenthesis, and then a resumption, after the Apostle's usual manner; the sense being, 'In whom ye also (i. e. the Gentile Christians) believed, after ye heard the word of truth, the glad tidings of your salvation; in whom [I say] ye also [having believed] have been sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, (which is the earnest of our inheritance) unto the redemption,' &c. The expression τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς σωτηρίας ὑμῶν (with which compare the words of 1 Cor. xv. 2, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον δι' οὗ σώζεσθε) is explanatory of τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας; the Gospel being considered as the instrumental cause whereby God is pleased to show forth his power for the salvation of every one who believeth, Rom. i. 16. By being sealed by the Holy Ghost is meant being confirmed and attested as true believers, through the promised gift (τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, for τῷ ἐπηγγελμένῳ), that gift promised by the Prophets, nay by Christ himself before his ascension. On the force of the metaphor in ἐσφρ., and the nature of this sealing, see Notes at John vi. 27 and 2 Cor. i. 22, and compare infra iv. 30. Considering the persons of whom this is said, we are, I think, bound to understand the extraordinary and supernatural gifts of the Spirit, as well as his ordinary influences and graces, though most recent Commentators take it of the latter only.

14. ὅς] for ὅ; the masculine being here used for the neuter, doubtless with reference to the Holy Spirit, as one of the persons of the Godhead: thereby supplying a strong, though undesigned, proof of the personality of the Holy Spirit. On the expression ἀῤῥαβὼν, see Note at 2 Cor. v. 5.

— εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποιήσεως.] Some, referring this to ἀῤῥαβὼν, explain, 'a pledge that the redemption which has been procured for us [by Christ] shall actually be ours;' τῆς περιπ. being for τὴν περιποιηθεῖσαν, scil. ἡμῖν, and that for ἣν περιποιησόμεθα. See Koppe, and compare 1 Thess. v. 9. 1 Pet. ii. 9, λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν. Others, referring it to ἐσφραγίσθητε, explain, 'unto the purchased possession,' i. e. the redemption of those whom Christ purchased with his blood. Compare Acts x. 28.

15. Having in the former part of this chapter instructed the believing converts at Ephesus in the certainty of their election and predestination to the privileges of the Christian church, and put them in mind of those extraordinary gifts, which they received as the earnest of their inheritance, the Apostle now proceeds to assure them that their stedfast continuance in the faith (of which he had been informed) was the matter of his joy and thanksgiving; and that he continually prayed for them, that they might have a more thorough knowledge of the nature and invaluable benefits of Christianity. (Chandler.)

— διὰ τοῦτο] 'for this reason;' namely, that ye were sealed with the promised Spirit.

— ἀκούσας τὴν καθ' ὑμᾶς πίστιν, &c.] Render, 'having heard of the faith in the Lord Jesus that is in you;' meaning, that you are true believers. Καθ' ὑμᾶς, for ἐν ὑμῖν.

— ἀγάπην.] Equivalent to φιλαδελφία, 1 Thess. iv. 9.

16. μνείαν ὑμῶν ποιούμενος.] See Note at Rom. i. 9.

17 νος ἐπὶ τῶν προσευχῶν μου· [p] ἵνα ὁ Θεὸς τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν [p Col. 1. 9—15.]
Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὁ πατὴρ τῆς δόξης, δώῃ ὑμῖν πνεῦμα 18 σοφίας καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως ἐν ἐπιγνώσει αὐτοῦ· πεφωτισμένους τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς τῆς * καρδίας ὑμῶν, εἰς τὸ εἰδέναι ὑμᾶς τίς ἐστιν ἡ ἐλπὶς τῆς κλήσεως αὐτοῦ, καὶ τίς ὁ πλοῦτος τῆς 19 δόξης τῆς κληρονομίας αὐτοῦ ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις. [q] καὶ τί τὸ [q Col. 2. 12, sqq.]
ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ εἰς ἡμᾶς τοὺς πιστεύοντας, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος 20 αὐτοῦ· [r] ἣν ἐνήργησεν ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, ἐγείρας αὐτὸν ἐκ τῶν [r Ps. 110. 1. Acts 2. 24. 1 Cor. 15. 25. Col. 3. 1. Heb. 1. 3. & 10. 12. 1 Pet. 3. 22.]
νεκρῶν· καὶ ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ αὐτοῦ ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, 21 [s] ὑπεράνω πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας, καὶ δυνάμεως καὶ [s Phil. 2. 9.]
κυριότητος, καὶ παντὸς ὀνόματος ὀνομαζομένου οὐ μόνον ἐν

17. ὁ Θεὸς—Χριστοῦ.] The best Expositors are agreed that our Lord is here spoken of only in his human nature, as when he speaks of his God at John xx. 17. 1 Cor. xi. 3. iii. 23, where see Notes.

— ὁ πατὴρ τῆς δόξης.] Some interpret, 'the glorious Father;' understanding the expression δόξα of the eternal and unchangeable glory of the Deity. But it is better, with others, to take πατὴρ to signify here, as often, author, cause, and source; He being the fountain of all glory, and to whom it is primarily to be ascribed. See 2 Sam. xxii. 4. Ps. xviii. 3.

— πνεῦμα σοφίας καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως.] This may be rendered (as it is done by Crell., Schliting, Chandler, and Bp. Middleton) 'a spirit of wisdom and revelation;' since, from the absence of the Article, we are not obliged to take πνεῦμα of the Holy Spirit. Yet πνεῦμα, in that sense, would be scarcely suitable to ἀποκαλύψεως, which word, from its perpetual use in the New Test., suggests the idea of Divine teaching. It would seem that the Apostle adopted the expression to show that he chiefly meant such influences of the Spirit, sent from 'the Father of all light,' as should unfold 'the deep things of God,' (see 1 Cor. ii. 10,) and 'make them wise unto salvation.' So at 1 Cor. xiv. 6 we have ἐν ἀποκαλύψει.

— ἐν ἐπιγνώσει αὐτοῦ] for εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν; meaning, 'that ye may more and more know him,' attain to a more and more perfect knowledge of Divine truth.

18. πεφωτισμένους—ὑμῶν.] This is explanatory of ἀποκ., as denoting the effect of it. Instead of πεφ. τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς, strict propriety would require τοὺς πεφωτισμένους. Here, for the common reading διανοίας, many of the best MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions have καρδίας, which has been received by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz: and justly; for the common reading is evidently a gloss. Wetstein compares the Ovidian 'oculi pectoris,' and quotes from Achmet Oneir. v. 2, ὀφθαλμὸν ἔχει ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ. Koppe, too, adduces from Plato, Sympos., ἥ τε τῆς διανοίας ὄψις ἄρχεται ὀξὺ βλέπειν, ὅταν ἡ τῶν ὀμμάτων ἀκμὴ λήγειν ἐπιχείρῃ. The reading is also confirmed by its Hebraic character; the Heb. לב denoting not only the seat of the will and affections, but also of the understanding. Τίς is here for πόση, 'how precious!' Ἐλπὶς τῆς κλ. α. is for ἐλπ. εἰς ἣν ἐκάλεσεν ὑμᾶς.

The next words, καὶ τίς—ἁγίοις, are exegetical of the preceding; the sense being, 'And how gloriously rich is the inheritance which he has prepared [for true Christians]!' See Scott.

19. καὶ τί τὸ ὑπερβάλλον, &c.] Meaning, 'that you may be able to form some suitable conception of that amazing and infinite power of God, which he shall exert in our resurrection.' (Chandler.) Of this passage the sense mainly depends upon the construction of the words κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν—αὐτοῦ, which many Expositors, ancient and modern, construe with τοὺς πιστ. But the sentiment thus arising is so little agreeable to the context, that the best Commentators have been long of opinion that those words must be referred to τὸ ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος, and that κατὰ signifies 'according to,' i. e. similarly to; ἡμᾶς τοὺς πιστ. meaning 'us believers.' They are not, however, agreed as to the nature of this comparison; namely, whether it is meant of Christ's resurrection (namely, as understood of God's power exerted in their conversion, and subsequent support by Divine grace), or, in the natural sense, as understood of the power to be exerted in the resurrection of believers; meaning (as Chandler expresses it) that 'the future resurrection of believers shall be accomplished, according to the working of that mighty power which he exerted in Christ, when he raised him from the dead.' This last mode of understanding the words seems most agreeable to the context. For, as Chandler observes, 'as this is the hope of our Christian calling, and the peculiar promise of the Gospel, so it is one of the noblest instances to which even Almighty power itself can reach.' Both comparisons may, however, have been intended; and such, I find, was the opinion of Hammond and Macknight.

In κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος the Genit. ἰσχ. has the force of the adjective ἰσχυρός.

20. καὶ ἐκάθισεν.] Strict regularity would have required καὶ καθίσας, but probably ἐκάθισε was used, because verbs have a far stronger effect, in expressing the important truth couched in the next two verses, than would participles.

Ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, 'in the heavenly abodes.' A more dignified expression than ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς.

21. In the substantives ἀρχὴ, ἐξουσία, &c. we have abstracts for concretes, to denote the t Ps. 8. 6, 8. Col. 1. 16—18. Matt. 28. 18. 1 Cor. 15. 27. Heb. 2. 8. Rom. 12. 5. 1 Cor. 12. 6, 27. infra 4. 12, 15, 16. & 5. 23, 30. Col. 1. 18. & 3. 11. a Col. 1. 21. & 2. 13. b Infra 5. 6. & 6. 12.

τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τῷ μέλλοντι· [t] καὶ πάντα ὑπέ- 22
ταξεν ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ· καὶ αὐτὸν ἔδωκε κεφαλὴν ὑπὲρ πάντα τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἥτις ἐστὶ τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ, τὸ πλήρωμα 23 τοῦ τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρουμένου. II. [a] Καὶ ὑμᾶς, ὄντας 1 νεκροὺς τοῖς παραπτώμασι καὶ ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις, ([b] ἐν αἷς ποτε 2 persons who fill those dignities, and such as those. By ἀρχὴ and ἐξουσία we may understand the superior, and by δυναμ. and κυρ. those next in rank. See Note on Matt. xxviii.

21. Ὀνόματος, title of authority. See Phil. ii. 9. In the next words, ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, and ἐν τῷ μέλλοντι, it is intimated that the power of Christ is infinitely above all created power, whether human or angelic.

22. By the words πάντα ὑπέταξεν ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ (on which compare Matt. xxviii. 18) we have graphically represented the complete subjection to which his enemies must be reduced, and its results in their punishment. See 1 Cor. xv. 27. On this is then engrafted another and more striking view under which Christ's power may be considered,—namely, as it is exercised towards his friends; wherein it is suggested that, in his capacity of supreme Head over the Church Catholic (namely, believers of every age and nation, compare Hebr. xii. 23), he will use his power,—not in the way that earthly supreme Potentates usually do, for his own good, but exercise it solely for the benefit of his people, as the head exerts itself for the benefit and support of the other members of the body, of which it is chief, and with which it is indissolubly united.

— ἔδωκε] for τέθεικε, or ἔστησε, by an idiom formed from the use of the Hebr. נָתַן. Ὑπὲρ πάντα, 'over all persons and things.' 'Thus (observes Dr. Smith, Scrip. Test., vol. ii. p. 210) from the use of these figurative representations, as the indices of spiritual and sublime conceptions, we believe that Jesus Christ possesses a station of greatness, happiness, and active energy, infinitely superior to the state of any created being, so as to produce in us the idea, which is inculcated in the Scriptures by a great variety of phrases, of universal dominion.'

— τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ] 'his body.' Namely, because, 1. he formed it by himself and his Apostles; 2. he quickened it by his power and the gifts of the Holy Spirit; 3. he purchased it by his own blood; 4. he has bound together all its members by the same laws, the same faith, the same sacraments, the same hopes of a resurrection to life eternal, and, above all, by mutual charity, the very bond of perfectness. (Dr. Jortin.)

— τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ τὰ πάντα ἐν π. πλ.] These words are in apposition with σῶμα; and the Church is called his fulness, as consisting of many members; being an exceedingly numerous society, under the government of Him 'who filleth all with all [things];' for so τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρ. should be rendered; by which is meant, 'filleth all his members each with their peculiar spiritual gifts and graces,' each 'receiving out of his fulness grace for grace.' See John i. 16, and 1 Cor. xii. 6, and compare infra iv. 10—13. Πληρουμένου is to be regarded as a deponent, of course with an active sense; of which I have noticed an example in Æsch. Agam. 304, ἄλλος παρ' ἄλλου διαδοχαῖς πληρούμενοι.

Τὰ before πάντα, found in many of the MSS., several Fathers, and the Ed. Princ., has been received into the text by Griesbach, Matthæi, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz: rightly; for besides being required by propriety of language, it is confirmed by a passage infra iv. 10, ἵνα πληρώσῃ τὰ πάντα.

II. Having mentioned, in the preceding Chapter, the great privileges to which the Ephesians became entitled by their conversion to Christianity, the Apostle now takes occasion to enhance the greatness of the Divine mercy towards them, by putting them in mind of their former state of corruption and guilt. (Chandler.)

1. καὶ ὑμᾶς ὄντας—ἁμαρτίαις.] Here some doubt has existed respecting the connexion of these words with the context, and also as to their construction, and the verbs to be supplied. Many ancient and most modern Expositors connect them with ver. 5, supplying ἐζωοποίησε from συνεζωοποίησε after, where there is thought to be a repetition. Thus what follows, up to ver. 4, and καὶ at ver. 5, must be taken as pleonastic (after the manner of the Hebrews, who often so use their ו, which signifies δὲ and καὶ), or the δὲ is to be rendered inquam, and the καὶ, etiam. By others, however, consisting of the ancient Commentators generally, the words are connected with πληρουμένου in the last verse of the preceding Chapter; both being so united together, that only a comma is placed after πληρουμένου, the sense assigned being: 'He who filleth all [his members] with all [spiritual gifts and graces] hath also filled you who were dead in,' &c. Of these two methods, the former (confirmed by various similar instances of anacoluthon, and also by the parallel passage at Col. ii. 13) is the more natural and probable, and is supported by the authority of Hyperius and Calvin, of whom the latter ably traces the connexion and scope of the passage thus: 'Here we have an explanation with illustration of what went before; in which the Apostle, in order the better to bring home to the Ephesians what he has been saying thus generally of the grace of God, now proceeds to remind them of their former state. This application consists of two particulars: You were once lost; now God hath of his grace rescued you from destruction. These, however, instead of being brought together, are disjoined by the intervention of further considerations dilating on the main and primary one.'

— τοῖς παραπτώμασι] for ἐν τοῖς παραπ. Render, 'by, or on account of, trespasses.' By νεκρὸς εἶναι ἐν ταῖς ἁμαρτ. is meant, 'to be entirely enslaved to sin, as a dead body is to the power of death, and to be as incapable of rising from it to spiritual life, as a corpse is of being περιεπατήσατε κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, κατὰ τὸν ἄρχοντα τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος, τοῦ πνεύματος τοῦ νῦν 3 ἐνεργοῦντος ἐν τοῖς υἱοῖς τῆς ἀπειθείας· [c] ἐν οἷς καὶ ἡμεῖς c Col. 3. 7. πάντες ἀνεστράφημέν ποτε ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις τῆς σαρκὸς Titus 3. 3. Wisd. 13.1.

ἡμῶν, ποιοῦντες τὰ θελήματα τῆς σαρκὸς καὶ τῶν διανοιῶν, restored to natural life. This use of the term νεκρὸς is also found in the Heathen Philosophers, who call backsliders from philosophy and virtue to sensuality and vice, dead.

2. ἐν αἷς ποτε περιεπατήσατε.] That sin had formerly reigned in them he now evinces from its effects, or fruits; the power of sin not being sufficiently perceptible to men, until it shows itself in outward action. (Calvin.)

— κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τ.] 'according to the way or course of the world;' what Tacitus calls sæculum (so German. i. 9, 'corrumpere et corrumpi sæculum vocatur'); meaning, 'in conformity to its corrupt principles and wicked practices.'

— κατὰ τὸν ἄρχ. τῆς ἐξ. τοῦ ἀέρος.] The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are in general agreed, that ἐξουσίας is here put for ἀρχῆς, power being put for those who exercise the power, or rule, throughout the various degrees of subordinate agency. So Theophylact explains, ἄρχοντα τῶν ἐναερίων δυνάμεων, the leader of those powerful spirits who hold their residence in the air; see Jude 6. Indeed, Mede, Whitby, and Wetstein, have shown at large that both the Jews and the Gentiles (especially of the Pythagorean sect) believed the air to be peopled with genii or spirits, under the governance of a chief, who there held his seat of empire. These spirits were supposed to be powerful, but malignant, and exciting men to evil. That the Jews held the opinion in question is plain from Philo, p. 31. 28, ἔστι δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὸν ἀέρα ψυχῶν ἀσωμάτων ἱερώτατος χορὸς, and Diog. Laert. viii. 32, εἶναί τε πάντα τὸν ἀέρα ψυχῶν ἔμπλεον; also from the Rabbinical writers. So, in Pirke Aboth. fol. 83, p. 2 (cited by Wetstein), they are represented as filling the whole air, ranged in troops, and under regular subordination; which illustrates the ἐξουσίας of the Apostle. This belief was transmitted to the early Fathers (so Ignatius Ep. to Ephes. § 13, ἐν ᾗ πᾶς πόλεμος καταργεῖται ἀερίων καὶ ἐπιγείων πνευμάτων), and came down even to modern times.

We are not, indeed, warranted in ascribing to St. Paul all the dreams of the Rabbins; but neither are we justified in supposing him to have disbelieved the notion, and yet countenanced it for a temporary purpose.

— τοῦ πνεύματος] for πνεῦμα, by a slight anomaly in construction; and that, I apprehend, occasioned by the use of the κατὰ just before, to signify, 'according to the will of,' which, in thought, involving a Genitive, so the case of πνεύματος is accommodated to that rather than to the grammatical construction.

— τοῦ νῦν ἐνεργοῦντος.] Meaning, 'exerts his energies, and manifests his influence.' So Matt. xiv. 2, αἱ δυνάμεις ἐνεργοῦσιν ἐν αὐτῷ, because he had risen from the dead. Hence demoniacs were called ἐνεργούμενοι. Thus it is meant, that the Evil Spirit powerfully and manifestly, by their actions, operates in the disobedient, with reference to the Gentiles, who are here called οἱ υἱοὶ τῆς ἀπειθείας, an expression not merely synonymous with ἀπειθεῖς, but a stronger term, to denote 'devotedly and habitually disobedient.' So Luke xvi. 8, οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, 'devoted to this world,' and Matt. xxiii. 15, υἱὸς τῆς γεέννης, used like υἱοὶ θανάτου in the Old Test.

3. The Apostle here applies what he has just said to the Jews also; and shows (as in Romans, chap. ii.), that they, too, as well as the rest of the world, had been under the dominion of sin.

— ἐν οἷς καὶ ἡμεῖς.] Expositors are not agreed whether οἷς is to be referred to υἱοῖς τ. ἀπ., or to παραπτώμασι at ver. 1. But though the latter has much to countenance it, more may be urged against it; and the objection, as to the construction of ἀναστρέφεσθαι with a dative of person not thing, will not hold good, because it is here construed with ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθ. τ. σ. (which words, according to the other view, would be useless); and as here we have ἀνεστρ. ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθ., so at 2 Cor. i. 12, we have ἐν ἁπλότητι καὶ εἰλικρινείᾳ Θεοῦ ἀνεστράφημεν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ. Nor need we strictly interpret the ἐν by inter; but we may suppose it taken in a laxer sense for σὺν, meaning, 'as well as they.' This is confirmed by the καὶ joined with ἡμεῖς. See Note on ver. 5.

— θελήματα.] The plural of this word (occurring also in Acts xiii. 22) is not found in the Classical writers, though it occurs in the Sept. Θελ. τῶν διανοιῶν is wrongly rendered, 'the mind.' It denotes the passions, as σαρκὸς does the appetites, of our corrupt nature. This natural corruption is implied in θελ. (which should be rendered propensities), and is expressed in the next words, which seem added for the very purpose of inculcating that truth. For though φύσει there is tortured by many learned Commentators, to yield some such sense as shall exclude the doctrine of the natural corruption of the human heart (namely, by explaining it either custom, or acquired habit), yet in vain; for in all the passages cited the sense natural disposition is ever apparent. My own familiar acquaintance with the Classical writers enables me to confirm the remark of Mr. Scott, that 'the word was never used of any other customs than such as resulted from innate propensities.' In short, a far greater portion of learning and ingenuity, than has been employed in the cause in question, would be insufficient to set aside the common interpretation, and establish a sense unsupported by the usus loquendi, and at variance with the context. And all merely to get rid of a doctrine plainly revealed in Scripture, and confirmed by the experience even of the most virtuous and pious persons; nay, acknowledged by the heathens themselves, as might be shown by many examples, one of which must here suffice: Eurip. Beller. frag. ix. 1. Ὡς ἔμφυτος μὲν πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις κάκη.

d Rom. 10. 12.
e Rom. 5. 6, 8, 10 & 6. 4, 5, 8. & 8. 11. Col 2. 12, 13. & 3. 1, 3 Acts 15. 11. Titus 3 5.
f Matt. 16. 17. Rom. 3. 24. & 4. 16. Titus 3. 5.
g Rom. 3. 20, 27. & 4. 2. & 9. 11. & 11. 6. 1 Cor. 1. 29, 30 2 Tim. 1. 9. Titus 3. 5.
h Deut. 32. 6. Ps. 100. 3. Is. 29. 23. 2 Cor. 5. 17. infra 4. 24. Titus 2. 14.

καὶ ἦμεν τέκνα φύσει ὀργῆς, ὡς καὶ οἱ λοιποί· [d] ὁ δὲ Θεὸς, 4 πλούσιος ὢν ἐν ἐλέει, διὰ τὴν πολλὴν ἀγάπην αὐτοῦ, ἣν ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς,) [e] καὶ ὄντας ἡμᾶς νεκροὺς τοῖς παραπτώμασι, 5 συνεζωοποίησε τῷ Χριστῷ, (χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι·) καὶ 6 συνήγειρε, καὶ συνεκάθισεν ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· ἵνα ἐνδείξηται ἐν τοῖς αἰῶσι τοῖς ἐπερχομένοις τὸν 7 ὑπερβάλλοντα πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ ἐν χρηστότητι ἐφ᾽ ἡμᾶς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. [f] Τῇ γὰρ χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσ- 8 μένοι διὰ τῆς πίστεως· καὶ τοῦτο οὐκ ἐξ ὑμῶν, Θεοῦ τὸ δῶρον· [g] οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων, ἵνα μή τις καυχήσηται.) [h] Αὐτοῦ 9,10 γάρ ἐσμεν ποίημα, κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἐπὶ ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς, οἷς προητοίμασεν ὁ Θεὸς, ἵνα ἐν αὐτοῖς περιπατή-σωμεν.

The expression τέκνα ὀργῆς signifies, 'persons worthy of wrath and punishment.' So the Heb. בן הכות in Deut. xxv. 2 (where the Sept. has ἄξιος πληγῶν); 2 Pet. ii. 14, κατάρας τέκνα; Isaiah lvii. 4, τέκνα ἀπωλείας. The same idiom has place in υἱός· but sometimes the substantive following is found not in a passive sense, as here, but in an active one, as ver. 2, οἱ υἱοὶ ἀπειθείας. Finally, οἱ λοιποὶ should be rendered, not others, but 'the rest [of mankind],' the other nations.

4—6. This may be regarded as the second particular spoken of in the Note at ver. 1, of which the general import is, that God has reserved the Ephesians from the destruction to which they were devoted. This, however, the Apostle has expressed in other words, by way of further enlarging on the love of God, and thus (as Chandler observes) 'setting before them their obligations to the Divine mercy and goodness, in their recovery to the knowledge and operation of true religion and virtue by the gospel of Christ.' In fact, he now returns to the subject he was treating of at i. 19; and what is there only indirectly hinted, he here distinctly propounds; namely, that as God raised Christ from the dead, so he will raise us up.

5. καὶ] for καίπερ. The συν in συνεζωοπ. signifies as well as; meaning both you Gentiles and us Jews. On χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμ., see Note on Rom. iii. 24, and on v. 8.

6. συνεκάθ. ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ.] Intimating the great dignity of our Christian profession, by participating with Christ in the society of God and the angels, and that by right of citizenship obtained by Christ; so that we are entitled to all the privileges of the Church and family of God.

7. ἐν τοῖς αἰῶσι τ. ἐπερχ.] 'in all future ages (i. e. all futurity) both of this world and the next.' In τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ ἐν χρηστ. ἐφ᾽ ἡμᾶς a participle is to be understood; the sense being, 'his richly abundant grace and mercy shown towards us,' in the blessings conferred, through Christ and his atoning merits, by the Gospel.

This passage is thus beautifully alluded to by Irenæus, p. 181, thus: 'Temporalia fecit (Deus) propter hominem, ut maturescens in iis fructificet immortalitatem, et eterna superinducit propter suam benignitatem, ut ostendat seculis supervenientibus,' &c.

8—10. These verses are closely connected together, and contain the same sentiment, only repeated in other words. (Koppe.)

8. With this and the next verse compare Rom. iii. 24. iv. 16.

—ἐστε σεσωσμένοι.] The best Expositors have been long agreed that this must, as restricted by the subject of the context, signify, 'are put into a state of salvation,' brought to the knowledge and profession of true religion; see Note on Matt. i. 21. Διὰ τῆς πίστεως. Meaning (as Koppe points out) 'by [your reception of] the faith or Gospel of Christ;' a signification of πίστις not unfrequent. See Schleusner, and Wahl's Lex.

— καὶ τοῦτο οὐκ ἐξ ὑ.] It has been not a little debated, among both ancient and modern Commentators, to what noun τοῦτο should be referred. Some say, to πίστεως; others, to χάριτι; though on the sense of πίστις they differ in their views. The reference seems, however, to be neither to one nor the other, but to the subject of the foregoing clause,—salvation by grace, through faith in Christ and his Gospel: a view, I find, adopted by Dr. Chandler, Dean Tucker, Dr. Macknight, and Dr. A. Clarke. And to show that this interpretation is not a mere novelty, I need only refer the reader to Theophylact, who thus explains: Οὐ τὴν πίστιν λέγει δῶρον Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὸ διὰ πίστεως σωθῆναι· τοῦτο δῶρόν ἐστι Θεοῦ. Such also is the view adopted by Chrysostom and Theodoret. And that it is the true one is clear from ver. 10, where see Note.

The word ὑμῶν is emphatic, and thus may be rendered yourselves; i. e. 'not derived by any work of yourselves.'

9. οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων—καυχ.] i. e. non ex operibus quæ proprio Marte, sine gratiâ Dei edidistis. Sic enim (alias nequaquam) materia aliqua gloriandi in vobis ipsis superesse videretur. (Bp. Bull.) Ἵνα has here, as often, the eventual sense: 'So that no man may boast [as if he had done any thing to deserve salvation].' See Rom. iii. 26. 28. iv. 1—5.

10. αὐτοῦ γάρ ἐ. ποίημα.] The γὰρ serves for confirmation and explication; that being, as Bp. Bull points out, the scope of the verse.

11 [i] Διὸ μνημονεύετε, ὅτι ὑμεῖς ποτὲ τὰ ἔθνη ἐν σαρκὶ, (οἱ i Col. 1. 21.
λεγόμενοι ἀκροβυστία ὑπὸ τῆς λεγομένης περιτομῆς ἐν σαρκὶ 12 χειροποιήτου,) [j] ὅτι ἦτε ἐν τῷ καιρῷ ἐκείνῳ χωρὶς Χριστοῦ, j Rom. 9. 4. ἀπηλλοτριωμένοι τῆς πολιτείας τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, καὶ ξένοι τῶν διαθηκῶν τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, ἐλπίδα μὴ ἔχοντες, καὶ ἄθεοι, ἐν k Col. i. 20. & 2. 4.
13 τῷ κόσμῳ· [k] νυνὶ δὲ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ὑμεῖς οἱ ποτὲ ὄντες l Isa. 9. 5, 6. John 10. 16.
14 μακρὰν, ἐγγὺς ἐγενήθητε ἐν τῷ αἵματι τοῦ Χριστοῦ. [l] Αὐτὸς & 16. 33. Acts 10. 36. Rom. 5. 1.
γάρ ἐστιν ἡ εἰρήνη ἡμῶν, ὁ ποιήσας τὰ ἀμφότερα ἓν, καὶ Col. i. 20. Gal. 3. 28.

There is here a clause omitted, which may be supplied as follows: 'Salvation (i. e. the being placed in a state of salvation) was the gift of God, not for any works that we had done, nor with a view to any that we might do. So that boasting is excluded. Do them, however, we must; for we are his workmanship,' &c. See the excellent Note of Bp. Beveridge in D'Oyly and Mant's Family Bible.

— κτισθέντες ἐν Χρ. Ἰ. ἐπὶ ἔργοις ἀγ.] Ἐπὶ denotes effect or purpose; as in ἐπὶ μισθῷ, ἐπὶ κέρδει, &c.

— ἵνα ἐν αὐτοῖς περιπ.] These words are meant to further enforce the sense intimated in κτισθ. ἐπὶ ἔργ. ἀγαθοῖς. And (resolving the οἷς—ἐν αὐτοῖς into its proper equivalent) the sense may be thus expressed: 'since in them God hath before prepared us to live;' i. e. 'to the performance of which [good works] God hath before prepared us [by the calling of the Gospel, and the influences of the Spirit], that we should live in the practice of them.'

11—13. Having spoken to them of the general state of fallen man, and the salvation of all believers by the rich grace and mercy of God, the Apostle next proceeds to show the Gentile converts the peculiarities of their case, which had placed them much further out of the way of mercy than the Jews had been. (Scott.) He illustrates the mercy of God in their conversion, by showing them that God was under no previous obligation, by virtue of any special covenant he had entered into with them, to confer so great a happiness upon them; since they were wholly unacquainted with, and strangers to, the only peculiar covenant he had entered into with any part of mankind, and who consequently could have no interest in the peculiar benefits of it. (Chandler.)

11. διὸ μνημονεύετε, ὅτι, &c.] Meaning, 'Wherefore [that ye may understand the magnitude of the benefits ye have received, and the obligation ye lie under to the performance of good works,] remember,' &c. Ἐν σαρκὶ, 'by natural descent, or carnal origin.' The words οἱ λεγόμενοι—χειροπ. are exegetic and parenthetical; thus at ὅτι ἦτε there is a resumption of the construction. Οἱ λεγόμενοι ἀκροβ., i. e. 'who are contemptuously styled the uncircumcised.' Ἀκροβυστία, for ἀκρόβυστοι, abstract for concrete; as περιτομὴ, just after, for οἱ περιτετμημένοι. So, Schleusner observes, that the Heb. ערלים was a name of contempt applied to the Gentiles by the Jews; see Judges xiv. 3. xv. 18. Is. lii. 1. The expression ἐν σαρκὶ χειροποιήτου ('made by hand, in the flesh') is very significant, alluding to another circumcision, that of the heart, and spiritual, ἀχειροποιήτου. See Col. ii. 11.

12. χωρὶς Χρ.] for χωρισθέντες ἀπὸ τοῦ Χρ., 'without communion with Christ.' The sense is further developed in the next words, ἀπηλλοτρ. τῆς πολ. τ. Ἰ., 'aliens from the citizenship of Israel.' Ἀπηλλ. is a stronger term than ἀλλότριοι, though that word is by Aristotle opposed to συμπολῖται. Πολιτεία is a word used of ecclesiastical as well as civil polity; especially since, in the case of the Jews, the one was closely united with the other. Ξένοι is used for ἀπεξενωμένοι (to correspond with ἀπηλ.), and consequently it carries the regimen of a participle; see Winer's Gr. Gr. § 30, 6. So Soph. Œd. Tyr. 219, ἃ 'γὼ ξένος μὲν τοῦ λόγου τοῦδ' ἐξερῶ. In διαθηκῶν τῆς ἐπαγγ. the Genitive of the noun has the force of an adjective. By these διαθῆκαι we are to understand the patriarchal and the Mosaic covenants. See Note on Rom. ix. 4.

— ἐλπίδα μὴ ἔχοντες] 'having no [assured] hope of eternal life and salvation:' meaning, that they had been out of covenant with God, and were consequently destitute of any hope of pardon and acceptance with him.

— καὶ ἄθεοι ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ] 'and thus without God;' namely, as Chandler explains, 'either by knowing him not, or not worshipping him as God.' By a similar mode of expression, Josephus, Ant. xvii. 5, 6, describes the wicked man as doing what he does ὡς ἐν ἐρημίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'as if there were no Deity every where present.' The words ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ are added by way of magnifying their offence, as living in a world created and preserved for blessing by God, and yet not knowing him, or worshipping him as its Creator and Preserver.

13. ἐν Χρ. Ἰ.] 'by Christ and his religion.' Or we may, with Koppe, supply ὄντες; q. d. 'having been united to Christ,' 'become Christians;' comp. Rom. viii. 1. Μακρὰν εἶναι and ἐγγὺς εἶναι were figurative expressions, denoting respectively the pious worshippers of God, and therefore favoured with admittance to His presence, and those who neglected it (i. e. the Gentiles), and were consequently far removed from His presence and favour. See Isaiah lvii. 19, and Notes on Acts ii. 39, and Luke xv. 13.

14. ἡ εἰρήνη ἡμῶν.] Put, by metonymy, for ὁ ποιῶν εἰρήνην ('the author of our peace [and reconciliation with God]') occurring in the next verse; just as the Jews call the Messiah their שלום; i. e. Peace.

— τὰ ἀμφότ.] Supply μέρη or γένη, 'both of the parties.' The words following are illustrative of the sense of the foregoing, by an allum 2 Cor. 5. 17. Gal. 6. 15. Col. 2. 14. n Rom. 6. 6. & 8. 3. Col. i. 20. & 2. 14. o Psal. 148. 14. Isa. 57. 19. p John 10. 9. & 14. 6. Rom. 5. 2. infra 3. 12. Heb. 4. 16. & 10. 19, 20. q Gal. 6. 10. Phil. 3. 20. Heb. 12. 22, 23. r Psal. 118. 22. Isa. 28. 16. Matt. 16. 18. 1 Cor. 3. 9, 10. 1 Pet. 2. 4, 5. Rev. 21. 14.

τὸ μεσότοιχον τοῦ φραγμοῦ λύσας, ᵐ τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν τῇ 15 σαρκὶ αὐτοῦ, τὸν νόμον τῶν ἐντολῶν ἐν δόγμασι, καταργήσας· ἵνα τοὺς δύο κτίσῃ ἐν ἑαυτῷ εἰς ἕνα καινὸν ἄνθρω-πον, ποιῶν εἰρήνην· ⁿ καὶ ἀποκαταλλάξῃ τοὺς ἀμφοτέρους 16 ἐν ἑνὶ σώματι τῷ Θεῷ διὰ τοῦ σταυροῦ, ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν αὐτῷ· ᵒ καὶ ἐλθὼν εὐηγγελίσατο εἰρήνην ὑμῖν 17 τοῖς μακρὰν καὶ τοῖς ἐγγύς, ᵖ ὅτι δι' αὐτοῦ ἔχομεν τὴν 18 προσαγωγὴν οἱ ἀμφότεροι ἐν ἑνὶ Πνεύματι πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα. ᵠ Ἄρα οὖν οὐκέτι ἐστὲ ξένοι καὶ πάροικοι, ἀλλὰ συμ- 19 πολῖται τῶν ἁγίων καὶ οἰκεῖοι τοῦ Θεοῦ, ʳ ἐποικοδομηθέντες 20 ἐπὶ τῷ θεμελίῳ τῶν ἀποστόλων καὶ προφητῶν, ὄντος ἀκρο-sion to the partition wall in the Temple, which separated the Court of the Gentiles from that of the Jews. The word μεσότ. is very rare in the Classical writers, though an example (and that similarly figurative) is cited by Wetstein from Athen. p. 281, τὸν τῆς ἡδονῆς καὶ ἀρετῆς μεσότοιχον διορύττειν. Τοῦ φραγμοῦ is a Genitive of explication, for διαφράσσον ἡμᾶς ἐξ ἄλλων ἐθνῶν. It here alludes to the ritual law of Moses, which was intended only to keep the Jews apart from the Gentiles, but which, in fact, produced that mutual enmity to which the Apostle proceeds to advert.

15. Τὴν ἔχθραν may be taken either with the preceding, or the following words; for the same sense will arise. But it seems more natural to connect them with the following. Τὸν νόμον is in apposition with ἔχθραν, denoting the cause of enmity. This the Law was, since it generated in one party an antisocial and supercilious spirit, and in the other a deadly hatred. Ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ α., i. e. by the sacrifice of his body on the cross, namely, to bring in that everlasting righteousness, of which Daniel prophesied. The terms ἐντ. and δόγμ. refer to the ceremonial part of the law; and are specified as being the cause of the disunion. On καταργ., see Rom. iii. 31. Gal. iii. 17, and Notes.

— ἵνα τοὺς—ἄνθ.] literally, 'in order that [thereby] he might, by himself, form the two classes of men into one new mankind.' At τοὺς δύο sub. ἀνθρώπους, from ἄνθρωπον following. The two classes would be one man, by being one in friendship, and having a common spirit of affection; as a man is inseparable from himself; and 'one new man,' since each party would be brought to a new and reformed religion, with new and infinitely better principles. Ἐν ἑαυτῷ, i. e. 'through his means, i. e. by his death on the cross.'

16. ἀποκαταλλ.] This is more significant than καταλλ., and refers to the enmity previously existing; the term denoting a transition from the state of enmity to that of friendship. Ἐν ἑνὶ σώμ., 'by composing one body;' i. e. Christ's mystical body, the Church. Ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἔχθ. is not synonymous with καταργήσας τὴν ἔχθραν just before, but is a stronger expression, denoting that 'it is annulled for ever.'

17. εὐηγγ. εἰρήνην, &c.] As Christ did not himself preach this peace to the Gentiles, we must understand it as done through the medium of his ambassadors, the Apostles. Εὐαγγελίζεσθαι εἰρήνην (i. e. a mode of obtaining peace and reconciliation with God) is a phrase occurring also at Acts x. 36.

18. τὴν προσαγωγήν.] Meaning, by the force of the Article, 'the access which we have.' In προσαγ. there is an allusion to our introduction to a king or great man. Ἐν ἑνὶ Πνεύματι, i. e. 'by the intervention of one and the same Holy Spirit, in his office of Paraclete;' see Rom. v. 2. 1 Cor. xii. 13. The full doctrine contained in this verse is ably drawn forth by Bp. Sherlock in D'Oyly and Mant's Family Bible.

19. ἄρα οὖν, &c.] Here we have the inference drawn from what has been said at vv. 15—18: 'So, or now, then,' &c. The terms ξένοι and πάροικοι differ; the former being applied to a city or country, the latter to a family; thus corresponding respectively to the Latin terms peregrinus and hospes. In the words following, συμπ. refers to the ξένοι, and οἰκεῖοι to the πάρ.; compare ver. 12. The meaning is, that they 'all have now every privilege which the Jews had, of being the people and family of God.'

20. On the οἶκος, implied in οἰκεῖοι just before, the Apostle engrafts a figurative comparison of the Church to a House or Temple of God; having in mind, it is supposed, the Temple of Ephesus. The present passage is one of great beauty, and especially worthy of admiration, from the skill with which the architectural figures are applied to the subject. By προφητῶν most ancient and early modern Expositors understand the prophets of the Old Testament, as being the heralds of the Gospel. Since, however, the term is put after ἀποστόλων, and the Old Testament prophets could hardly be said to form part of the Christian edifice with the Apostles, the most eminent modern Commentators, from Grotius downwards, seem right in understanding it (as indeed the 5th verse of the next chapter requires) of the προφῆται, or inspired teachers of the New Covenant, mentioned in various parts of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. See also iv. 11. Acts xi. 27.

20. ὄντος ἀκρογωνιαίου.] Called in the ancient prophecy (see Matt. xxi. 42), κεφαλὴ γωνίας. In order to understand this expression properly, we must bear in mind that 'the strength of buildings lies in their angles; and that the corner-stone is that which unites and compacts the different sides of them; and that the chief corner-stone is that which is laid at the founda-

21 γωνιαίου αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· [s] ἐν ᾧ πᾶσα ἡ οἰκοδομὴ 22 συναρμολογουμένη αὔξει εἰς ναὸν ἅγιον ἐν Κυρίῳ· [t] ἐν ᾧ καὶ ὑμεῖς συνοικοδομεῖσθε, εἰς κατοικητήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Πνεύ-ματι.
1 III. [a] ΤΟΥΤΟΥ χάριν ἐγὼ Παῦλος ὁ δέσμιος τοῦ
2 Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν τῶν ἐθνῶν·—[b] εἴγε ἠκούσατε τὴν οἰκονομίαν τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ τῆς δοθείσης μοι εἰς ὑμᾶς, 3 [c] ὅτι κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν ἐγνώρισέ μοι τὸ μυστήριον· (καθὼς

s 1 Cor. 3. 17. & 6. 19. 2 Cor. 6. 16. infra 4. 16. t 1 Pet. 2. 5. a Acts 21. 33. infra 4. 1. Phil. 1. 7, 13, 14, 16. Col. i. 21, 24. & 4. 3. 2 Tim. 1. 8. & 2. 10. Philem. 1. b Acts 9. 15. & 13. 2. Rom. 1. 5. 1 Cor. 4. 1. Gal. i. 16. infra ver. 8. c Acts 22. 17, 21. & 26. 16, 17. Rom. 16. 25. Gal. 1. 11, 12. supra 1. 9, 10. Col. 1. 26, 29.

tion, upon which the whole angle or quoin of the building rests, and which therefore is the principal support and tie of the whole edifice. Now Christ is the chief corner-stone; the main stress of this spiritual building lies and rests upon him, who by his death hath united Jews and Gentiles, the two different constituent parts of it, into one compact, regular building and temple.' (Chandler.) In the same manner the expression is explained by the ancient Commentators. And that such is the idea intended to be conveyed, appears from the term συναρμολογουμένη in the verse following; compare also vv. 14—18. Ἀκρογωνιαίου I would render, not, 'the chief corner-stone' (for all such corner-stones must be equal), but rather (what is confirmed by the absence of the Article), 'a corner-stone;' meaning an extreme angular stone, a stone at the extreme angle, the end of the sides; q. d. 'Jesus Christ being like unto a corner-stone, any corner-stone of that kind.' See 1 Pet. ii. 5—7.

21. ἐν ᾧ πᾶσα ἡ οἰκ.] Render, 'by whom,' i. e. by means of whom, &c. Συναρμ., 'framed together,' so that the stones shall fit in (λογέω); according to the ancient manner of building, in which the stones were not squared, but laid λογάδην; see my Note on Thucyd. iv. 4. So Anthol. iii. 32. 4 (cited by Wetstein), ἡρμολόγησε τάφον. In ἁρμ. there is an allusion to carpenters' work, and in λογέω to masonry. The ἡ before οἰκοδομὴ is not found in several MSS., some Fathers, and the Editio princeps; and it has been cancelled by Bengel, Matthæi, and Knapp, and is marked as probably to be cancelled by Griesbach; but without reason; the external testimony being not against, and the internal all in favour of, the Article; since, though required by the propriety of the language (for, as Bp. Middleton and Vater observe, πᾶσα would signify every, whereas the sense whole is required, which demands the Article to the substantive following; see Middleton, Gr. A. i. 7), yet this propriety was not so commonly known as to induce us to suppose the Article to have come from the early Critics, much less the scribes. Whereas that the scribes should omit the Article was very likely, and might be confirmed by several examples from the best writers.

— αὔξει εἰς ναὸν, &c.] crescit, assurgit. By a metaphor (as Grotius and Koppe observe) taken from animal and vegetable growth, to denote edificial increase. The term was, we may suppose, suggested by the two ideas, of a body and a building, being still in the Apostle's mind. Ἐν Κυρίῳ. This serves to complete the idea in ἅγιον; meaning, 'a temple holy to the Lord.'

22. ἐν ᾧ.] This may, with some, be referred to Κυρίῳ, just before, but better by others to ναὸν, which is confirmed by a similar use of the rare word συνοικοδ. in Thucyd. i. 93 (of the walls of Athens), ξυνῳκοδομημένοι μεγάλοι λίθοι καὶ ἐντομῇ ἐγγώνιοι. On εἰς κατοικητ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, see Rom. viii. 9. 1 Cor. iii. 16. 1 John iv. 13, and Notes. Ἐν Πνεύματι is by most recent Commentators taken for πνευματικόν. But the one assigned by the ancient and most modern Expositors ('by the Holy Spirit') is far more agreeable to the context and the general tenor of the reasoning.

III. The Apostle having now fully declared that it was the eternal purpose of God to call the Gentiles to be partakers of the privileges of his church, proceeds to speak of the dignity of his own Apostolical character and office, and of the extraordinary manner by which he was called to, and fitted for, it; that hereby he might not only give them a fuller assurance of the truth of the doctrine he had laid down, but prevent their being offended and prejudiced against him, upon account of those persecutions and sufferings to which he was exposed. (Chandler.)

1. ἐγὼ Παῦλος—ἐθνῶν.] There is here a seeming deficiency, which the Translators variously supply. Most suppose an ellipsis of εἰμὶ, which, however, is shown by Bp. Middleton to be inadmissible. It is better, with many eminent Expositors (as Abp. Newcome, Bp. Middleton, and others), to regard vv. 2—13 inclusive as parenthetical, the thread of the reasoning being resumed by a repetition of τούτου χάριν ('on account of this equal admission of both Jews and Gentiles'). The argument is well stated by Bp. Middleton, in the following paraphrase: 'For this cause, I, Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ; for, or since indeed ye cannot but have heard both of my divine commission, and of the nature of the doctrine which I am commanded to teach (vv. 12, 13), for this cause (τούτου χάριν repeated vv. 14—19) I pray to God, who has been thus merciful in calling you, that ye may be strengthened with might by his Spirit (ver. 16), that so Christ may dwell in your hearts.' After this prayer is subjoined a doxology (20, 21), with the concluding Amen.

2. εἴγε.] The word has here the affirmative sense since. Τὴν οἰκονομίαν τῆς χάρ. Meaning, 'the office of Apostle, or herald of the grace of God.' Τῆς δοθείσης, though grammatically belonging to χάριν, yet seems to be meant for οἰκονομίαν. Thus, in the parallel passage of Col. i. 25, it is united. In εἰς ὑμᾶς the εἰς denotes end or purpose; q. d. 'for your benefit.'

3. ὅτι] '[also] that.' Κατὰ ἀποκάλ., for ἐν ἀποκαλύψει. Compare Gal. i. 12. Τὸ μυστήριον; i. e. of the calling of the Gentiles.

προέγραψα ἐν ὀλίγῳ· πρὸς ὃ δύνασθε ἀναγινώσκοντες νοῆσαι 4 τὴν σύνεσίν μου ἐν τῷ μυστηρίῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ·) [d] ὃ [ἐν] 5 ἑτέραις γενεαῖς οὐκ ἐγνωρίσθη τοῖς υἱοῖς τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὡς νῦν ἀπεκαλύφθη τοῖς ἁγίοις ἀποστόλοις αὐτοῦ καὶ προφήταις ἐν πνεύματι· [e] εἶναι τὰ ἔθνη συγκληρονόμα καὶ σύσ- 6 σωμα καὶ συμμέτοχα τῆς ἐπαγγελίας αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου· [f] οὗ ἐγενόμην διάκονος κατὰ τὴν δωρεὰν 7 τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ. [g] ἐμοὶ τῷ ἐλαχιστοτέρῳ πάντων [τῶν] 8 ἁγίων ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις αὕτη, ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν εὐαγγελίσασθαι τὸν ἀνεξιχνίαστον πλοῦτον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, [h] καὶ φωτίσαι 9 πάντας, τίς ἡ * οἰκονομία τοῦ μυστήριου τοῦ ἀποκεκρυμμένου ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων ἐν τῷ Θεῷ, τῷ τὰ πάντα κτίσαντι διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· [i] ἵνα γνωρισθῇ νῦν ταῖς ἀρχαῖς καὶ ταῖς 10 ἐξουσίαις ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις διὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἡ πολυ-d Acts 10. 28. e Gal. 3. 29, 30. & 3. 14. supra 2. 15, 16. f Rom. 1. 5. Col. 2. 12. g Acts 9. 15. & 13. 2. & 22. 21. & 26. 17. 1 Cor. 15. 9. Gal. 1. 16. & 2. 8. 1 Tim. 1. 13. 15. & 2. 7. 2 Tim. 1. 11. h John 1. 3. Rom. 16. 25. supra i. 9. Col. 1. 16, 26. 2 Tim. 1. 10. Tit. 1. 2, 3. Heb. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 20. i 1 Pet. 1. 12.

Καθὼς, for καθ' ἃ προέγρ. ἐν ὀλίγῳ, 'according to what I have before briefly glanced at;' namely, i. 9, 10. ii. 11 sq.

For ἐγνώρισε, many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have ἐγνωρίσθη, which has been received by Griesbach and Scholz; but, I apprehend, wrongly; for it has every appearance of being a mere alteration to smoothen a slight ruggedness of style: whereas the common reading can be accounted for on no principle whatever.

4. πρὸς ὅ.] This may be taken, with Koppe, for ἐν ᾧ, or resolved into ὃ ἀναγινώσκοντες δύνασθε νοῆσαι πρὸς αὐτῷ, i. e. ἐν αὐτῷ. Σύνεσιν. The word signifies intelligence and sagacity (whether natural or acquired, but chiefly the former) as evinced in a thorough knowledge of any thing.

5. ὡς] 'in the same manner as,' i. e. with the same extent and clearness as.

6. συγκληρονόμα—σύσσωμα—συμμέτοχα.] Terms of rare occurrence. 'Επαγγελίας belongs to all of these except σύσσωμα, which is inserted to denote close union. Σύσσωμος answers to the Latin concorpor, and denotes 'many members of the same mystical body,' the Church. Συμμέτοχα τῆς ἐπ., 'joint partakers of his promise [of salvation] by Christ.'

7. ἐγεν. διάκονος] i. e. 'had committed to me the διακονία' mentioned at ver. 2. The same expression occurs at Col. i. 23. Of κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τῆς δυν. the full sense is, 'by the great [and supernatural] efficacy of his power.' See supra i. 19, 20.

— ἐμοὶ τῷ ἐλαχιστοτέρῳ πάντων τῶν ἁγ.] 'to me [I say] who am beyond comparison the least of all saints.' 'Ελαχιστ. A comparative formed on a superlative (ἐλάχιστος), like πρώτιστος. 'Ελαχιστότατος is found in Sext. Emp. The Apostle means to say that of all persons now Christians, he was, by reason of his former bigoted adherence to Judaism, and persecution of the Gospel, humanly speaking, the least worthy of the supernatural call, and Divine illumination which had been vouchsafed to him.

8. Τῶν before ἁγίων, not found in many MSS., Fathers, and Editions, is cancelled by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz.

— ἀνεξιχ.] 'unsearchable and inconceivable.' So Orat. Manass. v. 6, ἀνεξ. τὸ ἔλεος.

9. φωτίσαι.] This term is more significant than διδάσκειν, and is very suitable to the light of God's revelation. So Ignatius, cited by Grotius, πεφωτισμένων ἐν θελήματι Θεοῦ. Instead of the common reading κοινωνία a great number of the best MSS., Versions, and Fathers, together with the Ed. Princ., &c. have οἰκονομία, which has been rightly adopted by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz. On the sense of the expression, see Note supra v. 2.' The common reading might arise either from an error of the scribes, or from a gloss, or correction of the early Critics. 'Ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων signifies 'from the ages [of eternity].' Κτίσαντι is by many of the best Commentators taken figuratively of the new creation of the Gospel; but by the ancient and most modern ones, in its natural sense. I would, with Wells, Doddridge, and Chandler, unite both; which, as the last-mentioned Commentator observes, adds to the dignity of the sentence.

Διὰ 'Ιησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which is not found in some ancient MSS., Versions, and Fathers, was rejected by Mill and Bengel, and has been cancelled by Griesbach: justly; for it may be suspected, with Rinck, to have been an alteration of the same early Critics who, as we find from Tertullian, cancelled the ἐν just before.

10. ἵνα γνωρισθῇ, &c.] i. e. 'To the end that now the glorious angels of heaven, after that God had once uttered and declared that his good purpose to mankind, might see, in this wonderful redemption and blessed union of the Church, a clear proof and demonstration of the manifold and infinite wisdom of God.' (Bp. Hall.) By ταῖς ἀρχαῖς καὶ ταῖς ἐξουσίαις are meant the various orders of angels. See Note on i. 10, 21. 'Εν τοῖς ἐπουρ., 'in the heavenly mansions.' See i. 20, and ii. 6. Γνωρ. imports the communication of more light and knowledge, even to beings of such great wisdom. See Chandler. Διὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας. Meaning, 'by the founding

11 ποίκιλος σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ· κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰώνων, ἣν 12 ἐποίησεν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν· [k] ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν τὴν παῤῥησίαν καὶ τὴν προσαγωγὴν ἐν πεποιθήσει διὰ τῆς 13 πίστεως αὐτοῦ. [l] Διὸ αἰτοῦμαι μὴ ἐκκακεῖν ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσί 14 μου ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, ἥτις ἐστὶ δόξα ὑμῶν·—Τούτου χάριν κάμπτω τὰ γόνατά μου πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ 15 Χριστοῦ, ἐξ οὗ πᾶσα πατριὰ ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς ὀνο-k John 10. 9. & 14. 6. Rom. 5. 2. supra 2. 18. Heb. 10. 19.

l Supra v. 1. Phil. 1. 14. 1 Thess. 3. 3. Col. 1. 24.

and governing of the Church.' Πολυποίκιλος. This is not well rendered manifold; a sense which would rather require πολύπλοκος. I should prefer multifarious, immensely diversified, as denoting what is conspicuously excellent.

11. κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰώνων, &c.] At τῶν αἰώνων I would understand ἀπὸ (expressed in the verse preceding), regarding this as a Genitive of a noun for an adjective. Render, 'according to his most ancient purpose, counsel, plan, and dispensation, which, having formed from eternal ages, he executed by Christ Jesus our Lord.' Meaning, 'that the angels understood the manifold wisdom of God, by the gathering the Christian Church, in that disposition of the ages which he formed or settled by Jesus Christ; all which had a reference to him, and led on to the accomplishment of the Divine purposes of mercy and favour towards mankind, in and by him.' Πρόθ. signifies the disposition which any one makes of any thing, whether in act or in intention. See Acts xi. 23, and Note.

12. παῤῥησίαν καὶ προσαγ.] By hendiadys, for 'a free access to,' meaning, freedom of address [viz. in prayer], (see Rom. viii. 15. Gal. iv. 6) and also an admission to all the privileges of the Church of God, implied in that access. Ἐν πεποιθ. is added in order to explain and strengthen the preceding. Διὰ τῆς πίστ. αὐτοῦ. Render, 'through the faith we have in him, and confidence in his merits.' See Theophylact. So πίστ. Χριστοῦ, Phil. iii. 9.

13. The connexion (somewhat obscure) is well laid down by Theophylact as follows: 'Wherefore [since great is the mystery of your calling, and as great things are committed to me to preach to you, and I must needs suffer bonds and injurious treatment from those who understand not this mystery,] I desire that ye faint not, i. e. be not troubled and disconcerted, as if something unexpected had happened.'

In αἰτοῦμαι μὴ ἐκκακεῖν there is an obscurity arising partly from extreme brevity, but chiefly from the want of some pronoun at αἰτ. Several recent Commentators supply με, and take αἰτ. in the sense 'I pray God that I may not faint,' &c. Yet the context rather requires αἰτ. to be taken in the sense 'I earnestly intreat,' which necessarily implies ὑμᾶς. The difficulty, however, chiefly turns on the words ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσί μου ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, ἥτις ἐστὶ δόξα ὑμῶν; but it will disappear if we regard the sentence as consisting of three clauses compressed into one; and which, when dilated in a paraphrase, will yield a very plain sense, as follows: 'I intreat you not to be discouraged in your Christian profession, at the evils I suffer (which, however, I suffer for your sake and in your cause, by preaching the equality of the Gentiles with the Jews); since those afflictions are so far from being a reproach to me or you,—that they are rather matter of glory to you, in behalf of whom I suffer, when you consider the firmness with which I endure them as an attestation of my sincerity in the Gospel I preached to you; so that ye may be proud of being converted by me.'

Ἐκκακεῖν signifies properly to be tired out (see Note on Gal. vi. 9), but figuratively, to despond, despair, as here and in 2 Cor. iv. 16, where see Note. The Classical term is περικακεῖν, or ἐκκάμνειν, τινι. By ὑμῶν we must understand, not the Ephesians only, but the Gentile Christians generally. Ἥτις is for αἵτινες; an idiom common to the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin; by which the relative is accommodated in gender either to the former or to the latter of two substantives. So Cicero: 'ignibus quæ sidera vocatis.'

14. τούτου χάριν.] I would refer this, not, with most Commentators, to what immediately precedes; but, with Crellius and Bp. Middleton, to ver. 1, where see Note. Κάμπτω τὰ γόνατά μου. An Oriental form of expression, denoting humble and fervent prayer. Πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰ. Χρ. 'This is,' as Rosenmuller remarks, 'used instead of Θεὸν, to intimate that it is on account of this mysterious connexion that salvation redounds to Christians. From the mention (continues he) of this connexion subsisting between God the Father and the Son, the Apostle was led to introduce that which subsists, though of a very different kind, between all created beings and the Father.'

15. ἐξ οὗ πᾶσα πατριὰ, &c.] Ἐξ οὗ may refer, either (as some suppose) to the Father, from whom both men and angels are named, i. e. denominated the family and sons of God, ii. 19. Luke xx. 36. John i. 12, or (according to others) to Christ, by whom saints and angels are incorporated into one family or society, of which he is the Head. But the former mode is preferable.

The expression πατριὰ is supposed to be adopted from the Jewish manner of speaking, by which the angels were called God's family above, and God's chosen people on earth his family below. Πᾶσα shows the universality of that incorporation; q. d. that it extends to both earth and heaven. As respects the earthly family, it implies the admission of the Gentiles, together with the Jews, to the benefits of the Gospel; meaning that all such distinction is done away; God being the Head of every family or nation of men.

From there being no Article with πατριὰ, Bp. Middleton strenuously maintains that the sense must be, not 'the whole family,' but 'every family.' This sense, however, runs, I apprehend, counter to the argument carried on in the context; and as to the support which he seeks to m 2 Cor. 4. 16. infra 6. 10. μάζεται· [m] ἵνα δῴη ὑμῖν, κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης 16 αὐτοῦ, δυνάμει κραταιωθῆναι διὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος αὐτοῦ εἰς n Col. 2. 7. τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον, [n] κατοικῆσαι τὸν Χριστὸν διὰ τῆς πίσ- 17 τεως ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν· ἐν ἀγάπῃ ἐῤῥιζωμένοι καὶ τεθε- 18 μελιωμένοι, ἵνα ἐξισχύσητε καταλαβέσθαι σὺν πᾶσι τοῖς ἁγίοις, τί τὸ πλάτος καὶ μῆκος καὶ βάθος καὶ ὕψος,—γνῶ- 19 ναί τε τὴν ὑπερβάλλουσαν τῆς γνώσεως ἀγάπην τοῦ Χριo Rom. 16. 26. Jude 24. στοῦ, ἵνα πληρωθῆτε εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ. [o] Τῷ 20 derive to this view from the ancient Commentators, it is rather fancied than real, being merely founded on an incomplete quotation in Suicer. Indeed, the words immediately following seem to show that the Apostle recognized but two such families; ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς being for ἡ ἐν οὐρ. καὶ ἡ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, as the Peschito Syriac Translator evidently took them. Nor is it likely that the Apostle should have been aware of a nicety respecting the use of the Article, which is, I believe, not uniformly observed, even by the Classical writers. Besides, it must be borne in mind that the error consists, not in the improper use of the Article, but in the omission of it as unnecessary, or, at least, where it may very well be understood; and the Bishop himself admits, on more than one occasion, that it is difficult to fix limits to the licence respecting the omission of the Article.

16—19. This portion contains the substance of the prayer, and may be compared with a parallel passage of Col. ii. 1—10.

16. κατὰ τὸν πλ. τ. δ. α.] The sense seems to be, 'according to his abundant beneficence and mercy, which is his glory;' δυνάμει being for δυνατῶς. This is not to be understood, with Chandler, merely of firmness of resolution and courage in professing the Gospel amidst persecution, but must comprehend (as Mr. Scott suggests) 'all the holy dispositions of their renewed souls, in faith, reverential fear, love, gratitude, hatred of sin, hope, and patience; that thus they might be stedfast amidst temptations and persecutions, enjoy comfort, and glorify God in every situation.' On the expression ἔσω ἄνθρ., see Notes on Rom. vii. 22. 2 Cor. iv. 16. So Plato (cited by Koppe) says, τοῦ ἔξω ἀνθρώπου ὁ ἐντὸς ἄνθρωπος ἔσται ἐγκρατέστατος.

17. κατοικῆσαι—ὑμῶν.] Sub. ὥστε, for εἰς τὸ, denoting result. In κατοικ. the heart of the Christian believer is compared to a temple fit for the abode of God (by an allusion, as we may suppose from the verse following, to the celebrated temple of Diana at Ephesus); the faith of a Christian being considered as a building, wherein God and Christ dwell by the Holy Spirit. At the same time this in-dwelling of Christ in the heart of the true Christian must chiefly be understood of fervent love to Christ and his religion; as, indeed, is plain from ἐν ἀγάπῃ, &c. in the next verse, and meant to explain the preceding.

18. ἐν ἀγάπῃ ἐῤῥιζωμένοι.] Meaning (by a continuation of the same architectural metaphor) that 'the love should be deep and sincere;' and though ἐῤῥιζ. be properly applicable to trees, yet it was sometimes used of the foundations of massy edifices: in which case, however, it is in the Classical writers almost always accompanied with some word which has reference to building. The best comment on the meaning of ἀγάπη here is Gal. v. 22, where, among the fruits of the Spirit, ἀγάπη is placed first.

— ἵνα ἐξισχύσητε, &c.] Here is represented the result of this love. It being meant, that in proportion as these feelings are rooted in the heart, we shall, under the teaching of the Spirit, be able to comprehend, &c. Πλάτος, μῆκος, βάθος, and ὕψος are terms here used merely to denote immense extent; viz., as some explain, of his spiritual temple, the Church; or, as others, of the love of Christ. If the former view be adopted, we should point ὕψος. But the latter is the more natural and simple mode; according to which we have here a beautiful and sublime expression, to denote the vast extent of the love of Christ, 'which passeth knowledge;' what the Apostle at ver. 8 calls 'the unsearchable riches of the love of Christ.' For 'there is (as observes Bp. Sanderson) such a height and depth, and length and breadth in every part, as nought but an infinite understanding can fathom. 'So God loved the world.' But how much that so containeth, no tongue can tell, or wit of man can reach. It is a love incomprehensible. It swalloweth up the sense and understanding of men and angels; fitter to be admired and adored with silence, than blemished with any of our weak expressions.'

19. γνῶναι—τοῦ Χριστοῦ.] This has been thought to involve a contradiction, and has given rise to no little discussion. The difficulty, however, may be effectually removed by considering this as a brief mode of expression; of which the sense, conveyed in a few more words, is as follows: 'And [in short] to know the immense love of Christ' (i. e. the immensity of redeeming love); though, indeed, to completely know it surpasses the powers of all finite beings.

— ἵνα πληρωθῆτε—Θεοῦ.] The exact import of these words has been disputed, but the sense assigned by Grotius, Crellius, Whitby, and Macknight, as being the simplest, most natural, and of most extensive application, may deserve the preference. The Apostle, it would seem, means to say that, 'by thus attaining the Holy Spirit, and having suitable conceptions of the great mystery of redeeming love, they may be filled with all the spiritual gifts and graces of every kind, both ordinary and extraordinary, which God imparts to his faithful worshippers.' If this view be not admitted, the reader may see reason to adopt that propounded by Dr. Pye Smith, Scrip. Test., vol. iii. p. 261, who is of opinion that 'the connexion and flow of the ideas suggest the following as the meaning; "I pray that God may grant to you such strength, comprehension, and elevation of knowledge, with regard to the transδὲ δυναμένῳ ὑπὲρ πάντα ποιῆσαι ὑπὲρ ἐκ περισσοῦ ὧν αἰτούμεθα ἢ νοοῦμεν, κατὰ τὴν δύναμιν τὴν ἐνεργουμένην ἐν ἡμῖν, 21 αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, εἰς πάσας τὰς γενεὰς τοῦ αἰῶνος τῶν αἰώνων! ἀμήν.

1 IV. [a] ΠΑΡΑΚΑΛΩ οὖν ὑμᾶς ἐγὼ, ὁ δέσμιος ἐν Κυρίῳ, a vid. supra 3. 1.
2 ἀξίως περιπατῆσαι τῆς κλήσεως ἧς ἐκλήθητε, [b] μετὰ πάσης Phil. i. 27. Col. 1. 10.
ταπεινοφροσύνης καὶ πρᾳότητος, μετὰ μακροθυμίας ἀνεχό- 1 Thess. 2. 12.
3 μενοι ἀλλήλων ἐν ἀγάπῃ, σπουδάζοντες τηρεῖν τὴν ἑνότητα b Col. 1. 11. & 2. 12, 15. & 3. 12.
4 τοῦ Πνεύματος ἐν τῷ συνδέσμῳ τῆς εἰρήνης. [c] Ἓν σῶμα c Rom. 12. 5, 10.
καὶ ἓν Πνεῦμα, καθὼς καὶ ἐκλήθητε ἐν μιᾷ ἐλπίδι τῆς κλή- 1 Cor. 12. 4, 11. supra 2. 16.

cendent love of Christ, that ye may advance more and more towards that immeasurable perfection which will be the immortal object of your ever-growing enjoyment."'

20, 21. Of this noble doxology the general sense is clear, and therefore no petty exceptions are to be taken at the phraseology; as, for instance, ὑπὲρ πάντα and ὑπὲρ ἐκ περισσοῦ; since this accumulation of the same or similar phrases, like the repetition of words, serves to strengthen the sense. The most correct mode of viewing the phraseology is to consider that if ἐκ περισσοῦ had been away, there would have been a simple repetition of ὑπὲρ, of which ὧν would have been governed; and thus ὑπὲρ ὑπὲρ would have corresponded to longè longè in Latin. As it is, ὑπὲρ ἐκ περισσοῦ is a stronger term than ὑπὲρ or ἐκ περισσοῦ would have been separately, though having the same regimen as either,—namely, a Genitive, which here may be resolved into ἐκείνων ἅ; and as the ἐκ περισσοῦ enhances the sense here, so in Plato de Legibus, l. v. p. 219, we have ἐκ περισσοῦ ὑπερέχει τοῖς ἄλλοις.

Two clauses here seem blended into one. When separated, the passage will run thus: 'Now unto Him who is able to do for us all things that we can ask—nay, who is able to do all things infinitely beyond what we can ask, or even conceive.' 'His power and goodness (says Chandler) being infinite, and as far above our thoughts as the heavens are above the earth.' Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 9.

— κατὰ τὴν δύν. τὴν ἐνεργ. ἐν ἡμῖν.] Meaning, 'agreeably to that powerful influence of the Spirit which now worketh in us.' See i. 19, 20.

— ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.] This is very emphatic, intimating that 'it is through Him alone we are to offer up all prayers and praises,' Heb. xiii. 15; 'all intercourse (to use the words of Bp. Sanderson) between heaven and earth, God and man, being through Him. So that if any grace come from God to us, it is through Him; if any glory come from us to God, it is through Him.' See more in Dr. Barrow, cited by D'Oyly and Mant.

— εἰς πάσας τὰς γενεὰς τοῦ αἰῶνος τῶν αἰώνων.] An exceedingly strong expression, formed by two condensed into one; of which the import is, 'through the succession of all generations, unto the latest period of eternity.'

IV. Having concluded the doctrinal and argumentative part of the Epistle,—showing God's gracious design in the Gospel dispensation, and the benefits and privileges that appertain to all the faithful in Christ Jesus; as also the manner of his calling the Gentiles into his Church, and how precious was the blessing,—the Apostle now subjoins (agreeably to his custom) various practical directions, and, with affectionate earnestness, exhorts them to walk, i.e. live, worthy of their high calling. And first he presses upon them the duties of unanimity and concord, from the consideration of their being all alike members of the same body, of which Christ is the mystical Head.

1—16. The Apostle proceeds to exhort them to newness of life; and finally, vv. 17—24, he cautions them against the corrupt practices and evil passions so common among the heathens, pressing them to the performance of those duties and virtues suitable to their Christian profession.

1. οὖν, &c.] 'accordingly such being your high privileges and hopes.' Ὁ δέσμιος ἐν Κυρίῳ; lit. 'the person who is a prisoner,' &c.; for that is the force of the Article, which has here the use κατ' ἐξοχήν. Ἐν Κυρίῳ, is for διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, 'in the Lord's cause.'

— περιπατῆσαι.] Denoting habitual life and practice. Κλήσεως. Namely, the state to which they were called and admitted by the grace of God; i. e. that of the Gospel; meaning that they should walk worthy of the privileges it bestows, and suitably to the duties it enjoins. So Phil. i. 27, ἀξίως τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ πολιτεύεσθε. Compare also 1 Thess. ii. 12. Col. i. 10.

2. The Apostle now, with admirable address, slides into the mention of those duties in which the Ephesians, it seems, were most deficient.

— ταπεινοφροσύνης καὶ πρᾳότητος.] The two terms are not synonymous; but the latter virtue is connected with the former, as usually resulting from it. In ἀνεχόμενοι, for ἀνεχομένους, there is a slight anacoluthon. Ἀνεχ. ἀλλ., 'bearing with each other's provocations.' Ἐν ἀγάπῃ, 'in the exercise of charity.' Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 7.

3. τὴν ἑνότητα τοῦ Πνεύμ.] Πνεῦμα must not here be lowered (with many recent Commentators) to the sense 'mind;' the sense being this: 'Anxiously striving after the unity so suitable and agreeable to the dictates of the Holy Spirit,' whose influence they possessed. Ἐν τῷ συνδ. τῆς εἰρήνης, i. e. 'by the cultivation of that peaceable spirit, which binds all together.' So Ovid, Metam. i. 25, cited by Wetstein: 'Dissociata locis concordi pace ligavit.'

4. ἓν σῶμα κ. ἓν Π.] Meaning, 'There is one body [of you all, namely, the Church] and one Spirit [by whose gifts and graces (as by one life or soul) it is animated; even the Holy Spirit];' see 1 Cor. xii. 11. 13. The word εἷς, repeated throughout this whole passage, signifies, 'one and d 1 Cor. 8, 4, 6. & 12. 5. σεως ὑμῶν· [d] εἷς Κύριος, μία πίστις, ἓν βάπτισμα· [e] εἷς 5, 6 e Mal. 2. 10. 1 Cor. 12. 6. Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ πάντων, ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων καὶ διὰ πάντων καὶ f Rom. 12. 3, 6. 1 Cor. 12. 11. ἐν πᾶσιν ὑμῖν. [f] Ἑνὶ δὲ ἑκάστῳ ἡμῶν ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις κατὰ 7

g Ps. 68. 18. Col. 2 15. τὸ μέτρον τῆς δωρεᾶς τοῦ Χριστοῦ.—[g] Διὸ λέγει· Ἀναβὰς 8 εἰς ὕψος ᾐχμαλώτευσεν αἰχμαλωσίαν, καὶ ἔδωκε h John 3. 13. & 6. 62. δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. [h] Τὸ δὲ, ἀνέβη, τί ἐστιν, εἰ 9

the same.' For the Apostle is here enumerating every thing in the religion wherein there is an ἑνότης.

— καθὼς καὶ ἐκλήθητε, &c.] Render, 'even as also ye were called [by one Spirit] unto one hope of your calling;' i. e. to one hope of the blessings resulting from that calling. Ἐν μιᾷ ἐλπ., for εἰς μίαν ἐλπίδα, 'to one common hope.'

5. εἷς Κύριος.] Meaning, 'one and the same Lord Jesus Christ, your common Saviour.' Μία πίστις, 'one and the same faith,' as containing one settled and fixed substance of truth, such as was taught by the Apostles, and soon afterwards embodied in the Apostles' Creed, and formed the fundamental principles of belief, necessary to be professed in order to receive Christian baptism. Hence baptism is immediately subjoined. Finally, by ἓν βάπτισμα it is intimated that all Christians, however they may differ in opinion, are initiated into the Christian society by the same ceremony, and with the same form of expression.

With the argument to unity here employed (similar to that of Mal. ii. 10) I would compare the following one in Aristid. t. ii. p. 331, Ed. Canter.: ὑμεῖς τοινῦν, ὥσπερ ἐλέγχους ταύτας κατὰ τῆς στασέως τὰς ἐπωνυμίας ποιούμενοι, κοινὰ μὲν τὰ βουλευτήρια, κοινοὺς δὲ νεὼς καὶ τοὺς ἀγῶνας, κοινὰ δὲ πάνθ', ὡς εἰπεῖν, τὰ μέγιστα προσειρήκατε.

6. ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων.] In answer to those who would draw these words to exclude Christ from being GOD, we deny not that God the Father is one God over all, or that there is one who is both one God and the Father; only we add, that there is also one, who is one God of the same essence, and the Son, and hath his principality in all things; and so also say we of the Holy Spirit; and that as the one Lord and one Spirit here do not exclude the Father from being both Lord and Spirit, so neither doth the one God and Father exclude the Son or Holy Spirit from being God, but only from being God the Father. (Whitby.) Διὰ πάντων, i. e. 'filling all things with His presence, and overruling them by His Providence.' (Chandler.)

7. ἑνὶ δὲ—δωρ. τοῦ Χρ.] This is intended to encounter an objection,—namely, that the gifts of the Holy Spirit are different in different persons; which might occasion envy, and be unfavourable to unity. The sense is: '[It is true that these gifts are not the same in all;] but then to each one of us is given the gracious aid of the Spirit according to the measure [not of faith, or natural endowments, but] of the gift of Christ;' i. e. in such measure and proportion as Christ thinks fit to bestow. Being, therefore, freely bestowed, they ought to excite, not conceit and arrogance, but thankfulness to God for his 'unspeakable gift.'

8. The Apostle now proceeds to prove the gift of the Spirit to be from Christ, by an appeal to Ps. lxviii. 18. The argument is this: 'In the Scriptures some one is said to have ascended up into heaven, and from thence to have distributed gifts unto men. But since God himself cannot be said to have ascended unto heaven, inasmuch as He always is in heaven, and never descended from it, the Prophet must necessarily have had in mind some other person, who, after he had descended from heaven to earth, ascended from thence unto heaven. And he can be no other than Jesus the Messiah, whom we know to have descended from, and again ascended up to heaven.' At λέγει supply ἡ γραφή; a frequent ellipsis. The λέγει, however, does not necessarily imply a regular quotation; and the passage following is clearly not intended to be such; as appears from the change of the second person into the third. The only variation is, that for ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, the Sept. has ἔλαβες δόματα ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ. The ἀνθρώπῳ, however, agrees neither with the Hebrew nor the Greek of the Apostle, and yields no tolerable sense; and, in short, is corrupt. Some MSS. have ἀνθρώποις, which is doubtless the right reading. But the error rests chiefly in the ἐν, for which I would read ἐπ', answering to the for of our English Version. Now ἐν and ἐπ' are perpetually interchanged. Thus the only variation will be in the use of ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις for ἔλαβες δ. τοῖς ἀνθρώποις (for so, I apprehend, the Apostle read in the Sept.); and that is no discrepancy, the meaning being the very same; for the sense of the Hebr. לקחת מתנות באדם and ἔλαβες δ. ἐπ' ἀνθ. can be no other than 'thou hast received gifts on account of men;' i. e. to give to men. And the Apostle only says ἔδωκε to make the sense plainer; as also does the Chaldee Paraphrast, and the Syriac and Arabic Translators.

The application made of this passage by the Apostle to the Messiah was, no doubt, according to the mystical interpretation of the Jews themselves, and not, as many suppose, by a mere accommodation.

— ἀναβάς.] Render, 'having ascended up on high;' i. e., as applied to Christ, into heaven; see Dr. P. Smith's Script. Test. vol. ii. p. 121. In ᾐχμ. αἰχμαλ. we have a bold expression, probably signifying (as appears from Judges v. 12) 'he led captive those who had led others captive;' i. e. obtained a glorious triumph over his enemies; comp. Col. ii. 15. The enemies of Christ, meant in the Apostle's application, must be all the enemies of the Gospel, both men and demons, who had so zealously striven to put it down; including also (as many Expositors suppose) all things adverse to its progress,—as sin, the world, and death, which are often personified.

9. τί ἐστιν] 'what does it infer or imply?' The Apostle's argument is, that if Christ ascended into heaven, he must have first descended and been on earth. For the original abode in heaven μὴ ὅτι καὶ κατέβη [πρῶτον] εἰς τὰ κατώτερα [μέρη] τῆς γῆς ;

10 [i] Ὁ καταβὰς αὐτός ἐστι καὶ ὁ ἀναβὰς ὑπεράνω πάντων i Acts 2. 33.
11 τῶν οὐρανῶν, ἵνα πληρώσῃ τὰ πάντα.—[k] Καὶ αὐτὸς ἔδωκε, k Acts 21. 8. Rom. 12. 7.
τοὺς μὲν ἀποστόλους, τοὺς δὲ προφήτας, τοὺς δὲ εὐαγ- 1 Cor. 12. 28. 2 Tim. 4. 5.
12 γελιστὰς, τοὺς δὲ ποιμένας καὶ διδασκάλους, [l] πρὸς τὸν l Rom. 12. 5. 1 Cor. 12. 27.
καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων εἰς ἔργον διακονίας, εἰς οἰκοδομὴν supra 1. 23. & 5. 23. Col. 1. 24.

of the Messiah was not doubted even by the Jews themselves. The expression τὰ κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς was, by many of the old Expositors, taken of Hell. That interpretation, however, has been overturned by Bp. Pearson on the Creed, p. 229, and by some other of our great Divines. Many eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, understand it of the grave, agreeably to the frequent use of the expression in the Old Test. Since, however, that sense is not very suitable to the Apostle's argument, the best Expositors are now generally agreed, that τὰ κατ. μέρη τῆς γῆς means 'the lower regions,' namely, of the earth ; τῆς γῆς being a Genitive of explanation. Thus the expression καταβὰς εἰς τὰ κατώτ. μέρη τῆς γῆς will refer, not to Christ's descent into the grave, but to his descent to earth, and incarnation on earth, terminating with his descent into the grave.

The words πρῶτον and μέρη are, in many of the best MSS., Versions, and Fathers, not found ; and have been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz.

10. ὁ καταβὰς—ὁ ἀναβάς.] Meaning, 'Now he who thus descended, is the same as he who [at his resurrection] ascended far above all the heavens ;' i. e. to the highest heaven ; compare Heb. vii. 26. Psalm viii. 1. cviii. 4, 5. In ἵνα πληρ. τὰ π. the neuter is for the masculine ; and the sense is, 'that thus he might fill all persons (i. e. all believers) with the gifts and graces necessary for them ;' see i. 23, and iii. 19. The reason why the neuter was employed in preference to the masculine, seems to have been this, that the Apostle regarded the persons in question as members (μέρη) of the same mystical body of Christ, the Church. So at ver. 12, εἰς οἰκοδομὴν τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χ. Also ver. 16, τὸ σῶμα—ἐν μέτρῳ ἑνὸς ἑκάστου μέρους.

11. The Apostle now illustrates and exemplifies this πλήρωμα, in its various degrees ; and shows that in all cases the gifts were given [not to excite self-conceit, but] πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων. Now as we have here only an exemplification of the variety of spiritual gifts, we must not expect any such exact detail, as that in 1 Cor. xii. 8—11, 28—30. The οἱ πνευματικοὶ, however, are evidently placed in the order of dignity, as in 1 Cor. xii. 29, 30, to which last passage this bears a strong affinity. And the προφ. and διδάσκαλοι here seem exactly to correspond to the προφ. and διδ. there. With respect to the εὐαγγ., however, much difference of opinion exists. In the only two other passages where the word occurs in the New Test. (Acts xxi. 8, and 2 Tim. iv. 5) it simply denotes a preacher of the Gospel. But here some more special sense is evidently meant. Now we learn from Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. v. 9, and other writers cited by Suicer, that, in the Apostolical Church, εὐαγγ. was the appellation given to those preachers who aided the labours of the Apostles (and we may suppose also the προφῆται or principal Teachers of 1 Cor. xii.), not by taking charge of any particular Church, but by acting as itinerant preachers and teachers, wherever their labours might be needed, and thus building on a foundation previously laid by the Apostles or prophets. This is the account which the ancients give of the duties of the εὐαγγελισταί. But when we consider what were the duties of the Seven εὐαγγελισταὶ only a few years before, of whom Philip formed one (Acts xxi. 8), we can scarcely doubt, that to those above mentioned may be added that of evangelizing the heathen,—in fact, discharging the kind of duty performed by the Missionaries of modern times. To these εὐαγγελισταὶ there is, I apprehend, nothing corresponding in the enumeration at 1 Cor. xii. Or perhaps the διδάσκαλοι there may include the εὐαγγ. ; for it would seem that the διδάσκαλοι here are not the same with those in 1 Cor., and that the term is here closely conjoined with ποιμένες, to show that it was not, properly speaking, a separate order ; though the ποιμένες appear to have been superior in dignity to the διδάσκαλοι, and are supposed to have been the same with the κυβερνήσεις at 1 Cor. xii. 28 (see, however, the Note there), or the οἱ προϊστάμενοι at Rom. xii. 8, and the ἐπίσκοποι of Acts xx. 28. It is thought that the ποιμένες were those who had the more important pastoral charges in cities and large towns ; the διδάσκαλοι, the smaller ones ; see Theodoret. Thus it would happen, that the city ποιμένες would have first an influence with, and then an authority over, the country Pastors. Hence gradually their offices would vary and become distinct ; the ποιμ. at first discharging all the ordinary pastoral duties, and afterwards, when they became regarded as superintendents,—and were then styled ἐπίσκοποι,—they either discharged them, or not, according to circumstances.

The ἔδωκε here corresponds to the ἔθετο of 1 Cor. xii. 28 ; but the former is here used with reference to the ἔδωκε δόματα at ver. 8.

12. The Apostle now points out the sole intent of God in bestowing these gifts, and to which they, therefore, ought to be made subservient.

— πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν τ. ἁ.] 'for the complete edification and perfection of Christians, by fully instructing them in the Gospel.' So καταρτίζεσθαι is used at 2 Cor. xiii. 11 ; on which term see Gal. vi. 1. Grotius and Koppe remark, that in πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν—διακονίας there is a transposition, for εἰς ἔργον διακ. πρὸς τὸν κατ. τῶν ἁγ. (as in the Æthiopic Version), and that for εἰς τὸ διακονεῖν τοῖς ἁγίοις πρὸς τὸ καταρτίζειν [αὐτοὺς], 'to instruct them in all the knowledge they themselves possessed.' So Luke vi. 40, κατηρτισμένος δὲ πᾶς (scil. διδάσκαλος) ἔσται ὡς διδάσκαλος. The next words, εἰς οἰκοδ. τ. σώμ. τοῦ Χ. are another mode of expressing the same sense ; namely, 'for completing the building of the edifice of the τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ· μέχρι καταντήσωμεν οἱ πάντες 13

εἰς τὴν ἑνότητα τῆς πίστεως καὶ τῆς ἐπιγνώσεως τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, εἰς ἄνδρα τέλειον, εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας τοῦ πληm Isa. 28. 9. Matt. 11. 7. ρώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ· [m] ἵνα μηκέτι ὦμεν νήπιοι, κλυδωνι- 14 1 Cor. 14. 20. Heb. 13. 9. ζόμενοι καὶ περιφερόμενοι παντὶ ἀνέμῳ τῆς διδασκαλίας, ἐν τῇ κυβείᾳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἐν πανουργίᾳ πρὸς τὴν μεθοδείαν n Supra 1. 22 τῆς πλάνης· [n] ἀληθεύοντες δὲ ἐν ἀγάπῃ αὐξήσωμεν εἰς αὐτὸν 15 & 5. 23. Col. 1. 18. τὰ πάντα, ὅς ἐστιν ἡ κεφαλὴ, ὁ Χριστός· [o] ἐξ οὗ πᾶν τὸ 16 o Rom. 12. 5. 1 Cor. 12. 27. Col. 2. 19. σῶμα συναρμολογούμενον καὶ συμβιβαζόμενον, διὰ πάσης ἁφῆς τῆς ἐπιχορηγίας κατ' ἐνέργειαν, ἐν μέτρῳ ἑνὸς ἑκάστου μέρους, τὴν αὔξησιν τοῦ σώματος ποιεῖται εἰς οἰκοδομὴν ἑαυτοῦ ἐν ἀγάπῃ.

Church of Christ;' i. e. by thoroughly edifying and instructing its members.

13. μέχρι καταντ. οἱ πάντες, &c.] Οἱ πάντες, 'we all,' viz. who form the body of the Church. On the sense of καταντ. see Note on Acts vi. 1. At μέχρι καταντ. we may supply, from the preceding, καταρτίζοντες καὶ οἰκοδομοῦντες. At τῆς ἐπιγν. τ. Υ. τ. Θ. repeat τὴν ἑνότ. The sense of ἑνότ.—τῆς ἐπιγν. seems to be, 'agreement in doctrine and views respecting salvation by the Son of God.' The words following, εἰς μέτρον—τοῦ Χρ., are further explanatory of what was expressed in τὸν καταρτισμὸν just before. Εἰς ἄνδρα τέλ., 'unto a complete man;' i. e. unto complete manhood. So τέλειος occurs in this sense at Heb. v. 14. 1 Cor. xiv. 20. Phil. iii. 15. The words εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας are, I conceive, of the same sense with ἄνδρα τέλ., and are only used to introduce the τοῦ πληρ. τοῦ Χρ.; for ἡλικ. here does not signify stature, but full age, as John ix. 21. That ἡλικ. may mean manhood, is proved by the various examples adduced by the Commentators. Μέτρον is here used as in a passage of Philostr., τὸ μέτρον τῆς ἡλικίας—γήρως ἀρχὴ, and Bion, Od. ii. 13, ἦν δ' ἀνέρος ἐς μέτρον ἔλθῃς, and Theocr. Idyll. xiii. 15. Τοῦ πληρ. τ. Χρ. Render, 'of that wisdom and holiness which becomes the fulness of Christ,' meaning his Church, as at i. 23, or his doctrine, as v. 20. Dr. Pye Smith, indeed, thinks that the sense of πλήρωμα here may best be represented by perfection, or abundance.

14. ἵνα μηκέτι, &c.] The connexion is well traced by Chrysostom and Koppe as follows: 'All this was done, these various orders were instituted by Christ, for the perfecting of the saints (vv. 11—25), in order that thereby we should be no more,' &c. See the able Note of Whitby.

In νήπιοι the metaphor of the preceding verse is continued. By μηκέτι it is intimated that they whom he is addressing had been or were such. In κλυδωνιζόμενοι, περιφερόμενοι, and the terms following, we have metaphors taken from nautical affairs, occurring also at James i. 6 (on the same subject), and in Hebr. xiii. 9. Of κλυδωνίζεσθαι, in this metaphorical sense, several examples are found in the later writers. Thus Aristæn. i. 27 (cited by Wetstein), μηδὲν διανύων, μόνον δὲ κλυδωνιζόμενος ἐκ τοῦ πόθου, ἔνθα ἄνεμος οὔτε μένειν οὔτε πλεῖν ἐᾷ. Josephus, Antiq. ix. 11. 3, ὁ δῆμος ταρασσόμενος καὶ κλυδωνιζόμενος. The same sentiment, with a similar metaphor, occurs in Philo Jud. 410, E., εἰσὶ γάρ τινες ἐνδοιασταὶ καὶ ἐπαμφοτερισταὶ πρὸς ἑκάτερον τοῖχον, ὥσπερ σκάφος ὑπ' ἐναντίων πνευμάτων διαφερόμενον, ἀποκλίνοντες, and Plut. de Aud. p. 28, D., μὴ παντὶ λόγῳ πλάγιον, ὥσπερ πνεύματι, παραδιδοὺς ἑαυτόν. In the term ἀνέμῳ, here associated with κλυδ. and περιφ., there is reference, not to the steady winds of some seas and latitudes, but to the changeable, yet violent, gusts of wind prevalent in the Mediterranean (see Acts xxvii. 14), and alluded to in the above passage of Aristænetus.

In κυβείᾳ the metaphor is one taken from playing at dice. Though that was not the only sense in which the word was used. It also denoted the loading of the dice, as practised by gamesters; and so, in a general way, intimated the trickery of gamesters and those who practised legerdemain. Thus, by the expression κυβείᾳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, is meant cunning sleight and trickery. Finally, ἐν πανουργίᾳ is added by way of explanation; and in τὴν μεθοδείαν τῆς πλάνης, signifying, 'with concerted or deliberate planning of deceit,' we have a further developement of the idea.

15. ἀληθεύοντες ἐν ἀγάπῃ.] This phrase has been variously interpreted. Considering that the words have reference to Christians in general, not ministers, the sense usually assigned to them, 'speaking the truth,' is manifestly inadmissible. Calvin and others well render, 'veritatem sectantes.' And so Bp. Sanderson and Dr. Chandler. The meaning, then, seems to be, that 'they should embrace and maintain the truths of the Gospel in the spirit of charity' (so fully described in 1 Cor. xiii.), so as to let no professed love of Christian truth militate against Christian charity.

Εἰς αὐτὸν, 'in respect to him;' as Rom. xi. 36. Eph. i. 5. Col. i. 20. At τὰ πάντα supply κατά.

16. ἐξ οὗ πᾶν, &c.] The Apostle here returns to the figurative representation at vv. 12, 13 (interrupted by the hortatory matter in vv. 13. 15); and, agreeably to the proper sense of καταρτ., employs the same image, derived from the human body, that he had before done at ii. 21; compare Col. ii. 19. The words may be thus 17 [p] Τοῦτο οὖν λέγω καὶ μαρτύρομαι ἐν Κυρίῳ, μηκέτι p Rom. 1. 9, 18, 21.

ὑμᾶς περιπατεῖν, καθὼς καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ ἔθνη περιπατεῖ, ἐν 1 Pet. 4. 3.
18 ματαιότητι τοῦ νοὸς αὐτῶν, [q] ἐσκοτισμένοι τῇ διανοίᾳ ὄντες, q Supra 2. 12.
ἀπηλλοτριωμένοι τῆς ζωῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ, διὰ τὴν ἄγνοιαν τὴν 1 Thess. 4. 5.
οὖσαν ἐν αὐτοῖς διὰ τὴν πώρωσιν τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν·
19 [r] οἵτινες ἀπηλγηκότες, ἑαυτοὺς παρέδωκαν τῇ ἀσελγείᾳ εἰς r Rom. 1. 24, 26.
20 ἐργασίαν ἀκαθαρσίας πάσης ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ. Ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐχ construed, πᾶν τὸ σῶμα τὴν αὔξησιν τοῦ σώματος ποιεῖται, equivalent to τὸ σῶμα τὴν αὔξ. αὐτοῦ π., by an idiom derived, it is said, from the Hebrew, but, in reality, common to the inartificial style in all languages. Κατ' ἐνέργειαν, 'by the operation or working of each individual part or member, according to the measure [of its power].' The whole body (i. e. the Church) is said to be connected together, by each joint, or member, contributing in common its own peculiar advantage. The general sense is, that as the body is compacted, and, through the common assistance rendered by each of the various joints, ligaments, tendons, and arteries, the whole thrives, and gradually grows up to maturity; so the body of Christ (his Church), being held together by each member doing his utmost for the good of the whole, grows into a complete spiritual body fit for the service of Christ; and thus is upheld by the mutual support and love of the members, being preserved by the authority and care of the Head, Christ. On this whole subject, see an able Concio ad Clerum on the present text by Bp. Sanderson.

17. Having exhorted them to walk worthy of their vocation, and especially to cultivate unity among themselves, as being all members of one body, the Church of Christ, the Apostle proceeds to caution them against the corruptions of the Gentiles, and to inculcate other duties and virtues suitable to their Christian profession.

— τοῦτο λέγω καὶ μαρτύρομαι.] A very energetic expression, denoting 'This I charge and earnestly entreat.' Ἐν Κυρίῳ, 'by the Lord,' i. e. by the love you bear and the duty you owe to him. Τὰ λοιπὰ ἔθνη, 'the rest of (i. e. the unconverted) the Gentiles.'

— ἐν ματαιότητι τοῦ νοὸς α.] Render, 'in vanity of mind,' i. e. in modes of thinking and feeling that are vain. So Rom. i. 28, παρέδωκεν αὐτοὺς εἰς ἀδόκιμον νοῦν, where see Note. On the exact sense, however, of ματ. Expositors are not agreed; some explaining it of folly, or error of opinion and reasoning; others, of error in practice; improbity; and others, again, of idolatry. The first interpretation deserves the preference; but the one last mentioned may be included. The present passage may be best illustrated by a very similar one at Rom. i. 21, where it is said of the heathens ἐματαιώθησαν ἐν τοῖς διαλογισμοῖς αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐσκοτίσθη ἡ ἀσύνετος αὐτῶν καρδία, i. e. νοῦς. Folly of imagination and reasoning led to idolatry, and that to immorality; as, on the other hand, immorality darkened the understanding and perverted the judgment. A subject on which Bp. Warburton has ably treated in various parts of his works.

18. In this verse the Apostle illustrates the nature, and intimates the cause of this mental foolishness.

— ἐσκοτισμένοι.] Lit., 'befooled.' See Note on Rom. i. 21. Similar expressions occur in Dionys. Hal. de Thuc. 83, ἡ σκοτίζουσα τὴν διάνοιαν ὄχλησις. Josephus, Antiq. ix. 4. 3, τὴν διάνοιαν ἐπεσκοτισμένοι, and Bell. v. 8. 2, ἐπεσκότει αὐτῶν ταῖς γνώμαις διὰ τὰς παρανομίας ὁ Θεός.

— ἀπηλλοτριωμένοι.] This may be considered as if an adjective (so the Pesch. Syr. has 'alieni'); and we may render, 'alienate from;' as Milton, Paradise Lost, 'O alienate from God.' Τῆς ζωῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ, for τῆς κατὰ Θεὸν ζωῆς, 'such a life as is according to the will of God.' And as the will of God is our sanctification (1 Thess. iv. 3), so it denotes, as Theodoret explains, τὴν ἐν ἀρετῇ ζωήν.

— διὰ τὴν ἄγνοιαν, &c.] These words suggest the cause of their blindness and aversion to religion. Here διὰ τὴν πώρωσιν is not to be regarded, with some, merely as synonymous with διὰ τὴν ἄγνοιαν; nor ought it, with others, to be separated from it, but closely connected with it, as tracing the origin thereof. Render, 'because of the ignorance that is in them owing to the callousness of their hearts or consciences [and that produced by immorality].' There is here, as often from pathos, a slight confusion of the regular order in which the sentiment was meant to be understood. On πώρωσιν, see Note on Rom. xi. 7.

19. ἀπηλγηκότες.] This term has been variously interpreted, but generally taken in too limited a sense. The notion implied in it is very complex; but as the term seems to have been meant to be explanatory of πώρωσις, it may chiefly denote 'being past all feeling of remorse or shame,' insensible to the stings of conscience, callous to all sense of right and wrong. On this sense of ἀπὸ in composition (by which it denotes ceasing from the action expressed by the verb), see my Note, on the same use of ἀπαλγήσαντες, in Thucyd. ii. 61, fin. and ἀπολοφυράμενοι, ii. 46. The same idiom has place in ἀποκηδεύω, ἀποπονέω, ἀπομηνίω, ἀποκωκύω, ἀποπαύομαι, and ἀπερυθριάζω.

— ἑαυτοὺς παρέδωκαν τῇ ἀσελγείᾳ] 'abandoned themselves to all sorts of lasciviousness,' such as are described in Rom. i. 29, seqq. By a similar mode of expression it is said, Diod. Sic. l. xvii. 108, δοὺς ἑαυτὸν εἰς τρυφήν. Ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ is meant to further develope the idea in παρέδ. ἑαυτούς; q. d. 'not only gave themselves up to the perpetration of all vice, but with a greediness of sensuality never to be satisfied.' For here, as Chrysostom and Theophylact point out, πλεονεξία stands for ἀμετρία. Thus in Polybius, p. 1209 (Casaubon), μετριότης is opposed to πλεονεξία. So also Jerome explains it, 'an insatiable greediness for pleasure.'

20. ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐχ, &c.] Meaning, 'Ye have οὕτως ἐμάθετε τὸν Χριστόν· εἴγε αὐτὸν ἠκούσατε, καὶ ἐν 21

s Rom. 6. 6. supra 2. 2, 3. Col. 2. 11. & 3. 9, sq — αὐτῷ ἐδιδάχθητε, καθώς ἐστιν ἀλήθεια ἐν τῷ Ἰησοῦ· [s] ἀπο- 22
θέσθαι ὑμᾶς, κατὰ τὴν προτέραν ἀναστροφὴν, τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρωπον τὸν φθειρόμενον κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας τῆς ἀπάτης· t Rom 6. 4. & 12. 2. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Col. 3. 10. — [t] ἀνανεοῦσθαι δὲ τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν, καὶ ἐνδύσασθαι 23 τὸν καινὸν ἄνθρωπον τὸν κατὰ Θεὸν κτισθέντα ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ 24 καὶ ὁσιότητι τῆς ἀληθείας.
u Zach. 8. 16. Rom. 12. 5. — [u] Διὸ ἀποθέμενοι τὸ ψεῦδος, λαλεῖτε ἀλήθειαν ἕκα- 25 στος μετὰ τοῦ πλησίον αὐτοῦ· ὅτι ἐσμὲν ἀλλήλων x Ps. 4. 4. Deut. 24. 15. — μέλη. [x] Ὀργίζεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε· ὁ ἥλιος μὴ 26 not so [imperfectly] learned the doctrine of Christ [as to practise such things].'

21. εἴγε.] Most Commentators take εἴγε in the sense si modo, which is very agreeable to what follows in this verse. But thus there will be a considerable difficulty as to the construction of ἀποθέσθαι at the beginning of the next verse, which cannot, without great harshness, be supposed to depend upon λέγω καὶ μαρτύρομαι at ver. 17. It is better to take εἴγε (with the best Commentators for the last century) in the sense inasmuch as; which occurs also at iii. 12. By αὐτὸν and αὐτῷ we are to understand the doctrine of Christ, as corresponding to Χρ. in the preceding verse. Though the Apostle does not express that they had been taught by him, yet he intimates it in the words following, καθώς ἐστιν ἀλήθεια ἐν τῷ Ἰ., being very suitable to the instruction of one who was taught by personal revelation from Jesus Christ (see Gal. i. 12, and the Note), and who therefore must be supposed to know fully the pure doctrine of the Gospel.

22. ἀποθέσθαι ὑμᾶς.] q. d. '[You have been [I say] taught] that you should put off.'

— κατὰ τὴν προτέραν ἀναστροφήν.] These words yield no suitable sense, if we take them (with almost all Commentators) as forming an independent clause. They are, as Grotius and Vorstius rightly point out, closely connected with the words following; being further explanatory of τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρωπον; meaning, 'him who is in his former sinful lusts.' Such, too, is the view adopted by Koppe, who takes the construction to be, τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρωπον τὸν κατὰ τὴν προτ. ἀναστρ., 'the old man, or disposition and manner in which ye formerly lived.' Τὸν φθειρόμενον. This is added, from ἀναστρ. being a term of middle signification, though here evidently used in a bad sense. Render, 'which was corrupt,' i. e. become corrupt. Thus κατὰ τὰς ἐπ. will be for διὰ τῶν ἐπ., 'through the influence of deceitful lusts;' τῆς ἀπάτης being for ἀπατήλας. There is here a reference to that deceit, which the sensual appetites practise upon the understanding, by the gratification of those lusts, which delude men by vain appearances and fallacious hopes, always ending in disappointment and shame; and pervert them into the belief that they are harmless, notwithstanding they will be their ruin in this world, and their perdition in the next. On ὁ παλαιὸς and ὁ καινὸς ἄνθρ., see Notes on Rom. xii. 2. vi. 4.

23. τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοὸς ὑ.] Here we may suppose, with Doddridge, that νοῦς stands for the whole soul, and πνεῦμα for its intellectual and leading faculty, on which the Spirit of God might chiefly operate; yet not exclusive of a certain influence on the inferior powers. And so the expression seems to have been understood by Hooker, Eccles. Pol., l. i. § 7, who there speaks of 'the Divine power of the soul.' Thus πνεῦμα may here be referred to that division in Bp. Middleton's classification of the senses of πνεῦμα, in which are designated, not the influences of the Holy Spirit, but the effects of those influences.

24. κατὰ Θεόν.] Render, 'in conformity to the will of God.' Κτισθέντα. On this term see Note at ii. 15, and iii. 9. The Genitive substantive ἀληθείας stands for the adjective ἀληθεῖ, and is to be understood of both the foregoing substantives.

25. The Apostle now proceeds to specify some of those evil habits and propensities, which are especially opposed to that state of renewal and sanctification just inculcated; and he places foremost a vice to which the corrupt nature of man is peculiarly prone—falsehood of every kind.

— ἀποθέμενοι τὸ ψεῦδος.] So Lucian, Vit. i. p. 370 (Hemst.), ἀποθοῦ τὸ ψεῦδος. The Article is here used, as often with abstract nouns, especially those denoting virtues and vices. Under the term ψεῦδος is comprehended deceit and fraud of every kind, as is clear from the reason subjoined,—'for we are mutually members [of one and the same body], [and, as such, are bound to help each other].' Whereas deceit of every kind promotes the contrary; and, by destroying confidence, tends to unloose the bands of society. See Hyperius. Accordingly, truth is well termed by Pindar (in a fragment ap. Stob. Serm. 59, p. 230, Ed. Wechel.) 'the beginning of virtue, and the queen of virtues.' And so Pythagoras used to say that 'the two great duties of man, in imitation of the Deity, were τὸ ἀληθεύειν and τὸ εὐεργετεῖν.'

26. ὀργίζεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε.] Many take this interrogatively; q. d. 'Are ye angry, and sin not? [impossible.] However (καὶ), let not,' &c. But this is doing violence to the construction. Neither, indeed, is it necessary to resort to so harsh a method of explanation, for the laudable purpose in view—that of removing an objection—since, from the air of the sentence, and that of the context (which is all prohibitory) it is sufficiently evident that here we have not a command to be angry, but merely an implied concession, accompanied with a caution to beware of sinning by that concession. Thus Alt and Winer reckon this among the the examples of Imperatives permissive. The words are, indeed, 27 ἐπιδυέτω ἐπὶ τῷ παροργισμῷ ὑμῶν· [y] μηδὲ δίδοτε τόπον y James 4. 7. 1 Pet. 5. 9.

28 τῷ Διαβόλῳ. [z] Ὁ κλέπτων μηκέτι κλεπτέτω, μᾶλλον δὲ z Acts 20. 34.
κοπιάτω ἐργαζόμενος τὸ ἀγαθὸν ταῖς χερσὶν, ἵνα ἔχῃ μετα- a Matt. 12. 36.
29 διδόναι τῷ χρείαν ἔχοντι. [a] Πᾶς λόγος σαπρὸς ἐκ τοῦ infra 5. 3, 4. Col. 4. 6. στόματος ὑμῶν μὴ ἐκπορευέσθω· ἀλλ' εἴ τις ἀγαθὸς πρὸς Eccl. 10. 12. Ecclus 21. 16.

equivalent to οὕτως ὀργ. ὥστε μὴ ἁμαρτάνειν [ἐν αὐτῷ]: the Imperative being only injunctive as regards the regulation of anger. And here we have an instance of the sense of a term being qualified by some words following, with which it is closely connected; as in Eurip. Suppl. 557, γνόντας οὖν χρεὼν τάδε, 'Αδικουμένους τε μετρία, μὴ θυμῷ φέρειν, 'Αδικεῖν τε τοιαῦθ', οἷα μὴ βλάψαι πόλιν· where see Markland. Thus, then, the sense here intended will be nearly the same with that expressed in Joseph. Bell. ii. 8. 4, where the Essenes are spoken of as ὀργῆς ταμίαι δίκαιοι (i. e. just regulators of anger, so as not to let it exceed due bounds), θυμοῦ καθεκτικοί. The words are taken from Ps. iv. 4; yet there is no little difficulty connected with them in that place. The word רגזו is rendered 'contremiscite,' 'stand in awe,' in both our Versions. How, then, are we to account for ὀργίζεσθε? It is not true that רגז never has the signification of ὀργίζεσθαι; for it has it in Prov. xxix. 9. Ezek. xvi. 42. Such a signification, however, is inapplicable here. Schleusner, indeed, would have the term here taken for metu percelli, perterreri, as the word is used generally of any vehement commotion of the mind; and he refers to 2 Kings xix. 7. But that is a very insufficient proof; nor is the credit of the Sept. Translators to be saved by so harsh a mode of interpretation. It would seem that they mistook the force of the word in this passage, and assigned a sense which they had often done elsewhere, though it has no place here. It is plain that the credit of the Apostle is not at all concerned; for he only applies the words to his own purpose, which does not necessarily imply approbation. Besides, the sense in question, though not a good one, is not absurd. Whereas, if we adopt the sense of ὀργ. proposed by Schleusner, it will follow that the Apostle mistook the true sense of the Sept., and consequently might have mistaken that of the Hebrew.

— ὁ ἥλιος μὴ ἐπιδυέτω ἐπὶ τῷ π. ὑ.] An adagial form of expression, signifying that we should not extend an action beyond the day. So Deut. xxiv. 15, 'Thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it (namely, unpaid).' Thus Plutarch tells us it was a maxim of the Pythagoreans, when hurried into anger and abuse, to shake hands and make up the difference before sunset. And the same writer, in his work de Educ. § 18, gives the admonition, μάλιστα μὲν εὐκόλως φέρειν τὰς ἁμαρτίας· εἰ δὲ μή γε, προσορμισθέντας, ταχέως ἀποφλεγμῆναι.—μᾶλλον γὰρ ὀξύθυμον, ἢ βαρύθυμον.

From the Apostle's language, then, it is plain that he considered a sudden feeling of resentment, in a Christian, as excusable, but not settled hatred. In which view I would compare what Tacitus says, Agric. 22, 'apud quosdam acerbior in conviciis narrabatur—cæterum ex iracundiâ nihil supererat; honestius putabat offendere, quam odisse.'

27. μηδὲ δίδ. τόπ. τ. Δ.] Many recent Commentators take τῷ Διαβ. to mean 'the adversary.' Such a sense, however, is at once frigid and unsuitable, and the only true interpretation is that of the ancient and most modern Expositors, 'the Devil:' a use of the word found (and always with the Article) in 2 Tim. ii. 26. Heb. ii. 14. It is also (as Koppe admits) supported by the constant tenour of Scripture, which inculcates the existence of a Being who, by himself and his agents, tempts men to sin, and especially makes his attacks when any of the violent passions are put in motion.

28. ὁ κλέπτων.] Theft was then very prevalent among the heathens, and in some countries is said to have been tolerated by the law. See, however, Recens. Synop. At any rate, here the Apostle means only such a sort of pilfering as was practised by necessitous, because idle persons. Thus the Apostle enjoins industry as the best preservative from this sin, since then there would be no temptation to commit it. The construction and exact sense of κοπιάτω—χερσὶν would seem to be as follows: κοπ. ταῖς χερσὶν, ἐργ. τὸ ἀγαθὸν, 'let him labour with his hands [if need be], working at what is good.' i. e. some honest occupation. Some, indeed, take ἀγαθὸν to mean 'a livelihood.' But of this signification there is no proof, and little probability; whereas the former one (supported by many of the best Expositors) is liable to no objection; for ἔργον may very well be supplied. Τὸ ἀγαθὸν is equivalent to ἀγαθόν τι ἔργον; meaning (as Theodoret explains) ἀγαθὴν ἐργασίαν, as opposed to the evil industry and pernicious activity of the thief, so graphically described by Cowper in his Task, b. iv. The above sense is also very suitable to the context; for, to use the words of Wolf, 'in eo erat Apostolus, ut ad virtutis studium cohortaretur.' Finally, it is confirmed by what is said in the next verse, where the discourse is enjoined to be 'what is good,' as here the occupation is to be what is honest and creditable.

29. πᾶς—μὴ] for μηδεὶς, by a Hebraism, as also πᾶς οὐ common in the New Test. See Note on Matt. x. 29. Σαπρὸς (like putidus in Latin) may mean (as most Interpreters explain it) obscene, but, from its own proper signification, and the λόγος ἀγαθὸς πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν, to which it is here opposed, the term must be also meant of any kind of bad and unprofitable discourses, as brawling, slandering, and the foolish talking and jesting mentioned at ver. 4. In fact, there is no great difference between the λόγος σαπρὸς here and the ῥῆμα ἀργὸν of Matt. xii. 36, where see Note.

— εἴ τις] for ὅστις, as often. 'Αγαθὸς πρὸς οἰκοδομήν. This may be rendered, 'adapted for edification.' So Pausan. l. vi. 26. 4, χώρα εἰς καρποὺς φέρειν ἀγαθή. And Arrian, Epict. ii. 15 (cited by Wetstein), opposes σαπρὸς λόγος to b Isa. 7. 13. & 63. 10. 2 Cor. 1. 22. & 5. 5. supra 1. 13, 14. c Col. 3. 8, & 19. d Matt. 6. 14. Col. 3. 12, 13.

οἰκοδομὴν τῆς χρείας, ἵνα δῷ χάριν τοῖς ἀκούουσι. [b] καὶ 30 μὴ λυπεῖτε τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐν ᾧ ἐσφραγίσθητε εἰς ἡμέραν ἀπολυτρώσεως. [c] Πᾶσα πικρία καὶ θυμὸς 31
καὶ ὀργὴ καὶ κραυγὴ καὶ βλασφημία ἀρθήτω ἀφ᾽ ὑμῶν, σὺν πάσῃ κακίᾳ· [d] γίνεσθε δὲ εἰς ἀλλήλους χρηστοὶ, εὔσπλαγ- 32 what is ὑγιὴς ἐς οἰκοδομὴν, probably with the present passage in mind.

With τῆς χρείας, just after, Expositors have been not a little perplexed. In some of the ancient Versions and MSS. it is omitted, while others have τῆς πίστεως; a manifest change to get rid of a difficulty: though that, and even the omission of the word, has been supported by eminent Critics, but in vain. Both external and internal evidence are strongly in favour of the common reading; which might be explained, with some, as put, per hypallagen, for πρὸς χρείαν τῆς οἰκοδομῆς, if we could conceive why the sense should have been so expressed in preference. But that is scarcely possible. Indeed thus the χρείας would be almost useless. Hence we may best, with Grotius and Wahl, take τῆς χρείας, by a frequent idiom, as a Genitive substantive put for its cognate adjective. So Erasmus and Vater well render, 'quâ sit opus,' and Casaubon, 'quoties opus est.' Hyperius, too, in like manner renders 'quo opus est.'

Thus, then, it is meant that 'what is said must not only be edifying in itself, but suitable to the occasion and the person.' So Plutarch (cited by Wetstein) says that Pericles prayed to the gods that no expression might fall from him πρὸς τὴν παρακειμένην χρείαν ἀνάρμοστον.

— ἵνα δῷ χάριν τοῖς ἀκούουσι.] The earlier modern Commentators explain, 'that he may minister grace (i. e. spiritual benefit) to the hearers.' Yet that sense of χάρις is, to say the least, doubtful. The meaning would rather seem to be that laid down by Theodoret, the Arabic and Æthiopic translators, Theophylact, Chrysostom, and the best Commentators for the last century, 'that it may minister what is acceptable to the hearers;' the expression being equivalent to χαρίεντα εἶναι. And so Col. iv. 6, λόγος ἐν χάριτι, for λόγος χαρίεις. This latter sense is far more agreeable to the context; for while the former would involve a needless repetition, this introduces a just and appropriate sentiment; the purpose of the Apostle being, it would seem, to illustrate the need just mentioned, by adverting to the purpose in view,—that the word uttered should find favour and acceptance with the hearers; for otherwise to utter it would be forbidden by the injunction of our Lord, Matt. vii. 6, 'Cast not your pearls before swine.' Finally, while the former sense is of very uncertain proof, the latter is supported by the usus loquendi. So, among many other passages adduced by the Commentators, Eurip. Suppl. 414, ὁ δ᾽ αὐτίκ᾽ ἡδὺς, καὶ διδοὺς πολλὴν χάριν, Ἐσαῦθις ἔβλαψ᾽, &c.

Thus, then, the injunction intended is that we should endeavour to render our conversation both profitable and acceptable to our hearers.

30. μὴ λυπεῖτε τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον.] This injunction seems given with a reference to the foregoing vices and all similar ones; containing a reason why they should abstain from them,—namely, because they would, by committing them, grieve the Holy Spirit, and cause him to depart from them. Similarly it is said in Hermas, Past. p. 210 (cited by Koppe), μὴ λύπει τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τὸ κατοικοῦν ἐν σοὶ, μή ποτε ἐντεύξηται τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ἀποστῇ ἀπὸ σοῦ.

— ἐν ᾧ.] Render, 'by or through whom.' Not whereby, as in our common Version, which was wrongly altered from the by whom of all the old English Versions. And this (as Bp. Middleton has shown) is required by the use of the Article. Of course this will prove the personality of the Holy Spirit. Many eminent Commentators, however, for the last century, take τὸ Πν. τ. ἅ. τ. Θ. as put for τὸ θεῖον, i. e. τὸν Θεόν. But why it should have been so written, they do not tell us. It would seem that this is an expression (perhaps occurring no where else) compounded of two forms of speaking, each very frequent, viz. τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, and τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον. Thus τοῦ Θεοῦ is omitted in some MSS., Versions, and Fathers, which at least shows the sense they put on the passage. That Πνεῦμα must be taken in the personal sense, is clear from the kindred passages of 2 Cor. i. 22, ὁ καὶ σφραγ. ἡμᾶς, καὶ δοὺς τὸν ἀῤῥαβῶνα τοῦ Πνεύματος, and Eph. i. 13, ἐν ᾧ (scil. Χριστῷ) πιστεύσαντες, ἐσφραγίσθητε τῷ Πνεύματι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῷ ἁγίῳ. Of course the passion of being grieved (which implies personality) is to be understood, as Whitby says, per anthropopathiam. On the sense of ἀπολ., see Note on Rom. viii. 23, and Eph. i. 14.

31. πικρία.] See Note on Rom. iii. 14. In the placing of this and the following words, the Apostle intended, I conceive, a sort of climax, proceeding, from acerbity of spirit and roughness of manner, to brawling and gross abuse. Or we may, with Hyperius, suppose the vices in question to form two classes, as he says, 'partim in occultis sita affectibus, partim erumpentia in apertum, et verbis expressa.'

How utterly unsuitable to the character of a Christian must be all brawling and clamour, we may imagine from the light in which it appeared, even to well-disposed Jews. So Joseph. Bell. ii. 8. 5, says of the Essenes, οὔτε κραυγή ποτε τὸν οἶκον (the common dining-hall) οὔτε θόρυβον μολύνει. It is well said by Chrysostom, that 'clamour is the foaming steed on which anger pursues its impetuous course: throw down the steed, and the rider will fall to the ground.'

— βλασφημία.] Meaning, as Bp. Taylor explains, 'all words that are injurious to God or man.'

— σὺν πάσῃ κακίᾳ.] Meaning, 'together with all other vices of the same class;' namely, violations of the principle inculcated in the next verse.

32. In this verse, as Hyperius observes, we have accumulated, by way of antithesis, the contrary virtues, which ought to succeed in the place of the foregoing vices.

χνοι, χαριζόμενοι ἑαυτοῖς, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἐν Χριστῷ a Matt. 5. 45, 48.
1 ἐχαρίσατο ὑμῖν. V. [a] Γίνεσθε οὖν μιμηταὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, Luke 6. 36. b John 13.
2 ὡς τέκνα ἀγαπητὰ, [b] καὶ περιπατεῖτε ἐν ἀγάπῃ, καθὼς 34. & 15. 12.
καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς, καὶ παρέδωκεν ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ 1 Pet. 3. 18. 1 John 3. 11, ἡμῶν προσφορὰν καὶ θυσίαν, τῷ Θεῷ εἰς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας. 23. & 4. 21. Lev. 1. 9. c Supra 4.
3 [c] Πορνεία δὲ καὶ πᾶσα ἀκαθαρσία, ἢ πλεονεξία, μηδὲ ὀνομα- 29. Gal. 5. 19.
4 ζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν, (καθὼς πρέπει ἁγίοις·) [d] καὶ αἰσχρότης, καὶ Col. 3. 5. d Supra 4. 29.

— χρηστοὶ, εὔσπλαγχνοι, &c.] These terms are not (as they are regarded by Koppe) synonymous; but the latter is the stronger term (see Note on 2 Cor. vi. 6, and Gal. v. 22). Render, 'gentle (or kind), compassionate, mutually forgiving.' The words following suggest the reason for this, where the Ephesians are enjoined to be as forgiving to others, as God had been to them, by graciously placing them, through the atoning merits of Christ, in a state of salvation. Compare Matt. xviii. 21—35.

V. 1. This verse is closely connected with the last of the preceding Chapter; q. d. 'Be ye, therefore [as being thus mercifully accepted], imitators, in this respect, of that God, who hath set you an example, which, as children beloved and favoured, you are bound to follow.' Children, it is presumed, will follow the example of their parents (compare Matt. v. 45—48); and children beloved are doubly bound to attend to their injunctions. In τέκνα ἀγαπητὰ, there seems an allusion to the υἱοθεσία and its benefits, on which see Rom. viii. 15, and compare 19 and 21, and ix. 11. Gal. iv. 5. Eph. i. 5.

2. περιπατ. ἐν ἀγάπῃ.] This is a more significant expression than ἀγαπᾶτε ἀλλήλους would have been, since it denotes the whole tenour of life. Καθὼς is used as at iv. 32, and carries with it οὕτως καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀλλήλους ἀγαπᾶτε. In the sacrificial terms προσφορὰν καὶ θυσίαν (as in θυσίαν καὶ προσφορὰν at Heb. x. 5), we need not, with some eminent Expositors, make the distinction between bloody and unbloody sacrifices, or sin-offerings and peace-offerings; but the two terms may be regarded as conjoined, in order to denote the completeness of the sacrifice. So in Ps. xxxix. 6, Sept. θυσίαν καὶ προσφορὰν οὐκ ἠθέλησας. Agreeably to these sacrificial terms we have εἰς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, an expression derived from the Jewish sacrifices, and denoting such as God would receive with approbation; see Gen. viii. 21. In εὐωδ. we have a Genitive of substantive put, by Hebraism, for its cognate adjective. See 2 Cor. ii. 14.

3. πορνεία δὲ, &c.] The Apostle here reverts to the immoralities which they had formerly been addicted to, and into which, by the evil communication of their heathen neighbours, they were still likely to fall. 'Ακαθαρσία has reference to those horrible abominations mentioned or alluded to at Rom. i.

On the sense of the term following, πλεονεξία, some difference of opinion exists. Most Commentators understand it in the common acceptation, of covetousness. This, however, not suiting well with πορνεία καὶ πᾶσα ἀκαθαρσία, many recent expositors take it to mean prostitution for lucre's sake, or getting money by acting as panders to the lust of others. But of such a signification no proof has been adduced; and, indeed, the sense is not a little forced and frigid. Again, some ancient, and many eminent modern Commentators, from Hyper., Estius, and Hammond downwards, explain it, 'greediness in the indulgence of the lewdness just mentioned.' An interpretation, however, liable to insuperable objections, which have been stated by Salmasius, Wolf, and Scott. The expression may be understood to denote an insatiable desire of, or intemperance, in even lawful carnal gratifications. So iv. 19, ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ. Nor is what is said in ver. 5 at variance with this view; for surely sensuality is as much idolatry as covetousness; see Phil. iii. 19, where of sensual worldlings it is said, 'whose god is their belly.' 'And as,' says Jortin, 'debauched persons are wholly intent on gratifying their sensual inclinations; they too, as well as the covetous, are represented as figurative idolaters, whose god is their belly.' But, after all, it may be doubted, whether the common interpretation be not preferable; and that for reasons which appear from the note on Col. iii. 5. And the passages are so entirely parallel, that whatever can be proved to be the sense there, must be received here; and as the former is more in detail, so it must regulate the interpretation of the latter.

This interpretation is by no means to be objected to on the score of novelty; since that St. Basil so took the expression is pretty certain. And such, since his time, was the view adopted by Bp. Sanderson, Dr. Doddridge, and Dr. A. Clarke.

To advert to the words following, μηδὲ ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑ., these have been somewhat differently interpreted. Many take the expression as equivalent to μὴ ἀκουέσθω, 'let them not be heard of.' Yet thus it is difficult to account for μηδὲ being used, where μὴ would, in that case, have been more suitable. The sense would rather seem to be, 'let not such vices and excesses be even named [much less practised] among you.' For, as Theophylact observes, λόγοι ὁδὸς πρὸς τὰ πράγματα. Or we may, with Hyper. and Bp. Sanderson and Scott, explain, 'let them not be named with allowance or extenuation; not be named without detestation.'

4. αἰσχρ. καὶ μωρολ. ἢ εὐτρ.] These terms seem meant to exemplify the λόγος σαπρὸς a little before, iv. 29. Αἰσχρ. denotes obscenity of speech; and μωρ. and εὐτρ. signify literally, 'foolish trifling, talking, and jesting,' but are here used, per ὑποκορισμὸν (a figure very frequent in the phraseology of antiquity; on which see my Note on Thucyd. iii. 82. 4), the former to denote what the Hebrew expresses by נבלה פה, 'the naughtiness of the mouth,' the stultiloquium of Plautus; the latter what the Greeks call βωμολοχία, scurrile joking (so Aristotle, Ethics, defines εὐτραπελία by πεπαιδευμένη ὕβρις), or rather, the double entendre, in which (as μωρολογία ἢ εὐτραπελία, τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκοντα· ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον

e 1 Cor. 6. 10. Gal. 5. 21. εὐχαριστία. [e] Τοῦτο γὰρ ‡ ἐστὲ γινώσκοντες, ὅτι πᾶς πόρ- 5
Col. 3. 5. Rev. 22. 15. νος, ἢ ἀκάθαρτος, ἢ πλεονέκτης,—ὅς ἐστιν εἰδωλολάτρης,— οὐκ ἔχει κληρονομίαν ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ.
f Matt. 24. 4. supra 2. 2. [f] Μηδεὶς ὑμᾶς ἀπατάτω κενοῖς λόγοις· διὰ ταῦτα γὰρ ἔρχε- 6
Col. 3. 6. 2 Thess. 2. 3. ται ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθείας. Μὴ 7
g Luke 16. 8. Col. 3. 7, 8. John 12. 36. οὖν γίνεσθε συμμέτοχοι αὐτῶν. [g] ἦτε γάρ ποτε σκότος, 8

Chandler says) 'indecency is couched in a witty turn, and is, by being thought ingenious, the more dangerously corrupting.' With these words we must repeat ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν, with a slight accommodation of sense; i. e. 'let none of these be heard of among you.' So 1 Cor. v. 1, πορνεία—ἥτις οὐδὲ ἐν ἔθνεσιν ὀνομάζεται. Τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκ. may be rendered, 'things which are not suitable [viz. to our holy calling, as children of God, members of Christ, and temples of the Holy Ghost].'

— ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον εὐχαριστία.] Supply ἔστω; meaning to say, 'let εὐχαριστία be practised among you [in society].' On the exact import, indeed, of this expression, εὐχαριστία, some difference of opinion exists. Many learned Expositors suppose it to be, 'polite and innocent pleasantry,' as opposed to scurrility. But (as Koppe admits) this sense of the word is not found in the New Test.; and, indeed, the sentiment itself would not be sufficiently weighty for an Apostle. And by rendering, with most Expositors, according to the usual acceptation of the word, 'giving of thanks,' we obtain a sense not a little forced and frigid, and such as quite destroys the paronomasia between εὐτραπελία and εὐχαριστία· which, had the Commentators perceived, they would rather have adopted the sense assigned by Hammond, 'edifying and instructive discourse;' a use of the word sufficiently justified by the paronomasia; for in that figure the usus loquendi is not strictly observed. A very similar paronomasia occurs at ver. 17, μὴ γίνεσθε ἄφρονες ἀλλὰ συνιέντες.

5. τοῦτο γὰρ ἐστὲ γινώσκ.] For ἐστὲ several Versions and Fathers have ἴστε, which is preferred by the recent Commentators, and has been edited by Griesbach and Scholz; but rashly; for in external evidence it is inferior to the common reading, Versions in such a case being of no weight, and Fathers but slender authority. Internal evidence, too, is quite against it; for the words are frequently confounded by the Scribes, and ἴστε is just such an emendation as would be likely to occur to the early Critics. The common reading, then, must be preferred. Indeed, γινώσκ. would, according to the other reading, be worse than useless. Yet ἐστὲ γινώσκ. ought not to be taken (as it has been by most Expositors, and, it would seem, the ancient Translators) merely as put for the Imperative γινώσκετε. It may rather be considered as a stronger way of expressing the Indicative; q. d. 'Ye are knowing;' i. e. 'ye are [yourselves] sensible,' &c. So Thucydides vii. 64, αὐτοὶ ἴστε. 'The Apostle (as Scott observes) supposes his readers to know it; as he justly might, since in his former Epistle (doubtless in great circulation among the Gentile Christians) he had often expressed this; as, for instance, 1 Cor. v. 11, 12; vi. 9, 10, 11.' It may be added, that in both of those passages πλεονέκτης does not mean a covetous person, but, as Grot. and Estius explain, an extortioner; a sense of the word frequent in the Classical writers. So Thucyd. i. 40, οἵδε βίαιοι καὶ πλεονέκται εἰσί. It would seem that the term there denotes such a kind of extortion and cheating as borders on robbery; while ἁρπ. signifies what we commonly understand by rapacity, a taking advantage of others in bargaining. Here, by the context, πλεονέκτης must mean one who is wholly devoted to sensuality, and who is thus, as the Apostle means to say, an idolater, or, as he elsewhere expresses it, Phil. iii. 19 (an Epistle written nearly at the same time with Ephesians), 'whose God is his belly.' See also Rom. xvi. 18.

— οὐκ ἔχει κληρονομίαν ἐν τῇ βασ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ.] Corresponding to the similar phrase, 1 Cor. vi. 10, βασ. Θεοῦ οὐ κληρονομήσουσι. Though here, by the force of the Article, Bp. Middleton shows, τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ must signify, 'of him who is the Christ and God;' in which, therefore, we have a decided declaration of Christ as God. See more in Dr. Pye Smith's Script. Test., vol. iii. p. 317.

6. κενοῖς λόγοις.] Alluding, we may suppose, to the empty reasonings of the heathen sophists, who, as Hyperius observes, 'used subtle words to extenuate the vices in question; comp. Col. ii. 4. Hence the Apostle, by a sort of pre-occupation, forewarns them that the wrath of God cannot but fall upon those guilty of such offences.'

The second clause of the verse is meant, as Hyperius observes, to give a reason why such deceivers should not be listened to, and why the vices in question should be avoided; and that deduced from the condign punishment to be inflicted on those who commit such things. The term ἔρχεται is, I conceive, emphatical; intimating that some even urged that the denunciation was not so formidable,—since God would never put his threats into execution against these, which they represented as comparatively slight offences.

7. συμμέτοχοι αὐτῶν] for συμμ. αὐτοῖς; but the adjective is treated as a substantive; q. d. 'partakers with them [in the punishment which must fall upon them].'

8. ἦτε γάρ ποτε—Κυρίῳ.] Another argument, and that deduced from their present state. (Hyperius.) There is now shown the inconsistency of such a conduct; q. d. 'For ye are not, as formerly, in a state of moral darkness [which might extenuate your vices], but are now enlightened in the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ.' The Apostle exhorts them to remove it, by living suitably to their high calling. Σκότος is for ἐν σκότει, or ἐσκοτισμένοι in Rom. ii. 19, and 1 John i. 6, ἐν τῷ σκότει περιπατῶμεν; and φῶς for πεφωτισμένοι, though perhaps a stronger

9 νῦν δὲ φῶς ἐν Κυρίῳ· ὡς τέκνα φωτὸς περιπατεῖτε· ([h] ὁ h Gal. 5. 22.
γὰρ καρπὸς τοῦ ‡ Πνεύματος ἐν πάσῃ ἀγαθωσύνῃ καὶ δικαι-10 οσύνῃ καὶ ἀληθείᾳ·) [i] δοκιμάζοντες τί ἐστιν εὐάρεστον τῷ i Rom. 12 2.
11 Κυρίῳ. [k] Καὶ μὴ συγκοινωνεῖτε τοῖς ἔργοις τοῖς ἀκάρποις k Rom. 6. 21. & 13. 12.
12 τοῦ σκότους, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἐλέγχετε. τὰ γὰρ κρυφῇ 2 Cor. 6. 14. 2 Thess. 3. 14.
13 γινόμενα ὑπ' αὐτῶν αἰσχρόν ἐστι καὶ λέγειν. [l] Τὰ δὲ πάντα, l John 3. 20, 21.
ἐλεγχόμενα ὑπὸ τοῦ φωτος, φανεροῦται· πᾶν γὰρ τὸ φανεexpression. Light and darkness were, from the earliest ages, familiar images to denote good and evil. Thus the ancient Magians (or worshippers of the Deity by fire) made fire the symbol of the good principle, and darkness that of the evil principle.

9. In this verse we have a third reason for obeying the above injunction, and that deduced from the effects of the Holy Spirit, once received by believers.

— ὁ γὰρ καρπὸς, &c.] The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. 'Live as children of the light [and this, if ye be children of light, ye will do]; for the effect of that light and the Spirit is,' &c. The Apostle (as Calvin observes) means to point out the way in which children of the light should walk,—touching, by way of exemplification, on some of the principal component parts of a holy life.

Here, for Πνεύματος, a few MSS., several Versions, and some Fathers, have φωτὸς, which is approved by most Critics, and has been edited by Griesbach, Koppe, Tittman, and Scholz. I have not ventured to follow them, because, from the character of the MSS., it seems to me more probable that φωτὸς is an emendation—proceeding from those Critics who wished to reduce the expressions of the passage to strict logical accuracy—than (as those Commentators imagine) that Πνεύμ. was an alteration of those who wished to make the expression the same as at Gal. v. 22. The Critics who formed the text of those MSS. dealt rather in the former kind of alteration than the latter. And here Πνεῦμα seems used by way of showing that that light must be expected alone from the influence of the Holy Spirit. Since, too, this verse is parenthetical, such an irregularity might the better be tolerated.

— ἀγαθωσύνῃ.] The word is here used as at Gal. v. 22; and δικαιοσύνη has the same sense here as at 1 Tim. vi. 11, where see Note. 'Ἀληθ. is equivalent to πίστις at Gal. v. 22, meaning 'good faith and sincerity.'

10. δοκιμάζοντες, &c.] These words are closely connected with those at ver. 8, ὡς τέκνα φωτὸς περιπ. Δοκιμ. (the exact sense of which has been disputed) may be rendered, 'proving by trial or search [in order to know and practise]; [thereby] approving and practising what is acceptable to the Lord.'

11. καὶ μὴ συγκοινωνεῖτε, &c.] This is meant as a counterpart to the exhortation at ver. 8, ὡς τέκνα φωτ. περιπ.; q. d. 'On the contrary, have no fellowship,' &c. The expression συγκ. τοῖς ἔργοις, &c. (like κοιν. τοῖς ἔργοις πονηροῖς at 2 John 11, and κοιν. ἁμαρτίαις at 1 Tim. v. 22), signifies, 'to partake in evil deeds, either by practising, or by approving and countenancing them.' See Rom. i. 32. 'Ακάρπ. denotes, by a litotes, that which is pernicious and mischievous. Such adjectives, chiefly with the α privative, are frequent. See Note on Rom. iii. 12, and my Note on Thucyd. i. 91, ἀξύμφορον.

— ἐλέγχετε.] Most Expositors supply αὐτοὺς, meaning the doers of the works; and they render ἐλέγχ. reprove, viz. by wholesome correction. This, however, is so harsh, that it is better (with Theodoret, the Pesch. Syr., Wakefield, Schleusner, Photius, and Wahl) to supply αὐτὰ (i. e. ἔργα τοῦ σκότους), and to interpret ἐλέγχετε 'bring to the light, and evince their evil nature,' namely, by showing in contrast the opposite virtues. This sense is required by ver. 13, with which the present closely connects; and so ἐλέγχω is used both in the Scriptural and Classical writers.

12. τὰ γὰρ κρυφῇ—λέγειν.] This is meant to place in a strong point of view the abominable vices of those persons, with whom he has just exhorted them to have no society. The αὐτῶν, of course, refers to those persons. The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. 'For [as to censuring their actions in words,] it were a shame to,' &c. The sentiment contains one of the most cutting reproofs ever uttered, and is especially pointed by the emphasis on γιν. and λέγειν, of which several parallel instances have been adduced by Wetstein. The most apposite is taken from Isæus: τούτῳ ἐγκαλοῦσαν, ἃ ἐγὼ αἰσχύνομαι λέγειν, οὗτος δὲ ποιῶν οὐκ ἠσχύνετο.

Here there is supposed to be an allusion to the abominations of the nocturnal mysteries, on which see Whitby.

13. τὰ δὲ πάντα—φανεροῦται.] The sense is here disputed, and, indeed, is not very clear. By τὰ πάντα, however, must be meant all the evil deeds just mentioned; and, in fact, v. 13 is closely connected with the μᾶλλον δὲ ἐλέγχ. at ver. 11. Rosenmuller and Koppe are of opinion that a reason is here meant to be given why Christians should study to correct the bad morals of the heathens. But it would rather seem that as at ver. 12, the Apostle mentions how those deeds of darkness could not well be reproved and made to appear what they are,—so in ver. 13, he shows how they might be most effectually made to appear in their true character; viz. by being brought into contrast with the deeds of light from the children of light, or true Christians. The sense, then, may be thus expressed: 'Now all these [deeds of darkness and vice] being made to appear what they are by the light [of the Gospel, as evinced in the children of light] are made manifest or exposed; (i. e. their moral turpitude is discovered).'

With respect to the words πᾶν γὰρ—ἐστι, they have been variously explained. The preference has generally been given to the interpretation of Grotius, 'For it is the light [of severe truth] which makes every thing manifest and in its true ρούμενον φῶς ἐστι. [m] Διὸ λέγει· ‡ Ἔγειραι, ὁ καθεύδων, 14

καὶ ἀνάστα ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, καὶ ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ Χριστός. [n] Βλέπετε οὖν πῶς ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖτε, μὴ ὡς 15 ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοί· ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, ὅτι αἱ 16 m Is. 26. 19. & 60. 1. John 5. 25. Rom. 6. 4, 5. & 13. 11. 1 Thess. 5. 6.

n Col. 4. 5.

colour.' But though the sense thus arising is good and suitable, it cannot, I think, be extracted from the words without great violence; nor can φανερ. be taken for φανεροῦν. The Apostle would thus have written φῶς γάρ ἐστι τὸ φανεροῦν τὸ πᾶν. And the common interpretation (as concerns φανερ.) lies open to the same objection, though the sense yielded is very suitable. The true interpretation seems to be that of the ancient Expositors almost universally, by whom φανερ. is taken in a passive or a reflected sense; q. d. 'Whatsoever shows itself [to the world and does not seek concealment], as the life of true Christians may do (so Matt. v. 14, 'ye are the light of the world: a city set on a hill cannot be hid'), that is light, [and adapted to discover darkness,] i. e. by the contrast.'

14. διὸ λέγει, &c.] There has been no little controversy as to these words; which, while they seem to be introduced as a quotation from Scripture (for wherever else the form διὸ λέγει occurs in St. Paul, it serves to introduce a citation), are no where found in Scripture. The ancient and many modern Expositors regard the words ἔγειραι—Χριστὸς as a quotation from Is. xl. 1, 2. Others, again, suppose them taken either from a lost canonical, or an apocryphal book. But that a canonical book should be lost, is of all improbable suppositions the most improbable. And that the Apostle should speak of an apocryphal book in the same manner as of a canonical, is not for a moment to be supposed. Many recent Commentators take λέγει for λέγεται, and suppose that the words form part of a spiritual song, then sung or recited in the churches. This, however, rests on mere conjecture. The words may, I think, best be regarded as formed upon Scripture, especially Is. lx. 1—3. 5. (τὸ Πνεῦμα being understood): a passage which, as Wetstein remarks, the Jews have always interpreted of the Messiah. It is well observed by Zanch., that 'these words contain the sense of what the Prophets teach; consisting, 1. of an exhortation to repentance; 2. of a prediction of the light of salvation by the Messiah.'

— ὁ καθεύδων.] On this metaphorical sense of the word, see Rom. xiii. 11. 'Ανάστα ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν. Meaning, 'arise from the death of sin by a new birth unto righteousness.' 'Επιφαύσει. The expression is well illustrated by Wetstein from Orph. Hymn., οἷς ἐθέλεις θνητοῖς ἢ ἀθανάτοις ἐπιφαύσκων. This word does not elsewhere occur in the Classical writers, but it is found in the Acta Thom. § 34, ἐπέφαυσε γάρ μοι ἀπὸ φροντίδος.

For ἔγειραι, not a few MSS., and some Fathers and early Editions, have ἔγειρε, which has been edited by Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; but, as Matthæi has shown, wrongly; for ἔγειρε is against propriety of language; whereas ἔγειραι (signifying, literally, rouse thyself up,) is perfectly agreeable thereto. The same use of the word may be observed in our own language. Thus one of our Poets writes:

'When Morpheus rouses from his bed.'

15. Here, I apprehend, we have not (what many Commentators suppose) a new admonition, namely, to Christian prudence; but (as others have well pointed out) a continuation of the precept at ver. 3: or the words may form, as Hyperius supposes, a conclusion to the whole of the present subject, referring partly to what has just been said, about reproving offenders, and partly to what was introduced in the early part of the Chapter, where the Apostle in a general way admonished them against fornication and uncleanness.

— ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖτε.] 'Conduct yourselves circumspectly, minding your steps, or behaviour.' Πῶς is for ὅτι; there being here, as we may suppose, a blending of two modes of expression, βλέπετε πῶς περιπ., and βλέπετε ὅτι ἀκριβῶς περιπ. In μὴ ὡς ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοὶ we have an antithetical parallelism (such as is found in the Classical as well as the Scriptural writers), where, for emphasis sake, a proposition is expressed both affirmatively and negatively, as in John i. 20, ὡμολόγησε καὶ οὐκ ἠρνήσατο. By ἄσοφοι and σοφοὶ are meant the persons just before denoted by σκότος and φῶς, and a little after termed ἄφρονες and συνιέντες, by a frequent Hebrew idiom, whereby wisdom stands for virtue, and folly for vice.

16. ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, &c.] On the exact import of these somewhat obscure words, considerable difference of opinion exists. Not a few eminent Commentators explain them of the caution to be observed in avoiding persecution; the sense being, 'that they should draw out their time as long as they could, by not provoking their enemies to cut them off.' This view, however, is neither suitable to the context, nor in accordance with the parallel passage of Colossians iv. 5, adduced in illustration; besides, it yields a sense little agreeable to the manner of the Apostle. The more usual interpretation is, 'endeavouring to recover (lit. 'buy back') the time that has been lost, by diligently making use of what remains, and improving it to the most valuable purposes.' Yet this, though it yields an excellent sense, has no support from the context, and does not suit with the parallel passage of Colossians. In order to ascertain the sense here intended, we should first trace the connexion; according to which ἐξαγορ. τ. κ. will, I apprehend, be found to have reference to ἀκριβῶς περιπ. in the preceding verse. And that expression must also refer to ἐλέγχετε, and the whole of ver. 14. In short, the Apostle means to teach them how that ἔλεγξις and φανέρωσις might be brought about; namely, by walking circumspectly; and the words μὴ ὡς ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοὶ and ἐξαγορ. τὸν καιρὸν are, I conceive, meant to further urge this circumspection, by showing that thereby they will act like truly wise men (so Liban. Epist. 627, σωφρονούντων δὲ οἶμαι καρποῦσθαι τὸν καιρὸν, ἵνα μὴ παρελθόντα τὸν καιρὸν ζητῶμεν); namely, 'by diligently making use of the opportunity afforded them of evincing in their conduct such a contrast, as may rouse those who are in the deep sleep of pagan ignorance and vice; so that, standing re-

17 ἡμέραι πονηραί εἰσι. ° Διὰ τοῦτο μὴ γίνεσθε ἄφρονες, ἀλλὰ ° Rom. 12. 2.
18 συνιέντες τί τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Κυρίου. ᵖ καὶ μὴ μεθύσκεσθε ᵖ Prov. 20. 1. & 23. 29, &c.
οἴνῳ, ἐν ᾧ ἐστιν ἀσωτία· ἀλλὰ πληροῦσθε ἐν πνεύματι· Isa. 5. 11, 22. Luke 21. 34.

proved thereby, they may be brought to Christ, who will give them the light of the Gospel and the aids of the Holy Spirit.'

The remaining words, ὅτι αἱ ἡμέραι πονηραί εἰσι, are somewhat obscure, and admit of more than one suitable sense. If they be referred to ἐξαγορ. τὸν καιρὸν, the meaning will be, 'because the times are dangerous, the season of their usefulness is precarious, and consequently the opportunity offered ought to be carefully made use of.' If referred to ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖτε, it will be, not that 'the times are dangerous to their safety, but to their virtue; being full of temptations, trials, and various hindrances to religion: so that they will have need of all their circumspection and care to walk aright.' This, however, is far less suitable to the context and the parallel passage of Colossians than the former view, which is accordingly to be preferred. Correspondent to ἐν σοφίᾳ περιπατεῖν in the above passage of Colossians, there is ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖν; and though we have not here expressed what is added there, πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω, yet such may be understood in what is here evidently to be supplied, πρὸς αὐτοὺς, as referred to αὐτῶν at v. 12, which relates to the designation at v. 6, τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθείας, and that cannot but refer to the heathens, who are unquestionably meant at ver. 14. The admonition, then, clearly is, that 'they should adopt a discreet and circumspect conduct towards their heathen neighbours; thereby making use of the opportunity afforded of bringing them to the light of the Gospel; and that because the season for their usefulness was precarious, and the opportunity for exercising it was to be carefully seized.'

This view of the sense is much confirmed by a most able discussion on the import of the terms by the late very learned Dr. Samuel Parr, in his Sermon on this text, Works, vol. ii. p. 704. He commences by observing that the use of the phrase here, ἐξαγορ. τὸν καιρὸν, is acknowledged to be founded on Daniel ii. 8, where the sense is, 'I know of a certainty that you would, by all means, obtain a more favourable opportunity for avoiding explanation altogether, or attempting it with better effect, because ye see that the thing is gone from me,' namely, the particulars of the dream; for it seems the king had only a confused recollection of what he had dreamed. 'The expression ἐξαγοράζεσθαι τὸν καιρὸν (continues he) became almost proverbial among the Hellenistic Jews. It acquired the signification of gaining favourable opportunities; and the specific use to which those opportunities were to be applied may sometimes have been expressly stated in speaking or writing, though we are left to collect it from the context, in the passages of the New Test. as well as of Daniel.' The learned writer is of opinion that both here, and in the passage of Colossians, the same duty is inculcated, of circumspection and prudence; 'the same ground existing for it in the immoral habits and malicious dispositions of the adversaries to Christianity.' The Ephesians were to walk circumspectly, and ἐξαγοράζεσθαι τὸν καιρὸν, because the days were evil. The Colossians were to walk in wisdom to those without, and ἐξαγοράζεσθαι τὸν καιρὸν, because, in the reign of Nero, St. Paul was thrown into bonds for speaking the mystery of Christ, and because the dangers which had already overtaken St. Paul impended over the Colossians. Now the opportunity for gaining a more serious hearing to the preachers of the Gospel would be the result of the wisdom with which they and their followers walked towards those that were without; and the want of such wisdom would have occasioned the loss of such opportunity—would have occasioned additional obstacles to the propagation of the Gospel, and additional difficulties to those who were already converted to it. As to ἐξαγ., the term specifically signifies 'to recover, by purchase, that which has become the property of another.' And in Galat. iii. 13. iv. 5, it is metaphorically transferred to the redemption of mankind from their captivity to sin by the blood of Christ. With a greater latitude of metaphor it is used here, and at Coloss. iv. 5, for obtaining some object with the same earnestness, solicitude, and intense application of the whole mind, which persons engaged in bargains employ for pecuniary advantages, Luke xvi. 8. By a reference to the passages of the Classical writers here adduced by the Commentators, we may see how terms such as ἐξαγορ. and ἐξωνεῖσθαι, which originally denoted the act of purchasing, came to be figuratively applied to the act of securing any future object with the cautious and vigilant attention of purchasers.

17. μὴ γίνεσθε ἄφρονες, ἀλλὰ, &c.] Here we have a repetition of the preceding μὴ ὡς ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοὶ at ver. 15, though, in the present case, the sense is carried still further; ἄφρ. being a stronger term than ἄσοφοι; there being, it is supposed, an allusion to the feasts of Bacchus, or rather, it would seem, to the Bacchanalian orgies of the heathens; which enables the Apostle to introduce the admonition against drunkenness. Thus the sense is: 'Wherefore [such being your obligations as children of light, live accordingly, and] act not like persons out of their mind [but play a wise and sober part], like circumspect persons, cautiously looking to their ways, to shun the snares laid in them; not acting as foolish and rash persons, who rush blindly into dangers, but as wise persons, who bear them in mind, and seek to escape them.'

18. ἐν ᾧ ἐστιν ἀσωτία.] 'Ασωτία is not well rendered excess, that import being implied in μεθύσκ. Still less should it be rendered luxury, a sense not a little jejune. The term is a very comprehensive one, denoting the disposition of a person abandoned to intemperance. Render, 'in which [drunkenness] there is a [tendency to] dissoluteness or profligacy;' see Prov. xxiii. 30. Such, too, is the view of the sense taken by Hyperius, who says, 'there is here a ratio suasoria ab effectis, sive a damnoso.' And so Calvin remarks: 'Admonet quid mali pariat ebrietas, nempe ἀσωτίαν; quo nomine intelligo lascivias omne genus et dissolutiones.' The Apostle, however, may have intended a paronomasia on the etymology of the word, and meant to represent ἀσωτία as the state of a person whom (to use a Classical saying, which I remember to have read

[q] λαλοῦντες ἑαυτοῖς ψαλμοῖς καὶ ὕμνοις καὶ ᾠδαῖς πνευμα- 19 τικαῖς, ᾄδοντες καὶ ψάλλοντες ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμῶν τῷ Κυ-ρίῳ· [r] εὐχαριστοῦντες πάντοτε ὑπὲρ πάντων, ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ 20 Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρί· [s] ὑποτασ- 21 σόμενοι ἀλλήλοις ἐν φόβῳ ‡ Θεοῦ. [t] Αἱ γυναῖκες, τοῖς ἰδίοις 22

q Col. 3. 16, 17. James 5. 13. Acts 16. 25. r Col. 3. 17. 1 Thess. 5. 18. Heb. 13. 14. Ps. 34. 1. s 1 Pet. 5. 5. Col. 3. 18, 25. & 4 1. t Gen. 3. 16. 1 Cor. 14. 34. Col. 3. 18. Tit. 2. 5. 1 Pet. 3. 1.

in Athenæus) 'even the Goddess of Salvation herself could not save.' And of whose reformation do we so much despair as the drunkard's? There is, moreover, an antithetical paronomasia between μεθ. οἴνῳ and πληρ. ἐν πν.; the sense being, Be not filled with wine, but [rather endeavour to] be filled with the Spirit. The Apostle means to admonish them not to imitate the revels of the heathens, nor seek exhilaration from intemperate drinking (which would lead to the ruin of both body and soul), but rather to endeavour to be filled with the Spirit, and seek for the abundantly satisfying consolations of his holy influences.

19. λαλοῦντες ἑαυτοῖς ψαλμοῖς, &c.] These words are, I think, intended to illustrate and exemplify the preceding verse; and the meaning seems to be that, when in their families, or in society, they felt elevated beyond ordinary conversation, and sought for hilarity, they should not express this feeling, as did the heathens, in singing or reciting dissolute songs (called scolia), but in the use of 'psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs;' either by recitation, to each other, or by singing them, singly or in chorus. On the discrimination of sense in ψαλμ., ὕμν. and ᾠδ. πν. I have fully treated in Rec. Syn. It would seem that by ψαλμ. we are not to understand the Psalms of David only; but also the compositions of those persons who had the spiritual gifts (so 1 Cor. xiv. 26, εἴτε ψαλμὸν ἔχει, where see the Note), which are in Eusebius (Hist. Eccl. l. v. 28) distinctly adverted to: ψαλμοὶ καὶ ᾠδαὶ ἀδελφῶν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ὑπὸ πιστῶν γραφεῖσαι; which compositions, he says, τὸν Λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὸν Χριστὸν, ὑμνοῦσι ('celebrate the Logos of God, Christ'), θεολογοῦντες, 'speaking of him as God.' Accordingly such ψαλμοὶ differed in no material respect from ὕμνοι; see Rec. Syn. How far the ᾠδαὶ πνευμ. differed from both is by no means clear. The difference would seem to have been,—that the two former celebrated the praises of God in strains adapted to be sung in chorus; while the ᾠδαὶ were poems on some religious subject, and, it is probable, were usually only recited; or, if sung, sung as are our solo anthems, in which there is much of recitative.

This the Apostle directs to be done ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ, i. e. so that the inward affections of their hearts should go with the outward expressions of their voices; meaning, that this was not to be performed in a cold and formal manner, or be regarded as always to be done, but only when they felt so inclined. Thus we shall fully comprehend the force of the admonition at James v. 13, at which so many have stumbled: εὐθυμεῖ τις; ψαλλέτω. The meaning is not that our cheerfulness must always be shown in singing of Psalms; but that if any one be elevated more than ordinarily, let him express it, not in the use of dissolute songs, but rather in hymns of praise. The terms ψαλλ. and ᾄδ. are synonymous, but both terms are used; the former to correspond to the ψαλμοὶ, the latter to the ὕμνοι.

20. εὐχαριστ., &c.] This forms another head of admonition as to their private conduct, and is illustrative of the walking circumspectly. It must relate solely to the expression of thankfulness 'to God even the Father' in private devotions, or in family prayer, and that under all circumstances, whether prosperous or adverse; see two admirable Discourses of Dr. Isaac Barrow on this text, vol. i. 91. 121, entitled, 'On the Duty of Thanksgiving,' where, after observing that 'the words may, without violence or prejudice on either hand, be separated from the context, and considered distinctly by themselves,' he remarks that 'every single word of the sentence carries with it a notable emphasis and especial significancy. The first expresses the substance of the duty to which we are exhorted; the next (namely, in order of construction) denotes the object to which it is directed (God). The following term "always" determines the main circumstances of this and all other duties, the time of performance. The last, "for all things," declares the adequate matter of the duty, and how far it should extend.'

— ἐν ὀνόματι.] This expression (too little attended to by most recent Commentators) is to be understood with reference to the mediation of Christ (see Chrysost. and Theophylact), 'through whom alone all blessings flow' to sinful man, and through whom all praises are accepted that ascend from earth.

21. ὑποτασσόμενοι ἀλλήλοις.] This forms another head of admonition, namely, to that natural, civil, and ecclesiastical subordination, the violation of which was, there is reason to think, not unfrequent among the early Christians; and, more than any thing else, tended to bring the Gospel into discredit with governors and magistrates. They are, therefore, exhorted 'to submit themselves to every ordinance of man, for the Lord's sake.' And the Apostle, from this verse to chap. vi. 10 (following up the general injunction ὑποτασσ. ἀλ. with particular ones), adverts to various kinds of subordination,—both natural and social,—each in order, and exhorts to the discharge of the relative duties. Compare 1 Cor. vii. 10—19. 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2.

— ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ] 'from reference to the authority of God.' So Rom. xii. 11, τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες. Here, indeed, there is great reason to think that Χριστοῦ (instead of Θεοῦ), found in very many of the best MSS., ancient Versions, and early Fathers (and which has been edited by Griesbach, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz), is the true reading.

22. ἰδίοις.] The expression is not to be rigidly interpreted, it merely standing (as Col. iii. 18) for ὑμετέροις; a use, however, not found in the Classical writers. Ὡς τῷ Κυρίῳ. Meaning, 'as a duty rendered to the Lord, your common Lord and Master, and therefore to be discharged willingly and cheerfully.'

23 ἀνδράσιν ὑποτάσσεσθε, ὡς τῷ Κυρίῳ· [u] ὅτι [ὁ] ἀνήρ ἐστι u Rom. 12. 5 κεφαλὴ τῆς γυναικὸς, ὡς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς κεφαλὴ τῆς ἐκκλη- 1 Cor. 11. 3. & 12. 27.
24 σίας, καὶ αὐτός ἐστι σωτὴρ τοῦ σώματος. Ἀλλ', ὥσπερ supra 1. 22, 23. & 4. 12, 15.
ἡ ἐκκλησία ὑποτάσσεται τῷ Χριστῷ, οὕτω καὶ αἱ γυναῖκες Col. 1. 18, 24 25 τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν ἐν παντί. [x] Οἱ ἄνδρες, ἀγαπᾶτε τὰς x Gal. 1. 4. supra 5. 2. γυναῖκας ἑαυτῶν, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἠγάπησε τὴν ἐκκλη- Col. 3. 19. 1 Pet. 3. 7.
26 σίαν καὶ ἑαυτὸν παρέδωκεν ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς· [y] ἵνα αὐτὴν ἁγι- y John 3. 5. & 15. 3.
27 άσῃ, καθαρίσας τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν ῥήματι· [z] ἵνα Tit. 3. 5. 1 Pet. 3. 21.
παραστήσῃ ‡ αὐτὴν ἑαυτῷ ἔνδοξον τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, μὴ ἔχουσαν z Cant. 4 7. supra 1. 4. Col. 1. 22.
σπῖλον ἢ ῥυτίδα, ἤ τι τῶν τοιούτων, ἀλλ' ἵνα ᾖ ἁγία καὶ 28 ἄμωμος. Οὕτως ὀφείλουσιν οἱ ἄνδρες ἀγαπᾷν τὰς ἑαυτῶν γυναῖκας, ὡς τὰ ἑαυτῶν σώματα. Ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ

23. ἔστι κεφαλὴ τῆς γυναικὸς, &c.] See 1 Cor. xi. 3. 7, and Notes.

— κεφαλὴ τῆς ἐκκλησίας.] 'Head of the body of the Church' (see Rom. xii. 5, and Note). Thus intimating that as Christ is the preserver of the body of the Church, so is the husband to be the safeguard and protector of his wife and family; an idea which our language well expresses by the significant term husband; i. e. house-band, or bond of the family.

24. This is illustrative of the preceding verse. Ἐν παντὶ means 'in every thing [lawful].'

25. The Apostle here points to the reciprocal duty, by which the submission before enjoined would be rendered more easy and effectual; namely, by kindness and affection, as a liberal indulgence to the frailty of the weaker sex. It is here well observed by Hyperius, 'Hanc dilectionem talem ac tantam mox describit et tam gravibus extorquet et urget argumentis, ut quavis subjectione major et efficacior agnosci queat. Quo pacto providè cavent, ut et viro sua auctoritas salva maneat, et mulier non abjiciatur humilius quam par est, sed justa proportione mutuò sibi præstent honorem debitum.'

— ἑαυτὸν παρέδωκεν.] See Gal. i. 4, and Note.

26. ἵνα αὐτὴν ἁγιάσῃ—ῥήματι] i. e. 'that he might [by his Spirit] consecrate it to his service, having cleansed it by the washing of water (i. e. by that baptism which is the laver of regeneration; see Tit. iii. 5), and through the word, i. e. the Gospel, as the means of their conversion and sanctification.' See Whitby and Scott.

27. ἵνα παραστήσῃ—ἄμωμος.] There is here some variety of interpretation, occasioned probably by a misconception of the metaphor. Koppe takes παραστ. simply for περιποιεῖσθαι or κτᾶσθαι, 'make her his own.' But this is merely avoiding the difficulty. Others, as Doddridge, render, 'that he may present to himself,' in his own immediate presence; namely, at the resurrection. Yet that would suppose an almost unprecedented harshness, and indeed confusion of metaphor. Considering the words of the foregoing verse, in conjunction with Oriental marriage customs (among which was this, that the bride should be carefully washed, and in every way purified, previously to the marriage), there is here doubtless a matrimonial allusion. And, viewing the present passage in conjunction with 2 Cor. xi. 2, παρθένον ἁγνὴν παραστῆσαι τῷ Χριστῷ, we may well suppose that there is such here. The words μὴ ἔχουσαν σπῖλον ἢ ῥυτίδα allude to the Oriental methods of making the skin so clear and smooth, by removing all freckles, wrinkles, or other blemishes, as to be ἄμωμον (a term derived from the Heb. מום, a blemish). So Solomon's Song iv. 7, καλὴ, καὶ μῶμος οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν σοί. 'Παραστῆναι (it is thought by Bos, Obs. p. 187) is either used of the father-in-law's introducing the bride to the bridegroom, or of the bridegroom's taking her home when espoused;' see also Elsner, Obs. 8, vol. ii. 156, and Alberti's Opusc. Phil. p. 314. It would seem, however, that the expression has reference to the Paranymph, ὁ φίλος τοῦ νυμφίου, John iii. 29, who originally selected the bride for the bridegroom, and afterwards formally introduced her to him, first for his approbation as a wife (see John iii. 29, and Note), and finally when formally brought home to his house on the wedding night; see Psalm xlv. 14. And as in John iii. 29, the Baptist compares himself to the paranymph and Christ to the bridegroom; so here, it would seem from the expression ἑαυτῷ, Christ is considered as paranymph to himself, with respect to his spouse the Church.

Instead of αὐτὴν some ancient MSS. of the Western recension, and the Vulg., Coptic, and Italic Versions, with some Fathers, have αὐτὸς, which was preferred by Grotius and Locke, and has been edited by Griesbach and Scholz. The common reading, however, has been retained by Knapp, Tittman, and Vater; and rightly; for though the other reading be specious, it would seem to be only a correction of those who stumbled at the irregularity of the expression in this sense; which is not to be removed by supposing, with Grotius, a transposition for ἵνα παρ. ἑαυτῷ αὐτὴν ἐκκλ., 'the church before mentioned;' for that would yield a very jejune sense, and involve a violation of the linguæ proprietas. The truth is, that the irregularity was occasioned by τὴν ἐκκλησίαν being thrown in to make what is meant by αὐτὴν, which is personified, more plain. The passage may be literally rendered, 'That he might present her [namely], the Church, unto himself glorious,' &c.

28. The argument in this and the three following verses is founded on the nature of the conjugal union, whereby the husband and wife γυναῖκα, ἑαυτὸν ἀγαπᾷ· οὐδεὶς γάρ ποτε τὴν ἑαυτοῦ σάρκα 29 ἐμίσησεν, ἀλλ' ἐκτρέφει καὶ θάλπει αὐτὴν, καθὼς καὶ ὁ ‡ Κύριος τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. [a] Ὅτι μέλη ἐσμὲν τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, 30 ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ. [b] Ἀντὶ 31

τούτου καταλείψει ἄνθρωπος τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν μητέρα, καὶ προσκολληθήσεται πρὸς τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἔσονται οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα μίαν.
Τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο μέγα ἐστίν· ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω εἰς Χριστὸν 32 καὶ εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. [c] Πλὴν καὶ ὑμεῖς οἱ καθ' ἕνα, ἕκαστος 33
τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γυναῖκα οὕτως ἀγαπάτω ὡς ἑαυτόν· ἡ δὲ γυνὴ ἵνα φοβῆται τὸν ἄνδρα.
VI. [a] ΤΑ τέκνα, ὑπακούετε τοῖς γονεῦσιν ὑμῶν ἐν 1
Κυρίῳ· τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι δίκαιον. [b] Τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου 2 καὶ τὴν μητέρα· ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐντολὴ πρώτη ἐν ἐπαγγελίᾳ· ἵνα εὖ σοι γένηται, καὶ ἔσῃ μακροχρόνιος ἐπὶ τῆς 3 a Gen. 2. 23. Rom. 12. 5. 2 Cor. 6. 15. & 12. 27.

b Gen. 2. 24. Matt 19. 5. Mark 10. 7. 1 Cor. 6. 16.
c Col. 3. 19. 1 Pet. 3. 6.
a Col. 3. 20. Prov. 20. 22.
b Exod. 20. 12. Deut. 5. 16. Matt. 15. 4. Mark 7. 10.

become, as it were, 'one flesh.' Thus the wife is regarded as the husband's second self. Τὰ ἑαυτῶν σώματα is for ἑαυτοὺς, conformably, Koppe says, to the preceding figure; but rather, it would seem, in order to make the application in the next verse the stronger, by the use of σάρκα. As illustrative of the argumentation here (which is popular, taken, as Calvin says, à naturâ, and therefore not to be too much pressed on), may be noticed the words of Aristotle, Ethics, p. 233, where he says, 'any one's son is ὥσπερ μέρος αὐτοῦ,' and then adds, αὐτὸν δὲ προαιρεῖται βλάπτειν οὐδείς. Compare Hom. Il. ι. 340.

29. ὁ Κύριος.] Instead of this, not a few MSS., and several ancient Versions and Fathers, have ὁ Χριστὸς, which has been edited by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz. I have, however, chosen, with Vater, to retain the common reading, since internal as well as external evidence is in its favour.

30. ὅτι μέλη ἐσμὲν—αὐτοῦ.] The sense is probably to be completed from the preceding verse, as follows: '[The Lord so nourishes and supports us who are his Church] because we are [in that view] members of his body.' The next words, ver. 31, carry the comparison further, by an allusion to what Adam said of Eve, Gen. ii. 23; thus representing the relation as being equally close as that of Eve to Adam. And then, to place what is said in a stronger point of view, the Apostle introduces the very words spoken of the woman. With which may be compared the following similar ones of Plato, Symp., εἰ γὰρ τοῦτο ἐπιθυμεῖτε, ἐθέλω ὑμᾶς συντῆξαι καὶ συμφῦσαι εἰς τὸ αὐτὸ, ὥστε δύο ὄντας ἕνα γεγονέναι.

32. τὸ μυστήριον—ἐστίν.] Literally, 'This mystery is a great one;' 'in this is [contained] a great mystery, representing a most important truth [though long unknown].' The Apostle, it is plain, recognises an allegorical sense in that passage, involving an image of the intimate union between Christ and his Church.

— λέγω εἰς—ἐκκλ.] Meaning, it would seem, 'But in saying this, I especially advert to [the union between] Christ and his Church [that you may apply it to yourselves].'

33. The πλὴν here seems to be transitive, resuming what was said at ver. 29; and may be rendered enimvero; a sense occurring in the later Classical writers. In οἱ καθ' ἕνα we have a mode of expression very rare. At ἵνα φοβ. supply βλεπέτω, expressed supra v. 15.

VI. 1. τὰ τέκνα.] The Article may be thus expressed: 'The children of you;' i. e. those of you who are children. Ἐν Κυρίῳ; i. e. in deference to the authority of the Lord, ἐν φόβῳ K., v. 21. Τοῦτο γάρ ἐ. δ. Meaning, that this is right and just, both by the law of nature and that of revelation.

2. τίμα τ. πατ.] Τιμᾶν properly signifies, 'to perform one's duty to any one;' and here reverence must comprehend the cognate offices of affection, care, and support. The same complexity of sense is observable in the Classical phrase τιμᾶν τὸν ἰατρόν. In ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐντ. πρ. ἐν ἐπ. some limitation is intended. Most eminent modern Commentators understand by πρώτη 'the first with a special and appropriate promise annexed to it;' that contained in the second commandment being only a general declaration of God's mercy to all who keep the commandments. If this be thought unsatisfactory, we may, with the ancient and some eminent modern Commentators, take πρώτη ἐν. to mean, 'a principal commandment,' as, from its peculiar importance, it may very well be termed. Thus ἐν ἐπαγγ. will mean, 'and that, too, with a promise annexed.' This latter mode, however, is not necessary; for as to the objection that some have made, that the former sense would require the Article, that has been refuted by Bp. Middleton, who has shown that πρώτη may very well be taken for ἡ πρώτη.

3. ἵνα εὖ—τῆς γῆς.] Many recent Expositors represent the import of the promise to be, that 'the Jewish state would be flourishing and permanent, if the children were educated.' And that the education of children is of great conse-

4 γῆς. [c] Καὶ, οἱ πατέρες, μὴ παροργίζετε τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν, c Gen. 18. 19.
ἀλλ' ἐκτρέφετε αὐτὰ ἐν παιδείᾳ καὶ νουθεσίᾳ Κυρίου. Deut. 6. 7, 20. Ps. 78. 4.
5 [d] Οἱ δοῦλοι, ὑπακούετε τοῖς κυρίοις κατὰ σάρκα μετὰ Prov. 19. 8. & 29. 17.
φόβου καὶ τρόμου, ἐν ἁπλότητι τῆς καρδίας ὑμῶν, ὡς τῷ Ecclus. 7. 23. Col. 3. 21. d Col. 3. 22.
6 Χριστῷ· μὴ κατ' ὀφθαλμοδουλείαν ὡς ἀνθρωπάρεσκοι, ἀλλ' 1 Tim. 6. 1. Tit. 2. 9.
ὡς δοῦλοι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ποιοῦντες τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκ
7 ψυχῆς, μετ' εὐνοίας δουλεύοντες, ὡς τῷ Κυρίῳ καὶ οὐκ
8 ἀνθρώποις· [e] εἰδότες ὅτι ὃ ἐάν τι ἕκαστος ποιήσῃ ἀγαθὸν, e Rom. 2. 6. 2 Cor. 5. 10.
τοῦτο κομιεῖται παρὰ [τοῦ] Κυρίου, εἴτε δοῦλος εἴτε ἐλεύ-9 θερος. [f] Καὶ, οἱ κύριοι, τὰ αὐτὰ ποιεῖτε πρὸς αὐτοὺς, ἀνι- f Lev. 25. 43. Deut. 10. 17.
έντες τὴν ἀπειλήν· εἰδότες ὅτι καὶ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν ὁ Κύριός 2 Chron. 19. 7. Job 34. 19.
ἐστιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς, καὶ προσωποληψία οὐκ ἔστι παρ' αὐτῷ. Wisd. 6. 7. Col. 3. 24, 25. & 4. 1.

quence, both to the welfare of families, and benefit to the community at large, cannot be denied; but there is nothing said here of education; nor was the commandment meant for children in age, but offspring, whether children or adults. Hence there is no reason to abandon the view taken by the ancient and early modern Expositors, that the promise was meant for individuals; though it would, of course, apply likewise to whole societies, as composed of individuals. We are not, however, hence to infer, that the same temporal blessing may now be with certainty expected to attend the performance of this duty; for the promise is only mentioned as a proof of the high importance of the commandment. Still it seems to be implied, that what was attended with so marked a blessing under the Mosaic law, (even the performance of a precept which constituted part of the Moral law engrafted into Christianity,) would experience a corresponding portion of blessing under the Gospel of Christ, though the reward might be not so much of this world, as of the next.

4. μὴ παροργίζετε] i. e. 'do not irritate by undue austerity, or needless severity.' For such seems to be the force of the παρα. At the parallel passage of Col. iii. 21 is added, ἵνα μὴ ἀθυμῶσιν; i. e. 'lest they fall into that discouragement, and despair of doing their duty, which unmerited harshness occasions.' The words following seem meant to suggest the mode whereby the duty and obedience of children might be most effectually secured; namely, by giving them (in the words of Doddridge) 'such a course of discipline and instruction as properly belongs to a religious education, which ought to be employed in forming them for the Lord, by laying a restraint upon the first appearances of every vicious passion, and nourishing them up in the words of faith and of good doctrine;' see 1 Tim. iv. 6. Παιδεία καὶ νουθ. should be rendered 'education and discipline;' the former term seeming to regard the instructory part of education, and the latter the corrective part, by forming their morals. Κυρίου is added, to suggest that the whole of this education and moral training should be suitable to their Christian profession.

5. κατὰ σάρκα] 'earthly:' said with allusion to their Master in heaven. Thus the Apostle does not interfere with any established relations, however (as in the case of slaves) morally wrong, but only enjoins the discharge of duties, which the very persons themselves recognised. Μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου. See Note on 2 Cor. vii. 15. 'Εν ἁπλότ. τ. κ., 'with hearty sincerity and good-will.' 'Ως τῷ Χρ., 'as if the service were unto Christ, the heavenly Master, who is, in a more eminent sense, the Lord of the Christian.'

6. μὴ κατ' ὀφθαλμοδουλ., &c.] This is further illustrative of the preceding verse. They are first told how the service is not to be rendered, and then how, and on what principle, it is to be rendered. The terms ὀφθ. and ἀνθρωπ. are both of rare occurrence, and denote a service and obedience rendered only when the master is present, and to gain the praise of men. 'Εκ ψυχῆς is equivalent to ἐν ἁπλότ. τῆς καρδίας in the foregoing verse. Μετ' εὐνοίας, 'with good-will.'

Before τῷ Κυρίῳ I have, with Griesbach, Matthæi, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz, introduced ὡς, from very many MSS., Versions, and Fathers.

9. τὰ αὐτὰ ποιεῖτε πρὸς αὐτοὺς] i. e. 'discharge your duties to them as conscientiously and religiously as they are required to do to you.'

— ἀνιέντες τὴν ἀπειλήν.] The sense here must depend upon that assigned to ἀπειλὴν, a term often in the Sept. used of wrath and angry objurgation; and we might here take it to mean, 'a threatening, objurgatory demeanour.' 'Ανιέντες will then signify forbearing (as in Ps. xxxvii. 8, 'leave off wrath, let go displeasure'), or moderating it, as the margin expresses it. Thus, however, the Article will have no force; and, after a careful examination of all the passages of the Classics where I could meet with the word, I have not been able to find any instance of the Article being used without some reference. Now, as ἀνιέναι often in the Scriptures signifies to remit, but scarcely ever to leave off, I am inclined to think that the sense is, 'remitting the severity of punishment you had threatened,' or intended, or which is denounced by the Law. So in Xenoph. Mag. Eq. i. 14, ἡ ἀπειλὴ signifies the punishment awarded by Law. Also Plutarch, Alex., cited by Wetstein: ὡς δὲ ἑώρα τὸν ἵππον ἀφεικότα τὴν ἀπειλὴν, 'had shaken off all fear of the punishment denounced.' This interpretation is placed beyond doubt by the words following; the argument being, 'Show a forgiving spirit towards your bond-servants, knowing that you stand in great need of forgiveness from that common Master in heaven, in whose sight you are equally servants, and who will make no distinction of persons.'

g Infra 3. 16. h Wisd. 5. 17. Rom. 13. 12. 2 Cor. 6. 7. 1 Thess. 5. 8. i Luke 22. 53. John 12. 31. & 14. 30. supra 2. 2. Col. 1. 13.

[g] Τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί μου, ἐνδυναμοῦσθε ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ 10 ἐν τῷ κράτει τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ· [h] ἐνδύσασθε τὴν πανοπλίαν 11 τοῦ Θεοῦ, πρὸς τὸ δύνασθαι ὑμᾶς στῆναι πρὸς τὰς μεθο-δείας τοῦ Διαβόλου. [i] Ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμῖν ἡ πάλη πρὸς αἷμα 12
καὶ σάρκα, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὰς ἀρχὰς, πρὸς τὰς ἐξουσίας, πρὸς τοὺς κοσμοκράτορας τοῦ σκότους [τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου], πρὸς

10—17. The Apostle here draws his practical exhortations to a close by a general admonition, couched in a figure derived from military affairs. He bids them 'be strong and of good courage;' and at the same time, well knowing that all human strength is but weakness, he points to the alone source of competent strength and courage, in the Lord. As the soldiers of Christ, the Ephesians are called upon to stand firm against their various spiritual enemies, in the exercise of all the Christian virtues and graces (see 2 Cor. vi. 6, and Notes), aptly designated by the panoply, or complete suit of armour, provided for every true believer; clothed in which they were to fight under the banners of the great Captain of their salvation against sin, the world, the flesh, and the Devil. Without this they would have been unequal to the contest; and they can only be strong in the Lord by seeking his strength, as communicated by his Holy Spirit, and that can alone be obtained by fervent 'prayers of faith' to the throne of Grace.

10. ἐνδυναμοῦσθε ἐν Κυρ., &c. has the same sense as κραταιοῦσθε in a kindred passage of 1 Cor. xvi. 13. Κρατ. τ. ἰσχ. may be rendered 'through the force (i. e. efficacy) of his strength.' The Apostle first compares generally the strong motives to stedfastness in the profession of the Gospel, supplied by the consolation and aid it imparts here, and the glorious hopes it reveals hereafter; and then follows up this military metaphor, evolving it into an allegory, in which he compares the moral and spiritual arms, with which the Christian ought to be furnished, with the panoply of the Greeks.

11. τοῦ Θεοῦ] i. e., as it were, 'supplied by God,' just as the πανοπλία of the ancients was by the monarch or the state. Στῆναι ('to withstand, oppose,') is properly applied to persons, but metaphorically to things, when closely connected with persons. Μεθοδ. must, in this context, be regarded as a military term, denoting manœuvres, especially as in some passages cited by the Commentators μέθοδοι and τέχναι are used as synonymous. See supra iv. 14, and Note.

— τοῦ Διαβόλου.] In vain is it that many recent Commentators would here exclude all notion of Diabolical agency, by explaining Διαβ. to mean an adversary. Taking this in conjunction with what follows, and what we find in other parts of Scripture, we cannot but recognise a reference to the great Author of evil, and consequently trace a proof of his personality and power. There may, however, be an indirect reference, though only a subordinate one, to the arts of malicious adversaries; not only Jews and heathens, but also those of the false Judaizing teachers.

12. ὅτι— ἡ πάλη.] Literally, 'for to us the contest is not with,' &c.; i. e. the struggle which we have to maintain is not, &c. 'Thus (says Calvin) expressing the greatness of the danger, by indicating the nature of the enemy;' thereby intimating that the difficulty is beyond human strength to grapple with.

Πάλη is properly a gymnastic term; but the Apostle often unites military with agonistic metaphors; and here the agonistic is not less suitable than the military. So in a similar passage of Max. Tyr. Diss. v. 9. vol. i. 79. Ed. Reisk. we have mention of Socrates wrestling with Melitus, with bonds and poison; next, the philosopher Plato wrestling with a tyrant's anger, a rough sea, and the greatest dangers; then, Xenophon struggling with the prejudices of Tissaphernes, the snares of Ariæus, the treachery of Meno, and royal machinations; and, lastly, Diogenes struggling with adversaries even more formidable, namely, poverty, infamy, hunger, and cold.

At αἷμα καὶ σάρκα supply μόνον, 'merely human enemies,' ἀνθρώπους ὁμοιοπαθεῖς ἡμῖν καὶ ἰσοδυνάμους, as Theophyl. explains, namely, as opposed to Dæmoniacal foes. See Matt. xvi. 17, and Gal. i. 16. So Heb. ii. 14, πάλη πρὸς σάρκα. That Dæmoniacal opponents are adverted to is clear by the force of the antithesis, as also from the words τὰ βέλη τοῦ πονηροῦ at ver. 16. By τὰς ἀρχὰς—τὰς ἐξουσίας, the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, must be meant (by an anthropopathia frequent in the case of good angels) the various orders of evil angels, (as is plain from the τοῦ Διαβόλου in the preceding verse) who had long revolted from, and been in opposition to, God and his kingdom. See Rom. viii. 38, and Note. The words πρὸς τοὺς κοσμ. τ. σκ. τ. αἰ. τ. are by some recent Commentators supposed to refer to the Jewish rulers. It would, however, seem that they are merely meant to designate more particularly the above-mentioned evil angels, and show how they are connected with this world, and are enabled to oppose the maintainers of the truth; namely, as being the rulers and directors of the spiritual darkness of this world; namely, of those who uphold ignorance and vice therein. Κοσμοκ. is a strong term, properly used of the Emperors of Rome, the Kings of Persia, and other powerful monarchs. So Satan is in John xii. 31 called ὁ ἄρχων τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, and examples of this use are adduced by Wetstein from the Rabbinical writers. Irenæus, too, says, Διάβολον, ὃν καὶ κοσμοκράτορα καλοῦσιν, plainly alluding to the present passage, and consequently confirming the common interpretation.

The next words, πρὸς τὰ πνευμ., &c. must be regarded in the same light as the preceding clause, and explanatory of what was there said; τῆς πονηρ. being exegetical of τοῦ σκότους. Thus τὰ πνευμ. is equivalent to τὰ πνεύματα. There is an ellipsis of τάγματα, suggested by the foregoing imagery. Τῆς πονηρίας is, by Hebraism, for πονηρά.

— ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ.] Of these words the sense

13 τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις. [k] Διὰ k 2 Cor. 10. 4.
τοῦτο ἀναλάβετε τὴν πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα δυνηθῆτε ἀντιστῆναι ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ πονηρᾷ, καὶ, ἅπαντα κατεργασά-14 μενοι, στῆναι. [l] Στῆτε οὖν περιζωσάμενοι τὴν ὀσφῦν ὑμῶν l Isa. 11. 5. & 59. 17.
15 ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι τὸν θώρακα τῆς δικαιοσύνης, [m] καὶ Luke 12. 35. 2 Cor. 6. 7. 1 Thess. 5. 8. ὑποδησάμενοι τοὺς πόδας ἐν ἑτοιμασίᾳ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τῆς 1 Pet. 1. 13. m Is. 52. 7. Rom. 10. 15.
16 εἰρήνης· ἐπὶ πᾶσιν ἀναλαβόντες τὸν θυρεὸν τῆς πίστεως, ἐν ᾧ δυνήσεσθε πάντα τὰ βέλη τοῦ πονηροῦ τὰ πεπυρωis disputed. Some would supply πράγμασι, i. e. 'in things relating to heaven and the Gospel;' which sense is ably maintained by Chandler. Perhaps, however, there is no sufficient reason to abandon the common interpretation, by which the ellipsis is supposed to be μέρεσι, designating, according to the opinions of the Jews, the abode of those spirits as being in the aerial regions. See supra ii. 2, and Note.

13. Here we have, as Hyperius points out, a repetition, for greater impressiveness, of the foregoing admonition.

— τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ πονηρᾷ.] Meaning, 'the day of persecution and temptation.' See supra v. 16. On the exact sense of κατεργασάμενοι some difference of opinion exists. The ancient Commentators in general, and most of the early modern ones, explain it, 'having accomplished all things,' i. e. connected with this contest; while Beza, Zanchius, Kypke, Wetstein, Koppe, and almost all the more recent Expositors, assign as the sense, 'having conquered all our spiritual enemies,' namely, the world, the flesh, and the devil. The former interpretation is undoubtedly permitted by the usus loquendi, and may seem the more simple and agreeable to the thing signified, but the other is required by the context, there being a military metaphor, as is certain from various passages of the Classics adduced by the Commentators, the most apposite of which is Dion. Hal. T. i. p. 99. Oxon. 1704, πάντα πολέμια κατεργασάμενοι. We may suppose the neuter here (as often) put for the masculine, as in the passage of Dion. Hal., or rather ἅπαντα may be taken adverbially for omnino. Moreover, the above interpretation of κατεργ. is required by the antithetical term στῆναι, which must signify 'to stand victorious over, survive the contest.' So Thucyd. v. 102, καὶ ὑμῖν τὸ μὲν εἶξαι εὐθὺς ἀνέλπιστον, μετὰ δὲ τοῦ δρωμένου ἔτι καὶ στῆναι ἐλπὶς ὀρθῶς, where see my Note, and that on 2 Cor. iv. 8. Perhaps the Apostle had in view Ps. xx. 8: 'Some put their trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the name of the Lord our God. They are brought down, and fallen; but we are risen, and stand upright.' Where the Sept. has καὶ ἀνορθώθημεν. But the true sense of קמנו is, I think, that expressed by Piscator and Gigæus, stetimus, (or stamus) immoti et victores. See Josh. vii. 12. The next word ונתעודד is exegetical of the preceding, and it is well rendered by Tirin. consistimus. It would have been better translated in the Greek by ὀρθοὶ ἱστάμεθα.

In pointing as above, I have the support of the Pesch. Syr. Version and Wakefield. Such, indeed, is required by propriety and by the scope of the context, on which see Calvin and Hyperius.

14. The Apostle now repeats for the third time his exhortation, and that in order to develope the nature of the duty by tracing its various parts. In the accommodation of the figure employed we may observe consummate skill and address. Στῆτε means 'stand to your arms!' the first thing soldiers learn. Περιζωσάμενοι is for περιζ. τ. ὀ. ὑ. ἐ. ἀ. ὡς ζωστῆρι, or περιζώματι; there being an allusion to the belts with which the flowing vests of the Orientals require to be girded up for any active employment.

— ἐν ἀληθείᾳ] 'in truth and sincerity,' true and sincere belief, the bracer up and support of religious constancy. Similar metaphors occur in Philo-Jud. and Josephus. By δικ. must here be meant the constant practice of the moral and Christian virtues, which would be the surest external safeguard against the calumnies of Pagan adversaries, as it would also be the best internal support and comfort. In this noble passage we may suppose the Apostle to have had in mind a similar one of Wisd. v. 17—20; also Is. lix. 17, ἐνεδύσατο δικαιοσύνην ὡς θώρακα.

15. καὶ ὑποδησάμενοι—εἰρήνης.] Meaning, it would seem, 'And [like as soldiers have their feet shod with sandals armed with iron, as a defence against the roughness, and a security against the slipperiness, of the roads,] so do ye arm yourselves against the rough or slippery temptations of your Christian course, by being, as it were, shod with the preparation and defence supplied by the Gospel of peace (i. e. which alone gives peace), even the strong motives to constancy in religion and a holy life supplied by the Gospel.'

16. ἐπὶ πᾶσιν] 'above all,' or rather in addition to, or besides [the rest]: a sense often occurring in the Classics, especially with πᾶσι. At ἐν ᾧ δυνήσεσθε—σβέσαι there is no incongruity, as some suppose, in the metaphor. The βέλη πεπυρ. (more properly termed βέλη πυρφόρα, or ὀϊστοὶ πυρφόροι; though πεπυρωμένα βέλη occurs in Apollodorus) were slender arrows of cane, to which ignited combustible matter was attached, which, when shot, would set on fire wood-work, tents, &c. So Thucyd. ii. 75, πυρφόροις ὀϊστοῖς βάλλεσθαι: see Herodot. viii. 52. Now it was the aim of the persons so assailed to intercept and quench these burning arrows; and that could by nothing be so effectually done as by the use of their shields, (especially the large oblong shield here meant, and called θυρεός, from its resemblance to a door, which would extinguish them,) since they were easily put out by a sudden jerk, and required only some soft substance on which to fix themselves. Of course the term will here denote sharp trials and strong temptations. With θυρεὸν τῆς πίστεως compare similar expressions in Ps. xvii. 35, ὑπερασπισμὸν n Isa. 59. 17. 1 Thess. 5. 8. Heb. 4. 12. Rev. 1. 16.

o Matt. 26. 41. Col. 4. 2. Luke 18. 1. 1 Thess. 5. 17. p Acts 4. 29. Col. 4. 3.
q Acts 28. 20. 2 Cor. 5. 20.
r Acts 20. 4. Col. 4. 7, 9. 2 Tim. 4. 12. Tit. 3. 12.
s 2 Tim. 4. 12.

μένα σβέσαι. [n] Καὶ τὴν περικεφαλαίαν τοῦ σωτηρίου δέξασθε, 17
καὶ τὴν μάχαιραν τοῦ Πνεύματος, ὅ ἐστι ῥῆμα Θεοῦ· [o] διὰ 18
πάσης προσευχῆς καὶ δεήσεως προσευχόμενοι ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ ἐν πνεύματι· καὶ εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἀγρυπνοῦντες ἐν πάσῃ προσκαρτερήσει καὶ δεήσει περὶ πάντων τῶν ἁγίων, [p] καὶ 19 ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, ἵνα μοι δοθῇ λόγος ἐν ἀνοίξει τοῦ στόματός μου ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ, γνωρίσαι τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, [q] ὑπὲρ 20 οὗ πρεσβεύω ἐν ἁλύσει· ἵνα ἐν αὐτῷ παῤῥησιάσωμαι, ὡς δεῖ με λαλῆσαι.
[r] Ἵνα δὲ εἰδῆτε καὶ ὑμεῖς τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ, τί πράσσω, πάντα 21 ὑμῖν γνωρίσει Τυχικὸς ὁ ἀγαπητὸς ἀδελφὸς καὶ πιστὸς διάκονος ἐν Κυρίῳ· [s] ὃν ἔπεμψα πρὸς ὑμᾶς εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, 22 ἵνα γνῶτε τὰ περὶ ἡμῶν, καὶ παρακαλέσῃ τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν.
Εἰρήνη τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς καὶ ἀγάπη μετὰ πίστεως ἀπὸ Θεοῦ 23
Πατρὸς καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ! Ἡ χάρις μετὰ πάντων 24 τῶν ἀγαπώντων τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ! ἀμήν.

σωτηρίας, and Æschyl. Ag. 1412, ἀσπὶς θράσους.

17. τοῦ σωτηρ.] for τῆς σωτηρίας, as in Is. xxxviii. 11. Ps. lxxxiv. 7. Luke ii. 30. iii. 6. Acts xxviii. 28. Here it must mean the hope of salvation, as in 1 Thess. v. 8, ἐνδυσάμενοι περικεφαλαίαν ἐλπίδα σωτηρίας. By τοῦ Πνεύμ. (notwithstanding what some recent Commentators urge) must be meant the Holy Spirit; and by ῥῆμα Θεοῦ, both the revelation of the Holy Spirit to man in the Scriptures of the Old Test., and also in the promulgation of the Gospel of Christ with such glorious power in that age. Now this would supply the best defensive weapon against all the attacks of adversaries, as supplying abundant matter to refute every infidel objection.

18. Having thus equipped the Christian soldier with the spiritual panoply, the Apostle proceeds to show him how he is to use it,—namely, by fervent prayer.

— ἐν πνεύματι.] This being without the Article must mean, 'in spirit,' i. e. really, heartily, and truly. So John iv. 23, προσκυνήσουσι ἐν πνεύματι καὶ ἀληθείᾳ. Προσκαρτερήσει is a stronger expression than προσευχῆς, signifying a long continuing, unremitted perseverance in prayer. The words following, εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἀγρυπνοῦντες serve to explain the preceding ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ; denoting, as Theophylact says, τὴν νῆψιν τῆς ψυχῆς.

To frequent and earnest application for spiritual aid, under the various trials they might be exposed to, they are to add prayers for the support and welfare of Christians in general.

19. δοθῇ.] This reading, for δοθείη, is found in many of the best MSS., Fathers, and early Editions, and has been edited by Griesbach, Matthæi, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz. By λόγος some understand a power of speaking; others, permission to speak; others, again, opportunity to speak. The words ἐν ἀνοίξει—παῤῥησίᾳ may best be rendered, 'by opening my mouth with freedom.' Probably St. Paul expected soon to be brought to a public hearing, and then to be permitted to vindicate both himself and the Gospel. On the expression τὸ μυστ. τοῦ εὐαγγ., see Note on 1 Cor. ii. 7.

20. πρεσβεύω] i. e. 'I sustain the office of πρεσβεὺς, or ambassador.' So ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ πρεσβεύομεν at 2 Cor. v. 20. In ἐν ἁλύσει there is supposed to be an allusion to the custom of all nations of holding inviolate the person of an ambassador. Whenever ἁλ. is used with ἐν, it has a generic sense, to denote chains, or, figuratively, imprisonment. Finally, the words ἵνα ἐν αὐτῷ—λαλῆσαι are further explanatory of those at ver. 19, where see Note.

21. τί πράσσω.] This is exegetical of the foregoing, τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ, scil. πράγματα. It is a popular phrase occurring also in 1 Sam. xvii. 18. Ὁ ἀγαπητὸς should not be rendered 'a beloved,' as in almost all our Versions; for that is neglecting the Article; nor 'the beloved,' with Wakefield; though the common Version so renders at Rom. xvi. 12, Περσίδα τὴν ἀγαπητὴν, and 3 John 1, Γαΐῳ τῷ ἀγαπητῷ. It is clear from Rom. xvi. 12, that the Article cannot be meant to mark notoriety, or celebrity, and therefore the cannot be tolerated. It is, I conceive, used for the possessive pronoun. Thus in Philem. 1, 2, our common Version rightly renders Φιλ. τῷ ἀγαπητῷ and Ἀπ. τῇ ἀγ. by 'our beloved Philemon and our beloved Appia.'

22. παρακαλέσῃ τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν.] This is not to be understood of exhortation, but in the usual sense comfort or console, namely, by freeing them from excessive anxiety on his account.

Καρδία is here said to be put, per synecdochen, for the person himself, as in other passages where various affections or passions are attributed to the heart; as John xvi. 22, χαρήσεται ὑμῶν ἡ καρδία, and Acts ii. 26, εὐφράνθη ἡ καρδία μου.

23. ἀγάπη μετὰ πίστεως] i. e. 'united with faith, love, and charity.'

24. ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ] 'with sincerity and truth.'

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΦΙΛΙΠΠΗΣΙΟΥΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

---

1 I. [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ καὶ Τιμόθεος, δοῦλοι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, a 1 Cor. 1. 2.
πᾶσι τοῖς ἁγίοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Φιλίπποις, b Rom. 1 7. 1 Pet. 1. 2.
2 σὺν ἐπισκόποις καὶ διακόνοις· [b] χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ c Rom. 1. 9, 10.
Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. 1 Cor. 1. 4. Eph. 1. 15. Col. 1. 3.
3 [c] Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ μνείᾳ ὑμῶν, 1 Thess. 1. 2. 2 Thess. 1. 3.

THIS is evidently one of the later Epistles of St. Paul; though on its exact date no little difference of opinion exists. Some ascribe to it a date as early as A.D. 58, others as late as 65. The most probable date seems to be that of 62; since it was evidently written during St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. That it was then written, is plain from i. 7. 13. iv. 22, and from various intimations in it (i. 12. ii. 26). The church of Philippi was founded by St. Paul, A.D. 50 (Acts xvi. 9—14); and that he again visited them in 57, we learn from Acts xx. 6. They had been all along very liberal in imparting to him of their substance, and had, on various occasions, though but a poor community, aided him with money, that he might he enabled to carry on his great designs for the evangelization of the principal cities of Greece and Asia Minor, without incurring the imputation of interested motives, by becoming chargeable to his converts. Accordingly, when they heard of his imprisonment at Rome, they evinced the same good dispositions towards him as formerly, and sent Epaphroditus, one of their Presbyters, with a present for the relief of his necessities, which, it appears from the Epistle, were great. The more immediate purpose of this Epistle (sent on the return of Epaphroditus) was to return thanks to the Philippians for their kindness. Of this Epistle the genuineness has never been doubted. The purpose of it was to express to the Philippians his feelings of gratitude for their bounty, and his esteem and affection for their zeal and Christian virtue, and at the same time to confirm them in the pure faith of Christ, to caution them against Judaizing teachers, and encourage them to continue to walk worthy of their high calling. The general character of the Epistle is that of unqualified commendation, couched in a style singularly animated and affectionate.

I. 1. ἐπισκόποις.] On this word see the Note on Acts xx. 17. 28, and especially the elaborate Note of Whitby, who observes that 'the Greek and Latin Fathers with one consent declare that the Apostle here calls their Presbyters their Bishops.' So Chrysostom, Theodoret, Œcumen, and Theophylact among the Greeks, and, among the Latins, St. Jerome, Pseudo-Ambrosius, Pelagius, and Primasius; and that not only for the above-mentioned reason, that 'there could be but one Bishop, properly so called, in one city;' but for another, alleged by them all, viz. that τέως ἐκοινώνουν τοῖς ὀνόμασι, 'then the names were common to both orders,' the Bishops being called Presbyters, and the Presbyters Bishops. 'And this (Theodoret says) is manifest in this place, because he adds here Deacons to the Bishops, making no mention of their Presbyters.' Notwithstanding what has been so confidently asserted, that there was no distinction between Presbyters and Bishops until some time after the Apostolical age, the profoundly learned Bingham, in his Eccl. Antiq. l. ii. 1, seems to have satisfactorily proved the existence of a power in the Apostolical age itself equivalent to that of Bishops; and, in the next age to the Apostolical, both the exercise of the power, and the assumption of the title of Bishop. The term was at length appropriated to denote what we understand by Bishop (namely, a Ruler of the Church), and was probably so employed with reference to Is. lx. 17, Sept., δώσω τοὺς ἄρχοντάς σου ἐν εἰρήνῃ, καὶ τοὺς ἐπισκόπους σου ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ.

2—4. See Rom. i. 7—9, and Note. Eph. i. 15, 16.

3. εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ, &c.] for χάριν ἔχω. Ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ μνείᾳ ὑμῶν, 'at every remembrance of you;' meaning, as often as I have remembrance of you, or bring you to my mind. Comp. 1 Cor. i. 4, and Eph. i. 15, 16.

3—12. These verses contain the exordium, which commences, as usual, with congratulation; 'and that, in the present case (as Calvin observes) for two reasons: 1. that he may thereby evince d Infra 4. 14, 15. Rom. 12. 13. 2 Cor. 8. 4. Heb. 13. 16.

e John 6. 29. 1 Thess. 1. 3.
f Col. 4. 3, 18. 2 Tim. 1. 8. Heb. 13. 3.

πάντοτε, ἐν πάσῃ δεήσει μου, ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν μετὰ 4 χαρᾶς τὴν δέησιν ποιούμενος [d] ἐπὶ τῇ κοινωνίᾳ ὑμῶν εἰς τὸ 5 εὐαγγέλιον, ἀπὸ πρώτης ἡμέρας ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν· [e] πεποιθὼς 6 αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ὅτι ὁ ἐναρξάμενος ἐν ὑμῖν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν, ἐπιτελέσει ἄχρις ἡμέρας Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. [f] Καθώς ἐστι δίκαιον 7 ἐμοὶ τοῦτο φρονεῖν ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, διὰ τὸ ἔχειν με ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμᾶς, ἔν τε τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀπολογίᾳ καὶ βεβαιώσει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, συγκοινωνούς μου τῆς his love to them; 2. that, by praising them for what is past, he may animate them to go on in like manner for the future.'

4. δεήσει.] The expression is not, as some consider it, synonymous with προσευχῇ, but denotes supplicatory prayer, or intercession.

— τὴν δέησιν.] Render, 'the' or 'my supplication.' Meaning, that whenever he offers up supplication for them, he offers it with joy.

This sentence has been variously pointed; but the punctuation I have adopted seems to be the best.

5. ἐπὶ τῇ κοινωνίᾳ ὑμῶν εἰς τὸ εὐαγγ.] On the sense of these words no little difference of opinion exists. It is obvious that ἐπὶ signifies super, for, because; but it is not so clear what is meant by κοινωνίᾳ. The ancient, and some eminent modern Expositors interpret, 'for your liberality in contributing to the furtherance of the Gospel;' citing, in proof of this signification of the word, several passages, the most apposite of which is 2 Cor. ix. 13, ἁπλότης τῆς κοινωνίας εἰς αὐτούς. That, however, will only justify the use as applied to persons, not things. In fact, such a sense would be neither sufficiently important, nor in the Apostle's manner. It is better, with most eminent modern Expositors, to suppose the sense to be, 'for your participation in [the blessings of] the Gospel;' involving, as Calvin shows, the doctrine of the communion of saints; meaning that communion which the saints have with Christ, and all his benefits by faith, and the communion which they have among themselves; see 1 John i. 3. It is, indeed, urged that thus εἰς will here be used for ἐν, which would be rather harsh. In the present case, however (and in most of the examples of εἰς for ἐν adduced), there is not so much a use of εἰς for ἐν, as a blending of two modes of expression. Thus the full sense will be, 'that you have been converted to the Gospel, and are become partakers, with others, of its blessings;' 'which,' observes Calvin, 'can only be by its having been received in faith, otherwise the Gospel would be nothing to us.'

The words ἀπὸ πρώτης ἡμέρας (scil. τῆς κοινωνίας ὑμῶν) refer to and are exegetical of πάντοτε μετὰ χαρᾶς τὴν δέησιν π.; q. d. 'And this I have done, from,' &c.

6. πεποιθὼς, &c.] This states the grounds of his alacrity in praying for them, as ὅτι does the object of his confidence. Ἔργον ἀγαθὸν may be understood either of faith in embracing the Gospel, or of conversion, reformation, and sanctification by the Gospel, which is confirmed by the absence of the Article at ἀγαθὸν, and is more agreeable to the next words. Both, however, may be supposed intended, namely, faith and holiness. So 1 Tim. ii. 15, ἐὰν μείνωσιν ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ καὶ ἁγιασμῷ. Πεποιθὼς is well rendered by Hyperius and Grotius, 'persuasum habens,' and by Calvin and the Arabic Translators, 'hoc ipsum persuasus,' as we say, 'being fully persuaded of this.' This of course constituting, as Theophylact says, a judgment of charity; the Apostle conjecturing from the past what they would be for the future.

— ἐπιτελέσει ἄχρις, &c.] We have here a significatio prægnans; the full sense being, 'will go on with it unto, and finish it at,' &c.; meaning, 'will carry it forwards till it has reached completion;' for, as Bengel observes, 'initium est pignus consummationis.' Similarly it is said, 1 Cor. i. 8, ὃς βεβαιώσει ὑμᾶς ἕως τέλους, &c.

By ἡμέρας Ἰ. Χρ. is meant, either the day of judgment, when Christ shall appear in his glory, or the day of death, which is to every one, as it were, the day of the Lord. The Apostle, as Grotius observes, supposes their co-operation in the good work begun, and being carried on, though he chooses to mention only the principal and nobler cause. There is need to bear in mind the caution suggested by the words; since, as Philo, cited by Grotius, says, πολλοὶ ἀσκηταὶ γενόμενοι τῆς ἀρετῆς, ἐπὶ τοῦ τέλους μετέβαλον.

7. καθώς ἐστι δίκαιον—ὑμᾶς.] Of this verse, which involves no little obscurity, Abp. Newcome offers the following version: 'As it is right for me to think this of you all, because I have you in mine heart, and because both in my bonds, and in my defence of myself, and my confirmation of the Gospel, I have you all joint partakers of the favour bestowed on me.' Yet, according to this interpretation, no tolerable sense can be assigned to συγκοιν. μου τῆς χάριτος; for to explain it, as he does, of participation, by sympathy, in the favour extended towards him, is not a little frigid. And this repetition from the context of ἔχω ὑμᾶς is exceedingly harsh. The common version however cannot be justified, since it compels us to adopt a still harsher explanation of συγκ. μου τῆς χάριτος. Much, indeed, of the perplexity in this passage has been occasioned by connecting ἔν τε τοῖς δεσμοῖς—εὐαγγ. with the words following, when, in fact, they belong to those preceding, though they are in some measure parenthetical. In the words following, συγκοινωνούς μου τῆς χάριτος πάντας ὑμᾶς ὄντας there is, as it were, a resumption of the construction, interrupted by the words ἔν τε τοῖς δεσμοῖς—εὐαγγ.; q. d. διὰ τὸ ἔχειν με ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμᾶς ὄντας συγκοινωνούς μου τῆς χάριτος, which must be repeated, with a slight change of sense in καρδίᾳ. The Apostle means

8 χάριτος πάντας ὑμᾶς ὄντας. [g] Μάρτυς γάρ μου ἐστὶν ὁ Θεὸς, ὡς ἐπιποθῶ πάντας ὑμᾶς ἐν σπλάγχνοις Ἰησοῦ 9 Χριστοῦ. [h] Καὶ τοῦτο προσεύχομαι, ἵνα ἡ ἀγάπη ὑμῶν ἔτι μᾶλλον καὶ μᾶλλον περισσεύῃ ἐν ἐπιγνώσει καὶ πάσῃ αἰσθή-10 σει· [i] εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν ὑμᾶς τὰ διαφέροντα, ἵνα ἦτε εἰλι-
11 κρινεῖς καὶ ἀπρόσκοποι εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ, [k] πεπληρωμένοι ‡ καρπῶν δικαιοσύνης τῶν διὰ [Ἰησοῦ] Χριστοῦ, εἰς δόξαν καὶ ἔπαινον Θεοῦ.

g Rom. 1. 9. & 9. 1. 2 Tim. 4. 1.
h Eph. 1. 8.
i Rom. 2. 18. & 12. 2. 1 Cor. 10. 32. 1 Thess. 3. 13.
k John 15. 4, 5, 8. Eph. 1. 12, 20. & 2. 10.

to say, that it was but natural and proper (Acts iv. 19), that he should be thus affected towards them; i. e. that he should have this persuasion respecting them (with reference to πάντοτε—τὴν δέησιν ποιούμενος at ver. 4), making continual and joyful remembrance of them in his prayers, because he had them in his mind at all times, in the most trying situations; and because he had them in his heart (bore a heartfelt affection for them; for such is the sense of the expression ἔχειν ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ, as in 2 Cor. vii. 3), inasmuch as they were all sharers with him of the Divine grace bestowed on him, and acting on the same principles; which constitutes the strongest bond of affection imaginable.

Here, then, we have one (and that a principal one) among the several arguments for φιλαδελφία, or brotherly love, as appears from Eph. iv. 4, seqq.

8. γάρ.] This refers to the words διὰ τὸ ἔχειν—ὑμᾶς in the preceding verse; q. d. '[I say, I have you in my mind, and bear you in my heart;] for,' &c. On the phrase μάρτυς μου ἐστὶν ὁ Θεὸς, see Rom. i. 9, and Note. Ἐπιποθῶ is a stronger term than ἀγαπάω; see Note at 2 Cor. ix. 14. In ἐν σπλάγχνοις Ἰησοῦ Χρ. we have a strong Hebraism, denoting the most ardent Christian love; meaning, such as Christ had for the human race.

9—11. Here is contained a sort of compendium, by specimen, of the prayers which he is accustomed to address to God on their behalf. By ἀγάπη we are to understand, not 'love to himself,' as some Expositors, ancient and modern, suppose; but, in the most extensive sense of the word, 'love to God, his religion, commands,' &c., and of man for God's sake; involving the principle of love so finely described in 1 Cor. xiii. In ἐπιγνώσει we have a stronger term than γνώσει, denoting full knowledge of any thing; by which we may understand knowledge generally, though especially that of divine things. So the Syriac Translator adds spirituali. Αἰσθ. denotes that quick perception of truth or falsehood, right or wrong, which constitutes or much tends to what we call judgment; what is at Heb. v. 14, ascribed, in the spiritual sense, to the τελείοις οἱ διὰ τὴν ἕξιν τὰ αἰσθητήρια γεγυμνασμένα ἔχοντες πρὸς διάκρισιν καλοῦ τε καὶ κακοῦ.

Here, then, the Apostle prays that their knowledge and spiritual understanding may keep pace with the increase of their love and affection; since, by that means, Christian love produces the better fruits. They had, it seems, been from the first docile, well-disposed, and kind-hearted; but, as would appear from the words following, their simplicity had been somewhat abused by crafty false teachers, chiefly Judaizers, &c.

10, 11. δοκιμάζειν τὰ διαφέροντα, &c.] In δοκιμάζειν we have an allusion to the effect of knowledge and discernment in that experience which often enables us to decide at once on the comparative difference of things; that experience, to use the words of our great epic poet,

'————— Which doth attain
To something like prophetic strain.'

By the expression δοκιμάζειν τὰ διαφέροντα may indeed be meant, as many eminent Commentators explain, to approve (i. e. put to proof and ascertain by trial) the things which excel; meaning, the excellence of any thing. But, from the context, it must rather signify, 'to distinguish between, and, after examination, decide upon, things which differ;' a sense of δοκιμάζειν occurring at Rom. ii. 18. 1 Cor. iii. 13. So it is well observed by Calvin: 'Definitio Christianæ sapientiæ, cognoscere quid e re sit, vel expediat; non in vanis argutiis ac speculationibus ingenium torquere.'

— ἵνα ἦτε εἰλικρινεῖς, &c.] Εἰλικ. has reference to purity of faith and doctrine; ἀπρόσκ., to integrity and rectitude of conduct. So Acts xxiv. 16, ἀπρόσκοπον συνείδησιν ἔχειν. Thus it is nearly equivalent to ἄμεμπτοι at ii. 15. Εἰς ἡμέραν Χρ. must mean, 'at the end of their Christian course;' see Note supra v. 6. The words πεπληρ. κ. δ. are a further development of the idea contained in the preceding clause, and represent the good works as being abundant as well as excellent, and thereby evincing the goodness of the tree of faith which produced them. By διὰ Ἰ. Χ. it is hinted that these works are, however, only the effects of his grace, by the Holy Spirit, and alone accepted through his mediation. By εἰς δόξ. κ. ἔ. Θ. is meant 'which would redound to the glory of God, and the recommendation of his religion.'

For καρπῶν—τῶν several MSS. of the Western recension and some Versions have καρπὸν—τὸν, which has been edited by Griesbach and Scholz; but without sufficient reason; since the singular seems to have arisen from the Vulgate and Latin MSS., and to have been adopted from inattention to the idiom of the Latin language, by which the word fructus rarely occurs in the plural in a metaphorical sense. As to the other Versions, they are chiefly such as usually follow the Vulgate; and the MSS. are such as Latinize; not to mention that ω and ο are perpetually confounded. The common reading, too, is more agreeable to the style of the New Test. (see James iii. 17), and is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version. And although καρπὸν—τὸν be the more difficult reading, and on that account may seem entitled to the preference, yet that rule is not to be appealed to where

Γινώσκειν δὲ ὑμᾶς βούλομαι, ἀδελφοὶ, ὅτι τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ 12
l Infra 4. 22. μᾶλλον εἰς προκοπὴν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἐλήλυθεν· [l] ὥστε τοὺς 13 δεσμούς μου φανεροὺς ἐν Χριστῷ γενέσθαι ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ πραιm Eph. 3. 13. 1 Thess. 3. 3. τωρίῳ καὶ τοῖς λοιποῖς πᾶσι, [m] καὶ τοὺς πλείονας τῶν ἀδελ- 14
φῶν ἐν Κυρίῳ, πεποιθότας τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου, περισσοτέρως τολμᾶν ἀφόβως τὸν λόγον λαλεῖν. Τινὲς μὲν καὶ διὰ 15 φθόνον καὶ ἔριν, τινὲς δὲ καὶ δι' εὐδοκίαν τὸν Χριστὸν κηρύσσουσιν. Οἱ μὲν ἐξ ἐριθείας τὸν Χριστὸν καταγγέλ- 16
λουσιν, οὐχ ἁγνῶς, οἰόμενοι θλίψιν ἐπιφέρειν τοῖς δεσμοῖς a manifest violation of propriety of language is involved. I have, therefore, thought proper, with Matthæi, Tittman, and Vater, to retain the common reading.

12—26. The Apostle now proceeds to speak of himself and of those connected with him.

12. γινώσκειν δὲ ὑμᾶς βούλομαι, &c.] A form of expression serving to introduce some interesting communication. At τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ supply πράγματα; meaning, any one's affairs, but here the events that have happened to me, my present condition; q. d. 'So far from my bonds and other trials and afflictions proving (as you might apprehend) obstructions to the progress of the Gospel, they have conduced rather to its advancement and promotion.' 'Ελήλ. for ἀπέβησεν, 'cessit in,' 'have tended to,' as Mark v. 26. The words ὥστε τοὺς δεσμοὺς—φανεροὺς (sub. ὄντας) are meant to intimate the manner in which this furtherance to the Gospel had been produced; ὥστε—γενέσθαι standing for εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι, which would be equivalent to ἐν τῷ γενέσθαι; namely, by his imprisonment being publicly known, together with the cause of it, even the preaching of a religion so full of hope and consolation to men. Besides that persecution naturally rather furthers the cause it is intended to suppress; and courageous endurance of persecution for religion's sake recommends it, by showing its reality, and displaying its efficacy. 'Εν Χριστῷ. Meaning, 'on account of Christ and his religion only, and not for any crime.'

13. ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ πραιτωρίῳ.] By πραιτ. some understand the camp or quarters of the Prætorians; others, the Palace called Prætorium, being the residence of the military governor of Rome, the commander of the Prætorian bands, the body-guards of the emperor; others, again, the royal or imperial palace, or Court, meaning its inhabitants. Thus τοῖς λοιποῖς πᾶσι will mean the rest of the inhabitants of the city. This last view involves the least difficulty.

14. πεποιθότας τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου] i. e. taking courage at the intrepid manner in which I bear my bonds. Τοὺς πλείονας. Properly signifying 'the greater part,' the bulk; but perhaps here merely meaning, 'very many.'

15. This and the ensuing verses indicate the existence of a party at Rome (like that at most other places where Paul preached the Gospel), which was hostile to him. The persons who composed it are supposed to have been Judaizers, who concealed part of their sentiments, and preached the substance of the Gospel, in order to form a party under their influence, and in opposition to the Apostle and his friends, that so they might gradually impose the Mosaic law on the Gentile converts. They were, in fact, worldly-minded persons, to whom the humbling doctrines of the Gospel preached by Paul could not but be unacceptable. Nay, they must have been, in some measure, insincere in their profession of the Gospel. Thus there were two parties of those who preached the word; one party actuated, in what they did, by envy of Paul's popularity, and by contentiousness, δι' ἔριν (for ἐξ ἔριδος, or ἐξ ἐριθείας of the next verse; like the οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας at Rom. ii. 8); others, δι' εὐδοκίαν, out of good-will and love to man (especially Paul) for God's sake, as opposed to a sectarian spirit.

16, 17. These verses are explanatory of the preceding; ver. 16, of the τινὲς μὲν, &c., and ver. 17, of the τινὲς δὲ, &c. Though in several MSS. of the Western recension, Versions, and Fathers, they are transposed, which has been approved by most Critics, and adopted by Griesbach, Knapp, Vater, Heinrichs, Tittman, and Scholz; but without sufficient reason; for though the transposed order is more agreeable to Classical usage (by which μὲν is referred to the nearer, and δὲ to the more remote, and is found in 2 Cor. iii. 16), yet the other is more agreeable to Scriptural expression. And, indeed, the usual position is the more likely to have been adopted by St. Paul, as being the more natural one, by which the placing of the two kinds of preachers would correspond to that in ver. 15. This is much confirmed by 2 Tim. ii. 20, where ἃ μὲν has reference to what precedes, ἃ δὲ to what follows.

16. οὐχ ἁγνῶς] 'not from pure motives, but those of selfishness and contention;' implying, more or less, a want of sincerity in the profession of the Gospel, as is plain from the phrase προφάσει at ver. 18. The words οἰόμενοι—μου are usually supposed to mean, 'They are desirous to add yet more affliction to that of my confinement, by strengthening the hands of my adversaries.' But the ancient and many modern Expositors take the sense to be, 'They are desirous of bringing upon me severity of treatment, in addition to confinement.' Both senses were probably intended, since either motive may have actuated different persons, or even the same persons at different times. For ἐπιφέρειν many ancient MSS., and some Versions and Fathers, have ἐγείρειν, which was approved by Mill, and is edited by Lachmann, and preferred by Steiger, as being the more difficult reading; but wrongly. It is plainly a gloss, which arose from the somewhat unusualness of ἐπιφέρειν in this sense, though it occurs in the best writers. To the examples from Philo and Aristotle, adduced by Commentators, I add 17 μου· [n] οἱ δὲ ἐξ ἀγάπης, εἰδότες ὅτι εἰς ἀπολογίαν τοῦ [n] 1 Cor. 9. 17.

18 εὐαγγελίου κεῖμαι. Τί γάρ; πλὴν παντὶ τρόπῳ, εἴτε προφάσει εἴτε ἀληθείᾳ, Χριστὸς καταγγέλλεται· καὶ ἐν τούτῳ 19 χαίρω, ἀλλὰ καὶ χαρήσομαι. [o] Οἶδα γὰρ ὅτι τοῦτό μοι [o] 2 Cor. 1. 11.
ἀποβήσεται εἰς σωτηρίαν διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν δεήσεως, καὶ ἐπιχο-20 ρηγίας τοῦ Πνεύματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, [p] κατὰ τὴν ἀποκαρα- [p] Rom. 5. 5. δοκίαν καὶ ἐλπίδα μου, ὅτι ἐν οὐδενὶ αἰσχυνθήσομαι, ἀλλ' ἐν πάσῃ παῤῥησίᾳ, ὡς πάντοτε, καὶ νῦν μεγαλυνθήσεται Χριστὸς ἐν τῷ σώματί μου, εἴτε διὰ ζωῆς εἴτε διὰ θανάτου· 21 —[q] ἐμοὶ γὰρ τὸ ζῆν Χριστὸς, καὶ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν κέρδος. [q] Gal. 2. 20.

Thucydides, iii. 56. vii. 55. There, however, and perhaps here, the sense is not superadd, but 'bring upon,' as in Thucydides, i. 70. iii. 46. Ἐξ ἀγάπης. Meaning, 'out of love [to me and to the Gospel].' For those who really loved the Gospel could not but love Paul, as being appointed for its defence.

17. κεῖμαι.] Render, 'am placed where I am;' meaning, 'am appointed to this office, or, am ordained to this ministry.' So 1 Thess. iii. 3, εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ κείμεθα. See Note on Luke ii. 34.

18. τί γάρ;] scil. διαφέρει; q. d. 'not to enlarge on the motives of either class of persons.' The force of the phrase is well illustrated by Steiger, who observes, that 'in such interrogations and exclamations γὰρ has the conclusive sense quid ergo? answering to the French donc, quoi donc? and so is equivalent to τί οὖν;' How it comes to have this signification has been variously explained. According to some philologists, we are to suppose an ellipsis; i. e. 'but no, they are mistaken, for what is that to me?' So it is equivalent to 'what does that signify?'

Πλὴν is not well rendered nevertheless, or notwithstanding: it rather stands for πλὴν ὅτι, attamen, which, indeed, is found in several MSS. and Fathers; but, doubtless, from a gloss. Render, 'Be it by pretext, or in appearance, with a pretended zeal (corresponding to οὐχ ἁγνῶς at ver. 16; see also 1 Cor. v. 8), or be it in real sincerity,' &c. So at 1 Cor. v. 8, we have εἰλικρινείᾳ and ἀληθείᾳ conjoined. The Apostle does not mean to say it is the same whether the Gospel be taught in this or in that way, but that it is better for the Heathens and Jews to have some than no knowledge of Christ. So also the next words, καὶ ἐν τούτῳ χαίρω, ἀλλὰ καὶ χαρήσομαι, must be taken with the same qualification, namely, 'In this spread of the Gospel, though it has partly proceeded from improper motives, and though the doctrines may not have been correct, yet do I rejoice,' &c.

— χαίρω, ἀλ. καὶ χαρ.] Here there is no occasion to stumble, as some have done, at the Apostle's rejoicing in the spread of error; since we may suppose only that their motives were not pure. So Theodoret: ἐκείνων κατηγόρησεν, οὐχ ὡς φαῦλα διδασκόντων, ἀλλ' ὡς καλὰ μὲν, οὐ καλῶς δέ. At all events there would be in any case reason to rejoice at the Gospel being made known to the Heathens.

19. τοῦτο.] This is not, with many, to be confined to Paul's captivity, but to be understood of the whole matter just before mentioned, the harm done, or meant to be done, to Paul, by the hatred and jealousy stirred up against him. Σωτηρίαν here, though generally understood to mean salvation, may have the sense assigned to it by the ancient and many eminent modern Commentators (including all the recent ones), temporal deliverance. So 2 Cor. i. 6, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας. And so Job iii. 16 (a passage probably here had in view by the Apostle), καὶ τοῦτό μοι ἀποβήσεται εἰς σωτηρίαν. Yet the words following, [διὰ] ἐπιχορηγίας τοῦ Πνεύμ. Ἰ. Χρ., seem more in favour of the other interpretation. To remove this difficulty, the best course will be to take σωτηρ., in the most general sense of the word, of benefit, or welfare (as in Acts xxvii. 34, and often), which may then be understood in the two senses of temporal and of spiritual benefit; the former as adverted to in διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν δεήσεως (comp. 2 Cor. i. 11, and Acts xii. 5); the latter in ἐπιχορηγίας τοῦ Πνεύματος Ἰ. Χρ.; which must (notwithstanding what some recent Commentators say) mean, 'by the supply of the Holy Spirit of Christ [procured by our prayers];' see Chrysostom and Theophylact, and compare Gal. iii. 5, ὁ ἐπιχορηγῶν ὑμῖν τὸ Πνεῦμα, and 2 Cor. ix. 10. The Spirit, meaning the grace of the Spirit, is said to be of Christ, as being procured by him; see John xvi. 7. And that Christ is considered as the bestower of the Spirit is plain from 2 Cor. iii. 17, 18 (see also John i. 16), though, as he proceeds from the Father and the Son (see Matt. iii. 16. John xv. 26), he is often called τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ.

20. ἀποκαραδ.] 'anxious expectation,' as in Rom. viii. 19, where see Note. Ὅτι ἐν οὐδενὶ αἰσχ., i. e. 'that in no respect shall I have reason to be ashamed [by being frustrated in my endeavours], but shall rise superior to all my difficulties.' In this manner the word is used in 2 Cor. x. 8. 1 John ii. 28. Ecclus. xxiv. 30. li. 24. To show that he seeks not his own glory, in any success, he adds, μεγαλυνθ. Χρ. Ἐν τῷ σώματί μου is more energetic than ἐν ἐμοὶ would have been, since martyrs and saints are said to glorify God 'in their bodies.' See John xxi. 19.

21. ἐμοὶ γὰρ—κέρδος.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[And whether one or the other shall befal, is all one to me,] for,' &c. On the sense of the words following, some difference of opinion exists. According to the interpretation most generally adopted, the meaning here (the same as in the latter clause of the preceding verse) is, that 'both in life and death Christ is his gain;' i. e. that his death and

Εἰ δὲ τὸ ζῆν ἐν σαρκὶ τοῦτό μοι καρπὸς ἔργου,—καὶ τί 22
r 2 Cor. 5. 8. αἱρήσομαι οὐ γνωρίζω· [r] συνέχομαι * δὲ ἐκ τῶν δύο· τὴν 23
ἐπιθυμίαν ἔχων εἰς τὸ ἀναλῦσαι, καὶ σὺν Χριστῷ εἶναι· (πολλῷ μᾶλλον κρεῖσσον·) τὸ δὲ ἐπιμένειν ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ 24 s Infra 2. 24. ἀναγκαιότερον δι' ὑμᾶς. [s] Καὶ τοῦτο πεποιθὼς οἶδα, ὅτι 25
μενῶ καὶ συμπαραμενῶ πᾶσιν ὑμῖν, εἰς τὴν ὑμῶν προκοπὴν life are alike consecrated to Christ, Χριστὸς being considered as the subject of both members, and κέρδος the predicate of both, and the construction being as in Heb. vii. 4. Yet, after all, it may be doubted whether there was any sufficient reason to forsake the interpretation of the ancient and earlier modern Expositors, which is well expressed in our Common Version. Nor is it any sufficient objection to it to urge (with Pierce) that 'thus the Apostle only clears away one part of his assertion, and says nothing of the other;' for in an acutè dictum like the present, it were injudicious to demand a strict logical correspondence of the second member to the first; and, indeed, as Heinrichs observes, 'Paulus non ad accuratiorem normam dirigere solet sententias.' Not to say, with Doddridge, that 'the proposed interpretation would destroy the antithesis, which, in so antithetical a writer as St. Paul, were exceedingly uncritical.' Allowing something for the sacrifice of strictness of expression to point, the full sense intended would seem to be as follows: 'For my life [if I live] will be devoted to the service of Christ, and [if I die] death will be a gain to me, [since I shall be released from the miseries of this wicked world].' According to this interpretation, τὸ ζῆν is (as the Peschito Syriac Translator evidently considered it) for ἡ ζωή μου, denoting simply the action of living. With this sentiment I would compare Ælian, Var. Hist. (speaking of Pausanias) οὐκ ἦν ἄρα τοῖς κακοῖς οὐδὲ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν κέρδος. Pausanias iv. 7. 4, κέρδος εἶναι καλῶς τινα ἀποθανεῖν. Soph. Antig. 463, ὅστις γὰρ ἐν πολλοῖσιν, ὡς ἐγὼ, κακοῖς Ζῇ, πῶς ὅδ' οὐχὶ κατθανὼν κέρδος φέρει; Eurip. Med. 145, τί μοι ζῆν κέρδος; Joseph. Antiq. xv. 5. 5, κέρδος δ' εἰ θνήσκοιεν, τὴν συμφορὰν τὸ ζῆν ποιούμενοι.

22. εἰ δὲ τὸ ζῆν—γνωρίζω.] Here, again, there is a certain obscurity, (arising, as often, from extreme brevity) which has occasioned variety of interpretation. The ancient and the best modern Expositors are, however, with reason, agreed that εἰ δὲ means 'quod si,' 'but if;' and the sense (as laid down by Chrysostom and Theodoret, and, of modern Commentators, by Luther, Zanch, Piscator, Wolf, Rosenmuller, Reichard, and Heinrichs,) is as follows: 'I say that to die would be gain to me; but if my living in the flesh be profitable [for the work of the ministry],' &c. In this highly elliptical sentence there is evidently an aposiopesis, from extreme pathos, after ἔργου. The καὶ before τί is far from being, what Heinrichs considers it, pleonastic. It has the not unfrequent sense yea, or verily, and its full force may be thus expressed: 'But if my life in the flesh be useful for the ministry of the Gospel, [what can I say;] verily, what I should choose I wot not.' Ἔργον is often used of the office of a Christian teacher (as 1 Thess. v. 13), and καρπὸς denotes the fruit or utility, thence resulting. Finally, this use of γνωρίζω for γινώσκω, though rare, is occasionally found in the later writers, and occurs in Job xxxiv. 25, and Prov. iii. 6.

23. συνέχομαι δὲ ἐκ τῶν δύο.] Meaning, 'for I am held in suspense between these two opposite [motives].' Here ἐκ is used for ἀπὸ or ὑπό. Συνέχεσθαι properly signifies 'to be hemmed in,' see Note on Luke xii. 50, but is often, as here, used figuratively. In ἀναλῦσαι we have a nautical metaphor; the word properly signifying to loose cable, but sometimes simply to depart, and, like many other words denoting departure, is used of departure from the world by death. So Philo in Flacc. p. 991, ἀνάλυσις ἐκ τοῦ βίου, and Ælian, V. H. v. 6, uses ἀπολῦσαι, and a Rabbinical writer, cited by Schoettgen uses the phrase 'dissolve ex hoc mundo.' Supply ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς from the antithetical ἐν τῇ σαρκί. See Note at Luke xii. 36, and compare 2 Cor. v. 8. See also Paley's remarks, in Hor. Paul., where, among other examples of the use of ἧττον and μᾶλλον as qualifying adjectives in the Comparative, he cites, what is most apposite to the present purpose, Isocr. p. 138, πολὺ μᾶλλον κρεῖττον. See more examples in Matthiæ's Gr. Gr. Leipz. 1835.

Δὲ, for γὰρ, is rightly edited by Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Knapp, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz, from all the best MSS. and early Editions.

24. ἀναγκ.] Supply ἐστι, 'is more needful.' 'A strong expression (says Loesner) for præstat.' And he adduces a passage of Philo, where it is followed by ὠφέλιμος, as if by way of explication; to which I would add another, still more to the purpose, from Apollonii Epist. 55, οὐχ οἷός τε ἐγενόμην πλείονα γράψαι· καὶ οὐδὲ (I conjecture οὐδὲν) εἶχον ἀναγκαιότερα τούτων, for χρήσιμ. τούτων, 'more absolutely expedient for you to know.' To the present purpose it is a fine observation of Seneca (cited by Wetstein), 'Bono viro vivendum est, non quamdiu juvat, sed quantum oportet. Ingentis animi est, alienâ causâ, ad vitam reverti;' meaning, as it were, to return back to life, by interesting oneself in its concerns.

25. καὶ τοῦτο πεποιθὼς, &c.] Render, 'And this I assuredly know, or feel fully assured of;' for τοῦτο and πεπ. must be connected, and the expression must be taken, with the best Commentators, as denoting, not certain knowledge (see ver. 27 and ii. 17), but full expectation and firm confidence that he should, under Divine providence, remain discharging his important office till God should raise up another to supply his place. Ὅτι μενῶ καὶ συμπ. π. ὑ. Meaning, 'that I shall remain [in this life], and continue with you-all in the enjoyment of your society.'

— εἰς τὴν ὑμῶν—πίστεως.] Of these words there have been various translations; most of which, I agree with Bp. Middleton, are liable to 26 καὶ χαρὰν τῆς πίστεως· [t] ἵνα τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν περισσεύῃ t 2 Cor. 1. 14. & 5. 12.

ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ, διὰ τῆς ἐμῆς παρουσίας πάλιν 27 πρὸς ὑμᾶς. [u] Μόνον ἀξίως τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ u Eph. 4. 1. Col. 1. 10. 1 Thess. 2. 12. & 4. 1.
πολιτεύεσθε· ἵνα εἴτε ἐλθὼν καὶ ἰδὼν ὑμᾶς, εἴτε ἀπὼν, ἀκούσω τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν, ὅτι στήκετε ἐν ἑνὶ πνεύματι, μιᾷ 28 ψυχῇ συναθλοῦντες τῇ πίστει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου· [x] καὶ μὴ x Rom. 8. 17. 2 Thess. 1. 5. 2 Tim. 2. 11.
πτυρόμενοι ἐν μηδενὶ ὑπὸ τῶν ἀντικειμένων· ἥτις αὐτοῖς [μέν] ἐστιν ἔνδειξις ἀπωλείας, ὑμῖν δὲ σωτηρίας, καὶ τοῦτο 29 ἀπὸ Θεοῦ· [y] ὅτι ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη τὸ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, οὐ μόνον y Acts 5. 41. Rom. 5. 3.

the objection, that they disjoin προκοπὴν and χαρὰν, as if πίστ. did not depend on the former, as well as the latter; as may be inferred from the omission of the Article before χαράν. So supra ver. 7, ἐν τῇ ἀπολογίᾳ καὶ βεβαιώσει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. Accordingly, the learned Prelate well renders, 'to promote your advancement and joy in the faith,' i. e. for your religious improvement and your religious comfort. And so Zanch, Calvin, and Beausobre.

26. ἵνα τὸ καύχημα—ὑμᾶς] 'That your rejoicing, on account of Christ [and his Gospel], may be increased in me by my return again to you.'

27. Having said thus much of himself, his own views and hopes, and their glorious prospects, the Apostle now, with much address, turns the discourse to exhortation, showing how alone they can attain this joy in the Lord.

— μόνον ἀξίως τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, &c.] 'Only do but live and act worthy of the Gospel.' On which sense of πολιτ., see Note on Acts xxiii. 1.

— ἵνα εἴτε ἐλθὼν, &c.] Meaning, 'So that, whether coming and visiting you [I may see], or being absent from you, and hearing of you, I may learn that ye stand fast,' &c.: an elliptical mode of expression adopted in order to avoid tautology. There is in ἀκούσω the figure called zeugma; see 1 Cor. iii. 2. So Steiger well remarks, 'In Greek we may express a general idea which relates to two things or two different states by a verb special, which only properly applies to the latter; constituting what is called the figure zeugma.' A certain inaccuracy is perceptible in ἀκούσω, ὅτι, 'that I may learn how you are going on, know that you are of one mind.' Rather it should be, 'in order that learning how you are going on, I may learn that you are of one mind.' At τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν supply πράγματα.

In στήκ. ἐν ἑνὶ πνεύματι we have a figurative description of Christian unity and concord. So Theophylact: οὕτω γὰρ καὶ ἐν μιᾷ ψυχῇ ἵστανταί τινες ὁμονοοῦντες καὶ ὁμοψυχοῦντες, δηλονότι ὅταν καὶ ἓν πνεῦμα ἔχωσι. Similarly it is said, Herodian, viii. 5, 15, ὅτι Ἰταλία πᾶσα συμπεπνεύκοι μιᾷ γνώμῃ καὶ ψυχῇ, &c. The expression is supposed to contain an agonistic metaphor, further developed in the next clause. The simple import, however, seems to be, 'striving together [strenuously] for the furtherance of the Gospel;' to which the living worthy of it would not a little contribute. Comp. iv. 3, αἵτινες ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ συνήθλησάν μοι.

28. καὶ μὴ πτυρόμενοι—ἀντικειμένων.] Expositors are here not agreed whether πτυρ. is to be understood of terror at the cruel persecutions of the opponents of the Gospel (which is the common interpretation), or to be explained 'being startled, and shaken from the faith by the sophisms and calumnies of your opponents, the Judaizers.' See Zanch, Estius, Locke, and Pierce. Of these two senses the latter is too far-fetched to be admitted. The former is much more simple and natural. It is, besides, more agreeable to the ratio significationis in πτύρεσθαι, a term properly used of horses who take fright, and then applied to men who are frightened. The above Expositors, indeed, rest much on the connexion with the preceding words. But that is not so close as they choose to represent it, by passing over the καὶ, which, according to their interpretation, ought not to be there, and, instead of μὴ, ought to have been written οὐ. As it is, the syntax seems to be that of participle for verb; and, on account of the μὴ prohibitive, the verb must be in the Imperative. This view of the passage is supported by the authority of the ancient Versions almost universally, and by the ancient Commentators.

To consider the sense of the next words, ἥτις αὐτοῖς—σωτηρίας, according to the interpretation of Locke and Pierce above adverted to, they will mean, 'which belief in Christianity, and perseverance in the faith, is to them an undoubted proof of your ruin, for they consider it as obstinacy in error; but to you it is an evidence of your salvation.' See Pierce. This, however, is a sense most frigid and jejune. It is better, with Rosenmuller, Beza, and Heinrichs, to suppose that ἥτις is, by a grammatical enallage frequent in the best Greek writers, made to agree in gender with the predicate ἔνδειξις, when it ought, more accurately, to have agreed with the subject contained in the words preceding, i. e. which [freedom from terror], &c. Upon the whole, the true sense of this and the next verse seems to be that expressed by Abp. Newcome in the following paraphrase: 'Which constancy, as it shows the truth of that Gospel which ye believe, is to your adversaries a proof that they deserve destruction for rejecting it, and for persisting in their vices, and is to you a proof that the God who now supports you will hereafter reward you.'

The words καὶ τοῦτο ἀπὸ Θεοῦ are intended to suggest the highest ground of comfort; 'that so (as Calvin remarks) the taste of the grace of God may alleviate the bitterness of the cross,—with reference to God as the great Author of their salvation.'

29. ὅτι ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη, &c.] Meaning, that 'to suffer affliction is granted by God as a special privilege, and therefore to be rejoiced in.' See τὸ εἰς αὐτὸν πιστεύειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ πάσχειν· τὸν 30 αὐτὸν ἀγῶνα ἔχοντες οἷον ‡ ἴδετε ἐν ἐμοὶ, καὶ νῦν ἀκούετε ἐν ἐμοί. II. [a] Εἴ τις οὖν παράκλησις ἐν Χριστῷ, εἴ τι παρα- 1 μύθιον ἀγάπης, εἴ τις κοινωνία πνεύματος, εἴ ‡ τινα σπλάγχνα καὶ οἰκτιρμοί· [b] πληρώσατέ μου τὴν χαρὰν, ἵνα τὸ 2 αὐτὸ φρονῆτε, τὴν αὐτὴν ἀγάπην ἔχοντες, σύμψυχοι, τὸ ἓν a 2 Cor. 13. 14. Col. 3. 12.

b Rom. 12. 10, 16. & 15. 5. 1 Cor. 1. 10. infra 3. 16. 1 Pet. 3. 8.

Acts v. 41. Rom. v. 3. It is to be observed, that to believe in Christ is regarded as a gratuitous gift from God; though, in the present case, such is rather said by implication than expressly; the whole being, as Hyperius remarks, an 'argumentum hortatorium a facili.' Since, when we hear of faith and constancy in the faith being the gift of God, we are led to hope well, and believe that, by the help of God, nothing will be difficult; being assured that 'He who hath begun a good work will complete it.'

30. Here the Apostle confirms what he has just been saying by his own example; such adding no small authority to any doctrine. (Calvin.) —Ἴδετε, 'ye see, or have seen.' With reference to his sufferings for the Gospel, as recorded Acts xvi. 19—40. This was the conflict they had seen him contend with, and they now heard of another and severer, in his imprisonment at Rome as an evil doer.

For ἴδετε, many of the best MSS. and several Fathers and the Editio Princeps have εἴδετε, which is edited by Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz, but without sufficient reason.

II. The Apostle now, resuming the admonition commenced at i. 27, proceeds, from generals to particulars, to exhort them, if they hope for any of the consolations of Christianity, or if they have any such fellow-feeling as even nature instils, and natural religion inculcates, to fulfil the various duties of Christian humility, diligence in working out their salvation, and especially the adorning the Gospel of Christ by their life and example.

— εἴ τις οὖν παράκλησις, &c.] Much energy is imparted to the sentence by its being composed of clauses commencing with εἰ, which particle here (as infra iv. 8) does not express doubt, but, on the contrary, is strongly affirmative; q. d. 'If there be [as there is].' It is a formula loquendi suitable to obtestation, not unusual in the best writers; ex. gr. Virgil, Æn. i. 607, 'Dî tibi, si qua pios respectant numina; si quid Usquam justitia est, aut mens sibi conscia recti, Præmia digna ferant.' Instead of τι παραμύθιον and τινα σπλάγχνα, some MSS. and early Editions have τις παραμ., and many ancient MSS., Fathers, and early Editions have τις σπλ. Both readings were received into the text by Matthæi, and the latter by Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, Lachmann, and Scholz; but, I apprehend, without reason: for although it seems required by the critical canon, that the more difficult reading is to be preferred, yet that has an exception in cases where a violation of propriety of language, and still more of good sense, would be involved. But that is plainly the case here; for the ellipsis by which the Scholiasts and Matthæi seek to defend and justify the reading τις (q. d. 'Si quis vestrum habet solatium et misericordiam') is of the harshest kind, and there would thereby be introduced a sentiment bordering on nonsense. I cannot but think that the τις arose, through carelessness of the scribes, from the τις preceding in εἴ τις παράκλησις—εἴ τις κοινωνία, &c.; and I find that the very learned Fritzche is entirely of the same opinion. See his Commentary on Mark, p. 544.

By παράκλησις we may understand either 'consolation under the sufferings endured for his sake,' as supra i. 29; or, with others, explain, 'If I am to have any comfort in Christ respecting you.' Παραμύθιον ἀγάπης may mean either the comfort arising from that love to God and to man which is the sum and substance of the Gospel (see 1 Cor. xiii.), or the solace and comfort arising from the pardon of our sins by Christ's love. See Scott. Κοινωνία πνεύματος we may interpret (with the ancient and most modern Expositors) 'fellowship of the Holy Spirit.' See Rom. xv. 30. But, from the absence of the Article, almost all recent Commentators explain it consensio or conjunctio animorum: which latter sense seems more agreeable to the context; and so Chrysostom seems to have taken it, and also Theodoret, who well remarks that these are the words πατρικῆς φιλοστοργίας.

2. πληρ. μ. τ. χαρὰν] 'Fulfil ye my joy,' i. e. 'give me full cause for rejoicing, or complete the joy I felt in your conversion, and have since experienced;' namely, by cultivating the mutual agreement in doctrine and concord of sentiment before enjoined. Τὸ αὐτὸ φρον. and τὸ ἓν φρον. are, indeed, by Photius, Heinrichs, and Schleusn. supposed to be synonymous; and, indeed, the two words are conjoined in Polyb. 441 (cited by Wetstein), λέγοντες ἓν καὶ ταὐτὸ πάντες, and Aristid. p. 569, ἓν καὶ ταὐτὸ φρονοῦντες. On the other hand, Grotius, Kypke, Michaelis, Storr., and Rosenmuller, suppose that the former denotes consent in doctrine, the latter, social concord. Bp. Middleton, however, thinks that the Article before ἓν cannot be explained without supposing some kind of reference. This reference, he maintains, is to what immediately follows, μηδὲν κατὰ ἐριθείαν ἢ κενοδοξίαν, as if the Apostle had said, 'minding the one thing, viz.,' &c.: an interpretation supported by the Vulgate. But what principally, he thinks, confirms this opinion, is the construction of the sentence following, μηδὲν κατὰ ἐριθείαν, which, in having no verb, assumes the form of a proverbial admonition, such as might be made a subject of reference. All this, however, seems not a little far-fetched, and straining a point to support a theory, which, after all, may be as well maintained in another way. What the Bishop calls 'the principal confirmation of his opinion,' is, I conceive, no confirmation at all; since the true ellipsis in the next sentence is not ποιεῖτε, but ποιοῦντες, as was seen by the Peschito Syriac Trans-

3 φρονοῦντες· [c] μηδὲν κατὰ ἐριθείαν ἢ κενοδοξίαν, ἀλλὰ τῇ c Rom 12. 10.
ταπεινοφροσύνῃ ἀλλήλους ἡγούμενοι ὑπερέχοντας ἑαυτῶν· d 1 Cor. 10. 24. & 13. 5.
4 [d] μὴ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἕκαστος ‡ σκοπεῖτε, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ἑτέρων e Matt. 11. 29. John 13 15.
5 ἕκαστος. [e] τοῦτο γὰρ φρονείσθω ἐν ὑμῖν ὃ καὶ ἐν Χριστῷ 1 Pet. 2. 21. 1 John 2. 6.
6 Ἰησοῦ· [f] ὃς ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων, οὐχ ἁρπαγμὸν ἡγή- f John 1. 1, 2. & 5. 18. & 17. 5. Col. 1. 15. Heb. 1. 3.

lator, and many of the best Expositors. In fact, the clauses which follow πληρώσατέ μου τὴν χαρὰν are all of them dependent upon it, being meant to show how they might complete his joy. And as to the interpretation in question being 'confirmed by the Latin Vulgate,' that is not the case; since the Translators plainly read, not τὸ ἓν, but τὸ αὐτὸ, as also do several MSS., though doubtless from an emendation of those Critics who, like the learned Prelate, stumbled at the ἕν. The emendation, however, was a very ill-judged one; since thus not merely tautology would arise, but such a mode of expression as would be intolerable. As it is, we have a form of speaking not very usual, indeed, but capable of being accounted for. It would seem that the admonition to concord or unanimity is first propounded generally, in ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ φρονῆτε (which expression is well explained by Steiger, 'la concorde, l'harmonie des sentiments,' in the full sense of the French word), and then specially, as resolved into its parts, i. e. τὴν αὐτὴν ἀγάπην ἔχοντες and σύμψυχοι (for ὁμόψυχοι) scil. ὄντες. So Steiger remarks: 'Cette harmonie est expliquée par tous les participes suivans.' In τὸ ἓν φρονοῦντες the τὸ ἓν is for ἓν καὶ τὸ αὐτό; and thus the Article has a reference, though to a word omitted. It is plain that ἓν καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ is a stronger expression, and that there is a climax. Σύμψυχοι is well explained by Photius ὁμόψυχοι, 'like-minded;' literally, 'fellow-souled.'

3. μηδὲν κατὰ ἐριθ. ἢ κενοδ.] scil. ποιοῦντες, or φρονοῦντες; referring chiefly to the former of the two sorts of agreement above-mentioned, and alluding, perhaps, to the vain ambition, and consequent jealousy and strife, sometimes attendant on the possession of the higher spiritual gifts. See Gal. v. 26. 1 Cor. xii. xiii. xiv. The next words, τῇ ταπειν. &c. suggest the best cure for these dispositions,—namely, the cultivation of a spirit of unaffected modesty, evinced in a disposition to 'think others better than ourselves,' i. e. (with the limitation implied at 1 Cor. xiii. 7) as far as plain facts will permit; and thus far τῇ τιμῇ ἀλλήλων προηγούμενοι, Rom. xii. 10.

4. μὴ τὰ ἑαυτῶν—ἕκαστος.] This is commonly understood as an admonition against selfishness, and inculcating a disinterested spirit; and many similar moral maxims are adduced by Wetstein: but considering what precedes and follows, it would rather seem that the words contain, not an injunction to a fresh duty, but an admonition, which might enable them better to perform what had been just enjoined, to modesty. They are recommended to attend to the gifts and endowments of others, as well as their own (μόνον being here evidently understood); for want of which it was that so many gave way to vanity and spiritual pride. Such is the view of the sense adopted not only by many of the best modern Expositors, but by the ancient ones almost universally, as the very emendation σκοποῦντες, for σκοπεῖτε (for an emendation, I suspect, it is, though edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Heinrichs, Tittman, and Scholz,) attests. So Theodoret (after Chrysostom) says that in these verses, 2, 3, 4, the Apostle inculcates moderation, and then follows up his precept by placing before them the greatest example of humility in Christ Jesus. Σκοπ. may be rendered respicite, 'keep in view as your end and aim.'

5—11. Here the Apostle has indicated the antidote to these divisions,—humility, and a disinterested spirit; of both which Christ, it is urged, has set us an example. The first is adverted to, vv. 5—8; the second, vv. 9—11. (Steiger.)

5. τοῦτο γὰρ—Χ. Ἰ.] Φρονείσθω is by recent Expositors regarded as used impersonally; but it is rather put for φρόνημα ἔστω, understanding by φρόνημα 'disposition, way of thinking and acting.' The expression must, of course, be especially meant of the particular disposition here especially adverted to,—humility.

6. ὃς ἐν μορφῇ—ἶσα Θεῷ.] In this passage (remarkable, as Doddridge observes, for the contrary uses that have been made of it in the controversy respecting our blessed Redeemer) the ancient Expositors almost universally, and by far the greater part of the modern ones, are of opinion that ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχ. signifies, '[though] being, or existing in the form and nature of God,' i. e. being really God; μορφῇ being taken to denote, by metonymy, the φύσις and οὐσία, the nature and essence; and, indeed, when applied to God, the term can have no other meaning, since the Deity has properly no form nor shape. Of this signification of μορφὴ several examples have been adduced both from the Classical writers and Josephus. So Plato says that God μένει ἀεὶ ἁπλῶς ἐν τῇ αὐτοῦ μορφῇ. And Josephus says that the heathens deified the worst passions εἰς Θεοῦ φύσιν καὶ μορφὴν ἀναπλάσαντες. So also Test. xii. Patr. p. 744 (cited by Bretschneider), τὸν βασιλέα τῶν οὐρ. τὸν ἐπὶ γῆς φανέντα ἐν μορφῇ ἀνθρώπου ταπεινώσεως. That the Fathers took the word in this sense, appears from Suic. Thes. ii. 377, and Bp. Bull's Defens. Fid. Nic. p. 37, seqq. Thus the sense will be, 'subsisting in the real form of God, one with and equal to the Father;' as is ably evinced by the most eminent of the earlier modern Expositors, especially Bps. Pearson, Bull, and Burnet, and recently by Abp. Magee (on the Atonement, i. p. 71, and ii. 479), Bp. Burgess, Dr. P. Smith, and others. Some considerable Commentators, however (as Whitby, Ellis, Wolf, Carpzov, and Macknight), think the above view cannot be admitted; since Christ, when he became man, could not divest himself of the nature of God; and with respect to the government of the world, we are, they say, led by what the Apostle tells us, Heb. i. 3, 'to believe that he did not part even with that, but in his divested σατο τὸ εἶναι ἶσα Θεῷ· [g] ἀλλ' ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσε, μορφὴν δούλου 7 λαβὼν, ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθρώπων γενόμενος· [h] καὶ σχήματι 8

g Isa. 42. 1. & 52. 13. & 53. 3, 11. Zach. 3. 8. Matt 20. 28. Luke 22. 27. John 13. 14. Gal. 4. 4. h Matt. 26. 39, 42. Heb. 12. 2.

state still upheld all things by the word of his power.' By μορφὴ Θεοῦ, therefore, they understand that glorious form, 'the visible glorious light in which the Deity is said to dwell,' 1 Tim. vi. 16, and by which he manifested himself to the Patriarchs of old, Deut. v. 22, 24, which was commonly accompanied with a numerous retinue of angels, Ps. lxviii. 17, and which is called the similitude of the Lord, Num. xii. 8, the face, Ps. xxxi. 16, the presence, Exod. xxxiii. 15, and the shape, John v. 37. This interpretation is, they think, supported by the term μορφῇ, here used, which signifies a person's external shape or appearance, and not his nature or essence. But the learned Commentators seem here to confound the signification with the sense of a word. That μορφὴ has not properly the signification in question,—essence, may be admitted; but that it was sometimes so used by the writers on philosophy and theism, is attested by the examples adduced by Elsner and others, and its use here in the above sense is confirmed by what is elsewhere said in Scripture. Thus Heb. i. 3, the Son is similarly called χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, 'the express image of God's person;' evidently with reference to his nature and essence.

— οὐχ ἁρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἶσα Θεῷ] i. e. as the ancient Expositors generally, and most modern ones, explain, 'did not think it a robbing God of his glory to be,' &c. Several Interpreters, indeed, ancient and modern (as Origen, Theodoret, Rufin, Piscator, Grotius, Maldon, Wolf, Wetstein, Abp. Newcome, Bp. Middleton, and Dr. P. Smith), take the sense to be literally, 'He did not esteem it a prey, a thing to be caught at, a great prize;' meaning (as Abp. Newcome explains), 'did not eagerly covet to be equal with God.' But that interpretation presents a sense at variance with the context, and in many respects objectionable. And as to what the above Expositors say, that ἁρπαγμὸς is here put for ἅρπαγμα, that they merely take for granted. Abp. Newcome, indeed, thinks this has been evinced by Wakefield from the genius of the Greek language. But unless the genius of the language be something different from the usus linguæ, I must deny this. For after carefully examining all the words in —γμος (about a hundred) I find scarcely any instance of words in γμος being for the cognate form in γμα, when that form has a passive sense. Of a neuter there are some examples; but in at least four-fifths of the whole, an active sense in the —γμος is assigned by the Lexicons, of course agreeably to the usage of the best writers; and there is almost always a cognate form in —γμα, which has regularly a passive sense. Now, if such an extensive usage does not show the genius of the language, what does? In vain, too, does Abp. Newcome allege the rapina of the Vulgate in defence of his view, since that word, as it is well known, has an active as well as a passive force; and the Peschito Syriac translator evidently took it in the active sense, for ܚܛܘܦܝܐ, though rendered in the Latin Version rapina, yet signifies direptio, the act of usurpation, as it is explained in Schaaf's Lexicon; and the sense is found in three other passages of the New Test. I confess, however, that one example of ἁρπαγμὸς, in a passive sense, has been adduced by Wetstein from Cyrill. Op. vol. i. pars 2, p. 25. Ed. Par. 1638.

Thus the ancient and general interpretation, as above stated, may justly be regarded as the true one. I would render, 'who being in the form of God (i. e. of the nature of God) thought it [as he justly might] no robbery to claim equality with God, and yet, nevertheless, emptied himself of,' &c. In οὐχ ἡγήσατο we may recognise that sort of concessive sense, which not unfrequently belongs to such words as think, judge, &c., as used of what is thoroughly admitted and acknowledged, and of which no doubt can be entertained. So of the Jews our Lord says, John v. 39, 'Ye search the Scriptures, because ye think [as ye justly may] that in them ye have everlasting life.' The use of the word, in such cases, is subservient to argument, and may be especially observed in a train of reasoning, wherein the person arguing is sensible that he has the advantage. Thus it appears that the clause οὐχ ἁρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἶσα Θεῷ is not a principal, but a secondary part of the sentence; the proposition mainly resting on the clause ὃς ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων and ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσε, and this clause serving to point the argument.

Dr. P. Smith has, in his Script. Test. l. iii. chap. 4, a long discussion on the sense of the passage, which will repay the reader's attentive perusal. He observes on this construction, that 'there is a protasis and apodosis; and that the protasis (or proposal of the terms or considerations which pave the way for the rest of the sentence) terminates with the clause, "existing in the form of God;" and that the subsequent members all belong to the apodosis, and point out to one object the declaration of our Lord's unspeakable condescension.' I apprehend, however, that the above point is at the end of the third member, which, accordingly, will run thus: 'Who, existing in the form of God, and esteeming it no usurpation to be as God;' and then the apodosis will follow, 'and yet emptied himself,' &c.

By εἶναι ἶσα Θεῷ is meant the being possessed of the same Divine attributes and perfections. Thus ἶσος here signifies, 'the same in nature;' and ἶσα, though not, strictly speaking, put for ἶσον, is equivalent to it in sense. And no wonder; since ἶσα εἶναί τινι is for (κατ') ἶσα [μέρη] εἶναι, 'to be at equal shares with, to be on an equal footing with, to be on a parity with, an equality with.' That ἶσα has sometimes this use has been proved by many examples adduced by the Commentators. How, and in what respect, Christ is here said to be on a parity with God has been shown at large by Dr. P. Smith, ubi supra.

The scope of the whole passage is well expressed by Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Œcumenius as follows: 'When any one usurps any dignity, he is afraid to lay it down, lest he should lose it, as being not his own; but when any one has it by εὑρεθεὶς ὡς ἄνθρωπος, ἐταπείνωσεν ἑαυτὸν, γενόμενος ὑπή-9 κοος μέχρι θανάτου, θανάτου δὲ σταυροῦ. [i] Διὸ καὶ ὁ Θεὸς αὐτὸν ὑπερύψωσε, καὶ ἐχαρίσατο αὐτῷ ὄνομα τὸ ὑπὲρ πᾶν 10 ὄνομα· [k] ἵνα ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ πᾶν γόνυ κάμψῃ ἐπου-11 ρανίων καὶ ἐπιγείων καὶ καταχθονίων· [l] καὶ πᾶσα γλῶσσα ἐξομολογήσηται, ὅτι ΚΥΡΙΟΣ Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, εἰς δόξαν

i Isa. 53. 12. John 10. 17. & 17. 1, 2, 5. Acts 2. 33. Heb. 1. 4. & 2. 9.
k Isa. 45. 23. Rom. 14. 11. Rev. 5. 13.
l Acts 2. 36. Rom. 14. 9, 11. 1 Cor. 8. 6. & 12. 3.

nature he can very well disregard it, knowing that he has something which he cannot lose; and if he chooses to lay it down, he can take it up again.' The general meaning, therefore, is: 'The Son of God was not afraid to descend from his own dignity, since he had not this (namely, the being equal with God the Father) by usurpation, but knew it was his natural rank.'

7. ἐκένωσε] 'seipsum inanivit,' as the Vulgate renders; 'emptied himself, divested himself' [of his Divine natural glory], as the Pesch. Syr.; and, by implication, 'seipsum ad statum tenuem depressit,' and was content to be as the sun in eclipse, shorn of his beams. Μορφὴν δούλου λαβὼν, 'by taking the form of a servant, and by appearing on earth as one of no dignity or reputation, but of lowly condition.' The words following should be rendered, 'after having become like unto man;' i. e. by assuming a human body; and they intimate (as the Greek Commentators remark) the Divinity of Jesus Christ,—being meant to show the difference between Christ's former glorious and his present humble state. Ὁμοιώμ., however, imports not resemblance only, but real nature. See Note on Rom. viii. 3, ἐν ὁμοιώμ. σαρκὸς ἁμαρτίας, and compare Heb. ii. 14; and see Dr. P. Smith, ubi supra.

8. σχήμ. εὑρ. ὡς ἄνθρ.] i. e. 'Remaining what he was, he took what he was not;' his nature was not changed, but he was changed, ἐν σχήματι, i. e. ἐν σαρκί. (Theophylact.) The ὡς is, I conceive, not put for tanquam (as many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, suppose), but is used with allusion to the wide difference between the σχῆμα which our Lord assumed, as compared with the μορφὴ Θεοῦ. Nay, the term εὑρεθεὶς may be thought to have some allusion thereto, though it is by the recent Commentators in general considered as merely equivalent to ὤν. The scope of the verse seems to be to represent the humiliation and condescension of our Lord, as the preceding verse does his emptying himself of his glory; see Dr. Routh's Reliq. Sacr. vol. i. p. 328. And as there μορφ. δούλ. λαβὼν and ἐν ὁμοιώμ. ἀνθρ. γεν. show how that took place, so here σχήμ. εὑρ. ὡς ἄνθρ. and γενόμ. ὑπήκ. μ. θαν. show the nature and extent of the condescension; namely, in his taking upon him the human nature, and in submitting to death. This view is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Version, and indeed by the ancient Versions generally; on which see Dr. P. Smith, ubi supra.

9. διὸ] i. e. 'wherefore, in reward of this obedience,' &c. 'Since (observes Hyperius) thus much has been said of the extreme humiliation and cross of Christ, there was an opportunity afforded, as was also fit, to subjoin something respecting his great exaltation. Accordingly this is added by way of showing that that lowliness detracted nought from the Divinity and dignity of Christ; or in order that thus the scandal of the cross may be taken away.'

— ὑπερύψωσε] 'has exceedingly exalted him.' 'Since (observes Theodoret) one who is God cannot properly be said to be exalted, the exaltation in question must be understood of his human nature;' see John xvii. 1—5. Acts ii. 33. Heb. ii. 9. Ὄνομα is by the best Expositors interpreted dignity (as in Rom. ix. 17. And so Achmet Oneir. cited by Schleusner, εὕρησεν ὕψος καὶ ὄνομα πλέον τῶν ἄλλων βασιλέων), namely, the dignity of our Lord in his quality of Mediator. See Eph. i. 20, 21.

10, 11. These verses show the nature and extent of the dignity; namely, by having paid to him an act of the humblest obedience (which must here imply religious adoration, see Eph. iii. 14), and receiving a title of dignity correspondent, namely, that of Κύριος. In this noble passage (wherein there is something elegant in the expression, 'every knee shall bow and every tongue confess,' for every one should obey and confess) the Apostle is justly supposed to have had in view Is. xlv. 23. The expression ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ most Protestant Commentators regard as simply equivalent to τῷ Ἰησοῦ; while the Romanists convert the bowing at the name of Jesus to a mere ceremony. A middle course will here, as often, be found nearest the truth. The Apostle may have meant to represent the supreme dignity of Jesus by such a form of expression as would designate that of a man in the highest dignity; namely, in not only the bowing of the knee to him when present, but even at the pronouncing of his name; which is, I believe, an Oriental custom. At all events, the words designate the profound subjection of all created beings to the supreme dignity of Jesus; but they by no means authorize any such empty ceremony as that of the Romanists. Ἐν τῷ ὀν. means, 'in virtue of that dignity.' The expressions ἐπουρ., ἐπιγ., and καταχθ., refer, not to things, but persons, i. e. beings, as it is translated by Doddridge and Newcome; meaning, the celestial intelligences; and so the Pesch. Syr. Translator evidently took it; as also did Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Theodoret. Καταχθ. is best explained by Theodoret and many eminent modern Expositors, to denote the souls of the departed (over whom Jesus Christ is alike Lord; see Rom. xiv. 9); a use of the word as early as the time of the Greek Classical writers. It may, however, likewise designate the demons. It is injudicious, however, to refine upon the expression; since it may, as Chrysostom points out, only have been added to complete the idea of all persons in the universe. Ἐξομολ. is a stronger term than ὁμολογ., and denotes public profession in religious adoration. By Κύριος we are to understand, 'Lord supreme over all persons and things [in his Mediatorial kingdom.'] Εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, 'which redounds to the glory of God the Father;' since, as Œcumenius observes, it is to the glory of the Father to have such a Son, the Lord, Creator, and God

m Heb. 4. 11. 2 Pet. 1. 5—10. Θεοῦ Πατρός. [m] Ὥστε, ἀγαπητοί μου,—καθὼς πάντοτε ὑπη- 12 κούσατε, μὴ ὡς ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ μου μόνον, ἀλλὰ νῦν πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου,—μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου τὴν n 2 Cor. 3. 5. Heb 13. 21. ἑαυτῶν σωτηρίαν κατεργάζεσθε· [n] ὁ Θεὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ ἐνερ- 13 γῶν ἐν ὑμῖν καὶ τὸ θέλειν καὶ τὸ ἐνεργεῖν ὑπὲρ τῆς εὐδο-of all. On this whole portion see more in Bp. Sherlock, cited in D'Oyly and Mant, and Dr. P. Smith's Script. Test., vol. i. p. 399. ii. 210. iii. 230.

12, 13. On the doctrine of the humiliation and obedience of Christ to God the Father, and the reward thence resulting, the Apostle engrafts exhortations to humility and obedience, in a more general sense, to his injunctions, as from man to God; see Theophylact, cited in Recens. Synop. Ὑπηκούσατε, 'have been obedient [to my injunctions].' The words μὴ ὡς ἐν τῇ—ἀπουσίᾳ are by the generality of Expositors referred to the ὑπηκ. preceding; but by a few of the more eminent, to the words following, τὴν ἑαυτῶν σωτηρίαν κατεργ., which is the preferable mode; for it may be doubted whether they had been much more obedient during his absence than before, in his presence. And moreover, according to the other method, νῦν would be scarcely suitable. Besides, as καθὼς requires an elliptical οὕτως to correspond to it, so it must be supplied at μὴ ὡς ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ—ἀπουσίᾳ μου. The words may be regarded as a blending of two clauses into one; and thus the sentence, written at length, will stand as follows: καθὼς πάντοτε ὑπηκούσατε, μὴ ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου μόνον, ἀλλὰ ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ μου· ἀλλὰ νῦν, πολλῷ μᾶλλον, ὡς ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου ὑπακούετε, καὶ κατεργ. &c. The πολλῷ μᾶλλον is by the Pesch. Syr. Translator rightly united with νῦν. In ἀλλὰ νῦν there is an hortative force. By this it is not necessary to understand, that they had been much more obedient in his presence than in his absence; but that circumstances had occurred which enabled them to especially evince that obedience. It was, however, as Hyperius remarks, prudent to command their former obedience, whatever it was, in order to soften their minds, and make them more obedient to his present injunctions. 'Prodest ita adhortationibus necnon objurgationibus interdum laudem admiscere.' They are exhorted to be especially obedient, inasmuch as he is absent from them, and not at hand to urge them to obedience. See Calvin.

The words following, μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου, must be construed, not (as they are by Pierce and Macknight) with ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου, but with κατεργ.; and many of the best Expositors suppose the sense of κατεργ.—τρόμου to be, 'labour with all diligence, earnestness, and anxiety, to effect your salvation;' a sense of φόβος καὶ τρόμος not unfrequent in the Classical writers, but no where, I think, occurring in the Scriptural. Here it can only denote such anxiety of care to do a thing, as results from a fear lest we should fail therein. So Thucyd. ii. 37. 3, διὰ δέος μάλιστα οὐ παρανομοῦμεν, 'we are fearfully cautious not to do wrong.' And so Theophylact well observes, that without fear no proficiency is attained in the arts, even the mechanical. So ἐν φόβῳ σώζετε is used of anxious striving in Jude 23. And so it is used in Ephes. vi. 5. Comp. Psalm ii. 11, and Prov. xxviii. 14. Calvin, indeed, explains as if the expression were solely meant to inculcate humility, which may be true, and is countenanced by the context; but it may also mark anxiety, with reference to the arduousness of the work, and the awful consequences of failure in it. There is no objection to engrafting that idea as an adjunct; and thus the full sense may be, 'with anxious diligence, and [yet] humble diffidence;' see Hammond, Doddridge, and Scott. In κατεργ. there is a metaphor taken from agriculture, or other hand-labour. So S. Barnabas, Epist. p. 251 (Edit. Wets.), says (in imitation of this), διὰ τῶν χειρῶν σου ἐργ. εἰς λύτρωσιν τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν σου; and Philo, de Allegor., ἐργάζεσθαι τὰς ἀρετάς. Ἑαυτῶν is justly supposed to advert to the part taken by the persons themselves in working out their salvation.

The next words, ὁ Θεὸς γάρ—εὐδοκίας, assign a reason why they may do this with the more alacrity; namely, 'for it is God, that of his good pleasure produces in you both to will, and to carry into effect [that will];' i. e. both the will and the faculty to perform; intimating however a caution to the arrogant and self-righteous. See Hyperius.

The phrase ὑπὲρ τῆς εὐδοκίας denotes the ground of action. Render, 'according to, by virtue of, his own gratuitous benevolence;' as Eph. i. 5, κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ. Thus the sovereign freedom of God in these operations, as apart from all claims of human merit, is here inculcated, and that in order to promote humility and diffidence, as well as diligence. And when it is said, 'there is God working,' &c., the Apostle, I apprehend, refers to ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου in the preceding verse; q. d. 'though I be absent, yet you have the continual aid of God, not only to stimulate your wills, but to assist you both in will and deed.' 'To work in us (says Hammond) the τὸ θέλειν and the τὸ ἐνεργεῖν is the giving us that strength, working in us those abilities which are required for our willing or working, as necessary to prepare, and assist us to do, either.' Of course this working of God on the disposition and will of man must be so understood as not to be inconsistent with the foregoing exhortation, to labour earnestly and diligently to work out their own salvation. We are not to understand that God overrules our wills; for that would be working in our stead, and thus we could not, in any sense, be said to 'work out our salvation;' see the annotations of Beza, Hammond, and Whitby, and two able discourses on this text by Bp. Sherlock, vol. ii. So Dr. Cudworth, in his admirable Sermon on 1 Cor. xv. 57, shows that we must not fancy that our own active co-operation in this work is not necessarily required thereto. 'For as,' says he, 'there is a spirit of God in nature, which produceth vegetables and minerals, which human art and industry could never be able to 14 κίας. [o] Πάντα ποιεῖτε χωρὶς γογγυσμῶν καὶ διαλογισμῶν· o Rom. 12. 17.

15 [p] ἵνα γένησθε ἄμεμπτοι καὶ ἀκέραιοι, τέκνα Θεοῦ ἀμώμητα 1 Pet. 2. 12. & 4. 9.
ἐν μέσῳ γενεᾶς σκολιᾶς καὶ διεστραμμένης· ἐν οἷς φαίνεσθε p Matt. 5. 14, 45. Deut. 32. 5.
16 ὡς φωστῆρες ἐν κόσμῳ, [q] λόγον ζωῆς ἐπέχοντες· εἰς καύ- Eph. 5. 8. q 2 Cor. 1. 14.
χημα ἐμοὶ εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ, ὅτι οὐκ εἰς κενὸν ἔδραμον, Gal. 2. 2. 1 Thess. 2. 19. & 3. 5.
17 οὐδὲ εἰς κενὸν ἐκοπίασα. [r] Ἀλλ', εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι ἐπὶ τῇ r 2 Cor. 7. 4. 2 Tim. 4. 6.

effect (namely, that spiritus intus alens, which the Poet speaks of), which yet notwithstanding doth not work absolutely, unconditionally, and omnipotently, but requireth certain preparations, conditions, and dispositions in the matter, which it works upon (for unless the husbandman plough the ground and sow the seed, the spirit of God in nature will not give any increase); in like manner the Scripture tells us that the Divine Spirit of grace doth not work absolutely, unconditionally, and irresistibly in the souls of men, but requireth certain preparations, conditions, and co-operations in us.' Thus we are to suppose (as Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Theodoret suggest), that when God finds [through his grace] a disposition to do good, He augments it by the co-operating energy of His Spirit; and the ἐνεργεῖν, as regards our actions, must (as Chrysostom remarks) denote the carrying them into effect (ἐνεργεῖν being here for ἐπὶ τέλος ἄγειν, as in Eph. i. 11); of course in some such way as is consistent with man's free agency. An excellent comment on the present passage is supplied by that of 1 Cor. xv. 10, 'and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me.' In short, to sum up the doctrine contained in this most important passage, it is said of God, that of his good pleasure he worketh in us both to will and to do; and it is said of man, that he is with diligence and humility to work out his salvation; i. e. to do his part, whatever that be, in effecting it. Nothing can be more marked than the distinction which is here made between the agency of God and the agency of man. Nothing is more certain, on the one hand, than that, without the assistance of God, man cannot be saved at all; nothing can be more certain, on the other hand, than that by his own voluntary co-operation, with such aid from above, man ultimately is saved. How far, indeed, our faculty to work extends, is, I am ready to admit, with Calvin, a question which the Apostle does not here mean to discuss, but simply to teach us that God so acts in us, as, nevertheless, not to suffer us to be idle, but by his secret impulses excites us to strenuous exertion. In short, to use the words of Mr. Scott, 'He worketh in us effectually, that we may effectually work;' or, still better, those of St. Augustin (from whom Mr. Scott borrowed the remark), 'agimur ut agamus.'

14. πάντα ποιεῖτε—διαλ.] Having given this earnest exhortation to Christian humility and anxious diligence, the Apostle now reverts to the subject of concord and unanimity, modesty and humility, treated of at vv. 2, 3, 4. By the words γογγ. and διαλ. seem designated the effects of the ἐριθεία and κενοδοξία, against which he had there cautioned them; the former of the two terms denoting a murmuring and insubordinate spirit, and the latter a disposition which seeks to excuse itself from performing what is enjoined, by starting doubts (based on some flimsy reasonings), and by magnifying difficulties. The phrase πάντα ποιεῖτε must, of course, be understood of the directions of their spiritual pastors and masters.

15. ἵνα γέν. ἄμ.] Ἀκέραιος (derived from α privative and κεράω, to mix) is equivalent to the 'integer vitæ scelerisque purus' of Horace. On διεστρ. see Note on Matt. xvii. 17. Acts ii. 40. There is the same metaphor in the Hebr. עִקֵּשׁ, wicked, which comes, I suspect, from an old root, עָקַשׁ, 'to make hooked or crooked, to distort.'

In φαίνεσθε ὡς φωστῆρες ἐν κόσμῳ, there may be an allusion, as Saurin and Doddridge suppose, to light-houses; but rather, it would seem, to the heavenly luminaries, which give light to the world, and are so called in Gen. i. 14. 16, and elsewhere. The metaphor is frequent both in the Scriptural (as Matt. v. 14. 16. Eph. v. 8. 1 Thess. v. 5) and the Classical writers. By 'ye,' I would understand, ye Christians, not ye Philippians, as most Expositors suppose, which occasioned others to take φαίν. as an Imperative. But their duty to be such is rather implied than expressed.

16. ἐπέχ.] 'holding forth,' as persons do a lantern to light others, or rather, as the heavenly luminaries give light to the world. The light here meant is that of Divine knowledge, and good example to others. There is here, as often, an intermixture of the comparison with the thing compared. In εἰς καύχ., &c., εἰς denotes end, or result, and the phrase stands for ὥστε καύχημά μοι ὑμᾶς γενέσθαι· 'so that your conversion to the faith, and your constancy therein, may be a matter for my rejoicing in the day of Christ;' i. e. the day of judgment. On καύχ. in this sense, see Note on 1 Cor. xv. 31. Ὅτι, 'namely, that,' 'as a proof that.' In εἰς κενὸν ἐκοπίασα there is an agonistic allusion, as at 1 Cor. ix. 26, and Gal. ii. 2. The expression ἐκοπ. is well illustrated by the phrase ἐν κόποις, &c., at 2 Cor. vi. 5. There is here an elegant litotes, with which I would compare Solon, ver. 29, ἅμα γὰρ ἄελπτα σὺν θεοῖσιν ἤνυσα, Ἅμα δ' οὐ μάτην ἔρδον.

17. ἀλλ', εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι—καὶ λειτ.] A sacrificial allusion (similar to that of Eurip. Orest. 188—190, Ἐξέθυσ' ὁ Φοῖβος ἡμᾶς Μέλεον, ἀπόφονον αἷμα δοὺς Πατροφόνου ματρός), probably suggested by the association of ideas with the preceding mention of the labours and sacrifices he had made for the Gospel's sake; and by which the Apostle means to intimate, that for the same glorious cause he is ready to sacrifice life itself. In short, the faith of the Philippians is supposed to be a sacrifice offered to God; and his own life is compared to a drink-offering of oil and wine poured upon the sacrifice (Exod. xxix.

θυσίᾳ καὶ λειτουργίᾳ τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν, χαίρω καὶ συγχαίρω πᾶσιν ὑμῖν· τὸ δ' αὐτὸ καὶ ὑμεῖς χαίρετε καὶ συγχαίρετέ 18 μοι.
s 'Ελπίζω δὲ ἐν Κυρίῳ 'Ιησοῦ, Τιμόθεον ταχέως πέμψαι 19 ὑμῖν, ἵνα κἀγὼ εὐψυχῶ, γνοὺς τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν. οὐδένα γὰρ 20 ἔχω ἰσόψυχον, ὅστις γνησίως τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν μεριμνήσει· t οἱ 21
πάντες γὰρ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ζητοῦσιν, οὐ τὰ [τοῦ] Χριστοῦ
'Ιησοῦ. Τὴν δὲ δοκιμὴν αὐτοῦ γινώσκετε, ὅτι, ὡς πατρὶ 22
τέκνον, σὺν ἐμοὶ ἐδούλευσεν εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον. Τοῦτον μὲν 23
οὖν ἐλπίζω πέμψαι, ὡς ἂν ἀπίδω τὰ περὶ ἐμὲ, ἐξαυτῆς· u πέποιθα δὲ ἐν Κυρίῳ, ὅτι καὶ αὐτὸς ταχέως ἐλεύσομαι. 24 x 'Αναγκαῖον δὲ ἡγησάμην 'Επαφρόδιτον τὸν ἀδελφὸν καὶ 25
συνεργὸν καὶ συστρατιώτην μου, ὑμῶν δὲ ἀπόστολον, καὶ λειτουργὸν τῆς χρείας μου, πέμψαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς· ἐπειδὴ ἐπι- 26 ποθῶν ἦν πάντας ὑμᾶς, καὶ ἀδημονῶν, διότι ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἠσθένησε. καὶ γὰρ ἠσθένησε παραπλήσιον θανάτῳ· ἀλλ' ὁ 27

s Acts 16. 1. Rom. 16. 21. 1 Thess. 3. 2. t 1 Cor. 10. 24. & 13 5. 2 Tim. 4. 10, 16. u Supra 1. 25. Philem. 22.
x Infra 4. 18. Philem 2.

